But, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not permit this bill to pass without taking this opportunity to say something of the labors of the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of this committee. In making up this bill he deserves, at the hands of the subcommittee who labored with him, to be publicly commended. Every item in this bill, some covering only a few lines, involved many days of very patient toil in knowing just exactly how much might be cut out of the item, and how much should be put into it. In other words, these items balance—for example, a certain number of soldiers to be provided for means that there must be a certain amount of clothing, a certain amount of food, a certain amount of ordnance, a certain amount of ammunition—and the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the committee, has given it his best effort; and those who have been associated with him on the committee have seen him at work on this bill and know not only the amount of patient toil he has given to the bill, but also the great accomplishments which his great talents are capable of performing when the occasion demands it. They were displayed in a marked way in the preparation of this bill. [Applause.]

When we commenced work on this bill the departments asked, in round numbers, for $8,000,000,000, and while the bill was being considered they sent in additional demands for $1,000,000,000, so that, in round numbers, they asked for about $9,000,000,000. Under the patient, watchful care of our chairman the bill carries now a little over $6,000,000,000, making a total saving of $2,500,000,000, and not a single branch, either of the War or the Navy, will say that they have been injured in the least, because the cuts in this bill have been cuts made with the skill of the surgeon that uses the surgeon's knife on the patient when the operation is a very delicate one. I feel that not only the committee, the Members of this House, but the country, owe to the chairman of this committee their thanks for his patient work and his efficient and magnificent management of the bill from its inception down to the present moment. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, it is gratifying to me that the services of our distinguished chairman [Mr. SHERLEY] are so marked that not only all the Democrats recognize and acknowledge his worth and value to the House and to the country, but all the Republican Members, including their great leaders, openly testify that his services are so valuable at this time that it would be little less than a calamity for the House and country to lose him. [Applause.]

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Committee on Appropriations, I desire to say a word before the consideration of the bill is completed with reference to the splendid service rendered to the House and to the country by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations in the preparation of this bill and in the conduct of the hearings which were held preliminary to its preparation. I would not detract in the slightest from the credit due each member of the committee who had to do with the preparation of this bill; but, as we all know, the responsibility rested upon him, and upon him was imposed by far the greatest burden in its preparation.

After a service of nearly eight years on the Appropriations Committee, I feel that I can say that this bill, notwithstanding its magnitude, is one of the best-considered bills that have been brought into the House of Representatives by the Committee on Appropriations during that time. For more than a month the gentleman from Kentucky has tirelessly and unceasingly worked during the hours of each day and far into the night in an exhaustive examination of those who appeared in behalf of the estimates submitted. I happen to know that he has remained here at his post of duty performing this great public service without a thought of his own personal and private interests. This volume of testimony of more than 1,300 pages attests the extent and value of his work.

This bill, Mr. Chairman, carrying more than $6,000,000,000 in cash and authorizations, is over two and a half billion less than the estimates submitted. This is indeed a remarkable showing, and shows the infinite care which was given in its preparation. As has been stated, not a dollar has been denied to either the military or the naval service that is essential to an earnest and vigorous prosecution of the war to a successful and speedy conclusion.

Notwithstanding the talk of an early peace, notwithstanding the talk of an early ending of the war, neither the Congress nor the country intend that there shall be any slowing up or slackening of our efforts until this result is achieved. Even though by reason of the splendid fighting qualities and the glorious courage of our soldiers and the soldiers of our allies the Germans are being rapidly thrust back to their own borders and are now facing a certain and early disastrous defeat, there must not be, and should not be, any let-up in this country. [Applause.]

There will be none on the part of our brave soldiers who are fighting our battles on the fields of France, and there must be none on the part of those in this country who are charged with the duty and the responsibility of providing all of the supplies and all of the support necessary to enable them to give the finishing blow to Germany and insure the permanent and righteous peace for which our country is fighting. [Applause.]

The gentleman from Kentucky has told you that notwithstanding the fact that this bill makes a reduction of over two and one-half billions of dollars from the estimates submitted, that nevertheless it carries no reduction either for the military or naval service which was not approved and acquiesced in by those who appeared before the committee. But his modesty prevented his telling you that they reached this conclusion around the committee table, and only after their estimates had been subjected to his close scrutiny and keen and intelligent analysis. Though, be it said to their credit, they were ready and anxious to yield to the reduction after discussion.

The gentleman from Kentucky during the years of his service in the House has rendered distinguished and faithful service to the country, but in my judgment he has rendered no more valuable service to the country than that which he has rendered in the preparation of this bill, which not only makes a great saving, without the least injury to any arm of the Government service, but which, I repeat, in my opinion, is one of the best considered bills ever presented to the House by the Appropriations Committee.

I know of no higher tribute, I know of no tribute more truly deserved than that which was paid to the gentleman from Kentucky the other day by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], himself a former chairman of this great committee, who, speaking with the authority of more than 40 years of faithful and most distinguished service to the people of the country in the Halls of Congress, said that during all of that time the Committee on Appropriations had never had a superior leadership to that which it now enjoys. I am sure that the ability and services of the gentleman from Kentucky are appreciated and will be commended by all of his colleagues on both sides of this Chamber, and he is entitled to the approval and support of his constituents and to the thanks of the entire country. [Applause.]

Mr. EAGAN. Mr. Chairman, further reserving the right to object, I want to supplement the splendid and well-deserved compliments which were paid on Wednesday by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], the ranking minority member on the Subcommittee on Deficiencies, the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON], and the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS], to-day, to the distinguished chairman of the Appropriations Committee, who is also the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY].

It has been my good fortune to serve with the gentleman from Kentucky on the Fortifications Subcommittee in the last Congress, as well as to serve with him in this Congress in the preparation of this bill.

His great service to this House and the country in connection with the fortifications bill needs no commendation from me, but I feel I would be remiss in my duty if I did not indorse the statement of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] when he said on Wednesday that in a service of upward of 40 years as a Member of this House the Appropriations Committee has never had a chairman who was the superior of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. He has proved a worthy successor to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], who resigned in December last, to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON], and to their predecessors in the chairmanship of that great committee.

To reduce the original estimates by upward of two and one-half billions of dollars, aggregating thousands of items, many of them technical in the highest degree, and to secure the acquiescence of the heads of the various departments in these reductions—to do all this without slowing up in the slightest degree the vigorous and successful prosecution of the great war in which we are now engaged—was a Herculean task. That the gentleman from Kentucky measured up to the full requirements of this task even a casual perusal of the hearings and his masterly address in presenting the bill to the House on Wednesday will demonstrate.

Day after day, night after night, and Sunday after Sunday for many weeks, without the slightest regard to his health or to any other consideration than patriotic and unselfish devotion to his country in its time of greatest emergency, his keen intellect and great experience extending over a period of 18 years of service in this House and of upward of 10 years on the Appropriations Committee, have been given to the consideration of the mass of estimates that make up this bill. His untiring energy and his great ability are recognized by the membership of this House, but by none are they more fully appreciated than by his colleagues on the Appropriations Committee.

He is entitled to the commendation of the entire membership of this House and to the approval and support of the people of the fifth district of Kentucky, which he has so ably and conscientiously represented in this House for 16 years. [Applause.]

Mr. VARE. Mr. Chairman, recently—within a day or two—I observed in one of the Philadelphia newspapers a statement that it was with regret they noticed that the estimates of the War Department had been reduced by this committee to the extent of approximately two and a half billions of dollars. I desire to emphasize the fact that this committee granted every dollar that the War Department claimed was necessary for the conduct of the war, with one exception, and that was the enlargement of the Neville Island project, amounting to approximately $93,000,000. In connection with the Neville Island project I asked the Army officer who was a witness before the committee whether it would be possible to turn out a gun there within a period of 12 months. He said that it was not possible to turn out a gun within that period. Basing this action upon that, and other admissions, the committee deemed it wise by a majority vote to reduce the appropriation. I was one of the subcommittee who voted to keep it in, but in the general committee I agreed with all of the members of the committee that it was not wise to expend $93,000,000 for this additional enlargement of this project at the expense possibly of some other important war activity.

I have listened with much interest to the various members of the committee in their commendations of the distinguished chairman of this committee, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY]. Virtually every member of that subcommittee has risen in his place and paid his personal tribute of respect not only to his industry, but to his sagacity, his patience, his energy in the conduct of these hearings. I first had an intimate acquaintance with the gentleman as a member of this committee in November, 1912. At that time we visited the Panama Canal, and he then showed a marked familiarity with all of the details in connection with the fortifications there at that time. During the last month or nearly six weeks I have had opportunity to observe him at close range, working with him almost every day and on many occasions until late into the night, until the hour of midnight.

Mr. SHERLEY has given of his time and his valuable experience without stint. He has been exceedingly painstaking in his examinations and cross-examinations. He has been quite severe in his criticisms and his suggestions that there be additional information given the committee. I listened to the eulogy paid by the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. CANNON] the day before yesterday, when he spoke of his 40 years of experience as a Member of this House and his close observation of men who have held the chairmanship of this important committee.

I, during my 25 years of experience of public and private life, have come in contact with many men of industry and ability, and I do not hesitate to say to the Members of this House that never in my life have I seen at close range a public official who has been more conscientious in the performance of his duty and so devoted to his task in order that the interests of the country might be preserved. I am gratified to know that as a result of these few days' deliberations this bill is about to be passed almost in the identical form in which it came from the committee, in so far as the amount of money is appropriated. I would gladly vote a greater amount if the War Department through its officials had made requests, backed up by statements, that they could expend expeditiously and wisely a greater sum. I am in full accord with Gen. March, Chief of Staff, when he says that the passage of this bill is an important step toward impressing upon Germany the fact that this country is united in the prosecution of this war to a finish, and when I leave here to-night I go to Philadelphia with the hope in mind that that great district will be able to put the fourth liberty loan over the top, as it were, as another example of the fact that our country is united in standing behind the President of the United States, in order that this war may be brought to a successful conclusion; not only a successful conclusion, but a conclusion by victory through military forces and an unconditional surrender on the part of Germany. [Applause.]

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, it is, of course, a matter of gratification to me that those who have worked with me through the past few weeks of very hard toil should have seen fit to say the very generous and complimentary things that they have said touching my work. I can only say in response that I have endeavered to perform my duty. These are days when other men are performing theirs by risking and giving their lives. All of us are more than anxious and willing that we should not spare ourselves in making successful their sacrifices and their heroism, and I am sure the House of Representatives generally have realized that while their task was not of the heroic character of the men who bear aloft the colors of America on the fields of France, that it was of an importance that demanded of each of us the best that was in us. That I have tried to give to the House and to the country. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none——

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to object, but I want to offer a substitute for the section stricken out.

The CHAIRMAN. The section is stricken out.

Mr. LONDON. I desire to offer an amendment as a new section, section 3, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. One moment, before the amendment is presented. Does the gentleman from Wyoming, a member of the Committee on Appropriations, desire recognition?

Mr. MONDELL. I desire to make a motion to strike out the last word, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, we are about to pass, unanimously, a deficiency bill of staggering proportions. There is not another nation engaged in this war which in addition to its expenditures heretofore made and its present obligations could become obligated as we are proposing to obligate the American people for the enormous sum of six and one-quarter billion dollars without serious misgivings as to the ability of the nation to bear the added burden. So great is our wealth, so limitless our resources, so completely are the wealth and the resources of the Nation dedicated to the purpose of the Nation to win this war, that there is no sort of question either as to the ability or the willingness of the American people to assume and to meet these additional tremendous responsibilities. The House of Representatives passes this bill unanimously as another evidence of the fact that as the representatives of the people of this Nation, we know and realize the determination of the American people to continue this war with every necessary force and facility to a final and victorious conclusion. It strikes me that just at this time when it seems very evident that the military autocracy of the central powers is endeavoring to create a situation under which they may escape a part at least of the punishment due them for their crimes against humanity and civilization that we should emphasize, as we propose to do by the passage of this act, the determination of the liberty-loving peoples of this earth that the military autocracies of Germany and Austria, who have violated every international law and trampled ruthlessly on the rights of humanity, shall be crushed and crushed utterly. To the accomplishment of that end we their representatives here and now again dedicate the wealth and resources of the American people. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. ROBBINS. Mr. Chairman, I ask leave to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word in order to explain the amendment which I intended to offer, as it may be subject to a point of order. I would not like to waste the time of the House.

Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I intended to offer as an amendment a provision for the creation of a commission of reconstruction. We are on the threshold of peace. There is not the slightest doubt of that. We are on the threshold of a victorious peace, victorious in the sense that great moral forces that move the hearts and minds of men, forces heretofore suppressed and derided, are about to prevail. Strange as it may seem, the country is not ready for peace. Its statesmen are not ready. We have made no provision for the great disturbance in business, for the dislocation in industry, which will come with the return of millions of men from the camps and trenches, for the contingency which will arise by reason of the dismantling of munition factories, of which there are about 40,000. We have taken no care of the day when the returning soldier will find himself competing with his own sister and wife in industry. On more than one occasion during this session of Congress have I pleaded that we begin preparing for the reconstruction period. My pleas have been in vain. On the 4th of this month I introduced a resolution which calls for the creation of a joint congressional committee on reconstruction.

In view of the fact that the provision for a "War Salvage Commission," which was to make a survey and study of the properties of the United States, has just been ruled out of order, and as it is more than likely that my proposed amendment will be held to be out of order, I will therefore content myself now with asking leave to revise and extend my remarks and include the amendment which I intended to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD upon the amendment that he proposes to offer. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, it seems to me it is rather unusual.

Mr. LONDON. My time has not expired, and I could read it, but I simply want to save time.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on the amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. He has not offered it yet.

Mr. LONDON. I have not offered it. I withdraw it. Is there objection to my request?

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York that he may be permitted to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD on the amendment that he proposes to offer?

Mr. LONDON. That I have proposed to offer.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair hears no objection. Without objection, the pro forma amendment offered by the gentleman from New York is withdrawn.

There was no objection.

Mr. LONDON. I extend my remarks by incorporating my concurrent resolution on reconstruction. The intended amendment was to begin with the words: "That there is hereby created a committee." Here is the resolution:

House concurrent resolution 54.

Whereas the demobilization of the Army and the dislocation of industry which will follow the termination of the war will cause unprecedented distress unless adequate preparation is made for the contingency; and

Whereas the experience of this war has conclusively demonstrated the fact that it is unsafe to leave to private and selfish interests the control of the things essential to the life of the Nation; and

Whereas it is of primary importance that the inevitable transition from private to public control of the Nation's needs should be accomplished with the least possible friction and shall be accompanied by the introduction of the democratic principle in industry: Therefore be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That there is hereby created a committee, to be known as the joint congressional committee on reconstruction, to be composed of six Senators and seven Representatives in Congress. Of the seven Representatives in Congress three shall be Republicans, three Democrats, and one Socialist, all to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Of the six Senators three shall be Republicans and three Democrats, to be nominated by the party organizations of the Senate, service upon such committee to terminate if a member ceases to be a Member of Congress. Vacancies shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointments or selections were made respectively.

It shall be the duty of the committee to prepare and recommend legislation for the securing of employment to all immediately after the termination of the war.

It shall be the duty of the committee to prepare and recommend legislation for the taking over by the Nation of the basic industries; for the democratic control of credit and finance; for the nationalization of the railways, telegraph and telephone lines, waterways and canals, steamships and steamship lines, and all other means of transportation which are public in their character; for the acquisition and retention of agricultural lands which may be needed by the returned soldiers; for the reclamation of arid and swamp lands; for the acquisition, retention, and exploitation of the natural resources; for the encouragement of agricultural cooperation and for collective aid to the farmer; for the establishment of a national system of obligatory education.

It shall be the duty of the committee to make a special study of the extent to which the powers exercised by the Federal Government to promote the national defense may be utilized for the promotion of the national welfare, and to report to Congress its conclusions and recommendations for the promotion by legislation of the Nation's welfare and security.

The committee is authorized to employ such clerical and expert assistance as may be necessary, and may by subcommittee or otherwise send for persons or papers and administer oaths. The committee may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate and House of Representatives; expenses contracted hereunder shall be paid one-half from the contingent fund of the Senate and one-half from the contingent fund of the House upon presentation of vouchers approved by the chairman of said committee until otherwise provided by law.

The committee shall report to Congress not later than January 1, 1919, and from time to time thereafter.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with various amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The motion was agreed to; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and had directed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gross.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken, and the bill was passed.

The SPEAKER. The bill has passed unanimously.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

COMMITTEE TO ATTEND THE FUNERAL OF LATE REPRESENTATIVE STERLING OF ILLINOIS.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee to attend the funeral of the late Representative STERLING of Illinois:

Mr. MANN, Mr. CANNON, Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY, Mr. FOSTER, Mr. MCCORMICK, Mr. MASON, Mr. WILSON of Illinois, Mr. SABATH, Mr. MCANDREWS, Mr. JUUL, Mr. GALLAGHER, Mr. BRITTEN, Mr. FOSS, Mr. COPLEY, Mr. FULLER of Illinois, Mr. MCKENZIE, Mr. KING, Mr. IRELAND, Mr. WHEELER, Mr. RODENBERG, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. DENISON, Mr. JOHN W. RAINEY, Mr. GREEN of Iowa, Mr. OLDFIELD, Mr. DALLINGER, Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas, and Mr. RAKER.

EARTHQUAKE IN PORTO RICO.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I have received a telegram from the Resident Commissioner of Porto Rico, which I ask to have read.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., October 17, 1918.

Representative FINIS G. GARRETT,
Committee on Insular Affairs, Washington, D. C.:

Have received the following cable from president of the senate of Porto Rico:

"Just returned from Region Island, mainly stricken by earthquake. Mayaguiz, Anasco, and Aguadilla nearly destroyed. Aguada and Ponce seriously damaged. Losses, 100 dead and $4,000,000. Probable special session of legislature to meet conditions."

Please submit this matter to House, and any action taken to assist the people of Porto Rico in this great distress will be deeply appreciated.

CORDOVA DAVILA.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, the relations that exist between the Government of the United States and Porto Rico are very well understood by Members of the House. If that had been a personal telegram I should not have submitted it to the House. But it was an official telegram from the representative of that Territory, or whatever its legal characterization may properly be, and I did not feel, therefore, that I would be justified in withholding the telegram from submission to the House.

It seems to me that perhaps that ought to be referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and I ask for its reference to that committee, if there be no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair refers it to the Committee on Appropriations.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. OSBORNE, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family;

To Mr. SMITH of Michigan, for two weeks, on account of important business; and

To Mr. HARDY (at the request of Mr. EAGLE), on account of sickness in his family.

PRODUCTION OF SPRUCE.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Public Lands I ask that Senate bill 4886, a bill providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash., which is clearly a war measure on the production of spruce and which the departments are earnestly urging, may be considered at this time. The bill was reported by the committee by a unanimous vote as a war measure and should be considered without delay.

Mr. MADDEN. I object.

Mr. RAKER. Will not the gentleman allow the gentleman from Washington [Mr. HADLEY] an opportunity to make a statement?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois objects, and that is the end of it.

RESERVE OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Md. DOREMUS, by direction of the Committee on Conference, submitted for printing, under the rule, the conference report and accompanying statement on Senate joint resolution 63.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HENRY T. RAINEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, October 19, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 390) to establish the Grand Canyon National Park in the State of Arizona, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 832), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. LOBECK: A bill (H. R. 13101) providing for the promotion of certain officers in the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. EMERSON: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 338) requesting the Tariff Commission to report to Congress information concerning potash; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 13102) granting a pension to Julia I. Zedaker; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. LANGLEY: A bill (H. R. 13103) for the payment of certain soldiers' claims for back pay growing out of service in the Army of the United States, as reported by the Court of Claims; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WELTY: A bill (H. R. 13104) for the relief of the Central Building & Loan Co., of Lima, Ohio; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13105) granting a pension to Ella Williamson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. BROWNING: Memorial of Haddon Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, No. 38, Haddonfield, N. J., favoring the repeal of the postal-zone law; to the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads.

By Mr. ESCH: Papers in support of House bill 13089, granting an increase of pension to William McFarlin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LUFKIN: Resolutions from the city government of Gloucester, Mass., relative to the recent proposals of the German Government relative to an armistice; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. RAKER: Resolution by the Toulume County Council of Defense, demanding that we accept nothing except unconditional surrender and immediate evacuation of invaded territories, and that Germany be made to pay damages; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also, resolution adopted by the Berkeley Defense Corps, September 23, 1918, relative to permitting the killing of ducks to prevent the destruction of rice in the counties of Glenn, Colusa, and Butte, Cal.; to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolution of the Common Council of San Diego, Cal., offering to the United States a portion of Balboa Park in that city for the establishment of a naval-base hospital; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. STINESS: Petition of Musicians' Protective Association, Local 198, favoring the passage of the bill to increase the efficiency of Navy bands; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, October 19, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord God of Hosts, lest we forget, and relax our vigils, our patriotism, our sacrifices of means and men, remind us of the so-called Kultur and barbarous methods of warfare introduced by the enemies of human rights and human liberty long since enunciated by the Holy One of Israel, until a peace shall come and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven; for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to know what the remarks consist of.

Mr. GORDON. The title of my remarks will be "Military necessity and the duty of the American Congress in time of war."

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. GORDON. Yes; my own remarks. I expect to insert some quotations.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ANONYMOUS PROPAGANDA.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Mr. Speaker, at his request I ask to have read an anonymous post card just received by Rev. Henry N. Couden, Chaplain of the House of Representatives, which was evidently sent out for the purpose of creating dissatisfaction and disorganizing our war forces at this perilous time and which shows that the agents and propagandists of the Kaiser still abide with us. I ask that the Clerk read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it, without objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

WASHINGTON AND CORNWALLIS.

One of them went "over the top" October 19, 1781, and one didn't. But to-day Confederate riders and drivers have put the British ring in our noses "to beat the band." We shriek and scream for liberty and haven't liberty ourselves to even eat unmolested by an alien adventurer.

Pray all you want to, as Elisha urged the prophets of Baal. You will get the same answer they got!

OCTOBER 19, 1918.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. This card, while unsigned, bears a Washington, D. C., postmark.

I call attention to this matter in order that the head of our Secret Service may take notice and that the public may know that Germany still works her propaganda right in the shadow of our Nation's Capitol. Every man with a thimbleful of sense knows that things must be done in time of war that should not be done in time of peace, and that the success of our forces at the front depends primarily on the support given them at home. Therefore the circulation through the mails of such insidious matter as this emphasizes the necessity for the very policy which the card attempts to criticize. I hope the Department of Justice will be able to locate the guilty and deal with him or them summarily. [Applause.]

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. In just a moment. At this time of peril, when we are all doing our best to establish liberty throughout the world, when we are striving our utmost to save civilization for the universe, when our brave boys are baring their breasts to the bullets of a common enemy in the cause of freedom, civilization, and Christian justice, no pains should be spared to suppress this character of propaganda. This insidious "back firing" on our boys in the trenches must be stopped, even if it takes a firing squad to do it. [Applause.] Now, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

RECESS AGREEMENT.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. Reserving the right to object, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes after the gentleman from Illinois concludes.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will ask the gentleman from Kansas and the gentleman from Illinois to withhold their requests for a moment.

Mr. Speaker, the legislative situation is this: With the exception of the deficiency bill which passed the House yesterday and the agricultural stimulation bill, and Senate joint resolution 63 to form a reserve of the Public Health Service, which we passed the other day, all the administration measures have been passed, and the only thing for the House to do is to wait until the Senate passes the revenue bill. This does not include some unanimous-consent requests for the consideration of bills which we will have all day to-day to consider. The Senate Finance Committee will probably finish the revenue bill and report it out by the 29th. It is then proposed by the Senate to have a concurrent resolution for adjournment of the two Houses from October 29 to November 12; the Senate hopes to pass the revenue bill by the 20th, or not later than the 25th of November. It is then hoped we can have an adjournment sine die, which would be until the regular session meets on the first Monday in December. I am going to ask unanimous consent for a gentlemen's agreement, which I have put in writing and which I ask the Clerk to read.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that when the House adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned to meet on Monday and Thursday only of each week until the Senate shall have voted on the pending revenue bill, unless sooner reconvened by operation of law, or necessity, of which notice shall be given by the majority and minority leaders. That during this period no business shall be transacted, by unanimous consent or otherwise, except the final disposition of the pending deficiency appropriation bill, the agricultural stimulation bill, Senate joint resolution No. 63, and minor matters on the Speaker's table: Provided, That the House may consider and act upon any concurrent resolution proposing a recess for a fixed period.

The SPEAKER. Is that offered as a resolution, or just simply for consideration?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not believe we could offer it as a resolution; but that is the form of the gentleman's agreement that I would suggest to be entered of record if we come to an agreement.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman inform the House what he means by "minor matters on the Speaker's table," and when they are to be considered.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not know that there are any matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does that mean to-day, or at any day in the future?

Mr. WALSH. During that period.

Mr. KITCHIN. During this period.

Mr. STAFFORD. There will be objection to that.

Mr. BARNHART. We could not have an agreement unless it embodied something like that. There may be deaths of Members, or something of that kind.

Mr. WALSH. Those are not matters on the Speaker's table.

Mr. KITCHIN. There might be some minor bills to lay before the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. "Minor matters on the Speaker's table" refers to bills coming over from the other body. That should not be included in the agreement.

Mr. TOWNER. As I understood the resolution, it was that this agreement was to last until the Senate had voted on the revenue bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. Did the gentleman mean that?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. I understood from the statement that he meant only that it should be extended until the time when the bill was reported to the Senate.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. The Senate Finance Committee will report the bill to the Senate on or before the 29th of October, and then hopes that a concurrent resolution for adjournment from October 29 to November 12 can be passed by both Houses. The Senate on the 12th would reconvene and immediately take up the revenue bill with the hope of passing it by the 25th of November. There would be no use in House Members returning here while the Senate was discussing the bill.

Mr. TOWNER. So far as I am concerned, I have no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. The agreement provides that if there should arise in the meantime any emergency requiring legislation, then the majority and minority leaders would give notice to the members of their respective parties, and of course in answer to that call they would come in, and this agreement would be null and void. I rather think the gentleman's objection to "minor matters on the Speaker's table" is a proper one, and that it should go out, but with the understanding, as suggested by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART], that should a Member die the House on one of the meeting days could make proper arrangements and consider proper motions in spite of this agreement.

Mr. STAFFORD. In the form in which the agreement now is, it would involve many unanimous-consent agreements as to bills, and so forth, which I think ought not to be included.

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, I will strike the "minor matters on the Speaker's table" out. I believe this agreement covers exactly what the membership of the House desires. Of course, we have in here the provision that "unless the House is sooner convened by operation of law," and it is barely possible, although I do not think probable, that the Senate might not vote on the revenue bill until the reconvening of Congress.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will yield to the gentleman.

Mr. WALSH. I want to ask the gentleman if under this agreement, with these exceptions noted, it would not be in order when the matters are under consideration for discussion to be had and attempts to recommit or to amend.

Mr. KITCHIN. What matters does the gentleman refer to?

Mr. WALSH. The three matters excepted to in the agreement.

Mr. KITCHIN. That would have to be disposed of; take, for instance, the deficiency bill, if it should come back, no man would make the point of no quorum.

Mr. WALSH. But we do not know in what shape it will come back, nor how many items will be added to it, and to have it unanimously agreed that when the deficiency bill comes back it shall be immediately sent to conference and the conference report agreed upon I do not think is wise.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; whatever Members are here will consider it.

Mr. GILLETT. Nothing is foreclosed.

Mr. KITCHIN. I want to say that it is to be expected that two of these matters that are mentioned in the agreement will be disposed of to-day.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. It seems to me that the agreement is a fair one, because some Members will stay here, of course. I expect the Committee on Appropriations, which is most interested in the deficiency bill—or at least they have studied it the most—will largely remain here, and if the gentleman from Massachusetts, or anybody else, thinks that something will be in which he does not approve of, all he has to do is to stay here. There will be some Members remain here on both sides of the House, and the only effect of this agreement, as I understand it, is to prevent anything else coming up. These matters will come up anyway if we did not have the agreement.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to state, in reply to the suggestion of my colleague from Massachusetts, that I am not afraid of anything being put in the bill that I do not approve of; but we do know that that bill when it comes back from the other body will probably contain items that are not in it now, and may contain other amendments. We spent two days considering the original bill, and if this agreement is entered into, unless some one makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, the consideration of it is practically foreclosed.

Mr. KITCHIN. That, as the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] says, is specially taken care of in this agreement.

Mr. WALSH. I do not think it ought to be considered until after the agreement expires.

Mr. GILLETT. There will probably be as many here as there were present during the last two days of its consideration.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that is true.

Mr. ANDERSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. In regard to the measures specifically mentioned in the agreement, does the agreement contemplate that they shall be considered without a quorum and that the Member who makes a point of no quorum would be violating the gentlemen's agreement?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, no.

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. Can we have the amendment again read?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will read it as modified:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that when the House adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned to meet on Monday and Thursday only of each week until the Senate shall have voted on the pending revenue bill, unless sooner reconvened by operation of law or necessity, of which notice shall be given by the majority and minority leaders. That during this period no business shall be transacted, by unanimous consent or otherwise, except the final disposition of the pending deficiency appropriation bill, the Agricultural stimulation bill, and Senate joint resolution No. 63: Provided, That the House may consider and act upon any concurrent resolution proposing a recess for a fixed period.

Mr. ANDERSON. Let me call attention to this situation: Suppose the agricultural stimulation bill does not become a law before the 1st of November. My recollection is that the joint resolution expires at that time and you would have to have a joint resolution continuing it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Let me ask if there is a joint resolution extending the appropriations for the food conservation bill of last year?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; we have that now.

Mr. STAFFORD. I thought it only applied to the agricultural appropriation act.

Mr. LEVER. No.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say that under the circumstance suggested by the gentleman from Minnesota that the majority and minority leaders would give notice to a sufficient number of Members to come here and make a quorum if that had to be done and a quorum was demanded. If such a condition as that should arise, we would have to have an extension of that kind.

Mr. ANDERSON. I am not willing by my silence to give consent that the deficiency bill, or any other bill mentioned in this agreement, shall be considered without a quorum.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I do not understand that there is any such agreement in this.

Mr. KITCHIN. Not a bit.

Mr. GILLETT. This does not state that anything could be considered without a quorum. I do not believe any such agreement could be made.

Mr. KITCHIN. If such a situation arises such as the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] suggests, there would be no trouble to get a quorum if one was necessary or demanded by the gentleman or anyone. The majority and the minority leaders would send notice to the membership of the House.

Mr. CARAWAY assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question for information. Does this agreement say that we are not going to take this recess until the Senate passes the revenue bill or reports it?

Mr. KITCHIN. We would have this gentleman's agreement until then.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Until when?

Mr. KITCHIN. Until the Senate votes on the bill, but in the meantime it is provided here that the House may consider a resolution of adjournment for a fixed period.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Has it not been generally reported that the Senate committee is not going to report this bill until the 25th or 26th of October?

Mr. KITCHIN. They hope to report it by the 29th of October.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. That is, report it to the Senate?

Mr. KITCHIN. Report it to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. When are they going to vote on it?

Mr KITCHIN. The Senate's plan is, after it is reported on or before the 29th, to consider a concurrent resolution for adjournment from the 29th of October until the 12th of November. That is to give the Members of the Senate and the House an opportunity to go home to vote and the far western Members time enough in which to get back after they do vote.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. Are they going to vote on it in the Senate on the 29th?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; they will report it out of the Finance Committee on or before that date if possible.

Mr. CLARK of Missouri. And they are not going to vote on it until after the elections?

Mr. KITCHIN. Not until after the 12th of November. They hope and believe that by returning on the 12th they can consider the bill in the Senate and vote on it by the 20th or 25th of November, and then it is the hope to have a sine die adjournment.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. In other words, when a Member leaves here under this agreement, he shall observe the newspapers, and when he sees that the Senate has voted on the revenue bill that will be notice to him to come to Washington?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, he will have notice sent to him before that.

Mr. GARRETT of Texas. I mean in the event that he should not get the notice that is sent. That would be his notice?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but he will receive notice before that.

Mr. HASTINGS. Suppose the Senate does not vote on that before the first Monday in December, does this agreement keep us in recess until after the regular session begins?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; the agreement provides except we be sooner convened by operation of law.

Mr. HASTINGS. Then we do have a clear understanding that if the Senate does not vote on the revenue bill by the first Monday in December, this agreement is off on that date?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course.

Mr. HASTINGS. But the agreement does not state that.

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, yes; it does. It says "unless sooner reconvened by operation of law."

Mr. HASTINGS. We have a clear understanding about that, as to what that means?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. If this time is carried out, the effect of it will be, if the Senate voted on the revenue bill on the 25th of November, or at any other time, that all that Members will be called back for would be to vote to adjourn sine die?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; they would be called back to send the bill to conference, and then if we adjourned sine die on the 25th or 26th of November the conferees would still remain in session and hope to be ready to report by the time the regular session meets. As far as the revenue bill is concerned, it would cause absolutely no delay in that at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. Really if that plan is carried out, all that we would be called on to do when we came back would be to vote to send the bill to conference and to adjourn?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; if the plan suggested by the Senate leaders on both sides is carried out, and I see no objection to that plan.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I would like to ask the gentleman a question for information. There is a bill pending here known as the sanatorium bill.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the Dawson Springs bill?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Which in the gentleman's opinion is the best place in the United States to locate the sanatorium.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes. The information I am seeking is this: This bill has been reported unanimously by the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and by the Committee on Rules. Consideration of it has been denied by reason of the fact that there is no quorum present. The Bureau of Public Health and the Bureau of War-Risk Insurance are anxious to have it passed because of the fact that there are 14,000 tubercular soldiers that they have no place to send; but by reason of the fact that there is no quorum, consideration of it has been denied. Will that bill have the same status when we convene here in December, with a quorum, as it has now?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; the same status. The Rules Committee can call up the rule for its consideration at any time. The gentleman from Kentucky and those interested will lose nothing. Question, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CARAWAY). Is there objection to the unanimous-consent agreement presented by the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER resumed the chair.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table and immediately consider Senate bill 4886.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has recognized the gentleman from Illinois to make a request to proceed for 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I renew my request for unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object, as I want to address the House for five minutes.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, there are one or two little emergency matters that ought to be passed.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will recognize the gentleman in order.

Mr. MAYS. I am reserving the right to object to these speeches. It seems to me, while I do not want to object, that we ought to attend to this business first and have the speeches afterwards.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois. [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes when the gentleman from Illinois concludes. Is there objection?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask 10 minutes when the gentleman from Kansas concludes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I desire to call up the conference report on one of these food bills. I would be very glad to yield the gentleman 10 minutes out of my hour if he will take it.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. That is all right.

Mr. LITTLE. And I will take my five minutes if the gentleman will grant it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas for five minutes?

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, Mr. LEVER has kindly agreed to yield me five minutes out of his hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws his request. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call the attention of the House to a letter written by Mr. W. D. Jamieson, representing the Democratic committee, asking for campaign contributions and also call attention to the uses to which funds proposed to be collected are to be put. This letter is dated September 18, 1918, and is addressed to Mr. White:

SEPTEMBER 18, 1918.

Mr. JOHN WHITE,
Lexington, Ky.

DEAR MR. WHITE: Didn't the donation you gave the Democratic National Committee two years ago to help reelect President Wilson prove the best political investment you ever made?

All investments, including political ones, have to be protected.

The national committee now needs another donation from you to help safeguard that which we won, thanks to your help and that of others like you, two years ago.

The Republicans are out to win Congress in this fall's elections. What would Berlin think if the administration's party met with national defeat? You and all the balance of us must not permit this to occur.

Won't you at least duplicate your contribution of two years ago? Our records show that you aided to the amount of $25.

Sit right down, Mr. White, and send us your check making the contribution at least as much as you gave before, and as much more as you can afford.

I know there are lots of demands on you, but I also know you want our records here to show you as one of the party's and the administration's exceptional and continuous supporters.

Chairman McCormick and party leaders here in Washington are exceedingly anxious about the situation. I want you to be included among those I can call to their attention as having shown, in a substantial way, that you still have the interest of our party and the administration at heart.

Here is an addressed envelope. We are looking confidently for an immediate reply, for our campaign needs are very urgent and very hard to meet. We must depend on men like you who will make a little extra sacrifice to aid in a difficult situation.

Very sincerely, yours, W. D. JAMIESON.

P. S.—Did you notice the returns from the Maine election? They indicate the hard fight we are up against.

I understand that the plan of expenditure under the contribution requested to be——

Mr. McARTHUR rose.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not want to yield.

Mr. McARTHUR. I wanted to know who wrote the letter.

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Jamieson wrote the letter. The plan to be followed is to send posters and paste them on billboards all over the United States with statements of this sort: "Germany will say you repudiated Wilson if you elect a Congress not in sympathy with his policies." I want to ask whether that means that Republicans are not to have any consideration in the election? I want to ask further, Have the Republicans been in sympathy with the policies of the administration? I further want to ask, Is this a Democratic war; are none but Democrats on the battle field; are none but Democrats contributing to the success of the war?

Is patriotism to be capitalized by statements of that sort? Are Republicans to be permitted only to pay and bleed? Every nation in the world except America engaged in the war has formed coalition cabinets. They have requested every party to join in the success of the war. Republicans in America have been quite as loyal as Democrats. We recognize no politics in the war. This is an American war; this is a war in which the American people are interested. We are for the war; we propose that it shall be fought to a successful conclusion. We are for the Commander in Chief of the Army and we have sustained him in every way within our power, and we resent the statements that are being sent out indicating that the Republicans have not been loyal. "Help Wilson win the war" and other placards containing a picture of Wilson will be found on the street cars of the United States. Why, we all want to win the war. Republicans equally with Democrats. There should be no politics in the war, and we, as Americans, repudiate the insinuation that Republicans are not patriotic, which these placards would indicate. Another placard says, "Washington and Lincoln were hampered by critics. Do not hamper Wilson." Have we hampered Wilson? I deny it.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MADDEN. We have supported Wilson more loyally than members of his own party. Yes; I yield.

Mr. HEFLIN. I challenge that statement.

Mr. MADDEN. Well, the gentleman is entitled to challenge it, but it is true.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman's colleagues, two of them, have hampered the President in every way they could, and many Members on the gentleman's side——

Mr. MADDEN. I do not yield for a speech, but how many Democrats could he name?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to yield any further.

Mr. MADDEN. "Elect men who will aid him win the war," another placard. Who has aided thus far? Has there been any lack of support on the Republican side? None whatever. Has the administration asked for anything that it has not received? Have the Republicans been disloyal? I deny it; they have been loyal to the core. This is an American war; not a Democratic war; not a Republican war. We are for America and for the Commander in Chief of America's Army and Navy and will sustain him in the most vigorous prosecution of the war to a successful conclusion. [Applause.]

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from North Carolina rise?

Mr. SMALL. To ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to proceed for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD and to proceed for one minute. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. On what subject?

Mr. SMALL. After my minute, if the gentleman objects, I am perfectly willing——

Mr. GILLETT. I do not expect to object, but I would not like to give unanimous consent until I know what the subject is.

Mr. SMALL. It is an editorial that appeared in the Public Ledger by ex-President Taft on yesterday on the right of Congress to tax salaries of State and city officials and securities of county and State subdivisions.

Mr. GILLETT. If that is the subject, I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I object. I do not object to his proceeding for a minute, but I object to the extension by including the editorial.

TOWN SITE OF PORT ANGELES, WASH.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent under authority of the Public Lands Committee to call up from the Speaker's table the bill S. 4886, for immediate consideration.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4886) providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I notice that the House committee has offered several amendments, and I wish to suggest for the consideration of the gentleman having the bill in charge a further amendment. The bill provides that this land now owned by the Government and used by the Public Health Service shall be sold at a price to be agreed upon by the railroad company and the Secretary of the Treasury. To me that seems to be rather unusual in legislative enactment. Why should it not be at such a reasonable price as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury? If we pass it in the present form it would suggest to the Secretary of the Treasury that it was to be some compromise agreement for any price he could obtain from this company. Of course, it is not the intendment of the committee that that should be the policy.

I assume this land is to be purchased by this railroad company from the Government at a reasonable price.

Mr. MAYS. I would have no objection at all to that amendment if the gentleman would offer it.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection to the bill being considered, and would not even object if the gentleman would say that the amendment suggested by me was not worthy.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MAYS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Utah asks unanimous consent that the bill may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 4886) providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to sell to the Siems, Carey & H. S. Kerbaugh Corporation, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Washington, that part of United States hospital reserve in the original town site of Port Angeles, lying north of the Northern Pacific Railroad tract, as now located thereon at such a price as may be agreed upon between said company and the Secretary of the Treasury, and that the Secretary of the Interior is authorized and directed to issue patent therefor upon payment of the sum agreed upon.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendments.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, line 4, after the word "Carey," strike out the word "and."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 1, lines 5 and 6, strike out the word "Washington" and insert the word "Maine."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk reported the next committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "States," insert the word "marine."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk also reported the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 7, after the word "reserve," insert the words "suburban lot or block No. 33."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk also reported the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 8, after the word "Angeles," insert the words "State of Washington."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk also reported the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, strike out the words "Northern Pacific Railroad tract" and insert the words "Seattle, Port Angeles & Lake Crescent Railway track."

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I desire, with the permission of the gentleman from Utah——

Mr. MAYS. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. HADLEY. I move to amend that particular amendment by striking out the words "Lake Crescent" in the committee amendment and inserting the word "Western" in lieu thereof, for the reason that since the amendment was made there has been found to be a slight discrepancy in the title of the road.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HADLEY moves to amend the committee amendment, page 1, line 10 by striking out the words "Lake Crescent" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "Western," so that the line as amended will read "Seattle, Port Angeles & Western Railway track."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment to the amendment.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move the following amendment, namely, to insert the word "reasonable," in line 11, after the article "a," and strike out in line 11, first page, and on line 1, page 2, the clause "agreed upon between said company" and insert in lieu thereof the words "fixed by," so that it will read "as now located thereon at such a reasonable price as may be fixed by the Secretary of the Treasury."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. STAFFORD moves to amend, page 1, line 11, after the word "a" and before the word "price," by inserting the word "reasonable," and after the word "maybe" strike out the words "agreed upon between said company" and insert in lieu thereof "fixed by."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

There was no objection.

Mr. HADLEY. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HADLEY. Was the amendment which I offered to the committee amendment adopted? There was no expressed passage of the committee amendment. Did that carry with it the adoption of the committee amendment as amended? I offered an amendment to the last committee amendment which was adopted. The other was not put.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment as amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Washington.

The question was taken, and the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. MAYS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. DENT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill (S. 3735) providing for the organization of the National Guard of the District of Columbia.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, this bill is on the Union Calendar. I think we ought to consider it in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. DENT. I ask that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That during the present war enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia and appointment of officers in said National Guard shall be made from men who, upon examination, are found to be physically and mentally fit for military service, and within such age limits as may be prescribed by the commanding general of the District of Columbia Militia, with the approval of the President of the United States: Provided, however, That the joining of the National Guard of the District of Columbia, under the provisions of this act by anyone either as an officer or an enlisted man, shall not relieve him from liability for any service in the United States military or naval forces to which he would otherwise be subject: And provided further, That enlistments under the provisions of this act shall not prevent the continuance of enlistments, during the period of the war, of such men in the National Guard for the District of Columbia who may so elect, under the requirements of six-year contract of enlistment as heretofore prescribed: And provided further, That enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia of the special class, and appointments of officers as herein specially provided, shall be for the period of the war and for a period not exceeding three months thereafter, if such additional term of service be required by the President of the United States, and, further, for service within the District of Columbia, or in cases of emergency, in the adjoining States of Maryland and Virginia, and such officers and enlisted men when in service, shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now provided by law for the National Guard of the District of Columbia: And provided further, That all officers appointed under the provisions of this act shall be commissioned by the President of the United States, on the recommendation of the commanding general of the District of Columbia Militia, and no officer shall be commissioned without first being subject to an examination to determine his fitness to hold commission: And provided further, That during the period of the war retired officers of the National Guard of the District of Columbia may, if they so request, be assigned to duty as officers of the District of Columbia National Guard, in such grades as the President may direct, subject to examination: And provided further, That officers who have served in the National Guard and have resigned therefrom and officers and enlisted men who have been honorably discharged shall, during the period of the war, be eligible to reappointment and commission in the National Guard of the District of Columbia in such grades as they may be found qualified by examination to fill.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 3, line 12, after the word "fill," insert the following proviso: "Provided, That at the expiration of the existing emergency the provisions of this act shall be and become null and void."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman believe that the amendment proposed by the committee should be made a little more definite as to the termination of the authority under this act? It merely provides for termination at the expiration of the existing emergency.

Mr. DENT. That is the language that has been ordinarily used.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is language sometimes used. When it is necessary to prescribe a fixed time it has been the termination of the war at a date to be fixed by proclamation of the President. I am only suggesting that, because this bill, which is temporary in character, should terminate at a fixed time. When you say "at the termination of the present emergency," that is vague and indefinite.

Mr. DENT. What would the gentleman suggest? I have no objection to making an amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would suggest, "Provided, That at the termination of the existing war, as determined by proclamation of the President, the provisions of this act shall be and become null and void."

Mr. DENT. I accept that amendment.

Mr. STAFFORD. I offer the following substitute in lieu of the committee amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin withdraws the pro forma amendment, and offers an amendment as a substitute.

Mr. STAFFORD. "That at the termination of the existing war, as determined by proclamation of the President, the provisions of this act shall be and become null and void."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: On page 3, line 12, in lieu of the committee amendment insert the following:

"Provided, That at the termination of the existing war as determined by the proclamation of the President, the provisions of this act shall be and become null and void."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the substitute.

The substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill as amended.

The Senate bill as amended was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. DENT, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DAVID E. GRAY.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of a small bill, H. R. 1607.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill, of which the Clerk will report the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1607) for the relief of David E. Gray.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Postmaster General be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the accounts of David E. Gray, postmaster at Greeley, Colo., in the sum of $10,088.09, due to the United States on account of postage stamps and other stamped paper on account of losses resulting from burglary of said post office on July 1, 1911.

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will reserve his objection.

Mr. BLANTON. Has this bill come from the Committee on Claims?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Yes, sir; it has.

Mr. BLANTON. Is there not an adverse report, a minority report, against it?

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. There is not. There is a full and complete report of everything, from the Postmaster General down, and a historical investigation of the robbery at the time, which occurred in 1911. The bill has been on the calendar for a year.

Mr. BLANTON. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object for the present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas objects.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for half a minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMALL. Mr. Speaker, I again renew my request for unanimous consent to extend my remarks by incorporating an article by ex-President Taft, in which he makes a very valuable contribution on the subject of the right of Congress to tax State and municipal securities and the salaries of State and municipal officials.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Reserving the right to object, is the gentleman sure that that is not already in the RECORD, printed in the Senate part of the RECORD?

Mr. SMALL. I did not examine the Senate proceedings, but the Senate was not in session yesterday, and this article was published only yesterday morning.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I assume, of course, that if the gentleman finds upon inspection of the RECORD that it has been inserted he will not have it inserted again?

Mr. SMALL. I will make an examination, and if it has already appeared I will not insert it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

DAVID E. GRAY.

Mr. TIMBERLAKE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] has withdrawn his objection to the consideration of the bill H. R. 1607.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Texas withdraw his objection?

Mr. BLANTON. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this bill is on the Private Calendar. There are many bills equally as meritorious as this bill is. I will have no objection to the consideration of this bill when it is brought up in its regular order, but to single out this bill out of its order is, I think, a bad practice, and I therefore object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes."

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, before the gentleman calls up his conference report, I would like to submit to the House the situation in which the House is left under this order, adopted this morning. It reads:

It is agreed, by unanimous consent, that when the House adjourns to-day it shall stand adjourned to meet on Monday and Thursday only of each week until the Senate shall have voted on the pending revenue bill, unless sooner reconvened by operation of law or necessity, of which notice shall be given by the majority and minority leaders. That during this period no business shall be transacted, by unanimous consent or otherwise, except the final disposition of the pending deficiency appropriation bill, the agricultural stimulation bill, Senate joint resolution No. 63, and minor matters on the Speaker's table: Provided, That the House may consider and act upon any concurrent resolution proposing a recess for a fixed period.

Now, there are two suggestions I want to make to the House. One is that, as nearly as I can learn, it is probable that the Senate will consider and perhaps be able to act upon the deficiency appropriation bill Thursday or Friday of next week, in which event, in case there are amendments made, it ought to be thrown into conference immediately, without waiting until Monday, because the program contemplates a recess of both Houses beginning on the following Tuesday—the next day—and that might not give sufficient time to appoint conferees and agree to a conference report if Monday only were allowed for that purpose. Then, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] has up this pending matter. If that should fail, it might be necessary for a concurrent resolution to be put through the House for another month in order to deal with that situation.

Mr. LEVER. I think that was understood, I will say to the gentleman, though it was not in the order.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply feel obligated to call these situations to the attention of the House as they may not have been considered at the time this consent order was entered.

Mr. GILLETT. As I understand, the only inconvenience which could occur to the deficiency bill would be a three days' delay. That might happen or might not.

Mr. SHERLEY. If you did not get that deficiency bill into conference until Monday week, and the recess is to begin Tuesday, it might or might not be possible to bring the Houses into agreement by that time.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, they would not recess while that was pending. It might delay the recess.

Mr. SHERLEY. I understand; but if the House could meet Friday or Saturday, so as to be able to throw the bill into conference, it would help to shorten the period that Members would be kept here.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a suggestion?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. LEVER. What the gentleman states is true as to the situation developing, but let me suggest to the gentleman that if it should happen as he suggests, the conferees might hold informal conferences during that period without having the bill actually in conference. Of course, it would be irregular, but it would probably save the situation.

Mr. SHERLEY. I simply suggest this for the convenience of the House and not necessarily for my own convenience. I shall have to be here for the rest of next week and beyond that time, with perhaps the exception of two or three days. Then it occurred to me that there might be need of a resolution to continue the activities of the Agricultural Department in case the gentleman's bill failed.

Mr. HAUGEN. I trust we may have an agreement, so that there will be no more continuing resolutions. They are unbusinesslike, and we ought not to ask for any more of them for the Agricultural Department. Of course, we ought to pass the bill or dispose of it in some way.

Mr. SHERLEY. Of course, the gentleman will appreciate that as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations I have no control whatever of that. When the House and Senate fail to pass a supply bill, the Committee on Appropriations simply becomes the medium through which funds are voted in order to carry on the activities of a department.

Mr. HAUGEN. But the gentleman knows that bill ought to have been passed before the 1st of July, and it is now nearly the 1st of November.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be so; but that is a matter over which the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has no control whatever. But it still remains my duty to call the attention of the House to the need for making provision for the department if the bill should fail.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, let me say that the conferees have reached a complete agreement on this bill that I am proposing to call up now, with the exception of the rent-profiteering act. Of course I can not say what the Senate conferees are going to do with that, or what the House may do with it. My own judgment is that if the House properly insists, the Senate will recede on that and do it very promptly; and the unanimous-consent agreement entered into there would take care of the conference report on this bill.

Mr. SHERLEY. It would not take care of a continuing resolution. It is for the House to determine. I simply bring it to the attention of the House because we may be tying ourselves to a situation that later will prove embarrassing.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course the fact that the House was prevented from passing a joint resolution would be an extra pressure to come to an agreement on this.

Mr. LEVER. That is true. I had that in mind.

Mr. SHERLEY. That may be so, but also the House may find itself in a situation where it can not, without disregarding this order, pass such a resolution.

Mr. LEVER. I appreciate the gentleman's position.

Mr. SHERLEY. I felt that it was proper that I should bring it to the attention of the House. If the House wants to stand by the agreement that it has made, the responsibility is with the House.

AGRICULTURAL STIMULATION.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on H. R. 11945, to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes," and I ask that the Clerk read the report instead of the statement, because the report is shorter.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

(For conference report and statement, see House proceedings of October 1, 1918, pp. 11011–11013.)

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. LITTLE].

Mr. LITTLE. Mr. Speaker, when in the course of parliamentary events it becomes possible, I want to ask consideration by the House of a resolution which I have offered and which I desire to read to-day, merely to make an elementary statement of what it is we are reaching for. I shall not attempt to argue the question to-day nor enter into any discussion of it, but merely to lay the ground for a discussion later if I can get the time. It is a resolution intended to express the views of the Congress of the United States on justice to the Armenian people, and reads as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Armenian people are entitled to be a free and independent nation, with access to the sea and with opportunity to develop all the resources of the region they inhabit and secure all the advantages of that Christian civilization for which they have endured martyrdom for a thousand years, and Republic of Ararat should be given universal recognition as one of the governments of the earth.

Gentlemen of the House, the speech I made last February was with a view to securing some rights for the Armenian people, the only people on earth who have not had any rights for 500 years. For months after that speech was made every mail brought to me some commendation of the plan, and even now every week the United States mail brings me, from some part of this country, similar commendations. The sentiment is widespread through our country that the time has come to do for Armenia what we shall do for Belgium, Servia, Croatia, Bohemia, and the Slovaks. Erivan, their capital, has 30,000 inhabitants. If they had accepted Turkish terms and joined them in 1915 they could have had excellent treatment. But they have fought for our allies for four years.

About 10,000 people in California have signed petitions to this House commending the plan suggested by me, and asking the consideration of Congress for that plan. In view of these facts, I think it is fair to say that I was able to reflect the opinion held somewhere in America quite extensively. At that time I was talking for a supplicating people. I am now talking for a people sword in hand, asking for what they have for themselves partially won by war. Out of the wreck and ruin of the last four years the only nation that has emerged triumphant is the Armenian people. They have lost one-fourth of the 4,000,000 they had in Armenia, but they have fought the Turks to a standstill until the little Republic of Ararat is admitted by the Turks and the Germans and the Russians to be a free and independent republic, with a million inhabitants. They have an army of 30,000 people, and I think the time has come when we must concede that a nation which can fight its own way to partial freedom in such a world cyclone is one worthy of serious consideration from any standpoint.

The territory they occupy is about 100 miles by 150, about one-tenth or one-twelfth of the territory they ought to have. What they seek is independence for all the country they inhabit, so that they may have access to the sea, with the capital wherever it should be.

Long ago they tell us that the ark perched on Ararat. When the first dove flew out with the olive branch the first land visited was the land of Armenia. I hope that when the dove of peace shall light on the earth after all this great struggle, Armenia will not be the only nation entirely forgotten.

The Armenian soldiers from Russia found their way home in large numbers, and have become involved in war under the leadership of Gen. Bagradouni, who was the chief of staff of Kerensky. For months the Armenians held the great oil fields at Baku, on the Caspian. They fought the Tartars and whipped them at Baku. Three thousand English marched from Bagdad across to the Caspian, and the Armenian soldiers beat the Tartars until the Turkish regular army finally got through to them. These men are now in camp at Englesi, in northern Persia, ready again to march into the fight, 10,000 Armenians and 2,500 British.

There are 10,000 of these Armenians in the mountains fighting the Turks; 7,000 from Van fought the Turks for months, and with 40,000 refugees made their way into Persia. All these fighting men will soon be back at the Turks and will surely drive them into Anotolia and unite with the British. Their country has had no government but riot for centuries. The Armenians have won the right to self-government on the battle field, and the sons of Bunker Hill and the Cowpens should say so to a waiting world. Anybody who has been able to fight the Turks to a standstill in that country and to secure independence ought to have the hearty sympathy, commendation, and recognition of a Christian people. The only thing against them is that they are Christians.

I leave this thought to the House, but I will defer extended argument until later. I want the resolution to appear in the RECORD, so that you might see what it is we seek. [Applause.]

Mr. HAUGEN. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HAUGEN. Under the gentleman's agreement will it be in order to bring in a resolution continuing the appropriations for the Department of Agriculture under the emergency bill?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think that should be understood.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is only stating his opinion.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WILSON].

Mr. WILSON of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read briefly from an article appearing in this morning's Washington Post concerning the conduct of two American divisions during the last two days on the western front. It is, in part, as follows:

NEW TROOPS ROUTE FOE—FRENCH PRAISE AMERICANS' WORK UNDER FIRE FOR FIRST TIME—NOT YET FULLY ORGANIZED.

FRENCH GENERAL'S TRIBUTE.

The work of the Americans was thus highly praised by the French Army commander: "On October 4 the Second American Division, having arrived at night in the sector of ——— Army Corps, attacked the fortified crest of Blanc Mont and captured it in a few hours, despite the desperate resistance of the enemy, and in the following days made an extended advance on the slopes to the north for the purpose of consolidating this victory. The ——— American division, a recent formation, as yet incompletely organized, was ordered on the night of October — to relieve under conditions which were particularly delicate and dislodge the enemy from the crests north of St. Etienne-a-Arnes, throw him back on the Aisne. Although under fire for the first time, these young soldiers of Gen. ———, rivaling in combative spirits the old valiant regiment of Gen. ———, accomplished their mission in its entirety. All may be proud of the task accomplished. To all the general commanding the Army corps is happy to address a most cordial expression of his recognition and best wishes for future service. The past is proof of the future.

DIVISIONS THAT WON PRAISE.

[Universal Service.]

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY, NORTHWEST OF VERDUN, October 18.

Two American divisions have been publicly commended by Gen. Maulin, commander of the Twenty-first French Army Corps. They are the Second, which distinguished itself at the Marne, and the Thirty-sixth, made up of Texans. The latter had its baptism of fire in the battle a few days ago. The Second American Division drove a deep salient into the German line east of the mountainous region of the Champagne, and forced a general German retreat.

The Texan division followed up, winning a number of villages, and driving back the Germans near Attigny. The French are deeply impressed, especially by the brilliant showing of the Texan division.

I wish to say in that connection that the credit is given to the Texas division, but it is equally made up of men from Oklahoma. I wish further to suggest that in the fighting of that division is the first time, so far as I am informed, that any full-blooded Indians have been placed against the Boche. There are many full-blooded Indians, some of them Comanches, in that division. Texans are always glad to be associated with Oklahomans, and especially when it comes to fighting across the seas. I wish to call attention to the Second Division, which we all know from its number is one of the Regulars, and in the fighting at Chateau-Thierry was partly composed of the marines. I presume that the marines are still with the Second. I also wish to call attention, which will appear to all from the number, that the Thirty-sixth is a National Guard division. There has been some criticism, some complaint in some parts of the Army respecting the National Guard. Of course we have many Texans in the Rainbow and other divisions that have been in the thick of the fighting, but I was particularly interested in the great reputation made by this Thirty-sixth Division, since they were trained at my home, Fort Worth, Tex., at Camp Bowie.

I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting therein within five days two statements, very brief, which I made and which were published in two Texas papers—the Fort Worth Star-Telegram and Dallas News—concerning my observations while recently in France.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, he does not intend to extend in extenso the newspaper article which he has read, of course?

Mr. WILSON of Texas. No.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Speaker, the vile influence of German propaganda which was so manifest in our own land before we entered the war has also been very manifest among neutral countries. Among all the neutral nations Germany not only has its spies, as it had with us, and probably still has, but it has subsidized newspapers, it has maintained its agents at work circulating falsehoods with reference to this country, upholding the cause of Germany, and, above all, endeavoring to persuade them that Germany must in the long run win, and therefore it would be well to cultivate her friendship. Besides this, nearly all the neutral countries have found great profit in the trade with Germany during the war. A considerable portion of this trade, and in many instances the greater portion of it, consisted in selling to Germany provisions or goods that had first been bought from this country. When the imports of this country to neutral countries were restricted in order to prevent this trade, the result was that large numbers of the traders in neutral countries found their profits cut off, which caused ill feeling against this country on their part. Besides this, in nearly all of the countries the restriction of our exports, which became necessary by reason of the necessities of our allies and to prevent neutral countries reexporting provisions and goods to Germany, brought about a serious shortage and scarcity in the neutral countries, whose traders had sold supplies to Germany until there was not enough left to supply the needs of their own countries.

All these things have contributed to a state of public feeling in most of the neutral countries which is favorable to Germany, at least on the part of the majority. It is so in Spain, it is so in Sweden, and probably so in Holland, holding the Dutch ships having been much resented in that country.

There is also a further reason for the attitude of many of the neutral powers. They dread the power of Germany in case the allies should be defeated, and know that Germany would not, if such an event should happen, hesitate to take vengeance upon them for any unfriendly act, and that they would be absolutely within its power. They know that they can expect neither justice nor mercy from Germany, whereas they will receive both from the allies in event of victory. They are therefore trying to play the diplomatic game safe by preserving the friendship of Germany, forgetting that if Germany should conquer it would only be a question of time until they would share the fate of Belgium and Russia.

In one neutral power, however, and that one of the smallest, weakest, and most exposed to attack from Germany, this feeling does not prevail. The sympathies of the people of Denmark, while not openly expressed, are well known to be with the allies. There are two reasons for this. One is that, although Denmark is nominally a monarchy, it is actually one of the freest countries in the world and controlled by its peasant or farmer class. The spirit of liberty runs through their veins, and every instinct tells them what their fate will be in case that Germany triumphs. Besides this, they have not forgotten and can not forget the days when Austria and Prussia made an unprovoked attack on Denmark and took away the Duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenberg. They know from bitter experience that Germany is the pirate of the nations, that it has no scruples and no conscience, and that it only bides its time to add to its conquests the remaining two-thirds of the little kingdom. They not only sympathize with this country in this war for the world's liberty, but they feel deeply the wrongs inflicted upon their countrymen, who now, under Germany's despotic rule, have been forced into the front ranks of the fighting in a cause which they abhor and for a Government which they hate and despise. They have seen their former citizens forced against their will to come under the yoke of Prussia, subjected to every possible regulation to stamp out their feeling for the country to which they of right belong; but in spite of Prussian laws and regulations thousands of the residents of the conquered territory still use only the Danish language, which, having never given allegiance to Germany, they are entitled to preserve.

Some of the people of this conquered and annexed territory came to America. Still larger numbers from Denmark itself have emigrated to the United States until the Danish have become one of the most prominent groups of what are often spoken of as "foreign-born citizens" or "citizens of foreign descent." As a matter of fact, they are 100 per cent Americans. By temperament, by disposition, by their native ideals they are in accord with the spirit of this country. Denmark is not only free, but highly progressive in every way. There are no illiterates in Denmark, and the ability, energy, and enterprise of its citizens are well known. Indeed, it is a most remarkable country. Its smallness has caused its history to be obscured by that of the great powers of Europe, but the little nation has had many great statesmen, great writers, great poets, and great orators. Surrounded as it is by water, it has developed hardy sailors and had its great admirals, like Peder Tordenskjald and Niels Juel, for the Danish people have always been a nation of courage and spirit, and at one time held Sweden within their dominion. Their courage, spirit, and determination, however, was never better shown than in their fight against the adverse conditions of their soil, climate, and location. Denmark has no supplies of coal or iron and no mineral resources of note. The soil of the country is nowhere rich and a large portion of it very poor. Yet, through the energy, determination, and skill of the Danish people it has become a great agricultural country and is especially noted in the production of butter. A great export demand sprang up for butter made in Denmark by reason of its excellence and the well-known neatness and cleanliness of the Danish people, and Danish butter makers have served as our instructors in the art of butter makers in this country. The organization and success of the cooperative creameries in my own district are largely owing to them. A considerable portion of the land of Denmark was at one time barren heath. Through the persistence and scientific skill of Enrico Dalgas, sometimes called the "Master of the Heath," and certainly a past master in conservation, a large portion of this waste land has been redeemed and made both productive and profitable. Many of the Danish people who came to my own district settled in a locality where the land had been thought by the Americans to be too hilly for successful farming. Now some of the best farms in the country are found in this same locality and all of it has been made highly productive. Where once was seen only the rolling hills with prairie grass, are now to be found splendid farms, large houses, great barns, and every improvement known to modern residences and modern farms. The same progressive spirit, the same determination, and energy which had been used in redeeming their own country had transformed this region.

We have no better and no more loyal citizens than those of Danish descent. Their whole soul is with us in this war. Indeed, all of them consider it their war and have acted accordingly. They have been foremost not only in subscriptions to liberty bonds but in the support of all war activities, such as the Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., and others. They have a right to be proud of the history of Denmark and its achievements, which naturally they will never forget. Nor will they ever forget that they are now American citizens, and the welfare of this country is uppermost in their minds. Its traditions, its hopes, its future are theirs, and to it they have pledged a whole-hearted and faithful allegiance superior to that of all other ties. [Applause.]

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. OSBORNE].

Mr. OSBORNE. Mr. Speaker, the subject of the readjustment of industrial and business conditions after the war is one that has attracted the attention of every thoughtful citizen, particularly the employment of our returning soldiers after they shall be finally discharged from military duty, has been given much thought, and it deserves the most sincere and intelligent consideration.

COMMITTEES OR COMMISSIONS.

Bills have been introduced in another branch of Congress providing for the creation of committees or commissions to study the problems involved and to report plans for meeting them.

One of these bills provides for a joint committee of the Senate and House, with a very extended list of subjects to be studied, and another proposes a commission to be appointed by the President for the same purpose, the membership presumably to be outside the Senate and House.

It is not my purpose to discuss the relative merits of these two plans further than to express the opinion that the investigations of a joint committee of Congress are more likely to result in beneficial legal enactments than those of an outside commission. The reason is obvious. It is the duty of Congress to make the enactments after it shall have decided upon their necessity, their practicability, and their wisdom. That condition can not be reached without considerable investigation through its own committee, even though a commission should have made a report of its own researches with recommendations to Congress. Why not make one job of it and have Congress do its own work? It would undoubtedly be done more expeditiously, and would be more likely to result in legislation for the employment of our returned soldiers and sailors, and for the industrial readjustment of the Nation.

It is difficult to recall any substantial result in legislation of any of our investigating commissions. How many read the voluminous reports of the Tariff Commission, the Industrial Relations Commission, of the other Government commissions which largely occupy the bookshelves of Congress, and how often have they ever been the basis for the construction of laws?

The members of these commissions may be and often are able men, and if they had the power it is possible and even probable that they would occasionally enact wise laws; but the law-making power rests somewhere else; that is, with Congress. After convincing themselves as to what ought to be done, the commission must convince Congress; and as they are not in intercourse with the membership of Congress, whose minds are engrossed with important subjects as to which they have informed themselves through their own committees, the matter drops and the net result is a mass of printed volumes very rarely read.

It would seem, therefore, that a joint committee of the two Houses, or separate committees of each House would be more likely to obtain definite and beneficial results.

EMPLOYMENT FOR DISCHARGED SOLDIERS.

I am inclined to the opinion that a too-extended program of investigation is planned. The main thing, or at least the most pressing thing, is that our returning soldiers should be employed in addition to our present working population. At first glance this seems an enormous undertaking, but it must be done. We can not allow any of our brave Army or Navy to suffer for lack of employment. Again, we can not permit those who are at present employed to be thrown out of work. With a proper understanding of the situation, and such a broad preparation as has distinguished our country in its participation in the present war, the United States can take care of its gallant returning veterans and of its loyal working population as well.

We can not do it by buttoning up our pockets as soon as the war is over and saying, "Now that the war is over we are going to shut down on everything and spend no more money." We must treat this reconstructive period as one of the features of the war; as one of the great features that must be handled in the same broad way that we have handled the war itself.

GOVERNMENT AGENCIES SHOULD BE CENTRALIZED.

The probabilities are that the assimilation of our citizen army into civil life will not prove so difficult as many believe.

There is likely to be after the war several years of great industrial and manufacturing activity. If private enterprise is permitted freedom of movement and opportunity to expand, there should be an unprecedented demand for skilled and unskilled labor. Stocks of manufactured goods of all kinds, and of raw materials as well, must be very low in all countries of the world. The rehabilitation of the war-devastated countries of Europe, notably of France and Belgium, will make large demands upon the manufactured materials of the United States. The resumption of building operations in the United States, which have been suspended for most of the time since we entered upon the war, and which are now far behind, will absorb a great number of men.

Still, four or five millions of men are a good many to provide employment for, and the Government should make a virtue of the necessities of the occasion and do some pretty big jobs of work that will employ a great number of men, the completion of which will be of lasting and incalculable advantage to the entire country.

EXAMPLE OF THE CIVIL WAR.

Should there develop such an era of industrial activity in America and throughout the world after the war as I anticipate, the demand for the personal services of men discharged from our Army, unskilled as well as skilled, would be very great, and the dangers of unemployment would not prove as serious as many have anticipated. Fortunately, our country has had some valuable experience along this line. During the great Civil War there was the same anxiety as to the result of the final discharging of soldiers on the field. The most dismal and pessimistic forecasts were indulged in by some, to the effect that the country would not absorb the services of such vast numbers of men; that the men themselves, as a result of years of military life, would have lost their steady habits of industry; that without employment they would form bands of marauders and plunder local communities; and much more of the same extravagant character.

It is to be remembered that the armies of that day comprised as large or even a larger percentage of the entire population as do our armies of the present day. Following the surrender of Gen. Lee at Appomattox, in April, 1865, there were discharged from the Union and Confederate Armies before the close of that year a little less than 2,000,000 men. The entire population of the United States, according to the census of 1860, was about 31,000,000. The United States has now a population of about 110,000,000. To-day it would take an army of 7,000,000 men to equal in percentage of the whole population the army of 2,000,000 in 1865. As a matter of fact, we now have not more than 3,500,000, or about one-half the number in proportion that we had in 1865. At most it is not contemplated to have more than 5,000,000. The difficulty of absorption should be relatively less.

Were the pessimistic anticipations of the sixties realized? To the gratification and even surprise of the patriots of that day they were not in the least. The Government mustered out their regiments with the greatest rapidity possible. The Confederates returned to their homes without much formality. Gens. Grant and Sherman arranged that the cavalrymen and artillerymen should be permitted to take their horses home with them to plant the lands for the season crops. Congress was determined to discharge the Union soldiers with the least possible delay in order to cut down the Army and Navy pay rolls and expenses of the Government. Not the slightest attempt was made to provide employment for the discharged men. It took nearly all the remainder of the year 1865 to fully muster out the Army, although the greater share of the discharges were effected by the end of September. No soldier thought of such a thing as the Government doing anything for him beyond giving him an honorable discharge, and paying him the $13 per month due him.

The Army melted into civil life without the slightest jar to industrial conditions. The Southern men went to their long-neglected and often battle-torn homes, bravely to enter upon their long struggle for their rehabilitation, under new and trying conditions. The Northern men, on returning home, stepped into their old places which they had left months or years before to offer their lives to their country. There was great expansion and stimulation of business. President Lincoln had, during the war, signed the homestead bill which was open to all American citizens and all who should have formally declared their intention to become such, as well as soldiers, and they thoroughly availed themselves of that great act and splendid instrument for the building up of the great West.

The era of construction of the transcontinental railways commenced. The venturesome and enterprising character of the former soldiers—Northern and Southern—asserted itself by engaging enthusiastically in these pioneer undertakings, and with the result of the creation within the national boundaries of a new and powerful empire. They converted the prairie into cultivated plains; they watered the desert, and planted orchards and vineyards to replace the sage brush and chapparal; the bands of wild buffalo gave place to herds of horses and cattle which ranged upon a thousand hills; they discovered and opened up mines of iron and copper, of zinc and lead, of silver and of gold; they built cities of such beauty and convenience as made them the wonder of the age, with churches, schools, colleges, and universities of high excellence. These discharged soldiers became the leaders, both North and South, in all the essential lines of national progress; in industry, education, and religion; in the learned professions as physicians, as attorneys, as judges upon the bench; as governors of the States, as legislators in the House of Representatives and the Senate; and several attained the exalted distinction of becoming President of the United States.

So far, indeed, from becoming a menace to the welfare of the Nation, the discharge from military service of the soldiers of the Civil War—Union and Confederate—marked the beginning of an era of progress, material and spiritual, to which they were largely, if not the principal, contributors that comprises one of the brightest pages of American history.

LET THE NATION DO ITS DUTY.

Let us not, then, look forward with misgivings to the return to civil life of the soldiers of the great European war. The soldiers of 1861–1865, the Grand Army of the Republic, for a half century kept alive the fires of patriotism in a Nation where great growth of prosperity and wealth threatened the existence of all the noble virtues. The returning veterans of the great European war of 1917 will do the Nation a similar invaluable service during the coming century. "The blood of the martyrs is the seed of the church."

But the Nation should not fail to do its duty to these brave men in no grudging fashion. I do not believe in the Government attempting to provide employment for every man who comes out of the Army. By so doing we would destroy initiative—one of the best and noblest characteristics of our citizenship—a quality that has specially distinguished our Army on the battle fields. It would transform a body of brave and self-reliant soldiers into a mass of weak dependents upon the state. Heaven forbid such a transformation!

TWO KINDS OF MEN TO BE PROVIDED FOR.

The able and far-seeing Secretary of the Interior, and my fellow Californian, Hon. Franklin K. Lane, has devised an admirable plan for providing returning soldiers and sailors who may desire to enter upon agricultural pursuits with an opportunity for so doing. This plan would contemplate the use of millions of acres of land in the great Western and Pacific Coast States, now valueless, but capable of considerable agricultural value by irrigation. Along the Colorado River alone, by the construction of powerful restraining dams above the Grand Canyon of the Colorado, it is estimated that 3,000,000 acres could be brought under intense cultivation. Mr. Lane's plan also includes cut-over lands in the Northwest, the Lake States, and the South. Also swamp lands in the Middle West and South. I shall append to my remarks a letter which I have received from Secretary Lane explaining his interesting and valuable plan more in detail and showing how it can be worked out successfully. Something of this kind should be done so that soldiers who desire to enter agriculture could do so in a way that would enable an industrious man to earn a living and eventually obtain the success of owning his own little farm.

There are many men, however, who have no taste for agricultural work, and they would not make a success of it. They had rather work for wages and use their wages when earned in whatever way may seem best to them. Even though it might be better for them to follow agriculture, if they are indisposed to become farmers or ranchers, there is no help for it, and that is the end of it.

Then we must look out for those who would prefer to work for wages. Can we do that on a sufficiently extensive scale to provide for those who are unable to secure employment in individual or corporate industries and with sufficient return to the public so that the outlay may not be a waste of public funds? I believe that it can be done.

There is nothing that more intimately affects every citizen than transportation and the means of transportation—that embraces transportation of all kinds, whether by railways, steamships, rivers, canals, or by motor trucks on good roads. Our domestic production, industries, and commerce have developed so rapidly that the railways are no longer able to accommodate them. Our mercantile marine, which is now undergoing such a vast expansion, will assist in building up an unprecedented foreign trade after the great war. All this will call for a vast increase in our interior facilities of transportation after the war. By this I mean everything that tends to improve facilities of transportation—deepened rivers, enlarged and improved canals, terminal facilities on rivers, deepened and improved harbors, and last but not least, good roads in all parts of the country. Not all these are proper charges upon the National Government. But I believe that the Government might well enter upon the construction of a very extensive system of good roads throughout the country—confined to trunk lines or those leading to extensive harbors, and exacting from States and local communities the duty of constructing lateral lines.

The improvement of rivers and harbors and the extension of canals should also be prosecuted in an extensive way, and particularly at the time when we are likely to have a plethora of labor largely from the returned armies, combined with a moral obligation to keep that labor employed.

Let us place these two things together and have the one meet the other, viz:

1. The patriotic moral obligation to give employment to all our returned soldiers and sailors who may not find employment with private firms and corporations, and so forth.

2. The necessity of vastly improving and increasing our transportation facilities of all kinds, especially the creation of a national system of good roads.

In addition, let us provide facilities to all who desire to enter agriculture upon such plan as suggested by Secretary Lane.

I believe that these plans are entirely possible and practicable, and that in adopting them the Nation will at once meet its obligation to provide employment to its discharged soldiers and sailors, and at the same time add enormously to the national resources, and particularly to the facilities of transportation.

SECRETARY LANE'S PLAN FOR RETURNING SOLDIERS.

The following letter explains the plan of Hon. Franklin K. Lane for providing farms for returning soldiers and sailors:

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington.

MY DEAR MR. OSBORNE: I believe the time has come when we should give thought to the preparation of plans for providing opportunity for our soldiers returning from the war. Because this department has handled similar problems, I consider it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of yourself and Congress.

Every country has found itself face to face with this situation at the close of a great war. From Rome under Cæsar to France under Napoleon down to our own Civil War the problem arose as to what could be done with the soldiers to be mustered out of military service.

At the close of the Civil War America faced a somewhat similar situation. But fortunately at that time the public domain offered opportunity to the home-returning soldiers. The great part the veterans of that war played in developing the West is one of our epics. The homestead law had been signed by Lincoln in the second year of the war, so that out of our wealth in lands we had farms to offer the million of veterans. It was also the era of transcontinental railway construction. It was likewise the period of rapid, yet broad and full, development of towns and communities and States.

To the great number of returning soldiers land will offer the great and fundamental opportunity. The experience of wars points out the lesson that our service men, because of army life, with its openness and activity, will largely seek out-of-doors vocations and occupations. This fact is accepted by the allied European nations. That is why their programs and policies of relocating and readjustment emphasize the opportunities on the land for the returning soldier. The question, then, is, "What land can be made available for farm homes for our soldiers?"

We do not have the bountiful public domain of the sixties and seventies. In a literal sense, for the use of it on a generous scale for soldier farm homes as in the sixties, "the public domain is gone." The official figures at the end of the fiscal year June 30, 1917, show this: We have unappropriated land in the continental United States to the amount of 230,657,755 acres. It is safe to say that not one-half of this land will ever prove to be cultivable in any sense. So we have no land in any way comparable to that in the public domain when Appomattox came, and men turned westward with army rifle and "roll blanket" to begin life anew.

While we do not have this matchless public domain of '65, we do have millions of acres of undeveloped lands that can be made available for our home-coming soldiers. We have arid lands in the West; cut-over lands in the Northwest, Lake States, and South; and also swamp lands in the Middle West and South, which can be made available through the proper development. Much of this land can be made suitable for farm homes if properly handled. But it will require that each type of land be dealt with in its own particular fashion. The arid land will require water, the cut-over land will require clearing, and the swamp land must be drained. Without any of these aids they remain largely "No man's land." The solution of these problems is no new thing. In the admirable achievement of the Reclamation Service in reclamation and drainage we have abundant proof of what can be done.

Looking toward the construction of additional projects, I am glad to say that plans and investigations have been under way for some time. A survey and study has been in the course of consummation by the Reclamation Service on the Great Colorado Basin. That great project, I believe, will appeal to the new spirit of America. It would seem the conquest of an empire in the Southwest. It is believed that more than 3,000,000 of acres of arid land could be reclaimed by the completion of the upper and lower Colorado Basin projects.

It has been officially estimated that more than 15,000,000 acres of irrigable land now remain in the Government's hands. This is the great remaining storehouse of Government land for reclamation. Under what policy and program millions of these acres could be reclaimed for future farms and homes remains for legislation to determine. The amount of swamp and cut-over lands in the United States that can be made available for farming is extensive. Just how much there is has never been determined with any degree of accuracy. Practically all of it has passed into private ownership. For that reason in considering its use it would be necessary to work out a policy between the private owners and the Government unless the land was purchased. It has been estimated that the total area of swamp and overflowed lands in the United States is between 70,000,000 and 80,000,000 acres. Of this amount, it is stated that about "60,000,000 acres can be reclaimed and made profitable for agriculture." The undeveloped swamp lands lie chiefly in Florida, in the States along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, in the Mississippi Delta, and in Missouri, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and California.

What amount of land in its natural state unfit for farm homes can be made suitable for cultivation by drainage only thorough surveys and studies can develop. We know that authentic figures show that more than 15,000,000 acres have been reclaimed for profitable farming, most of which lies in the Mississippi River Valley.

The amount of cut-over lands in the United States, of course, it is impossible even in approximation to estimate. These lands, however, lie largely in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, the Lake States, and the Northwestern States. A rough estimate of their number is about 200,000,000 acres—that is, of land suitable for agricultural development. Substantially all this cut-over or logged-off land is in private ownership. The failure of this land to be developed is largely due to inaedquate method of approach. Unless a new policy of development is worked out in cooperation between the Federal Government, the States, and the individual owners, a greater part of it will remain unsettled and uncultivated. The undeveloped cut-over lands lie chiefly in the Pacific Northwest (particularly in Washington and Oregon), in the Lake States (Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin), and in the South Atlantic and Gulf coastal States (Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Florida, Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas).

Any plan for the development of land for the returning soldier will come face to face with the fact that a new policy will have to meet the new conditions. The era of free or cheap land in the United States has passed. We must meet the new conditions of developing lands in advance. Security must to a degree displace speculation. Some of the defects in our old system have been described by Dr. Elwood Mead in these words:

"Science [should] have gone hand in hand with the settlement of the arid and semiarid country, and all that science could give would have been utilized, first, in the creation of the conditions of settlement and then in aiding the settler in difficult tasks. Because nothing was done, these heroic but uninformed souls were bedeviled by the winds, cold, drought, and insect pests. They wasted their efforts, lost their hopes and ambitions, and a tragic percentage left, impoverished and embittered. The tragic part of this history is that nearly all this suffering and loss could have been avoided under a carefully thought-out plan of development."

There are certain tendencies which we ought to face frankly in our consideration of a policy for land to the home-coming soldier: First, the drift to farm tenancy. The experience of the world shows without question that the happiest people, the best farms, and the soundest political conditions are found where the farmer owns the home and the farm lands. The growth of tenancy in America shows an increase of 32 per cent for the 20 years between 1890 and 1910. Second, the drift to urban life. In 1880, of the total population of the United States 29.5 per cent of our people resided in cities and 70.5 per cent in the country. At the census of 1910, 46.3 per cent resided in cities and 53.7 per cent remained in the country. It is evident that since the war in Europe there has been a decided increase in the trend toward the city because of industrial conditions. The adoption by the United States of new policies in its land development plans for returning veterans will also contribute to the amelioration of these two dangers to American life.

A plan of land development whereby land is developed in large areas, subdivided into individual farms, then sold to actual, bona fide farmers on a small-payment basis, has been in force not only in the United States under the reclamation act but also in many other countries for several years. It has proved a distinct success. In Denmark, Ireland, New Zealand, and the Australian Commonwealth it has completely changed the land situation. One of the new features of this plan is that holders are aided in improving and cultivating the farm. In a word, there is organized community development. Its beneficial results have been well described by the Canadian commission which was appointed to investigate its results in New Zealand in these words:

"* * * The farmers have built better houses or remodeled their old ones, brought a larger acreage of land under cultivation that would otherwise be lying idle; have bought and kept better live stock; have bought and used more labor-saving machinery on the farms and in the houses. * * * They keep more sheep and pigs and have so largely increased the revenue from their farms that they are able to meet the payments on the mortgages and to adopt a higher standard of living and a better one. Throughout the country a higher and better civilization is gradually being evolved; the young men and women who are growing up are happy and contented to remain at home on the farm and find ample time and opportunity for recreation and entertainment of a kind more wholesome and elevating than can be obtained in the cities."

It may be said that this country, outside of Alaska, has no frontier to-day. Of course, Alaska will still offer opportunity for a pioneer life; and of course Alaska likewise has yet unknown remarkable agricultural possibilities; but unless we make possible the development of this land by the men who desire their life in that field we will lose a great national opportunity.

This is an immediate duty. It will be too late to plan for these things when the war is over. Our thought now should be given to the problem. And I therefore desire to bring to your mind the wisdom of immediately supplying the Interior Department with a sufficient fund with which to make the necessary surveys and studies. We should know by the time the war ends not merely how much arid land can be irrigated, nor how much swamp land reclaimed, nor where the grazing land is and how many cattle it will support, nor how much cut-over land can be cleared, but we should know with definiteness where it is practicable to begin new irrigation projects, what the character of the land is, what the nature of the improvements needed will be, and what the cost will be. We should know also, not in a general way but with particularity, what definite areas of swamp land may be reclaimed, how they can be drained, what the cost of the drainage will be, what crops they will raise. We should have in mind specific areas of grazing lands, with a knowledge of the cattle which are best adapted to them, and the practicability of supporting a family upon them. We should know what it would cost to pull or "blow out" stumps and to put the lands into condition for a farm home.

And all this should be done upon a definite planning basis. We should think as carefully of each one of these projects as George Washington thought of the planning of the city of Washington. We should know what it will cost to buy these lands if they are in private hands. In short, at the conclusion of the war the United States should be able to say to its returned soldiers: "If you wish to go upon a farm, here are a variety of farms of which you may take your pick which the Government has prepared against the time of your returning." I do not mean by this to carry the implication that we should do no other work now than the work of planning. A very small sum of money put into the hands of men of thought, experience, and vision will give us a program which will make us feel entirely confident that we are not to be submerged industrially or otherwise by labor which we will not be able to absorb, or that we would be in a condition where we would show a lack of respect for those who return as heroes, but who will be without means of immediately self-support.

A million or two dollars, if appropriated now, will put this work well under way.

This plan does not contemplate anything like charity to the soldier. He is not to be given a bounty. He is not to be made to feel that he is a dependent. On the contrary, he is to continue in a sense in the service of the Government. Instead of destroying our enemies he is to develop our resources.

The work that is to be done other than the planning should be done by the soldier himself. The dam or the irrigation project should be built by him; the canals, the ditches, the breaking of the land, and the building of the houses should, under proper direction, be his occupation. He should be allowed to make his own home, cared for while he is doing it, and given an interest in the land for which he can pay through a long period of years, perhaps 30 or 40 years. This same policy can be carried out as to the other classes of land. So that the soldier on his return would have an opportunity to make a home for himself, to build a home with money which we would advance and which he would repay, and for the repayment we would have an abundant security. The farms should not be turned over as the prairies were—unbroken, unfenced, without accommodations for men or animals. There should be prepared homes, all of which can be constructed by the men themselves and paid for by them under a system of simple division by which modern methods of finance will be applied to their needs.

As I have indicated, this is not a mere Utopian vision. It is, with slight variations, a policy which other countries are pursuing successfully. The plan is simple. I will undertake to present to the Congress definite projects for the development of this country through the use of the returned soldier by which the United States, lending its credit, may increase its resources and its population and the happiness of its people with a cost to itself of no more than the few hundred thousand dollars that it will take to study this problem through competent men. This work should not be postponed.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. HENRY Z. OSBORNE,
House of Representatives.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN].

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, in order that the record may be kept straight, I want to call attention to some of the votes cast by Republican Members upon important war measures. I am willing that every Republican whose record entitles him to it shall receive the credit and benefit of loyal support given to the administration in the time of this terrible war, but I am not willing to have the speech of the Republican gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] go unchallenged——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the conference report is before the House and discussion of extraneous subjects is not in order. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] was granted permission through unanimous consent to make the remarks he did. The gentleman from Alabama, of course, could get unanimous consent to reply. I do not think this discussion ought to be thrown in during the consideration of the conference report, which will be disposed of in a few minutes.

Mr. HEFLIN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], a Republican, has permitted Republicans to discuss other subjects, and I submit that he ought to be willing now that one Democrat should reply to the speeches made by them.

The chairman of the committee in charge of the bill [Mr. LEVER] has yielded me time for the purpose of making a reply to the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], and I want to call the attention of the country to the record vote of Republicans upon war measures, and if the gentleman doubts the correctness of my statement he can consult the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The Chair knows, but the trouble about that is if the gentleman from Massachusetts makes the point of order it must be held as good.

Mr. HEFLIN. I trust that the gentleman from Massachusetts will permit me to proceed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, pending the disposition of the point of order, is the gentleman averse to getting 5 or 10 minutes after the disposition of the conference report, or is it of such importance that he feels he must reply to it at this particular time?

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to reply now. I am sure that from what I have seen that I could not get unanimous consent to reply.

Mr. WALSH. I withdraw the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman withdraws the point of order.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not willing that the speech of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] shall go unchallenged. The gentleman says that the Republican side has supported and upheld the administration in every way. I challenged that statement while the gentleman was speaking and I challenge it now. I deny the truthfulness of that statement, and I call attention to the facts disclosed by the RECORD. Thirty-two Republican Congressmen voted against the war resolution. A hundred and eleven Republican Congressmen voted against tabling the McLemore resolution. Seventy-six Republican Congressmen voted for the Cooper amendment to the armed neutrality bill, an amendment designed to nullify the measure's entire effectiveness. One hundred and sixty Republican Congressmen voted against the Shipping Board bill, which has given America its great and growing merchant marine——

Mr. WALSH. Well, the gentleman is not reading from the RECORD. He is reading from the Democratic campaign document, and I make the point of order that the gentleman should not be permitted to read without the consent of the House from an extraneous document.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am stating the facts disclosed by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HEFLIN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will not be permitted to give the truth to the country——

The SPEAKER. The rule is not always invoked, but whenever it is invoked it has to be enforced. It does not permit miscellaneous general debate on a conference report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, in all fairness I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts to be fair and just and let me give to the country the whole truth about Republican votes on these war measures.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me, I have seen the document from which the gentleman is reading, and if the facts which he is now reading——

Mr. HASTINGS. Mr. Speaker, I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is to vote on this conference report.

Mr. HEFLIN. Well, the gentleman from Massachusetts declines to permit me to proceed——

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 28 and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment No. 28 and ask for a further conference.

Mr. ANDERSON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 28 and ask for a further conference.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House further insist on its disagreement to Senate amendment 28 and ask for a further conference.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a preferential motion, to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ANDERSON moves to concur in Senate amendment No. 28, with the following amendments:

"(1) On page 14, strike out the proviso beginning with line 24 and ending with line 3 on page 15.

"(2) Strike out all of section 7 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'SEC. 7. That the rent for real estate within the District of Columbia shall not be in excess of the following rates herein provided for:

"'(a) The rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which such real estate was let on the 30th day of September, 1916, plus 15 per cent of such rent; or

"'(b) If not rented on that date the rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which it was thus last let before that date, plus 15 per cent of such rent; or

"'(c) If such real estate was not rented on or prior to September 30, 1916, or if it has been converted from dwelling, apartment, hotel, or residence uses to business uses since that date, or if it was rented prior to that date upon a term lease of not less than 10 years which expired since the 30th day of September, 1916, then it may be rented for an amount which will allow 7 per cent net on a valuation equal to the assessed valuation of such property for taxation plus 50 per cent thereof. Said rents above prescribed shall be the standard rents for said several classes of property and prima facie shall be reasonable rents therefor. In any case where elevator or other service furnished prior to September 30, 1916, is omitted subsequent to that date reductions proportionate to the value of such service shall be made.

"'In fixing rents of real estate under subsection (c) of this section there shall be taken into account the taxes and assessments thereon, the cost of reasonable repairs and maintenance actually incurred, and of insurance, and of light, heat, water, and elevator, and other service where furnished, as well as a proper allowance for depreciation.

"'In the case of hotels or apartment houses or of rooms or apartments in hotels or apartment houses which were not rented to tenants or to guests on or before September 30, 1916, the rents shall be fixed by the rent administrator at the same prices, as nearly as may be, as were charged in hotels or apartment houses of similar character and location and having similar accommodations on the 30th day of September, 1916, plus 15 per cent of such rent. Apartment houses which have been or may be converted into single rooms or suits, furnish by or for the owner or lessee, and rented for transient occupation, shall be classed as hotels, and shall be subject to all the ordinances, rules, regulations, and laws of the District of Columbia relating to hotels.

"'When real estate is rented furnished, the rent administrator shall authorize a fair and reasonable rental for the furniture in addition to the rental for the real estate, which rental shall not exceed a rate of 30 per cent of the value of the furniture per annum and shall be subject to the approval of the rent administrator.

"'Rents in excess of the rates herein authorized are hereby declared to be against public policy and void, and if accrued or paid after the passage of this act such excess may be recovered by the lessee, his assigns, or legal representatives if action shall be begun therefor within six months after the expiration of his tenure.'

"(3) On page 17, strike out paragraph beginning with line 3 and ending with line 13.

"(4) On pages 19 and 20, strike out all of section 11.

"(5) On page 20, strike out the first paragraph in section 12, beginning with line 11 and ending with line 16.

"(6) On page 21, line 12, strike out the words 'a resident of the District of Columbia and.'

"(7) On page 21, line 21, strike out the words 'including mortgagees.'

"(8) On page 22, strike out the proviso beginning with line 5 down to and including the word 'final' in line 20.

"(9) On page 22, line 22, strike out the words 'board of rent appeals' and insert in lieu thereof 'rent administrator.'

"(10) Strike out section 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'SEC. 17. That any person subject to the provisions of this act, or whenever such person is a corporation, any director or officer thereof or any receiver, trustee, lessee, agent, or person acting for or employed by such corporation, who shall willfully receive rents on real estate in excess of those permitted by the terms of this act, or who shall willfully, by any sale or transfer or by any act or subterfuge, evade or attempt to evade or aid and abet in evading, the provisions of this act shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $5,000 or imprisonment not exceeding one year, or both.'"

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. How much time would be allowed under the rule on this amendment? Do I have an hour in my own right which I can control?

The SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, is it possible the gentleman from South Carolina has an hour which he controls on an amendment which was offered, a preferential amendment?

The SPEAKER. Anybody who gets the floor has an hour.

Mr. LEVER. Let me ask the gentleman from Minnesota how much time he desires, to see if we can agree as to time.

Mr. ANDERSON. I imagine I will not want more than 15 or 20 minutes—say 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. And the gentleman from Kentucky is interested. How much time would he desire?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I can not say, until after I have heard the gentleman from Minnesota, but I suppose I would, in order to be perfectly safe about the matter, like to have 20 minutes, although I may not use any of it. It depends upon the gentleman's explanation altogether of his amendment.

Mr. LEVER. I think we can save time if we can come to a unanimous-consent agreement. I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be limited to 50 minutes, the gentleman from Minnesota to have 20 and I to have 30.

Mr. RANDALL. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. LEVER. Yes; I will. I will not have any left myself——

Mr. BLANTON. For a preferential matter that may be offered I want five minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I will try to give it to the gentleman.

Mr. RANDALL. Does the gentleman's request involve only time on this amendment or does it involve the time on another amendment which may be offered—a preferential motion?

Mr. LEVER. It involves this amendment.

Mr. RANDALL. It merely involves this?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is anybody making any request?

Mr. LEVER. I have already submitted a request, Mr. Speaker, for 50 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON. I assumed that, having offered this amendment, I was entitled to recognition to argue it. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] is going, after the debate, to permit amendments to be offered, and this thing to go on indefinitely, I am going to insist on what rights I have.

Mr. LEVER. I would say to the gentleman from Minnesota that he has offered a preferential motion, the only motion that can be offered at this time. Unless his motion is voted down there would be no other motion in order. Of course, if the motion is voted down, then there would be other preferential motions, which I could not keep out except by unanimous consent or by moving the previous question. And even that would not keep out the motion. It would only cut off the debate. I ask the Chair to submit the unanimous-consent request that the debate be limited to 50 minutes on this amendment and all amendments thereto, 30 minutes to be controlled by myself and 20 minutes by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I want to say this about that: Having offered this amendment, it strikes me I am entitled to close the debate and consequently I think I shall object to that sort of an arrangement.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman realizes that the gentleman from Minnesota has an hour in his own right?

Mr. LEVER. I submitted that inquiry to the Chair a moment ago, and the Chair held that I controlled one hour on this amendment, rather than the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

The SPEAKER. The Chair held that anybody that got the floor on a motion like this had an hour.

Mr. LEVER. I have the right to move the previous question at any time, being in charge of the bill, but I do not desire to do that.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is not passing on that because it has not been asked.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman can not move the previous question while the gentleman from Minnesota has the floor.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman has not the floor.

Mr. ANDERSON. I was on my feet and asking for recognition and am entitled to the floor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I ask for a ruling as to who has the floor; whether it is the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], or whether the gentleman from Minnesota did not get it when he got the floor to offer his amendment?

Mr. LEVER. The Chair subsequently recognized me.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. There was a demand for the regular order, and therefore the Speaker will have to decide who has the floor.

The SPEAKER. The chairman of the committee has the first hour.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, does not the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON], who was recognized to offer a preferential motion, in offering that motion have the floor for the discussion of that motion?

The SPEAKER. Not to the exclusion of the chairman.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman from Minnesota that I am perfectly willing to give him 30 minutes, if that will help, out of my hour.

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not know what the gentlemen are going to say on this proposition. I do not want to make a preliminary statement and then have no opportunity at all to meet any debate that will be made. Why can not the gentleman control one-half the time and I the other half?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Should not the gentleman from Minnesota explain his amendment and then let it be discussed afterwards?

The SPEAKER. It does not shift from the chairman unless he is upset on the motion for the previous question.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota 30 minutes, to be disposed of as he sees fit, and will reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The Chair wants to finish that decision. If the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER], who is entitled to make a motion for the previous question, should be defeated on it, the control of the matter swings to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON].

Mr. LEVER. Certainly. That is the established practice here.

The SPEAKER. I remember the first time that was brought to my attention. The Committee on Naval Affairs in the Fifty-third Congress brought in a report relating to something about land at the Naval Observatory, and Mr. CANNON, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, and Mr. SHAFROTH, of Colorado, and somebody else, made a vicious fight on it and a successful fight, and upset the Naval Affairs Committee completely and took the charge of the matter away from them. And between two days Amos Cummings, who was a very popular and persuasive kind of a man, went around among his friends and made personal solicitations that they help overthrow Mr. CANNON and Mr. SHAFROTH, and whoever the third man was. And, lo and behold, what happened was that the Committee on Naval Affairs got it back again. Now, once since I have been Speaker the matter has swung backward and forward three times, but the ruling of the Chair has been from time immemorial that the chairman has control.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] 30 minutes out of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, the housing and rental conditions in the District of Columbia are appalling. I think it would not be too much to characterize them, in some cases at least, as being horrible. One has only to take a little interest in the situation in this District to become informed of facts which discredit the District as the Capital of the Nation.

Now, I have here a list of more than a hundred places visited by one young lady war worker in the District in search of a room, and at none of them was she able to find a room of any kind at less than $45 a month. She is now living in a little back bedroom off a kitchen, for which she pays $45 a month. Most of these war workers come from very good homes all over the country. They have a desire to perform a real service. Most of them are making a sacrifice, and yet they are asked to live in Washington under conditions that almost equal the conditions in the trenches of Europe. This situation ought not to exist, and these conditions ought not to be permitted to exist. My attention this morning was called to another case, the case of three houses not very far from the Capitol, in which there are housed 100 war workers, and these three little houses yield a monthly rent of more than $2,000. Before the war the three houses could be rented for $225. These are just illustrations, and yet they are more or less typical of conditions that exist all over the District.

Now, the parliamentary situation in which this bill stands is this: The Senate has placed upon the emergency agricultural bill an amendment known as the Pomerene amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. In regard to the conditions which the gentleman has described and with which he is familiar throughout the District, I would like to ask how closely that verges on giving aid and comfort to the enemy and hindrance and discomfort and destruction to our own war machinery?

Mr. ANDERSON. It probably is not possible to say just how close that goes to giving aid and comfort to the enemy; but this is true, that thousands of people who have come to the District desiring to do war work have found it impossible to stay in Washington under the conditions under which they were required to live.

I started to relate what the parliamentary situation was. The Senate has placed on the Agricultural emergency bill an amendment designed to deal with the rental situation in the District, known as the Pomerene amendment. Prior to that the House had passed a bill introduced and sponsored by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and to that bill the Senate also adopted an amendment, the so-called Pomerene bill. As I understand it, on that bill the House and Senate conferees are now in a deadlock, with very little likelihood of an agreement. The only chance, the only practical way, of getting legislation upon this question is through the Senate amendment to the pending bill.

Now, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], in a speech which he made some time ago, made a number of objections to the Pomerene amendment which in my judgment are valid. It seemed to me that some one ought to try to so amend the Pomerene bill as to put some teeth into it and make it a real antiprofiteering bill. I have tried to do that in the amendment which I have offered.

The first objection to the Pomerene bill is that it fixes the date upon which the basis of the standard rent is determined as the first day of October, 1917. The effect of fixing that date, of course, is this, that all of those who had taken advantage of the war conditions and the great congestion in the District of Columbia to make a new contract at exorbitant rates, effective October 1, 1917, would be confirmed in that contract by the Pomerene bill if it were passed. In order to correct that defect I have fixed as the date for the basis of the Pomerene bill the 30th day of September, 1916, which is the same date fixed by the gentleman from Kentucky in the bill which he offered and which the House passed some time ago.

Another objection to the Pomerene bill was that it exempted entirely from its operations all of those buildings which had been converted from dwelling and residential purposes to business uses. Now, as the gentleman from Kentucky very well suggests, there is no more reason why the people of the District of Columbia should be permitted to profiteer in business property than that they should be permitted to profiteer in residential or dwelling property, and I have offered an amendment which strikes out that proviso and fixes the rent of such property at a rate not in excess of a sum sufficient to yield 7 per cent on the assessed valuation plus 50 per cent.

Another objection to the Pomerene bill urged by the gentleman from Kentucky was directed toward the penalty clause. He urged, and rightly urged, that if the property was rented by a corporation, that corporation could not be sent to jail, and therefore the only penalty which could be visited upon the corporation was the thousand-dollar fine provided in the Pomerene bill. I have undertaken by a new section, 17, to put some teeth into the penalty clause, and I have made the officers and directors and agents of every corporation in the District of Columbia renting real estate and subject to the provisions of this act subject to both fine and imprisonment for its violation.

The rent which was charged under the contract on the 30th day of September, 1916, plus 15 per cent, is the standard rent for all property which was rented on that date and as to property which was not rented on that date, but which was rented previously at an agreed price, the last agreed price plus 15 per cent is the standard rate. The only cases in which that standard rent, as fixed by September 30, 1916, does not apply are, first, those in which the property has been converted from dwelling to business uses since that date; second, those cases where the property has been rented upon a long-term lease which expired subsequent to the 30th day of September, 1916, a class of cases which obviously, it seems to me, ought to constitute an exception, and as to these the 7 per cent provision applies.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I would like to ask the gentleman there if his amendment in regard to the lease expiring on the 16th day of September is not an error? Should not that be the 30th?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes; it should be the 30th of September and I ask now that the word "sixteenth" which appears in subdivision (c) of my amendment, may be changed to the "30th of September," and wherever it appears.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the change indicated will be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Now, the rents which are prescribed in this bill are made the standard rents of the District of Columbia, and any rent in excess or contract which provides for rents in excess of those herein authorized are declared to be void and against public policy.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] 20 minutes, and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. In the beginning, Mr. Speaker, I may ask to avail myself of the same privilege that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] has asked—that is, that I be not compelled to use all my time at once, for the very good reason that the gentleman from Minnesota did not take up his amendments one by one and explain them. He made very appropriate comments on the outrageous and distressing conditions that exist in the District of Columbia, which are even far worse than he has put them. I agree with him that there is a crying need for legislation on this subject, but that is not of such recent date. Outrageous profiteering was going on in the District of Columbia in the way of house rents back in December and January. On the 24th of January I introduced a bill to curb it. That bill has gone along until the Members of a body at the other end of the Capitol, in seeking to delay really beneficial legislation upon the subject, now have two sets of conferees upon the same subject. That body, in humoring its conferees in their inaction, are saying to them, in substance, "Stand idly by and do nothing while we try it with another set of conferees." Nobody knows but what they will have another set, or half a dozen sets, of conferees before the matter is disposed of, and I am quite sure it would be to the liking of two or three gentlemen on the committee having jurisdiction of the matter at the other end of the Capitol, who really desire no beneficial legislation. Those men are intelligent, and in their intelligence they know that the measure which they have proposed will not remedy the evil. Knowing that, they persist upon the passage of the Pomerene bill, when, as men of intelligence, they know that it will not bring relief to a single sufferer in the District of Columbia. They know—and I state that deliberately, for they are men of sufficient ability to know what they do—that their measure will not bring relief. They know that when they adopt the plan set out in the Pomerene bill, providing that the landlords shall have "7 per cent net," they thereby limit legalized profiteering only by the blue sky without restricting or hampering in every way the right of the profiteer to impose upon the tenant in the way of overhead charges that which he can not take more directly. The proposition in the Pomerene bill is that the landlord shall have 7 per cent "net," when these gentlemen of ability know that within an hour each and every landlord who desires to profiteer can go down town to the proper official in the District Building and convert his individual ownership of property into corporate ownership. Then he can elect himself president of that corporation, his wife secretary of it, another member of his family manager, and then out of what they have extortionately taken from the tenant they can pay each and every member of that family a big salary. There is no restriction whatever upon overhead charges, and they may take for themselves 7 per cent "net" in addition to the salaries they may allow themselves; so that they can extort God knows what.

The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] in his amendment also adopts that plan. There are other errors in the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Minnesota to which I will refer later, and I wish to compliment him by expressing the opinion that he has not been sufficiently familiar with the situation here, else he would not have offered his amendment. Some gentlemen on the Agricultural Committee who have charge of this bill state frankly that the thousands of complaints which have been made by letter, and thousands more which have been made verbally, have gone to the committee of the House which has jurisdiction of this matter and not to them; that they have not been made acquainted with the tricks of the profiteers in the District of Columbia; and that, therefore, they can not write a bill which will meet those tricks. They also admit that not being sufficiently advised as to the tricks of the profiteers they are not prepared to sit across the table with men who may be prepared upon that subject and work out a bill that will save a war worker from being profiteered upon here in the District of Columbia.

It has appeared in the testimony of two members of the Real Estate Brokers' Association before the Senate committee—and it is in print—that they themselves wrote the bills which were attempted to be made substitutes for the bill that the House adopted. The bill known as the Pomerene amendment is nothing more nor less than a shifting of paragraphs, a change of phraseology of those bills which the Real Estate Brokers' Association say they prepared, except that the Pomerene bill goes further and gives to the landlord more than the representatives of the landlords came to the House and asked. Now, the gentleman from Minnesota in one of his amendments proposes to strike out the provision that the rent administrator provided for in the Pomerene bill shall be a resident of the District of Columbia.

Mr. ANDERSON. I did not hear the gentleman.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. One of your amendments proposes to strike out of the Pomerene bill the provision that the rent administrator shall be a resident of the District of Columbia. But the gentleman leaves in the Pomerene amendment the clause that the Senate shall confirm the nomination made by the President. I believe that I know sufficiently well the attitude of two or three gentlemen who are really behind what is known as the Pomerene bill to make the statement that when the President sends the nomination to the Senate of the rent administrator and that nomination is referred to the District of Columbia Committee having jurisdiction of it at the other end of the Capitol, that unless the man nominated be a profiteer himself, or in sympathy with the profiteers, the nomination will never see the light of day. That nomination, in my honest opinion, would stay with that committee forever and for eternity, and we would have no rent administrator at all, while the profiteering would go on.

I am not mincing any words, I am justified in saying what I am saying, because these two or three men are men of intelligence, and they know what to do; and, if it had not occurred to them, their attention has been called to the defects of the Pomerene bill over and over again—that a man owning a piece of property here and renting it can extort and profiteer to the full extent of his desire if he only goes down town and incorporate, and that he can do in an hour.

The bill which the House passed imposed an income tax, and the profiteers could not incorporate against that. They could not depend on a fellow profiteer on a jury to return a verdict of not guilty if one should be indicted, nor to hang a jury, as the case no doubt would be.

The gentleman from Minnesota referred to his amendment as putting teeth in this bill. I can not escape the conclusion that whatever teeth are in his amendment are terribly afflicted with pyorrhoea and would come out the first time they were called upon for serviceable use. [Laughter.]

The gentleman from Minnesota spoke about having struck out of the Pomerene bill that clause which permits a piece of property which formerly had been used as a residence to afterwards be converted to business uses and then become the instrument of profiteering. He strikes that out of the Pomerene bill, and then in his amendment, subsection "c" to section 7, he rewrites it. I read from his amendment:

(c) If such real estate was not rented on or prior to September 30, 1916, or if it has been converted from dwelling, apartment, hotel, or residence uses to business uses since that date, or if it was rented prior to that date upon a term lease of not less than 10 years which expired since the 30th day of September, 1916, then it may be rented for an amount which will allow 7 per cent net on a valuation equal to the assessed valuation of such property for taxation plus 50 per cent thereof.

Further down in the third paragraph, subsection "c" of section 7, the gentleman from Minnesota has this language in his proposed amendment

Apartment houses which have been or may be converted into single rooms or suites, furnished by or for the owner and rented for transient occupation shall be classed as hotels and shall be subject to all the ordinances, rules, regulations, and laws of the District of Columbia relating to hotels.

That takes hotels, apartment houses, and rooms out of this bill entirely, and puts them under existing hotel laws of the District of Columbia. They no longer would be controlled by this bill if that amendment should be adopted. But that is only one significant part of that language. If the proprietor of the Cairo Apartment House himself had written that paragraph he would, no doubt, have written it just as it is.

I can say without fear of contradiction that the worst profiteer in the District of Columbia is the proprietor of the Cairo Apartment House. His name is Schneider. He has been endeavoring, according to many reports that have come to me, to get everybody out of his apartment house who had apartments there and convert the whole building—about 1,000 rooms, although I will not be accurate about that—into single rooms, or communicating rooms, and then rent them by the day and by the day only. If this language should be adopted he would be permitted to do that very thing.

This week a woman who is working in the War-Risk Insurance Bureau told me that for several years she had had an apartment at the Cairo; that just a day or two before, she had gone to her work in the morning, had locked her room, and that when she returned the door had been cut open with an axe or hatchet, and she found the owner of the apartment house had chucked her furniture out, and had put in furniture of his own, and had a man in her room.

The language just referred to would protect that profiteer, and would convert that apartment house into the biggest profiteering instrument that one could imagine. I asked her why she did not consult a lawyer. She said, "I have consulted a lawyer," and she gave me his name—one of the best lawyers in the District of Columbia. She said the lawyer told her that her landlord was subject to prosecution because of the trespass; that she could institute proceedings against him, oust him from her apartment which she had been holding, under the Saulsbury resolution; and, next, she could sue him for damages. But she said that when she came to investigate she found that she would have to lose so much time away from the department where she was at work to get criminal charges against him and to prosecute the charges afterwards that it would be cheaper for her to leave and go back home.

If that man should get complete possession of that one piece of property under the opportunity afforded by this amendment, what is he going to do with it? I will say flatfootedly, he is going to profiteer with it; and the newspapers tell us the extent to which he is going to profiteer. The newspapers tell us that only two or three days ago this same landlord brought suit against the gentleman from Texas [Mr. GREGG] for $5,000 because Mr. GREGG, under the Saulsbury resolution, has been holding on, since the 1st day of October, to premises which were legally his under the Saulsbury resolution. If this man is to recover what he thinks is right, if he is to recover the amount that he has alleged in his petition to be equitable and right—the amount of $5,000—for the short time for which the gentleman from Texas has held the premises, how many thousands of dollars will the fellow be able to get with these other eight or ten hundred rooms from people who have so held them?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I notice in the so-called Pomerene amendment, section 7, the following provision:

Elevator and other service as furnished on said date shall continue.

I notice in the so-called Anderson amendment the following language:

In any case where elevator or other service furnished prior to September 16, 1916, is omitted subsequent to that date, reductions proportionate to the value of such service shall be made.

I would like to get the gentleman's opinion of this. Under the present law and under the decisions of the courts of the District of Columbia a tenant may not withhold rent even though the landlord may cut off the heat and cut off janitor service. In other words, even though he may cut off everything except the bare room the tenant can not withhold the rent, because there is not any fixed measure of damage which has been determined, and all on earth that he can do is to bring suit to compel the landlord to furnish him with things which the law implies he shall be furnished. If the language in the Pomerene amendment is accepted that does not add to the tenant's present rights at all. It still leaves him with a lawsuit on his hands. Will the Anderson amendment help him any?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I do not think the Anderson amendment helps at all. The Pomerene bill seeks to compel the tenant to resort to lawsuits.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman three minutes more.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I wish I could go more into the features of the bill than I have time to do. Although it is not a pleasant thing to do, yet I do not want to close my remarks without repeating that it is a conclusion from which nobody can escape, that two or three in another body, men having jurisdiction of the rent bill know just as plainly as they can see the sun at noon, that they are purposely and deliberately operating in behalf of the profiteer.

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a preferential motion at this time, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, there is an amendment pending, and I suppose it is not in order to offer another amendment.

The SPEAKER. It depends upon what the amendment is.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman says that it is a preferential motion. I do not see how that could be.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the amendment of the gentleman from California.

The Clerk read as follows:

Motion by Mr. RANDALL: That the House recede from its disagreement to the Senate amendment No. 28, and that the House concur in said amendment.

The SPEAKER. It is a preferential motion over the other at this stage of the proceedings.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON].

Mr. BLANTON. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the rent measure of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], and I favor his position entirely which he takes on that question, but I do not think this bill with war-time prohibition and other important emergency measures in it should be held up any longer on account of the rent proposition alone. This bill passed the House of Representatives May 28 of this year. It passed the Senate on September 6 of this year. It contains several emergency provisions—war-time emergency provisions. It contains a provision for furnishing seed wheat and beans to the country for planting. Wheat planting time is here and fast approaching for all parts of the United States. It contains, as I said, war-time prohibition, which I deem the most important feature in the bill. If we are going to put it off any longer and let it die here because of this controversy over the rent proposition, I think it will be hurtful to the country. I am heartily in favor of the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL]. I think we could well afford to accept the rent provision contained in this bill as embraced in the Senate amendment, as it will afford some protection at least, and we have none at present. It provides that the rent which shall be permitted to be charged in this District from now on shall be upon the basis of rent charged on October 1, 1917.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does the gentleman really believe that?

Mr. BLANTON. That is a plain statement in the bill. It says:

That the rent for real estate within the District of Columbia shall not be in excess of the following rates herein provided for:

(a) The rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which real estate was let on October 1, 1917, or (b) if not rented on that date, the rent, whether by the day, week, month, or year, at which it was thus last let before that date, or (c) if real estate was not rented on or prior to October 1, 1917, then it may be rented for an amount equal to 7 per cent net on a valuation equal to the assessed valuation of said property for taxation plus 50 per cent thereof. Said rents above prescribed shall be the standard rents for said several classes of property, and prima facie shall be reasonable rents therefor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I call the gentleman's attention to the word "net," leaving the overhead charges, as I said a moment ago, limited only by the size which the landlord wishes to make them.

Mr. BLANTON. But if there were a rent value on October 1, 1917, if a piece of property was rented in the District of Columbia on October 1, 1917, then that is the present charge which it shall be rented at during the continuation of this war. You can not get around that proposition, and with such a rent proposition as that in this bill I for one am willing to accept it in order to let this war-time prohibition go into effect. I think there is a disposition—not on the part of my friend from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] but I am afraid that there is a disposition on the part of others in this House who are not so favorable to the war-time prohibition—to let this bill die a natural death, with this rent proposition as an excuse.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Does not the gentleman think that there is plenty of time between now and the 4th of March next, which long antedates the 1st of July, when the prohibition amendment goes into effect, to get the prohibition amendment?

Mr. BLANTON. Does the gentleman from Kentucky believe that there is plenty of time between now and the 1st of next March to plant wheat, to raise food for our country and our allies if this war is to continue?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. What has that got to do with the prohibition question?

Mr. BLANTON. Why, that is one of the emergency features of this bill which we are letting die because of the rent proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent, without the time being taken out of the time on this measure, that the reply of the President to Austria-Hungary in the hands of the Speaker may be read. I understand that the bulletin which the Speaker has has been verified and contains the reply of this Government to the Austro-Hungary Government.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent, the time not to be taken out of this debate, that the bulletin of the United Press, stating the President's reply to the Austro-Hungary proposition for peace, be read. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The matter is as follows:

[Bulletin.]

WASHINGTON, October 19, 1918.

President Wilson to-day answered Austria-Hungary's plea for peace with the reply that conditions are so altered since January 8 that he can not accept now their autonomy plan as a basis of peace.

In substance it was a refusal to do any peace business with Austria.

The note, as transmitted from Secretary of State Lansing to the Swedish minister, said:

"I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 7th instant, in which you transmit a communication from the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary to the President. I am now instructed by the President to request you to be good enough through your Government to convey to the Imperial and Royal Government the following reply:

"'The President deems it his duty to say to the Austro-Hungarian Government that he can not entertain the present suggestions of that Government because of certain events of utmost importance which, occurring since the delivery of his address of the 8th of January last, have necessarily altered the attitude and responsibility of the Government of the United States.

"'Among the 14 terms of peace which the President formulated at that time occurred the following:

"'"10. The peoples of Austria-Hungary whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development."

"'Since that sentence was written and uttered to the Congress of the United States the Government of the United States has recognized that a state of belligerency exists between the Czecho-Slovaks and the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires, and that the Czecho-Slovaks' national council is a de facto belligerent government, clothed with proper authority to direct the military and political affairs of the Czecho-Slovaks.

"'It has also recognized in the fullest manner the justice of the nationalistic aspirations of the Jugo-Slavs for freedom.

"'The President is, therefore, no longer at liberty to accept a mere "autonomy" of these peoples as a basis of peace, but is obliged to insist that they, and not he, shall be the judges of what action on the part of the Austro-Hungarian Government will satisfy their aspirations and their conception of their rights and destiny as members of the family of nations.'"

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota has 20 minutes.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, may I ask how much time I have?

The SPEAKER. Four minutes.

Mr. LEVER. I yield to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BANKHEAD] to make a unanimous-consent request.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that it is essentially proper in connection with the message of the President just read to have incorporated in the RECORD at this point the declaration of independence announced from Paris on the 18th of October of the Republic of the Czecho-Slovak nation, and I ask unanimous consent that that declaration of independence be printed in the RECORD to follow the reply of the President.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama asks unanimous consent that the declaration of independence of the Czecho-Slovaks be incorporated in the RECORD immediately to follow the statement by the President. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The matter is as follows:

DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE OF THE CZECHO-SLOVAK NATION BY ITS PROVISIONAL GOVERNMENT.

At this grave moment, when the Hohenzollerns are offering peace in order to stop the victorious advance of the allied armies, and to prevent the dismemberment of Austria-Hungary and Turkey, and when the Hapsburgs are promising the federalization of the Empire and autonomy to the dissatisfied nationalities committed to their rule, we, the Czecho-Slovak National Council, recognized by the allied and American Governments as the provisional government of the Czecho-Slovak State and nation, in complete accord with the declaration of the Czech deputies made in Prague on January 6, 1918, and realizing that federalization, and, still more, autonomy, mean nothing under a Hapsburg dynasty, do hereby make and declare this our declaration of independence.

FREEDOM OF THE PEOPLE.

We do this because of our belief that no people should be forced to live under a sovereignty they do not recognize, and because of our knowledge and firm conviction that our nation can not freely develop in a Hapsburg mock federation, which is only a new form of the denationalizing oppression under which we have suffered for the past 300 years.

We consider freedom to be the first prerequisite for federalization and believe that the free nations of central and eastern Europe may easily federate should they find it necessary.

We make this declaration on the basis of our historic and natural right. We have been an independent State since the seventh century; and, in 1526, as an independent State, consisting of Bohemia, Moravia, and Silesia, we joined with Austria and Hungary in a defensive union against the Turkish danger.

We have never voluntarily surrendered our rights as an independent State in this confederation. The Hapsburgs broke their compact with our nation by illegally transgressing our rights and violating the constitution of our State, which they had pledged themselves to uphold, and we therefore refuse longer to remain a part of Austria-Hungary in any form.

OPPRESSED BY THE MAGYARS.

We claim the right of Bohemia to be reunited with her Slovak brethren of Slovakia, once part of our national State, later torn from our national body, and 50 years ago incorporated in the Hungarian State of the Magyars, who, by their unspeakable violence and ruthless oppression of their subject races, have lost all moral and human right to rule anybody but themselves.

The world knows the history of our struggle against the Hapsburg oppression intensified and systematized by the Austro-Hungarian dualistice compromise of 1867.

This dualism is only a shameless organization of brute force and exploitation of the majority by the minority; it is a political conspiracy of the Germans and Magyars against our own, as well as the other Slav and the Latin nations of the monarchy.

The world knows the justice of our claims, which the Hapsburgs themselves dared not deny. Francis Joseph, in the most solemn manner, repeatedly recognized the sovereign rights of our nation. The Germans and Magyars opposed this recognition, and Austria-Hungary, bowing before the Pan-Germans, became a colony of Germany, and, as her vanguard to the East, provoked the last Balkan conflict as well as the present world war, which was begun by the Hapsburgs alone without the consent of the representatives of the people.

UNSPEAKABLE CRIMES RECALLED.

We can not and will not continue to live under the direct or indirect rule of the violators of Belgium, France, and Serbia, the would-be murderers of Russia and Roumania, the murderers of tens of thousands of civilians and soldiers of our blood, and the accomplices in numberless unspeakable crimes committed in this war against humanity by the two degenerate and irresponsible dynasties.

We will not remain a part of a State which has no justification for existence and which, refusing to accept the fundamental principles of modern world organization, remains only an artificial and immoral political structure, hindering every movement toward democratic and social progress. The Hapsburg dynasty, weighed down by a huge inheritance of error and crime, is a perpetual menace to the peace of the world, and we deem it our duty toward humanity and civilization to aid in bringing about its downfall and destruction.

REJECT DIVINE ORIGIN CLAIMS.

We reject the sacreligious assertion that the power of the Hapsburg and Hohenzollern dynasties is of divine origin; we refuse to recognize the divine rights of kings.

Our nation elected the Hapsburgs to the throne of Bohemia of its own free will and by the same right deposes them.

We hereby declare the Hapsburg dynasty unworthy of leading our nation, and deny all of their claims to rule in the Czecho-Slovak land, which we here and now declare shall henceforth be a free and independent people and nation.

We accept and shall adhere to the ideals of modern democracy, as they have been the ideals of our nation for centuries. We accept the American principles as laid down by President Wilson; the principles of liberated mankind—of the actual equality of nations—and of governments deriving all their just power from the consent of the governed.

We, the nation of Comenius, can not but accept these principles expressed in the American Declaration of Independence, the principles of Lincoln, and of the declaration of the rights of man and of the citizen. For these principles our nation shed its blood in the memorable Hussite wars 500 years ago; for these same principles, beside her allies, our nation is shedding its blood to-day in Russia, Italy, and France.

SHALL BE A REPUBLIC.

We shall outline only the main principles of the constitution of the Czecho-Slovak nation; the final decision as to the constitution itself falls to the legally chosen representatives of the liberated and united people.

The Czecho-Slovak State shall be a republic. In constant endeavor for progress it will guarantee complete freedom of conscience, religion and science, literature and art, speech, the press, and the right of assembly and petition.

The church shall be separated from the State. Our democracy shall rest on universal suffrage; women shall be placed on an equal footing with men, politically, socially, and culturally. The rights of the minority shall be safeguarded by proportional representation; national minorities shall enjoy equal rights.

The government shall be parliamentary in form and shall recognize the principles of initiative and referendum. The standing army will be replaced by militia.

The Czecho-Slovak nation will carry out far-reaching social and economic reforms; the large estates will be redeemed for home colonization, patents of nobility will be abolished. Our nation will assume its part of the Austro-Hungarian prewar public debt; the debts for this war we leave to those who incurred them.

DONE WITH SECRET DIPLOMACY.

In its foreign policy the Czecho-Slovak nation will accept its full share of responsibility in the reorganization of eastern Europe. It accepts fully the democratic and social principle of nationality and subscribes to the doctrine that all covenants and treaties shall be entered into openly and frankly without secret diplomacy.

Our constitution shall provide an efficient, rational, and just government, which will exclude all special privileges and prohibit class legislation.

Democracy has defeated theocratic autocracy. Militarism is overcome; democracy is victorious; on the basis of democracy mankind will be reorganized.

The forces of darkness have served the victory of light; the longed-for age of humanity is dawning.

We believe in democracy; we believe in liberty, and liberty evermore.

Given in Paris on the 18th of October, 1918.

PROF. THOMAS G. MASARYK,
Prime Minister and Minister of Finance.
GEN. DR. MILAN R. STEFANIK,
Minister of National Defense.
DR. EDWARD BENES,
Minister of Foreign Affairs and of Interior.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. RANDALL. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the statements made by my friend from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] that this motion which I have offered ought to be adopted because there is delay to some other provision in the bill by reason of nonaction on profiteering. I offered the motion in order to stop the cut-throat tactics of the landlords in Washington, who for two years have been robbing the people. The gentleman from Kentucky and the gentleman from Minnesota propose in their motions to continue that sort of oppression indefinitely by again sending the bill to conference. Now, I have examined the Johnson bill and the so-called Pomerene bill, and while I am not a lawyer, I should say it would require a microscope to tell the difference between them. The so-called Pomerene bill has twice passed the Senate practically without opposition, and I do not believe the United States Senate is composed entirely of profiteers and rent profiteers. I am in favor of closing this question now by concurring with the Senate for the benefit of the people who are being robbed by the landlords of Washington.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman yields back one minute.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, the prohibition amendment, as the gentleman from California has just said, is in this same bill. That has been approved by both the House and the Senate, and is no longer an issue anywhere. That prohibition feature is not to become effective until the first day of next July. Its adoption——

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield for a correction?

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. I will.

Mr. BLANTON. There is a provision in the bill which becomes effective May 1 in regard to malt liquor.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The prohibition amendment, as I was about to say, becomes effective the 1st of next July. It does not make any difference whether the bill which makes it effective the 1st of July passes to-day, to-morrow, next week, or next month, just so it passes before the 1st of July; and everybody in the whole Nation knows that it will become law and be effective the 1st of next July; but everybody does not know that two or three men at the other end of this Capitol have started out to fasten profiteering upon the war workers in the District of Columbia, and have persisted in it; and I do insist to-day that no man has the equitable right, no man has the merciful right to come into this body and say that this bill ought to be passed to-day, imposing wrongs upon the tenant class, in order that somebody may say to the country that the prohibition bill will certainly become effective next July, when everybody between heaven and earth knows it will become effective then. The gentleman from California has just stated that he does not believe a lawyer with a microscope could tell the difference between the bill which the House passed and the Pomerene bill. They are as far apart as the Antipodes. One provides that profiteering shall be stopped by taxing to the extent of 100 per cent of the value of all they take in extortion; and the other provides that it shall be stopped, if at all, by fines which everybody knows will never be imposed; and the fine in a great many instances will not be as much as the extortion taken.

Why not let the responsibility rest where it is, upon the shoulders of those few men at yonder end of the Capitol who are standing between the tenant class and the landlord class? The country knows where this burden is. These two or three men have assumed that grave responsibility, now let them keep it. Everybody knows that this House is on record as having passed a bill which would take from the extortioner all of his extortion; and everybody knows that the other body has come with a substitute which strikes out everything in the House bill after the enacting clause which, on its face, shows that it does not intend to take it all, but only a part; and several times I have cited specific instances. I referred to one piece of property containing 10,500 square feet which was rented to the Government at $10,000 a year, and at the time I first spoke of it I said they were then giving notice to the Government that after the 1st day of July they would charge $3 a square foot, making $31,500 instead of $10,000. If the penalty in the Pomerene bill should become the law, the status of the prohibition bill to the contrary notwithstanding, they would only be compelled to pay $1,000 out of that $21,500 extortion, while if the amendment offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] were to become the law then they would be compelled to take only $5,000 out of the $21,500 extortion. Yet we are told that one must use a microscope, and even then can not see the difference between the two.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky has expired.

Mr. BLANTON. May I ask him a question for one minute?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am interested in this matter entirely as a practical legislative problem. Everybody knows that if we are to get any legislation against profiteers of the District of Columbia in time to do any good we have got to get it on this agricultural appropriation bill. Now, if I thought that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BLANTON] was correct in his assertion that the Pomerene bill fixes the rates absolutely on the basis of the 30th of October, 1917, and that no more than that could be charged, I would be willing to vote for the Pomerene amendment, although I know that the fixing of that date would legalize some profiteering, and very considerable profiteering, that has already occurred.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. ANDERSON. Not right there. But this is the situation: The Pomerene amendment does not fix the rates which were in effect on the 30th of October, 1917, absolutely as the standard rate. There is another provision in the Pomerene amendment the effect of which would permit a review of those rents in every case where the rent on the 30th day of October, 1917, was not sufficient to yield 7 per cent on the assessed valuation plus 50 per cent. Because it would permit that review in every instance, the operation of the law and its effective purpose would be delayed, and the Pomerene amendment have no result whatever.

Mr. BLANTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. I yield now.

Mr. BLANTON. The provision on page 7, beginning at line 10, provides that immediately after the passage of this bill the President is given authority to make zones around coal mines, munition plants, and so forth.

Mr. ANDERSON. What has that to do with this?

Mr. BLANTON. That is in reply to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], who said the provision did not come into effect until the 1st of next July.

Mr. ANDERSON. All right.

Now, then, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] says that my amendment is subject to the same vice. As a matter of fact, it is not. The 7 per cent provision would only apply under my amendment to two cases, those cases in which the property has been converted from apartment, hotel, or residence uses to business uses, and those cases where the property has been leased under a long-term lease which expired subsequent to September 30, 1916. So that the gentleman from Kentucky is in error in that particular.

Now, as I said, I am interested in this proposition from a legislative point of view. The concurring in the Senate amendment with my amendment would not be conclusive at all. The whole matter would have to go into conference. The House conferees could adopt any suggestion made by the gentleman from Kentucky. And the strange thing about all this is that the gentleman from Kentucky comes into the House finding fault with every proposition that has been offered by anybody and making no suggestion at all except one which he knows can not possible be adopted. The result of that is that nobody has contributed more to the profiteers in Washington than the gentleman from Kentucky, because he more than anybody else has helped to delay the passage of legislation against profiteers by his insistence that nothing shall be adopted except the propositions which he has advanced.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. The gentleman from Minnesota undertakes to lay the blame for inaction at my door, while it properly belongs to a few men at the other end of the Capitol, who say that they will not go into conference with me upon so important a measure as this. I would like to ask the gentleman, with that premise laid down, if he would be willing to go home and be a candidate for reelection to Congress and say to his people that if an important piece of legislation came along, and he was compelled to cooperate or to be thrown in contact with somebody whom he disliked, he would not perform a public duty?

Mr. ANDERSON. I have always followed the practice of refraining from advising other people or suggesting to other people what they should do with reference to their own problems, and I must adhere to that rule now. So I can not answer the gentleman's question. But I do want to say that the fact still remains that if we are to have the legislation which is in the emergency agricultural appropriation bill at all, some agreement must be reached upon this Pomerene amendment, and if some agreement is reached on the Pomerene amendment it ought to be an agreement which reflects as clearly as possible the views of the House with respect to this profiteering proposition. Now, I believe that the amendment which I have offered comes nearer to meeting the objections of the gentleman from Kentucky and the objections of other gentlemen of the House than anything that has been offered. I am sure that the Pomerene amendment is better with my amendments than it is without them. I think I could draw a bill which would meet the situation better than the Pomerene amendment does, but we are dealing with the Pomerene amendment as a basis, and we have no other basis on which to deal. And therefore if this House really wants to meet the situation that exists in the District of Columbia it ought to agree to the amendment which I have offered.

I have nothing further to say on the subject.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman has one minute.

Mr. LEVER. I desire to say that this bill has been outrageously loaded by the other body, and I am hoping that the Committee on Agriculture shall not be forced to take the jurisdiction of the Committee on the District of Columbia. I hope, therefore, the House will vote down these various motions and let the conferees go back into conference on this rent proposition. I move the previous question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman moves the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The situation presents a rather unusual case, with three motions dumped on top of each other. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] moves to further insist on amendment 28 and asks for a further conference. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] moves to concur, with an amendment, and the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL] makes a flat motion to recede and concur. The question is first on the motion of the gentleman from California, to recede and concur.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr Speaker, I think the Speaker is in error upon that proposition.

The SPEAKER. How could he be in error when it is a preferential motion?

Mr. ANDERSON. It could not be a preferential motion.

The SPEAKER. Of course it is, at this stage of the proceeding.

Mr. ANDERSON. May I ask the Speaker whether the situation is any different in this respect now from what it would be if the question were originally presented?

The SPEAKER. Yes. That is one of the curious kinks in the parliamentary law of this House that I could never find anybody who could explain. When the matter originally was in here the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota would have been preferential over the motion of the gentleman from California; but when it gets back into this stage, with a partial conference report agreed to, then the situation changes, and it makes the motion of the gentleman from California preferential. Now, if anybody wants to work out a puzzle, let him try to find out how that differentiates the game. I have never been able to find out why, but I know it does. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from California [Mr. RANDALL], to recede and concur.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. BLANTON. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 2, noes 25.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The vote recurs on the motion of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] to concur with an amendment.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the noes seemed to have it.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask for a division.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks for a division.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 23.

So the motion was rejected.

Mr. LEVER. Just one moment, Mr. Speaker. I desire to call the attention of the House to the fact that the Senate amended the title of this bill by adding the words "and for other purposes." For some reason or other the conferees overlooked that fact, and that amendment is still in disagreement. But I move now, Mr. Speaker, to concur in the Senate amendment amending the title of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Reserving the right to object, I can not refrain from suggesting that it might be because the title of the original bill was to prevent extortion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] moves to recede and concur in the Senate amendment amending the title of the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from South Carolina to further insist on the disagreement of the House to Senate amendment 28, and ask for a further conference.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan.

RESERVE OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 63.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, before this conference report is called up I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to address the House for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. On what subject?

The SPEAKER. On what subject?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I want to address the House on what I consider to be an insult to the soldiers of the Civil War, both those who wore the blue and those who wore the gray.

Mr. HEFLIN. Who is the insult offered by?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. It is offered in a publication that has had considerable circulation throughout this country. I do not think the gentleman will object to it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Who is the author of this article?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. The author purports to be Dr. Frank Crane.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does the gentleman propose to make a partisan speech of any character?

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. I do not think it is a partisan speech.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall have to object.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks by inserting in the RECORD a letter written by the Minnesota Safety Commission to the Chief of the Bureau of Markets touching the application of United States standards for wheat.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the letter referred to:

Copy of a letter to Hon. Charles J. Brand, Chief of Bureau of Markets, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., answering his memoranda to his excellency, Gov. Burnquist, of Minnesota.

ST. PAUL, MINN., August 20, 1918.

Hon. CHARLES J. BRAND,
Chief of Bureau of Markets,
United States Department of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Our attention has been called to certain memoranda addressed by you to his excellency, Gov. Burnquist, purporting to show inaccuracies and misstatements in our letter to you of July 12. We feel constrained to say that many of your statements are inconsistent with the actual facts and figures, and many of your comments upon our letter unwarranted; therefore, with all due respect, we make reply thereto.

You first state that we were not warranted in our statement that the changes in the official grade standards of 1918 from those of 1917 were slight and would not afford substantial relief from the injustices of the 1917 standards. You then submit some figures which are claimed to show that the changes are substantial, and you state: First, that with respect to the single item of the allowance of rye and barley in wheat, 21 per cent of the 1917 crop that was graded No. 2 on arrival would have graded No. 1 under the new standards. You next state that with respect to the single item of the amount of vetch and kinghead allowed, 61 per cent of the 1917 crop containing these seeds which was graded No. 2 on arrival would have graded No. 1 under the new standards. You next state that during the first week of application of the new standards to winter wheat received at Chicago, 66.7 per cent graded No. 1, whereas less than 20 per cent of the 1917 crop graded No. 1 under the 1917 standards. It, of course, follows that, following out the changes in other respects, we would find under each qualification in which change has been made similarly large percentages of wheat grading No. 2 in 1917 that would have graded No. 1 had the standards been the same as 1918. It would appear that you have been generous enough to prove for us our statement that the 1917 standards were unjust and deprived the producer of the difference in price between the grades that he ought to have had and those that he received. You admit that, with respect to the allowance of rye and barley alone, 21 per cent of the 1917 crop that was graded No. 2 and sold for No. 2 price would under 1918 standards have graded No. 1 and sold for 3 cents a bushel more, and that more than 46 per cent of the winter wheat crop received during the first week of application of the 1918 standards at Chicago would have graded No. 2 or less under the 1917 standards. You state that you have not heretofore admitted that the 1917 standards were unjust to the producer. We think you should certainly admit it now.

You next state that the 1918 standards compare very favorably with the old Minnesota standards and that even the 1917 standards worked no injustice over those formerly in use. At the time the Federal standards went into effect, August 1, 1917, the old Minnesota standards were the ones in use; and since you have linked up the old Minnesota standards, the 1917 standards, and the 1918 standards it is fitting that we submit a table showing exactly what these were and comment can then be made more intelligently upon the results of their application. Since we are concerned largely with northern spring wheat we will make the comparison of standards for that class.

Northern spring wheat.

TEST WEIGHT PER BUSHEL (POUNDS).

	Old Minnesota grades.	Federal grades, 1917.	Federal grades, 1918.
No. 1	57	59	58
No. 2	56	57	57
No. 3	54	55	55
No. 4	49	53	53
No. 5	[1]	51	50

PERCENTAGE OF MOISTURE ALLOWED.

No. 1	15	13½	14
No. 2	15	14½	14
No. 3	15	14½	15
No 4	15	15½	16
No. 5	[1]	15½	16

[1] No such grade.

Northern spring wheat—Continued.

PERCENTAGE DURUM, COMMON WHITE, WHITE CLUB, SINGLY OR IN COMBINATION.

	Old Minnesota grades.	Federal grades, 1917.	Federal grades, 1918.
No. 1	4	1	2
No. 2	4	2	5
No. 3	4	3	10
No. 4	4	5	10
No. 5	[1]	5	10

PERCENTAGE RYE AND BARLEY, SINGLY OR IN COMBINATION (PERCENTAGE OF INSEPARABLE CEREAL GRAINS).

No. 1	[2] 3	[2] ½ of 1	[4] 1
No. 2	[2] 4	[3] 1	[4] 2
No. 3	[2] 5	[3] 2	[4] 3
No. 4	[2] 6	[3] 4	[4] 5
No. 5	[1]	[2] 6	[4] 7

PERCENTAGE OF INSEPARABLE FOREIGN MATERIAL OTHER THAN CEREAL GRAIN.

No. 1	1	½ of 1	½ of 1
No. 2	2	½ of 1	1
No. 3	4	1	2
No. 4	[3]	2	3
No. 5	[1]	3	5

TOTAL PERCENTAGE DAMAGED KERNELS.

No. 1	[6] 4	1	2
No. 2	[6] 6	4	4
No. 3	[6] 10	7	7
No. 4	[6] 15	10	10
No. 5	[1]	15	15

PERCENTAGE HEAT-DAMAGED KERNELS ALLOWED IN LAST SPECIFICATIONS.

No. 1	½ of 1	None.	⅒ of 1
No. 2	1	⅒ of 1	½ of 1
No. 3	2	½ of 1	½ of 1
No. 4	3	1	1
No. 5	[1]	3	3

[1] No such grade.
[2] Higher percentage if warranted by quality; did not include other foreign material.
[3] Included other foreign material.
[4] Includes other foreign material.
[5] No limit.
[6] Higher if quality warranted.

Under the Federal standards of both 1917 and 1918 all wheat in grade No. 1 must be bright; there was no such requirement in the old Minnesota grades. Wheat of excellent milling value and possessing all the qualifications of No. 1 should be allowed that grade even if it is not all bright. The importance of this point, when we take into consideration the great amount of rainfall this year during the time wheat remained in shock, will be readily seen. Then, too, farmers throughout the spring-wheat belt have been compelled to leave their wheat in shock much longer than ordinarily on account of the extreme difficulty of getting farm help this year. The requirement that all wheat must be bright in order to get No. 1 grade is unnecessary at this time when the world is asking for bread with little regard to its color or texture.

From the foregoing table it will be seen that it is an indisputable fact that not only all wheat that graded No. 1 northern under the Federal grades of 1917 would have graded No. 1 northern under the Minnesota grades, but that all wheat that graded No. 2 northern in 1917 would have graded No. 1 northern under the Minnesota grades, and that a very large percentage of wheat that graded No. 3 and No. 4 on account of moisture and admixture of durum wheat (the important factor in the spring-wheat belt) would have graded No. 1 northern. It is also apparent that all other wheat which in 1917 graded No. 3, No. 4, and No. 5 under the Federal grades would have graded No. 2, 3, and 4 northern under the Minnesota grades; in other words, all wheat that graded lower than No. 1 northern would have taken at least one grade higher; and in some cases, on account of moisture or other wheats, would have graded two or three grades higher under Minnesota grades. In view of the foregoing comparisons and your own statement, it is clear that our former statement that the farmers of the Northwest lost several million dollars in 1917 on account of Federal grades is absolutely justified. Further, a careful comparison of the old Minnesota grades with the present Federal grades, and particularly taking into consideration admixture of durum wheat, moisture, and brightness, will demonstrate that the producers in the spring-wheat belt will lose millions of dollars this year on account of the stringency of the Federal standards.

You point out that the amount of foreign material permitted to be present before dockage is assessed has been increased from one-half of 1 per cent in 1917 to 1 per cent in 1918; that this is an increase of 100 per cent, and therefore substantial. When figures so low as one-half of 1 per cent are resorted to, we submit that the change is still slight, though there may be an increase of 100 per cent. We speak of a rainfall of a sixteenth of an inch as a slight rainfall. We might compare it with another rainfall of an eighth of an inch; it would be an increase of 100 per cent, but we would still call the latter a slight rainfall. It depends on where you start.

The same is true with respect to the allowance of foreign material other than cereal grain. In grade No. 1 it has been increased from one-fourth of 1 per cent to one-half of 1 per cent; it is true that this is an increase of 100 per cent, but it is still slight and relatively unimportant. The same observations are true as to the allowance of percentage of other wheats, which has been increased from 1 per cent to 2 per cent, this applying to durum, common white, and white club, the only classes which are of substantial importance here. The increase of the allowance to 5 per cent of wheats other than durum is of practically no consequence in this market. In the matter of moisture content to which we referred in our former letter, there has been a change in No. 1 from 13½ per cent to 14 per cent, but there has been no change in grade No. 2, and it will be observed that 15 per cent is not allowed until grade 3 is reached. Under the old Minnesota grades 15 per cent of moisture was permitted in all grades. You make the point that if so high a percentage of moisture as 15 per cent is allowed in 1 and 2 the purchaser has to pay for the moisture if this point is tenable, then why does not the farmer who has wheat with as low a percentage as 9 per cent or 10 per cent get a premium? The rule should work both ways. As a matter of fact, wheat containing 15 per cent of moisture has exactly as good milling and bread-producing qualities as wheat with 13½ per cent. Wheat to be properly milled must have 16 per cent of moisture; if it is not there the millers put it there. The allowance of 16 per cent in grades 4 and 5 amounts to practically nothing, as you show by your own figures that the great bulk of spring wheat goes into grades 1 and 2; grade 2 is perhaps the most important, and in that no change has been made. We submit your own comparison as to percentages of the 1917 crop falling into grades 1 and 2 and the lower grades.

Then, too, it is but fair to the producer that if his grain contains an excess of moisture it should nevertheless be graded on all other points, and if the grade is reduced on account of excess moisture the producer as well as the purchaser ought to be advised of it; for this reason it was asked in the resolutions adopted at Helena by representatives of all the great wheat-growing States that the following section be added to the standards:

"Where wheat contains more than 15 per cent of moisture, the inspector shall determine and state the grade which it should receive if it were in condition, following such specification with the words 'excess moisture' and a statement of the percentage of moisture."

This request was ignored, as well as the request that all grades be allowed 15 per cent moisture content.

Adverting again to the injustice of the 1917 grades as compared with the old Minnesota grades, let it be noted that the latter permitted 1 per cent inseparable weed seed, and in addition thereto 3 per cent of other cereal grains. The Federal grades make no such distinction, and in the 1917 grades the one-half of 1 per cent inseparable foreign material included other cereal grains. This has not been remedied in the 1918 grades. It was remedied in the tentative grades sent out as S. and R. A. No. 32, by making the specification as "inseparable foreign material, except rye, 1 per cent." The Helena resolutions asked that to this be added the words "and barley." The request was not only ignored but in the official grades even the qualification "except rye" was omitted, and the total percentage of inseparable foreign material fixed at 1 per cent, of which not more than one-half of 1 per cent can be other than cereal grains.

In the matter of test weight per bushel, it is true that in the northern spring class grade No. 1 is fixed at 58 pounds, which is 1 pound lower than the 1917 grades; but it is still 1 pound higher than the old Minnesota grades. To show further the injustice of the 1917 grades over the old Minnesota grades, let us say that a car of wheat contained 84 per cent of dark, hard vitreous kernels, had a test weight of 58.9 pounds, and possessed all the other qualities in the second column of above table, it would grade neither No. 1 dark northern spring nor No. 1 northern spring on account of falling below in test weight; what is worse, it could not grade even No. 2 dark northern spring because of the failure to have 85 per cent of dark, hard vitreous kernels. Consequently, however choice its milling value, it went into No. 2 northern spring and sold for $2.14 instead of $2.21, and the farmer lost 7 cents per bushel. Under the old Minnesota grades it would have graded No. 1 hard and sold at $2.21. It will be noted, too, that under the old Minnesota grades there was no such class as red spring. The Federal grades made red spring a subclass and it sold at a discount of 2 cents per bushel below the northern whatever its grade. Had the old Minnesota grades been in force all the red spring would have gone into the northern class and the producers would have received 2 cents more per bushel. At the present time this discount is 5 cents per bushel. You make the point that the changes were not made as proposed in the tentative standards sent out as S. and R. A. No. 32, for the reason that the administration now fixes the minimum price instead of the maximum, which allows a competitive market. This is the very reason why the standards should have been more lenient. It is even more important to the producer that his grain gets into the higher grades, if it belongs there, under a competitive market than under fixed prices; competition is more active in the higher grades.

You reiterate your former statement that the Minnesota grades carried only one premium grade over the subclass northern spring. The fact is that all classes of wheat which you claim received a premium under Federal grades would have received a greater premium under the Minnesota grades. For illustration, wheat containing 75 per cent of dark, hard, and vitreous kernels, with test weight of 55 pounds, will now grade No. 3 dark northern, the administration price of which is $2.16½. The same wheat under Minnesota grades would be No. 2 northern and the administration price of which is $2.18½, an increase of 2 cents per bushel. Again, we feel justified in saying that under Federal grades the premium appears to be going to the miller instead of the producer. The Minnesota standards took care of the premium feature by the following provision not found in the Federal standards:

"Hard, flinty wheat of good milling quality and containing no appreciable admixture of soft wheat may be admitted into the grades of No. 2 Northern spring wheat, No. 3 Northern spring and No. 4 Northern spring, provided same is not more than 1 pound less than the minimum test weight required by the existing rules of said grades, and provided further that such wheat is in all other respects qualified for admission into such grades."

As the test weight of No. 2 Northern spring was 56, it will be observed this provision would let into that grade wheat of a test weight of 55, if otherwise qualified. You state that the Food Administration Grain Corporation took into account the specific quality represented by No. 1 Northern of the Federal standards and last year based their price of $2.17 on same. You say that this year the standards have been lowered so that during the first week of their application 46.7 per cent more wheat graded No. 1 at Chicago markets than did so in 1917. If the specific quality has the direct and important effect on the price that you claim it has, it would seem that the administration should have lowered the price in 1918. Instead, the administration raised the price from $2.17 maximum to $2.21½ minimum. The real trouble is that the Federal grades are entirely too technical, unwieldy, and impracticable.

Making a general comparison between the old Minnesota grades and the 1917 Federal, let us take a car of the best Northern spring wheat, having all the qualities mentioned in column 2 of the table, except that it had 14.6 per cent of moisture, it went into No. 4 Northern, thereby reducing the price 10 cents per bushel. Another car of greatly inferior wheat with a test weight of 53 pounds, containing 3½ per cent more of foreign matter, 9 per cent more of damaged kernels, 1 per cent more of heat damaged kernels, 8 per cent more of other wheats (which might include 4 per cent more durum), and containing 15½ per cent moisture, would grade exactly the same and bring the same price. We have seen this shown very graphically by making an actual comparison of the wheat under these two illustrations. It seems almost unbelievable, looking at the two samples, that they could be in the same grade and bring the same price.

We want now to call attention again to what changes were proposed in the tentative grades sent out as S. and R. A. No. 32 on March 5; the changes that were asked for by the producers in the Helena resolutions, and what they got in the 1918 official standards:

Northern spring wheat.

TEST WEIGHT PER BUSHEL (POUNDS).

	Proposed.	Asked.	Got.
No. 1	58	57	58
No. 2	56	55	57
No. 3	53	52	55
No. 4	50	(1)	53
No. 5	(1)	(1)	50

PERCENTAGE OF MOISTURE.

No. 1	15	15	14
No. 2	15	15	14½
No. 3	15	15	15
No. 4	15	(1)	16
No. 5	(1)	(1)	16

PERCENTAGE DURUM, COMMON WHITE, AND WHITE CLUB SINGLY OR IN COMBINATION.

No. 1	4	10	2
No. 2	10	10	5
No. 3	10	10	10
No. 4	10	(1)	10
No. 5	(1)	(1)	10

PERCENTAGE RYE AND BARLEY, SINGLY OR IN COMBINATION.

No. 1	2	3	1
No. 2	3	5	2
No. 3	5	7	3
No. 4	7	(1)	5
No. 5	(1)	(1)	7

PERCENTAGE OF FOREIGN MATERIAL OTHER THAN CEREAL GRAIN.

No. 1	1	1	½ of 1
No. 2	2	2	1
No. 3	3	3	2
No. 4	5	(1)	3
No. 5	(1)	(1)	5

TOTAL PERCENTAGE DAMAGED KERNELS.

No. 1	2	4	2
No. 2	5	8	4
No. 3	10	15	7
No. 4	15	(1)	10
No. 5	(1)	(1)	15

PERCENTAGE HEAT DAMAGED KERNELS IN FOREGOING ALLOWANCE.

No. 1	⅛ of 1	¼ of 1	⅛ of 1
No. 2	½ of 1	1	¼ of 1
No. 3	1	2	½ of 1
No. 4	3	(1)	1
No. 5	(1)	(1)	3

[1] Cut out.

It will be observed from this comparison that it was requested that the number of grades be restricted to three, as it was found that five grades made the system too complicated and unwieldy. This seems to have been recognized in the proposed standards which cut out grade No. 5 entirely. In the official standards, however, not only was the request for three grades ignored, but grade No. 5 was retained notwithstanding the apparent intention in the proposed grades to cut it out. Let us see what some of the effects would have been had the proposed standards been adopted instead of a return to substantially the 1917 grades. We confine this to the Northern class, as that is the important one here, taking up the specifications in order.

TEST WEIGHT.

Under proposed standards would grade:
- No. 2 northern.
- No. 3 northern.
- No. 4 northern.

Under official standards now grade:
- No. 3 northern.
- No. 4 northern.
- No. 5 northern.

MOISTURE.

Under proposed standards would grade:
- No. 1 northern.
- No. 2 northern.

Under official standards now grade:
- No. 2 northern.
- No. 3 northern.

ADMIXTURE DURUM, COMMON WHITE AND WHITE CLUB SINGLY OR IN COMBINATION.

Under proposed standards would grade:	Under official standards now grade:
No. 1 northern.	No. 2 northern.
No. 2 northern.	No. 3 northern.

MAXIMUM LIMITS OF RYE.

Under proposed standards would grade:	Under official standards now grade:
No. 1 northern.	No. 2 northern.
No. 2 northern.	No. 3 northern.
No. 3 northern.	No. 4 northern.

FOREIGN MATERIAL.

Under proposed standards would grade:	Under official standards now grade:
No. 1 northern.	No. 2 northern.
No. 2 northern.	No. 3 northern.
No. 3 northern.	No. 4 northern.

PERCENTAGE DAMAGED KERNELS.

Under proposed standards would grade:	Under official standards now grade:
No. 2 northern.	No. 3 northern.
No. 3 northern.	No. 4 northern.

From this it is seen that under practically every qualification the grade will be one less than under the proposed standards. Why the producers have been thus cut down from what they had a right to expect when they put in their wheat does not appear to have been satisfactorily explained.

Very respectfully, yours,

C. H. MARCH.
THOS. E. CASHMAN.

RESERVE OF THE PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 833).

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call up the conference report on Senate joint resolution 63.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read it.

The Clerk read the conference report, as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2, strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

FRANK E. DOREMUS,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.
DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
ROBT. L. OWEN,
CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The Senate has receded from its disagreement to the amendment of the House No. 3, which amendment provides the proportion of officers in the various grades of the service existing at the present time shall be maintained. The amendment also provides that officers provided for shall be subject to active duty at all times, and when on such active duty shall receive the same pay and allowances as are now provided by law and regulation for the commissioned medical officers in the regular commissioned Medical Corps.

In concurring in this amendment the Senate concurs with an amendment to strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive, page 2. These lines were ordered stricken out in the House, but when the joint resolution was enrolled, through error, these lines were permitted to remain. The lines stricken out carry an appropriation of $300,000, which is not now needed on account of former action of the Congress.

The House recedes from its amendments 1 and 2, and the original language of the resolution as passed by the Senate is restored.

FRANK E. DOREMUS,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Michigan yield to me to ask a question?

Mr. DOREMUS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. As I understand this report from hearing it read, the House has receded from the amendment which it adopted the other day, offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], confining this measure to the present emergency.

Mr. DOREMUS. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. And if this conference report is agreed to it will permit the commissioning of these physicians to act during a national emergency for a period not exceeding five years.

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes. Their commissions will expire at the end of five years.

Mr. WALSH. Or such less time—in other words, we accept the original Senate resolution.

Mr. DOREMUS. With House amendment No. 3.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield to me two minutes?

Mr. DOREMUS. I will be glad to.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I am very glad that the House conferees agreed with the Senate conferees to strike out the House amendment which has been referred to. I think there has been quite a considerable amount of misapprehension about this legislation from the time it was taken up the other day. The bill proposes a public health service reserve. It was not, when introduced, intended to apply to this present emergency of influenza or of war, or to any other particular emergency. The intent was to create this reserve that would be available at any time in case of an emergency, a reserve of officers commissioned throughout the country, ready to be called at any time to give their services to the country when needed, but receiving no pay except when called in case of emergency to active duty. As the conferees have now agreed to the bill, it is restored to its original intent, I think a very wise and proper provision of law, under which there will be a reserve of those who are willing to respond at any time to their country's call in case of an epidemic or other emergency, thus forming a nucleus throughout the country around which can gather volunteer forces that will be useful and necessary in case of such emergency.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes; if I have the time.

Mr. SISSON. I will see that the gentleman has sufficient time. Has the gentleman considered what authority these officers so appointed would have under the existing law in reference to epidemics within the States, outside of the limits where they endeavor to fix the jurisdiction of the Federal Government in reference to quarantine in case of epidemics?

Mr. MONDELL. Without claiming to have very full and complete knowledge of the authority of the Public Health Service, because I am not an expert on that matter, I assume that when called into active duty they would have the same authority that any other officer of the Public Health Service would have, whatever it may be.

Mr. SISSON. Of course, the authority was not granted in this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all.

Mr. SISSON. This simply authorizes the commissioning of these officers.

Mr. WALSH. It just enlarges their forces for emergencies.

Mr. SISSON. Now, under the general authority of the Public Health Service of the Federal Government, if one of these officers should go into a State, I presume it is distinctly understood that he would go into the State only to cooperate with the State health authorities.

Mr. MONDELL. These officers would perform whatever duties were assigned to them by the public-health authorities. And let me suggest this to my friend, that these officials in the main, I assume, will be men commissioned throughout the country, not here in Washington.

Mr. SISSON. I know that.

Mr. MONDELL. Men will no doubt be commissioned in the gentleman's own community, following their usual vocations in ordinary times without any reference to the Public Health Service, but when called upon, becoming active officers of the Public Health Service, who would be very useful and very helpful in gathering around them the volunteer forces of the community.

Mr. SISSON. I realize that, but what I fear about the matter is that by the mere appointment of these gentlemen, unless it is thoroughly understood that they shall have no authority in addition to what the present health bureau has, there may be some possible misunderstanding as to what their authority may be within the States.

Mr. MONDELL. It seems to me there can be no question as to that, because the bill does not in any way extend the authority of the Public Health Service or any of its officials. It simply creates an additional force of the Public Health Service, to be called into service only in case of emergency.

Mr. SISSON. I think that is absolutely the proper construction to be placed upon the law, for the creation of these officers of the various grades to be appointed in the event of an emergency.

Mr. MONDELL. No; they are to be appointed at proper and convenient times to serve in an emergency.

Mr. SISSON. But not called into service except in case of an emergency.

Mr. MONDELL. The practice, I assume, to be followed will be to make these appointments from time to time in order to establish this reserve, and of course those appointments would frequently be made in other times than those of emergency, in order to have the force organized.

Mr. SISSON. I understand that. Perhaps the language of my question was unfortunate. What I meant to say was that these men when actually called into service could only perform, in my judgment, the duties that an officer of the health service could perform now—an officer now in existence.

Mr. MONDELL. I assume that the gentleman is eminently right.

Mr. SISSON. Now, there is no limit in this bill, of course, to the number that may be appointed.

Mr. DOREMUS. Yes; there is.

Mr. SISSON. What is the limit?

Mr. DOREMUS. That is taken care of by the amendment.

Mr. ESCH. The proportion is fixed in this pending resolution. It is the same as the existing proportion.

Mr. MONDELL. There is no limit to the number.

Mr. ESCH. The number would be fixed by the Appropriations Committee, I take it.

Mr. SISSON. That is the very thing I am afraid of. Of course, I am not afraid, with the gentleman from Wyoming and myself, as well as the gentleman from Wisconsin, on the committee, that we might be able to hold it down; but it will take very courageous men like we are to hold this thing down. [Laughter.]

Mr. MONDELL. May I suggest to my friend that I know of no reason why there should be any considerable appropriation, if any appropriation at all, ordinarily for this reserve? Because, except in the time of emergency, they will not be called upon, and ordinarily Congress is in session most of the time these days, and the Congress could provide for the emergency by an appropriation. I agree with the gentleman fully that this bill should not be made the excuse or justification for a large appropriation to be used in the event these gentlemen are called into the service.

Mr. SISSON. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. SISSON. I will say that some years ago in my own State, when I was a member of the legislature, we had an appropriation for one of these funds for the purpose of taking care of the yellow-fever epidemic if it should arise. Unfortunately, as long as that appropriation was in existence we had an annual yellow-fever scare. As soon as that appropriation was withdrawn and no $50,000 or $75,000 was placed at the disposal of the health authorities, we had no more yellow-fever epidemics except where they were real and genuine.

That little experience has led me to believe that if you turn our good physicians—and we all have great respect for them—if you turn them loose, frequently they will find reasons sufficient, in their own mind, for calling into existence appropriations; whereas, if there was a limit placed upon it, a limit placed on the number of men that might be appointed, their activities would be very much lessened.

Mr. MONDELL. I doubt if a limitation on the number that might be appointed would have the effect the gentleman has in mind, because a very limited number of men can become very busy in an effort to spend public money, while a larger number of men will not necessarily make any greater demand. But I think we all admit the wisdom of having such a corps as has been suggested, and is now provided for, available in case of an emergency, and, as one member of the Committee on Appropriations, if I should continue in the House and on that committee, I would be glad to join with my friend from Mississippi in the stand that as far as appropriations go there would be very little money appropriated for this reserve. Because, in the first place, the general appropriations of the Health Service could be temporarily drawn upon for the pay of additional officers, and, in addition to that, if Congress continues in session most of the time, as it has in the last few years, Congress is likely to be here when the emergency arises, and can make the necessary appropriation.

Mr. SISSON. Let me say that if you take into consideration the fact that in every county in the United States there is at least one health officer, and in every city and town of any consequence there is a corps of health officers, if you add to that number one in each county commissioned by the Federal Government, in addition to the present Federal appointments, you will have a great number of doctors, not always health officers of the county, perhaps not on the pay roll of the present staff, but ready at any time to be placed on the pay roll. If there should be appointments without pay commissioned all over the United States, one in each county, it would make an enormous number of gentlemen who would have quite a great deal of political influence throughout the country.

Mr. MONDELL. I share the views of the gentleman from Mississippi very largely as to the possibilities of considerable expenditure, but I want to remind the gentleman that he has a health scheme in mind that if carried out would call for appropriations compared with which the largest that this reserve corps might demand would be small. If we were to start out on the plan he proposes of making sanitary surveys of all the rural districts in the country on the basis of about $12,000 to a township, which, I think, has been about the cost up to this time, we would have an annual appropriation bill that would be staggering if we did much along that line.

The SPEAKER. The three minutes of the gentleman from Wyoming have expired. [Laughter.]

Mr. DOREMUS. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. SISSON].

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Speaker, the plan I have in mind would not cause any such expenditure of public money because the plan that I have would be an absolute cooperation with the State authorities. All of the expense would not fall on the Federal Government, and in no event could more than 50 per cent fall on the Federal Government. And then we would need only a very limited number of gentlemen who would organize the county, and as soon as organized and proper health regulations adopted that would end the matter as far as that particular county was concerned.

The question of rural sanitation has been gone into quite extensively and would not entail any large pay roll or any large number of gentlemen in the Health Department. It would only require that a man to cooperate with the health authorities, and, by the way, in the bill that passed the Appropriations Committee, the committee provided that only in any event one-half the actual expense should be paid by the Federal Government.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISSON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, the gentleman is aware that during the present epidemic Congress has made an appropriation of a million dollars. Of course, that does not represent the total expenditure that is being made in order to curb and cure and wipe out this disease. The States are appropriating, and, as I understand it, this reserve will work in connection with the States.

Mr. SISSON. The States are appropriating in this present epidemic. I do not suppose anyone in Congress would have any objection to this corps if we were absolutely sure that they would be called into service when the necessity was great and overshadowing, but I look with some degree of concern upon commissioning men as officers with salaries as high as $5,000 during the time that the epidemic is on. I have great concern about the growth of this department, fixing upon the population in time of no epidemic salaries of these men, the number of which depends absolutely upon the political influence they can wield over Congress. I think it is rather dangerous.

If the bill had in it a cooperating with the State or county authorities, the brake would always be there, because no county would subject itself to any very large taxation, which is a direct taxation, unless there was necessity for its being there, and they then, through their county officials, whether they are called the board of supervisors or the county commissioners, would be themselves subjected to scrutiny in the county itself in which the work is being done. Therefore, there is a safeguard in the rural sanitation that is not in this bill at all.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Speaker, did I understand the gentleman to say that somebody might have some political influence over Members of Congress? Did I misunderstand the gentleman?

Mr. SISSON. The gentleman did not misunderstand me, because I take it this is a representative Government, and that if the district that the gentleman represents should be overwhelmingly in favor of some proposition the gentleman would either make up his mind to courageously retire from Congress or he would yield to the demands of his district. He is an entirely different human being from what I am and from what most human beings that I know are if that political influence does not have some effect on his votes here, and that is real representative government. But I do not want people to be able to have their selfish interests involved in a political campaign so that when they are campaigning for the gentleman to get his $7,500 he shall be campaigning to get every man of influence in his county also a $7,500 job.

Mr. DENISON. Speaking for the Members of Congress from the State of Illinois, I think I can say that there is not a great deal of political influence wielded over them. Of course, I can not speak for Mississippi.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. SISSON. I want to say that I have made a few speeches up in Illinois. I have talked to a good many people there, and I have found many men who were utterly opposed to woman suffrage who, as soon as the women commenced to vote in Illinois, changed their views, and I never saw such enormous changes of views in my life. I do not believe the gentleman can arrogate to himself and his colleagues a virtue that is not possessed by all of the other people. I think the people of Illinois are like the people in Mississippi. If the gentleman puts his thumb in his vest holes and says that he is not going to be influenced by the wishes of his people back home, then the gentleman puts himself in an attitude where he is willing to say to people here, "I want to tell you that so strong are my convictions that before I yield to political influence from back home I shall go back home and live in private life the rest of my days."

Mr. DENISON. The difficulty is that the gentleman happened to be talking with Democrats while he was in Illinois. If my friend had been talking with Republicans, he would have found them unanimously in favor of woman suffrage.

Mr. SISSON. Well, the Republicans were beginning to be scarce, and I think it would be difficult to get an audience there now that was not an audience of Democrats. I was talking, to be particular, to a reunion of Union veterans up there, all dressed in blue, about two or three thousand of them, and I found a great many of those old Union veterans were voting the Democratic ticket, and no doubt more of them are voting it to-day than did then.

Mr. DENISON. That must have been some time ago.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON].

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, it was upon my motion that the amendment was adopted by the House to limit the provisions of this bill to the present emergency. I have heard and read all of the arguments available upon this subject, and all of the information I have been able to get confirms the objections which I had to the measure. It is true, as has been pointed out, that this legislation has no reference to the present emergency. It was introduced long before this arose, and, of course, this emergency is being used to rush it through Congress just like much other questionable legislation is being passed under the pressure of war or as an incident of war. The idea of commissioning men with the rank, pay, and allowance as high as colonel throughout the United States, to be called into action and placed upon the pay roll, as the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] says, upon the occasion of an epidemic "or other emergency" is exceedingly questionable to say the least. It is not necessary to impute bad faith to anyone in connection with this legislation, and I do not intend to do so. I say the whole tendency of the legislation is bad, because of the possibilities contained in it. Of course it is said that if an epidemic or other emergency should arise and these fellows were called out and proceeded to mobilize and stirred around for some months, and enormous bills were presented to the Committee on Appropriations for their services no one would be in a position to raise the question of the necessity or the propriety of calling them out, because that has already been vested in the Public Health Service, and the Public Health Service would necessarily be controlled, in its judgment, by the reports which it received from these gentlemen who were waiting to be called out. Let us suppose a local epidemic should break out in some community. There would be a call to arms, I suppose, at least in that State, and there might be in many States. Take the case of a yellow fever epidemic in one of the Southern States. Immediately the news would be flashed all over the country, and it seems to me that you are vesting an exceedingly broad power in an association as irresponsible as the Public Health Service when you authorize them to call out ad libitum physicians in different parts of the United States to cope with that epidemic, without limitation, except the judgment of this Public Health Service.

Personally, I would rather vest this discretion in the Secretary of War or the Secretary of the Navy, because they are Cabinet officers responsible to the President of the United States, and my apprehensions may be considered extreme, but to start in the business here with commissioning men in civil life and leaving the question of when they are going on the pay roll and how long they are to stay there, to a great extent to their own apprehensions of an epidemic, it seems to me is very objectionable legislation.

Mr. DOREMUS. Mr. Speaker, may we have a vote on the conference report?

The question was taken, and the conference report was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The SPEAKER. The gentlemen from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present, and evidently there is not. The gentleman from South Carolina moves that the House adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, October 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 13106) to establish a national land-settlement commission to provide labor and homes for returning soldiers, sailors, and marines, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. FULLER of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 13107) relative to the pay of regimental sergeant major, battalion sergeants major, and first sergeants, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 13108) granting a pension to Mary J. Smith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GANDY: A bill (H. R. 13109) for the relief of Clyde M. Giddings; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: A bill (H. R. 13110) granting a pension to Joseph H. Klopp; to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

MONDAY, October 21, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, by Thy grace we move forward in the path of duty. We face the toil, the danger, the hardships, the sacrifice in Thy name, the name of the humanity that Thou dost love. We pray Thee to equip us for the work that is before us. Give us the spirit of sacrifice and devotion to the great ideals that Thou hast given to us as a Nation. Bring us speedily to victory in Thy name. We ask it in Jesus' name. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., October 21, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOHN HOLLIS BANKHEAD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair in my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. BANKHEAD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Fletcher	Jones, Wash.	McCumber
Beckham	Frelinghuysen	Kellogg	McKellar
Benet	Gerry	Kendrick	McNary
Brandegee	Gore	King	Martin, Va.
Chamberlain	Guion	Kirby	Myers
Culberson	Hale	Knox	Nelson
Curtis	Harding	La Follette	New
Dillingham	Hitchcock	Lenroot	Overman
Drew	Jones, N. Mex.	Lodge	Page

Penrose	Sheppard	Sutherland	Walsh
Phelan	Smith, Ariz.	Thomas	Warren
Pittman	Smith, Ga.	Townsend	Watson
Poindexter	Smith, Md.	Trammell	Williams
Pomerene	Smoot	Underwood

Mr. McKELLAR. The senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] is ill in bed to-day and can not be present. I should like to have this announcement stand for the day.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the absence of the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] on account of illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. My colleague, the senior Senator from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] is absent owing to illness.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-five Senators have answered to their names. There is a quorum present.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of Labor submitting supplemental estimates of appropriation required by the War Emergency Service and Bureau of Labor Statistics, Department of Labor, for the fiscal year 1919, in the sum of $1,116,215, etc. (S. Doc. No. 288), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting a letter from the Acting Postmaster General, submitting deficiency estimates of appropriation for the Postal Service payable from postal revenues in the sum of $200,957.35 (S. Doc. No. 290), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Chairman of the United States Shipping Board submitting an additional estimate of appropriation for the construction of ships (S. Doc. No. 291) which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $1,650,921.44 required by the War Department for contingent expenses of the war for the fiscal year 1919 (S. Doc. No. 289), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $2,500,000 required by the Ordnance Department of the Army to enable prompt liquidation of claims for damages occasioned by the explosion at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., Morgan, N. J. (S. Doc. No. 292), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House insists upon its amendments to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service; agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. DOREMUS, Mr. BARKLEY, and Mr. ESCH managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products."

The message also announced that the House recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate amending the title of the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and agrees to the same; further insists upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28; requests a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. LEVER, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi, Mr. HAUGEN, and Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 4886) providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash., with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (S. 3470) to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States, and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

INCOME-TAX EXEMPTION.

Mr. NELSON presented the memorial of A. C. Andrews, of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the exemption of charitable contributions from income taxes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported them each without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

S. 4523. A bill to transfer the tract of land known as the Lighthouse Reservation, at North Point, Md., from the jurisdiction of the Department of Commerce to the jurisdiction of the War Department (Rept. No. 594); and

S. 4970. A bill to amend the first paragraph of section 302 of the act entitled "An act to extend protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war," approved March 8, 1918 (Rept. No. 595).

Mr. BECKHAM, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which were referred the following bills, reported adversely thereon, and they were postponed indefinitely:

S. 90. A bill for the relief of John H. Kidd;

S. 1925. A bill for the relief of Anna Falls; and

S. 3673. A bill for the relief of Francis J. Mattler.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4605) to protect the insignia of the Young Men's Christian Association, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4997) providing for extra pay for cadet aviators; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHEPPARD:

A bill (S. 4998) to amend an act entitled "An act to pension the survivors of certain Indian wars from January 1, 1859, to January, 1891, inclusive, and for other purposes," approved March 4, 1917; to the Committee on Pensions.

A bill (S. 4999) for the relief of Jesse L. Clay; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. TOWNSEND (for Mr. SMITH of Michigan):

A bill (S. 5000) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Capt. Daniel H. Powers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 5001) to establish in the Department of Labor a Bureau of Citizenship and Americanization, for the Americanization of naturalized citizens, amend section 4 of the act approved June 29, 1906, entitled "An act to establish a Bureau of Immigration and Naturalization and to provide a uniform rule for the naturalization of aliens throughout the United States, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on Immigration.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 5002) fixing the retired pay of enlisted men; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 5003) authorizing the extension of the Sunnyside Canal of the Yakima basin reclamation system, in the State of Washington, to Kennewick, and making appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Appropriations.

PROHIBITION OF NEGOTIATIONS WITH GERMANY.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) prohibiting peace negotiations with Germany was read the first time by its title, the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 180) prohibiting peace negotiations with Germany.

Whereas Congress has the sole and exclusive power to declare war, to make rules concerning captures on land and water, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, to make rules for the government and regulation of the land and naval forces, to levy all taxes, to authorize bonds, to make all appropriations for the conduct of the war, and to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States, or in any department or officer thereof; and

Whereas no treaty of peace can be made without the consent and advice of the Senate, with the concurrence of two-thirds of the Senators present: Be it

Resolved, etc., That no officer of the United States shall enter into any discussion with the Government of Germany as to terms of peace; and it is hereby made unlawful for any official of this Government to answer in any way any note, message, or representation from the German Government, or the German people, or from any official representing or purporting to represent them or either of them, on the subject of peace or an armistice between the German Government or the German nation or people and the Governments with which they are now at war, until and before such time as the German armed forces shall have surrendered to the allied nations in the war in which they are now engaged;

That the war against Germany shall be prosecuted by the United States with the utmost vigor and dispatch possible continuously until the armed forces of Germany shall have laid down their arms and surrendered to the commanding general in the field of the allied forces without condition or stipulation;

That German territory shall then be occupied and taken under control by the armed forces of the United States in cooperation with its allies, and that such occupation and control shall be continued until such time as the chosen representatives of the United States and the nations allied with the United States, in a conference appointed for that purpose, shall have formally agreed among themselves upon the specific terms of peace to be imposed by said allies upon Germany, and the practical and concrete application of the same in detail;

That no official of the United States shall agree that any representative of the German Government shall participate in said conference or have a vote therein or be present thereat, except for the purpose of conveying data or information to said conference when called on by the conference therefor.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. NEW submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

Mr. UNDERWOOD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

NOTE OF AUSTRIA-HUNGARY AND THE PRESIDENT'S REPLY.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, whether the Austrian peace note of October 8 has been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not to my knowledge.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I notice that the President's reply to it is in the RECORD of the House proceedings.

Mr. FLETCHER. It appears in the RECORD of Saturday.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On page 11393; and I thought if the note of Austria-Hungary had not been printed it would be well to have that printed in the RECORD also.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have been informed since the Senator made the interrogatory that the Austrian note was printed in the RECORD upon the request of some Member of the House of Representatives.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In Saturday's proceedings.

Mr. FLETCHER. In the RECORD of Saturday's proceedings October 19.

Mr. POMERENE. At page 11393.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I observe that the President's reply to the note is printed, but I did not see the Austro-Hungarian note. I thought inasmuch as the President's reply appeared in the RECORD it would be well to have the note to which it is a reply also in the RECORD. I ask if it has not been done that there may be printed both the Austrian note and the President's reply thereto in to-day's proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Printed together.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Yes; that they may be printed together.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The Austro-Hungarian note and the President's reply are as follows:

[Translation.]

LEGATION OF SWEDEN,
Washington, D. C., October 7, 1918.

EXCELLENCY: By order of my Government, I have the honor confidentially to transmit herewith to you the following communication of the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary to the President of the United States of America:

"The Austro-Hungarian Monarchy, which has waged war always and solely as a defensive war and repeatedly given documentary evidence of its readiness to stop the shedding of blood and to arrive at a just and honorable peace, hereby addresses itself to His Lordship the President of the United States of America and offers to conclude with him and his allies an armistice on every front—on land, at sea, and in the air—and to enter immediately upon negotiations for a peace for which the 14 points in the message of President Wilson to Congress of January 8, 1918, and the four points contained in President Wilson's address of February 12, 1918, should serve as a foundation and in which the viewpoints declared by President Wilson in his address of September 27, 1918, will also be taken into account."

Be pleased to accept, etc.,

W. A. F. EKENGREN.

His Excellency Mr. ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State of the United States, Washington.

FROM THE SECRETARY OF STATE TO THE MINISTER OF SWEDEN.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
October 18, 1918.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your note of the 7th instant, in which you transmit a communication of the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria-Hungary to the President. I am now instructed by the President to request you to be good enough, through your Government, to convey to the Imperial and Royal Government the following reply:

"The President deems it his duty to say to the Austro-Hungarian Government that he can not entertain the present suggestions of that Government because of certain events of utmost importance which, occurring since the delivery of his address of the 8th of January last, have necessarily altered the attitude and responsibility of the Government of the United States. Among the 14 terms of peace which the President formulated at that time occurred the following:

"'X. The peoples of Austria-Hungary, whose place among the nations we wish to see safeguarded and assured, should be accorded the freest opportunity of autonomous development.'

"Since that sentence was written and uttered to the Congress of the United States the Government of the United States has recognized that a state of belligerency exists between the Czecho-Slovaks and the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires and that the Czecho-Slovak National Council is a de facto belligerent government clothed with proper authority to direct the military and political affairs of the Czecho-Slovaks. It has also recognized in the fullest manner the justice of the nationalistic aspirations of the Jugo-Slavs for freedom.

"The President is, therefore, no longer at liberty to accept the mere 'autonomy' of these peoples as a basis of peace, but is obliged to insist that they, and not he, shall be the judges of what action on the part of the Austro-Hungarian Government will satisfy their aspirations and their conception of their rights and destiny as members of the family of nations."

Accept, sir, the renewed assurances of my highest consideration.

ROBERT LANSING.

LAND AT PORT ANGELES, WASH.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4886) providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash., which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "and" and insert a hyphen; on page 1, lines 5 and 6, to strike out "Washington" and insert "Maine"; on page 1, line 6, after "States," to insert "marine"; on page 1, line 6, after "reserve," to insert "suburban lot or block No. 33"; on page 1, line 7, after "Port Angeles," to insert "State of Washington"; on page 1, lines 7 and 8, to strike out "Northern Pacific Railroad tract" and insert "Seattle, Port Angeles & Western Railway track"; on page 1, line 9, after "a," to insert "reasonable"; on page 1, line 9, to strike out "agreed upon between said company and" and insert "fixed by."

Mr. JONES of Washington. These amendments are of a minor character. They make more certain the description of the land, and so forth. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments made by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

DISTRICT NATIONAL GUARD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes, which was, on page 3, line 8, after "fill," to insert: "That at the termination of the existing war, as determined by the proclamation of the President, the provisions of this act shall become null and void."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 13086. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following acts:

On October 19, 1918:

S. 4871. An act to authorize the Philadelphia, Harrisburg & Pittsburgh Railroad Co., its lessees, successors, and assigns, to construct a bridge across the Susquehanna River from the city of Harrisburg, Dauphin County, Pa., to the borough of Lemoyne, Cumberland County, Pa.

On October 21, 1918:

S. 933. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent for certain land to school district No. 9, of Sanders County, Mont.; and

S. 3225. An act to reserve as a part of the Oregon National Forest certain lands that were revested in the United States pursuant to the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the case of the Oregon & California Railroad Co. against the United States.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House numbered 3, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: On page 2, strike out lines 7 to 10, inclusive; and the House agree to the same.

That the House recede from its amendments numbered 1 and 2.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
ROBT. L. OWEN,
CHAS. E. TOWNSEND,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

FRANK E. DOREMUS,
ALBEN W. BARKLEY,
JOHN J. ESCH,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives agreeing to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and receding from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agreeing to the same; and further insisting upon its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 28 and requesting a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. GORE. I move that the Senate recede from amendment No. 28, being the so-called rent amendment. I wish to say in regard to the request of the House for another conference that I think another conference would be entirely vain and unavailing. I feel certain that the conferees could not agree, and I am not willing to take the responsibility of further delaying final action on the bill. I therefore move this recession in order that the Senate may determine the question itself, and may assume, as it ought to assume, the responsibility of disposing of the question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 28.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I beg the indulgence of the Senate for just a very few minutes. This is the amendment relating to rent profiteering. The bill first had its origin in the House. It came to the Senate. The Senate passed a substitute measure by an almost unanimous vote. The matter was thrown into conference, and because of certain statements which had been made in the House by a member of the committee, the Senate conferees were excused from further work upon the conference report. Later when the pending bill was before the Senate, by I think an almost unanimous vote the rent bill was added as a separate question to the Agricultural deficiency appropriation bill.

Mr. President, I think that any one who is familiar with conditions here in the District must realize the very great necessity for some legislation, and some drastic legislation, upon the subject of rentals here. The District Committee presented what, in its judgment, was the best plan for meeting the situation. There is no such radical difference between the measure as it passed the other House and the measure which passed the Senate as can not be reconciled, if the conferees can get together in the proper spirit and deal with this subject as legislators ought to deal with it.

So far as I am personally concerned, I say to the Senate, and I say to everyone, that it is not a question of pride of opinion with me. What I want is legislation upon this subject which will meet the situation, and my belief was that the conferees upon this bill could take up the two measures as a basis for a conference and, without serious difficulty, come to some agreement. I hope that can yet be done. I do not believe that there has been such an expression of the House as would indicate that the two Houses could not get together.

The action which was taken by the House on Saturday was taken, of course, in harmony with their rules, but by a very small representation of the membership of the House. The RECORD shows that there were three votes taken—one on a motion to concur in the Senate amendment, another on a motion to concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment, and a third to recede. On the first motion the House divided, and the vote was on the motion to concur in the Senate amendment; ayes 2, noes 25. On the second motion, which was a motion to concur, if I recall it properly, in the Senate amendment with an amendment, the ayes were 10 and the noes were 23. On the third, I believe—that is, the motion to recede—the RECORD simply recites the fact that the motion to recede was agreed to, and we are given no light as to the number of Members in the House who participated in the vote.

I want to repeat myself by simply saying to the conferees that I shall be content personally with any report they will agree upon which will meet the situation; I do not care whether it is the Senate amendment or what it is.

I wish that Senators would take the time to read the discussion of this bill on the floor of the other House; I am not going to refer to it myself, for I dislike, above everything, to get into a controversy with some man. I, of course, can not anticipate what action the Senate may take, but I have felt that, if the Senate were to insist upon its amendment, perhaps the conferees could get together and agree upon some report upon this subject.

I realize the very great interest that Senators and Members of the other House have in the remainder of the bill; I have no desire to hold up that legislation for one minute unnecessarily; but, in view of the action taken by the Senate, I have been hoping that the conferees could agree upon some report which would help solve the rent question here in the District.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a minute?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. KING. Does not the Senator from Ohio think that, if we accept the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE], it means no legislation during this session upon a subject which is vitally important to the thousands of war workers as well as to other persons who are in the city?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am afraid that the Senator from Utah is right.

Mr. KING. And is it not a fact that to-day the profiteering, particularly on the part of those who will not be reached by the Saulsbury resolution, is becoming greater and more of a scandal than ever before?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think the Senator is correct in that suggestion also.

Mr. KING. Then, is not the situation such as to call for some legislation, even legislation broader and more comprehensive and more drastic than the legislation suggested by the Senator from Ohio?

Mr. GORE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I will do so if I may first answer the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING]. This situation does need drastic legislation, and if the bill as passed by the Senate has not the necessary teeth in it, they ought to be put in. The conditions here in the District are simply intolerable, and some of the landlords are going from bad to worse all the while.

Now I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I think the Senate ought to act in the full light of the facts, and I desire to say that I agree with the interpretation placed on the proposed action of the Senate under my motion by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE]. I think that if the Senate recedes from this amendment it means that there will be no legislation upon this subject at this session of Congress; it probably means that there will be no action upon this subject during the present Congress even at the succeeding session. I think the Senate ought to act in the light of that expectation.

I should like to say, however, that in the confidence heretofore held the House conferees took the position that they were not in a situation to consider this amendment or to deal with this subject; that it properly belonged to another committee of the House; and that it ought to go to another committee of the Senate. The Senate conferees answered that argument by saying that the Senate had acted and had committed this question to a conference appointed on behalf of the Senate; that, while there was a District Committee of the Senate, the Senate itself had withdrawn this legislation from that committee and had sent it to the conferees. We were not able, however, to dissuade the House conferees from their persistence in their opposition. The Senate conferees did not feel justified, however, in receding from this amendment; that we refused to do. As the RECORD shows, we brought the amendment back and further insisted upon it in order to give the House itself an opportunity to say whether or not it would justify the position taken by the House conferees. In the present parliamentary situation I do not feel justified in asking another conference. I think I know in advance that it would be entirely unavailing. I want the Senate, however, to act in full light of what will follow the adoption of the motion I have just made.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. GORE. I yield.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the Senator from Oklahoma believe that it would stop all legislation upon this subject at this session of Congress if his motion should prevail?

Mr. GORE. Well, I think that it will probably stop legislation at this session; yes, sir; because this session will probably adjourn at an early date.

Mr. McKELLAR. If that is true, then ought we not to vote down the Senator's motion?

Mr. GORE. The Senator from Tennessee will appreciate my motive in making the motion. There is other very important legislation involved in this measure—the prohibition amendment. I am not willing to take the responsibility of delaying the final enactment of that particular amendment. I want the Senate to take the responsibility of deciding what shall be done with this legislation. Acting as a servant of the Senate, I do not feel justified in doing that myself.

I might add that, if the Senate refuses to recede, I shall then not ask for a conference; I shall not move to concur in the House request for a conference, but I shall move to adhere to this amendment. If that motion be adopted, it will put it up to the House, where they will have to take the responsibility of either accepting this rent amendment or of entirely defeating this legislation .

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate recede from amendment numbered 28.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I agree with all that the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has said and with all of the suggestions implied in the question of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] with reference to the rent situation in this District. I expressed myself rather emphatically with reference to that condition a few days ago, and I am not going to repeat what I then said. I should like to say that we ought to have some legislation to take care of the situation, but we must recognize what we are confronted with. I heard the debate the other day in the other body in reference to this matter, and I have talked to Members of the House, and I am convinced that it is absolutely useless to send this bill back to conference. I am satisfied that the House conferees will not accept the amendment of the Senate or any modification of it. I am satisfied that they will not consider the rent amendment; and, as has been suggested by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], they give reasons which are appealing upon general legislative matters.

It is true that this is a matter that has been considered by the District Committees of the House and Senate and that the Agricultural Committees have had nothing to do with it; and so there is very much justification for the attitude that the House conferees take regarding it. I think that they ought, however, try to work out some proposition that will take care of the situation here, but I am satisfied that they will not do so, and that it is really useless to send the bill back to conference.

While it may be that we will not have legislation covering the rent situation, it is also very likely that this entire bill will fail if action is not taken by the Senate. I can not see any justification on my part to kill the entire bill, because I can not get the provision that I think ought to be in the bill with reference to this other matter. Because of this situation, Mr. President, and on account of the importance of getting the other provisions in the bill passed, I feel that I am wholly justified in voting to recede from this amendment, and that I would really not be justified in taking any other action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I can not agree with the view of the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture that we should recede as to this amendment. Certainly legislation of this character ought to be passed. We are told that, unless we recede, we can expect no legislation. We can at least faithfully try to obtain it; we can at least once more make an effort to induce legislation. We are candidly told that, unless it passes upon this bill, we will have none, and that a condition disreputable in the treatment of those especially needing protection shall continue in this District.

I had brought to my attention a few days ago the case of a landlord who leased an apartment for a reasonable sum. The lessee placed some cheap furniture in the apartment and added about 250 per cent to the rent. Twice the value of the furniture in 12 months' time would be paid for in the rental charge. This condition is outrageous, and it is within the power of Congress to control it. We bring people here to do Government work, and I think it is our duty to see that they have a chance without mistreatment to get places in which they can room.

If the House is not willing to cooperate with us, we can not help it; but at least we can once more ask for a conference and see if some reasonable agreement can not be reached. If it is not, then we shall have done our part. I would be glad to do more than our part if we could obtain results; but we are told frankly that this is the only road to obtain results. We understand perfectly that, unless we obtain legislation in this way, it is almost certain that there will be no legislation. Let us, therefore, once more ask the House for a conference, and let us try to reach a just conclusion. I am not in favor of defeating the remainder of this bill if we can not get through the Pomerene amendment or something along that line. Before the time comes for the remainder of this bill to become operative I am in favor, if necessary, of yielding.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me, there will be no quorum in the House for the consideration of this bill, and the appropriations it contains may therefore fail, although they are necessary to carry out the war emergency agricultural legislation. The House has practically closed the door to any further action on this subject. Therefore, if we do not vote to recede, we may defeat the remainder of the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Well, I do not think so. The remainder of the bill, if necessary, can be taken up the first thing in December and passed. I would rather pass it then than to abandon the provision that is intended to guard, at least to some extent, the right of the people we bring here to work for the Government to have a place in which to sleep.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I ask the Senator another question?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Is it not a fact that the House passed a bill on this subject of rent profiteering?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator understands the situation with reference to that as well as I do.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Why can not the Senate pass that bill?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That bill the Senate will not pass. The Senator understands what took place with reference to that matter. I do not desire to go into a discussion of it now, because it carries unpleasant and most offensive features. I would not vote for that bill over the action of the Committee on the District of Columbia of the Senate, and I could not ask them to go into conference on it. I would not do so if I were in their place, unless the House changed the committee. I hope, Mr. President, that we will try once more to see if something can not be done upon this measure.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senate to a statement made by a Member of the House upon this subject on Saturday. I read from pages 11391 and 11392 of the RECORD. Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky, speaking to Mr. ANDERSON, said:

> One of your amendments proposes to strike out of the Pomerene bill the provision that the rent administrator shall be a resident of the District of Columbia. But the gentleman leaves in the Pomerene amendment the clause that the Senate shall confirm the nomination made by the President. I believe that I know sufficiently well the attitude of two or three gentlemen who are really behind what is known as the Pomerene bill to make the statement that when the President sends the nomination to the Senate of the rent administrator and that nomination is referred to the District of Columbia Committee having jurisdiction of it at the other end of the Capitol, that unless the man nominated be a profiteer himself, or in sympathy with the profiteers, the nomination will never see the light of day. That nomination, in my honest opinion, would stay with that committee forever and for eternity, and we would have no rent administrator at all, while the profiteering would go on.
>
> I am not mincing any words, I am justified in saying what I am saying, because these two or three men are men of intelligence, and they know what to do; and, if it had not occurred to them, their attention has been called to the defects of the Pomerene bill over and over again—that a man owning a piece of property here and renting it can extort and profiteer to the full extent of his desire if he only goes down town and incorporate, and that he can do in an hour.

I interpret that statement, Mr. President, as casting a direct reflection upon the integrity of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia. It is a charge, virtually, that unless a profiteer, or some one in the control of the profiteers, should be nominated by the President for the office of rent administrator, he would not be confirmed by this body, because that committee would not make a report upon him.

Mr. President, independently of the merits of this controversy, I do not believe that the Senate can afford, in the face of a statement like that, to recede from its insistence upon this amendment. If it were not for that statement, so made, I might be inclined personally to vote for the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma. But when a Member of the House deliberately charges that the District of Columbia Committee of the Senate is composed of men who are without honor, who are in league with the profiteers of this District, for the Senate to recede from its amendment immediately following such a statement might be construed as an admission to some extent of the opinion expressed by this Member of the House of Representatives.

I for one do not want to do it. I think we should resent that statement. I am pretty well acquainted with every Member of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, and I believe that they are as honorable gentlemen and as conscientiously and thoroughly devoted to the public interest and welfare and as much opposed to the profiteering which the bill proposes to meet as any Member of either House; and, as a consequence, I hope this motion will not at this time be agreed to.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, the importance of passing the measure regulating the rents of buildings in this District has been greatly enhanced by the epidemic which is now prevailing, and which I believe is aggravated very largely by the fact that on account of excessive rents the people are obliged to live and sleep in large numbers in one room, hence facilitating, as it were, the contagion. I therefore am opposed to receding from the amendment. I think it is the duty of the Senate to force action on the subject of profiteering. I can not, however, refrain from observing that the opposition to the profiteering measure is due very largely to the fact that the Sheppard amendment was violently engrafted upon the Agricultural bill, almost in defiance of the rules of the Senate; and if the war-time prohibition measure stood by itself it could have been passed, as I observed at the time, in an orderly manner, if passed at all.

What is the situation with respect to prohibition? The President has power now granted by Congress to act. He has practically prohibited the manufacture of beer. He has thrown zones about the camps. The prohibition measure merely provides for the prevention of the manufacture of wine, beer, and spirits after June 30 next, and at the same time these gentlemen concede that the Federal prohibition amendment will be in force and operation in February of 1920. So by the passage of the war-time prohibition amendment they gain seven months, anticipating the Federal amendment; but during that period of seven months the President has the power so to regulate the traffic, if he sees fit.

It is not an important matter for one or the other side of this question. I submit that the President has the power to regulate these things, and that we should not allow the District of Columbia to suffer from profiteering and from disease and death because certain gentlemen wish to anticipate the Federal amendment by seven months.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, the Senator from California [Mr. PHELAN] has uncovered the real issue presented by the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma, so far as he is concerned. He realizes that if the motion is defeated the war-time prohibition measure may be defeated for this session. I earnestly hope, therefore, that the motion to recede will be agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I recognize that there must be some kind of legislation against profiteering in the District of Columbia. I can not say what is the best way to arrive at it, but it ought to be reached at the earliest date possible, and when we are reaching that subject I think there are some amendments to the existing law that ought to be attended to at the same time.

A lady called to see me the other day and cited a case under the existing law that seems to me to be almost an outrage. Last spring she and her family desired to lease her home here in the District for a period of six months. The lease expired on the 1st day of September of this year. She leased it to an employee of the Government for that time. She has two sons in the service of the Government. Her only daughter is here in the District working in one of the departments; but because the title is in her name, and because she is not directly employed by the Government of the United States, notwithstanding the fact that every child she has is so employed, this employee of the Government refuses to give up her home, and to-day she and her daughter are sleeping in the hallway of one of the apartment houses of the District of Columbia—not in a room, but they are given cots in the hallway!

I referred her to an attorney in the District. She went to the attorney, presented her case to him, and he said that nothing could be done for her. She has lived in the District here I suppose for more than 20 years. Her home has been in her name ever since it was a home, and last night she told me she would be compelled to leave the District of Columbia and go somewhere else and get a home, and in doing so she would be compelled to take her daughter out of one of the departments here, though they in turn want her services. Why? Because she gave a lease to an employee of the Government six months ago, and when the lease ran out the lessee positively refused to turn over the house to her.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is an instance of the beautiful operation of the Saulsbury resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. That is exactly the operation of the Saulsbury resolution as it is being put in force in the District of Columbia to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator let me cite here the case of an old lady 90 years old, the daughter of Admiral Wilkes, who rented her home, where she had been living for years, to an Army officer, a colonel, to the 1st of September, and he will not let the old lady have possession so she can die in her own home. Under the Saulsbury resolution she can not put him out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to say, in connection with this matter, that I received not long ago a most touching statement of a case somewhat like the one which the Senator from Utah has just so graphically described, where an employee of the Navy Department had kept possession of premises that were rented for a certain time, when the woman who owned the premises and her daughter did not want them to rerent but wanted them to reoccupy. I took the liberty of sending a statement of the case to the Secretary of the Navy and requested that that man be court-martialed for conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman. Now, whether he could have done what he did under the law I do not know, but I do know that if he did what they said he did, in which he had acted very rudely toward these ladies in addition to keeping their house, he ought to be court-martialed.

Mr. SMOOT. I have not any doubt but that there are hundreds of such cases; and let me tell you, further, what this poor woman offered to do with this Government employee. She said, "I have only my daughter here. I have no particular use for the whole of this house. Let me take the other part of the house, and I will live in it and let you occupy all the balance of the house." The answer was, "I do not want you anywhere around here.

Now, get out. You can not have your house, because I am an employee of the Government."

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator from Utah allow me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMOOT. I do.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I am very much surprised at the statement of the case that the Senator is making. I hold in my hand a copy of the Pomerene resolution, which suspends the right of action against tenants in certain cases. It reads:

No judicial order, decree, or judgment for the recovery of possession of any real estate in the District of Columbia, now or hereafter held or acquired by oral or written agreement of lease for one month or any longer period, or for the ejectment or dispossession of a tenant therefrom, shall be made, and all leases thereof shall continue so long as the tenant continues to pay rent at the agreed rate and performs the other conditions of the tenancy which are not inconsistent herewith, unless the tenant has committed waste, or has been guilty on the premises of conduct which constitutes a nuisance or a breach of the peace, or other misdemeanor or crime, or that the premises are necessarily required by a landlord or bona fide purchaser for occupation either by himself or his wife, children, or dependents.

That seems to answer that case.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the proposed Pomerene law. We are acting under the Saulsbury law.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. That is the joint resolution that was passed both by the House and by the Senate. It was taken out of the Pomerene bill and introduced here by the President pro tempore of the Senate and passed; and that is what controls the action of the courts to-day.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I have my doubts as to whether the lawyer who advised the lady advised her correctly, because under the Saulsbury law—the Senator from Vermont was reading the proposed Pomerene law——

Mr. DILLINGHAM. I inadvertently called it the Pomerene resolution. It was a section taken from the Pomerene bill——

Mr. WILLIAMS. That has not yet become a law.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But was introduced by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, was the Senator referring to the Saulsbury law?

Mr. DILLINGHAM. Yes; I was referring to the Saulsbury law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was about to say that my recollection was that the Saulsbury law provided for cases where the landlord wanted the premises for his own occupancy.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. For his own use, or for his wife or his children, or if he wanted them for a bona fide purchaser.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have my doubts of the accuracy of the legal advice given to this lady; but I took up this matter with the Secretary of the Navy independently of that.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, in the case that I recited the title of the property is in the woman, not in her husband. She holds the title to the property. I want to say, however, that she had been to two or three other attorneys in the District of Columbia, and she told me that they told her that under the law she could not compel the tenant to leave, so I suggested that she go to former Senator George Sutherland. She did go to him, and Senator Sutherland told her that under the law she had no redress, and the tenant had power under the law to keep the premises.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Sutherland is a mighty good lawyer.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. But there is the plain joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Under this joint resolution if the husband had owned the property, or the title of it was in his name, of course he could have gotten it; but the title was in her name.

Mr. DILLINGHAM. What difference does that make, under the language of the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it makes all the difference in the world, and I think the attorneys say so, too.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the language of the joint resolution shows that, because it uses the words:

Or that the premises are necessarily required by a landlord or bona fide purchaser for occupation either by himself or his wife, children, or dependents.

So that in this case the landlord, the owner of the property, does not want it for himself or for his wife, because the owner of the property is the wife.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have heard several Senators say that they know of exactly similar cases, and I do know that the law is interpreted in the way I have stated, and I do know that these women can not get their home. I think that whatever law there is that will impose a hardship upon any woman as this joint resolution does it ought to be changed, and changed at the very earliest opportunity.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me a moment, I have just been reading the Saulsbury joint resolution, and I want to call the attention of the Senator from Vermont to a curious slip and oversight in it. It says:

Or that the premises are necessarily required by a landlord or bona fide purchaser for occupation either by himself or his wife, children, or dependents—

And then there follows this language:

while he—

That is, the landlord or bona fide purchaser—

is in the employ of or officially connected with any branch of the Government.

So it would seem that Senator SUTHERLAND's advice to this woman was perfectly good law, that unless this woman were an employee of the Government she could not give a home to her own children who were employees of the Government, even though she owned the property and had rented it for a fixed term and the term had expired.

Mr. SMOOT. That is just what I said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am informed that the author of this joint resolution has told another Senator that that was an oversight that was called to his attention later; but whatever it is it is in that law. I thought it rather curious that a man like SUTHERLAND, who is about the best lawyer I have known in this body since Jim Clarke, of Arkansas, died, should have made a mistake of that kind, so I looked at it thoroughly to see what it contained.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems that both on account of some modification in the present resolution as well as the necessity for legislation we ought to act upon this subject and act at once. I wish to call attention to the fact that only 33 votes were cast in the House when the House declined to accept the Anderson amendment, and then the House proceeded to reappoint conferees and ask for a continuance of the conference. The House rejected the Anderson amendment, 10 for and 23 against, only 33 out of the entire body voting. It then proceeded to again ask for a conference and named the conferees. So instead of declining finally the House invited us to consider the problem of trying to agree upon something along the line of intelligent legislation with reference to rent profiteering in the District of Columbia. It seems to me for us at this time to recede from the Pomerene amendment is to say we decline to go on with the conference with the House. The House offers us a continuation of the conference.

Mr. POMERENE. If I may make a suggestion, I do not think any Member of this body has at any time suggested that this legislation should be finally in the form that it passed the Senate, but every one is willing that there shall be any satisfactory legislation which will meet the situation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Evidently if we recede at this stage from the Pomerene amendment we will abandon the legislation. The House has not abandoned it, for the House asks another conference.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We not only abandon the legislation but abandon all opportunity to bring about an agreement.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To modify the legislation, as the Senator from Mississippi says, we are leaving unchanged the Saulsbury resolution, which was hurriedly passed, and intended only as a temporary measure, for permanent and perfected legislation it was hoped would soon be passed. If we recede we decline the invitation of the House to appoint conferees on this subject.

Now, Mr. President, I move as a substitute that the Senate further insist upon its amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Oklahoma has precedence over the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, it seems to me that we ought not to abandon this legislation. I agree with what the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] said about his amendment just a few moments ago. Being intensely interested in legislation of this kind and desiring to have it passed now, he very generously made the statement that it made no matter with him whether it was his particular amendment, that he is more interested in having the legislation than he is in any particular form of the legislation. Surely if our conferees will meet the House conferees in a spirit of that kind we ought to have legislation. We all know that the conditions are exceedingly bad here in the District, and that they need attention and need it at once.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. In just one moment. The only way we can get that is to vote down the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma, it seems to me, because it is a matter of vital importance, and the Senator from Oklahoma states himself that if his motion prevails we will have no legislation of this kind for the District this year. I think that would be a great calamity and a calamity we ought not to be responsible for. I yield to the Senator from Texas.

Mr. SHEPPARD. We have been put upon notice that if the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma is voted down nothing further may be accomplished. The chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture has informed me that in all probability the House will not permit its conferees to consider any proposal relating to rent profiteering in connection with an agricultural appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Colorado.

Mr. THOMAS. If the House has taken that position, then a fortiori we should stand by our guns. It is a threat to this body.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, and I want to say as to the House and the House committee that has it in charge I will be more surprised than I ever was in my life at anything if the members of the House committee arbitrarily decline further to confer with the Senate conferees over this matter. I do not believe they are men of that kind.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. This is the only question involved between the Senate and the House. Instead of declining to confer further, the House invites another conference and appoints conferees on this very subject. We can not say that they decline a conference; they invite it.

Mr. McKELLAR. Of course, as I understand the matter, it is purely a question between the House bill and the bill as passed by the Senate. The Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] who had to do with the drafting of the Senate provision, advises the Senate conferees to accept any kind of a measure that will effect the purpose. Surely with an understanding of that kind, with an agreement of that kind, there is no reason in the world why we should not keep the bill in conference and get a measure that will be of real service.

The truth of the business is, Mr. President, it seems to me that we would be derelict in our duty if we declined a further conference. There is no reason for these conditions about rent profiteering to exist in the District of Columbia. All we have to do is to act with a reasonable amount of sagacity and the matter will be remedied. The conditions are getting worse instead of getting better. They are getting worse every time a train comes in with more Government employees. There is no reason why the conferees should not get together. It does seem to me that we ought to insist upon the conference committee dealing with the matter until an agreement is reached. I am quite sure that by using only a reasonable amount of diplomacy, since the Senate is willing to yield, if necessary, the whole provision and let the House Members bring in their provision, if necessary, we will agree to it. I for one will agree to the House bill just as it was passed, if the conferees report it.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. McKELLAR. I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I wish to suggest to the Senator that if another conference reports at a later time and the House passes upon this question when there is a quorum present, the action may be very different from that which was taken on Saturday.

Mr. McKELLAR. The Senator is entirely correct. Of course, that is an additional reason why we should vote down the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma to recede from amendment numbered 28.

Mr. McKELLAR. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were not ordered.

On a division, the motion was rejected.

Mr. GORE. Now, I move that the Senate adhere to amendment numbered 28.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And appoint conferees?

Mr. GORE. No.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma moves that the Senate further insist on its amendment.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: What is the immediate effect of the motion?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate further insist on its amendment, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma has been recognized.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I should like to explain why I make the motion. I apprehended that my motion to recede would be defeated, but I felt constrained to present that question to the Senate, because it is a responsibility the Senate ought to take and that ought not to be shifted; and no one would have any disposition to shift it to the conferees. I have moved to adhere. If that motion prevails, I believe this measure will become a law, because I do not believe that the House will take the responsibility of defeating the bill and defeating the prohibition amendment rather than accept the Pomerene amendment. If the motion to adhere prevails that will be the issue.

The House can do one of two things. It can accept the Pomerene rent amendment and pass this legislation into law, or it can defeat both the Pomerene rent amendment and prohibition. By putting this issue up to them I think they will pass this measure without much delay, but if it is sent to conference I believe I know what will happen. We will sit, like graven images, around the table and again report a disagreement.

Mr. KIRBY. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. GORE. I am afraid that that will be the result, and I infer that from a good deal of experience with this conference. I yield to the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. KIRBY. This is the question I desire to ask. If we adhere to this amendment and do not ask for a conference, and the House refuse to recede from its position and adopt the amendment, it never can be enacted.

Mr. GORE. They can pass it at any time they see fit.

Mr. KIRBY. We will have lost all control of it. We will not confer with them, nor will we recede.

Mr. GORE. The Senator is right about it.

Mr. KIRBY. It seems to me it would be much better to agree to a conference on the disagreement.

Mr. GORE. The Senate can agree to another conference and we will disagree and come back and go around and around this interminable meeting again.

Mr. KIRBY. Having defeated the motion to recede from our amendment, as the House desires another conference, let us have another conference, and then report it here. If that can not be done, let us pass the bill and not put ourselves in a position where we can not pass it.

Mr. GORE. I am making the motion which I think is best calculated in the long run to carry out the will of the Senate and to get this legislation. I am fully persuaded that if this measure goes back to conference it will result in another disagreement. The House conferees take the position that they will not even consider it. They do not consider it as an open question, and in such a case you can not make any progress at all. If the Senate takes the other position, of course, I have no objection to its going back to conference; I merely apprehend it will be a miscarriage and that nothing will happen.

Mr. KIRBY. Could not the fact that they refused to do anything further be reported back here and then would we not be in as good a position as we now are?

Mr. GORE. Certainly.

Mr. KIRBY. It seems to me that that would be the better course.

Mr. GORE. It may be.

Mr. KIRBY. I hope the Senator will withdraw his motion.

Mr. GORE. I do not want to be dogmatic about my position, but I apprehend the Senate will see a little later on that we are going through exactly the same discussion. We will report back a disagreement. I think if this measure ever becomes a law with the rent amendment included the Senate has got to adhere to its amendment. I do not believe the House will take the responsibility of defeating the bill and defeating prohibition in order to defeat the amendment. To send it back we go around in a circle; we will then come back. I do not object to it. I think what I propose is the best way out. It is the way out in my judgment. I think sooner or later it will come to this. Of course, if it is the sense of the Senate that there shall be another conference it is entirely agreeable to me.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let me ask the Senator if it would not be entirely in the power of the conferees to agree to this amendment?

Mr. GORE. Entirely; but the House conferees will not go that far. They will not consider it.

Mr. FLETCHER. Could they not agree to an amendment to it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There is nothing left in the bill for us to confer about except this one amendment, the House having agreed to everything in the bill as passed by the Senate except this one amendment. With this one amendment alone standing between us they ask for another conference. It must mean that they are ready to agree to our amendment or agree to something on that line. The appointment of conferees by the House is a request to the Senate for further consideration of the Pomerene amendment and invites an effort to get together on the details. We can not reject such an invitation.

Mr. GORE. I have great deference to the judgment of the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not expressing a matter of judgment.

Mr. GORE. The Senator sat in the conference.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am expressing a justifiable conclusion from what the House has done, and I hope the conferees may meet free from all prejudice, seeking to serve the best interest of the war workers we have been forced to crowd into Washington.

Mr. GORE. An inference from their action might, of course, be drawn in accordance with the Senator's conclusion, but I have conferred with one of them since that action was taken. I know what they expect. They expect us to meet in conference and the Senate conferees to recede.

Mr. President, perhaps I am not qualified to sit in conference because I do not intend to recede from this amendment until I am ordered to do so by the Senate, and I do not want to take the responsibility of delaying the amendment. That is the dilemma I am in.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Let me ask the Senator a question. You are, however, prepared to meet in conference and take up the terms of the amendment and modify it and help perfect it and agree to any reasonable amendment the House asks with reference to it?

Mr. GORE. Yes; I think the Pomerene amendment ought to be amended. I think it ought to be amended in conference, because it could be much improved. If the Senator from Georgia has any hope of making any progress in conference it will have a great deal of weight with me.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Will the Senator allow me? My hope is from what the House has done. I can not see why the House should have done what it has done unless it meant in good faith to meet us in conference upon the Pomerene amendment. If they meant absolutely to reject it, they could not logically have appointed conferees.

Mr. GORE. I have had a conference with one of the House conferees, and they expect that the Senate conferees will recede. They do not believe the Senate conferees will take the responsibility of defeating this legislation or of long delaying the legislation in order to put through the Pomerene amendment. As far as I am concerned, they have misjudged me, because if I sit on the next conference I never intend to have the conferees recede from this amendment. I will bring it back and receive instructions. Of course, the Senate will instruct the conferees, and I will comply with that instruction, but voluntarily I do not mean to do it.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. GORE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator think that a majority of the Members of the House are opposed to any rent legislation?

Mr. GORE. I think if the Senate adheres to its amendment in accordance with my motion a majority of the membership of the House will compel the House to accept the rent amendment before they will take the responsibility of defeating the prohibition legislation. I think sooner or later it will come to that. That is my hope.

Mr. KING. I understand the Senator has conferred with Members of the House, and he thinks they appreciate the gravity of the situation presented as to the necessity of some immediate legislation in the rent problem for the District of Columbia. It seems to me obvious in view of the concession made by the Senate, and it would be the logical one, that we can get no legislation unless we get it on this bill, and that the House conferees will recede from their position, and will join the conferees on the part of the Senate in formulating some measure that is proper and adequate to meet the situation. The Senator can not believe that Members of the House are so lost to all the proprieties of the occasion that they are going to defeat any legislation upon a question of such importance.

Mr. GORE. I do not; but I think the issue will have to be presented in the House, where they will have to defeat the rent amendment and defeat the bill, on the one hand; or, on the other hand, accept the rent amendment in order to get the prohibition amendment enacted. When they are confronted with that issue I have no doubt as to what action they will take. Until that issue is presented I think the matter will ride at anchor in conference and the Senate conferees will come back here in a few days asking for instructions whether or not we shall recede or further insist. That is what is going to happen. I have no objection to a further conference. We will do the best we can, but I do not think it will produce legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair would like to have the opinion of the Senator from Oklahoma on what the parliamentary status would be if his motion to adhere is adopted without a request for a further conference.

Mr. GORE. I am glad the Chair has asked that question, because I think the Senate should look it squarely in the face. As I understand the parliamentary effect of the adoption of the motion it will be this: When the papers go back to the House the House can do two things. It can concur in amendment No. 28 and let the measure go to the President. It can refuse to concur in amendment No. 28 and that is the end of it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without a further conference?

Mr. GORE. Yes, sir.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Then, the idea of the Senator from Oklahoma is that there should be no further conference on this bill?

Mr. GORE. If a simple motion to adhere were adopted, there would be no further conference.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is the point the Chair wanted to understand.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we just can not afford to put ourselves in the attitude of turning down an invitation not only to consider this amendment, but it gives the enemies of the amendment in the House a whip handle to resist all efforts at a concession. We must meet them under their invitation and expect them to meet us in good faith and let this proposed legislation be perfected.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, it strikes me that we are changing the responsibility of the defeat of the great temperance measure by simply adhering to our amendment and sending it back to the House, saying that the Senate, as far as it is concerned, does not want any further conference—take the medicine we offer whether you like it or not. In that attitude before the public, the House of Representatives being much larger than the Senate, there will be very little difficulty in the country believing that the responsibility has rested entirely upon the Senate for the defeat of this legislation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move a substitute for the motion of the Senator from Oklahoma. I move that the Senate further insist upon its amendment and agree to the request for a conference, and that the Chair appoint the conferees.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion of the Senator from Georgia is that the Senate further insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference asked by the House.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I have no objection to the adoption of that motion, but I wish to say one word with respect to the remarks of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. SMITH]. In my judgment, the House will not defeat the prohibition amendment. I think the rejection of the rent amendment was not due to the fact that a majority of the membership of the House was opposed to legislation upon the subject of rent profiteering. I think a majority of the House is in favor of such legislation. There happens to be involved a sort of point of pride, or the personal factor has gotten into the equation; but when it comes to a collision between principles, the House would accept the rent amendment, which they really favor in some form, together with the prohibition amendment, rather than reject the prohibition amendment, which they favor from principle, and reject the rent amendment, which they favor from principle, merely from personal considerations. That is the situation that influenced me.

I have no disposition to defeat the prohibition amendment. My object was to secure both the rent amendment and the prohibition amendment, since that is the evident sense of the Senate, and I thought the motion I made was the best path leading to that result. I may be in error about it, but I have no objection whatever to a further conference if the Senate shall think that that is the method that promises the greatest results.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] that the Senate further insist upon its amendment and agree to the conference requested by the House.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, merely as a matter of order I suggest that the motion of the Senator from Georgia does not require to be offered as a substitute, but that it takes precedence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Georgia.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. FRANCE conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stands adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, toward the close of the last session of this Congress I made a statement to the Senate in relation to the achievements of the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress. I was prompted then to make the statement by what I considered to be the enormous responsibility resting on the shoulders of the legislators of this country, incident to the great conflict through which we are passing. I beg now, for the same reason, to call attention, in a very brief way, to some of the most important measures enacted into law at this the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress. I shall not take the time to read the synopsis of this legislation, but I send it to the Secretary's desk and ask that it may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, without objection.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the statement which the Senator from Virginia has just presented is a very important and useful one, and I for one should be very glad if it could be printed as a Senate document, and I ask that it be so printed. I ask that there be included with it the statement of a year ago, and that they be printed together as a Senate document.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, without objection.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I understood the Senator from Virginia asked that the statements be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Yes.

Mr. JONES of Washington. And that will be done?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. That will be done.

The statements referred to are as follows:

[S. Doc. No. 287, 65th Cong., 2d sess.]

ACHIEVEMENTS OF THE FIRST AND SECOND SESSIONS OF THE SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS.

STATEMENT OF APPROPRIATIONS AND CONTRACT OBLIGATIONS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1918—FIRST SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I present two statements, which I think will be of interest to the Senate and to the country. The first is a statement of the achievements of the most important session of the American Congress, and the second is a statement of appropriations and contract authorizations for the fiscal year 1918. I ask that the statements be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statements were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Achievements of the most important session of the American Congress—Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.

The present extraordinary session of Congress has been marked by a greater volume of legislation and the enactment of measures of more momentous import than have ever been considered in any similar period in the parliamentary history of the country.

Any criticism, therefore, that has been leveled at the Senate and House growing out of the impatience to place the country upon a war basis at the earliest possible moment, in my judgment, is unfair, and indicates a lack of appreciation or knowledge of the enormous amount of work which the two Houses of Congress have performed.

Responsibilities of long duration and momentous in character have been knowingly, carefully, and, I honestly believe, intelligently assumed by the membership of this Congress. The searchlight of industry and wisdom has characterized their work on each measure, be it large or small.

Congress was convened in special session by proclamation of the President April 2, and has been in session, including to-morrow, 188 days, which includes Sundays and holidays.

Its membership has scarcely taken time to eat or sleep because of the responsibilities which the war has imposed upon them.

It must be remembered that it was a new Congress that met in response to the call of the President, and that at the very outset it was confronted with the necessity of organization, a process ordinarily requiring time and involving many contests. In the present instance, however, the committees of both Houses were named on April 3, the work of selecting them having been done during the vacation period.

At the special session of the Senate, immediately preceding the extra session of Congress, there was passed a modified cloture rule under which public business might be expedited. The adoption of such a rule was accomplished within a few days after its introduction, a result that could not have been attained in any other period of our history short of months of debate, if at all.

I beg to call attention briefly to the most important measures enacted into law at this session of Congress, as follows:

1. Public resolution 1, declaring a state of war exists between the Imperial German Government and the Government and the people of the United States and making provision to prosecute the same. On April 2 the German war resolution was introduced in the House, and on April 6, or four days after the assembling of Congress, the President attached his signature to that measure. No delay was involved in the passage of this resolution, perhaps the most important ever offered, either in this or any other Congress.

2. Public act 1, appropriating $68,020 for certain expenses incident to the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

3. Public act 1, general deficiency appropriation act, appropriating $163,841,400.52, of which $100,000,000 was for the national security and defense and for each and every purpose connected with the war.

4. Public act 3, authorizes an issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes. This act appropriates $3,007,063,945.46 for establishing credits in the United States for foreign governments by purchase of bonds of our allies and expenses incident to preparation and issue of bonds and certificates; authorizes the issue of bonds amounting to $5,063,945,460, of which $3,000,000,000 is for meeting the loans authorized to foreign Governments, $2,000,000,000 to meet domestic expenditures, and $63,945,460 to redeem the 3 per cent loan of 1908 to 1918, maturing August 1, 1918; and also authorizes $2,000,000,000 of one-year certificates of indebtedness temporarily to provide revenue.

5. Public act 7, authorizing one additional midshipman for each Senator, Representative, and Delegate in Congress.

6. Public act 11, appropriating $273,046,322.50 for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1918.

7. Public act 12, authorizing the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States. This act authorized a selective draft of 1,000,000 men and contains other important legislative features pertaining to the Army.

8. Public resolution 2, authorizing the President to take over for the United States any vessel owned in whole or in part by any corporation, citizen, or subject of any nation with which the United States may be at war.

9. Public resolution 3, authorizing the American Red Cross to erect certain temporary buildings in Washington, D. C.

10. Public act 17, to temporarily increase the commissioned and warrant and enlisted strength of the Navy and Marine Corps from 87,000 to 150,000 men in the first instance and from 17,400 to 30,000 in the second.

11. Public act 18, appropriating $1,344,896.18 for the support of the Military Academy for the fiscal year 1918, and for other purposes.

12. Public act 19, amending an act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," as amended, in respect of car service, and for other purposes.

13. Public act 20, amending the war-risk insurance act and appropriating $45,150,000 to insure vessels and their cargoes and expenses connected therewith.

14. Public act 21, appropriating $147,363,928.77 for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1918.

15. Public act 22, authorizing the issue to States and Territories and the District of Columbia of rifles and other property for the equipment of organizations of home guards.

16. Public act 23, appropriates $3,281,094,541.60 for the Military and Naval Establishments on account of war expenses. Up to this time this is the largest appropriation act known to this or any other country. Among other things it appropriates $405,000,000 for an emergency shipping fund, with which to begin construction of the greatest merchant fleet the world has ever known.

17. Public act 24, to punish acts of interference with foreign relations, the neutrality, and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better enforce the criminal laws of the United States, and for other purposes.

18. Public act 25, amending the Federal reserve act.

19. Public act 26, authorizes condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes.

20. Public act 29 appropriates $640,000,000 to increase temporarily the Signal Corps of the Army and to purchase, manufacture, maintain, repair, and operate airships.

21. Public act 31 authorizes the United States to take possession of a site for permanent aviation stations of the Army and Navy for school purposes.

22. Public act 37 appropriates $27,826,150 for the construction, repair, and preservation of certain public works on rivers and harbors.

23. Public acts 38 and 39 enlarges the membership of the Interstate Commerce Commission and amends the act to regulate commerce by authorizing priority shipments by any common carrier, etc.

24. Public act 40 appropriates $11,346,400 to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products.

25. Public act 41 appropriates $162,500,000 to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

26. Public act 43 authorizes an additional issue of bonds to meet expenditures for the national security and defense and for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to extend additional credit to foreign governments, and for other purposes. This act makes an additional appropriation of $4,021,377,890.92 to extend credit in the United States for foreign governments by purchase of bonds of our allies and expenses incident to preparation of an issue of bonds and certificates; authorizes an additiooal issue of $4,000,000,000 of bonds to meet loans to foreign governments; authorizes an additional issue of one-year certificates of indebtedness amounting to $2,000,000,000 and an issue of five-year war-saving certificates amounting to $2,000,000,000.

27. Public act 45, authorizing the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department in Washington, D. C., at a total cost not exceeding $1,250,000.

28. Public act 50, to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes. This measure provides approximately $2,500,000,000 of revenue with which to pay the expenses of the Government.

29. Public act 64, appropriating $5,356,666,016.93 to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1918 and prior years on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and authorizes contract obligations to be met by future Congresses amounting to $2,401,458,393.50. This is the largest appropriation act passed by this or any other country. This act makes further appropriations for the emergency shipping fund of $635,000,000 and raises the limit of cost to carry out the purposes of the shipping act to $1,734,000,000.

30. Public act 90, to provide a military and naval family allowance, compensation, and insurance fund for the benefit of soldiers and sailors and their families, and makes an appropriation therefor of $176,250,000.

31. Public act 91, to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, and appropriates $450,000 to enforce the provisions thereof.

APPROPRIATIONS AND CONTRACT AUTHORIZATIONS FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1918.

Statement showing by acts the appropriations for the fiscal year 1918 made during the Sixty-fourth Congress, second session (including appropriations made by the Army, Military Academy, rivers and harbors, sundry civil, and general deficiency acts passed during the Sixty-fifth Congress, first session).

Agriculture	$25,929,113.00
Army	273,046,322.50
Diplomatic and Consular	5,082,746.66
District of Columbia	14,172,997.85
Fortification	51,396,593.00
Indian	11,589,736.67
Legislative, executive, and judicial	39,894,592.42
Military Academy	1,344,896.18
Naval	517,273,802.08
Pension	160,060,000.00
Post Office	331,851,170.00
River and harbor	27,826,150.00
Sundry civil	147,363,928.77
Total	1,606,832,049.13

General deficiency	$163,841,400.52
Urgent deficiency	4,578,250.00
Miscellaneous (this sum includes an appropriation of $10,000,000 for the War-Risk Insurance Bureau, which has been repealed by subsequent legislation)	41,093,670.08
Permanent annual and indefinite appropriations	145,864,830.32
Total		$1,962,210,200.05
Increased compensation of 5 and 10 per cent to certain employees (estimated)		15,000,000.00
Total regular appropriations, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session		1,977,210,200.05

Appropriations for the fiscal year 1918, made during the Sixty-fifth Congress, first session (exclusive of Army, Military Academy, river and harbor, sundry civil, and general deficiency acts):

Expenses incident to the Sixty-fifth Congress, first session	$68,020.00
Loans to the allies under act of Apr. 24, 1917 (the $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000, making in all $7,000,000,000, to meet loans to the allies, is reimbursable by the foreign governments to whom the advances are made)	3,000,000,000.00
Expenses of preparation and issue of bonds and certificates of indebtedness under act of Apr. 24, 1917	7,063,945.46
Bureau of War-Risk Insurance, cost of insuring vessels and their cargoes, etc	45,150,000.00
Urgent deficiency act for the Military and Naval Establishments	3,281,094,541.60
Increase of Signal Corps of the Army, including purchase, operation, etc., of airships	640,000,000.00
Expenses under act to encourage production, conserve the supply, and control distribution of food products and fuel	162,500,000.00
Expenses under the act to stimulate agriculture and facilitate the distribution of agricultural products	11,346,400.00
Additional loans to the allies under act of Sept. 24, 1917 (the $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000, making in all $7,000,000,000, to meet loans to the allies, is reimbursable by the foreign governments to whom the advances are made)	4,000,000,000.00
Expenses of preparation and issue of bonds, certificates of indebtedness, and war-saving certificates	21,377,890.92
Expenses under the act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy	450,000.00
Expenses under the act establishing a military and naval family allowance, compensation, and insurance fund for the benefit of soldiers and sailors and their families	176,250,000.00
Urgent deficiency act for the fiscal year 1918 and prior years on account of war expenses	5,356,666,016.93
Interest on bonds and certificates (estimated)	200,000,000.00
Total appropriations, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session	16,901,966,814.91
Total appropriations for the fiscal year 1918	18,879,177,014.96

Contract authorizations, by acts in addition to appropriations heretofore made to be met by future appropriations by Congress, authorized during the fiscal year 1918:

Fortification	$5,250,000.00
Naval	86,145,532.00
Sundry civil	900,000.00
Urgent deficiency appropriation act of June 24, 1917	16,550,000.00
Urgent deficiency appropriation act of Oct. —, 1917	2,401,458,393.50
Act to authorize the construction of a building for the use of the Treasury Department	1,250,000.00
Total contract authorizations	2,511,553,925.50
Total appropriations and contract authorizations, fiscal year 1918	21,390,730,840.46

RECAPITULATION.

Total appropriations, Sixty-fourth Congress, second session	$1,977,210,200.05
Total appropriations, Sixty-fifth Congress, first session	16,901,966,814.91
Total contract authorizations, fiscal year 1918	2,511,553,925.50
Total appropriations and contract authorizations, fiscal year 1918	21,390,730,940.46
Total appropriations, fiscal year 1918, exclusive of $7,000,000,000 for loans to the allies	11,879,177,014.96
Total appropriations and contract authorizations, exclusive of $7,000,000,000 for loans to the allies	14,390,730,940.46

SECOND SESSION.

Toward the close of the last session of this Congress I made a statement to the Senate in relation to the achievements of the first session of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

I was prompted then to make that statement by what I considered to be the enormous responsibilities resting on the shoulders of the legislators of this country incident to the great conflict through which we are passing.

I beg now, for the same reasons, to call attention in a very brief way to some of the most important measures enacted into law at this, the second, session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, as follows:

32. Public resolution 17 declares that a state of war exists between the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Government and the Government and the people of the United States, and pledges the resources of our country to bring the conflict to a successful termination.

33. Public act 95, authorizing the purchase of farm-loan bonds to the extent of $200,000,000 during the fiscal years 1918 and 1919. This measure can only result in incalculable good to the great farming class of this country by assuring to them upon their own collateral an adequate supply of money at a fair rate of interest and on reasonable terms.

34. Public act 102 authorizes the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to acquire accommodations for housing shipyard employees and their families and authorizes an appropriation of $50,000,000 with which to carry out the provisions of the act. This amount is appropriated in the sundry civil act for the fiscal year 1919, together with $25,000,000 additional.

35. Public act 103 extends protection to the civil rights of members of the Military and Naval Establishments of the United States engaged in the present war.

36. Public act 107 provides for the operation of the transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes. This gigantic task was undertaken with a view to relieving the menacing congestion in transportation. Under Government operation labor has been better paid and many economies effected. To carry out the purposes of this act the sum of $500,000,000 is appropriated, together with funds available from the operating income, to be used as a revolving fund.

37. Public act 109 makes appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year 1918 on account of war expenses. This act appropriates $731,901,789.46 outright and authorizes contract obligations, to be met by future appropriations, amounting to $1,250,000,000. It also carries legislation of far-reaching importance by giving authority to the Alien Property Custodian to acquire the title of the German-owned property of the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., on the Hudson River. Authority is also given to sell all property of this kind so taken and to invest the proceeds in Government bonds. This act also appropriates $100,000,000 for storage and shipping facilities and authorizes contracts for $50,000,000 additional, and the work accomplished under this appropriation, under the supervision of Gen. Goethals, has worked wonders in handling the enormous amount of supplies for our armies.

38. Public acts 120 and 192 are the third and fourth liberty loan acts. No financial legislation of any country ever approached the magnitude of the liberty loan acts. The third and fourth liberty loan acts increase the amount of bonds authorized to be issued from $7,538,945,460, as heretofore fixed, to $20,000,000,000; increase the appropriations to meet loans to our allies from $4,000,000,000, heretofore fixed, to $7,000,000,000; and increase the amount of certificates of indebtedness that can be outstanding at any one time from $4,000,000,000, as heretofore fixed, to $8,000,000,000.

39. Public act 121 provides for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes. This act creates the War Finance Corporation and the Capital Issues Committee and appropriates $500,200,000 to carry out its purposes. This act authorizes the War Finance Corporation to issue and have outstanding, at any one time, its bonds (to be secured by the assets of the corporation) in an amount aggregating not more than six times its paid-in capital.

40. Public act 139 is to conserve the gold supply of the United States, to permit the settlement in silver of trade balances adverse to the United States; provides silver for subsidiary coinage and for commercial use; assists foreign governments at war with the enemies of the United States, and for the above purposes to stabilize the price and encourages the production of silver.

41. Public act 140 authorizes the Secretary of the Navy to increase the facilities for the proof and test of ordnance material, and for other purposes. There is appropriated by this act the sum of $1,000,000 to carry out its purposes.

42. Public act 140 authorizes the President to provide housing for war needs and authorizes appropriations therefor in the sum of $60,000,000, of which sum $10,000,000 shall be available for use in the District of Columbia.

43. Public act 152 authorizes the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

44. Public act 164 makes appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies for the fiscal year 1918, on account of war expenses, amounting to $90,700,022.62. This sum includes $60,000,000 to provide housing for war needs heretofore authorized.

45. Public act 178 provides for vocational rehabilitation and return to civil employment of disabled persons discharged from the military or naval forces of the United States and appropriates $2,000,000 for the enforcement thereof. This act extends a helping hand to the disabled defenders of our country.

46. Public act 181 makes appropriations for the sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year 1919 amounting to $2,019,654,470.07, and authorizes contract obligations, to be met by future appropriations, amounting to $945,549,000. This act appropriates $1,807,543,500 for the United States Shipping Board and the emergency shipping fund and increases the amount which is authorized to be expended for the construction of ships from $1,234,000,000 to $2,884,000,000. This act also appropriates $50,000,000, to be expended at the discretion of the President, for the national security and defense, and large sums for the various arsenals and armories. An appropriation of $75,000,000 is also made for the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation for housing its employees and their families.

47. Public act 182 makes appropriations for the naval service for the fiscal year 1919 amounting to $1,573,468,415.81 and authorizes contract obligations to be met by future appropriations amounting to $34,000,000.

48. Public act 189 makes appropriations for fortifications and other works of defense, for the armament thereof, for the procurement of heavy ordnance for trial and service, amounting to $2,814,348,267.85, and authorizes contract obligations, to be met by future appropriations, amounting to $2,623,465,845. Comment on the importance of this measure at this time is not necessary.

49. Public act 191 makes appropriations to supply deficiencies for the fiscal year 1918 and prior fiscal years on account of war expenses amounting to $1,015,486,390.74. This act increases the amount authorized to be expended for housing for war needs to $100,000,000 and appropriates therefor $40,000,000, said sum bringing the appropriations up to amount of the total authorizations. An additional appropriation of $50,000,000 is made in this act for storage and shipping facilities.

50. Public act 193 makes appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year 1919 amounting to $10,225,478,312.91 and authorizes contract obligations, to be met by future appropriations, amounting to $1,858,332,801, another evidence of the desire of Congress to furnish ample funds with which to push the war to a successful conclusion. This act extends the authority conferred upon the President in the act to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States by authorizing him during each fiscal year to raise by draft as provided in said act and acts amendatory thereof the maximum number of men which may be organized, equipped, trained, and used during such year until the war shall have been brought to a successful conclusion.

51. Public act 201, provides for the appointment of a commission to standardize screw threads. This act is proving to be of the greatest importance to the industries engaged in war work.

52. Public resolution 38, authorizes the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof, and to operate the same during the war, and to provide just compensation therefor.

53. Public act 202, confers on the President power to prescribe charter rates and freight rates and to requisition vessels. This act has a far-reaching effect touching our over-seas transportation and merchant marine during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter.

54. Public act 210, amends the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States." This act provides that all male persons between the ages of 18 and 45, both inclusive, shall be subject to registration and draft for military service.

55. Public act 215, protects the lives, health, and morals of women and minor workers in the District of Columbia and establishes a minimum-wage board, defines its powers and duties and fixes the minimum wages of such workers.

56. Public act 217 supplements the second and third liberty loan acts as amended. This measure increases the amount of war savings certificates authorized to be issued from $2,000,000,000, as heretofore fixed, to $4,000,000,000 and includes legislation of great importance respecting the various liberty loans.

I feel that in all fairness and justice attention should be directed to four great measures now in the various legislative stages, and which, it is entirely safe to assume, will reach the statute books at an early day. The measures above referred to are as follows:

1. The bill to provide revenue, and for other purposes. This bill is framed with the object in view of raising, during a period of 12 months, the sum of $8,000,000,000.

2. The first deficiency appropriation bill for the fiscal year 1919, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes. This bill as reported to the House appropriates $2,487,655,890.04 and authorizes contract obligations, to be met by future appropriations, amounting to $3,858,349,776.

3. The bill to encourage and promote the mining of coal, phosphate, oil, gas, and sodium on the public domain. In this great struggle we are threatened with a shortage of coal and oil, both vitally necessary in furnishing the material necessary with which to win the war. This measure proposes to open up for use 44,000,000 acres of Government-owned coal and oil lands in 14 different States.

4. The bill to regulate the construction of dams across navigable waters, known as the water-power bill. This bill provides for the improvement of navigation in rivers and for the development of water power as a result of dam construction under said improvement. This bill, in its contemplated improvement, invites the investment of private capital, and without which it would not be invested. It also aims to develop by feasible storage projects, over 61,000,000 horsepower of water-power energy in the United States alone, of which only a very small amount is now being utilized. The importance of the application of this vast amount of energy to our industrial uses can not be questioned.

Recapitulation of appropriations.

[Sixty-fifth Congress, Second Session.]

Title of act.	Amount.	Contracts to be met by future appropriations.	Total.
Agriculture	$27,875,353.00		$27,875,353.00
Army	10,225,478,312.91	$1,858,332,801.00	12,083,811,113.91
Diplomatic and Consular	7,937,376.66		7,937,376.66
District of Columbia	15,046,768.66		15,046,768.66
Fortifications	2,814,348,267.85	2,623,465,845.00	5,437,814,112.85
Indian	11,021,910.00		11,021,910.00
Legislative, etc	69,937,863.25		69,937,863.25
Military Academy	2,515,005.01		2,515,005.01
Naval	1,573,468,415.84	34,000,000.00	1,607,468,415.84
Pension	220,050,000.00		220,050,000.00
Post Office	377,573,342.00		377,573,342.00
River and Harbor	23,771,900.00	82,700.00	23,854,600.00
Sundry Civil	2,019,654,470.07	[1] 1,045,549,000.00	3,065,203,470.07
Total regular acts	17,388,678,985.25	5,561,430,346.00	22,950,109,331.25
Urgent deficiency, 1918	731,901,789.46	1,250,000.00	733,151,789.46
Additional urgent deficiency, 1918	90,700,022.62		90,700,022.62
Deficiency, 1918	1,015,406,732.34		1,015,406,732.34
First deficiency, 1919	2,487,655,890.04	3,858,349,776.00	6,346,005,666.04
Total deficiency acts	4,325,664,434.46	3,859,599,776.00	8,185,264,210.46
Loans to our allies by the third and fourth liberty-bond acts	3,000,000,000.00		3,000,000,000.00
War Finance Corporation and Capital Issues Committee	500,200,000.00		500,200,000.00
Federal operation of railroads	500,000,000.00		500,000,000.00
Purchase of Federal land-bank bonds	200,000,000.00		200,000,000.00
Vocational rehabilitation of disabled soldiers and sailors	2,000,000.00		2,000,000.00
Combating Spanish influenza and other communicable diseases	1,000,000.00		1,000,000.00
Encouraging production and regulation of ores, metals, and minerals	50,500,000.00		50,500,000.00
Encouraging production, etc., and distribution of food products	[2] 11,212,283.00		[2] 11,212,283.00
Other miscellaneous appropriations	1,666,000.00		1,666,000.00
Total miscellaneous appropriations	4,266,578,283.00		4,266,578,283.00
Permanent annual and indefinite appropriations, including $588,049,168 interest on the public debt; $153,814,000 for the sinking fund; $30,904,255.36 for the preparation and issuance of loans; and $51,946,030, the necessary approximated amount to pay the increased compensation to Government employees	896,453,398.36		896,453,398.36
Grand total	26,877,375,101.07	9,421,030,122.00	36,298,405,223.07

[1] Includes all authorizations for emergency shipping fund not discharged by appropriations.

[2] Amount as passed the House.

NOMINATION OF OFFICERS OF NATIONAL ARMY.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill 4990. I will say in this connection that it is a bill which I asked unanimous consent a few days ago to call up, but the Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] then objected. Since that time we have reached an agreement about the matter. It is a bill reported from the Military Affairs Committee, which, under the suggestion offered by the Senator from New York, is intended to require the consent of the Senate for the appointment of certain officers in the Staff Corps. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I must object to the present consideration of that bill. I am a member of the Military Affairs Committee, but I was not present when the bill was reported out of the committee. I think the suggestion made by the Senator from New York as adverse to the bill presents a situation that is almost unanswerable. If we are to be required to confirm 160.000 officers of all grades, and are to give the subject any attention whatever, the members of the Military Affairs Committee will certainly have time to do nothing else during the remainder of this war.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator from Colorado will pardon me——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. As it is now, Mr. President, we are confirming officers appointed in the naval and military departments of the Government en bloc. I know that, while I am no busier than any other Senator, I have no time to devote to the proper consideration of so many names. I want to look into this subject very carefully before I consent to have it placed upon the statute books.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is made to the present consideration of the bill.

STATEMENT OF SWIFT & CO.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, I have received a letter from L. F. Swift, president of Swift & Co., which I desire to bring to the attention of the Senate.

I hold no brief for Swift & Co., and they do not ask me to stand sponsor for any statements of L. F. Swift, but it seems to me that no wrong can be done in placing on record the unqualified denial of certain statements to which he refers in his communication, which I send to the desk and which in the absence of any objection I ask may be printed in the RECORD. It is very short, containing but a single page.

I do not ask that the letter be read, though it is only a matter of a page, but I do ask consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Such will be the order, without objection.

The letter referred to is as follows:

SWIFT & CO.,
UNION STOCK YARDS,
Chicago, October 11, 1918.

Hon. CARROLL S. PAGE,
The United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: On September 6, Senator BORAH claimed on the floor of the Senate that there had not been a single refutation of the accusations made with regard to the packing industry, and that the records prove that they hold regular meetings to agree among themselves as to the prices of products which they sell.

On October 3 Senator GRONNA, speaking of the Federal Trade Commission report, said "that at no time have the packers denied the correctness of the report."

Neither of these statements has been answered on the floor of the Senate, and lest other Senators harbor the same impression as to the packers' attitude with respect to the Federal Trade Commission, I wish to make the following brief statement:

Swift & Co. absolutely denies that the packers meet in any way or agree among themselves as to the prices of the products they sell, and has denied from the very first the validity of the conclusions of the Federal Trade Commission that the packers exercise a monopoly in restraint of trade and that they stoop to unfair business practices.

Swift & Co. formally denied the charges of the commission, showed that the investigation was an ex parte one, and showed that the commission had not established its case in the printed statement which was sent to you with a personal letter on August 22, 1918, two weeks before Senator BORAH made the statement referred to above.

An additional copy of our printed statement I am now sending you. The matter under discussion is of such general importance that I am sure you will wish to be fully informed and to understand our position, which the inclosed statement will make clear. I shall gladly give you any additional information that you may desire.

Respectfully, yours, L. F. SWIFT.

LOANS TO FOREIGN GOVERNMENTS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, I have here matter in the nature of a memorial from Publication No. 12, "Business Conditions," of September, 1918, a monthly publication being a résumé of the world war, published by Henry Evans, president of the association, at 18 Maiden Lane, N. Y. I desire the consent of the Senate to have it printed in the RECORD, to be preceded by an interview recently given in New York by Hon. George W. Wickersham, Attorney General of the Taft administration. The article seems to answer the interview; and I desire simply to introduce it now, because I believe the suggestion of the former Attorney General will be resented by our allies, in view of the fact that the United States is waging war for altruistic reasons and is imposing a great burden of bonded debt and taxation upon its own people.

The Wickersham interview should not be allowed to go out to the country without the information which I submit and without a protest which I now make.

It is a false sentimentality that humiliates our allies and further embarrasses our financing of the war. The resources of the United States are not inexhaustible, and I would like to hear from the Treasury on this subject in good season.

The matter referred to is as follows:

DROP DEBTS ALLIES OWE US, HE URGES—WICKERSHAM DECLARES WE OWE THEM FOR HOLDING THE HUN.

[Special to the Washington Post.]

NEW YORK, October 20.

George W. Wickersham, Attorney General in the Taft administration, aroused his audience to high enthusiasm in the Twenty-third Street Y. M. C. A. this afternoon when he said:

"I would like to see America forgive our allies the debts they owe us. I would like to have our country send a receipted bill to Great Britain, France, and Italy.

"We can afford to do so, for we must remember all they have borne, what they have suffered during the years before we entered this war to hold the line against the Hun and to keep autocracy from crushing democracy.

"When I say we can afford it, I not only refer to what we owe our allies for holding back the Germans, but also to the vast sums we made by supplying them with what they needed before we entered the war. These debts should be forgiven, and they can be if all our people want to do it."

Loans to the allies to Sept. 16, 1918.

Great Britain	$3,745,000,000
France	2,065,000,000
Italy	760,000,000
Russia	325,000,000
Belgium	154,250,000
Greece	15,790,000
Cuba	15,000,000
Serbia	12,000,000
Liberia	5,000,000
Total	7,097,040,000

One of the leading New York papers has drawn attention to the fact that, whereas England is borrowing immense amounts of money in the United States, their money market is easy as compared with money conditions in this country. In this way England is able to build up its industries in preparation for the severe competition which is bound to follow after the war.

An example of this is that the English Parliament recently voted £2,000,000 to advance to dyestuff makers in England, while England is borrowing money here. Another is the fact that the London Water Co. notes, which sold here on about a 7 per cent basis, and are now maturing, have been replaced in London on a 3½ per cent basis, due to the easy money market in England, as compared with the high rates which United States industries must pay in this country.

This is an injustice to United States merchants and is an anomaly in finance, since it is customary for a loaning nation to have the whip hand, whereas now, in spite of the fact that the United States is a creditor nation to the extent of almost $6,000,000,000, where before the war we were a debtor nation to the extent of $6,000,000,000, and that at this time our loans to England amount to $3,745,000,000, money conditions are far tighter here than in Britain, a debtor nation.

A leading New York banker and financier, in a recent interview, said:

"At present, owing to our favorable trade balance during the last three years or more, we are in absolute control of the international exchange situation Our excess of exports over imports during that period has added immensely to our gold holdings. After the war exports may and probably will fall off considerably, and it is not unlikely that our imports will increase heavily. This might result in huge gold shipments from here. If the amounts due from other governments to the Government of the United States for advances made to the allies are in the form of long-term obligations on which only interest and sinking fund would have to be paid, it might be that such interest and sinking fund would not be sufficient to offset the amount of gold which foreign countries could draw from us should the balance of trade then be very much against us. Naturally, the longer the war lasts the larger will be the amount due this Government annually for interest and sinking fund. It is assumed that present arrangements with the allies provide at least for annual payments of interest and sinking fund. If such provision does not exist, it certainly ought to be arranged for.

"If, on the other hand the amounts due from allied countries to our Government were, instead of being in the form of long-time bonds, to take the form of short-time obligations, perhaps maturing serially, then there could be no question about our being able to tender, in lieu of gold that might be demanded, obligations of any country desiring to withdraw gold from us. In other words, there could then be no question that the control of gold movements would be in our hands. The control of gold naturally carries with it, so long as the gold standard is maintained the world over, very largely the control of commerce. Of course, it may be said that out of gratitude none of the allies would press their advantage; but can it not with equal truth be said that similarly the United States would not press its advantage, and is it not better that if the advantage must rest with some one it should rest with us?

"The relation of exports to imports will unquestionably be affected by the relative rates of wages that will be paid after the war in the various countries now at war. It is reasonable to assume that the laboring man in America will, as heretofore, fare better than the laboring man in European countries. This may mean for some time a very large decrease in exports of merchandise and a very large increase in the importation of merchandise. If, in order to avoid trade rivalries that have heretofore been believed to be a cause of war, protective tariffs should largely be done away with, the United States would probably find it more difficult than other countries to readjust the scale of money wages in this country. We ought at such a time to have the power to protect ourselves against the inconvenient export of gold."

Mr. PHELAN. I hereby submit the most recent Treasury statement of loans to foreign governments under the acts of April 24, 1917; September 24, 1917; April 4, 1918; and July 9, 1918, for the information of the Senate:

	Credits established.	Cash advances.	Other charges against credits.	Balances under established credits.
Belgium	$171,020,000	$156,980,000		$14,040,000
Cuba	15,000,000	5,000,000		10,000,000
France	2,165,000,000	1,865,000,000	$200,000,000	100,000,000
Great Britain	3,745,000,000	3,652,000,000		93,000,000
Greece	15,790,000		15,790,000
Italy	1,060,000,000	840,000,000		220,000,000
Liberia	5,000,000			5,000,000
Roumania	6,666,666		5,000,000	1,666,666
Russia	325,000,000	187,729,750		137,270,250
Serbia	12,000,000	10,205,000		1,795,000
Total	7,520,476,666	6,716,914,750	220,790,000	582,771,916

ABSENT KENTUCKY VOTERS AT NAVAL STATION.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I present as a memorial from the State of Kentucky the telegram which I send to the desk, with the request that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read the telegram, as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 20, 1918.

Hon. HARRY S. NEW,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

We desire to bring to you attention the following matter: Duly accredited representatives of the Kentucky Republican State campaign committee have been denied by the authorities in charge of United States naval training station at Great Lakes, Ill., facilities for getting into touch with and rendering to Kentucky Republican voters in the service there who may wish it assistance in preparing necessary papers entitling them to cast their ballots at the approaching November election in Kentucky agreeably to the "absent-voters" law of Kentucky, giving as a reason that a nonpartisan representative of Gov. Stanley, of Kentucky, had already been there, and had secured the promulgation of a general order in said station directing all Kentucky voters there who desired to vote at the approaching election in Kentucky to appear at a designated place in said station on October 11 for that purpose, and stating that no other opportunity would be accorded them to vote, and that said representative of Gov. Stanley had on said date, in pursuance of said order, met Kentucky voters there and had secured the execution of the necessary papers enabling them to vote. It has been pointed out to said authorities that the person who had gone to said station carrying a letter of introduction and credit from Gov. Stanley was not a nonpartisan official or agent, but was the representative of the Democratic organization in Kentucky and of the candidacy of Gov. Stanley, the Democratic nominee for United States Senator from Kentucky, and was in no sense the representative of the Kentucky Republican organization; that he went there as a partisan, whatever his representations may have been to said authorities; and that investigation in the offices of the county clerks in Kentucky, where applications from absent voters for ballots must be filed showed so small a number of applications for ballots from Kentucky Republicans at said naval station that the Republican candidates and organization in Kentucky can not accept as a fair or nonpartisan result the action of said Democratic representative in assuming or undertaking to poll the Republican vote there; that said representative went there without the knowledge or consent of any Republican organization or candidate, but only at the instance and direction of Democratic organizations and candidates, including Gov. Stanley; that there is no provision of the Kentucky law authorizing the appointment of any commission, partisan or otherwise, to take the poll of absent voters or to assist such voters in the preparation of the necessary papers for voting; and that the aforesaid representative, acting for the partisan purposes aforesaid, sought Democratic votes rather than Republican votes, because he was and is working earnestly for the success of Democratic candidates and for the defeat of Republican candidates. Notwithstanding which, said authorities yet decline to permit the representatives of this committee to have any facilities for securing the applications of Kentucky Republican voters there who may not have taken any steps to secure their ballots for voting and who might desire to do so. It is but natural that absent voters should desire to receive assistance in the preparation of papers for voting under Kentucky's new and rather complicated law permitting absent voters to vote by mail at the hands of representatives of their own party bearing proper evidence of authority and good faith from their party organization; and we have every reason to believe that many Kentucky Republicans at said station who desire to vote will altogether fail of the opportunity of doing so unless duly accredited representatives of their party are permitted to meet, instruct, and help them. We do not question the good faith of the authorities at said station in their action taken at the instance of said Democratic representative, but we fail to understand why now, with facts explained to them, they decline to give to Republican representatives the same opportunity they accorded said Democratic representative. That any of these voters should be precluded from exercising the highest privilege of citizenship when at their country's call they have placed themselves in position whereby they may have to make the supreme sacrifice of citizenship is so grave a wrong against them and is so antagonistic to the very things for which we are waging this great war that we are sure that if the higher governmental authorities are advised thereof they will immediately give the necessary direction granting the courtesy we are asking. This committee appeals to you to exercise your good offices and influence to secure permission for its representatives to immediately reach in an adequate way the Kentucky Republican voters in said station and to give all of them who may desire it the information and assistance necessary to enable them to vote at the approaching election in Kentucky. The time is short and quick action is necessary. The order promulgated at said naval station at the instance of the aforesaid representative of the Kentucky Democratic organization and the candidacy of Gov. Stanley follows:

[Copy.]

OFFICE OF THE COMMANDANT,
UNITED STATES NAVAL TRAINING STATION,
GREAT LAKES, ILL.

NOTICE.

1. All men on this station qualified voters of the State of Kentucky who desire to vote in the coming fall election in the State of Kentucky are directed to report Friday October 11, between the hours of 9.30 a. m. and 12 noon, and 1 p. m. and 4.30 p. m., in the pool and bowling alley room in the basement of the Instruction Building, main station.

2. Special arrangements have been made by the governor of Kentucky to give the Kentucky boys of this station this opportunity to vote; this is the only opportunity that will be given to voters in the fall election.

3. Heads of departments and regimental commanders are directed to issue the necessary pass to all Kentucky boys desiring to take advantage of this opportunity.

W. E. CLOW, Jr.,
Ensign, U. S. N. R. F., by direction.

The above notice was published in the Friday, October 11, 1918, issue of the Great Lakes Bulletin.

W. E. CLOW, Jr.,
Ensign, U. S. N R. F., Aid to Commandant.

Kindly wire me at my expense of what you may be able to do.

M. H. THATCHER,
Vice Chairman Republican State Campaign Committee of Kentucky, 810 Republic Building.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, the memorial which I have sent to the desk, and which has just been read by the Secretary, speaks for itself. It requires very little in the way of explanation or expatiation on my part. The facts are pretty plainly set forth. It appears from this memorial that without further notice to the men at the Great Lakes station than was published in a little local paper on the same day on which the election under the absent voters' law was to be held, they were called upon to cast their votes; that is, such of them as were meant to be notified were voted, while the others were not.

Mr. President, I have sent this to the desk because I think we are all interested in knowing if the Army and Navy of the United States are to be used for carrying on that kind of political outrage. I think that if the boys who are there at that station, and who have staked their lives in defense of the honor of their country, are to be made the victims of that kind of political machination and outrage, not only the Senate, but the public is interested in knowing it.

GERMAN ATROCITIES.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask to have read a short letter from Dr. P. H. Howard, of St. Louis, Mo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read the letter.

The Secretary read as follows:

ST. LOUIS, MO., September 19, 1918.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Your letter of September 11 at hand. In regard to atrocities reported by me, I reported to the headquarters of New York of having met A. C. Cole, 49 Prospect Street, East Liverpool, Ohio, at the Hotel D'Strassberg, and he told me of finding his brother, Sergt. A. B. Cole, crucified by the Uhlans July 21, 1915, at the Battle of Ypres.

A. C. Cole is a member of the First Canadian Tunneling Company and was on furlough in Paris at the time. I have his signed statement of the above act as well as that of Fred A. Robinson, Cayuga, Ind., of the Fifty-eighth Infantry, Canada, who was a personal witness to the above. I also interviewed five different members of the First Canadian Tunneling Company in Paris, who testified to the above atrocity.

A personal feeling that any well-authenticated atrocity should be known by the American people was my reason for mentioning them on my return to America.

Yours, very truly,
P. H. HOWARD.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the street number and post-office address of this writer are given. My purpose in presenting the letter was because of the fact that a short time ago the Committee on Public Information, which states that it dispenses all news items that are given out from the War Department, gave out to the press and had printed in certain papers a categorical denial of this statement which has been made by Dr. Howard, that Sergt. Cole had been found by his brother crucified. He states in this letter that he has the written statement of A. C. Cole and of Fred A. Robinson, of the Fifty-eighth Canadian Infantry, corroborated by interviews with a number of other soldiers who personally observed the crucified corpse of Sergt. Cole.

I have in my hand, Mr. President, a sheet of printed matter given out by the Committee on Public Information, sent to me with a letter, I suppose because I had called up the Committee on Public Information and inquired of them whether or not they were responsible for the denial of this German atrocity. I find in this sheet of printed matter, which is evidently prepared for the press, a lengthy propaganda attacking various reports as to acts of German cruelty and German atrocity. The Committee on Public Information make the very peculiar argument in this propaganda which they are giving out to the newspapers and paying for out of the Public Treasury, the appropriations that Congress has made for them, that while it is to the advantage of the United States that the Germans should understand that the American Army does not torture its prisoners, but treats them well, in order to encourage German soldiers to surrender, at the same time, for some different reason not explained by the committee, the German Army authorities give out false reports of German atrocities, whether for the purpose of inducing American soldiers to surrender or not is not made plain, but that they are given out for the purpose of having them contradicted and their falsity exposed, in order to discredit the reports of atrocities that had actually been committed. So the committee proceeds to aid the Germans to accomplish this object by attacking reports of atrocities, even where proved by incontrovertible evidence.

I am not able to follow this peculiarly meticulous argument of the Committee on Public Information, whereby they apply one rule to the German authorities and another to the American authorities as to the policy which would affect the morale of the soldiers of their respective armies; but I am concerned with the persistent and continued effort on the part of the Committee on Public Information to create the impression that the Germans have abandoned the practice of cruelty to prisoners and to civilians in the occupied territory, and I am at a loss to understand the purpose of the Committee on Public Information in adopting this attitude. It is a matter which I think should be called to public attention, and some inquiry should be made as to the motive which is back of this propaganda, so seduously cultivated by the Committee on Public Information at the expense of the United States and in favor of the Germans.

The instance to which I have just called attention is only one of a number; and in that connection I will state that even after the attention of the Committee on Public Information had been called to the proof which Dr. Howard had of the assertion which he makes, on the 17th day of this month they sent me this curious statement in regard to it, a part of the matter which they are issuing for publication:

In this connection, it is well to note that there has been an error made in the published story of the crucifixion by Germans of an American soldier named Sergt. A. B. Cole, of East Liverpool, Ohio. A circumstantial account of the atrocity has been printed by the Salvation Army, as related by Dr. P. H. Howard, a member of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, who visited France to gather first-hand information about the war. Dr Howard was quoted as giving the story on the authority of Pvt. A. C. Cole, a brother of the victim, who found the crucified soldier pinned with bayonets to a door.

They still persist, notwithstanding their attention has been called to the proof which Dr. Howard had of this atrocity, in attempting to cast discredit upon the authenticity of the report, and refer to Sergt. Cole as an American soldier, whereas Dr. Howard stated in his original statement and in the letter which the Secretary has read that he was a Canadian soldier, and the Committee on Public Information gave out a denial of this atrocity from the War Department under the name of Gen. March. I notice that on a previous occasion Gen. March felt called upon to issue a statement repudiating news items which had been given out by this committee in his name, and the present instance may be equally unauthorized so far as Gen. March is concerned; but there was given out in his name by this committee a denial that Sergt. Cole had been crucified.

Now, I fail to understand how Gen. March could tell whether or not a sergeant in the Canadian Army had been crucified. He did not purport, in his statement which this Committee on Public Information gave out, to have any special means of information on the subject.

The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] has just handed me, in the New York Times of to-day, a report of what he designates as a horrible atrocity, newly reported, which has been committed by the Germans, which I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

BUTCHERED BY RETREATING FOE.

One of the largest successes has been darkened by a tragedy almost unique even in the records of German cruelty. When the order was given to all the inhabitants to move away to the interior before the advancing allies the farmer with his wife and three children stayed instead of obeying. The Germans found them and shot them there in their own farmyard as an example to the rest of the population. The French cavalry advance guard was horrified by the sight of their bodies not yet cold.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is not my purpose, however, to collect here the innumerable instances of unspeakable cruelties and inhumane practices of which the Germans are guilty. The world is aware of their conduct in this regard. It has already been proved. My purpose in presenting this letter is to show that a committee that are expending millions of dollars annually, appropriated out of the Public Treasury for the purpose of issuing propaganda favorable to the United States, for some reason, on the basis of the argument which I have referred to, which no sane person can understand, are devoting these funds to a defense of Germany against the charges of atrocity; and they use the expression in the report which they have just issued, and which they sent to me under the signature of the Director of the Service Bureau of this committee, as he is officially called, that the discrediting of these reports tends to cast discredit upon the reports of "atrocities committed on Belgian girls during the early days of the war."

There is a very clear disclosure of the attitude of this committee. Their attitude is that while there were atrocities committed in the early days of the war, they take the position and clearly imply by this statement which they have issued that the practice of atrocities has been abandoned by the Germans, notwithstanding the instance to which the Senator from Colorado has just called attention and the instance which is contained in a report from Montreal of August 19 of Germans turning liquid fire upon helpless prisoners in their possession in groups, and which I ask to have printed as a part of my remarks, and innumerable other instances which are proved by the testimony of eyewitnesses. These practices are certified to by the President of the United States in the official communication which he has issued in the last few days to the German Government, in which he refers to the practice of the Germans of carrying off into slavery the civil inhabitants of occupied territory, in which the President refers to the inhuman, unlawful, barbarous practice of the Germans of sinking lifeboats in which the passengers upon vessels torpedoed in the first place, against the rules of international law, were seeking to save their lives, the practices of the Germans in firing upon the lifeboats and upon the helpless people occupying them. In the face of that, and persistently after their attention had been called to the peculiarity of their course, this Committee on Public Information are attempting to create the impression in the world, for some purpose which seems to me rather sinister, that the Germans have abandoned these practices.

I ask, Mr. President, that the Montreal item to which I have just referred may be printed as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[By the Associated Press.]

GERMANS TURN LIQUID FIRE ON CAPTURED AND WOUNDED.

LONDON, August 18, via Montreal.

Details have been officially published for the first time of gross outrages on British prisoners and wounded men committed by the Germans last March. Affidavits of Scotch soldiers testify to the authenticity of the charges.

A private of the Royal Highlanders tells how he and a number of comrades, consisting of 1 officer and 15 men, 10 of whom were wounded, were compelled to surrender near Monchy, March 28. They were lined up in the original front line trench, and after some time a German officer and two men appeared. One of the men under orders of the officer turned a stream of liquid fire straight down the trench in which the Britishers were standing and, notwithstanding the fact that they were unarmed, continued to spray them for six or seven minutes. The private testified that he and a few of his companions who were able to move scrambled down to a communication trench and got over the top and back into the British lines.

Another private testified that he and other prisoners were marched down a trench to an emplacement about 6 feet deep, 9 feet wide, and from 9 to 12 feet long, and while tightly packed in the inclosure two Germans, one of whom carried a revolver and seemed to be an officer, appeared. The other man had a cylinder on his back and attached to it was a flexible pipe.

"Just as he reached the entrance to the inclosure," said the soldier, referring to the man with the cylinder on his back, "a flame spurted out in a stream from the pipe and caught the men who were nearest to the entrance. The other men lay in heaps around and partly on me. I heard a hissing sound for a short while. Then it stopped but started again. During this time the men were shrieking and writhing. The flame reached right back to where I was. My overcoat and tunic caught fire. By this time all the men were on the ground."

The soldier added that he managed to crawl up the slope and get away.

Another soldier related how an officer, wounded in the head and foot, and four other wounded and three unwounded men, including himself, were in an old trench when two Germans appeared and used liquid fire. One of the Germans, revolver in hand, ordered the Britishers to get back to the German line. The narrator said his hands and right ear were burned. Three of the party managed to escape and reach the British line, but the Germans either must have suffocated or burned all the five wounded men, as nothing further had been heard from them.

The British Government has protested to the German Government against those outrages.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator sits down, let me ask him if it is not true that within two or three days it has been stated in all the dispatches that before leaving Lille the Germans took away a large number of young women and girls?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Why, it is stated from so many sources that it is beyond question that witnesses of indubitable veracity, officials of the city of Lille, stated to the French and British Army authorities when they entered the city that the Germans had carried away 15,000 civilians; and they gave an account in the most specific way of an order issued by the German general in command of the city of Lille for the inhabitants of that city to assemble in their respective homes at a certain hour on a certain night, and that they remained so assembled until 10 o'clock on the following morning, when representatives of the German Army appeared at each door, examined the family, and, after scrutinizing them and determining which ones of the family would be useful to them for such purposes as they chose to make of them, sorted out the several members of the family, and carried them off with them.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Just to make a further point: Of course, the Bureau of Public Information are so renowned for accuracy that I suppose they felt that the statement of Sergt. Cole's brother was not good evidence of the identity of the body—that one brother could not recognize the other.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very likely. That is not sufficient evidence for the punctilious Committee on Public Information.

In this connection I refer again to something that I called attention to some time ago, in a report from the Committee on Public Information citing Gen. Pershing as authority for the denial of a report that a sergeant had made. I can very well imagine that a sergeant might see certain things that occurred to an American soldier at the battle front that Gen. Pershing did not see and would not know anything about and would have no means of knowing. I called attention to it at that time, and the doubt that existed in my mind whether Gen. Pershing had ever made any such statement. I am rather confirmed in that suspicion by subsequent developments, as Gen. March, Chief of Staff of the United States Army, has been compelled over his own name to issue a denial to certain statements made by the committee in his name.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 4637.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

DEATH OF REPRESENTATIVE STERLING.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, communicated to the Senate the intelligence of the death of Hon. JOHN A. STERLING, late a Representative from the State of Illinois, and transmitted resolutions of the House thereon.

Mr. LODGE. I ask that the resolutions of the House be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair lays before the Senate resolutions from the House, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolutions, as follows:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
October 17, 1918.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. JOHN A. STERLING, a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of 20 members of the House, with such Members of the Senate as may be joined, be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the House be authorized and directed to take such steps as may be necessary for carrying out the provisions of these resolutions, and that the necessary expenses in connection therewith be paid out of the contingent fund of the House.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I send to the desk the following resolutions and ask for their adoption.

The resolutions (S. Res. 322) were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN A. STERLING, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Under the second resolution the Presiding Officer appointed as the committee on the part of the Senate Mr. SHERMAN, Mr. LEWIS, Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota, Mr. FERNALD, Mr. WATSON, and Mr. VARDAMAN.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 24, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, October 21, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we thank Thee that Thy brooding wings are over us, Thy loving arms about us, Thy spirit within us, to guide us through the voyage of life; that our physicians have in hand the terrible scourge which has been visited upon our people. May they continue their skill until it shall be removed from the world. We thank Thee that Field Marshal Foch, by his skill, energy, and courage, has in hand the destruction of militarism and autocracy; that all the world may rejoice in peace and happiness; through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, October 19, was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, according to the agreement we had the other day, I move that the House adjourn to meet on next Thursday.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 6 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous agreement, adjourned until Thursday, October 24, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 13111) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire additional lands for the naval training station, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13112) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire additional lands for the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., and for other purposes; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WALSH: A bill (H. R. 13113) to authorize the Chief of Ordnance to enter into agreements relative to repairs to public highways and the cost thereof; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 13114) granting a pension to Paulina Zabel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LINTHICUM: Resolution (H. Res. 447) to pay Benjamin C. Green for one month's services; to the Committee on Accounts.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. WALSH laid on the Clerk's desk a petition of the City Council of Worcester, Mass., protesting against proposed tax on income from municipal bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 24, 1918.

Rev. A. T. Guttery, of Liverpool, England, president elect of the National Free Church Council of England and Wales, offered the following prayer:

O Lord, our God, we thank Thee for the mercies of this day. Its tidings of valor and victory assure us of Thy constant governance in the affairs of men. Save us from pride in the hour of triumph as Thou did save us from despair in the day of trial. Thy call to us is great beyond our merits; we pray Thee to give us grace and power that Thy will may be done on earth as it is in heaven.

Bless, we pray Thee, the President of this Nation and his counselors, and also the allied rulers, statesmen, commanders, and peoples who share our task in these days of war. Let Thy favor abide with our sons, who contend for us on land and sea and above the clouds, and give mercy to our daughters, who must serve and suffer at home.

Remove, O Lord, the illness that afflicts the homes of this land and give wisdom to those who battle with the pestilence that threatens us.

We pray Thee to give victory to our arms, not that we may boast in might, but that through triumph there may come to our troubled world an abiding peace, in which Christ, Thine Eternal Son, shall reign forever.

These blessings we pray in the name of the beloved Lord. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., October 24, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBINSON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when, on request of Mr. CHAMBERLAIN and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ESTIMATES OF APPROPRIATIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Board of Commissioners of the District of Columbia submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $12,800 required by the District of Columbia for purchases of fire apparatus urgently needed, etc. (S. Doc. No. 293), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Acting Secretary of Labor submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $195,000,000 required for the Bureau of Industrial Housing and Transportation, etc. (S. Doc. No. 294), which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

He also laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a letter from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation in the sum of $12,000 required by the Medical Department of the Army for the Army Medical Museum, fiscal year 1919 (S. Doc. No. 295), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

S. 3735. An act to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 63. Joint resolution to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented a petition of the Drake Bullard Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the tax on farm-loan bonds, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Minnesota Pharmaceutical Association, of Minneapolis, Minn., and a telegram in the nature of a memorial from the Koch Vegetable Tea Co., of Winona, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on nonbeverage alcohol, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented petitions of Horace Lowry, of Minneapolis; John R. Mitchell, of St. Paul; Charles W. Gordon, of St. Paul; George H. Prince, of St. Paul; and Eli S. Warner, of St. Paul, all in the State of Minnesota, praying for the classification of public utility corporations for taxation by themselves in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

ABSENT KENTUCKY VOTERS AT NAVAL STATION.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, on last Monday the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] had read a telegram from the vice chairman of the Republican State campaign committee of Kentucky complaining about some action of the commandant at the Great Lakes Training Station, near Chicago. In that telegram the vice chairman complains that a political preference was shown. I have here a letter from the Secretary of the Navy, inclosing one from the commandant of the station in reference to this matter, and I ask that they may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

THE SECRETARY OF THE NAVY,
Washington, October 24, 1918.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR BECKHAM: I am sending you herewith a copy of a telegram from Capt. W. A. Moffett, commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, giving the facts with reference to the statement contained in a telegram which Senator NEW put in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I explained the matter to Senator NEW that Capt. Moffett did exactly right, and has given permission alike to Democrats and Republicans who wish to give opportunity to men to vote who are in the naval service on duty at Great Lakes.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

(Inclosure.)

Dictated by the Secretary and signed in his absence.

[Copy of telegram.]

GREAT LAKES, ILL., October 22, 1918—9.45 a. m.

Hon. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy, Washington, D. C.:

With reference my telegram in regard to Senator NEW, the following telegram just received from Mr. Thatcher, vice chairman Kentucky Republican State committee:

"Your wire to-day. Will send representatives to Great Lakes in accordance therewith. As there is no provision of law in Kentucky for any commission to be appointed to arrange for absent votes, and as party who was there on the 11th instant came as the partisan representative of his party and of Gov. Stanley, who is himself a candidate for office, this committee very naturally was unwilling to accept the result of that party in the matter, especially so as the applications for ballots received through said party's effort were so much larger for the Democrats than for the Republicans, we felt, and feel, that the Republican organization should have the same facilities exactly as accorded to the Democratic organization, and we appreciate the fact that the like courtesy has been accorded us."

As stated before, both parties have been treated exactly alike in all election activities at Great Lakes, and every effort has been made to keep these activities strictly nonpartisan.

W. A. MOFFETT.

[Copy of telegram.]

GREAT LAKES, ILL., October 21, 1918—7.30 p. m.

Hon. JOSEPHUS DANIELS,
Secretary of the Navy,
Navy Department, Washington:

Associated Press reports that Senator NEW, of Indiana, read in the Senate a telegram from the chairman of the Kentucky Republican State Central Committee that his committee had been denied privilege granted the Kentucky Democratic State Central Committee to get in touch with the Kentucky voters in this station. Our understanding of the law and of Navy regulations is that in the matter of affording opportunity to voters in the service to vote by mail no political party is to be permitted to canvass the voters or to electioneer on this station. Certain gentlemen from Kentucky, with a letter from the governor, arrived here requesting that arrangements be made so that the voters of Kentucky might be permitted to vote by mail. A notice was therefore inserted in the Bulletin, the station daily paper, directing all Kentucky voters desiring to vote to present themselves at the Athletic Building on the morning of October 11, where the facilities would be afforded them. No mention of party was made in this notice. In fact the same nonpartisan procedure was followed with Kentucky as with all other States, the men simply being advised of time and place to assemble.

Later two gentlemen claiming to represent the Kentucky Republican State Central Committee arrived here and said the committee had been told that members of the Kentucky Democratic State Central Committee had been afforded opportunity to canvass the Kentucky voters on this station and asked for similar privileges. When informed of what had been done, and after being shown the printed notice and their attention called to the fact that it was addressed to all Kentucky voters, without reference to party, they apparently were satisfied and left here taking a copy of the notice with them.

This morning a telegram was received from Mr. Thatcher, vice chairman Kentucky Republican State Committee, claiming the authorities here had been deceived as to the character of the first delegation, and that in truth and in fact it had been a delegation of Kentucky Democrats who had canvassed the Kentucky Democrat voters, and that as a result Kentucky Republican boys had been denied the right of franchise.

Early this morning a telegram was sent to Mr. Thatcher informing him that while we would refuse to mention political parties, a notice would be published arranging for another meeting of all Kentucky voters at Great Lakes, and that his committee would be welcome at that meeting. No discrimination whatever has been shown in this case, and the procedure has been identical in every respect with all other elections conducted here. I consider Senator's NEW's criticism of me in the Senate, while doubtless based on misinformation, entirely unjust, and request, if you approve, that you take steps to have the facts stated where this injustice can be corrected.

W. A. MOFFETT.

Mr. BECKHAM. I have a letter here from Mr. L. D. Greene, who was the representative sent to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station, giving an account of his visit there and what he did. This letter, together with those that have been read, I think show absolutely the injustice done by the telegram which was read in the Senate last Monday. I send this letter to the desk and ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

FRANKFORT, KY., October 20, 1918.

Hon. J. C. W. BECKHAM,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Under a law as enacted by the 1918 session of the Kentucky Legislature providing in substance that voters who are absent from the State of Kentucky, either in the military or naval service, under certain provisions be given the right to register and vote, I was asked by the State committee to proceed to the Great Lakes Naval Training Station to procure affidavits under this law from all Kentucky boys now stationed at the Great Lakes. I requested and received from Gov. Stanley a letter of introduction, which letter in substance stated that I was to afford the Kentucky boys an opportunity to vote, and I presented this letter to the commandant at the Great Lakes Station and received most courteous treatment and consideration. The commandant at the Great Lakes directed or had published in the Official Bulletin a notice directing the attention of the Kentucky boys to the fact that I was there and in the interest of the absent voter, and that they would be given an opportunity at a certain time and place to register for the purpose of voting, and a certain building was set apart for this purpose. As I have just indicated above, all Kentucky boys who requested were given passes for the purpose of voting. I took the affidavits of all Kentucky boys who presented themselves in this building at the time set apart, both Democratic and Republican, and never at any time made any distinction between the two.

The Republican ballots, which numbered more than 50, upon my return, were delivered personally to the local Republican leaders who assured me that these ballots would be mailed to the county court clerks of their respective counties and that ballots would be sent forthwith to these boys at the Great Lakes Training Station. I never, at any time during the three or four days I was in the naval training station, made mention of the fact that I was a member of any nonpartisan commission as our Kentucky law does not provide for a nonpartisan commission. I was the only man sent to the Great Lakes and registered all voters who presented themselves for registration, and delivered their ballots to the proper authorities irrespective of whether they were Republicans or Democrats.

Very respectfully, L. D. GREENE.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, I first desire to say that in looking over the RECORD of last Monday I discover that through pure inadvertence I referred to this incident at Great Lakes in the sense that the men had voted, when I meant, of course, that they were registered, not voted. I knew very well, of course, that they had not reached the voting stage and that they were called upon to register and not to vote. With that explanation I will proceed.

Mr. President, it was not my purpose or desire, and I do not think what I said warranted the inference, that I meant what I said on Monday as a criticism of the officers in command of the Great Lakes station or of the Navy Department here. It was a perfectly natural and a perfectly proper thing for the commandant of the Great Lakes Naval Station to accept the representations of a man who presented himself there bearing credentials from the Governor of the State of Kentucky and to permit him as that representative to see the Kentucky voters and to register them, all of which he did.

But, Mr. President, the facts are exactly as I stated them, and the criticism that I made of the Governor of Kentucky I repeat, renew, and emphasize. The fact is, Mr. President, that what was done was to appoint a representative of one party to act in the registering of these votes, whereas I think the spirit of the election laws of this country, if not the strict letter of them, requires that both parties shall be represented in all matters of that kind. For instance, in the State of Indiana a Republican governor appointed representatives of the Republican and Democratic Parties, and those representatives went together to the various cantonments, to the Great Lakes station, and to all places where there are soldiers and sailors voting. They took Republican and Democratic clerks to register them, and the whole matter was done exactly as it would have been done at a regularly constituted election booth at the time of an election. That is the manner in which I think it should have been conducted in this instance, and it is because it was not so conducted that the Republicans of the State of Kentucky entered what I think was a perfectly proper protest; and that is what I put into the RECORD.

I have a further telegram from them since that time, in which they say:

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 23, 1918.

Hon. HARRY S. NEW,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Facts are exactly as stated in my former wire. One L. D. Greene, personally a clever gentleman but an active, skillful, prominent Democratic politician of Louisville, was the representative of Kentucky Democratic organization and of Gov. Stanley, candidate for United States Senator; and he went to Great Lakes, as detailed heretofore, to get Democratic and not Republican votes. He went without knowledge, advice, or consent of any Republican organization or candidate. As his credentials from Gov. Stanley were apparently couched in official and nonpartisan terms, and as doubtless the authorities at Great Lakes did not know of Gov. Stanley's candidacy and apparently were not advised thereof, it seems that they were lead to believe that Greene came there purely as the legally authorized nonpartisan representative from Kentucky to arrange for and supervise the preparation and mailing of applications for ballots of all Kentucky voters there, and in consequences accorded to Greene ample opportunity to reach voters there. However, applications for such ballots filed in Kentucky county clerks' offices show twice as many Democratic as Republican applicants for ballots from Great Lakes, although we have every reason to believe that there are as many or more Kentucky Republican voters there as there are Kentucky Democratic voters there. We believe that Kentucky Republican voters there may have better understood the fact that Greene was at the station as the partisan representative of his party than did the station authorities, and doubtless a majority of Kentucky Republican voters there were unwilling to turn in to him or through him applications for ballots. We submit that Greene should have frankly avowed that he visited Great Lakes as the representative of his party and of Gov. Stanley's candidacy, so that authorities there might have provided that representatives of the Kentucky Republican organization might have been present at the time the polling of applications of Kentucky voters was had under Greene's supervision. As stated in my former wire, where a nonpartisan commission is provided by law, as is the case in Kentucky, camp authorities should admit representatives to their camps to assist absent voters in voting exactly on the same terms, and the best plan is to fix the same day or days for this purpose, just as is now being done at Camp Zachary Taylor. The authorities at Great Lakes have wired me that representatives of this committee could now come to Great Lakes and meet voters there as we had asked, and our representatives have gone there for that purpose. Thus our position in this matter has been recognized and justified. Many Kentucky voters there whose legal residences are in towns and cities requiring registration of voters can not be reached now in time to permit them to take necessary steps enabling them to register and vote, and the Republicans will doubtless lose many votes there on this account; but we hope to yet reach voters there whose residences are in rural districts where no registration is required and to render them necessary information and assistance enabling them to vote. Many thanks for your efforts and courtesy in this matter. All we ask is a square deal, and no fair-minded Democrat would wish to deny this.

M. H. THATCHER,
Vice Chairman Republican State Campaign Committee.

LOUISVILLE, KY., October 23, 1918.

Hon. HARRY S. NEW,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Our contention has been upheld, and we have received advice from Great Lakes authorities that our representatives may now come there and reach Kentucky voters, as desired by us, and our representatives have gone there, although it is now too late to enable Kentucky voters there living in cities requiring registration of voters to complete in time their papers enabling them to vote. L. D. Greene, the representative of Kentucky Democratic organization and of Gov. Stanley's candidacy for United States Senate, according to his own statement, turned in to county clerks in Kentucky twice as many Democratic as Republican applications for ballots from Great Lakes, whereas there are certainly as many Kentucky Republican voters there as there are Democratic voters there, and as we have every reason to believe there should be more Kentucky Republicans there than Kentucky Democrats. Greene was in no wise the representative of any Republican organization or candidate. No Republican organization or candidate would select a Democratic worker to poll Republican votes, and no Democratic organization or candidate would select a Republican worker to poll Democratic votes. No doubt majority of Kentucky Republican voters at Great Lakes sensed the situation and declined to give their applications for ballots to Greene, the Democratic representative.

M. H. THATCHER,
Vice Chairman Kentucky State Republican Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEW. I do, for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I understood the Senator to say that the Democratic applications to vote were about double the Republican applications to vote?

Mr. NEW. The telegram so states.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood the Senator to be reading from a telegram. Does he dispute that as a fact?

Mr. NEW. No. I am simply reading a telegram that has been sent to me.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the telegram states that there were twice as many Democrats as Republicans applying to vote?

Mr. NEW. The telegram states, as I read, "that out of the applicants for such ballots filed in the Kentucky county clerk's office there were twice as many Democratic as Republican applicants for ballots. But the telegram also says there are as many as or more Republican voters there than there are Kentucky Democratic voters there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That involves one assertion of fact and another assertion of opinion. The assertion of fact is that there were twice as many Democrats; the assertion of opinion is that this particular gentleman thinks that there might have been as many Republicans as Democrats.

Now, has the Senator any information that this man Greene—I understand his name to be Greene—committed any fraud or did anything dishonest or was crooked at all in any respect about either receiving votes or applications? And has that man Greene had any control over these original applications of voters in Kentucky to vote? Could he have controlled it in any way in the world? Did not these applications come even before he went to camp?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, as to what Mr. Greene might, could, or should have done I do not know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not ask that question of the Senator from Indiana. I asked the question what he had done, not what he might, could, should, or would have done.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in answer to the Senator from Mississippi, I desire to say that I am not making any personal attack on Mr. Greene. I am simply saying that to have sent the representative of one party there without consultation with or the knowledge of the other party was contrary to the spirit, at least, if not to the letter of the election laws of this country, and if not contrary to the letter of them, it should be contrary to it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understood that. Now, I understand that the Senator makes no charge of any description, because he dares not, in his regard——

Mr. NEW. It is not necessary for me to make any charge.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean, in your regard for truthfulness you dare not—otherwise, of course, you dare anything, and so do I; but I mean that you dare not, in your regard for truthfulness, make any charge against Mr. Greene having been in any way corrupt or wrong-headed——

Mr. NEW. Oh, Mr. President, that is not the issue here at all, and I decline to enter into any argument on that question. I simply say that the facts here show——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, now, I want to ask the Senator one more question, and——

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I desire to ask the Senator one more question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEW. No, Mr. President; I decline to yield.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Indiana has the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I understand.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. And the Senator declines to yield.

Mr. NEW. I decline to yield for an argument; yes, sir.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wanted to ask a question, if the Senator would permit me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. NEW. I prefer, Mr. President, to complete my remarks; and the Senator can answer in his own time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well. Of course I shall not intrude upon the Senator. I merely wanted to ask if there was anything about the return of the vote——

Mr. NEW. Since the Senator merely wants to ask a question, I shall not deprive him of the privilege. The Senator may ask it. I will yield for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My question is, Does the Senator contend that there was anything incorrect about the return of the votes from those camps?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in answer to that question I will say "No." I have no contention to make upon that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought not.

Mr. NEW. But I do contend, and I renew my contention, that it was wrong in spirit to send there the partisan representative of a candidate for Senator from the State of Kentucky, even though that candidate be the present governor of Kentucky and had authority to send the man there. I do say that in the spirit of fairness, and in the spirit of justice also, to the men who are there at the Great Lakes Station as soldiers or sailors, wearing the uniform of the United States, that they should have been treated with strict impartiality, and that they were not so treated.

I have no criticism to make, as I said before, on the officers of the Great Lakes Station; I have no criticism to make on the Navy Department. My criticism goes strictly and solely to the one point, that the Republican voters of the State of Kentucky—the Republican State organization there—were not represented, were not consulted, and had no opportunity whatever to do what the spirit of the law, at least, contemplates they should have had a perfect right to do.

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to say a few words here.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair calls the attention of the Senator from Mississippi to the fact that the Senator from Kentucky had previously addressed the Chair.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me for just a moment?

Mr. BECKHAM. I wish to ask the Senator from Indiana a question before he takes his seat.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from Kentucky yield to me just a moment before he asks the question?

Mr. BECKHAM. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say that I twice served with Owsley Stanley in the House of Representatives for 8 or 10 years—I do not remember how long; possibly only 6 years. I know him to be the soul of honor. I know him to be absolutely uncorrupt and incorruptible, and I do not believe that any insinuation or intimation coming from any source whatsoever, even though it come from a United States Senator, can render impeachable a character which I know to be unimpeachable; a gentleman of gentlemen; standing upon his own shoe soles at all times, with the courage of a gentleman and the truthfulness and integrity of a gentleman.

Now, all that is charged here is that he sent a man, who, as he thought, was nonpartisan, although he was a Democrat, to receive and collect the votes at a camp; and the Senator from Indiana dares not charge that the man did not receive and collect the votes properly and rightly and truthfully. I have already challenged him to say that, and he has declined to say it. The citizens of Kentucky in those camps voted, and voted their sentiments, and their votes were counted.

Mr. WATSON. But, Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I challenge the Senator to say that they were not rightfully and truthfully and correctly counted.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait a moment; one at a time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield, and, if so, to whom?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I yield to the junior Senator from Indiana.

Mr. NEW. Mr. President, in the first place I have not charged Mr. Greene with having registered some of the Kentuckians at the Great Lakes Naval Station and denied others the right to register. I have made no such charge as that; but the point is that Mr. Greene went there as the representative of one party and one candidate without due notice to the other party and without the other party having opportunity to be represented with him. So we are in the position here of having to take Mr. Greene's word as to whether the voters were all given opportunity or not. With due respect to Mr. Greene, whose integrity I do not for a moment challenge, I do think that he himself would have been in much better position, as everybody else concerned would have been, if a spirit of fairness and justice had been shown in the first instance and both political parties given a right to be represented. That is all there is to it, Mr. President.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Again, Mr. President——

Mr. BECKHAM. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Wait just one moment; will you give me a little bit more time?

Mr. President, I now understand that the Senator from Indiana, who is notorious as a partisan Republican, does not dare make the statement that anything was wrong about the receipt or the collection of the ballots or the returns of that election?

Mr. NEW. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. NEW. I do dare to make the statement, not that there was fraud, perhaps, in the manner in which the matter was conducted——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, that is all I have asked.

Mr. NEW. But I do dare to say that the proceeding was wrong—absolutely so.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, the Senator from Indiana throws himself back upon the original idea that there ought to have been at least two men appointed, or three, and they ought to have represented both parties; but he does not make the statement, and he dare not make the statement, because his regard for truthfulness, notwithstanding his partisanship, is too great for him to make it, that there was anything incorrect or wrong in the vote or returns. He does not deny that every Kentuckian's vote cast in that camp was counted in the election in Kentucky. That is all I want to know; that is all you want to know; that is all the country wants to know. The sum total of an election is this: Were the ballots fairly delivered and fairly counted? Even in the absence of a charge that they were not, I want to say that Owsley Stanley represented the State of Kentucky in this Union, and represented it honestly and fairly, and that if there had been anything wrong in collecting those ballots or reporting them Owsley Stanley would have been the first man in the State of Kentucky to denounce it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

TWO THOUSAND QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to present a letter which I have received from the Review of Reviews. There was considerable discussion, Mr. President, as the Senate will remember, in regard to their book "Two Thousand Questions and Answers About the War." They ask me to have printed their explanation. I think it leaves the fact unchanged as to the first edition, at all events, but I ask, in fairness to them, that the letter be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave will be granted.

The letter referred to is as follows:

THE AMERICAN REVIEW OF REVIEWS,
New York, October 14, 1918.

Senator HENRY CABOT LODGE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR LODGE: I am obliged to you for your letter of October 9, relative to the book Two Thousand Questions and Answers About the War, which came while I was out of town.

We are naturally anxious that you should have the full and real facts of the episode before you rather than partial evidence that seems puzzling or contradictory to you, and perhaps you will be patient enough to read this explanation:

In June, 1918, we were first apprised of the presence of certain paragraphs in the book which should be changed, and immediately set about a revision, which continued through the summer.

In late August it seemed fairly certain that the revised edition would be ready at or about the time that unsealed circulars, with their slow handling and delivery, could get back orders. Circulars were sent out soliciting subscriptions which could only be filled from the new and revised edition, since we had had no copies of the original book for sale since June.

It was after the mailing of those circulars, from mailing agencies detached from our office, had been under way for about two weeks that the public attack on the book appeared. This was so widely noticed that it seemed best to arrange for additional reading and approval of the book (for instance, by our department of war and our department of justice), to make sure the second edition was beyond criticism, before it was finally printed. This is making the revised edition a month or more later in reaching the public than had been anticipated when the circulars were sent out in late August and early September.

In these circulars there was not, as you note, any reference to the revision of the edition. But you will appreciate from the facts given above, that, the circulars having been written and printed long before the book was publicly criticized, our book department had no criticism to answer and felt the new edition would speak for itself.

It is obviously true that the sample question as to the Lusitania warning should not have gone on the circular envelope.

Perhaps it may serve to make you understand how it came about, even while disapproving it—as we do—if we explain that the people in our book department are such fire-hot proallies that they were totally unconscious that these words could be taken as from any but patriotic Americans, for whom the question, "Did the Germans warn about the Lusitania?" must absolutely be equivalent to asking, "Did the barbarous Germans insult us by warning," etc.—the curious historical incident being the thing in mind at the time—with such certainty of our horror and detestation of the crime that followed as to assume them.

Such "legends," as you doubtless know, are sometimes printed on advertising circulars with the idea that a striking topic will arouse curiosity in the person receiving the missive sufficient to insure its being opened and examined. Other legends, not open to criticism, were used on the envelopes of other blocks of circulars sent out to distribute this same book.

In your letter of October 9 you offer to have our formal statement printed in the RECORD. We should appreciate your doing so and a fuller and more exact statement is inclosed for that purpose, if you are still inclined to do this.

Thanking you for your very evident intention to be fair to us,

Sincerely, yours,

CHARLES D. LANIER.

THE ACTUAL FACTS—"TWO THOUSAND QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS ABOUT THE WAR."

Erroneous statements having been printed concerning the publishing of the volume "Two Thousand Questions and Answers About the War," the actual facts are here set down:

In February, 1918, the book was finished by editors employed by us for this special work. Some portions of the compilation were made up of matter written and published in Australia and in free circulation there under the British censor. Of the paragraphs which were found later to be out of harmony with the policy and attitude of America, practically all were from this Australian matter. That these paragraphs did not challenge the attention of the editors before publication was due to their British origin and to their free circulation in countries of our allies.

In April the volume was published.

One hundred copies were sent by us for review to some of the most prominently patriotic Americans and to a few distinguished persons among our allies. Only commendations came in return, including one from a well-known college president, saying that he was using the book as a textbook for his lectures on patriotism and another from King Albert, of Belgium, characterizing the volume as "another example of the earnest way our great ally is proceeding to further the cause of right and justice."

Between four and five thousand copies of the first edition were sent to subscribers. Not one adverse criticism came from them to us, all this showing how easy it was to overlook 20 or 30 paragraphs out of 2,000.

In June a friendly critic brought to our attention these paragraphs.

Immediately and on our own initiative we canceled the orders for a second printing and set about a thorough revision.

The first edition had before this been exhausted; no more copies of it were ever printed. Circulars sent out two months later were therefore obviously and of necessity to distribute the revised edition.

To make sure that the revised edition should be beyond criticism we asked the French High Commission to America, our own War Department, and our Department of Justice to read, revise, and approve every word of the book as rewritten. The details of the revision were under the direction of a university professor of history obtained through the suggestion of the authorities at Washington, we having asked for the suggestion.

In September a violent public attack was made on this book, which the publishers had withdrawn from print more than two months before, this being fully known.

Accompanying the attack were pretended extracts from the book, which, by omitting sentences and context and changing the wording, gave an erroneous impression of the spirit and intent of the volume.

It was of course intended that the original edition should be 100 per cent American.

The revised edition speaks for itself.

THE REVIEW OF REVIEWS CO.

THE BLACK SLAVES OF PRUSSIA (S. DOC. 296).

Mr. LODGE. I ask to have printed as a public document a very brief pamphlet entitled "The Black Slaves of Prussia," by the bishop of Zanzibar, Rev. Frank Weston, D. D., addressed to Gen. Smuts, of the Transvaal, giving an account of German treatment of the native tribes. The article is very short, and I think it will be read with the deepest interest by all the Senate as it was read by me.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SHALL THE HUN PAY NO PENALTY FOR ALL HIS CRIMES?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I have in my hand an article printed in the Detroit Saturday Night, of date October 19, 1918, under the heading of "Shall the Hun pay no penalty for all his crimes?" This article purports to give, I think, in chronological order a number of the more important crimes against humanity which have been clearly established. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD as an answer to the following statement made by Prince Maximilian, the German chancellor, in his address before the Reichstag of two days ago, in which he said:

Our first and last thought is for the brave men who are defending themselves against superior forces, and whom we must defend against unjust charges. No one must think he can attack our army without also attacking the honor of our people.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Detroit Saturday Night.]

SHALL THE HUN PAY NO PENALTY FOR ALL HIS CRIMES?—HERE ARE SOME SAMPLES OF HIS OFFENSES, FROM WHOSE JUST CONSEQUENCES HE IS NOW BRAZENLY ATTEMPTING TO ESCAPE—IS THE WORLD TO HELP HIM DO IT?

[By N. H. Bowen.]

During the past few months there has been a marked increase in the number of people in America who believe that there should be proper steps taken, when the end of the war is reached, to punish those who are guilty of having caused it in the first place and those who have inspired or committed the awful crimes and excesses that have marked its course.

There is also in Great Britain, France, Belgium, and other allied countries a very powerful demand for legal action against the criminals, and this demand has been expressed with especial force since the recent peace flurry and the renewal of Hunnish "frightfulness" on sea and land.

The following is a very much abbreviated list of crimes committed by the Germans and their allies during the war. It is not intended to be complete—the specific cases cited are merely samples. Many heinous misdeeds, such as diplomatic lies, plots against neutrals, murders of neutral citizens, destruction of neutral property, are purposely omitted, as the list is already long enough. The purpose is to present to the reader some material on which to base a conclusion as to whether the modern Huns ought to be allowed to go their way after the war, unpunished and unmarked, like men with clean hands and souls.

DEEDS OF THE U-BOAT PIRATES.

They sank the steamer Lusitania, with 1,906 souls on board, of whom 1,134 perished, including hundreds of women and children, and then struck a medal to commemorate the heroic event.

They sank British and Swedish merchant ships in the North Sea in the fall of 1917 and shelled the lifeboats, killing many civilians. The details were reported by the Norwegian newspapers.

They sank the British ship Belgian Prince, made the survivors leave the lifeboats, which they wrecked, and then submerged with their victims helpless on the deck of the submarine. The story was told by the chief engineer of the Belgian Prince, who was rescued, 38 of his comrades being drowned.

They shelled the United States transport Ticonderoga, killing many, after the steamer was helpless, and submerged while a lifeboat with 17 survivors was tied to the submarine. This occurred after the Germans had opened the present peace negotiations.

They sank the Japanese ship Hirano Maru, drowning about 300, and fired two torpedoes at the American destroyer Sterrett, which was picking up the survivors.

They sank the Irish Channel mail steamer Leinster, with about 750 aboard, of whom only about 150 were saved. This boat is described as a coasting passenger steamer about like the boats plying from New York to Fall River. The victims were of course mostly Irish, for whose welfare the Germans have been so solicitous.

They torpedoed the steamer Admiral Gantcaume, with 2,500 refugees on board. Luckily, only 50 lives were lost. This was the first notable attack on a nonmilitary craft by a submarine, and was especially criminal because it was committed in broad daylight, when it must have been evident that the boat was crowded with civilians.

They torpedoed the steamer Falaba, and the crew of the U boat laughed and jeered at the victims struggling in the waters. Among the 111 victims was an American, L. C. Thrasher, perhaps the first to perish from this cause.

MURDER OF CIVILIANS.

They murdered 32 civilians in the Place d l'Universite at Liege. This was established to the satisfaction of the Bryce Commission of Inquiry.

They massacred about 400 civilians at Andenne, Belgium. The authority for this is the Bryce report.

They killed many scores of civilians (perhaps 200) at Dinant, many of these being "executed" in the prison courtyard.

They massacred about 50 civilians at Gerbeviller, France. (Report of French commission.)

At Haut-de-Vormont, France, they murdered a widow, Guillaume by name, 78 years old. This old woman's body was mutilated. (French official report.)

They put to death 50 innocent priests and thousands of innocent Catholics. (Statement of Cardinal Mercier.)

They killed 26 priests in the diocese of Malines alone. (Belgian official report.)

They tortured and shot the priest of Duechen, Belgium, an invalid, aged 87. (Belgian official report.)

They killed, near Beaumetz, France, two old men and an old woman, whose bodies were found by the British in a garden, with the brains hanging from their cloven skulls. The only excuse discovered was that they had refused to bake bread for the Germans. (Reported by the Bryce commission on the testimony of a British sergeant.)

They murdered 4,500 noncombatants in Serbia in August, 1914. Some were buried alive, many tortured, etc. This is the testimony of Prof. H. A. Reiss, of the University of Lausanne, Switzerland, who made an inquiry for the Swiss section of the Geneva convention.

They killed by murder, starvation, or hardships, with all the accompaniments of cruelty imaginable, thousands upon thousands of Armenians, the number having been estimated as high as half the Armenian population, totaling perhaps 4,500,000. While the Turks were immediately responsible, the Germans are morally so, having refused to interfere to save the Christian victims of their allies.

They executed a little French Boy Scout because he would not reveal information about the French troops. This was revealed by a letter found on a dead German officer, who described the boy's proud courage before the firing squad, and added the bochian comment: "Infatuated wretch! It was a pity to see such wasted courage."

MAKING WAR ON CIVIL POPULATION.

They dropped bombs on Antwerp, the first atrocity of this kind, killing many civilians.

Their warships bombarded the British summer resort towns of Scarborough and Whitby, killing many civilians.

They made repeated air raids on Paris and London, dropping bombs in purely residential sections and killing in all hundreds of civilians.

They bombed Bucharest from airplanes, killing hundreds of people, including many women and children.

They repeatedly shelled and bombed the open city of Nancy, killing many civilians.

They bombed the city of Padua, killing many civilians.

They repeatedly shelled Paris with long-range artillery, under conditions making anything but indiscriminate destruction impossible. One shell struck the church of St. Gervais during a service and killed nearly 100 people, mostly women and children.

CRIMES AGAINST WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

A Bavarian soldier wrote to a girl in Germany that at "Batonville" (Badonviller) he bayonetted seven women and four young girls in five minutes. (French official report.)

Near Ypres they shot two girls, about 6 and 8 years old, whose dead bodies were found in the upper room of a house by British soldiers. (Belgian official report and Bryce official report, evidence being given by at least two witnesses.)

They violated Belgian nuns. This is on the authority of Cardinal Mercier, who states in his letter to the cardinals and bishops of Germany, that to his knowledge there had been several outrages of this kind. He describes the evidence as "very precise," but quite naturally refused to subject the victims to a public inquiry.

At Malines, near Antwerp, a German soldier, one of a squad of eight, impaled a child of 2 years on his bayonet and carried it off down the street. This incident was sworn to before the Bryce Commission by a Belgian citizen and his wife, testifying separately, and giving the same details.

At and near Louvain the Belgian commission of inquiry reports a number of girls and women were raped, some of them by many soldiers. Corroboration of this is furnished by Gen. von Boehn, commanding the Ninth German Army, who told the well-known American correspondent, E. Alexander Powell, that he had sentenced two of his soldiers to 12 years' penal servitude each for this crime. Twelve years!

At Dinant they "executed" 12 children under the age of 6, half of them as they lay in their mother's arms. The younger children were the child Fievet, 3 weeks old; Maurice Betamps, 11 months old; Nelly Pollet, 13 months old; Gilda Genon, 18 months old; Gilda Marchot, 2 years old; Clara Gruvay, 2 years and 6 months. (Recounted by Minister Brand Whitlock, on the authority of the Bishop of Namur.)

At Bailleul, near the Franco-Belgian frontier, at least 30 women and girls were violated during eight days of German occupation in 1914. Sworn evidence of this was presented to the Bryce Commission, and Prof. J. H. Morgan, of the University of London, states that the testimony shows at least five officers were guilty.

At Bailleul "in one case, the facts of which are proved by evidence that would satisfy any court of law, a young girl of 19 was violated by one officer while the other held her mother by the throat and pointed a revolver, after which the two officers exchanged their respective rôles." (Prof. J. H. Morgan in German Atrocities; An Official Investigation.)

KILLING NURSES AND THEIR PATIENTS.

They torpedoed the British hospital ship Llandovery Castle, with 258 people, only 24 being saved. Fourteen Canadian nursing sisters were drowned. The testimony of the survivors shows that the submarine tried to sink their lifeboats.

They sank the British hospital ship Glenart Castle, about 150 lives being lost.

They bombed the American Red Cross hospital at Jouy, France, killing two and wounding nine of the hospital personnel. This hospital was plainly marked, there being a cross 100 feet along on the lawn, visible from several thousand feet in the air.

They bombed a Canadian hospital, with lighted Red Cross signs, and killed many doctors, wounded, and nurses.

They torpedoed the Russian hospital ship Portugal in broad daylight in the Black Sea, causing the death of 21 nurses, 24 other Red Cross workers, and 40 sailors. The vessel was plainly marked, and the torpedo was fired from a distance of some 30 or 40 feet only.

WANTON PROPERTY DESTRUCTION.

They shelled the famous Rheims Cathedral until it was a ruin.

They blew up the ancient castle of Coucy, one of France's most famous medieval monuments, without military reason.

In their retreats in France they have burned whole villages by the score without possible military advantage.

They destroyed a large part of the city of Louvain in an orgy of ruthlessness.

They deliberately destroyed the trees and vines of the French farmers in territory they were evacuating.

They have destroyed the farming implements of the French rural population.

They severely damaged the cathedral at Padua and destroyed priceless objects of art in that and other buildings.

They blew up the Cathedral of Noyon by set bombs on evacuating it during the past summer.

They destroyed many buildings at Cambrai by set bombs.

At St. Quentin the French captured a German officer with a wagonload of explosives which he said he had been told he had two days to distribute through the city.

TREATMENT OF PRISONERS.

Sixty-three British prisoners died of the "tree punishment," being roped to the trunk of a tree on a flat board, and left 24 to 48 hours, even a week, without water or food. (Reported by the Chicago Daily News correspondent, Edward Price Bell, on the authority of statements secured by the ladies' emergency committee of the British Navy League.)

The Germans in one prison camp trained sheep dogs to bite the prisoners. (Reported by Ambassador Gerard.)

The Austro-Hungarians punished Russian prisoners at Dunaserdagelli by screwing them up in coffins. (Sworn to by many prisoners and a Russian Sister of Mercy to a Russian commission of inquiry.)

In the earlier days of the war especially British prisoners were mistreated and insulted by the civilian population, who spit upon them and perpetrated worse outrages.

The German military and medical staffs deserted the prison camp at Wittenberg during a typhus epidemic in 1915, when 60 British and French and a still larger number of Russians died of this disease.

THE HUNS' FOUL FIGHTING.

They have poisoned wells in many localities. Proof of intent is furnished by a document captured recently, issued to the One hundred and eighth Battalion of German Infantry, and dated September 5, 1918. It says: "All wells should be poisoned."

They have been using explosive bullets against American troops. (Reported with details, by Edwin L. James, the New York Times correspondent.)

They have killed opponents who have surrendered. Proof is furnished by letters of German soldiers sent to Ambassador Gerard, protesting against this violation of the laws of war.

They have violated the use of the white flag, firing on opponents after pretending to surrender. The Bryce commission says: "There is, in our opinion, sufficient evidence that these offenses have been frequent."

They have abused the Red Cross. The Bryce commission received much testimony of this nature, and there have been several reports of similar treachery against American troops. Lieut. W. J. Harcourt, One hundred and twentieth Machine-Gun Battalion, Thirty-second Division, when in Detroit some weeks ago, described the killing of Michigan troops from a church tower at Clerges from which the Red Cross flag was flying.

They have used civilians as a screen against allied fire. (Authority of Minister Whitlock and Cardinal Mercier.)

ROBBERY AND LOOTING.

They systematically robbed all enemy countries by the Rathenau plan of exploitation, the total value of this governmental loot being, as estimated by Andre Cheradame, several tens of billions of francs.

They confiscated in Belgium alone machinery and new materials worth $400,000,000 in the first four months of the war. (Belgian official statistics.)

They destroyed sources of economic wealth in Belgium (not including destruction of private property) to the amount of $1,000,000,000. (Belgian official statistics.)

They have removed machinery from Belgian, French, and Polish factories and taken it to Germany, this being part of the avowed plan to ruin the industries of countries which would compete with Germany after the war. (Corroboration of intent given by Deputy Beumer in the Prussian Diet, February, 1917.)

They made requisitions of goods totaling over 83,000,000 francs at Antwerp before March 18, 1915, for which only 20,000,000 had then been paid. The Frankfurter Zeitung stated, December 21, 1914, that the German policy was to make payment "in such a manner that no money shall be sent to Belgium during the period of the war."

They have organized regular loot detachments in the army, the members bearing white arm bandages and special identification cards. Special attention is paid to private residences.

In violation of The Hague conventions, which Germany signed, they fined Belgium, in December, 1914, nearly $100,000,000. In November, 1915, they decreed that this fine of 40,000,000 francs a month should be paid indefinitely. A year later they increased it to 50,000,000 francs a month, and in 1917 to 60,000,000. Besides, heavy fines were imposed on towns and villages. Total fines imposed on Belgium to August 10, 1917, were $328,000,000 (Official Belgian statistics.)

They fined Lille, a city of about 200,000 before the war, $12,000,000, with an additional threatened fine of $200,000 a day for delay in complying with their demands. (In proportion Detroit would in like circumstances have been fined about $50,000,000 and $800,000 a day.) Levies of this kind were commonly accompanied by the threat to burn the town in case of noncompliance.

They stole machinery and raw material worth about $15,000,000 from the Polish city of Lodz.

The German soldiers have individually robbed and looted like the Huns and Vandals of old throughout the war, both by the testimony of the allies and of themselves.

"A thousand thanks for the beautiful things you sent me; the furs are magnificent, the rosewood furniture is exquisite, but don't forget that Elsa is always waiting for her piano." (Letter from a German officer's wife, left behind in a French chateau.)

ENSLAVEMENT AND DEPORTATION.

They have deported many thousands (100,000 as long ago as November, 1916, according to Minister Whitlock) of Belgians and forced them to work in Germany. Vernon Kellogg, formerly of the Belgian relief commission, says: "The deportations * * * were the most vivid, shocking, convincing single happening in all our enforced observation and experience of German disregard of human suffering and human rights in Belgium."

They imprisoned the directorse, foremen, and 81 workmen of Mr. Lenoir's factory at Mons for refusing to work in the service of the German Army. (Cardinal Mercier.)

They fined the city of Tournai 200,000 marks for refusing to submit deportation lists to the German commander.

They forced Belgians to work at shell making in Berlin. (Ambassador Gerard.)

They deported thousands of men, women, boys, and girls from Lille, giving them in the first instance 90 minutes to prepare for departure. (German official document.)

They deported from Lille and vicinity and from Alsace-Lorraine, to work behind the German lines, many girls from 15 years upward, separating them from their mothers and families.

They forced Belgian women to dig trenches back of the Flanders front. (Authority of Belgian legation at Washington.)

They gravely mistreated and exposed deported Belgian civilians to make them work, using torture by extremes of heat and cold. Many died or were ruined in health. (Information gathered by Belgian Government.)

They enslaved 250,000 Polish workmen who were in Germany in August, 1914, forcing them to remain and labor, and they later lured or forced 250,000 more to come. (Deputy Trompczynski, of the Prussian Diet.)

JUST KULTUR.

"September 3 (1914). Still at Rethel. * * * The houses are charming inside. The middle class in France has magnificent furniture. We found stylish pieces everywhere and beautiful silk, but in what a state. * * * Good God! * * * Every bit of furniture broken, mirrors smashed. The Vandals themselves could not have done more damage. This place is a disgrace to our army. * * * I couldn't resist taking a little memento myself here and there. * * * One house was particularly elegant. * * * I found a splendid raincoat under the staircase and a camera for Felix." (Captured diary of an officer of the One hundred and seventy-eighth Regiment, Twelfth Saxon Corps.)

The Germans "observed" the provisions of international law concerning making payment for requisitioned articles by giving fake "bons"—i. e., if a pair of horses were taken, the bon, written in German, unintelligible to the French or Belgian peasant, might be for a chicken. Later the form itself was omitted. (Vernon Kellogg.)

They circulated in Spain propaganda telling of the quantities of loot they have taken in France and Belgium, including these specifications: High-grade watches, 417; average watches, 5,016; underwear, 18,073; embroideries and women's handkerchiefs, 15,132; umbrellas and parasols, 3,705; silver spoons, 1,876; bottles of champagne, 523,000. The document also boasted that Alsatian children had been fined for refusing to study the "beautiful German language," and explained that while the Germans had fewer British prisoners than the latter have Germans, the severe treatment accorded the Englishmen had "secured a superior moral effect." (Authority of United States State Department, which investigated the document and found it of German origin.)

They broke into French tombs and committed acts of terrible vandalism. Henry Wood, United Press correspondent with the French armies, is authority for the statement that at Bray St. Christophe, Champion, Amy, Beauraignes, and Crapeaumesnil all the more promising tombs in the cemeteries had been dynamited and the coffins stripped not only of the metal lining but of any objects of silver that adorned them. Not in a single instance were the remains placed back in the tombs, and it can only be supposed that they were scattered to the four winds.

They committed in many French residences acts of bestial nature, leaving a record such as no truly civilized people would be willing to have registered against it. There is plenty of evidence of this, including that of Baroness Huard, in the American Magazine for August. Leaving her chateau in France before the German advance in 1914, she locked her personal letters in a desk, left a card testifying to their nature, and locked into one of the drawers, so that it was plainly visible, a small silk American flag. She says she now laughs at her trusting confidence that the boches would tender honorable treatment to a woman or a flag, for after she returned to the chateau the flag was found in one of the bathroom pipes, which had to be cleaned for sanitary reasons.

This was in September, 1914, two years and a half before America was in the war, and the chateau was occupied by his excellency Gen. von Kluck, commander of the western German armies, and this heinous act, which would have been unworthy of an ape, must have been committed by a member of his military family.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. From the Committee on Appropriations, I report back favorably, with amendments, the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and I submit a report (No. 596) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill; but before the request is put I desire to say that it is somewhat unusual to make such a request pending the conclusion of morning business. The bill, however, will have to go to conference, and if this session of Congress is to adjourn or recess on the 29th of October, it is absolutely necessary for great speed to be made with this bill. I hope to have a conference this afternoon.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow reports of committees to be made? A number of Senators are waiting to transact morning business.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will yield for that purpose as soon as this matter is disposed of.

Mr. LODGE. It is out of the regular order, is it not?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. If the Senator makes a point of order, that is the end of it. I have said that I would yield to him in a few minutes, and I do not think that will interfere with the matters which he has in mind.

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New Mexico and other Senators wish to make reports.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I yield for any formal matter.

Mr. LODGE. What I have in mind is merely formal matter.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I withdraw the request, Mr. President.

DISTRICT WATER SUPPLY.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 12549) authorizing and directing the Secretary of War to appoint a commission to investigate and report upon the available sources of water supply for the District of Columbia, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, which was agreed to.

HAMPTON, VA., BRANCH NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. From the Committee on Military Affairs, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 13036) transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the Board of Managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes, and I submit a report (No. 597) thereon.

I am going to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill, and in that connection I want to say that the reason I make the request is that the wounded soldiers are coming over from Europe faster than the authorities are able to find hospital facilities for them. There is an old branch home at Hampton, Va., that can be utilized for this purpose, and this bill is designed to effectuate that end.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon submits a report from the Committee on Military Affairs and asks for its immediate consideration. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISTRICT PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Mr. REED. From the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 12404) authorizing the construction of a building for the Public Health Service in the city of Washington, D. C., and I submit a report (No. 599) thereon. It is a very short bill, and I ask to have it read, after which I desire to make a request for unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the bill as requested.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to contract for the construction of an additional building for laboratory purposes and research work and for enlarging and remodeling the present animal house connected with the Hygienic Laboratory, Public Health Service, Washington, District of Columbia, at a limit of cost of $250,000.

In carrying the foregoing authorization for additional buildings to the Hygiene Laboratory into effect, the Secretary of the Treasury may enter into contracts or purchase materials in the open market, or otherwise, and employ laborers and mechanics for executing the work as in his judgment may best meet the public exigencies, within the limits of the authorization herein made.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to advise the Senate that the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds is at the present time without a chairman; but, as the ranking member of that committee, I called a meeting. A quorum did not respond, and thereupon the bill was carried to the members of the committee, and the committee polled, it being the opinion of those who were present at the meeting that the bill was an emergency measure and ought to receive immediate consideration; so that I owe it to the Senate to say that the report is of this nature.

I want to say to the Senate that the representations which have led to this action are very well set forth in a report which I have prepared, and I will read a portion of it to the Senate:

The following memorandum, prepared by the Director of the Hygienic Laboratory, will adequately explain the necessity for the proposed building:

When the request was originally made for an additional building at the laboratory it was with the view to a reasonable and proper expansion of the work of the institution. Within the past year, however, circumstances have changed so that it is no longer a question of providing space for the inauguration of additional researches, but of finding room in which to carry on the work already underway, which war conditions have made it necessary to expand in a way that was not foreseen even a year ago. The control of serums, viruses, toxins, and analogous products imposed on the service by law is exercised through this laboratory. The expansion of the work and the increase in the amount of testing required by war conditions has been such that the facilities are not adequate for carrying the work on in a proper manner. It has been found necessary to require all manufacturers to submit samples of every lot of serums required for the treatment of pneumonia and meningitis for testing prior to furnishing the same to the military forces or for sale to the civil population. Further expansion of this work in the near future will become imperative, and, unless additional space is provided, can be performed only in a most inadequate manner.

The report follows along that line. In a word, the medical authorities at the head of this work state that the war has so increased the work that it is absolutely necessary to have this building at once, and hence the bill has been reported, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DISASTER AT MORGAN MUNITIONS PLANT.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I desire to submit a report, and to make a statement to the Senate regarding it. The report is upon Senate resolution No. 317, submitted a few days ago by the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

The resolution provides for an investigation of the recent explosion in the State of New Jersey and asks an appropriation not exceeding $5,000. When the resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I, of course, wondered what the functions of the committee would be with respect to such a resolution. I recall the incident of some months ago, when the late Senator from New Jersey, Mr. Hughes, submitted a resolution authorizing an investigation of the strike upon the street railways in the city of Washington. At that time I expressed it as my belief that some committee of the Senate should inquire into the advisability of making such an investigation. The Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate at that time recommended to the Senate that the resolution should be referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia for the purpose of having that committee inquire into the necessity for the investigation. It involved an expenditure of public money, and I assume that there should be no expenditure of public money unless there is a necessity for it. The Senate at that time, however, declined to refer the resolution to the Committee on the District of Columbia, agreed to the resolution, and authorized the investigation.

When this resolution was referred to the committee I was still of the opinion that somebody should make an inquiry as to whether or not that investigation should be made. I conferred with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], who submitted the resolution. I suggested to him that I thought it was my duty to make an inquiry of the War Department to find out whether or not the War Department was already investigating the accident in New Jersey, and whether or not the facilities of the War Department were, in the opinion of the department, adequate to meet the situation. The Senator from New Jersey requested that that be not done, and stated that he did not believe that the committee should obtain any information from the War Department as to what was being done. Upon his request I have made no inquiry of the War Department in regard to this matter, and I do not know what the War Department is doing with reference to it. I have reason to presume, however, that where a catastrophe such as that has occurred the War Department, which is to receive the product of the factory, is making an investigation, and that the truth will be known, and proper safeguards will be taken in the future. Personally I do not believe there is a showing here which makes it apparent that this investigation is necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I yield to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I know that the Secretary of War is investigating. I happened to be in the Intelligence Bureau of the War Department in connection with another matter, and I know that the War Department is now investigating this question.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I am glad, of course, to get the information which the Senator from North Carolina presents. I had every reason to believe that such an investigation was being made.

Mr. OVERMAN. I believe, therefore, that I will ask for the regular order.

Mr. SMOOT. This is the regular order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Unanimous consent has never been given for the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order is demanded. Does the Senator from New Jersey present a report?

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I should like to know who demanded the regular order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina demanded the regular order, which is entirely within his rights.

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall object to the consideration of the resolution. What is the use of discussing it now? I know that the War Department has a force investigating it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The regular order being demanded, the presentation of committee reports is in order. If there be no committee reports to be presented——

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President, I am sure that the Senator from North Carolina will permit me——

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the Senator from New Mexico is making a report to the Senate. It is a verbal report and I submit that it is entirely in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not intend to prevent the Senator from speaking, but I hope this matter is not going to be discussed, because I am going to object, if nobody else does, to the present consideration of the resolution, for the reason that I know the matter is now being investigated by the War Department.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Very well. I wanted to make this statement, however. I have discussed these matters with the two other members of the committee who are here, and who, with myself, constitute a majority of the committee. They believe that the resolution should be favorably reported to the Senate. I am simply the acting chairman of the committee. Under the circumstances I deem it my duty to report it to the Senate favorably, and I so do, with the explanation which I have made.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am going to ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of this resolution, and I hope the Senator from North Carolina will not object until he hears what I have to say.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I certainly do not wish to prevent the Senator from saying whatever he desires to say, nor do I desire to be discourteous to him in any way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I shall be very brief.

Mr. OVERMAN. But I shall object, for the reason that I know from Gen. Churchill that this matter is being thoroughly investigated by a splendid force of men in the Intelligence Bureau of the War Department.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. OVERMAN. I shall object to the present consideration of the resolution, but I do not want to prevent the Senator from making his statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The presentation of reports is in order.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, do I understand that the Senator from North Carolina objects?

Mr. OVERMAN. I object to the present consideration of the resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana has the floor.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, a point of order. I did not understand that the Senator from North Carolina objected to a statement being made by the Senator from New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina some minutes ago demanded the regular order, which is the presentation of committee reports; and in the absence of a withdrawal of that demand, the Chair felt it his duty to proceed with the business of the Senate in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want to prevent the Senator from New Jersey from making a statement.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey submit a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I submit a request for unanimous consent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his request.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I do not understand what the parliamentary situation is.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The morning business has not yet been concluded, and until it is concluded it is within the power of any Senator to demand the regular order, which has been done. The regular order is the presentation of committee reports.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I have no objection to the Senator receiving unanimous consent to proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senator from New Jersey will proceed.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the reason why I requested the immediate consideration of this resolution is the fact that at the present time there is a very urgent need of a proper investigation of the storage of explosives at this plant and other plants in New Jersey by industries that are manufacturing munitions.

After the explosion at Morgans, where 7,500 pounds of trinitrotoluol exploded and destroyed buildings within a zone of 30 miles and rendered homeless practically 10,000 people, it was recognized that the storage of these explosives was a menace to the lives and property not only of the towns and cities adjacent to that plant, but within 30 or 40 miles of it. At the present time there is a reign of terror in that section of New Jersey, because it is known that in five magazines there is 150,000 pounds of trinitrotoluol, and in another magazine 600,000 pounds; and if those magazines were struck by lightning, or an explosion were created by fire, it would mean practically the destruction of half of New York City. At the present time the people in those adjacent towns are terrorized, and they are asking for an investigation in order to force the proper distribution of that explosive so that their homes and their lives may be safeguarded.

The War Department may be making an investigation; but the object of my resolution is to ask the Military Affairs Committee to inform themselves as to what the War Department is doing, and also to make an investigation in that section of the country to ascertain what is being done by the other manufacturers there to safeguard the lives of citizens, and as a basis for legislation, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] very properly suggests, in order that we may know what to do to pass the proper regulations to safeguard the people in that district.

Mr. OVERMAN. What is to hinder the Committee on Military Affairs from now making an investigation?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. This is a resolution simply authorizing them to do so.

Mr. OVERMAN. It is not necessary for them to have any such authority.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. They need the money to do it with.

Mr. OVERMAN. They do not need $5,000 to make the investigation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Possibly not. They will not use it if they do not need it. I hope the Senator will recognize the fact that this would alleviate the conditions in my State at once by assuring the people there that a committee of the Senate is going to investigate the conditions. I hope the Senator from North Carolina will withdraw his objection.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield for a statement?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to state to the Senator, as the Senator from North Carolina seems disposed to object, that the committee need not necessarily use all of the $5,000, but only so much as may be necessary to make the investigation.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senate has adopted a resolution now authorizing the Committee on Military Affairs to summon every man in New Jersey before it. The committee has full authority to summon everyone down here and to go into an investigation without passing a resolution to send a committee up there to New Jersey and spend the money of the people. When it is already being investigated by the War Department, and the Military Affairs Committee now acting under a resolution passed through the Senate can investigate it thoroughly, what is the use of passing another resolution?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The presentation of the reports of committees is in order.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: I am informed that the Military Affairs Committee wants to have the resolution offered by the Senator from New Jersey passed. Therefore, as the committee is willing to have it passed, I withdraw my objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New Jersey asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a resolution, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Senate resolution 317, instructing the Committee on Military Affairs to make an inquiry into the causes which brought about the recent disaster at the Morgan Munitions Plant, New Jersey.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN subsequently said: Mr. President, in the resolution which was passed this morning the last clause is incorrectly drawn. It provided that the sum of $5,000 should be appropriated. I ask unanimous consent to change the verbiage of the last section so as to provide that the appropriation from the contingent fund shall not exceed $5,000.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote by which the resolution was agreed to will be reconsidered and the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after line 6, it is proposed to strike out:

Resolved further, That the sum of $5,000 be appropriated from the contingent fund of the Senate to cover the expenses incident to this inquiry.

And insert:

Resolved further, That the expenses incident to this inquiry be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, the same not to exceed $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to, as follows:

Whereas the recent disaster at the Morgan Munitions Plant, near Perth Amboy, N. J., October 4 and 5, resulted in the loss of scores of lives, the destruction of millions of dollars' worth of property belonging to the United States and to private owners, and the rendering homeless of thousands of citizens: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Committee on Military Affairs of the Senate be, and it is hereby, instructed to make an inquiry into the causes which brought about said catastrophe, whether by accident or work of alien enemies or agents thereof; what precautions had been taken to prevent such an accident; what plans have been adopted, if any, with a view to the rebuilding of the plant upon a safer basis; what measures have been determined upon, if any, toward the protection of similar munition plants elsewhere.

Resolved further, That said Committee on Military Affairs be authorized and directed to supbœna witnesses and compel their attendance, to send for persons and papers, and to do such further acts as may be necessary to secure any and all information desired in the furtherance of this inquiry; and that a report of the finding of such committee shall, upon its conclusion, be made to the Senate not later than December 6, 1918.

Resolved further, That the expenses incident to this inquiry be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate, the same not to exceed $5,000.

JAIL AT GUTHRIE, OKLA.

Mr. MYERS. From the Committee on Public Lands, I report (No. 598) back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12438) authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla. I call the attention of the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] to the bill.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. It is a local bill and is in conformity with the custom in respect to such jails.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and it was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Attorney General of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to convey, by proper quitclaim deed, to the county of Logan, in the State of Oklahoma, the United States jail, at Guthrie, Okla., and all the lands set apart therewith.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5004) to fix the mileage to be paid to officers of the Army, active and retired, including members of the Officers' Reserve Corps, contract surgeons, expert accountant of the Inspector General's Department, and others connected with the Army, and also providing for reimbursement for actual expenses of travel and a flat per diem in lieu thereof; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MCNARY:

A bill (S. 5005) to assist in the demobilization of the armed forces of the United States at the close of the present war, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Lands.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. PENROSE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MARY B. RICHARDS.

Mr. LODGE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 323), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Mary B. Richards, widow of Charles N. Richards, late keeper of stationery of the United States Senate under the Secretary of the Senate, a sum equal to one year's compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

ROY WRIGHT.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (for Mr. SIMMONS) submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 324), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Roy Wright, brother of Cortez L. Wright, late assistant clerk to the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 325), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on the Judiciary, or any subcommittee thereof, be, and hereby is, authorized during the Sixty-fifth Congress, to send for persons, books, and papers; to administer oaths, to employ a stenographer, at a cost not exceeding $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with the investigation ordered by the Senate on September 19, 1918, under resolution (No. 307) authorizing and directing the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate, or any subcommittee thereof, to call for certain evidence and documents relating to charges made against the United States Brewers' Association and allied interests, and to report to the Senate thereon, and to employ an assistant clerk at a salary not to exceed $5 per diem, for a period not to exceed four months; and to incur traveling expenses in connection therewith, the expenses thereof to be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate, and that the committee, or any subcommittee thereof, may sit during the sessions or recess of the Senate or of Congress.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONED OFFICERS.

Mr. NEW submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 327), which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Acting Judge Advocate General, Brig. Gen. Ansell, be, and he is hereby, directed, if not incompatible with public interest, to send to the Senate all correspondence in that department with the Secretary of War, or any Assistant Secretary of War, or with The Adjutant General, on the question of the appointment or the commissioning of officers in the office of the Judge Advocate General.

PROPOSAL OF PEACE WITH THE GERMAN PEOPLE.

Mr. GORE. I submit a resolution and ask that it be read and lie on the table.

The resolution (S. Res. 326) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the President, in his note of October 14 to the German Government, stated that it is within the choice of the German Nation to place itself in a situation to negotiate peace, "if peace is to come by the action of the German people themselves";

Whereas the President, in his note to the German Government, under date of October 23, declares that "concluding peace and attempting to undo the infinite injuries and injustices of this war the Government of the United States can not deal with any but veritable representatives of the German people": Therefore, be it

Resolved, That the Senate advise the President as to its readiness to consent to a treaty concluding a just and acceptable peace made "with the German people themselves" through representatives elected for that purpose in accordance with the methods proposed by the President.

PRICE OF COTTON AND WHEAT.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter which I have addressed to a constituent in regard to fixing the price of cotton, and also an article which I prepared for the Forum, and which has been published in that magazine, in regard to fixing the price of wheat, together with another letter or two which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OCTOBER 17, 1918.

Hon. VICTOR HARLOW,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

MY DEAR HARLOW: I am pleased to acknowledge your letter of late date, requesting me to report as to the recent agitation in regard to fixing a price on raw cotton. I appreciate the opportunity which your request affords.

The price of cotton vitally concerns the people of our State. Oklahoma is one of the leading cotton States. Cotton is our leading agricultural product. Last year we produced 959,000 bales. Its aggregate value, including seed, was about $140,000,000. The farmers of Oklahoma planted this year for a million bales or more. They have already incurred the expense of planting and cultivating a crop which would, under favorable circumstances, have yielded a million bales. Owing to the drouth they will gather in the neighborhood of only about 400,000 bales. It has therefore cost the farmer, on the average, more than two and a half times as much to produce a bale of cotton this year as it cost last year. Notwithstanding the seemingly high price this year, many farmers in Oklahoma are, no doubt, selling cotton at less than the cost of production. Last year the average price was 25 cents a pound. This year the average price ranges around 32 or 33 cents. The agitation in regard to fixing the price of cotton drove the price down about $30 or $40 a bale. This cost the South some $450,000,000. It cost Oklahoma alone many millions.

This loss to the producers has been attended by no corresponding advantage to the consumers of cotton goods. It is estimated by high authority that cotton manufacturers are still selling the finished product on the basis of 40-cent cotton. Some estimate that at the present price of cotton fabric the manufacturers could afford to pay 50 cents a pound. I do not profess to have expert knowledge upon this point.

The fundamental objection to fixing an arbitrary price upon farm products is the fact that the cost of production can not be ascertained or even estimated in advance. The weather risk is always an important factor and is sometimes the principal factor in determining the cost of production. This weather risk can not be separated from the business of farming. It can not be ascertained in advance. Prices can not be fixed without taking this unknown factor into consideration. If too much is allowed for weather risk, it is unjust to the consumer. If too little is allowed, it is unjust to the producer. Nothing but divine foresight could ascertain it in advance. This risk does not characterize the ordinary commercial and industrial enterprise. The Government has fixed—not an arbitrary but an agreed price on iron, steel, copper, coal, etc. These prices are fixed on the basis of cost plus a profit. If prices are to be fixed at all, they ought to be fixed on that basis. No producer should be required to sell his product at less than the cost of production. He can not continue to do so and survive. If the Government, however, should determine that it is necessary to the winning of the war for producers to sell at less than cost, the farmers will, if the rule be made universal, be the first to yield and the last to complain. They only demand that equal justice which the President has called "the heart of democracy."

I need not say that the farmers are willing to bear any burden, to make any sacrifice necessary for our success. They only wish, as they have a right to wish, that such sacrifices should be fairly apportioned among all classes of their fellow citizens. Certainly public policy forbids that we should cripple or embarrass any class of producers, particularly the farmers. This would hinder the great work of reconstruction which must follow the war. In this splendid service others may play a more conspicuous but none will play a more important part than the American farmer.

There is no law authorizing any officer or department of the Government to fix a price on cotton. Cotton was at one time voted into the food-control act, but we succeeded in voting it out. Up to the middle of July the crop promised to be 15,000,000. Certain southern bankers took fright. They held a meeting in Washington on July 17, urging the Government to fix the price on cotton. On July 16 a meeting was held on the part of the southern Senators and Representatives and the commissioners of agriculture and the presidents of the leading farm organizations of the cotton States to protest against fixing a price on cotton. The farmers have been constant in their opposition to such policy. They remembered that when cotton was selling at 6 cents a pound in 1914 nothing was done by the Government to uphold the price or to help the farmer. They do not think that anything should be done now by the Government to put the price down or to hurt the farmer. The cotton farmers also saw that when the Government interfered in the one single instance of wheat, with the price of an agricultural product it reduced the price from $3 to $2.40 a bushel. However much this helped the consumer, it did not help the producer. All the tracks led into the cave, none of them led out so far as farm products were concerned. On the other hand, the packers, the millers, steel mills, the copper mines are realizing exceptional profits under agreed prices. As you know, I have always maintained a steadfast opposition to any policy of fixing the price on agricultural products. For the reasons, first, that it can not be done scientifically on account of the weather risk and other uncertain factors, and, second, because a mere guess at the price is too likely to hurt if it does not ruin the producer.

When the agitation was later commenced by Mr. Baruch and others in regard to the fixing a price on cotton, a series of meetings was held on the part of the southern Senators and Congressmen. Repeated protests were made and a committee appointed to wait on the President and to give emphatic expression to this protest. After the President's note of September 13, intimating that action might be taken, a final meeting was held and a more vigorous protest was made. This protest brought forth the assurance that nothing would be done for the present and that nothing at all would be done in the absence of extreme and violent fluctuations of price. It is our hope that this assurance will be adhered to and that the farmers may be allowed to receive that price which the law of supply and demand will award even under the present restricted operation of that law. The farmers could not if they would, and should not if they could, become profiteers. They are unorganized. The men that would fatten and batten upon the misfortune of his countrymen or the exigencies of war is a public enemy. Prosperity is not incompatible with patriotism. Our policy ought to be so fashioned as to bring all our producers out of this war prepared for the tremendous economic struggle which is to follow, and able to perform their full duty in the unprecedented task of rehabilitating the world.

With best wishes for an early and complete victory and a permanent peace, I remain,

Your friend, truly, T. P. GORE.

[From the Forum for September, 1918.]

THE WHEAT FARMERS' DILEMMA—WE MUST HAVE WHEAT—AT $2.20 A BUSHEL WILL IT GO ON THE TABLE OR IN THE TROUGH?

(By Hon. THOMAS P. GORE, United States Senator for Oklahoma.)

(The vital food question of wheat backs up to the farmer. Is he treated with justice, in view of a restricted market price, forced to buy in an unrestricted market? The able Senator from the wheat belt of the West takes up the question for the Forum.)

The price of the wheat should bear some just and reasonable relation to the price of those things which he must buy with the proceeds of his wheat. This is the farmer's point of view. The President has stated the farmer's side with characteristic clearness. In his annual message last December he declared that the farmers complain with justice that they are obliged to sell in a restricted and to buy in an unrestricted market. What is the way out of the dilemma described by the President?

First. To remove all restrictions whatever upon the price of wheat.

Second. To advance the fixed price of wheat to correspond with the general level of advanced prices.

Third. To reduce the prices of all other articles to correspond with the reduced price of wheat.

I shall merely mention a fourth, which would be a compromise between the second and the third, by advancing the price of wheat and reducing the prices of other articles until they meet upon a common level.

The application of the first remedy would require a reversal of our policy and a retracing of our steps. I am not certain that we have the power even if we had the disposition to do this. The wheat market has been dismantled by the Government and if it were a legislative possibility I am not sure that it would be a commercial possibility to restore it overnight. If this could be done, it would be the simplest and best solution.

There are those who insist that the general level of prices, particularly upon articles purchased by the farmers, should be so reduced as to correspond with the fixed price upon wheat. If this were a legal and economic possibility it might, indeed, restore the ratio between the price of wheat and the general range of prices. Should we disturb all prices and all economic relations merely in order to attempt with or without success to readjust them? Wheat was selling at $3 a bushel in Minneapolis the day the Government broke the price. That was the ratio between supply and demand. The Government reduced the price to $2.17 at Minneapolis.

It is obvious that a horizontal or a universal reduction of all prices to meet this reduction of wheat would be unavailing so far as domestic commerce is concerned. We would merely have our pains for our labor in operating this treadmill and would be fortunate, indeed, if we escaped with so light a retribution. We could make a general reduction in the prices of all domestic articles and could apply these prices to exports. We could not apply this general or horizontal reduction to the prices of imports. We could sell our own products to the allies and to neutrals at the reduced prices, but we would be obliged to continue purchases from them at market prices or rather at war prices.

We are now obliging our farmers to take less for their wheat than it is worth, and are supplying wheat to the allies and perhaps in limited quantities to neutrals at the reduced figure.

FOREIGN MARKETS TAKE ADVANTAGE OF OUR REDUCTIONS.

I am informed that neutrals purchase wheat from us upon this lower level and sell it to their own people at famine figures. We are supplying millions' worth of wheat to foreign countries at an artificially low price and are purchasing millions' worth of goods from them at war prices. And to make it worse, some of the neutral countries are manipulating foreign exchanges so as to double their advantage and double our disadvantage. This is transfusion with a vengeance.

The President made the point, however, in his veto message that if we advanced the price of wheat here it would oblige the allies to purchase wheat at the advanced price. This is undoubtedly true unless some other or better method could be found for obviating the loss. Let me say once for all that if it be necessary to the winning of the war for us to supply the allies with wheat at $2.20 per bushel, then that should be done and will be done by the unanimous voice and vote of the American people. The Government of the United States, however, should assume and should absorb the loss. The people of the United States in their public capacity should assume that loss and should not visit it upon the wheat producers in their capacity as private citizens. The United States ought to levy taxes and sell bonds enough to defray the necessary expenses of this war. A good deal of vainglory has been indulged in in this country on the action of the Food Administration in reducing the price of flour to $10.50 per barrel. Flour made in England from American wheat sells at the mill door for $7.50 per barrel. It may be somewhat inferior to American flour, but that is not the point. The Government of Great Britain appropriated $200,000,000 to compensate the millers against loss in selling flour at $7.50 per barrel. The loss is, as it should be, assumed and absorbed by the people of Great Britain in their sovereign capacity. It is not visited upon the millers in their private capacity. The difference should be charged up against the Government as an item of war expense and should not be levied as a special tribute or forced contribution upon the wheat farmers. In order to supply the allies with a relatively small quantity of wheat at a reduced price it is neither necessary nor just to subject the farmers to a loss of from $300,000,000 to $600,000,000 on their entire crop.

That the farmer is taking a heavy loss on wheat is not open to controversy. There is a pretty definite historic ratio between wheat on the one hand and corn, rye, barley, and oats on the other. Based on this ratio an expert recently computed that the price of wheat should be approximately $2.77 at Chicago. The measure recently passed by Congress and vetoed by the President proposed to make the price at Chicago $2.60. Congress undertook to apply in a limited measure the remedy of advancing the price of wheat to correspond with the general level of other prices. We must adopt one of two remedies, either to advance the price of wheat or to reduce the general range of prices. Congress preferred the former method. Nothing has been done to apply the other method in the eight months that have come and gone since the President declared that the farmers complained with justice of the existing situation. When the President made that declaration in December last, he, of course, had in mind the price of wheat which the farmer was then obliged to take and the price of other articles which he was then obliged to buy.

WHEAT THE ONLY ARTICLE THAT HAS NOT ADVANCED.

Wheat is perhaps the only article in the United States the price of which has not advanced during this interval. The farmer pays a higher price for everything now than he paid in December. He receives the same price for wheat. The Government fixed the price upon wheat harvested during the season of 1917 at $2.20 per bushel. The Government also fixed the price upon wheat harvested during the season of 1918 at $2.20 per bushel.

If the price fixed by the Government upon wheat for 1917 was not too high, then the price fixed by the Government on wheat for 1918 is not high enough; or if the price of wheat fixed by the Government for 1918 is high enough, then the price fixed for 1917 was too high. I say this because the cost of producing wheat in 1918 was much greater than in 1917. Seed wheat advanced, farm labor advanced, farm implements advanced. Every item of cost save only soil depletion has advanced. Let us state a few comparative figures.

In 1915 denim overalls sold for $9 a dozen wholesale; in 1918 the same overalls are quoted at $29.50. In parts of the great wheat belt farm wages in 1917 were $35 per month plus board; in 1918 they were $65 a month plus board, and the demand could not be supplied even at this figure. Binding twine has gone up from 9 cents in 1914 to 20 cents in 1917 and 26 cents in 1918. A 14-inch gang plow was $65 in 1914, $85 in 1917, and $200 in 1918. In 1914 a 7-foot self-binder retailed for $150; in 1917 the same binder retailed for $185; and in 1918 for $250. The ordinary farm wagon in 1914 cost $75. In 1917 it cost $95, and in 1918 it cost $150. These are retail prices.

The farmer has been obliged to pay a higher price for the articles necessary in producing the crop of 1918, as compared with the crop of 1917, yet he is obliged to accept exactly the same price for wheat in 1918 that he received in 1917. If the farmer complained with justice in December last, he has much greater cause to complain to-day. Something has, indeed, been attempted, but nothing has been done to remedy this injustice.

WHY SINGLE OUT THE FARMER TO TAKE THE BURDEN OF LOSS?

The President once said, with equal truth and felicity, that equal justice is the heart of democracy. In 1917 the millers received a net return upon their investment 300 per cent in excess of their return in 1914.

The farmer has to pay the increasing prices of meat, transportation, labor, and utensils, clothing, etc., out of the diminished proceeds of his wheat, diminished from $3 to $2 per bushel by a proclamation of the President. The farmer can not see in these different attitudes of the Government toward different classes of industry that equal justice which constitutes the heart of democracy. The wheat farmer is not quite satisfied with the honeyed assurances that bread will win the war and that wheat is the one farm product which is indispensable to the triumph of American arms. Is the wheat farmer to be punished rather than rewarded in accordance with the indispensable character of his service?

The wheat farmer who insists that the injustice admitted by the President should be rectified does not thereby brand himself either as unpatriotic or as a profiteer. His patriotism should not be the occasion of his sacrifice or enslavement nor the excuse of denying him that equal justice which is at once the heart and the crowning glory of democracy.

In his veto message the President avowed that personally he did not believe that the farmers of the country depend upon the stimulation of prices to do their utmost to serve the Nation and the world. The President then with less implied praise averred that if the farmer should be given an advance of price, the laborer would require an advance in wages. If the advanced price had registered itself in the advance of flour—which it would not—it would have cost each wage earner in the country $2 a year for himself and for each member of his family. The object of the existing law, under which the President fixes the price of wheat, was not to hammer down the price of wheat in the farmers' hands, nor to afford any other class the benefit of such enforced and arbitrary reduction. It was not intended that the Government should take from three to six hundred million dollars a year from the wheat producer and bestow that amount as a gratuity upon the consumers of this or any other country.

Fortunately the law itself leaves us in no doubt upon this point. Section 14 of the present act, the price-fixing section, empowers the President, whenever he finds "that an emergency exists requiring stimulation of the production of wheat," to fix a reasonable guaranteed price in order that the producers of wheat might have the benefit of such price and "in order to assure such producers a reasonable profit." The object of the law and the lawmakers was not to deprive the farmers of a reasonable profit and to oblige them and the Government to rely solely upon their spirit of patriotism. The lawmakers placed their reliance upon constant economic forces and proposed to guarantee the wheat producers a reasonable profit. The lawmakers did not believe that they could stimulate the production of wheat by reducing its price.

HOW THE LOW-FIXED PRICE OF WHEAT WORKS.

The wheat farmer is now asking nothing more than that the purpose and object of the legislature be realized and that the injustice be corrected, which is inseparable from a system which obliges him to sell in a restricted and to buy in an unrestricted market. This injustice should be corrected as a matter of practical wisdom and a matter of sound public policy. Whatever is unjust is unwise. But we are not obliged to rely upon this necessary implication. There is particular proof of it in this special instance not only in our own country but in other belligerent countries. During the summer of 1917 the Department of Agriculture carried on a nation-wide patriotic campaign to secure the planting of 47,000,000 acres of winter wheat. They failed. The acreage secured was only 42,000,000, the same acreage that the farmers voluntarily planted in 1914, when there was no other encouragement than the prospect of a reasonable return. Rye presents an interesting contrast and should teach a valuable lesson. The farmers increased the acreage of rye of 4,400,000 to more than 6,000,000, an increase of nearly 50 per cent. The price of wheat is fixed; the price of rye is not fixed. Wheat brings only $2.20, 50 or 60 cents less than it is worth. Rye, which is worth less intrinsically, has sold as high as $3. The farmer can produce more rye to the acre than wheat. The farmer can produce more pounds of corn to the acre than wheat, and can, under existing market conditions, receive more per bushel, notwithstanding wheat is worth more intrinsically both as feed and as food. This possibility tends to make the farmer plant corn, rye, barley, oats, and other products the price of which is unrestricted, rather than wheat the price of which is restricted. The farmers in my State—Oklahoma—have sold wheat at $1.90, and with the proceeds have purchased corn as high as $2.20. One farmer put it in an epigram, saying that price reduction has put wheat in the trough and corn on the table. Millions of bushels of wheat have been fed to live stock which ought to have been conserved as a precious resource for ourselves and for our allies. Thus price regulation, like vaulting ambition, sometimes overleaps itself.

A farmer who has fertile lands and favorable seasons and who can rely upon from 20 to 35 bushels per acre can realize a profit on wheat at $2.20. The average yield per acre sown in the United States last year was 11 bushels. This means that millions of acres yielded only 4, 5, and 6 bushels. As a rule our available surplus for export is produced in the semiarid country, where the yield per acre is low. These men can not produce under existing high costs at $2.20 per bushel. If they disappear from the equation our average production per acre would indeed increase, but there would be a dangerous diminution in the total output. In times of crisis it is the total output that counts.

We ought to profit by the experience, and especially by the blunders of all other warring nations. In 1916 the French Government fixed the price of wheat too low. The French peasant shook his head. The results were disappointing to the State. In the effect the keen, logical French mind read the cause. They did not repeat it; they profited by the blunder. The Government price of wheat in France to-day is $3.95 per bushel. The average yield per acre in France exceeds by 5 or 6 bushels the average yield in this country. Switzerland is paying for wheat a guaranteed price of $2.70 per bushel.

WHAT WILL BE THE PRICE OF THE 1919 CROP?

What is to be done with respect to the crop of 1919? At this time no guaranty whatever has been offered. Mr. Hoover has indicated a purpose to buy and hold several hundred million bushels of wheat grown this year against a possible shortage next year.

Can the farmers be expected to produce a normal crop against a carry-over of such proportions? It will be remembered that Mr. Hoover and Secretary Houston appointed an agricultural advisory committee of 24 members, and is of a quasi-public character. It meets from time to time in Washington. Its traveling expenses are paid by the Government. The members are paid $10 per day for their expenses while in the Capital. During the early days of the present month it met and deliberated upon the price of wheat. Seventeen members were present and voting. They unanimously recommended that the price of wheat for the 1919 harvest should be fixed at $2.46 basis, Chicago. There was, indeed, one dissenting vote, but this member changed his vote to make the result unanimous. This is the official authoritative advice of the agricultural advisory committee selected by Mr. Hoover and Secretary Houston. Will this advice be heeded? It was given after Mr. Hoover had sent a cablegram from London to the committee advising them not to advise an advance. It was given after Mr. Hoover's assistant and after Mr. Hoover's attorney had both appeared in person and advised the advisory committee not to advise an advance.

In his veto message the President committed himself to the administrative method of agreeing upon a price rather than the establishment of a fixed price by legislation. I have no doubt that the American wheat farmer will be reasonably content if the President should act upon the advice of this advisory committee and fix the price for next year's crop at $2.46 basis, Chicago. This will not, indeed, amend the injustice for the current year, but it will secure a larger measure of justice, a more near approach to equal justice for the season of 1919. May I be permitted to cite once again Mr. Lincoln's declaration that no question is ever settled until it is settled right. This wheat question has not been settled right. It has not been settled at all. It involves an injury which is admitted by the President, an injury which is felt and suffered by the farmers.

I do not know whether every act of injustice disturbs the harmony of the moral universe. I do not know whether every act of injustice calls for ultimate retribution. I do not know whether we could hope for greater success in suspending the great law of retribution that James II experienced in suspending the penal laws of England. I do know that a great nation embarked upon a war for liberty, humanity, and democracy can not afford to violate the great fundamental principles which underlie and which give vitality and value to these high and mighty objects. The United States can not afford to be unjust to the humblest citizen who has a right to invoke the protection of its flag.

WALLACES' FARMER,
Des Moines, Iowa, October 9, 1918.

Senator GORE,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I inclose herewith an editorial which appears in Wallaces' Farmer of this week. It deals with a matter which seems to me to be of very great importance to the Nation, and I hope you may be able to find time to read it through.

With best wishes, I am,
Very truly,
HENRY C. WALLACE.

[An editorial from Wallaces' Farmer of Oct. 11, 1918.]

THE FOOD ADMINISTRATION AND THE PRICE OF HOGS.

On November 3, 1917, Joseph P. Cotton, Chief of the Meat Division of the United States Food Administration, issued a statement relative to the price of hogs. This statement concluded with the following:

"As to the hogs farrowed next spring, we will try to stabilize the price so that the farmers can count on getting for each 100 pounds of hog ready for market thirteen times the average cost per bushel of the corn fed into the hogs. Let there be no misunderstanding of this statement. It is not a guaranty backed by money. It is not a promise of the packers. It is a statement of the intention and policy of the Food Administration, which means to do justice to the farmer."

This announcement of policy by the Food Administration followed a series of conferences between Food Administration officials and representatives of the live-stock interests. These conferences were instituted by Mr. Hoover. The stockmen were told that there was a pronounced shortage of hogs and a great necessity for increase in the amount of pork produced; and the announcement of the Food Administration which we have just quoted was made to assure the farmers that they could increase the number of hogs and be sure of getting a fair price for them.

The investigations made by Wallaces' Farmer during the preceding three years had shown conclusively that when the price of hogs dropped below the value of 11.67 bushels of No. 2 corn on the Chicago market production decreased, and that when the price was maintained for a reasonable length of time above this figure hog production increased. This law governing the production of hogs has maintained our hog supply in the United States for 60 years past. It was recognized by our Food Administration when adopting the policy indicated in the statement we have quoted

The Food Administration wanted more than normal production. Therefore it stated its policy to be to see that hogs marketed this fall and winter should bring more than the 60-year average price, measured by the value of the corn fed to them. In other words, it agreed to try to see that hogs would sell for a premium amounting to the value of about one bushel of corn per hundred pounds of hog.

This announcement of the policy of the Food Administration was given the widest publicity. It was printed in bulletins. It was printed in the agricultural papers throughout the United States. It was used by speakers for the Food Administration and by professors of agricultural colleges and by county agents everywhere. It was used to convince the farmer that he would be fully justified in increasing the number of hogs grown this year. He was told that he could depend upon it that they would sell for a price above the cost of production, a price which would give him a profit.

The hog producers of the country were reassured by the implied guaranty of the Food Administration. They had been producing hogs at a loss; that is, they could have sold the corn and hogs separately and have received considerably more money than by feeding the corn to the hogs. But the policy announced by the Food Administration promised to put an end to this unprofitable business. If carried out in good faith the farmers could pay whatever price might be necessary for corn and feed it to the hogs with the assurance that they would not lose by the operation. Consequently the farmers increased the number of sows bred last fall, and this year they raised about 8 per cent more hogs than the year before. It is interesting to note that this is the exact increase which Wallaces' Farmer predicted might be counted upon in case a price ration of 13 bushels of corn to 100 pounds of hog should be fixed.

The Food Administration proposed a business deal with the farmers: If the latter would increase the number of hogs the Food Administration proposed to see to it that the hogs should sell for a price which would give the farmers a slight profit. The farmers accepted this in good faith and made the increase asked for. Now the time has come for the Food Administration to carry out its part of the bargain. Last spring's crop of pigs is now beginning to go to market, and it is these pigs which the Food Administration said it would try to make sell per hundred pounds for the value of 13 bushels of the corn fed into them.

It would appear now, however, that the Food Administration does not want to carry out its share of this bargain. Recent announcements are made to the effect that the average packer's drove of hogs will sell in Chicago during the month of October for about $18 per hundredweight. This is about $2.50 per hundred-weight less than the Food Administration promised to try to make them sell for. It is also announced that a minimum price of $15.50 will be maintained on hogs. During the next five months hogs must sell at from $19 to $22 per hundred pounds to maintain the implied guaranty of the Food Administration; and the suggestion that the minimum be maintained at $15.50 is a most astonishing one to come from anyone conversant with the principles of hog production.

Apparently the Food Administration is going to try to justify this cut of two or three dollars per hundred pounds on hogs. It is going to try to make people believe that it is an approach to its guaranty. When the plan was adopted the price of No. 2 corn at Chicago was taken and the price of hogs at Chicago. Now, it is proposed that instead of taking the price of corn at Chicago, the price will be taken on the farm. This is Jew bargaining with a vengeance. If the price of corn is to be taken on the farm, why should not the price of hogs be taken on the farm? Such juggling will make a difference of 50 cents to $1 a hundred less on the price the farmer gets for his hogs. Also it is proposed to consider the price of corn only during the five months juse preceding the date the hogs are marketed, instead of the price during the 12 months preceding, as was understood when the guaranty was made. In short, the Food Administration proposes to change the terms of the contract to suit its own notion after the farmer has carried out his engagement in good faith.

The Food Administration can not justify a repudiation of its agreement by saying that to carry it out would make the price of pork too high for our allies to pay. If it is necessary for us to furnish pork to our allies for less than the cost of production, then the loss should be taken out of the Public Treasury and not out of the pockets of the hog producers.

Last week the Food Administration held a conference with the packers. In the newspaper report of this conference it is stated that the new scale of prices was submitted to the packers, and that "all the packers opposed the plan vigorously, but finally agreed to support the administration by doing their best to maintain the minimum of $15.50 per hundred for the average drove for the heavy packing season." This is as entertaining as a play. In the future, how can anyone accuse the packers of lack of public spirit when, after vigorous protest, they finally agree not to buy hogs for less than $4.50 below what they are worth?

The Food Administration has not announced what it proposes to pay for November hogs. On the basis of $18.50 for the average packer's drove, the farmer will get for the hogs marketed during the month of October from five to ten million dollars less than they would have received if the price had been fixed on the basis which the Food Administration on November 3, 1917, announced that it would try to follow. From the talk of a $15.50 minimum, it would appear that an effort will be made to buy hogs still cheaper in November, especially as the corn price is being beaten down.

There are two angles from which to approach this whole question. First, is it necessary to maintain or increase our hog production in order to furnish food for our Army and Navy and for our allies? If it is necessary, then the policy which the Food Administration is following is suicidal. Production can not be maintained on any such policy, to say nothing of increasing it. The farmers are the most patriotic class of people in the Nation, but they can not continue to feed corn to hogs at a loss of from one to three dollars per hundred pounds. In addition, if the Food Administration does not make a sincere effort to make good on its promise of November 3, 1917, there is danger that the farmers of the country will refuse to take seriously any further suggestions of the Food Administration. How can they?

If, instead of trying to maintain production, it is the plan of the Food Administration to restrict consumption, and thus make the hogs we do produce go around, and especially meet the needs of the boys in the armies and navies of our allies, that is another matter. We don't know whether it can be done or not. Mr. Hoover has been very skillful in such matters, and by the institution of meatless weeks or wholly restricting home consumption of pork products it is quite possible that he may be able to get as much pork across the seas as is needed. The danger of this meatless program is that it tends to still further reduce production. The farmer sees the demand for his product being curtailed, and he tries to trim his sails accordingly, by producing less and less of it, just as is true in any other line of production. As we look at it, this whole policy which is being followed by the Food Administration is fraught with very great danger to the Nation and to our allies as well.

The second angle from which the matter may be approached is the question of doing justice to the farmer and hog producer. In his address delivered in July, 1917, President Wilson said:

"A just price must, of course, be paid for everything the Government buys. By a just price I mean a price which will sustain the industries concerned in a high state of efficiency, provide a living for those who conduct them, enable them to pay good wages, and make possible the extension of their enterprise, which will from time to time become necessary as the stupendous undertaking of this war develops. We could not wisely or reasonably do less than pay such prices. They are necessary for the maintaining and developing of industry, and the maintaining and developing of industry are necessary for the great task we have on hand."

President Wilson, in this definition of a just price, did not specifically mention agriculture, but it is fair to assume that he believes the Nation should be as just to the farmer as to the manufacturer, and that it should pay the farmer as well as the manufacturer a just price for his products.

On this basis the price of hogs is not just, nor has it been just for more than a year past. Ever since August of 1917 hogs have sold for from one to six dollars per hundredweight less than the average price of the past 10 years, measured by cost of production. Until the United States entered the war the price of hogs was above the average of 10 years past. Shortly after the Food Administration began its work of "stabilization" the price of hogs dropped below the cost of production, and has remained there ever since. Not until last month did hogs sell for the average price of the past 10 years as measured in cost of production, and no sooner did they reach this point than this hammering process began, and now they are again below this cost.

Is there any good reason why the farmer should be denied that just price for his product which the President stated should be paid by the Government and which has been granted with such a lavish hand to all other classes of producers but the farmer? Is not the farmer doing his share to win the war? Has he not furnished more than 25 per cent of our fighting men? Is he not working longer hours than any other class in the entire Nation? Has he not responded unselfishly to every appeal which has been made to him? Who, then, can justify a policy which denies to the farmer President Wilson's just price for his products? And who can justify the repudiation of a fair and square business deal made with the farmer?

—

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, October 29, 1918.

Hon. JESSE DUNN,
Oakland, Cal.

MY DEAR DUNN: I am pleased to acknowledge the receipt of your favor of late date. Your letter was characteristic. It was of the heart of oak. It was a mirror in which was reflected the principles and feelings of a real Democrat. It proves that real democracy still has real champions on this side of the sea. It proves that the sacred rights of freedom of thought, freedom of conscience, and freedom of speech still have defenders worthy of the undaunted heroes who wrested these rights from embattled tyranny and who sought to transmit the blessings of liberty to their children's children.

I appreciate the indignation which you express toward the action of certain Oklahoma City and Muscogee politicians on the occasion of the recent State convention. The action of those politicians proves that real democracy has real enemies on this side of the sea. It proves that freedom of thought, freedom of conscience, and freedom of speech may still be assassinated by those who make lofty protestations of friendship. They kiss but to betray and crucify. These men are unworthy trustees of the great legacy of liberty handed down to us by the great revolutionary fathers. There will soon be in France some four and a half million brave American boys, who are fighting the battles of democracy. They are shedding their blood, they are sacrificing their lives to make freedom of thought, freedom of conscience, freedom of speech sacred and respected everywhere. There are those on the Muscogee and Oklahoma City delegations who would take advantage of the absence of these defenders to stab democracy in the back, and who would, if they could, murder in the house of their friends freedom of thought, freedom of conscience, and freedom of speech. When these champions of human rights and human liberty return, victory crowned, they will, I doubt not, rebuke those who have in their absence profaned the sanctuary of freedom and desecrated the temple of democracy. When it becomes necessary, if it becomes necessary, for these returning soldiers to reestablish and reconsecrate the inalienable rights of American freemen, "what so poor a man as Hamlet can do, I shall do to assist them." I have stood by these rights—freedom of thought, freedom of conscience, and freedom of the press—without variableness or shadow of turning. Indeed, I voted against the censorship of the press, notwithstanding it was asked by the administration and notwithstanding the freedom of the press has sometimes been abused to abuse me.

I was impressed with your remark that the Oklahoma City incident, intended by the politicians to injure me, would probably in the long run inure to my advantage. Arbitrary power like ambition often overleaps itself. Tyranny does not always succeed in cutting the tongue out of its victims. The people are just and react against injustice. I received from different parts of the State numerous protests which tend to verify your prediction. They show that the great heart of the people still beats in consonance with liberty and justice. You will be interested to hear two or three of them. I received the following telegram from southwest Oklahoma the evening of the incident to which you refer:

"Your enemies are all there. The population absent are your friends. Their high-handed schemes will wreck them. Don't worry."

The following is from an attorney in Delaware County:

"I wish to state to you that, politically, I am for you regardless of what a half handful of politicians do, or fail to do, and I assure you that the 'boys up at the forks of the creek' who live close to nature and recognize rugged honesty, will again cover your opposition with a load of ballots they will never get from under."

The following is from a farmer in Payne County:

"I have been requested to write you because we recognize in you a friend of us farmers. We'll stand back of and vote for you, and condemn the actions of the bone-head delegates; they do not represent us in such sentiment. We are for you; they only represent the little two-bit bone-headed town-corner politicians; they have raised a storm among your friends which augurs," etc.

I will not name the Oklahoma city politicians who were the chieftains in this little episode. They are well known to you. They hold high counsel and direct the destines of the State, the world, and the universe in the lobby of the Lee Huckins Hotel. No one knows better than you that these politicians have always been against me, and that I have always been against them. The issue has always been squarely joined. They seem determined to keep me under perpetual obligation to them. I am sometimes puzzled to determine whether my friends or my enemies render me the greater service. The best way for Democracy to win is to be Democratic. The Daily Oklahoman has given aid and comfort to these politicians. Indeed, the Oklahoman has charged me with three separate and distinct acts, any one of which, had I been guilty, ought to have subjected me to the unmeasured condemnation of all patriotic American citizens. The Oklahoman afterwards felt constrained to withdraw and correct these charges. Unfortunately an assassin can not heal a wound merely by drawing the dagger out of the wound. Truth sometimes pursues at the snail's pace error which flies on the eagle's pinions.

These charges were so fantastic that they would be laughable if they were not so serious, and if good men were not sometimes misled for the moment by such misrepresentations. Since you were once chief justice you will be interested and amused at the character of these fanciful indictments returned by no other grand jury than malice or the imagination. No truth-loving man would make such charges without evidence. No justice-loving man would credit them without proof.

The first count. The Oklahoman charged in flaming headlines that Senator GORE was giving aid and encouragement to draft resisters. This charge was based on the following telegram, which I sent to an unknown constituent. I quote his telegram first.

[Western Union telegram.]

DAUGHERTY, OKLA., September 17, 1917.

Hon. T. P. GORE,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Read your letter State chairman. I travel over Oklahoma. I am confident farmers are with you 20 to 1. Please wire if there is a law that exempts men from any Army service who belong to a religious organization whose tenets are against going to war. Please quote authorities. Answer.

(Signed) H. CAPIRS.

[Western Union Telegram.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., September 18, 1917.

H. CAPIRS, Dougherty, Okla.:

Your telegram received and greatly appreciated. Am quoting the following from section 4 of the draft act: "Nothing in this act contained shall be construed to require or compel any person to serve in any of the forces herein provided for who is found to be a member of any well-recognized religious sect or organization at present organized and existing and whose existing creed or principles forbid its members to participate in war in any form, and whose religious convictions are against war or participation therein in accordance with the creed or principles of said religious organizations."

(Signed) T. P. GORE.

This is the only correspondence or communication which ever took place between us. At his request I quoted without comment the letter of the law. He asked a civil question and I returned a civil answer.

Count 2. The Oklahoman charged that I was circularizing the State with literature to the effect that the draft law was unconstitutional and that those held under it were being subjected to unlawful imprisonment, and that notwithstanding the Federal court had sustained its constitutionality citizens were not obliged to obey it. This was not only not the truth; it was the reverse of the truth. I not only did not circulate such literature; I did not think that the draft law was unconstitutional. On the contrary, I thought that it was constitutional. The power of Congress to raise armies is plenary.

Count 3. The Oklahoman charged that in an address which I delivered before the Southern Commercial Congress in New York on October 17 of last year, while the liberty loan drive was in progress, I opposed the liberty loan drive and discouraged its success. The contrary was the truth. In that address I urged the success of the liberty loan in the strongest possible terms. I declared that it was as much a public duty to buy bonds as to pay taxes, and that the failure of the drive would be almost as great a calamity as the loss of a battle. I am of course powerless to prevent the Oklahoman or any other publication from imputing acts and motives to me which are the reverse of the truth. Innocent men have sometimes been put to death under the belief that they were guilty. Their innocence has afterwards been discovered, but even that was not quite competent to raise the dead.

You wonder why these charges are repeatedly made by what ought to be a responsible publication. The motive I shall one day more fully discuss. The campaign furioso on the part of the Oklahoman was launched against me during the latter part of August last year. It continued with increasing fury for eight or ten weeks. It is still revived intermittently. I was one of the three members of the Finance Committee who signed the minority report filed on August 13 of last year. We urged higher rates of taxation upon war profits than those recommended by the committee. The committee itself afterwards revised its rates and raised the revenue some half billion dollars or more. I expected the profiteers to resent my action in signing this report. I expected the publications which were under their influence and control to launch against me such a campaign. I was not disappointed. There has been method in their madness. This was the real motive back of a good deal that was said and done. Other excuses, of course, have been assigned. They could not afford to assign the real motive.

I need hardly say that the general charge was made that I was not backing the administration in the prosecution of the war. People had a right to differ before the war was declared. They had no right to differ after war was declared as to the vigorous prosecution of the war to a satisfactory conclusion. Our whole future and our whole destiny are embarked in this enterprise. We must succeed. We can not afford to fail. I have said before that no man can be a friend of mine who does not favor the winning of the war. No man can be a friend of mine who is not willing to make whatever sacrifices are necessary to the winning of the war. As to that supreme end there must be no difference. As to the best means of winning the war differences of opinion are not only inevitable, they are desirable. They are desirable in order to test out—in order to detect whatever flaws there might be in any proposed plan, a plan on which might depend the fate of civilization itself. Lloyd George once said that he wanted a variety of counsel. Let me quote a very impressive and appropriate passage from a speech which he delivered when a member of the Asquith cabinet, while speaking of Premier Asquith:

"But we have had our differences. Good heaven! What use would I have been if I had not differed? I should have been no use at all.

"Freedom of speech is essential everywhere. The councilor who professes to agree with everything that falls from his leader has betrayed him.

"You want a variety of opinions expressed, and the height of wisdom is in knowing not what counsel to give, but which counsel to take. What I want to know is this: Whether the Nation in a great war wants counselors or mere penny-in-the-slot machines?"

I voted for some 18 or 20 big war measures. I shall not tax you with details, but will merely say that I voted for every dollar which has been asked; I voted for every bond issue which has been requested; I voted for the loans to the allies; I have voted to lay a heavy tax on war profits: I have voted for every measure to make our boys efficient fighting men. But this essential fact is, of course, obscured by the circumstance that I happened to vote for or against three or four other particular measures or amendments. Let me instance one or two.

I voted for Senator OWEN'S amendment to the food-control bill to create an auditing committee on expenditures. Taxes were so high, expenses were so heavy, that I felt in duty bound to provide every possible safeguard to prevent waste and to insure economy. Has not time vindicated Senator OWEN'S foresight in offering this amendment and the prudence and patriotism of those who supported this amendment?

I paired against the food-control act, although I approved of certain of its provisions. In a letter to the people of Oklahoma under date of September 29, 1917, I used the following language: "Who can answer the farmers' argument that if he must sell in a controlled market he should be allowed to buy in a controlled market?" Just two months and five days later, in his annual message to Congress, President Wilson said: "The farmers, for example, complain with a great deal of justice that while the regulation of food prices restricts their incomes, no restraints are placed upon the prices of most of the things they must themselves purchase." I thought in July, when the food-control bill was under consideration, that the very things would happen that President Wilson declared in December had happened and of which he said our farmers complained with justice. I did not wish to vote to place the farmers in that situation. No one knows better than yourself to what extent the farmers of Oklahoma assisted in sending me to the Senate. As chairman of the Senate Committee on Agriculture, I felt under a double obligation to protect the farmers against a threatened injury or injustice. The farmers desire only that "equal justice" which the President has called "the port of democracy." A sense of injustice is a terrific force. I feared a political reaction.

I also voted for an amendment to the food-control bill to stop the use of grain in the manufacture of beer. I realized that the people would have to go on short rations and have wheatless days. This was necessary, and the people complied cheerfully. I voted, however, that while women and children were denying themselves bread, others should be required to deny themselves beer. I was outvoted. The administration at that time held a contrary view. I am pleased to say, however, that my vote has been vindicated by the recent presidential order prohibiting the brewing of beer on and after the 1st of next December.

I voted for the so-called Borland eight-hour amendment. I voted to require the Government employees in Washington to do eight hours' work for eight hours' pay. At present they receive eight hours' pay for only seven hours' work. This makes every eighth employee a supernumerary. It requires one-eighth more employees than would otherwise be necessary. It increases this demand for labor by 14 per cent, notwithstanding the present scarcity of labor. These employees have comfortable quarters, and their pay is certain without regard to floods or droughts or the vicissitudes of the seasons. I felt that in time of war they might well be required to render eight hours' work for eight hours' pay, and that the taxpayers were entitled to a dollar's worth of service for every dollar's worth of salary. Many of our people work long hours and work in sunshine and in shower to pay the taxes out of which the Government pays eight hours' wages for seven hours' work. I do not pretend that my views were infallible on this subject; I only maintain that I had a right to my views and had reasons which I honestly considered sufficient.

I also voted for the "work-or-fight" amendment. The administration was not opposed to this policy. It was opposed, as I understand, to the embodiment of the policy in legislation. I had to meet the question, however, as a legislator; I had to bear my own responsibility. I therefore voted for the "work-or-fight" amendment. It seemed to me that while millions of our boys were risking their lives and many of them sacrificing their lives in France, we could not afford to do less than to require those that remained behind either to work or fight. I did not vote to take from labor the right to strike where there was an agreement to submit the dispute to arbitration and abide by the award. I was not willing to enslave labor; on the other hand, I was not willing even to seem to discriminate in favor of slackers in this country as against our boys who are fighting on the fields of France.

I voted to try out the volunteer system before resorting to the draft. No one can deny that there are many points in favor of the selective draft. The volunteer, however, had been one of the chief figures in American history. One of our most cherished traditions was bound up in this system. The volunteers had waged and won every war of the Republic. They had led us without fail to victory and to glory. The heroism of our volunteers, like that of our drafted men, is to-day crowning American arms with unsurpassed splendor. One's wisdom might possibly be questioned for voting to stand by so ancient and so sacred a tradition, but it would hardly seem to lay his patriotism open to impeachment. In respect to the last draft law, I thought that 18 years was too low an age for the draft until it was dictated by military necessity. Both France and England had done what I tried to do. Every Member of the House from Oklahoma but one voted to exempt youths of 18 years from being drafted until all eligible men above that age had been drafted. I had the Senate excuse me from voting upon this measure. My colleagues were of the opinion that a unanimous vote would have a salutary effect upon the people in Germany and Austria. I was anxious to do everything that I could to convince those people of our united purpose to wage this war vigorously to the end. I could not get my consent to vote for a measure which would draft your son and which by its express terms exempted me and other Senators and Congressmen merely because we were officeholders. I have done my duty as I saw it.

Since we are in this war I think we ought to make a good job of it. Some say, "To Hell—ena with the Hohenzollerns!" I am not so much concerned with their habitat as I am to see them stripped of their power to baptize mankind again with blood and with fire.

It had been my hope to get down in the State before the campaign closed. The "flu" is raging there, however, and the Senate Finance Committee is having continuous sessions on the war-revenue bill. I shall indulge the hope to visit you again one of these days in Oakland.

With best wishes, believe me, very truly.

THE FARMERS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON PACKING PLANTS AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES,
Washington, D. C., October 16, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS P. GORE,
Chairman Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR GORE: For the sake of fair play and in order that all the interests affected by the packers and those interested in the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission regarding the meat-packing industry may have their side of the case presented, the Farmers' National Committee on Packing Plants and Allied Industries instructs me to request that you would have the inclosed statement regarding the hearing of the Senate Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We trust that you will have this done.

Yours, very truly,

BENJAMIN C. MARSH,
Executive Secretary.

STATEMENT BY THE FARMERS' NATIONAL COMMITTEE ON PACKING PLANTS AND ALLIED INDUSTRIES.

The hearings held by the Senate Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry on Senate resolution 221 with regard to the packing houses brought out a most extraordinary condition of affairs and demonstrated the very close connection between the packers, the financial interests, and the chamber of commerce. The evidence brought out indicated the great influence of the financial interests and the packers in the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and, even more important, the close comradeship existing between the large aggregations of business centering in the chamber of commerce.

Officials of the chamber of commerce claim that the membership represents the major portion of the business interests of the country. The secretary of the chamber of commerce submitted the most recent list of its associate and individual members, confined to firms, corporations, and individuals who are members of affiliated organizations and have no vote. Associate members pay $100 or multiples thereof annually; individual members, $25 annually. At present there are approximately 7,000 individual and 2,000 associate members. About 1,050 commercial organizations, with an underlying membership of over 500,000 corporations, firms, and individuals, constitute the voting membership of the chamber. The financial statement of the chamber of commerce shows that they expended last year about $420,000. It was brought out that the chamber of commerce was started in 1912, and a budget of $100,000 a year was underwritten shortly after by the organizers. Special interest attaches to the chamber of commerce in connection with the investigation being held by the Senate Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry because of the widespread publicity given to the report of the Federal trade committee of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States on the Federal Trade Commission, with direct reference to the report of the Trade Commission on the meat-packing industry.

Mr. Rush C. Butler, chairman of this Federal trade committee, stated, "I have stated broadly that the business interests of the country, as represented in and by the chamber of commerce, took exception to the spirit in which the commands of Congress are administered by the Federal Trade Commission." Mr. Butler admitted that most questions of importance are submitted to the referendum of the membership of the chamber; that being the policy, that it take no action without a referendum, but that this report was not submitted to referendum, and that it is at present nothing more than a report of the Federal trade committee to the board of directors of the chamber, though probably with the authority of the chamber, it has been widely circulated. The Federal trade committee was organized in February, 1915, and Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, who had previously been president of the chamber, was appointed chairman of this committee, which office he held until his reelection to the presidency of the chamber. Another member of the original Federal trade committee was Mr. Joseph P. Cotton, of New York, who now represents the Food Administration on the meat end of the packing industry. Mr. Cotton resigned in 1916. Mr. Butler admitted that he originated the idea of making a report of the Federal Trade Commission while Mr. Heney was conducting his investigation. Mr. Butler, who has been attorney for Cudahy & Co., severely criticized the Federal Trade Commission for an alleged change in their method of dealing with the business interests of the country, and particularly for their action in turning over facts which they had found by searching the correspondence of men engaged in the packing industry to the Department of Justice. He admitted that from what he had gathered from the newspapers he thought that the conduct of Mr. Heney in the investigation of the packing plants was not right, and took steps to secure a report on the Federal Trade Commission on this account, while the Federal trade committee had conferences with the Federal Trade Commission to try to get them to change their methods of investigation and their attitude toward business. Mr. Allen Walker, of New York, local manager for the chamber of commerce, had charge in 1915 of raising a guarantee fund, and sent out a letter appealing for subscriptions to business men. Probably this letter was sent to many, including the big list of 100 who were asked to pay at least $1,000 a year each for three years. In this letter he said: "The point I wish to make—and I did not mean to dwell on it at such length—is that some of our corporation interests do not seem to grasp that this is their game—it is their pie." On the list of large contributors were the following: Thomas F. Ryan, Harry A. Wheeler, Great Northern Railroad, Armour & Co., Swift & Co., International Harvester Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., Southern Pacific Railroad, New Jersey Zinc Co., John D. Rockefeller, jr., and the International Paper Co. Mr. Walker explained that the policy of the chamber was to make known that the contribution of any corporation was to be considered in the light of "business patriotism," and that it could not in any sense serve any individual or group interests. Following Mr. Walker's testimony, Mr. Butler expressed his opinion that he "didn't know whether the packers wanted the investigation of themselves or not." Mr. Butler stated, "I have no interest in ascertaining the facts about the packers." He admitted that the packers had been doing a great deal of advertising recently, but claimed that if they spend $25,000,000 a year in advertising they could not counteract the effect of the methods of investigation and the activities of the Federal Trade Commission. He said, "I think this kind of publicity given out by an administrative agency of the Government of the United States does such irreparable damage that the expenditure of $25,000,000 by the packers in a single year in any manner that they see fit to spend it would not begin to repair the injury." Mr. Butler, when asked whether the widespread editorial policy of opposition to the Trade Commission's report on the meat-packing industry might not have been affected by the extensive advertising of the packers, replied, "Well, if so, that would indicate a degraded press. I do not believe it is quite as bad as that." Mr. Butler asserted that the chamber of commerce wishes the commission to stay right where it is, but stated that the President has the power of removal of commissioners and the power of appointment, and that there are two vacancies on the commission now, and if he appoints men of the right viewpoint that the commission will be one of the greatest instrumentalities for usefulness in the country.

Mr. Ed. C. Lasater, a large live-stock grower of Texas, submitted sworn affidavits to the committee showing many instances of the sale of putrid and unfit meat by the five big packers; the indictments found against them, and the fines levied upon them. An item having appeared in the Washington Star to the effect that the farmers were disturbed by the Federal Trade Commission's report, Mr. George P. Hampton, managing director of the Farmers' National Headquarters and legislative representative in Washington of several farm organizations, testified that his knowledge of the farmers and their attitude convinced him that the farmers of the country were overwhelmingly behind the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission. Mr. Hampton referred to the organization of the Farmers' National Committee on Packing Plants and Allied Industries, including representatives of most of the leading farm organizations of the country, whose specific purpose is to secure the carrying out of the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission as to the packing plants.

Most extraordinary testimony was given by Mr. Harry A. Wheeler, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States and vice president of the Union Trust Co., of Chicago. Mr. Wheeler was asked whether there was any basis for the mention in the report of the Federal Trade Committee of the Union Trust Co. as one of the banks in which close business associates of the packers were directors, and specifically whether the Union Trust Co. was in any way connected with the Armour interests. He denied categorically that it is so connected, and stated that the commission was not at all justified in including the Union Trust Co. in this list and referring to it as an Armour institution, saying: "It is an assumption such as they have made in many instances, not proven by fact." Chairman Colver, of the Federal Trade Commission, presented proof that the Union Trust Co., with which Mr. Wheeler has been connected for 10 years, was directly tied up with the Armour interests. Mr. George E. Marcy, president of the Armour Grain Co., and for many years the active man of the company, Chairman Colver showed, is a director of the Union Trust Co. J. Ogden Armour owns 64 per cent of the stock of the Armour Grain Co., and other members of the Armour family own 22.9 per cent.

Naturally Mr. Wheeler objected to having the Union Trust Co. brought into the discussion, perhaps anticipating that the facts would be brought out, though he admitted that he was acquainted with the board of directors and the principal stockholders on the Union Trust Co., and said, "None of the Armours are in any way connected with the bank." Before the Senate Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry Mr. Wheeler, president of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, criticized the procedure of the Federal Trade Commission on the ground that it was un-American and improper, though there was no question of veracity or accuracy involved in its report on the meat-packing industry. Mr. Wheeler, on the stand, as also the report of the Federal Trade Committee of the Chamber of Commerce, criticizing the Trade Commission, did not attempt to deny any of the facts or charges of the Federal Trade Commission, and the chamber's charge of ex parte proceedings by the commission was completely disproven by the testimony brought out before the committee, that the packers sought to secure immunity if they gave testimony and declined to waive immunity, under which conditions it would have been manifestly improper for the commission to have permitted them to give any testimony. Mr. Wheeler refused to answer the questions of Senators as to whether the Chamber of Commerce denies the specific charges against the packers made by the Federal Trade Commission. Chairman Colver submitted detailed figures on the loans made to the packers by the banks in which the packers have a controlling interest, even if not officially represented on the directorate. The total loans outstanding about June 30, 1917, was $37,527,351.15 in one series of banks. Much of these loans were made without any security. The Union Trust Co. on June 30, 1917, had loans outstanding to packers of $674,531.27.

The action of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States in publishing a report criticizing the Federal Trade Commission, a governmental agency created by act of Congress, and the methods adopted by this powerful association of business men through a small committee to attempt to break down the effect of the commission's findings in investigations ordered by the Congress and by the President, is, so far as our knowledge goes, without a parallel in the history of the United States. The testimony adduced before the Subcommittee on Agriculture and Forestry showed the charges of the Federal trade committee of the Chamber of Commerce that the Federal Trade Commission has exceeded its jurisdiction, has acted without judgment, has skipped from one investigation to another, has played politics, has been too fast and too slow to be utterly without foundation in fact.

The testimony shows the sinister, insidious effort on the part of the trade committee of the Chamber of Commerce to attribute to the Trade Commission the recommendation that the Government should take over and operate the packing plants, through a maliciously cunning reference to the trade committee's report on the findings and recommendation of a committee appointed to report on the policies to be pursued by the Government with regard to the meat and packing industries. The animus of the officials of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States is clearly shown in the statement of Mr. Butler, chairman of the committee of the chamber of commerce which criticized the Federal Trade Commission: "I would conceal evidence from Mr. Heney, and if the commission should come along and say it was behind Mr. Heney I might take some other view of it," as also in his statement with reference to a charge made by the Trade Commission: "Well, I would not believe it if it was in the report if that report was prepared by Mr. Heney." Mr. Butler gave a very strange twist to the ordinary conception of justice when he said: "If a small part of what the commission says about the packers be true, the Department of Justice ought to be impeached, from the Attorney General down." This expressed opinion of the spokesman of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States about the Department of Justice is peculiarly repugnant to the patriotic citizens of our country engaged in this world struggle in view of the fact that none of the officers of the chamber of commerce appearing before the Senate committee questioned in any way the accuracy of the findings of the Federal Trade Commission, but bitterly criticized the commission for turning over evidence the commission found in its inquiries to the Department of Justice. Stripped of its verbiage, the report of the chamber of commerce constitutes a desperate effort to break down the effect of the careful, painstaking, and reliable investigations of the Federal Trade Commission, especially the investigation of the packers.

Among the striking facts brought out before the Subcommittee on Agriculture were the complicated methods by which all the common stock of Sulzberger & Co. was turned over to the following trustees: A. Barton Hepburn, chairman of the Board of Directors of the Chase National Bank; Charles F. Sabin, president of the Guaranty Trust Co. of New York; Harry Bronner, of Hallgarten & Co.; Max Sulzberger and Germon F. Sulzberger, representing the Sulzberger interests, through a system of modified coercion which establishes a record for shady financial transactions. The keen interest of the packers in the organization of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States was shown in a letter put in the hearing, written on June 28, 1915, by Mr. Louis F. Swift to Mr. L. A. Carton regarding a luncheon he attended at the request of Mr. De Frees, attended also by Mr. John Fahey, then president of the National Chamber of Commerce, Mr. Forgan, Mr. Thomas Wilson, and quite a few others. In this letter Mr. Swift said: "Was considerably impressed with the program which they have laid out, and if they make any request for financial assistance would like to know about it. They maintain a bureau in Washington and evidently get a good hearing on all legislation." The story was brought out at the hearing of the interview which Mr. Wheeler had with Mr. Rockefeller with reference to enlarging the scope of the publication of the chamber of commerce called "The Nation's Business."

Mr. Ivy Lee, press agent, testified that the money for this was to come from Mr. Rockefeller's fund. A letter from Mr. Wheeler of the National Chamber of Commerce to Mr. Rockefeller was considered "privileged" and was not produced. The close connection, almost complete identity, between the financial interests and the packers was completely established at these hearings. It is true that the packers, as such, have contributed a relatively small amount of the total budget or to the guarantee fund of the Chamber of Commerce of the United States. But it is true in finance as in geometry that things that are equal to the same thing are equal to each other. This identity of interests is determined to prevent, if possible, at least by all means within its power, to postpone the carrying into effect of the recommendations of the Federal Trade Commission with reference to the meat-packing industry, which would strip the five big packers of those privileges they now enjoy, which have enabled them to build up an overwhelming monopoly not only in the production and supply of meat but to reach out for control over the major part of the food supply of the country. Mr. Heney remarked, "Armour advertises that there isn't any food supply that he does not handle," while Commissioner Murdock, after his investigation, came to the conclusion, "So now there is not practically any activity in the way of distribution of food and care of the public, as represented in the average town by stores, that the packer is not invading." Not only that, the packers, intrenched and fortified by carefully built-up undoubted privilege in this country now seek world domination in foodstuffs, so that the Federal Trade Commission was constrained to say of this aspect of international activity: "This urgently argues for a solution which will increase and not diminish the high regard in which this people is held in international comity." Such a solution the Federal Trade Commission has found and recommended, and the plan of the big five packers and the Chamber of Commerce of the United States to prevent the solution is a challenge to the American people. Production must be made free and unmonopolized.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 23d instant approved and signed the act (S. 3470) to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I call up the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in the Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the Senate consider the committee amendments when reached.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Virginia asks unanimous consent that the formal reading of the bill be dispensed with and that the committee amendments be first considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senator from Virginia, who has charge of the Appropriation bill, to yield to me for a moment in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the passage of a very short bill, which came over from the House, having been unanimously reported there, and which has been unanimously reported by the Senate committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will yield to the Senator, with the understanding that the matter is not debated and that the Appropriation bill will not be displaced.

TELEPHONE AND TELEGRAPH SERVICE.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12976) providing for the protection of the users of the telephone and telegraph service and the properties and funds belonging thereto during Government operation and control. I will state that it is very necessary that this bill shall pass. The Government can not properly operate the telegraph and telephone until it is passed.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill, which was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That whoever during the period of governmental operation of the telephone and telegraph systems of the United States by the Postmaster General, under the act of Congress approved July 16, 1918, and the proclamation of the President dated July 22, 1918, shall, without authority and without the knowledge and consent of the other users thereof, except as may be necessary for operation of the service, tap any telegraph or telephone line, or willfully interfere with the operation of such telephone and telegraph systems or with the transmission of any telephone or telegraph message, or with the delivery of any such message, or whoever being employed in any such telephone or telegraph service shall divulge the contents of any such telephone or telegraph message to any person not duly authorized or entitled to receive the same, shall be fined not exceeding $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.

SEC. 2. That whoever shall steal, purloin, embezzle, or without authority destroy any money, property, record, voucher, or valuable thing whatever of the moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of any telephone or telegraph system operated by the Postmaster General under the act of Congress approved July 16, 1918, and the proclamation of the President dated July 22, 1918, shall be fined not more than $5,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 3. That whoever shall receive, conceal, or aid in concealing, or shall have or retain in his possession with intent to convert to his own use or gain any money, property, record, voucher, or valuable thing whatever of the moneys, goods, chattels, records, or property of any telephone or telegraph system operated by the Postmaster General under the act of Congress approved July 16, 1918, and the proclamation of the President dated July 22, 1918, which has been embezzled, stolen, or purloined by any other person, knowing the same to be embezzled, stolen, or purloined, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, and such person may be tried either before or after the conviction of the principal defendant.

SEC. 4. That whoever shall forcibly break into, or attempt to break into, any telephone or telegraph office, or any building used in whole or in part as such telephone or telegraph office, of any telephone or telegraph system operated by the Postmaster General under the act of Congress approved July 16, 1918, and the proclamation of the President dated July 22, 1918, with intent to commit in such telephone or telegraph office or building, or part thereof so used, any larceny or other depredation, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both.

SEC. 5. That whoever shall assault any person having lawful charge, control, or custody of any money or property of any telephone or telegraph system operated by the Postmaster General under the act of Congress dated July 16, 1918, and the proclamation of the President dated July 22, 1918, with intent to rob, steal, or purloin such money or property, or any part thereof, or shall rob any such person of such money or property, or any part thereof, shall be imprisoned not more than five years; and if in the effecting or attempting to effect such robbery he shall wound such person having custody of the money or property, or put his life in danger by the use of a dangerous weapon, shall be imprisoned not more than 10 years.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, before proceeding with the reading of the bill, I desire to call attention to the fact, which every Senator realizes as well as I do, that the appropriations are reaching enormous proportions. The Committee on Appropriations has felt deeply the responsibility resting on them. They have made an earnest effort to prevent any useless appropriation, but at the same time they have felt in duty bound to report favorably every dollar necessary for the successful prosecution of the war.

In carrying out this purpose the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate had its labors greatly lessened by the extraordinary labors of the House committee. I desire to take advantage of this opportunity to say that during my service in this body I have never seen abler, more energetic, more intelligent, more faithful work than has been performed on this bill by Mr. SHERLEY, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations of the House. He has made our duties much lighter than they would have otherwise been, and he has given us information which it would have taken us a long time to acquire. As I said, our duties have been made much lighter by the burden which he has carried and carried with wonderful success.

Now, Mr. President, I have only this suggestion to make: We are all anxious to get the business of the Senate in such a shape that we can adjourn or recess Congress on the 29th to the 12th day of November. We hope to have a conference this evening on this bill. It has to go through conference and to final passage before the 29th of this month. I will not ask and will not suggest that any Senator forego any criticism or any investigation, but I am anxious that the bill should be facilitated and speeded up as much as possible, consistent with a proper guarding of the public welfare.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. OVERMAN in the chair). The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, at the top of page 2, to insert:

ALIEN PROPERTY CUSTODIAN.

Subsection (c) of section 7 of the "trading with the enemy act," approved October 6, 1917, is amended to read as follows:

"(c) If the President shall so require any money or other property including (but not thereby limiting the generality of the above) patents, copyrights, applications therefor, and rights to apply for the same, trade-marks, choses in action, and rights and claims of every character and description owing or belonging to or held for, by, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of, an enemy or ally of enemy not holding a license granted by the President hereunder, which the President after investigation shall determine is so owing or so belongs or is so held, shall be conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or the same may be seized by the Alien Property Custodian; and all property thus acquired shall be held, administered, and disposed of as elsewhere provided in this act.

"Any requirement made pursuant to this act, or a duly certified copy thereof, may be filed, registered, or recorded in any office for the filing, registering, or recording of conveyances, transfers, or assignments of any such property or rights as may be covered by such requirement (including the proper office for filing, registering, or recording conveyances, transfers, or assignments of patents, copyrights, trade-marks, or any rights therein or any other rights); and if so filed, registered, or recorded shall impart the same notice and have the same force and effect as a duly executed conveyance, transfer, or assignment to the Alien Property Custodian so filed, registered, or recorded.

"Whenever any such property shall consist of shares of stock or other beneficial interest in any corporation, association, or company or trust, it shall be the duty of the corporation, association, or company or trustee or trustees issuing such shares or any certificates or other instruments representing the same or any other beneficial interest to cancel upon its, his, or their books all shares of stock or other beneficial interest standing upon its, his, or their books in the name of any person or persons, or held for, on account of, or on behalf of, or for the benefit of any person or persons who shall have been determined by the President, after investigation, to be an enemy or ally of enemy, and which shall have been required to be conveyed, transferred, assigned, or delivered to the Alien Property Custodian or seized by him, and in lieu thereof to issue certificates or other instruments for such shares or other beneficial interest to the Alien Property Custodian or otherwise, as the Alien Property Custodian shall require.

"The sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim to any money or other property heretofore or hereafter conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or required so to be, or seized by him, shall be that provided by the terms of this act, and in the event of sale or other disposition of such property by the Alien Property Custodian shall be limited to and enforced against the net proceeds received therefrom and held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee whether this amendment will permit the Alien Property Custodian to take the assets of the German insurance companies which have been placed in his custody and reincorporate them into another corporation for the transaction of business by and through his authority?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator from Virginia will allow me to answer, this amendment does not touch that question. There are only two features embraced in the amendment. It does not broaden the power of the act, but makes the act workable on two questions that were not covered by the original legislation.

One is the question of shares of stock. The present law is amply sufficient to allow the Alien Property Custodian to sell the shares of stock owned by an alien enemy in his actual possession. Of course, they can be obtained from the alien enemy in this country who owns the stock, and it has been done, but where the alien enemy lives in Germany and has stock which would be kept in Germany, the original law was not broad enough to allow him to sell the stock certificate without having actual possession of it. This allows him to sell the stock certificate, notwithstanding the fact that they have not the actual possession. That is as far as it goes on that feature.

The other proposition of the amendment relates to patents. An act has already been passed authorizing the leasing and control of these patents by the President, and he has assigned it to another department of the Government; but the Alien Property Custodian has found that there are a large number of plants that he has taken over and has a right to sell unquestionably under the act, but their ability to carry on the business is dependent on the German patents. He finds he can not sell the property for what it is worth unless he sells the patent right along with it and disposes of the patent at the same time, for after the war is over there would be no value to this particular property. That is largely true in cases of chemicals and in cases of radio plants. The radio plant at Sayville, Long Island, is involved in this question. I understand it is to be sold, and in all probability the Navy Department itself will buy the plant at the sale, to be taken over by the Government. That plant is controlled by a certain patent right on aerial service, and if they proceed to sell the plant without conveying title to the patent right to the instruments they might involve the Government in many lawsuits after the war is over. They seek to avoid that now and to sell along with the plant the patent right in this country. The sale has not been made, but it is supposed that the Government itself will buy it. Secretary Daniels has written Senator MARTIN this letter in reference to that matter:

NAVY DEPARTMENT,
Washington, October 22, 1918.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN, U. S. S.,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: The department indorses the proposed amendment to the trading with the enemy act now pending with your committee. The department is engaged in the operation of a large number of wireless stations, both ship and shore, and the purpose of the department contemplates a large increase in the number of stations operated by it. It is essential that the department be allowed to operate these stations without interference by any patent litigation, and particularly without such interference at the hands of aliens. The proposed amendment to the act will effectively dispose of patent litigation after the war by German patent owners, at least to a large extent.

Sincerely, yours, JOSEPHUS DANIELS.

In order to accomplish the real purpose of the original trading-with-the-enemy act it is essential, in order that these plants may be sold and a clear title not only to the machinery but to the patent rights be obtained, that the President be given this additional power. That is all there is in the amendment. There are only two things involved: One is the right to sell the shares of stock that happen to be in the possession of an alien enemy in Germany where the Government does not get actual possession of them, and to sell them on the books; and the other is to give to the Alien Property Custodian, or whomsoever the President may designate, the right to sell the patent rights along with the machinery. It has been represented to the committee that, as a war necessity, this is of very vital importance, especially at this immediate time. I think one of the most severe blows that this Government has delivered against the German Empire is that we have taken over alien-enemy property; that we are proceeding to dispose of it, and that we do not propose to allow aliens to continue to do business.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I quite agree with the Senator from Alabama, so far as the control of the alien-enemy property by the Alien Property Custodian is concerned, but what I am interested in is this: It has been stated—and I understand that in the other House an amendment was introduced containing such a provision—that the Alien Property Custodian could take insurance corporations and trust corporations and operate them as Government corporations; in other words, as Government trust or Government insurance companies. Under this amendment providing for the transfer of the shares of these companies where the majority of the stock has been owned by German citizens if a majority of stock can be transferred to the Alien Property Custodian or otherwise, does not that mean that the International Trust Co. and several insurance companies can be taken over by the Alien Property Custodian and run by him, and would not they be Government companies?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No. I think the Senator from New Jersey is entirely mistaken about that. I think he is correct, however, about a bill pending in the other House. There was a bill pending in the House before the Interstate Commerce Committee that contained vastly larger powers than anything involved in this amendment. That bill may have gone—I am not sure about it—to the point which the Senator indicates. This amendment, however, does not go to that point. What this amendment does is to authorize the President—he is acting through the Alien Property Custodian—to sell the shares of stock. It does not authorize the Alien Property Custodian to take these companies over or to run them, but it merely authorizes him to sell the stock; in fact, he has that authority now as to any stock that he can get hold of in this country.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If he can make a delivery.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If he can make a delivery; but of course a large amount of that stock is owned by alien enemies in Germany, and the certificates are there.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Yes; I understand that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. There is no reason in the world why we should pass a bill that affects the rights of alien enemies living in the United States and not be just as drastic in our methods as to alien enemies living in Germany. That is all there is in this proposition. We have already passed a law that affects the alien enemy who lives here, whom we can put our hands on, but the man who has got a gun in his hands on the other side is getting off.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. But you can provide that the stock shall be sold to American citizens.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This is only an amendment to that act. All of these provisions are already in the other act. It does not change the terms. The Senator remembers the amendment that he was largely responsible for having placed in the original act. That applies to this amendment just as well as it does to that act.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. The only thing that I am trying to ascertain is whether the Alien Property Custodian anticipates, or has anticipated at some future time, taking the assets of these German insurance companies and starting a Government insurance company. All I want to be assured of is that there is no hidden language in this amendment which will permit him to do that, for I am opposed to Government insurance.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I can say to the Senator that I do not know what the purposes of the Alien Property Custodian may be; I know nothing about that; but I can assure the Senator that there is no language in this amendment that will authorize that to be carried out. That is as far as I can go.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). Without objection, the amendment is agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "District of Columbia," on page 5, after line 21, to insert:

MILITIA.

The unexpended balances of appropriations made in the District of Columbia appropriation act for the fiscal year 1918 for the Militia of the District of Columbia are made available for the same purposes for the fiscal year 1919.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Shipping Board," subhead "Emergency shipping fund," on page 7, line 11, after the word "appropriated," to strike out:

Provided, That obligations incurred hereunder may be met from appropriations made or to be made for the construction of ships.

So as to make the clause read:

2. For the acquisition or establishment of plants suitable for shipbuilding or ship maintenance or repair, or of materials essential thereto, and for the enlargement or extension of such plants as are now or may be hereafter acquired or established, authority is granted to enter into contracts or otherwise to incur obligations for not to exceed $34,662,500 in addition to the amounts heretofore appropriated.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Department of State," subhead "Salaries," on page 8, line 11, after the words "Department of State," to strike out "$136,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

For employees in the Department of State, $200,000: Provided, That not more than six persons shall be employed hereunder at a rate of compensation exceeding $1,800 per annum.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Foreign intercourse," on page 9, line 1, after the words "United States," to strike out "$125,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

Clerks at embassies and legations: For the employment of necessary clerks at the embassies and legations, who, whenever hereafter appointed, shall be citizens of the United States, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Treasury Department," subhead "Bureau of War-Risk Insurance," on page 12, after line 4, to insert:

For the purpose of the payment of allotments made by the enlisted men or the payment of family allowances under Article II of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, an enlisted man reported as missing in action shall be considered as occupying a pay status until his actual status has been determined by proper official authority of the department in which the man served or is serving: Provided, That payments authorized hereunder shall not continue for more than one year.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 13, to insert:

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Interstate quarantine service: For cooperation with State and municipal health authorities in the prevention of the spread of contagious and infectious diseases in interstate traffic, including the sanitation of areas adjoining military and naval reservations and Government industrial plants, in order properly to safeguard the health of the military forces and Government employees, including necessary clerical help in the District of Columbia and other personal services, $500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Quarantine stations," on page 14, line 14, after the words "direction of the," to strike out "Construction Division of the War Department" and insert "Supervising Architect of the Treasury," so as to make the clause read:

The foregoing construction work under "Quarantine stations" shall be performed under the supervision and direction of the Supervising Architect of the Treasury.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 14, after line 15, to insert:

CREDIT IN ACCOUNTS.

Relief of Maj. (now Lieut. Col.) Charles J. Nelson: The accounting officers of the Treasury are hereby authorized and directed to allow and credit in the accounts of Maj. (now Lieut. Col.) Charles J. Nelson, Quartermaster Corps, United States Army, the sum of $327.04, being a shortage in his accounts caused by embezzlement of Quartermaster funds by Mack A. Steel, civilian clerk (temporary), who was acting as chief clerk in the finance office at Fort Logan H. Roots.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "War Department," on page 15, after line 1, to insert:

CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

For purchase of professional and scientific books, law books, including their exchange, etc., including the same objects specified under this head in the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $800,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Miscellaneous," at the top of page 16, to insert:

Claims occasioned by explosions and fire at plant of the T. A. Gillespie Co., Morgan, N. J.: The Secretary of War is authorized to consider, ascertain, and determine the amounts due on all claims for damages to and loss of private property occasioned by the recent explosions and fire at the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Co., at Morgan, N. J., and report the amounts so ascertained and determined to be due the claimants to Congress within six months from the date of the approval of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Military Establishment," subhead "Contingencies of the Army," on page 17, line 12, after the date "1919," to strike out "$100,000" and insert "$200,000," so as to make the clause read:

For all contingent expenses of the Army not otherwise provided for and embracing all branches of the military service, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $200,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Quartermaster Corps," subhead "Pay of the Army," on page 24, after line 5, to strike out:

The President is authorized, through the Secretary of War, during the existing emergency, from time to time, to requisition or otherwise take over for the United States any lands, including the buildings thereon and their equipment, or any temporary use thereof, required for hospital facilities. He shall ascertain and pay, from the proper appropriation, a just compensation therefor. If the compensation so ascertained be not satisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined, and shall be entitled to sue the United States in the United States district court for the judicial district where the property is situated to recover such further sum as, added to the 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation: Provided, That hospital facilities shall be so situated as to provide for the care of patients as near the place from which they entered the Army or Navy as practicable, and that the facilities shall be in every case in keeping with the number of men in the service from the different States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 16, to strike out:

Shooting galleries and ranges: For shooting galleries and ranges, including the same objects specified under this head in the Army appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, $183,186.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 20, to strike out:

For the acquisition of land at Fayetteville, N. C., for an artillery range, $1,500,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 25, after line 22, to strike out:

For the acquisition of land at West Point, Ky., for an artillery range, $1,600,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, on page 29, at line 22, I desire to offer an amendment, and I ask permission of the Senator from Virginia that I may offer it at this time, because I am obliged to attend a meeting of the Finance Committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am very glad to agree that that course shall be followed in this instance, because I know that the Senator is needed in the Finance Committee. I therefore ask that the rule be varied so that he may offer his amendment now.

Mr. LODGE. In offering the amendment I merely wish to say that it arises from the great destruction caused to State roads by Army traffic in the neighborhood of Army posts. At several places in my State where there are Army or military posts roads, which were fine roads, they have been destroyed by motor trucks, and this amendment is to give authority to the Government to pay a portion of the expense of repair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 29, line 22, after the word "purpose," it is proposed to insert the following:

That the Chief of Ordnance, United States Army, is hereby authorized to enter into agreements with the duly authorized officials of any State or any political subdivision thereof, for the payments of such proportion as may be mutually determined to be equitable, not to exceed 50 per cent, of the cost of the reconstruction or repair of any public highway, where said reconstruction or repair is made necessary principally by reason of the increased use thereof resulting from the location, construction, or extension of any Government armory, arsenal, fortification, proving ground, or other governmental facility under the supervision of the Chief of Ordnance, in the immediate locality adjacent to or served by said public highway.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make the point of order that that item is not estimated for, and that it is clearly out of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, while my attention was diverted, two items included in lines 21 to 24, inclusive, on page 25, were stricken out in accordance with the amendment proposed by the committee. I wish to say that when this question was before the committee, of which I am a member, I protested against striking out those lines. I was told in the committee that the purpose of striking them out was to get more information, and that the items would go to conference. I think probably that when the bill goes to conference information will be furnished demonstrating that these appropriations are necessary; and with the understanding that the items will be considered in conference and, if necessary, will be put back in the bill I shall make no further protest. I should like, however, to have inserted in the RECORD a letter from Gen. Jervey, Assistant Chief of Staff, who had this matter in hand, and I ask permission to incorporate that letter in connection with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to incorporate in his remarks the letter to which he has referred. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

The letter referred to is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF STAFF,
August 8, 1918.

Memorandum for the Assistant Secretary of War.

Subject: Land for Field Artillery training center, Fayetteville, N. C.

1. The attached papers relate to the acquisition of approximately 120,000 acres of land at Fayetteville, N. C., for use in connection with the Field Artillery training center which is to be established at that place. The real estate branch has ascertained that the land can be acquired as soon as this season's crops are out of the way for approximately $1,500,000—either by purchase or condemnation—or the land can be rented at a cost of approximately $120,000 per year. In the latter case, however, there would have to be an additional amount allowed for damage to buildings and cultivated lands. Only 7 per cent of the land is now under cultivation. From options secured last year by the local chamber of commerce, the purchase price fixed by the owners aggregates about $2,000,000. If the land is leased, it is estimated that damages in addition to the rental for the first year would be $500,000. Therefore the total cost for the first year would be approximately $620,000 if the land is leased. Consequently it would seem more advisable to acquire title to this tract of land, which embraces about 120,000 acres, by purchase, or in those instances where the owners will not sell it at a reasonable price, title should be acquired by condemnation proceedings with view to purchase.

2. The estimated cost of this project is $1,500,000. Funds are available from the Army appropriation bill, fiscal year 1919. It is recommended that $1,500,000 be authorized to acquire title to this tract of approximately 120,000 acres of land and that for those portions of the land which can not be purchased at a reasonable price it is recommended that condemnation proceedings be instituted to acquire title by purchase.

3. Approval is recommended.

HENRY JERVEY,
Brigadier General, National Army,
Assistant Chief of Staff, Director of Operations.

Approved:
B. CROWELL,
The Assistant Secretary of War.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the committee was not satisfied with the items to which he has referred; but when the bill goes to conference we will give them further investigation and hear all that can be said in respect to them.

The reading of the bill was resumed.

The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, on page 31, after line 12, to insert:

MILITARY ACADEMY.

The United States Military Academy Cadets of the classes of 1920 and 1921 who have been ordered by military authority to graduate November 1, 1918, and to provide themselves with the full personal equipment required for immediate active service overseas, shall be credited with so much of their respective full course personal equipment allowances as may remain unpaid at the said date of their graduation.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Post Office Department," on page 37, after line 22, to insert:

OFFICE OF THE POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For the following employees from November 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919, inclusive, at annual rates of compensation, as follows: Six clerks of class 4, at $1,800 each; 20 clerks of class 3, at $1,600 each; 21 clerks of class 2, at $1,400 each; 24 clerks of class 1, at $1,200 each; 10 clerks, at $1,000 each; and 1 messenger, $840; in all, $74,560.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 5, to insert:

For personal services in connection with extraordinary work of the Post Office Department in the District of Columbia, to be expended under the direction of the Postmaster General, $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 38, after line 16, to insert:

POSTAL SERVICE.

OUT OF THE POSTAL REVENUE—OFFICE OF THE FIRST ASSISTANT POSTMASTER GENERAL.

For compensation to postmasters, fiscal year 1917, $4,912.31.
For special-delivery fees for the fiscal years that follow:
Nineteen hundred and seventeen, $22.72;
Nineteen hundred and eighteen, $196,022.32.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the subhead "Coast and Geodetic Survey," on page 42, after line 21, to strike out:

The appropriation of $50,000 "for one new vessel, including equipment, to cost not exceeding $354,000," contained in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, shall be covered into the surplus fund, and the authorization for the said vessel is repealed.

And insert:

The appropriation "for one new vessel, including equipment, to cost not exceeding $354,000, $50,000," contained in the sundry civil appropriation act for the fiscal year 1919, is hereby amended to read as follows: For one new vessel, including equipment, to cost not exceeding $354,000, under contract which is hereby authorized, $50,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 43, after line 13, to insert:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

NATURALIZATION SERVICE.

The temporary appointments of members of the Naturalization Bureau and Service are hereby made permanent and the appointees given a full classified status.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I hope that the Senate will not adopt this amendment; or, if it does adopt the amendment, that it will do away with the Civil Service Commission entirely. This is only a beginning. The Naturalization Bureau, I presume, now has more employees than it ever has had, and many of them have been employed, I am sure, without any civil-service examination whatever. I am not finding fault with the bureau for employing men and women without examination under the conditions existing to-day, but I do find fault that as soon as they are in the service without examination, and at a time when it is impossible for the bureau to secure a greater number of employees than needed, such employees are covered into the civil service without examination of any sort whatever. I can not see any reason or justification for this piece of legislation, unless it is going to be followed by other legislation covering all of the hundreds of thousands of temporary clerks into the civil service. The President now has authority to take this action if he sees fit; it has been done in the past, and there is no necessity for the legislation whatever. I can not for the life of me see why it is proposed. There has never been a time, Mr. President, I presume, in the history of our country when it has been so hard to secure the number of employees the various bureaus, divisions, and departments want.

Mr. THOMAS. They get all they need, but not all they want.

Mr. SMOOT. I was very careful to use the word "want." The head of a bureau told me only last week that if he were allowed to pick out 40 per cent of the employees in his bureau he could secure as great an amount and better work than he can now with the whole number employed. They are in each others' way.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. I ask the Senator for information. Why does not the head of the bureau referred to proceed to discharge the 60 per cent of incompetents?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say, Mr. President, that if he should attempt to make the discharges, he would immediately meet with objections higher up.

Mr. REED. Oh, well, I think not. I think there are supernumeraries, but I do not see how a man can be head of a department and not have the authority to regulate his employees.

Mr. SMOOT. What I referred to was not a department, but a bureau.

Mr. REED. Well, the head of a bureau.

Mr. FLETCHER. The head of the bureau must have asked for the employees.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida suggests that the head of the bureau must have asked for the employees. I do not wish to go into personalities and remind the Senator why many have been employed. The Senator from Florida knows the reason. Senators and Representatives have asked that many be employed and have asked the head of the bureau to employ them. I know it is very hard sometimes for heads of bureaus to refuse to make appointments under such circumstances.

Mr. FLETCHER. The point I was making was that the bureau chief, whoever he is, who makes a statement like that is, in my judgment, in the first instance, responsible, because he must have asked for the employes; and he should not have asked for them if he was going to get an organization that he did not need.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is no use of going into a discussion of this question. I think every Senator knows that so far as the number of employees is concerned in the departments in Washington, they are out of all reason. I know that they have employees who can not do the required work, and I am quite sure that if they had such employees as they could secure in ordinary times there would not be half of the employees in the District of Columbia who are now here, and yet they would perform all of the work that is being done at the present time.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I yield.

Mr. REED. I have not the slightest doubt of the fact that there are a large number of employees in the city of Washington who could be dispensed with if the bureaus and places in which they are employed were thoroughly organized and had time to develop a trained corps of assistants. The trouble to-day is that somebody is called upon suddenly to create a department to perform important work. He has to do it out of raw material, to use an expression that I think will cover it. He calls in a lot of men who are ignorant to a large extent of the work, and they get a lot of young ladies who are ignorant of the work, and they proceed to organize the best way they can. The result is that they have a great number of incompetents and for a while the machinery does not work. After a while they begin to get some system out of it, and some work; and yet, making allowance for all that, I have not a bit of doubt there are a great number of supernumeraries employed in the departments who ought to be gotten rid of. There has been a great deal of waste, but I still do not understand how the head of a department can go around grumbling that he could get rid of 60 per cent of his employees if he were permitted to, because I think he could get rid of them if he tried.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, what I wanted to bring particularly to the attention of the Senate was this: Cases such as that just spoken of by the Senator and the one to which I referred, and intended to proceed to refer to a little more extensively, no doubt exist; but this amendment covers the people into the civil service when we know that they are not qualified or fitted for the positions that they occupy to-day.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator right there?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As a matter of fact, when this bureau was organized as it is now they could not get civil-service employees. The Civil Service Commission could not furnish them, and could not furnish them to-day. Now, the question is in regard to these people who have been in the employ of the bureau there for six months, some of them for a year, can they not do better service after having been trained in the work, as the Senator from Missouri says, than new ones who might be covered in from the civil-service register?

Mr. SMOOT. In some cases perhaps they might; in other cases they might not. I want to say now that it is my opinion that half of them can not, or even more; and why bother now to provide that all of the employees of that department should be covered in under the civil service, when I have no doubt but that every Senator will agree that there are many of them that could not pass the required examination? That is the objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; but, Mr. President, would you not get very many on the civil-service register that would not be competent to fill the places, and yet you would have to take them?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, they are supposed to be competent if they have passed the examination prescribed by the commission. If the commission has broken down, and if they allow employees to pass the examinations who are not capable of doing the work for which they took the examination, that is against the system.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If the Senator will allow me to interrupt him further, I know of one or two employees there who failed to pass the civil-service examination, possibly on mathematics, or possibly on using a typewriter, or something else that they are not called upon to use in the service. Now, why should not people like that, who are not required to perform that particular service, be competent to do something else?

Mr. SMOOT. That same argument applies to every bureau and every department of the Government. If we are going to have a civil service, we ought to have it. If we do not want it, we ought to abolish it. We should not allow the Naturalization Bureau and Service to employ people who have not taken the civil-service examination, and then at a time when there are more employees than were ever known before cover them all into the civil service. That is the wrong of this amendment, and that is the reason why I ask that the Senate disagree to the amendment.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, this affects only a very few men—no great number of men. All of the employees in this District are taken under the civil service, except a few men. An act passed at the last Congress providing for the naturalization of certain soldiers in the camps required the employment of lawyers to look after that naturalization. They had to be good lawyers, and the civil-service register could not furnish them. Therefore they authorized the bureau temporarily to appoint these men to do this work that has to be done by a good lawyer. So they appointed those men and are now using them, and the Civil Service Commission now insists on their standing an examination. One man stood the examination when he does not have to typewrite at all and failed on typewriting, and they knocked him out.

This amendment takes care of and puts in the civil service about 30 or 40 men who already have the experience, who are already learned in the law. It is not necessary for them to stand an examination. Why should we require these men now to stand a civil-service examination? They are few in number—not a great number, like there are in some bureaus here. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] was right when he said that the chief of the bureau he referred to could get rid of them, and he ought to get rid of them. What is he going around here for, talking under cover to the Senator from Utah, and saying that 50 per cent of his men ought to go out? Why does he not put them out if he ought to put them out? He is not the right sort of man himself, or he would put them out if he were looking after the interests of the Government.

This amendment, however, affects only a few men, as I say, called in under those circumstances, because they had to have lawyers and had to have them quickly, and there were not any on the register. Now, the Civil Service Commission wants to turn out all of these men, who are doing splendid work, and make them stand a civil-service examination. That is all there is in this amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the Senator speaks of turning them all out. There is no necessity for turning them out. The Senator knows that under the civil-service rules they can be temporarily employed. He knows that at the end of three months they can be employed again, and so on, as many times as the head of the bureau wants to employ them. That is not the object of this amendment. The President of the United States has a perfect right and power to cover every one of them under the civil service if he wants to, or he can take any one man and issue an order waiving the examination for his employment in this bureau or in the other bureau of the Government. This amendment is to place every man in this bureau under the civil service without examination.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me to interrupt him, I think he states the matter a little more broadly than the facts warrant. It is not intended to place every man in the bureau under civil service. There are many of them in the bureau who are already under the civil service.

Mr. SMOOT. Then they are under the civil service. I think the statement that I made is absolutely correct. The amendment reads:

The temporary appointments of members of the Naturalization Bureau and Service are hereby made permanent, and the appointees given a full classified status.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, if the Senator will let me interrupt him further, I think I can give him a succinct statement of conditions. I went over the matter with a man in the bureau who knows the conditions from the ground up. The statement I now make is based upon information he gave me, and was put in writing by me in order to bring the matter before the Senate as it actually is:

The fact is that a third of the office force in the bureau in Washington have left for the military service. Temporary appointees were secured to take their places. They have been in the continuous employ of the bureau since July, 1918, in large numbers. Others have come at later periods, and all are now trained clerks who are serving under temporary appointments awaiting the furnishing of eligibles by the Civil Service Commission upon examination. The Civil Service Commission has for over a year endeavored to furnish eligibles and has had three separate examinations for this purpose. A fourth examination has now been called.

Now, why turn out these people who have been in there for six or eight months, or possibly a year in some cases, and wait for the Civil Service Commission to furnish unqualified people?

Mr. SMOOT. You do not have to turn them out. They have not been turned out up to this time. If they have been in the service a year, they can be in the service another year.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. But under the civil-service rules, as the Senator knows, here is A. B., for instance, who is a competent clerk, working in this department, and who has been working there for a year. That clerk, as soon as an eligible is furnished by the Civil Service Commission, must step aside, because he has not passed the civil-service examination.

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the rule.

Mr. SMOOT. I know what the practice is. I know what the rule is. I know what the law provides.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Continuing this statement, if the Senator will permit me a moment, I want to get the facts in the RECORD as they are:

During this period under the act of Congress approved May 9, 1918, the soldier-naturalization work was authorized, among other responsibilities, which has doubled the duties of the bureau. At the time that these duties were added there were no eligibles on the civil-service register having the qualifications requisite to the proper performance of the duties of naturalization examiner. It was necessary to secure immediately an adequate personnel both in numbers and qualifications. A large number, approximately 100 examiners and clerks, were appointed temporarily. All of these who are now serving are performing excellent service. They have been in continuous service, some of them for nearly six months. The examiners are lawyers with qualifications as practical typewriters. Some of them have failed to pass the typewriter examination before the Civil Service Commission.

If the Senator will pardon me for just one moment, I will finish this statement which I desire to make.

Mr. SMOOT. Certainly.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN (reading)—

Because of the heavy demand on the man power of the country it has been found impossible to secure through the usual means provided by the Civil Service Commission a sufficient number of eligibles to enable the bureau to transact its business. It is not known when there will be eligibles obtainable. These men have abandoned their practices and devoted the past four or five months to their duties in the Naturalization Service, and if they are not continued permanently in the service will suffer unnecessary hardship. The Naturalization Service needs their services, or others equally as good. They have all passed through the preliminary course of training necessary to be given to all who enter the service. If these temporary appointees in the bureau and field service, approximating 130, are obliged to be discontinued and other appointees secured, it will result in the constitution of the Naturalization Service of approximately 30 per cent experienced and 70 per cent inexperienced members.

In view of that it seems to me no reason can be given why the appointment of these people should not be made permanent and why they should not be given an opportunity to serve there, rather than to have new men and women come in to take their places.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say to the Senator that every bureau, every division, every board, every commission, every department in the Government could make the same kind of appeal.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I believe it would be a wise one.

Mr. SMOOT. Then, if it is a wise one, let us repeal the civil-service law.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I should like to see that done in some respects.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, that is an opinion that the Senator has a perfect right to express, and there are others who believe as he does, but the civil-service law is in force to-day.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator a question. There is one instance where there is a lawyer doing this work who is very efficient. When the Civil Service Commission can get a man on the register to fill the place, they send him up, and the bureau has to turn out this lawyer and put in this other fellow?

Mr. SMOOT. Not necessarily.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, yes; that is what they are doing. I am putting a concrete case now, where they have taken out a lawyer who did not pass the civil-service examination because he could not typewrite, and they sent some fellow up there who was a typewriter, who was not as good a man as the one they turned out. Now, that is a concrete case.

Mr. SMOOT. I know that these temporary appointments are held over for three months, and then for another period of three months, and sometimes for years. All they have to do is to make a request to the commission that they are wanted there for the positions they are filling, and there is no question but that the request is granted. Now, I very much prefer to vote at this time to abolish the civil-service law entirely, rather than to undertake now to pick out certain bureaus and divisions and departments of the Government to which the civil-service law shall not apply, and have it apply to all others.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not particularly concerned about the Civil Service Commission. I share the view expressed by the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN], in that I think in some respects it ought to be abolished; but I fear that this amendment is the beginning of what I am told is a concerted purpose upon the part of the new employees of the Government to make their tenures here permanent after the war.

We have here at least 40 per cent of employees who, I repeat, are not needed at all. They are supernumeraries, even in this time of great activity; and if one may judge from the work which some of them seem to be doing, I have understated rather than overstated the percentage. I have been informed from credible sources that a movement began some time ago—an organized movement, having, of course, political power behind it—by which the employees everywhere now in Government service, and who have been brought in owing to the exigencies of the war, are beginning—they are not only beginning, but they began some time ago, and they are continuing—their activities for that purpose.

Mr. SMOOT. They are writing letters now.

Mr. THOMAS. I therefore expect, if I live to see the war ended, to be confronted with a concerted movement to keep the civil service in its present state of numbers and inefficiency, and consequently I do not want to vote for this amendment. To be perfectly frank about it, I have not much regard for the legal abilities of any lawyer who has left a practice to serve the Government in its emergency who cares to remain at the present rate of compensation as a permanent employee of the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator there?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that is a very unjust criticism to make of these people who have left lucrative practices, whether as lawyers or in any other profession, and have come here to serve the Government at this time.

Mr. THOMAS. I think if a man has left a lucrative practice his lucrative practice will come back to him just as soon as the emergency is over which required him to leave it.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That may be true, too; but the general charge is made that they would not leave lucrative practices to come here and serve the Government at these salaries. Some of them come here and serve for nothing.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I did not say that. The Senator misunderstood me. What I said was that I can not conceive why, having left a large practice, they want to stay here permanently. Of course I cast no imputation whatever upon them. On the contrary, it is a matter to the credit of any man who leaves his business, where he was prosperous, and comes here and serves the Government. That is creditable; but to want to stay and spend the rest of his life here, at the meager salary which is paid by the Government, does not give me a very high opinion of the extent of the lucrative practice which he claims to have had. But, in my judgment, it is the beginning of a policy certain to develop as time goes on, with the political power which goes with organization behind it, to continue this vast horde of employees here in Washington even after the war is over and when the need for them shall have ceased.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield? I should like to ask the Senator, if he will pardon me, if it is wise to offer this amendment, why would it not be wise to extend it to other departments?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's colleague [Mr. SMOOT] asked that question before the Senator came in.

Mr. KING. I apologize for repeating it, then.

Mr. THOMAS. It will serve as a precedent when it is enacted, and naturally and properly will encourage the employees of other departments to do likewise.

Mr. KING. Then it is apparent, if this is wise and just, there are employees in other departments who have the same right to ask for legislation of this character.

Mr. OVERMAN. And for the same reason exactly.

Mr. KING. It seems to me this is very unfair and very unwise legislation.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this Naturalization Bureau has had its business increased very largely by the act of May 9, 1918. It is possible that there are other departments situated as is this particular department, and I will say very frankly that if there are other departments—and I know of none that are so situated—they ought to be granted the same relief. I have been unable to see why a man who has been serving the Government for six months or a year by appointment without having passed a civil-service examination should be turned out after having gained experience in his place and that place filled by some man or woman less capable simply because they passed such examination. That does not count for anything. It is simply in compliance with the law that the heads of departments go to the Civil Service Commission to get employees, but that does not mean in any sense of the word that persons so obtained are capable and competent. As a matter of fact, I think I would resign my seat in the Senate if I had to depend for my clerical assistance upon clerks certified to me by the Civil Service Commission whether such clerks suited me or not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. Allow me to ask a question of the Senator from Oregon. Why does the Senator state that these men are about to be turned out from their present employment?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know of any other reason for it except that they are simply holding by appointment without having passed the civil-service examination. Whenever eligibles are certified up by the Civil Service Commission to the Naturalization Bureau they have to discharge employees who have not had the examination and take those certified, whether they have had practical experience or not.

Mr. THOMAS. Their places are being taken so fast that some of the departments have been obliged to call a halt here in the city. The movement is inward.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. They have stopped people coming here because of the influenza.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish they would make it permanent.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator does not wish that——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Virginia?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In just a moment. The Senator does not wish that any more than I do, but the departments are being crippled in their work because they have not sufficient employees.

Mr. THOMAS. Let me say it is not because they have not sufficient employees. There may be other reasons.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask unanimous consent that the unfinished business be temporarily laid aside for the consideration of the appropriation bill the Senator from Virginia has in charge, with the understanding that as soon as that bill is disposed of it will be taken up for consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. OVERMAN. We need these employees in the department, and why turn men out who are competent and experienced and go to the civil service and have them certify somebody who is not. Here is a case that is sui generis. It does not set a precedent at all. I do not like to go over the reasons again. I have shown that there are a few lawyers from the country here willing to help the Government, and they are now doing it. One of them took an examination as a typewriter and they turned him down. The Civil Service Commission have not got him on the register, and the man has to get out. This takes care of 40 or 50 experienced, able men, men willing and capable to do this work, and they have done it. The Civil Service Commission say those men must stand a civil-service examination, and they can not keep them any longer. They were appointed for three months, temporarily.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator from North Carolina how many employees there are in this bureau?

Mr. OVERMAN. I have no idea. We put only a few in the bill we passed last year.

Mr. SMOOT. There are 130 employees involved.

Mr. OVERMAN. I said there were not very many.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is not any question but that every man who is at work in that bureau to-day, whether he be upon the temporary roll or whether he be sent by the Civil Service Commission, is not going to lose his job because of the passage or the nonpassage of this act. If he has been on the temporary roll for six months or nine months, he is continued on the temporary roll for one year longer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment.

On a division the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, under the head of "Legislative," on page 43, after line 19, to insert:

SENATE.

To pay Katharine C. Norton and Alice Gallinger Espe, daughter and granddaughter, respectively, of Hon. Jacob H. Gallinger, late a Senator from the State of New Hampshire, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, at the top of page 44, to insert:

To pay Sallie Tillman, widow of Hon Benjamin R. Tillman, late a Senator from the State of South Carolina, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 3, to insert:

To pay Ruth James, widow of Hon. Ollie M. James, late a Senator from the State of Kentucky, $7,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 44, after line 5, to insert:

For folding speeches and pamphlets, at a rate not exceeding $1 per thousand, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 8, to insert:

JUDGMENTS, COURT OF CLAIMS.

For the payment of the judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, reported to Congress during the present session in House Document No. 1332, namely:

Under the War Department, $68,003.50;
Under the Navy Department, $72,619.45;
Under the Interior Department, $343,440.34;
Under the Department of Justice, $4,544.80;
Under the Post Office Department, $12,954.47;
In all, $501,562.56.

None of the judgments contained in this act shall be paid until the right of appeal shall have expired.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 45, after line 23, to insert:

AUDITED CLAIMS.

SEC. 3. That for the payment of the following claims, certified to be due by the several accounting officers of the Treasury Department under appropriations the balances of which have been exhausted or carried to the surplus fund under the provisions of section 5 of the act of June 20, 1874, and under appropriations heretofore treated as permanent, being for the service of the fiscal year 1916 and prior years, unless otherwise stated, and which have been certified to Congress under section 2 of the act of July 7, 1884, as fully set forth in House Document No. 1333, reported to Congress at its present session, there is appropriated as follows:

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE TREASURY DEPARTMENT.

For collecting the revenue from customs, $2.07.
For paper-money laundering machines, 1917, $109.96.
For freight, transportation, etc., Public Health Service, $284.52.
For miscellaneous expenses, Internal-Revenue Service, $12.
For refunding internal-revenue collections, $20.
For refunding taxes illegally collected, $451,496.72.
For redemption of stamps, $5,997.97.
For payment of judgments against internal-revenue officers, $80,803.30.
For allowance or drawback, $516.50.
For Coast Guard, $429.77.
For pay of crews, miscellaneous expenses, etc., Life-Saving Service, $375.50.
For operating supplies for public buildings, $9.37.
For furniture and repairs of same for public buildings, $436.40.
For general expenses of public buildings, $22.05.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE WAR DEPARTMENT.

For pay, etc., of the Army, $1,984.72.
For extra-duty pay to enlisted men as clerks at Army division and department headquarters, $860.
For mileage to officers and contract surgeons, $1,607.67.
For supplies, services, and transportation, Quartermaster Corps, $5,022.23.
For incidental expenses, Quartermaster's Department, $26.60.
For barracks and quarters, $4,108.69.
For transportation of the Army and its supplies, $1,079.32.
For roads, walks, wharves, and drainage, $39.58.
For Medical and Hospital Department, $11.65.
For headstones for graves of soldiers, $7.79.
For National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, Pacific Branch, $336.73.
For National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers, clothing, $828.62.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE NAVY DEPARTMENT.

For contingent and miscellaneous expenses, Naval Observatory, $13.75.
For pay, miscellaneous, $159.68.
For pay, Marine Corps, $313.97.
For transportation, Bureau of Navigation, $57.88.
For outfits on first enlistment, Bureau of Navigation, $26.87.
For contingent, Bureau of Medicine and Surgery, $7.
For pay of the Navy, $882.01.
For engineering, Bureau of Steam Engineering, $40.
For freight, Bureau of Supplies and Accounts, $2,261.30.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE INTERIOR DEPARTMENT.

For contingent expenses, Department of the Interior, $6.35.
For Capitol Building and repairs, 1917, $1.
For surveying the public lands, $375.
For inspecting mines in Alaska, $6.40.
For investigating mine accidents, $4.90.
For testing fuel, Bureau of Mines, 36 cents.
For suppressing liquor traffic among Indians, 1917, $72.75.
For suppressing liquor traffic among Indians, 20 cents.
For relieving distress and prevention, etc., of diseases among Indians, $10.
For Indian schools, support, $195.95.
For Indian school and agency buildings, $220.38.
For purchase and transportation of Indian supplies, 1917, $1,466.59.
For purchase and transportation of Indian supplies, $153.67.
For telegraphing and telephoning, Indian Service, 55 cents.
For pay of Indian police, 67 cents.
For Ganado irrigation project, Navajo Reservation, Ariz. (reimbursable), 95 cents.
For support of Indians in California, $30.
For Indian school, Greenville, Cal., 1917, $4.19.
For oil and gas inspectors, Five Civilized Tribes, Oklahoma, 1917, $116.57.
For Indian school, Tomah, Wis., $1.84.
For Army pensions, $18.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE STATE AND OTHER DEPARTMENTS.

For relief, protection, and transportation of American citizens in Europe, $52,537.32.
For salaries of secretaries, Diplomatic Service, $166.67.
For transportation of diplomatic and consular officers, 1917, $430.85.
For transportation of diplomatic and consular officers, $137.75.
For salaries, Consular Service, $636.86.
For contingent expenses, United States consulates, 1918, $37,480.23.
For contingent expenses, United States consulates, $676.
For representation of interests of foreign governments growing out of hostilities in Europe, $34.28.
For preservation of collections, National Museum, $24.
For books, National Museum, $8.44.
For Interstate Commerce Commission, $2.07.
For general expenses, Bureau of Animal Industry, $754.20.
For general expenses, Bureau of Plant Industry, $372.60.
For general expenses, Forest Service, $31.59.
For marketing and distributing farm products, 54 cents.
For general expenses, Bureau of Standards, $1.21.
For investigation of optical glass, Bureau of Standards, 1918, $121.
For testing railroad scales, etc., Bureau of Standards, $6.
For military research, Bureau of Standards, 1917 and 1918, $1,916.70.
For general expenses, Lighthouse Service, $2,549.25.
For contingent expenses, Department of Labor, $11.61.
For contingent expenses, Department of Commerce and Labor, $1.80.
For expenses of regulating immigration, $41.25.
For general expenses, Children's Bureau, $101.
For contingent expenses, Department of Justice, transportation, 1918, $58.30.
For detection and prosecution of crimes, 1918, $1,486.01.
For inspection of prisons and prisoners, 1918, $534.45.
For salaries, fees, and expenses of marshals, United States courts, $154.98.
For salaries and expenses of district attorneys, United States courts, $1.25.
For pay of special assistant attorneys, United States courts, $542.55.
For fees of clerks, United States courts, 1918, $17,183.85.
For fees of clerks, United States courts, 1917, $68.50.
For fees of clerks, United States courts, $1,605.05.
For fees of commissioners, United States courts, 1917, $119.60.
For fees of witnesses, United States courts, 1918, $44.95.
For fees of witnesses, United States courts, 1917, $16.20.
For fees of witnesses, United States courts, $140.50.
For pay of bailiffs, United States courts, $15.
For miscellaneous expenses, United States courts, $114.50.
For supplies for United States courts, 1918, $895.31.
For supplies for United States courts, 1917, $79.02.
For support of prisoners, United States courts, $1.50.
For United States penitentiary, Leavenworth, Kans., 1918, $4.19.
For United States penitentiary, McNeil Island, Wash., 1918, 35 cents.
For United States penitentiary, Atlanta, Ga., 1918, $20.91.

CLAIMS ALLOWED BY THE AUDITOR FOR THE POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT.

For indemnities, international registered mail, $256.63.
For indemnities, lost insured mail, $10.
For shipment of supplies, $28.72.
For star route service, special mail carriers, $40.47.
For railroad transportation, $502.32.
For Railway Mail Service, miscellaneous expenses, $3.15.
For Railway Mail Service, injured, $2,000.
For foreign mail transportation, $352.89.
For compensation of postmasters, $103.99.
For rent, light, and fuel, $43.33.
For City Delivery Service, horse hire, $161.99.
For Rural Delivery Service, $116.27.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Secretary concluded the reading of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The bill is now open to amendment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I propose the following amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read it.

The SECRETARY. Add the following to the bill:

The appropriation of $100,000 provided by section 7, Chapter XV, of the act approved July 9, 1918, "Making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 13, 1919," to be used under the direction of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, is hereby made available for the purpose of paying the salaries of officers, investigators, and all other necessary employees in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, as well as rentals, office equipment, supplies, and expenses, travel expenses of officers and employees; printing, binding, books and periodicals, law books and books of reference, and miscellaneous expenditures which the board may deem necessary for carrying out the purposes of the act.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I make the point of order that this amendment is plainly in violation of the rule against legislation on an appropriation bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. May I make a statement in reference to the matter before the Senator insists on his point of order?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Certainly; I withhold the point of order until the Senator can be heard.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, this is a matter of such great importance that I do not think the Senator from Virginia ought to make a point of order against it. Yet I am frank to say I think a point of order, if insisted upon, would lie against the amendment.

I say again that the amendment and the bill to which it refers greatly affects our people, and not only affects the present generation but generations yet unborn. While the Army appropriation bill of this year was under consideration the Military Affairs Committee took up the subject of venereal diseases as affecting those who were coming into the Army from civil life, and not only was the committee astounded at the conditions which developed in the hearings before the committee, but the country at large was amazed at the showing which was made by those who understood the situation and had made a particular examination into and study of the subject.

At my request, and at the request of other members of the committee, some of the newspapers and magazines took up the subject which had never before been publicly discussed nor very generally discussed in the home circle for reasons of false modesty. The public prints did not discuss it because it seemed to shock the moral sense, although the subject was one which came very near to and affected the homes of hundreds of the people of the country. After that hearing and after experts had testified before the committee and the reports affecting the Army had been examined by the committee, they adopted what is known as chapter 15 of the Army appropriation act. The title of the chapter is "Interdepartmental Social Hygienic Board."

It provided for the creation of a board to take up the subject for intelligent investigation and discussion, and appropriated large sums of money for that purpose, because the necessity for curative and preventive measures was so great, much of it to be spent in cooperation with the States and the several universities and places of learning in the United States in an effort, if possible, to check and finally to eradicate these destructive diseases.

Mr. WARREN. Will the Senator place in the RECORD before he concludes the amount appropriated?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I will do so by inserting the law sought to be amended. On account of the relation that this proposed amendment to the pending bill bears to the act itself I am going to ask to have printed in the RECORD chapter 15 of the Army appropriation act.

Chapter 15 of that act, approved July 9, 1918, is as follows:

CHAPTER XV.

Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board: That there is hereby created a board to be known as the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, to consist of the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury as ex officio members, and of the Surgeon General of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, and the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, or of representatives designated by the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury, respectively. The duties of the board shall be: (1) To recommend rules and regulations for the expenditure of moneys allotted to the States under section 5 of this chapter; (2) to select the institutions and organizations and fix the allotments to each institution under said section 5; (3) to recommend to the Secretary of the Treasury, the Secretary of War, and the Secretary of the Navy such general measures as will promote correlation and efficiency in carrying out the purposes of this chapter by their respective departments; and (4) to direct the expenditure of the sum of $100,000 referred to in the last paragraph of section 7 of this chapter. The board shall meet at least quarterly, and shall elect annually one of its members as chairman, and shall adopt rules and regulations for the conduct of its business.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy are hereby authorized and directed to adopt measures for the purpose of assisting the various States in caring for civilian persons whose detention, isolation, quarantine, or commitment to institutions may be found necessary for the protection of the military and naval forces of the United States against venereal diseases.

SEC. 3. That there is hereby established in the Bureau of the Public Health Service a Division of Venereal Diseases, to be under the charge of a commissioned medical officer of the United States Public Health Service detailed by the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, which officer while thus serving shall be an Assistant Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, subject to the provisions of law applicable to assistant surgeons general in charge of administrative divisions in the District of Columbia of the Bureau of the Public Health Service. There shall be in such division such assistants, clerks, investigators, and other employees as may be necessary for the performance of its duties and as may be provided for by law.

SEC. 4. That the duties of the division of venereal diseases shall be in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury (1) to study and investigate the cause, treatment, and prevention of venereal diseases; (2) to cooperate with State boards of departments of health for the prevention and control of such diseases within the State; and (3) to control and prevent the spread of these diseases in interstate traffic: Provided, That nothing in this chapter shall be construed as limiting the functions and activities of other departments or bureaus in the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases and in the expenditure of moneys therefor.

SEC. 5. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, to be expended under the joint direction of the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy to carry out the provisions of section 2 of this chapter: Provided, That the appropriation herein made shall not be deemed exclusive, but shall be in addition to other appropriations of a more general character which are applicable to the same or similar purposes.

SEC. 6. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,400,000 annually for two fiscal years, beginning with the fiscal year commencing July 1, 1918, to be apportioned as follows: The sum of $1,000,000, which shall be paid to the States for the use of their respective boards or departments of health in the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases; this sum to be allotted to each State, in accordance with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Treasury, in the proportion which its population bears to the population of the continental United States, exclusive of Alaska and the Canal Zone, according to the last preceding United States census, and such allotment to be so conditioned that for each dollar paid to any State the State shall specifically appropriate or otherwise set aside an equal amount for the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases, except for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, for which the allotment of money is not conditioned upon the appropriation or setting aside of money by the State, provided that any State may obtain any part of its allotment for any fiscal year subsequent to June 30, 1919, by specifically appropriating or otherwise setting aside an amount equal to such part of its allotment for the prevention, control, and treatment of venereal diseases; the sum of $100,000, which shall be paid to such universities, colleges, or other suitable institutions, as in the judgment of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board are qualified for scientific research, for the purpose of discovering, in accordance with rules and regulations prescribed by the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board, more effective medical measures in the prevention and treatment of venereal diseases; the sum of $300,000, which shall be paid to such universities, colleges, or other suitable institutions or organizations, as in the judgment of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board are qualified for scientific research, for the purpose of discovering and developing more effective educational measures in the prevention of venereal diseases, and for the purpose of sociological and psychological research related thereto.

SEC. 7. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000 for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, to be apportioned as follows: The sum of $200,000 to defray the expenses of the establishment and maintenance of the division of venereal diseases in the Bureau of the Public Health Service; and the sum of $100,000 to be used under the direction of the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board for any purpose for which any of the appropriations made by this chapter are available.

SEC. 8. That the terms "State" and "States," as used in this chapter, shall be held to included the District of Columbia.

That the act entitled "An act to authorize condemnation proceedings of lands for military purposes," approved July 2, 1917, as amended by an act approved April 11, 1918, be, and the same is hereby, amended, and its provisions in all respects, together with all its privileges and benefits, are hereby extended to the right of condemnation of standing or fallen timber, sawmills, camps, machinery, logging roads, rights of way, equipment, materials, supplies, and any works, property, or appliances suitable for the effectual production of such lumber and timber products for the Army, Navy, United States Shipping Board, or the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation. That the right to institute such condemnation proceedings is hereby conferred upon the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Chairman of the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, individually or collectively. Such right of condemnation shall be exercised by such officials only for the purpose of obtaining such property when needed for the production, manufacture, or building aircraft, dry docks, or vessels, their apparel or furniture, for housing of Government employees in connection with the Army, Navy, or the United States Shipping Board and the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, and for the procurement of materials and equipment for aircraft, dry docks, and vessels. The jurisdiction of such condemnation proceedings is hereby vested in the district courts of the United States where the property which is sought to be condemned or any part thereof is located or situated, regardless of the value of the same.

And the President is hereby authorized, through any department or the United States Shipping Board or said Fleet Corporation, to sell and dispose of any lands or interests in real estate acquired for the production of lumber and timber products, and to sell any logs, manufactured or partly manufactured or otherwise procured for the Army, Navy, or United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation, or resulting from such manufacture or procurement, either to individuals, corporations, or foreign states or governments, at such price as he shall determine, acting through his above representatives selling or disposing of the same, and the proceeds of such sale shall be returned to the appropriations which bore the expense of such procurement.

I want Senators who oppose this amendment to the pending bill to stand responsible before the country for their course, because I think that German bullets have done less damage to our boys over there than these destructive diseases have been doing in our country at large and to generations yet unborn.

In order to show that I want to call the attention of Senators to the hearings before the Committee on Military Affairs, held on June 10, 15, 17, and 18, 1918. I am not going to discuss the subject at any length. I am merely calling attention to it, and I know it will touch the consciences of Senators here if they have not read this testimony.

Maj. Snow, of the Surgeon General's staff, who is an expert on this subject, was asked to give his reasons for favoring such legislation as the committee was considering, and he answered, in part, as follows:

Maj. SNOW. I might say this, that I was first interested in this problem some years ago as a State health officer. We have been rather backward in applying the scientific information that we have about these dangerous communicable diseases. I think the reason has been that until perhaps 10 years ago we did not have certain important information about ready and accurate scientific diagnosis, particularly of syphilis. Another difficulty has been that it is so closely interwoven with questions of moral standards. Because these diseases are spread especially through sexual promiscuity, health officers have hesitated to take up the problem until the public was ready to take up that phase of the question simultaneously. The public has known nothing about the dangers of these diseases. The advent of war has changed all this. An active public interest has been aroused and health and medical organizations are taking hold. The Surgeon General has assigned me to the problem of control of venereal diseases as they relate to the Army. That has brought me particularly into touch with the seriousness of venereal diseases not only as they affect the military forces, but the civilians who are of value in prosecuting the war successfully.

I would like to present the picture as I see it, because I think that such a picture is perhaps more effective in convincing me that something needs to be done than any statistical argument.

We draw our men, by the decisions of Congress, from every State in the Union, according to a proportionate quota distribution. It was decided that it was wise, so far as venereal diseases are concerned, to accept as a part of the quota from each State all those persons infected with venereal disease who reasonably can be treated in the Army and made useful for military service. That changed the policy as compared with past practices of the Army, and it is a vitally important change, I think, in relation to our combating these diseases. Approximately five-sixths of the cases the Army has had to treat since mobilization were thus brought in from civil life.

He later gave way to Sergt. Harkness, who was his aid, and who prepared maps and charts which were based upon the records which came to the department from the several cantonments.

On page 62 of this testimony Sergt. Harkness commenced to testify from the chart which was before the committee. He said:

Sergt. HARKNESS. This chart has been made up from the weekly reports received from five camps, all National Army camps or cantonments, and they spread over a period of nine weeks, from March 29 to May 24, 1918—

Practically two months—

Not every cantonment reported regularly. We are now getting these reports in regularly, and we will shortly be able to give something that will be a little more representative and from more than five cantonments. But from these 37 reports, after separating them, we found these things. This represents the annual rate per thousand [indicating on chart].

I interrupted him by stating that he should give the figures, because the chart would not go into the record. Mr. Harkness replied:

All these figures are based on an annual rate per thousand, to make them comparable with other statistics, and taking the cases that were brought into the Army the rate was 231.3 per 1,000.

Senators, I want you to note that the cases were coming into the Army from civil life from every community in America.

Mr. POMERENE. What was the rate?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Two hundred and thirty-one and three-tenths per thousand.

Now, note. Maj. Snow said, "For gonorrhea."

Sergt. HARKNESS. That is for gonorrhea as compared with 11 per 1,000 contracted after enlistment.

In other words, in this one disease there were 231.3 per thousand coming in from civil life as compared with 11 per thousand contracted after enlistment. The civil life of this Republic, which ought to be the purest, was the most defiled, and with the men who were serving in the Army it was reduced to the minimum.

Mr. POMERENE. Do those figures relate to the entire service or only to certain cantonments?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. He is making an estimate from a certain number of cantonments which had reported, and these were fairly representative of the whole number of cantonments. Mind you, that refers to only one disease.

The CHAIRMAN. In other words, the great majority of cases of gonorrhea during the period covered in those five cantonments came in already infected from civil life?

Sergt. HARKNESS. Yes, sir. The percentage of syphilis—

I am glad there are no occupants of the gallery to hear this, because it will not sound so bad in cold type; and yet this subject ought to be discussed as one would discuss tuberculosis or any other disease which is so destructive to the human race.

The percentage of syphilis was 53.5 per 1,000 men of those men brought in as compared to about 2 per 1,000.

Remember that these infected young men came in from civil life and go to make up the armed forces of the United States! I may say here, incidentally, that under the old military regulations, if a man presented himself for enlistment and had any of these diseases, he would probably have been turned down, but the policy of the Government under the selective-service law and the new regulations is to take them and undertake to restore them to healthful lives, which has been done very largely. There are very few of these young men affected by these terrible diseases who are not cured, or cured as far as it is possible to do so, and restored in the open camps to healthy and vigorous life.

The CHAIRMAN. Contracted after they came in?

Sergt. HARKNESS. Yes; after they came in. And of chancroids we had 30 per 1,000 brought in as compared with 4 per 1,000 contracted after they came in.

In other words, 30 per thousand cases came from civil life, while those which were contracted after the young men got into the Army and were subjected to discipline were only 4 per 1,000.

For all venereal diseases we have 320 per 1,000 as brought into the Army, contracted before entrance, compared to 16.8 per 1,000 contracted after enlistment.

Further in his testimony, Maj. Snow was asked:

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not find that there is a very great lack of information among the general public as to the amount of infection and as to the effect of these diseases upon the civil community?

Maj. SNOW. Yes, sir; that is one of the greatest difficulties, or has been in the past, in making any real progress against these diseases. I started to say, before I digressed, in connection with these statistics that for the five-sixths of the 80,000 men Sergt. Harkness has mentioned being called in the draft is the best thing that could have happened to them. Many of them never had been near a physician. They had received the misinformation which medical charlatans give, and the kind of information that all of us, as we have grown up, have had about the harmlessness, relatively, of gonorrhea, and about the ease with which it can be cured by a druggist or by ourselves, when we go and buy some patent medicine which is supposed to be a sure cure, and similar misinformation about syphilis and how it can be cured. In the Army these men are brought to understand, from the education they receive and the treatment, the importance to themselves and to the community later of their being under treatment. Again, the taking of these men into the Army has removed immediately from the community a very considerable number of persons who were carriers of venereal disease. But perhaps the most valuable influence of all has been the awakening of health authorities, and simultaneously of business men and influential men and women generally, to the fact that this is a communicable-disease problem; that it can be met if we apply the same scientific methods that we have applied to the control of yellow fever and other diseases.

The Medical Department of the Army has done everything it could to aid in stimulating this interest of the public in this problem, because you can see, from an administrative point of view, the Surgeon General can do very little about the control of venereal diseases, other than treating those cases that develop, unless he has the cooperation of the public. The infections in the Army after the men are drafted do not occur inside of the cantonments, because the infections primarily come from sexual promiscuity, and there is no ready opportunity for sexual relations to occur between the infected civilian women and susceptible noninfected soldiers in the camp itself; but when the men go out on liberty and furlough we have the danger.

The CHAIRMAN. Those cases you can measurably control?

Maj. SNOW. We can measurably control them to the extent that Congress has provided authorization in sections 12 and 13 of the draft law, and facilities through the Commission on Training Camp Activities for applying those sections. Recreation which keeps a man so busy that he does not expose himself; enforcement of the law which makes infected women inaccessible; education which encourages self-control are all vitally important control measures. Many times just a man's better judgment leads him to realize that he owes it to the Government, if not to his personal career, to keep sober and to avoid prostitution and possible infection.

The CHAIRMAN. I had the pleasure of attending a meeting over in the Committee on Banking and Currency room one evening when you exhibited charts and a motion-picture film and displayed the methods that were being adopted by the commanders of the troops for instructing the young men.

Maj. SNOW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Medical Corps is proceeding with that instruction, and is delivering lectures on that subject?

Maj. SNOW. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you find that is being attended with benefit?

Maj. SNOW. It is very hard to find out just how successful such measures are, but I think it is significant that the commanding generals and our division surgeons and other officers who are immediately in touch with the men are increasingly expressing their favorable opinion of those methods. They feel that it does have a very distinct deterrent effect on reducing the amount of drunkenness and sexual promiscuity, which they ordinarily would otherwise have expected from the men.

There is another thing that is important, I think. That is, that in the past the Army has felt that it could not do anything ouside of its own Army reservations; that when a man went out he was to all intents and purposes for the time of his liberty a citizen. At the same time the citizens of the community generally were not very much interested in the soldier; they did not know him personally; he had enlisted from some distant place; they did not know what kind of a man he was; he came into the community, and if he got into the hands of the underworld nobody bothered very much about it; and the Army could not do anything except reprimand him and treat him when he returned. At the present time practically every family has some direct interest in somebody in the Army, and there is added stimulus of being at war.

The attitude of the public in favor of clean living; the feeling that we must make for national efficiency; the order against civilian dress for the soldier, resulting, as it does, in every military officer and man being conspicuously identified to the public; all these things are to have their deterrent influence on immorality and consequently on the amount of exposure to venereal disease. Then as the community takes an active interest in this, it becomes harder for the commercialized vice interests to get hold of the men without the better element in the community effectively protesting.

The CHAIRMAN. Do you not find that the dissemination of information such as you are giving now and which was withheld from the public in times past, has had the effect of stimulating local interest in the States and in the larger communities?

Maj. SNOW. Oh, undoubtedly. Inquiries are constantly arising. Doubtless they come to each of you here every day, and they come also in very large numbers to the Surgeon General and to every officer, I suppose, of the Army. These come from communities, saying, "We have just learned something about the work of the Government against venereal diseases and prostitution, and we want to know what we can do in our communities to help." Generally there is the vaguest kind of information about what this problem is, and how the diseases are spread and how they can be controlled, and why we need dispensaries. If we ask the question in return, "What have you done with tuberculosis," for instance, they answer promptly with a program because they are familiar with that disease because of the campaign of education which has been carried on for the past 10 years. Such a campaign should be promoted now by Congress. Dr. McLaughlin here, of the Public Health Service, will doubtless tell you about the excellent work that is being done by his service in establishing dispensaries for the treatment of civilians; some 24 of them, I think you have, doctor, or 28?

Dr. MCLAUGHLIN. Twenty-four

Maj. SNOW. These stations are open, and the public understand that they are open for advice and treatment. Some of them already have had 500 patients a week, women and men. That shows that the public wants advice and assistance from a reliable source. A definite educational campaign is being carried on in connection with these clinics, and as more and more people find out that they can get treatment more are coming. We are interested for the Army in this civilian work, because anything that operates to reduce the total amount of venereal diseases in the community operates to lessen the chances of a soldier on liberty being exposed, and therefore it lessens the number of infections that are brought back to us for treatment.

The CHAIRMAN. Why has there been such a woeful ignorance on the part of the public as to these particular diseases?

Maj. SNOW. I think, Senator, that it is because we have never quite sensed the fact that it is a communicable disease problem. And physicians have been, perhaps, more backward than any other group in analyzing the possibilities of talking to the public about these diseases just as frankly as they have talked about malaria and yellow fever and tuberculosis. There has been a feeling that sexual relations which society calls immoral are the source of spreading these diseases, and that we can not do anything until we can control people's morals. Now we have found that with the stimulus of the war and the leadership of Congress and the Federal officers, through the declaration that these diseases were going to be fought, and that measures would be provided to control prostitution and alcohol in relation to them, as well as measures for diagnosis and treatment, everyone has taken courage. The efforts which have already been made by State boards of health or local health departments and by cooperating agencies that are dealing more directly with the moral phases of the problem, have convinced one person after another that there is a practical program that can be put through. This education of the men and women in each community must go on.

I invite the attention of Senators to the whole of this testimony. I simply refer to enough of it to show the necessity for undertaking to enforce properly chapter 15 of the appropriation act of 1918. The reading of the act will show that the administration of it is placed in responsible hands. The Surgeon General of the Army, the Surgeon General of the Navy, the Surgeon General of the Public Health Service, the Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the Secretary of the Treasury are on the board and attached to and under them are distinguished members of the Medical Corps.

Mr. President, when the board undertake to administer this law they find that obstacles to its proper execution, as in the case of nearly all such laws, are placed in the way by decisions of an acting controller. If we should undertake to walk through the labyrinth of decisions of the various auditors and controllers of these several departments one absolutely gets lost, and the acts Congress intended to put into effect have been delayed, postponed, and nullified by the action of these men.

I do not wish to criticize this particular controller, but in any event he practically held that the appropriations which Congress made in the Army appropriation act could not be used as Congress, I am sure, intended it should be.

It is the purpose of this amendment simply to enable the board to so organize that the purpose of the act may be put into practical effect. I know what the criticism of the distinguished chairman of this committee will be. His criticism will be that they are going to spend a large part of this appropriation in organization.

Mr. President, I do not care if every cent of it is expended in the organization of this work so long as it relieves a serious situation in the life of the American people.

If it is once organized, as it should be and as Congress intended, the money will be judiciously spent by the Federal Government in cooperation with the States, and these States will have a voice in the administration and enforcement of the law. When once established, I venture to say there will be no one who will ever rise on the floor of Congress and suggest the repeal of a law that has for its purpose the purification of the morals of the people of this country and the curing of the diseases that affect not only those of the present but of future generations.

I do hope, in order to assist in carrying out the great work which has been begun, the Senator from Virginia will not insist upon his point of order, because I think if he will examine the record he will find that these diseases are destroying more men annually in one way and another than the influenza and German bullets combined.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I am so anxious to get the bill through that I shall not spend any time in going into the merits of this question. The service is going on. I want to say that this is simply a question of a greater margin and paying more salaries. I insist on the point of order. The amendment is plainly out of order. I ask the Chair to rule upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McKELLAR in the chair). The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I offer an amendment, which I desire to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Amend by adding a new section, as follows:

SEC. —. For furnishing seed for spring planting in food crops in the year of 1919 by farmers in the drought-stricken regions of the United States who, owing to crop failure in the year of 1918, are unable to purchase seed therefor, and for furnishing to such farmers feed for their live stock during the next ensuing winter and spring, the sum of $5,000,000, to be disbursed and paid out, upon application therefor, by the Secretary of Agriculture, upon such showing and proof as he may require and under such rules and regulations as he may promulgate and upon such terms as to security and repayment as he may require.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President——

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Before the Senator proceeds, I will say, so that I may not be misunderstood, that of course I shall not make a point of order if the Senator wishes to address the Senate, but when he gets through I shall make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, it may be this amendment is subject to a point of order, but the necessity for the appropriation is so great, it is so vital to the interests of the country to have the proposed appropriation made, that I do not think the point of order should be made, and wish it might not be sustained.

A few weeks ago my colleague [Mr. WALSH] offered a similar amendment to another appropriation bill, then pending before the Senate, about the only difference being that the sum then sought to be appropriated was $20,000,000. There was no point of order made against that amendment. It came to a vote in the Senate and was defeated. I think it was defeated largely because the Senate thought the sum sought to be appropriated was larger than should be appropriated and larger than the Senate was willing to vote. Therefore I have offered an amendment, aimed at the same purposes, to appropriate only $5,000,000, a much less sum.

I am sure the Secretary of Agriculture favors this amendment. I have had extended conversation and much consultation with him on this subject, and I know he thinks the sum here sought to be appropriated would do a great amount of good and that it is needed and would be highly beneficial to the country.

There was a very severe drought in some of the Western States this year, and a total failure of crops in some sections of the country. It was a failure to such an extent that it was a great calamity to whole sections of the country; so much so that thousands of farmers were not able to raise enough to furnish themselves with seed for next year, to say nothing about not realizing enough to live on during the fall and winter. In consequence, the President was interested and he agreed to set aside, out of an emergency fund at his disposal, and did set aside the sum of $5,000,000 for the benefit of such farmers, for the fall sowing of wheat and other food crops this fall. I am told, however, by the Secretary of Agriculture and other officials, who have investigated the subject, that all of that sum of $5,000,000 will be required for fall sowing by impoverished farmers, and that none of it can be spared for farmers who sow their wheat in the spring.

A great many farmers in the Western States sow all their wheat in the spring, grow spring wheat exclusively, owing to soil and climatic conditions, and I understand that the $5,000,000 generously set aside by the President will be entirely exhausted by the fall sowing of wheat and that none of it will be left for those impoverished farmers who of necessity must sow their wheat in the spring. There are thousands of farmers in Montana who, owing to soil and climatic conditions, can grow only spring wheat. They are dependent upon that crop alone for a living. There are thousands like situated in other Western States.

I have been told by the Secretary of Agriculture that if anything is to be done for such farmers, if any aid is to be extended to such of them as are not able to buy their seed wheat, of whom there are thousands, it must come from an act of Congress; that the money must be appropriated by legislation. Therefore I have offered this amendment for that purpose, as well as to enable such impoverished farmers to live and feed their live stock through the coming winter. It is of very vital importance. There is a great, crying, actual need for it, and I should like very much for my amendment to be adopted. The farmers who can only grow spring wheat and who were absolutely bankrupted and reduced to dire poverty and distress by the terrible drought and crop failure of this year, of whom there are thousands in Montana and thousands more in other Western States, are patriotic and highly desirous of raising big wheat crops next year and helping to win the war by helping to feed our workers, our civilians and soldiers, and those of our allies, but they can not do it unless they may have help. This amendment does not propose a gift to them, but only a loan. The sum of $5,000,000 is not more than is needed. I am assured by the Secretary of Agriculture it is not. Let us adopt my amendment and give this needed aid.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I make a point of order against the amendment. There has been no estimate and nothing whatever before the Congress of the United States except the speech of the Senator from Montana.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. MYERS. I appeal from the ruling of the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana appeals from the ruling of the Chair. The question is, Shall the decision of the Chair stand as the judgment of the Senate? [Putting the question.] The ayes seem to have it. The ayes have it, and the Chair is sustained.

Mr. POMERENE. I move the following amendment: On page 40, line 9, strike out "November 1"; page 41, line 2, strike out "November 1"; page 41, line 4, strike out "November 1"; and on page 41, line 18, strike out "November 1," and in lieu of the words stricken out insert "July 1" in all these cases.

The reason for the amendment in brief is this: Some time in the earlier part of the summer a bill passed Congress providing for an increase in the salary of those who were engaged in the Steamboat-Inspection Service. That is the law now; but as the pending bill is framed it only allows this increased salary which has heretofore been authorized as from November 1, 1918. If Congress was right in providing for the increase, as of July 1, 1918, it seems to me we ought to provide the fund to comply with the act of Congress as from the date it went into effect and not from November 1, 1918.

It is for that reason that I move the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to offer an amenmdent. The cause for offering the amendment is a change in the time of graduation of certain of the cadets at West Point. There is a large number of them who will graduate on the 1st of next month who will require equipment. That equipment comes from the commercial store of the academy. They have not up to the present time sufficient funds to provide for it. It costs no more money in the long run by appropriating this amount now than it would to appropriate it later. It merely makes available on the 1st of November that which becomes necessary, under the law, to equip these cadets.

I send the amendment to the Secretary's desk and ask that it be read, in order that Senators may understand it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 31, after line 21, under the subhead "Military Academy," it is proposed to insert the following:

That $150,000 are hereby appropriated for use of the treasurer, United States Military Academy, as a working fund to enable him to keep stock in cadet store, cadet mess, and cadet laundry during the continuance of the present system of cadet instruction at the United States Military Academy: Provided further, That in case a four-year course is reestablished that this amount shall remain available for use of treasurer of the United States Military Academy until such time as the equipment fund of cadets shall have reached the same amount.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, before the matter passes from the consideration of the Senate, I desire to say that the amendment has not been presented to the committee, and I have not even heard it read. I am willing for it to go to conference; but I do not want the Senator from Wyoming or anybody else to feel that I am committed to it in conference, except to give it fair consideration. I desire, in justice to myself, to make that statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Virginia desire the vote to be again taken?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. No. I am willing for it to stand, although, as I have said, I do not know what is in the amendment. However, it may go to conference, and I will see that it is given fair consideration.

Mr. WARREN. That is entirely satisfactory to me. I want to give the amendment more consideration myself, but I feel that it is important to let it remain in the bill and go to conference.

Mr. President, in order that the amendment may be understood by the Senate and also by the members of the committee of conference, I submit the following reasons for its adoption which have been furnished by the treasurer of the Military Academy:

1. Fourteen dollars is taken from the pay of each cadet per month and held until graduation, when it is delivered to him for purpose of equipping himself as an officer. This equipment fund is the capital which enables the treasurer to keep stock on hand in the cadet store, cadet mess, and cadet laundry to meet the wants of cadets. When four classes are at the academy, this equipment fund is in the neighborhood of $200,000. The graduation of the top class leaves the equipment fund of the three lower classes to carry on the business.

The recent order to graduate all but the plebe class means that all equipment must be paid out November 1—that of the plebe class amounting to very little, as they have been here but four months, and is far exceeded by their indebtedness. The order being unexpected, the treasurer finds all funds invested in stock, and further orders coming along to take care of stock, and further orders coming along to take care of what would have been probable future wants of cadets.

The present stock in store is $117,330.64; in mess, $17,148.76; and in laundry, $2,695.31; total, $137,174.71. A loan of about $100,000 will be necessary to meet the emergency of graduation.

2. Under the proposed system of training here, a class consisting of all cadets will be graduated once per year. This will mean that once per year all equipment fund will have to be paid out and the treasurer will be left without funds to keep stock in his three departments to meet wants of cadets prior and subsequent to graduation. A permanent working fund is necessary. In case of reversion to old system of four-year instruction, this working fund should remain available until the equipment fund has grown to be equal in amount.

3. It should be noted that this proposed scheme calls only for a loan, as the amount will ultimately revert to the Government.

B. A. DIXON,
Captain, U. S. A., Treasurer, U. S. M. A.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when we were considering committee amendments I thought the Senate stopped on page 45. Were all of the other amendments beginning "Judgments, Court of Claims," agreed to?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SHEPPARD in the chair). All of the other amendments were agreed to.

Mr. FLETCHER. On page 40, line 9, there is a provision in the bill under the head "Steamboat-Inspection Service," which reads:

For amount necessary to increase the compensation of officers and employees of the Steamboat-Inspection Service from November 1, 1918, to June 30, 1919, inclusive.

The law therein referred to, which was passed, provided for a readjustment of the service and for some increases, not very large, and it was approved on July 2, 1918.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I suppose the Senator from Florida was not on the floor, and I desire to inform him that an amendment at that point by the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has just been voted on and rejected.

Mr. FLETCHER. I beg pardon. I was called out of the Chamber for a time, and I had a memorandum in reference to the matter.

Mr. POMERENE. I can assure the Senator from Florida that, judging from the vote, there was no chance for the amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER. I presume the amendment was offered to strike out "November 1" and insert "July 2"?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. That is the date when the act was approved.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am sorry I was not in the Chamber when the matter was considered, but I was necessarily called out.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it is a matter of some regret to me, and doubtless my view is shared by a great many others in the country, that in a period like this it has become necessary to hold a general election. In some countries, particularly in Great Britain, it is constitutionally possible to postpone general elections until emergencies making the postponement necessary shall have disappeared. Under a written Constitution like ours the requirements of general elections are inflexible, and consequently they must be held regardless of their effect upon general conditions.

It is difficult to carry on a campaign and to evoke any public interest in a campaign so conducted in the absence of questions and issues upon which the two great parties of the country are arrayed against each other. The differences between the Republican and the Democratic Parties, however, are much more apparent than real, and the contest therefore must necessarily resolve itself into one for securing the control of the American Congress in an off year. Each party, very properly and very naturally, in appealing to the electorate, utilizes every advantage which occurs to it as available or desirable, and each may be pardoned, therefore, from my viewpoint, for taking positions which are not entirely logical and not entirely fair. That is one of the imperfections of human nature, which is quite as apparent in political parties as in individuals.

Mr. President, I have been somewhat interested in determining for my own satisfaction what differences exist between the two great political organizations of the country at this time, and I have been unable to satisfy myself that there are any of any substantial character or importance. My own view of the political situation is that the country is divided into those who are for the Government and for the prosecution of the war, and those who are not. That is a division which cleaves party lines, instead of running parallel to them. There is no lack of loyalty in the Republican Party, but there are many Republicans whose loyalty is the legitimate subject of criticism and challenge. There is no question of loyalty in the Democratic Party, but a large number of those who call themselves Democrats are equally subject to criticism as to their views and positions in the great contest now waging between the allies and Germany. I wish it were possible that the coming election could have been gauged upon such a standard and so conducted as to divide the loyal on the one side and the disloyal on the other. That, of course, is humanly impossible, since parties can not be organized to meet temporary conditions, nor can they avoid, if they are true to themselves, assertions of superiority to their opponents, which include as well the question of patriotism.

I trust, Mr. President, in what I shall have to say that I shall not say anything that can be construed as a reflection in the slightest degree upon the loyalty and patriotism of any man. The criticisms that I wish to offer are based entirely upon different considerations.

The President said in his message last May that "politics is adjourned." It was one of the statements of that illustrious statesman which I was unable to accept. Politics is never adjourned in a republic, and never ought to be. Politics is as essential to the life and the vigor and the purity of a republic conducted as politics is conducted in a country like this, or a country like Great Britain, as is oxygen to animal existence.

The opposition party in England is called the King's opposition. It is recognized as quite as useful to the Government as is the party in power. The same may be said, Mr. President, of political divisions in the United States. Inasmuch, however, as we are to have an election, and inasmuch as the electorate is being instructed, or the attempt is being made to instruct it, I think I may be pardoned for directing attention to the manner in which the so-called issue of loyalty and patriotism seems to be handled.

A Member of the other House on the 19th instant, upon the floor, complained of the Democratic plan to send posters and to post them on billboards all over the United States with statements of this sort: "Germany will say you repudiated Wilson if you elect a Congress not in sympathy with his policies," or "Washington and Lincoln were hampered by critics. Do not hamper Wilson or elect men who will not aid him win the war," and other placards of similar import. The objection of this Representative was that these placards contained an imputation of disloyalty toward Republicans, and, assuming that his criticism was true, it was eminently just, because any announcement that would arraign, as I have said, either of the great political parties as untrue and unfaithful to this great country would be cruelly and criminally untrue.

But I have noticed, Mr. President, and especially from expressions said to have fallen from the lips of the chairman of the Republican national committee, as well as from gentlemen who stand high in the councils of the party, statements of similar import and carrying a similar imputation, if there be imputation in such statements at all. Hence the evil, if it be an evil, seems to be shared in common, and doubtless will continue to be shared in common, possibly upon the theory that the man who talks the loudest will be the last man heard. Competitions in loyalty are delightful. Nothing of the sort could be or should be discouraged, except in so far as they may carry with them the sting of an inference which is unjust toward others.

Mr. President, one thing is absolutely certain, and I think I may refer to it in this connection. It is that one of the great political parties, as a party, sustains the President of the United States and the administration, and that another of the great political parties does not sustain the administration, except in so far as a common interest is concerned.

With regard to domestic affairs, the conflict is constant, and I may say perpetual. It is inevitable and could not and ought not to be avoided if it were possible to do so. It must follow, therefore, from an outside standpoint that an election that does not seem to support but on the contrary seems to be a disavowal of an existing administration must be regarded as in conflict with it, if not in enmity to it. We may know better at home, but, viewed from abroad, one may easily conclude what that view would be by imagining in a country like Germany an election which operated in times of war to change the complexion of the legislative body from one in general accord with the administration to one out of touch with it. Hence, Mr. President, that is an issue, disguise it as we may, or, if you please, a conclusion necessarily resulting from this election and one which of course is the objective sought by the contending parties.

I have, Mr. President, three bulletins released, respectively, on the 21st, 22d, and 23d of October from the Republican national congressional committee, and I suppose, therefore, they may be considered, must be considered, as official and authentic. The first reads:

The Democratic Party is committed to a free-trade policy.

That is the old, old statement which appears in every campaign, just as does the corresponding statement from Democrats that the Republican Party is committed to a high-protection policy. Hence, it is not new; but the bulletin contains a quotation from the President's peace program and includes one of the 14 terms laid down by him in his message to Congress on the 8th of January last. I read it:

The removal, as far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

That is the end of the quotation. The bulletin then proceeds:

This is a positive declaration that the treaty of peace must guarantee to Germany free trade with the United States without any tariff safeguards whatever to protect the American laborer, manufacturer, farmer, and business man from foreign competition in his home markets.

I ask to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, the remainder of the bulletin.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENET in the chair). Without objection, permission is granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Under such a policy Germany will buy raw materials in the United States, manufacture these materials in Germany, and sell the manufactured products in American markets in competition with similar products "made in America," by American manufacturers, without the slightest tariff restrictions for the protection of American labor, business, and farming.

No one doubts that in an open and unrestricted American field Germany, with her cheaper labor, will be able to dominate markets for many manufactured products in the United States and will drive similar American products out of those markets, with the ruin of American manufacturers and harm to American labor swiftly following.

American labor will never agree, and quite properly, to wage scales on a par with the comparative pittances paid to German labor before the war, which undoubtedly will be paid after the war.

The American manufacturer, with the higher wages that he must pay, can not compete with the German manufacturer in many lines if the United States is on a free-trade basis.

The greatest periods of prosperity that the United States has ever known have been Republican administrations, with a protective tariff as the chief corner stone.

The Republican Party has never been defeated on a protective-tariff issue when it presented such an issue to the electorate.

Free trade, absolute and complete, with all its tremendous ills, looms in the near future, under a continuation of Democratic rule.

A Republican House and Senate, elected in November, would be a guaranty to the people that a free tariff disaster would be prevented.

A Republican Senate would never agree to a treaty of peace giving free-trade privileges to Germany.

Reconstruction problems after the war will tax the experience and the genius of the ablest men in the United States. It is well known that most of these men are Republicans.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, the conclusion drawn in this bulletin may or may not be a correct one. I do not think it is; but I have not taken the floor for the purpose of arguing for or against it. What I want to emphasize is that it is a repudiation of one of the 14 bases for peace upon which the recent diplomatic correspondence has taken place between the German Government and our own, and that it must, therefore, be a dissent from the inclusion of such a trade-relation provision in any ultimate peace establishment which may be agreed upon between the allies and the central Empires.

To that extend it is therefore an attitude which is not in accord with the administration, and I think I may say not in accord with the allies of the administration, all of whom have approved more than once, on many occasions and in different ways, the sum total of the President's announced policy, which must therefore be considered as an international understanding.

I am free to confess, Mr. President, that, in my judgment, inasmuch as all wars have been trade wars, since and including the Napoleonic wars at least, we will not have permanent peace on earth if, after the war shall have been closed, we engage in a war of commerce based upon discriminative high tariff and other discriminations, which necessarily beget that friction and disagreement that culminate in very serious differences and afterwards in war.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I should ask him a question?

Mr. THOMAS. No; although I do not want to take very much time.

Mr. REED. The Senator has said that many wars, if not all wars, have occurred because of trade differences; but does the Senator know of any war that has been occasioned by mere differences in tariffs?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I think the present war is largely due to discrimination, which Germany sought to wipe out by the sword.

Mr. REED. Discriminations in tariffs?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. Of course, I do not mean to be understood that that is the sole cause of the war, but that it is and was substantially involved in the war. The freedom of the seas——

Mr. REED. I do not desire to take the Senator's time. I quite agree that many wars have occurred over a desire to secure trade dominance or trade monopoly or trade advantage; but I am not aware of any war that has occurred between highly civilized countries over the mere matter of a tariff.

Mr. THOMAS. No such war has occurred, Mr. President, over a mere difference in tariff rates or a conflict over tariff duties. When I say that most wars have been trade wars, I include a much larger range of causes, nearly all of them commercial and industrial, than those which are involved in the mere matter of discriminating duties.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I should like to call the Senator's attention to a public statement by Von Bernstorff, former German ambassador to the United States, of the terms of peace that Germany would have imposed on France a year and a half ago.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; I am familiar with it. It was placed in the RECORD the other day by the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER].

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I had not noticed that; but the statement of Von Bernstorff that Germany would exact free and unrestricted trade privileges of France and would impose her duties upon French products entering Germany gives the only color that I have ever seen to indicate that the Senator from Colorado is justified in the statement he has made.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, that is precisely one of the things for which Germany waged this war. The Senator is also doubtless familiar with the tentative announcement of the terms of peace made by the German Government very shortly after their big drive seemed to be so successful last spring. But, as I have said, that is one of the things which has been laid down by the President, which itself is far broader than any question of tariff or of free trade, and which has reference to the general commercial and industrial intercourse between the countries.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. THOMAS. No, sir.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator whether or not he construes the third basis of peace as laid down by the President to mean universal world-wide free trade?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not as a matter of course. I stated a few moments ago that I was not to be drawn, if I could help it, into a discussion of the old tariff and free-trade controversy.

Mr. WATSON. No, Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon; I was not seeking to engage in any controversy with the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. I am satisfied of that, of course.

Mr. WATSON. I merely wanted the Senator's view as to what that does mean.

Mr. THOMAS. My view of what it means is exactly what it says—"the removal, as far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance."

Mr. WATSON. Is one of the economic barriers a protective tariff, in the view of the Senator?

Mr. THOMAS. It may or may not be. All the countries of the world have them.

Mr. WATSON. Except one.

Mr. THOMAS. Which one?

Mr. WATSON. I do not think the policy of Great Britain could be called a protective policy. She has a very high revenue tariff, but not a protective tariff. Of course a protective tariff is an economic barrier; but I wanted to get the Senator's view, if I do not interrupt him—and the Senator is always very kind in yielding—as to whether a protective tariff is an economic barrier that the President proposes to remove by inserting in the forthcoming peace treaty a clause to that effect.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator's question deserves an answer, although entirely outside of what I intended to say. I think that the President designs a tariff that shall not be protective in the sense that it is prohibitive and irritating—at least, I hope he does—and I am satisfied that that sort of an arrangement will be perfectly satisfactory to the nations "consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance," which will be the nations now enforcing peace upon the world.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. I want to ask the Senator if he feels quite certain that the President referred, or intended to refer, to tariffs at all in that address?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know whether he did or not. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] asked me my view of it. I am unable to state what was in the President's mind, except in so far as I may be able to define the language which he used.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, will the Senator allow another interruption?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The President has always regarded the question of tariff duties as somewhat irritating, has he not?

Mr. THOMAS. He certainly has, and I would not have voted for him if he had not.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the statement that is contained in the third article of his peace suggestions had been penned by Cobden or any other free trader in the interest of a world-wide free trade, it could not have been stated stronger.

Mr. THOMAS. And if it had been penned by William McKinley it could not have been made any stronger; there is no question about that.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But, Mr. President, the Senator, of course, is unfortunate in his parallel. Such a statement never could have emanated from any protectionist who believed that trade barriers were absolutely vital to our civilization, to our employments, to our citizenship, and to the preservation of the American market place.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I recollect very distinctly what the sentiment was which was expressed by President McKinley in the last public utterance that he ever made; and I am satisfied that it had a tendency in the right direction; but my purpose in referring to this is simply to emphasize the fact that in one particular, at least, the Republican Party is at present officially opposed to one of the conditions of a universal peace, announced by the President of the United States some time ago, and which must be considered as one of the bases of whatever result may flow from existing conditions.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. I understand the Senator from Colorado to say that he does not know whether that means free trade or not.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I did not say that.

Mr. WATSON. If he does not know, how can the Republicans know?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think the Senator intends to put in my mouth words that I never uttered.

Mr. WATSON. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. THOMAS. I said I did not think it meant free trade.

Mr. WATSON. Precisely. Now, if the Senator does not know what it means, how can he impute to us a knowledge that he himself does not have, and hence charge us with hostility to a proposition when we do not know ourselves what it means?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, again I say—and I give my view of what it means—that I am satisfied that it does not mean high protection. But, answering the Senator's complaint, I may say, having read the entire bulletin from which I make this quotation, that there is no question but that the Republican Party has put upon it a definition satisfactory to it, at least, and which is the basis of its opposition, necessarily, to the administration.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me, I think the opposition of the Republican Party to that particular clause is much broader than the Senator states, because I believe it to be the position of the Republican Party to object to incorporating in any treaty that may be made growing out of this war a provision by which the economic policy of the United States shall be fixed by a foreign nation. Personally I should just as strenuously object to placing in a treaty a clause providing for a protective tariff as I should object to placing in a treaty a clause providing for free trade, because it is my contention—and I think it is the position of the Republican Party, although I have no authority to speak for it—that we of ourselves should be permitted to determine our own economic policy, free from the domination or even the dictation of any or all the other nations on earth combined.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, of course it is impossible even to allude indirectly to the tariff or free trade without getting up a discussion. Perhaps that is one of the beauties of the issue, because it always is an issue, and when we have not anything else to talk about we can always fall back upon that. But I will proceed.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not like to interrupt my friend from Colorado, but he is very generous about it.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to get through with what I have to say.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I want to see whether the Senator from Colorado seriously thinks he is doing the memory of the late President McKinley full credit when he challenges his lifelong devotion to the principles of a protective tariff by citing a speech delivered in the last year of his life providing for amicable trade arrangements so effectively reciprocal as to open new and certain markets for our labor and enable us to buy the necessaries we can not produce. This is protection, not free trade. Protection protects our labor, stimulates new enterprises at home, and yields revenue to run our Government.

I enjoyed the personal acquaintance of President McKinley for many years. I heard him upon a hundred different occasions, probably more, enunciate this great cardinal principle of his political faith; and he never wavered even in defeat in his belief that these barriers were vital to the security of the wage earner, and to the development of our domestic industries in such way as would give to us the largest possible supply of the necessities of life from our own soil. I never heard challenged—and I do not think the Senator from Colorado intentionally challenges—the constancy and fidelity of McKinley to the principle of protection to American industry and labor. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] says he hopes he does. I know that the Senator from Mississippi has been a free trader all of his life, and believes in free trade now, and he has the courage to say it, although his party is far from united on that question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I never have been a free trader, for the simple reason that I never had an opportunity to be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I have heard the Senator say that over and over again.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I never lived under a government where sufficient revenue could be furnished with free trade. If I had lived under one, I would have been a free trader long, long, long ago. I do think that one of the real mean things in the world is the commercial warfare that one nation carries on against another through tariffs and protectionism, and other things of that description; and I hope that my friend from Michigan understands me well enough to know that I hereby apologize for not being a free trader, because I never had the opportunity to be.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator does not have to apologize for not being a free trader. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD for nearly 25 years is full of his utterances in favor of free trade. I have served with him in both Houses of Congress. I have admired his career; I respect his judgment; but on this subject we are irrevocably divided. I am a protectionist, and that principle will be a living necessity here after this war shall have been won.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I repeat, Mr. President, that the only reason why I have not been a free trader is because I have never had the opportunity nor a fair and square chance to be. I have always been a citizen of a government which needed a whole lot of revenue, some of which had to be arrived at by indirect taxation. I wish to God that I were a citizen of a country that could invite the whole world's commercial peace, as well as every other sort of peace.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not think anything I said in my reference to President McKinley could be the slightest possible reflection upon his memory or upon his record. If so, I hasten to correct it. My own view is that his last speech was the greatest speech that he ever uttered, and I am satisfied that from it and from the doctrine there enunciated has come much of the remedial legislation of a tariff character that has blessed this country since that time.

I can readily understand that the President may have meant—though I am not his spokesman with regard to this particular feature of his recent proposal—that tariff duties of a nondiscriminatory character by each of the allied nations—that is to say, common and equal as to all the other nations—may have been, and probably were, in his mind at the time. I am satisfied that the interpretation given by the national Republican congressional committee is not the correct interpretation of that proposed article of peace, but, of course, it must be given that interpretation either to create an issue in the campaign or to justify dissent from the President's program.

On the 22d of October there was another political release, which I will not read in its entirety. It pays a tribute to John Sherman, the great Ohio Republican statesman, and to William McKinley, another great Republican statesman, and to William Howard Taft, still another Republican statesman, as a few illustrations of constructive Republican statesmanship. The selections were well made.

The bulletin declares, also, that—

> The Republicans consider winning the war the first great duty.

There is no issue in that. Any American with red blood in his veins, unless he has become terribly un-American in his surroundings and in his views, also considers winning the war as the first great duty.

> They worked all along toward that end, and have given greater support to war measures in Congress than the Democrats. They have supported every war activity. Before the war they asked for preparedness, which was denied them by a Democratic Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, from whom is the Senator quoting?

Mr. THOMAS. I am quoting from the Republican congressional committee's bulletin of day before yesterday.

> They are now pointing out the necessity of preparedness for peace, apparently with avail, but their patriotism, wisdom, and business ability have been called upon to help win the war. The Democrats boast—as a fake display of nonpartisanship—that they have utilized the brains and directing force of the Republicans in this war. They head the list with Taft, Hughes, and Schwab, and a long list of financiers, diplomats, soldiers, statesmen, business and professional men. The Republicans of the constructive type are doing big things at personal sacrifice, not merely holding jobs or commissions but building great fleets of ships, raising billions in taxes and liberty bonds, raising and equipping great armies, and speeding the war program.

And so they are. So also, Mr. President, are Democrats. Hence, there can be no issue there, except a vain or a forced one.

> When peace comes—and reconstruction—these constructive Republicans will be called on to solve the problems growing out of the war, and at the same time protect interests of the laborer, the manufacturer, the farmer, and the business man. This can not be done by the Democratic Party, a Democratic Party now absolutely controlled by the South.
>
> Northern, mid-western, and western Democrats have no voice in their party's policies. These policies are controlled by the Democratic Congressmen from nine Southern States. Democratic Congressmen representing northern, mid-western, and western citizens are bound hand and foot by the party caucus, which is controlled absolutely by the South.
>
> Democrats as well as Republicans outside of the South can not hope to have their great and varied interests looked after properly by Democratic representatives controlled by a southern caucus.
>
> They should vote to send Republicans to Congress who could constructively represent their districts, State, and the Nation without the bossism of the South, whose interests are vastly different from those of the North.
>
> Peace and reconstruction will bring tremendous duties—Republican statesmen would be able to properly handle the great problems.

Mr. President, I can understand how a dispute might be made by the contention that the Democratic Party is unfit to handle these great problems which are bound to arise after the war, and that only Republican statesmanship and ability will be able to deal with them. I can understand that; but to contend as an issue that one party has been more loyal and more active in its support of the administration than the other is simply to get up a childish contention, to appeal to views and to prejudices which I do not believe to be worthy of the Republican Party on a great occasion like this.

On the 23d of October we have another bulletin that was issued, beginning—

> "With the conclusion of the liberty-loan drive political activity again occupies us, and then, as now, every single act of the Republican Party in State and Nation shall be determined solely by how we can contribute most to the sum total of war good," declared Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, in a statement to-day.

Then there is a reference to New Hampshire and Wisconsin and Maine and the elections that were held there, which are said to mean that this—

> Is the people's war, and that the war must be kept out of partisan politics, and partisanship must be kept out of the war.

That is to say, the State Republican victories which have occurred since we entered this war served notice upon all that the war must be kept out of partisan politics, and partisanship must be kept out of the war, notwithstanding the bulletin of the previous day declared that the Republican Party had done more than the Democratic Party toward the prosecution of the war and the support of the administration, and therefore its candidates should be elected. If that does not intrude partisanship into the struggle, I am at a loss to know what does. I am not complaining, because I am here to say that you can not keep partisanship out of an election. You can not do it until you change human nature; and therefore I am merely stating the facts, not making any complaint.

> Notwithstanding these defeats, the Democratic high command further pursues this policy.
>
> They are circularizing the country with a pamphlet entitled "Why you should give earnest attention right now to electing a Democratic Congress." It is signed by an officer of that committee. One I have before me was sent out in a letter dated September 18, 1918, which letter is signed by an officer of the organization. In this pamphlet they say the election of a Republican Congress would be "a source of comfort and elation to the Kaiser and his cohorts."

Here is some more partisanship on the other side.

> Against this reprehensible conduct by a responsible political organization I protest, not as a Republican but as an American.
>
> Again, I say, such statements do no harm politically to the party against which they are directed. But for national reasons most important I deplore them.

And then the reasons are given why they should be deplored.

So we have this situation: With the tariff as a sort of a side issue, partially submerged, partly submarine and partly upon the surface, the Republican contention that they have done more for the prosecution of the war, and therefore the support of the administration, than the Democrats, and the Democratic contention that a Republican victory would rejoice the heart of the Kaiser. Now, we may be mistaken in our view of the manner in which a Republican triumph this fall would be received abroad. It ought not to make any difference in so far as the war is concerned. I am satisfied that a Republican Congress would see the war out, just as a Democratic Congress would see the war out. The statement that has been made here that the Republicans of this Congress have done their duty is absolutely true, with two or three exceptions, perhaps, as there are two or three exceptions on the other side.

God forbid that I should say anything that could be even indirectly construed as a criticism of the good work that has been done here conjointly by American citizens on both sides of this Chamber and on both sides of the House. The claiming of too much credit on the one hand and the effect of the election upon the other is, therefore, about the only thing between them.

The action of this responsible Democratic organization, Mr. Hays says, is reprehensible. Mr. MADDEN in the House made the same remark the other day, and made it in a very heated manner. Both regard it as a reflection upon the Americanism of the Republican Party. If we have made that mistake, however, it is because we have followed what may turn out to be a bad example, although we thought it was a good one. There are some great statesmen in the Republican Party. They arrogate to themselves superiority of wisdom and of experience, as perhaps they have a right to do; and sometimes we may be pardoned if we accept the views which they expressed on other occasions and the attitude which they occupied at other times, especially when the people have taken them at their word and acted accordingly.

Now I want to refer to the campaign of 1898. It had a great many points in common with the present campaign. The country was engaged in a war—not so great a war as the war now waging but in a very important war—with a foreign country. The country was behind the administration, without regard to politics.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. McCUMBER. Before the Senator reaches the part of his remarks under that heading, I want to ask him candidly if he believes that the last senatorial election in Wisconsin had the slightest influence on earth, one way or the other, with the German people or the German Kaiser?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I do not believe they ever heard of it.

Mr. McCUMBER. And does not the Senator really think that no other election, no matter whether the successful candidate were a Republican or a Democrat, would have any influence upon the Kaiser?

Mr. THOMAS. I have not yet come to what I think about it, but I will do so. I will say here that there is a vast difference between a solitary election of a solitary Senator and a general election affecting the whole country and the political complexion of the entire Congress.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, what senatorial election is the Senator talking about?

Mr. THOMAS. The election of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh!

Mr. THOMAS. In 1898, during the Spanish-American War, Col. Roosevelt was a candidate for governor of New York; and this is what the colonel had to say upon that subject:

> Remember that, whether you will it or not, your votes this year will be viewed by the nations of Europe from one standpoint only. They will draw no fine distinctions. A refusal to sustain the President this year will, in their eyes, be read as a refusal to sustain the war and to sustain the efforts of our peace commission to secure the fruits of war. Such a refusal may not inconceivably bring about a rupture of the peace negotiations. It will give heart to our defeated antagonists; it will make possible the interference of those doubtful neutral nations who in this struggle have wished us ill.

Again Col. Roosevelt said:

> You could get the benefits of the victories of Grant and Sherman only by reelecting Lincoln, and we will gain less than we ought from the war if the administration is not sustained at these elections.

Col. Roosevelt at that time had excellent company. Former President Harrison, pleading for the election of a Republican Congress on that occasion, was quoted by the Philadelphia North American of November 1, 1898, as saying:

> If the word goes forth that the people of the United States are standing solidly behind the President, the task of the peace commissioners will be easy, but if there is a break in the ranks—if the Democrats score a telling victory, if Democratic Senators, Congressmen, and governors are elected—Spain will see in it a gleam of hope; she will take fresh hope, and a renewal of hostilities, more war, may be necessary to secure to us what we have already won.

He also said:

> Our election results should not give or even seem to give encouragement to those who would find in our discords and divided counsels their advantages.

I now wish to quote from the distinguished leader of the minority in this Chamber, the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. The Senator delivered a speech on the 6th day of October, 1898, before the Republican State convention; and he is thus reported in the Springfield Daily Republican of the next morning:

> But there is one question on which I do desire to say a few words, and that seems to me to override all others. It is whether we shall stand by the administration and the President at this juncture. If we give a victory to his political opponents, we say not only to the United States but we say to the world, we say to the Spanish commissioners in Paris, that the people of the United States repudiated its result and repudiated the man who has led victoriously the war and is now leading us back to peace—William McKinley.

If that was true in 1898, it is true in 1918. It is more eminently true now because the war here is not over and because the comparison between the two wars makes the other too insignificant for ordinary human vision.

He said further:

> That is the great and overshadowing question to my mind. * * * Hostilities have ceased, but this war is not over. * * * But there are only two parties in the country when there is a great question like this to settle: one is the party that sustains the American President, who will do his work well, and those who do not.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon my ignorance? Who said all that?

Mr. THOMAS. The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. WILLIAMS. Who is now in this body?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes, sir; and I hope he will remain here for many years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Still a Member of this body?

Mr. THOMAS. Still a Member of this body.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. THOMAS. And, as I say, I hope he will long continue to be a Member of this body.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator, the historical aspect of the Spanish-American War has two definite and distinct angles in my mind. One was the persistent endeavor of the House of Representatives to get President Cleveland to act upon the serious questions at issue, about which he refused to interest himself, notwithstanding all the crimes that were committed against the people of Cuba by their offenders. Resolution after resolution was silently passed and quietly tabled; and if it got to the President, Mr. Cleveland, at all, nothing more was heard of it.

Now, the administration which succeeded Mr. Cleveland succeeded to the responsibilities of the Cuban situation, and met them fearlessly and courageously. I do not say that our party met them without the cordial cooperation of many Democrats, because there were many Democrats who sustained us; but Mr. McKinley's predecessor in the White House would do nothing in that situation. I speak of him not to criticize him but in the interest of historical accuracy, because I was one of the men here at that time who greatly admired Mr. Cleveland, and I think in history he will stand out for all time as a sterling American. I have nothing but words of the highest praise for him, much as I differed with him politically; but that was the situation at that time. President McKinley's predecessor had failed to act when our island neighbor was being crucified; and to go back to the people who tabled and pigeonholed relief resolutions sought to accomplish relief for Cuba in the preliminaries of the Spanish-American War would have been inexcusable.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, Mr. President, I have noticed that Cleveland is always popular with Republicans.

Mr. WILLIAMS. As a Democratic disorganizer he was a success.

Mr. THOMAS. He was a very good man, perhaps; but to my mind he will go down to history as the arch destroyer of the Democratic Party.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, that was no crime. I liked him for that, too.

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly. That is what made him popular with Republicans; certainly.

Now, whatever Mr. Cleveland's fault may have been upon this question, it was rectified by McKinley. He went to war with Spain, and had, of course, occasion to do so. He was justified, and the whole country stood behind him, with here and there an exception, as is now the case. The situation is parallel to the present, although not so imposing.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Utah

Mr. THOMAS. I do. I hope, however, this will not provoke a controversy. I want to get through.

Mr. KING. If the Senator will pardon me for just a moment, let me say to the distinguished Senator from Michigan that at the time of the Spanish-American War the Senator will remember, because he was then in the House, that when the Republicans came into power Mr. McKinley refused, as did the Republicans in the Hosue, to take any steps against Spain or to attempt to correct the evils existing in Cuba, and the Senator will remember that 87 Republicans in the House organized——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I was one of them.

Mr. KING. The Senator was one of them—organized under the name of "Republican Reconcentradoes"—and they served notice upon Mr. McKinley that unless a declaration of war was made against Spain—and that was after the Maine had been blown up—they would join with the Democrats, who were insisting upon a declaration of war, and would force some action upon the part of the Republican administration.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, I must yield to the Senator now, though I am very anxious to conclude.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Utah is partly right and partly wrong. I spoke of the attitude of the Republican House of Representatives in the Fifty-fourth Congress, and the attitude of the President of the United States at that time. We had the House of Representatives—I think the Senator from Utah was a Member of it, and I am very sure the Senator from Mississippi was.

Mr. KING. The Fifty-fifth Congress and the Fifty-sixth.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to say that upon that particular subject you did not have the House of Representatives. The Democrats, plus a lot of Republicans, had it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Mississippi was the leader of the Democrats in the House and never knew what their attitude would be. But be that as it may, the Senator from Utah is partly right and partly wrong. There was never any question about going to war from the day the Maine was blown up. I was the first caller on President McKinley the morning the news came over the wire, and Mr. McKinley said to me, as he said to other callers, "It is impossible to put this off longer, much as I dread war. I have been a soldier and know the horrors of war; and although we are not as fully prepared as we ought to be, this means war." From that time there was no question about his attitude. We did urge him, as we prodded Cleveland in the early days. President Cleveland may have been wiser than we thought, but President McKinley was wiser always than we were, and when he finally went to war he did it in a manner to command the united support of his countrymen, and he did it in a way to reflect credit upon future generations of his countrymen. There was no attempt to make it a party war. He appointed Democrats and Republicans alike to responsible commands in the Army, and even old Confederate soldiers and prominent Democrats were appointed to every branch of the public service.

Mr. THOMAS. Again, Mr. President, I want to protest that I care nothing about the policy which led to the war with Spain. I am concerned only with the attitude of the Republican Party because of that war toward the election of 1898.

Senator LODGE again, at a dinner given by the Massachusetts Republican Club on October 26, 1898, is reported in the Springfield Daily Republican the next morning as having said:

> The policy of the United States, like the policy of all great nations, has been an advancing and an extending policy, and the question that confronts us to-day is not whether we shall enter upon a new policy, but how far we shall go under the circumstances and conditions created by the war. There is nothing new in the question. It is a question of degree. How far do we want to go? There is one man who has got to deal with that question who can not meet it with empty negatives, and that is the President of the United States. I have faith in him. I believe in his Americanism, and as the Constitution has charged him with this great duty, I, as one American citizen, am prepared to stand back and allow the constitutional representative to deal with it in the face of Europe and of the world, and to settle it, and it is my desire, and I think it should be the duty of every patriot, to stand behind him and to hold up his hands and not to cross him.

Mr. WATSON. What was the date of that?

Mr. THOMAS. The 26th of October.

Mr. WATSON. Eighteen ninety-eight?

Mr. THOMAS. Eighteen ninety-eight.

Mr. WATSON. The War with Spain was then over.

Mr. THOMAS. The War with Spain was over, so far as hostilities were concerned, but the Senator has forgotten that the Senator from Massachusetts on the 6th of October said it was not over. He said "hostilities have ceased, but this war is not over."

Mr. WATSON. Precisely; and did not the question then turn upon the ratification of a treaty of peace?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; it did.

Mr. WATSON. And was not Col. Bryan then on his way from Jacksonville, Fla., where he had resigned as colonel to come——

Mr. THOMAS. That was later.

Mr. WATSON. Was it not about that time?

Mr. THOMAS. No; it was in December.

Mr. WATSON. And at the time Senator LODGE made his speech was not the question of the ratification of a treaty of peace as to what should be done with the Philippines?

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator said——

Mr. WATSON. Was not Col. Bryan opposed to dealing with the Philippines as President McKinley proposed to deal with them, and was not my friend——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the payment of money.

Mr. WATSON. And the payment of the money that we agreed to pay Spain for the Philippines. My friend from Mississippi, at that time leader of the House, made the most ringing speech he ever made against the adoption of that peace treaty and the paying of that money. The Senate, of course, had to deal with the ratification of the treaty. The Senator from Mississippi, then the gentleman from Mississippi, used the words "world powering." He coined a new word and used it over and over again. He described the attitude of the Republican Party. The whole question at that time to which Senator LODGE's speech referred was the question of a peace treaty and as to what should be done with the Philippines.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Colorado will pardon me just this far. If I am charged with the guilt or offense, whichever it may be, of having opposed paying $20,000,000 to buy the Filipinos, as Tom Reed said, at $5 a head per Filipino, I voted against it; I have always opposed it; and in this age of self-determination if I had my way at the end of this war I would let the Filipinos determine for themselves whether they would be independent or not. But this has nothing to do with the question which the Senator from Colorado is discussing. He is merely showing, from George Washington's day down to now, including George Washington's day, that it always was argued by every party that when a given party was in control during a war, to use the language of President Lincoln, it was very inadvisable to "swap horses while crossing the stream."

Now, you took every advantage during the Spanish-American War—and the Senator from Michigan knows it—of the situation and the fact that William McKinley was President of the United States and was a Republican. You made every point you could out of that fact, and you argued all the time that the American people owed it to themselves to elect Republicans to the Senate and House because a Republican was President during the war. Now you come up here with a hypocrisy that is absolutely superb and argue that if any Democrat dares say that at this time a Democrat is the President of the United States he is guilty of partisanship.

I remember the Senator, then Representative SMITH of Michigan, in the House. I remember how every day he came up with that old slogan, "McKinley President, Americanism, Republicanism. Let us see the President through. Let us stand behind him all the time, and if we do not, we are not quite loyal." Do you not remember that? Of course you do. You know it as well as I. You are not going to stand here and tell me that you deny it.

Mr. WATSON. I will tell the Senator when he gives me the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will give the Senator the time now, if the Senator from Colorado will permit it.

Mr. THOMAS. I want a little time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am speaking in the time of the Senator from Colorado. If he will permit me——

Mr. WATSON. The Senator from Colorado insists on making his own speech.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know. I am not making his speech, I am making mine, and I am challenging you to make yours.

Mr. WATSON. This is the situation——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield further?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from Colorado would never forgive either one of us for making his speech. He is so much abler than either of us.

Mr. THOMAS. I am quite willing to yield, but I assured the Senator having charge of the bill that I would only detain the Senate for three-quarters of an hour.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to hear from the Senator from Indiana on that particular question, if the Senator will permit.

Mr. WATSON. I shall be very glad to state in a few words what I have to say about it.

As far as the Spanish-American War is concerned, there was no party division. The South and North alike, Republicans and Democrats alike, were exceedingly loyal and behind the administration. That war was soon over. Then the question came as to a treaty of peace. The question came as to what disposition should be made of the Philippines. The question came as to whether or not $20,000,000 should be paid, and on that question there was a strict party division. On that question Col. Bryan left his regiment and came here to influence the Senate On that question the gentleman from Mississippi, now the Senator who stands here in our front, opposed the retention of the Philippines and the payment of $20,000,000, so he says now, and all the leaders of the Democratic Party stood squarely against the proposition. The whole of the campaign to stand by the President turned on the question of the ratification of the treaty and as to what should be done with the Philippines. That is the history of the situation.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, the Senator from Indiana is mistaken. The Senator from Mississippi, at that time a Member of the House and at that time the floor leader of the Democratic Party, took the position, and the Senator will find it in the RECORD, that the United States Government, having made the pledge to pay the $20,000,000, we ought to pay it, and that although the House had the constitutional right to object to the treaty upon that ground the moral situation was such that I would not oppose it. I made a very short and a very vehement speech in favor of the payment of the money. Now, the Senator is mistaken about that.

Mr. WATSON. Just a moment right there.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did oppose the retention of the Philippine Islands, and I oppose it now. I say now that the United States never had any moral right under God's sun to deal with $20,000,000 in the liberties of the Philippine people any more than Prussia had to deal in the liberties of Belgium to-day. I have no apology to make for that, but I did stand on the floor of the House as the Democratic floor leader and speak in behalf of the payment of the money, because we had promised it. I believe I said—I am not certain now whether I did or not, at any rate it is an old conviction of mine, and maybe I quoted it and maybe I did not—that gentlemen never quarrel about money.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am very sorry that we are getting away from the subject matter of my remarks. I am not at all concerned at present with the causes of the Spanish-American War nor with the status of that war at the time of the election of 1898. I want to say, however, in reply to the Senator from Indiana that if it were true, politically true, morally true, in 1898 that the President should receive the support of his party for its reelection to power where only a treaty was involved, then a fortiori must that argument apply in a crisis like this, where not only treaties are involved, but the fate of nations. This war is not over; it perhaps has not yet reached its supreme crisis, and upon the assumption that the arguments which I have read are correct the reason for their application now is a hundredfold greater than it was at that time.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I do not want to be misunderstood by the Senator from Colorado. If Woodrow Wilson was a candidate for reelection as President of the United States on the 5th day of November in the present international situation I would want him to win. I would not lift my finger or say one word to influence the electorate against him. I think in this world crisis he has earned the gratitude and the confidence of the American people. But it is not for him to enter my State and say who shall represent that Commonwealth in the Senate of the United States. That is our business, and may safely be left to the people of Michigan.

Mr. THOMAS. That is an entirely different question. I have not touched upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Upon that question, while I differ with some of my associates and some on the other side, I feel that wherever a State, through its representation, has been loyal to the Government in this crisis the State should be permitted to pick its representatives in its own way, without Executive interference, and I hope it will do so.

Mr. THOMAS. Now, Mr. President, I am not going to yield any more, not because I want to be discourteous to my fellow Senator, but because I must get through.

The statement made by the Senator regarding his attitude if this were a presidential election does credit to his heart and to his head. I shall not enter into the local politics of any State, neither shall I excuse or defend anything that may have been done by the Executive with regard to subjects of that sort. I am concerned with the main proposition.

I now, Mr. President, call attention to an extract from the speech of another very distinguished Member of this body, himself a great Republican leader and statesman, and entitled, and has been entitled for many years, to speak for his party. I refer to the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE.]

The Philadelphia Inquirer of October 8, 1898, has the following headings:

Sloan continues triumphal tour.
Reed's earnest appeal.

Meaning the Speaker, I presume.

He urges every man who loves his country to strengthen McKinley's hands.

Senator PENROSE said on the 21st of October, 1898, as reported in the Philadelphia Inquirer, October 22, 1898:

In a few hours President McKinley will be your guest to witness the greatest pageant the country has ever known. In his recent speeches the President has appealed not to a partisan but to a national spirit. He asks the aid of the Nation. He seeks the support of every man who believes in the result of his administration. I appeal not to the martial spirit of the Nation, great as have been our victories on sea and land. I appeal to the quiet, sober thought of the American people, who do not go to war unless for honor and humanity. I make this appeal to you that you give loyal support to President McKinley and the Republican party in the spirit he has asked for it.

He wants Pennsylvania to remain the Keystone State for the Republican party. I do not hesitate to say that no one would mourn more than he disaster to the Republican party in this State, and I say advisedly that the loyal Republicans of Pennsylvania will be found on the 8th day of November holding up the hands and assisting in guiding this Nation, through the leadership of the Republican party, to our manifest and glorious destiny.

The Senator also said:

The conditions surrounding the present congressional election are unprecedented. Before the war with Spain Republicans were willing to concede that the next House of Representatives would probably be Democratic. * * * The successful prosecution of the war raised the hope that the Republican Party might carry Congress even in an "off" year; but the war speedily ended and the reaction even against that exists in many forms. Criticism of the conduct of any war is inevitable, and criticism of the conduct of the late war is no exception. * * * It is difficult to overestimate the supreme importance—

That is pretty strong language—

of sustaining the President of the United States and the Republican Party at the present critical crisis in our foreign relations. * * * While it can not be said that there have yet been formed any issues as to the details of our policies, yet there seems to be one thing upon which we are united, and that is upon the question of our national aggrandizement.

Mr. President, the Republican Members during that campaign were practically unanimous in urging the same duty upon the voter and for the same reason.

Let me quote from the New York Tribune of the 10th of October, 1898:

Everyone knows that there are wide differences between Spain and the United States respecting terms of peace, and that Spain will be immeasurably less likely to yield if led to believe that the American people have no longer the disposition to uphold their Government; nor can any doubt that the election of a Democratic Congress or even the defeat of the President's supporters in this State would go far to create that impression in Spanish minds. Hence it is that a renewal of the war with indefinite possibilities of interference by some European powers may be among the consequences dependent upon the action of the people at the ballot box.

The New York Sun said:

We are at war with Spain, peace commissions and peace jubilees to the contrary notwithstanding. Upon President McKinley and his administration are yet the burdens and responsibilities of a state of war not yet terminated. And upon all patriotic citizens of every political party rests the duty of supporting the administration and sustain the Nation's cause against all foreign enemies, both by voice and by vote.

The Philadelphia North American, November 8, 1898:

The voters will decide to-day whether the administration of President McKinley is to be condemned and the conduct of the war vetoed.

After the election and victory had been scored the same paper said:

It is a great triumph and must be a source of deep satisfaction and profound relief to our much-tried, much-enduring President. His policies and the policies of the party which he represents have been approved. He can now proceed, encouraged and unhindered, with their execution.

The Topeka Daily Capital, a paper which I think is now published and owned by the Republican nominee for the United States Senate and to whom I shall refer before I take my seat, in an editorial on November 3, 1898, took this view:

The Republican Party puts it to the good sense of the country whether or not the election of a Congress in sympathy with a President who has shown himself equal to every test would be for the best interests of the country at this time. * * * In such a campaign no American worthy of the franchise should neglect his privilege to vote, and every man who believes in stalwart, aggressive Americanism should hold up the hands of the stalwart American in the White House and see that his friends and neighbors do the same.

This sounds very much like the announcement which was so severely criticized by the Republican congressional committee.

[From the Chicago Tribune, Sunday, Nov. 6, 1898.]

No less important is it to the future prosperity of the country that the results of the War shall be faithfully preserved. Justice to ourselves as a Nation and justice to the memories of those whose lives have been sacrificed in maintaining American honor and American rights demand it. The attitude of President McKinley on this subject has been unanimously approved by the thinking and patriotic men of the Nation and he is entitled to the election of a Congress on Tuesday next that will sustain his policy. Any other result will give encouragement to the enemies of the American Republic, not only in Spain, but in every country in Europe, and will delay infinitely the settlement of the question now under consideration by the Peace Commission in Paris. The effect would be the same that the election of a copperhead Congress would have had upon the rebel cause during the Civil War.

What intelligent, patriotic, sagacious voter—whatever his party, name, or creed—is willing to assume the responsibility of offering encouragement to the enemies of his country. Let all such—not only in every one of the 22 districts of Illinois but in every congressional district in the country—make it their duty to support candidates in harmony with the administration.

The Kansas City Star's editorial of November 3, 1898, said:

The people have stood together, regardless of politics, in supporting the Government in prosecuting the war, and there is sound logic in the contention of the Republicans that there should be no change in the control of Congress until the issues arising out of the war are settled.

We now cross the continent and take a paper on the Pacific coast, the Seattle Post-Intelligencer:

The people believe in and trust the President; they are proud of the achievements of the Army and Navy; they have confidence in the wisdom of the administration's policy and expressed their confidence by electing Members of Congress who will work in harmony with and aid the President in his plans.

The St. Louis Globe-Democrat observed:

A Congress hostile to the Executive would multiply the difficulties needlessly and dangerously.

Mr. President, I have read enough and quoted from a sufficient number of sources, I think, to justify the conclusion that if it was orthodoxy in 1898 to preach politically the Republican doctrine of standing by the President, it is not heterodoxy in 1918 for the Democratic Party to do the same thing.

It may be, Mr. President, that the arguments used in 1898 were specious and unsound. They proved conclusive. It may be that they are now specious and unsound, but I hope they will also prove conclusive, for every reason exists to-day in multiplied form which existed then for the recognition above everything else of the administration engaged in the supreme task of waging war against a public enemy.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. THOMAS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I wish to say simply this, and I want to say it as an American, not as a Democrat. I think that the arguments made by the Republican politicians during the Spanish-American War were unfair, were morally and politically wrong, and that the arguments made by us now in imitation of them are also unfair and politically wrong. When the American people go to war with a foreign nation it is the American people who are at war and not one party or the other.

I always resented the efforts of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH], and they were both guilty during the Spanish-American War of trying to make it appear to the American people that it was a Republican war. It was not. It was an American war, and they knew it as well as I did, although you made the opposite impression to the best of your ability.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. That may be true, but——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, I am not going to imitate you. I am not going to imitate your bad example. This war is the war of the American people, and you Republicans over there have been loyal by as large a majority as the Democrats over here. When you attempt to read the riot act and say that the President interferes here and there because he demanded loyalty to America and to the Republic and to the administration, unless you tell the whole truth you are guilty of partial falsehood. The President has demanded it in Georgia and in Mississippi, and other Democratic States, and he has seen that the Democrats went by the board when they were not loyal to the American Republic. He has not confined his efforts to Republican politicians or officeholders in the Republican States, and you know that as well as I do. Now, let us be fair to one another.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us be fair to the President. I beg the Senator's pardon.

Mr. THOMAS. I thought the Senator had concluded his interruption.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I beg the Senator's pardon, I thought the Senator had concluded.

Mr. THOMAS. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, as soon as the Senator does conclude, I will ask for recognition. I thought the Senator had concluded. I have a few more words to say.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall occupy the time of the Senate for only a very few moments longer. I have seen it charged in this campaign that Democrats were supporting men of questionable loyalty, and that as a consequence they should not receive the sanction of public approval. That may be true; that is to say, there may be some men here and there against whom that charge may be made; I do not know; and for the purposes of my reference to the subject, I do not care.

But surely, Mr. President, he who complains of the beam in his neighbor's eye should not overlook the mote in his own. There are three candidates for the United States Senate running on a Republican ticket in their respective States, and the charge can be made as fully and as amply against each and every one of them as it can be made against any Democratic candidate of whom I have any knowledge, and there can be no question about the loyalty, the patriotism, and the Americanism of their opponents.

In Nebraska the Republican nominee is our colleague, Senator NORRIS, a most excellent man, a most useful Senator, an honest, upright public servant; but the Senator's record for pacifism is notorious. If I remember correctly, he placed a dollar mark upon the American flag in a speech which he made in this Chamber about the time of our declaration of war. I am satisfied that he regrets having said so. He did say so, however, and the man who is running against him has no such blemish upon his record at this time. Yet for the purpose of preventing an inconclusive peace, for the purpose of upholding the hands of the Democratic President, Nebraska Republicans are asked to support the sitting Member in this body against such a man.

The Republican nominee for Senator in the State of Kansas is the present governor, a most excellent man, a man against whom no man can say a word with respect to his integrity, his honesty, or his purity of purpose. But he is, or has been at least, notorious in his pacifism. It may be that his great majority in 1916 over his opponent had something to do with the fact that he was opposed to the war. I have never heard of any charge on our part of Gov. Capper. There can be no question about the loyalty of his opponent, the sitting Member, Senator THOMPSON, but Senator THOMPSON is to be defeated according to this program in order that his opponent, Gov. Capper, may come here and uphold the arms of the administration and see to it that a victorious peace, a peace with honor, that a satisfactory solution of all the great problems involved now and after the war shall be realized.

Take the candidate in Nevada, Mr. ROBERTS, the sitting Member in the House. He voted against the declaration of war. His record is of similar import to those of the gentlemen to whom I have referred. His opponent is Senator HENDERSON, upright, loyal, patriotic, a typical western American. In God's name, if because of an implication upon some candidate supported by the Democratic Party there should be a change of conditions, our opponents surely should be free from such conditions afterwards.

In my own State a campaign is being made against my colleague to the effect that he could probably not be trusted to make a conclusive and satisfactory peace, and hence his opponent should be elected. There is a man, Mr. President, who has been as faithful, as consistent, and as continued a supporter of this administration from the time of its commencement down to its present hour as can be found; a man of whose three sons—all the children he has—two are in France and one in command of a torpedo boat aiding in the convoy of our boys across the sea. There can be no question about his loyalty, no question whatever about his attitude with regard to every problem of the war, but it is seriously——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan rose.

Mr. THOMAS. Just one moment. But is is seriously declared in the political circles of my State that perhaps such a man would weaken, that he would not be true to the interests of his own country and of the administration should he come back here with credentials entitling him to be his own successor.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I am glad to hear what the Senator from Colorado says about his colleague, who is an upright and honorable man, but, if pacifism is not the test of presidential favor, why undertake to interfere with a senatorial election in the State of Michigan?

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I am not interfering, and I expressly declare that if, because of such a charge, the party to which I belong is unworthy to remain in control of Congress, then certainly the party which is supporting three such men in different parts of the country at least is open to the same suspicion.

Now, Mr. President, I have said all that I care to say. I desired to put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the extracts which I have read and to make some remarks in connection with them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I may refer, of course, to the situation in my own State without any selfishness, because it is a well-known fact that I was not a candidate for reelection and that I have sustained the President at every turn since war was declared, and shall continue to do so until it is over; at least, so long as I stay here; but, nevertheless, I want to reassert that the tendencies of the Democratic Party seem to be pacific in one part of the country and full of virility and fight in another—rather a geographical test, made necessary by political expediency.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I had already begun what I thought would be a few uninterrupted remarks; I thought that the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] was through, and I owe him an apology for not having better sized up the situation. I have already said that I would not imitate at this time the conduct of the Republican Members of the House and of the Senate during the Spanish-American War, when they made capital out of the war in behalf of themselves and McKinley at every step, as all of you know they did.

Mr. President, I remember the most disgraceful scene that ever occurred upon this floor. I remember a scene when a United States Senator stood in his place on this floor and announced that, in his opinion, "the American flag was marked all over with the dollar mark," and yet the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Indiana are supporting that Senator right now.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, what is the party of the Senator from Mississippi doing in Michigan? They are supporting a pacifist, trying to defeat them in some and trying to elect them in others.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Henry Ford, at least, never said the American flag was marked all over with the dollar mark.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; of course not. He is a patriot and a most useful and honorable citizen, whose industrial achievements have astonished the world.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have no vote in Michigan. The only fault that Henry Ford ever committed was that he did hope for peace a long time after those of us who had better sense had despaired of it. That is all.

But he never announced, as a Senator did here on the floor, that the American flag in that controversy was covered all over with the dollar mark. He never announced, as did another Senator upon this floor, that the United States was stabbing Germany in the back while France and Great Britain were holding her down. There are a great many things that Henry Ford never did, amongst them those two things.

Mr. President, the other day I read a little Republican pronunciamento to the effect that the State of Pennsylvania was paying more income tax than all the "11 former rebel States." That is a part of the Republican propaganda to-day which has been sent abroad through the country—that Pennsylvania is paying more income tax than all the former 11 rebel States, putting in the word "rebel," you know, so as to catch the popular intonation at the North. I do not know whether it is true or not; I have never examined the statistics to see; but suppose it is true, it really proves that Pennsylvania has enjoyed a degree of prosperity, happiness, and financial enrichment that the 11 former "rebel States" have not enjoyed. If anybody from Pennsylvania thinks there is not a Mississippian who would not agree to pay his Pennsylvania taxes provided he could swap incomes, the Pennsylvanian is very much mistaken. We are perfectly willing to swap taxes and incomes, both, right now.

Now, what is all this baby act? Nonsense. It reminds me of a Kentuckian who once told me in the other House that Kentucky paid an undue share of the revenue on whisky and tobacco. Finally, when I got through with him on the floor of the House, he felt ashamed of it himself, and came to me and told me so. I said, "You may distill most of the liquor and you may raise most of the tobacco, but the people who really pay the taxes after all are the fellows who drink the whisky and who use the tobacco, and I want you to give Mississippi a little bit of the credit or discredit for a part of all that." [Laughter.] Finally he confessed that he believed he would.

Mr. President, the Senator has talked about Michigan. While I do not want to quarrel with the Senator about his colleague—and I am not going to say anything against his colleague, either, because I rather like him personally—but surely, if the Senator goes back to McKinley's time and the time of the Spanish-American War, and will count himself as a Republican at that time and his colleague as a Democrat, I think WILLIAM ALDEN SMITH, the Senator from Michigan, would have a perfect contempt for me if I did not say something about his colleague; but I am not going to do it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator can not say anything except good about my colleague, whose public record is creditable alike to himself and his country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, I may say that Mr. LENROOT cast a great many votes in the other body that were not in accord with yours or mine.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, Mr. President, the Senator is aiming at the Senator from Wisconsin, not my colleague, Senator TOWNSEND.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Votes that were not in accord with this war, and which were not in keeping with the spirit of this war; and the Senator from Michigan knows it as well as I do.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No, Mr. President, I do not know it. I deny that statement; it is not true. In the first place, he did not come to the House until the War with Spain was practically over. The Senator from Mississippi is mistaken and does my colleague an injustice.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about the Spanish-American War; I am talking about this war.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Well, Mr. President, he was in the Senate then.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He was not. He was in the other House during the first part of it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I beg the Senator's pardon. The Senator's memory is badly at fault.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can I be that much mistaken?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Mr. President, I will tell you what is the matter with the Senator. Time has outrun him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think I remember that your colleague voted against conscription and against the selective draft and against the ship-purchase bill.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. In the House of Representatives?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes. Am I mistaken? If I am, I want to apologize.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is mistaken; he is dreaming.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I really did not know it. I thought I was right about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is mistaken, and I know he will be glad to make the correction.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am very glad to make any correction.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The European war has been going on about four years.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean our part of the war. I am not talking about the war from its commencement.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Our own part of the war has been going on about a year and a half, and my colleague has been here for seven years, so that the Senator is greatly mistaken about that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not know the Senator's colleague had been here for six years.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Yes, Mr. President, and his record in this war is as straight as a gun barrel and as clear as a bell. The Senator from Mississippi is greatly in error.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have myself been here ever since. The Senator is simply mistaken about it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. If the Senator will pardon me for one word about Michigan, I am not going to say anything in criticism of the candidates for Senator in Michigan—neither Mr. Ford nor Mr. Newberry. They are both honorable men.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have not referred to them.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I would not say anything against either of them, but the Democratic Party were guilty of a form of political kleptomania when they took their candidate for Senator out of the neutral zone of national affairs and made him the unwilling and exclusive candidate of the Democratic Party.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, the opening remarks of the Senator from Michigan led to a very "lame and impotent conclusion." He first said he did not want to say anything, and then he said a good deal about Mr. Ford. I shall not reply to it, for I do not care anything about the fight in Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator from Mississippi is scheduled for that fray. I hope he will talk free trade there as he does here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Never mind about that, I am talking for myself now, not for somebody in Michigan. I do not know who they are and do not know what they said.

If I had to say anything about it, if I were to open my front door with an innocuous observation, as the Senator did, and then close the front door with a slam in the face of everybody, I would say that the Republican candidate in Michigan had spent a whole lot of money; but I do not want to say that; I want to keep it in reserve.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then, do not say it, because the Senator is again wrong.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will not take it back, because it is true.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; the Senator is wrong again.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Am I?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Republican candidate for Senator in Michigan says he has not spent a dollar, and says so in his affidavit

Mr. WILLIAMS. Well, the other fellows have spent it for him, then.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. A candidate can not always control his friends.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. One word more; I am going to say this, that Mr. Newberry is an honorable, upright, high-minded man, served his country in the War with Spain, and was Secretary of the Navy in the Cabinet of President Roosevelt. He is now a prominent officer in the Navy and has two sons in the Army.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know a thing about him; I never even heard of him until he became a candidate.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Oh, the Senator from Mississippi is facetious.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But I never heard of him, although that may have been my fault. There are a whole lot of people down here in the departments that I never heard of. I met one this morning when I went to the War Department who I did not know was in existence, but he was Assistant Secretary of War. Now, however, the Senator tells me that Mr. Newberry did not spend all this money; that his friends spent it for him.

Mr. President, I want to say that when a fellow spends his own money for office I have some respect for him, because it is his; it is his slave; it is his pocketbook; and he has a right to do what he pleases with it, provided he does not do anything unlawful; but when he becomes a cozener upon his friends and sponges upon them to the tune of a couple of hundred thousand dollars, or something mighty near like it, then I want to know who is going to be elected to the office when he is nominally elected—he or the men who contributed the money?

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How much did Col. House contribute to the compaigns in 1912 and 1916?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, I do not know.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How much was contributed by Jones, of Illinois, who was put on the Federal Trade Commission and rejected by the Senate? But why should I pursue a theme so inexhaustible and a custom so well recognized by all parties? I deplore the use of money in politics, but the habit is quite general, as we all know.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The voice is the voice of the Senator from Michigan, but the feel is the feel of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN].

Mr. President, I do not know anything about that; I do not care anything about it; I am making no attack upon this man Amsberry, whom the Senator has mentioned. I know nothing about him and never heard of him until about two weeks ago when his name was mentioned in connection with a couple of hundred thousand dollars of campaign expenditures. I do not even know whether the charge is true, but the Senator tells me now that the man did not put up his own money, but that other people put it up for him.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. No; Mr. President, I did not even say that the Senator was drawing on his imagination.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought the Senator said his friends had done it.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I know nothing about money in politics personally and have never used it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not talking about your using money in politics; you never had it to use.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator is at last right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not at any rate. I thought you were in the same class that I was—each equally "poor and honest."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Possibly, although the Senator from Mississippi takes a great deal of pride in parading his poverty, and I find some difficulty in concealing mine. That is the difference between us. [Laughter.]

Mr. WILLIAMS. Now, Mr. President, I am not attacking this man Fullberry at all; I do not know anything about him. I am just saying that if a man spends his own money to get elected to office, it is at least his own money, and when he is elected to office he himself is elected, but that when a man spends the money of some one else to be elected to office I should like to know who is elected, he or the fellow who contributes the money? Nominally, of course, he is elected; but really, behind everything, the fellow who contributes the cash holds the office.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The Senator can find innumerable instances in this administration where contributors have been rewarded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not doubt it. I am not contending for one moment that Democrats are saints or Sunday-school teachers. They are about as wicked as you are, and mighty nearly as wicked as I am, and a whole lot of them are mighty near as wicked as this man Comeberry; but all the time, at least, they step out into the front and stand the punishment for their sins. A gentleman Democrat, you know, has this much about him, that whatever else he may be, he is not a hypocrite; he just stands out and takes his punishment.

Now, what I was calling attention to was that this man Mossberry had not even spent his own money, but he had spent the money of a lot of other people who had contributed, and just about the time that the Senator from New Jersey stepped up to give you those few pieces of information about people from other States who had also spent money.

I was thinking about that, and I also want to apologize to you personally now. I really thought that you and I were both "poor, but honest," but now you tell me that you are not poor at all. Did you not? Very well, then.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Poor, but proud.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At any rate, I thought that we were both in that old, honored class. You know I never read an old novel without noticing two sweet things; one of them begins with the hero telling that he is poor but honest, and I thought that that applied to both of us.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. The hero was right.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Not only the honest part, but the poor part; and then, at the end of the novel it is always said that they remained "happily married forever afterwards," which is also a very large invention of the artist's imagination. I thought we were both in that class.

Now, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We are not ready for that yet.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. We have got to pass the appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well; I withdraw the motion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill has been reported to the Senate as amended. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate request a conference with the House of Representatives on the bill and amendments and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WARREN the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I desire to say concerning the retirement bill that, as Senators know, it has been before the Senate for a number of days and has come to the point of a vote. I believe there is one amendment still pending, but none others have been offered, and I wish to appeal to the Senate for the early passage of the measure. I desire very much to go home; I made my arrangements a number of days ago to go home, and feel that I should do so; yet I can not do so as long as this vote is not taken. I ask the Senate, therefore, to let this bill come to a vote this afternoon.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I very much regret that I can not consent to have a vote upon this bill at this time and, very briefly, for this reason: There will be another amendment offered. My present intention, at least, is to offer as a substitute for the pending bill the bill reported out by the same committee two years ago or thereabouts. I am having prepared now a comparative statement bearing upon the cost of these two bills to the Government. This statement, in part, was promised me to-day, but I know that the actuary who has the matter in charge has been very busy and has not been able to complete it.

I am just as much in favor of a retirement bill as is the Senator from Tennessee, but I prefer the plan which was reported by the committee two years ago. This is a very serious move on the part of the Congress; it ought not to be passed until there has been a full consideration of it; and I trust that the Senator from Tennessee will not unduly insist on the passage of the bill.

Mr. McKELLAR. As I understand, the Senator desires to secure some figures and to discuss the matter after he receives those figures. May I ask if the Senator feels that he will have those figures on Monday, and can we have a vote at that time?

Mr. POMERENE. I can not say as to that. There has been rather an understanding that the Senate would adjourn or recess. I have a number of engagements which will take me all of next week. I do not know whether or not I can be here on Monday, but I do not think that this legislation is going to suffer if there shall be a few days' delay. This matter can be taken up after the recess and can be disposed of in a very short time. I shall not ask for any undue delay; but I do think it is a serious proposition, and it ought to be very seriously considered by the Senate before we go to the extent of adopting a system one-half the cost of which is to be paid by the Government. It would be a most serious drain upon the finances of the country.

Mr. McKELLAR. I desire to say that the bill has been before the Senate now for about 10 days or 2 weeks and has been the unfinished business for some time. It has been read; it has been gone over; and the report on it has been available for quite a while. The question has been discussed for the last 20 years, as a matter of fact, and I presume every Senator has determined it for himself and has fixed views as to how he is going to vote. The bill is up to the very point of voting now. The only amendment of which I have heard is the pending amendment, to which I shall not make any serious objection; and there is no reason why the bill should not be voted upon in five minutes.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Except for the fact, if the Senator will allow me, that there are a number of Senators who are not ready to vote; and if the effort were made to vote now they would wish to debate it long enough to give time to enable others to come in. There are a number of us who have no idea of voting on this bill now, and will not vote for it as it stands. We have been busy with other matters. I know three members of the Finance Committee who have been so occupied with the revenue bill that they have not had a chance to study the bill which the Senator from Tennessee has in charge.

Mr. McKELLAR. I have no desire whatever to cut off any Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We want to know what it is going to cost; we want to study it. I do not mean the Senator has not presented the bill, but we have been so absorbed in other work that we have had no chance to digest it.

Mr. McKELLAR. If the Senator, then, thinks it is of enough importance, it is a matter for him to examine into, I think, and not ask the Senate to wait day after day and week after week.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are some of us who do not think the Senate is really in any hurry about passing the bill; certainly not until they have had an opportunity to examine and study it.

Mr. McKELLAR. I am quite sure of that. I think there has been a filibuster for the past several days, and perhaps for the last week or two.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not think the Senator means that exactly; there has not been any filibuster about it at all.

Mr. McKELLAR. Well, there seems to be an understanding not to vote, if it can be avoided.

Mr. POMERENE. This report was not presented while I was present in the Senate, and, in fact, I knew nothing about it until after I had gone to Ohio in connection with the liberty loan campaign. I came back here and found that it was the unfinished business. There has been a very limited discussion of this bill, and I am satisfied that it has not been given by many Senators the attention that it ought to have and that they will give it if they have an opportunity to do so.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from Ohio and to the Senator from Georgia that I am perfectly willing to give any reasonable time if they will fix a time when we can vote. I do not think, however, that the bill ought to be kept before the Senate day after day, week after week, and perhaps month after month, as the unfinished business without action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not ready myself to give consent as to a time to vote. I do not know enough about the matter, and other Senators do not. How much is it going to cost?

Mr. McKELLAR. I have explained that very fully. It is going to cost about $18,000,000 a year, of which the employees are going to put up half and the Government is going to put up the other half. I will say to the Senator, however, that the $9,000,000 that the Government pays will come back in increased efficiency in this way, and I can show it to the Senator.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I understand that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him? It is important that we should have an executive session, and it is impossible to reach an agreement to-night upon this matter.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand that, and I am going to yield for that purpose; but, if possible, I think we ought to come to some agreement. I want to ask for a unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is impossible to-night. We can not do anything along that line to-night.

Mr. McKELLAR. What I want to do is to fix some future date when we can vote.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We can not do it to-night without a roll call.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. There are half a dozen of us who would object to fixing a time to vote. We just have not had a chance to study the measure.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, the only thing I can say is that I hope to keep the bill before the Senate until we do get a vote on it, and I shall do everything in my power to keep it before the Senate until we get a vote on it. I think we are entitled to a vote, and I do not think Senators ought to ask for continual postponements simply because they have not examined into it. I think they ought to examine into it. It is an important matter, and I hope they will examine into it. I want them to examine into it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. We have been doing something more important.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session, the doors were reopened.

RECIPROCAL MILITARY SERVICE WITH ITALY.

During executive session the following convention was ratified, and, on motion of Mr. HITCHCOCK, the injunction of secrecy was removed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, to receive the advice and consent of the Senate to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Italy, signed on August 24, 1918, stipulating for the reciprocal military service of citizens of the United States in Italy and Italian subjects in the United States.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, October 14, 1918.

The PRESIDENT:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President with a view to its transmission to the Senate, if his judgment approved thereof, to receive the advice and consent of that body to its ratification, a convention between the United States and Italy, signed at Washington on August 24, 1918, stipulating for the reciprocal military service of citizens of the United States in Italy and Italian subjects in the United States.

This convention has been negotiated in conjunction with the War Department and has its approval.

Respectfully submitted.

ROBERT LANSING.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, August 28, 1918.

The President of the United States of America and His Majesty the King of Italy being convinced that for the better prosecution of the present war it is desirable that citizens of the United States in Italy and Italian citizens in the United States shall either return to their own country to perform military service in its army or shall serve in the army of the country in which they remain, have resolved to enter into a convention to that end, and have accordingly appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America, Robert Lansing, Secretary of State of the United States, and His Majesty the King of Italy, Count Vincenzo Macchi de Cellere, ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary to the United States, who, after having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in proper form, have agreed upon and concluded the following articles:

ARTICLE I.

All male citizens of the United States in Italy and all male citizens of Italy in the United States shall, unless before the time limited by this convention they enlist or enroll in the forces of their own country or return to the United States or Italy, respectively, for the purpose of military service, be subject to military service and entitled to exemption to discharge therefrom under the laws and regulations from time to time in force of the country in which they are: Provided, That in respect to citizens of the United States in Italy the ages for military service shall be the ages specified in the laws of the United States prescribing compulsory military service, and in respect to Italian citizens in the United States the ages for military service shall be for the time being 20 to 44 years, both inclusive.

ARTICLE II.

Citizens of the United States and Italian citizens within the age limits aforesaid, who desire to enter the military service of their own country, must enlist or enroll, or must leave Italy or the United States, as the case may be, for the purpose of military service in their own country, before the expiration of 60 days after the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention, if liable to military service in the country in which they are at said date; or if not so liable, then, before the expiration of 30 days after the time when liability shall accrue; or, as to those holding certificates of exemption under Article III of this convention, before the expiration of 30 days after the date on which any such certificate becomes inoperative unless sooner renewed; or, as to those who apply for certificates of exemption under Article III, and whose applications are refused, then before the expiration of 30 days after the date of such refusal, unless the application be sooner granted.

ARTICLE III.

The Government of the United States and the Government of Italy may, through their respective diplomatic representatives or by other authorities appointed for that purpose by the respective Governments, issue certificates of exemption from military service to citizens of the United States in Italy and Italian citizens in the United States, respectively, upon application or otherwise, within 60 days from the date of the exchange of ratifications of this convention or within 30 days from the date when such citizens become liable to military service in accordance with Article I, provided that the applications be made or the certificates be granted prior to their entry into the military service of either country. Such certificates may be special or general, temporary or conditional and may be modified, renewed, or revoked, in the discretion of the Government granting them. Persons holding such certificates shall, so long as the certificates are in force, not to be liable to military service in the country in which they are.

ARTICLE IV.

The Government of the United States and the Italian Government will, respectively, so far as possible, facilitate the return of citizens of Italy and of the United States who may desire to return to their own country for military service, but shall not be responsible for providing transport or the cost of transport for such persons.

ARTICLE V.

No citizen of either country who under the provisions of this convention enters the military service of the other shall by reason of such service be considered, after this convention shall have expired or after his discharge, to have lost his nationality or to be under any allegiance to the United States or to His Majesty the King of Italy, as the case may be.

ARTICLE VI.

This agreement while in force holds in abeyance any provisions inconsistent therewith in the treaty of February 26, 1871, or in any other treaty between the United States and Italy.

ARTICLE VII.

The present convention shall be ratified by the President of the United States of America by and with the advice and consent of the Senate of the United States and by His Majesty the King of Italy, and the ratifications shall be exchanged at Washington or at Rome as soon as possible. It shall come into operation on the date on which the ratifications are exchanged and shall remain in force until the expiration of 60 days after either of the contracting parties shall have given notice of termination to the other, whereupon any citizen of either country incorporated into the military service of the other under this convention shall be, as soon as possible, discharged therefrom.

In witness whereof the respective plenipotentiaries have signed the present convention and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in duplicate at Washington the 24th day of August, in the year of our Lord 1918.

ROBERT LANSING. [SEAL.]
MACCHI DI CELLERE. [SEAL.]

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, October 28, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate October 24, 1918.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Alfred Franklin, of Phoenix, Ariz., to be collector of internal revenue for the district of New Mexico, in place of Lewis T. Carpenter, resigned.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Edwin R. Holmes, of Yazoo City, Miss., to be United States district judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi, vice Henry C. Niles, deceased.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

Harvey A. Baker, of Providence, R. I., to be United States attorney, district of Rhode Island. A reappointment, his term having expired.

Edward C. Day, of Helena, Mont., to be United States attorney, district of Montana, vice B. K. Wheeler, resigned.

John E. Laskey, of the District of Columbia, to be United States attorney, District of Columbia. A reappointment, his term having expired October 22, 1918.

Myron H. Walker, of Grand Rapids, Mich., to be United States attorney, western district of Michigan. A reappointment, his term having expired.

UNITED STATES MARSHAL.

James A. Baggett, of Big Spring, Tex., to be United States marshal, northern district of Texas, vice John L. Terrell, deceased.

CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

James P. Connolly, of Omaha, Nebr., to be clerk of the United States Court for China.

COAST GUARD.

First Lieut. Philip H. Scott to be a captain in the Coast Guard from September 27, 1918.

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Coast Guard from September 27, 1918:

Wales A. Benham and
Raymond L. Jack.

The following-named cadet engineers to be third lieutenants of engineers in the Coast Guard from the 1st day of October, 1918:

Louis B. Olsen,
Joseph H. Seymour,
Roger C. Heimer,
Laurence G. Bean,
William J. Kossler,
Joseph S. Walker,
Lester E. Wells,
Ulysses V. Henderson, and
Henry G. Kunz.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Dr. Bertrand Earle Roberts to be assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to take effect from date of oath.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY FOR THE PERIOD OF THE EXISTING EMERGENCY.

To be lieutenant generals with rank from October 16, 1918.

Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, United States Army.
Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard, United States Army.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be majors with rank from August 3, 1918.

Capt. Herbert L. Quickel.
Capt. Chester D. Allen.
Capt. David E. Smith.
Capt. Leon A. Fox.
Capt. Charles M. Hunter.
Capt. Rossner E. Graham.
Capt. Joseph H. Francis.
Capt. Charles K. Berle.
Capt. George C. H. Franklin.
Capt. William T. Weissinger.
Capt. Samuel M. Browne.
Capt. Frank L. Cole.
Capt. Gerald D. France.
Capt. Miner F. Felch.
Capt. Rowland D. Wolfe.
Capt. Bascom F. Morris.
Capt. Clarke Blance.
Capt. William A. Foertmeyer.
Capt. Cornelius O. Bailey.
Capt. Max R. Stockton.
Capt. Frank C. Griffis.

Capt. Frederick H. Mills.
Capt. Henry C. Bierbower.
Capt. Val E. Miltenberger.
Capt. Edgar F. Haines,

To be majors with rank from September 18, 1918.

Capt. John P. Kelly.
Capt. Edgar J. Farrow.
Capt. Herbert L. Freeland.

To be captains with rank from August 3, 1918.

First Lieut. Herbert L. Quickel.
First Lieut. Chester D. Allen.
First Lieut. David E. Smith.
First Lieut. Leon A. Fox.
First Lieut. Charles M. Hunter.
First Lieut. Rossner E. Graham.
First Lieut. Joseph H. Francis.
First Lieut. Charles K. Berle.
First Lieut. George C. H. Franklin.
First Lieut. William T. Weissinger.
First Lieut. Samuel M. Browne.
First Lieut. Frank L. Cole.
First Lieut. Gerald D. France.
First Lieut. Miner F. Felch.
First Lieut. Rowland D. Wolfe.
First Lieut. Bascom F. Morris.
First Lieut. Clarke Blance.
First Lieut. William A Foertmeyer.
First Lieut. Cornelius O. Bailey.
First Lieut. Max R. Stockton.
First Lieut. Frank C. Griffis.
First Lieut. Frederick H. Mills.
First Lieut. Henry C. Bierbower.
First Lieut. Val E. Miltenberger.
First Lieut. Edgar F. Haines.

To be captains with rank from September 18, 1918.

First Lieut. John P. Kelly.
First Lieut. Edgar J. Farrow.
First Lieut. Herbert L. Freeland.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Acting Pay Clerk Robert G. Robeson to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 15th day of August, 1918, to correct the date from which he takes rank as previously confirmed.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 15th day of September, 1918:

Clifford W. Waters and
Michael A. Sprengel.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 1st day of October, 1918:

William Elliott,
Joseph E. Ford,
Frank M. Sherrill,
James E. Hunt,
William R. Diehl,
Hugh J. McManus,
Aner Erickson,
William E. Woods,
Jesse W. Hilts,
Roe L. Flowers,
Olaf Olsen,
Alexander W. Urquhart,
Leo A. Ketterer,
John J. Carroll,
Erwin A. McKee,
Edward H. Hulit,
Nicholas A. Brown,
Tate Mayhall,
George L. Aulmann,
John W. Overand,
Evans D. Steger,
Howard N. Hill,
Charles H. Converse,
Alonzo A. Munsell,
William R. Davidson,
Leo V. Flavell,
William M. Rogers,
Samuel R. Ullman,
Archie J. Lourie,
Isidore R. Meyer,
Cornelius A. Brinkmann,
Gilbert A. Jones,
Albert W. Alderd,
Charles H. Cameron,
Paul J. Weiss,
David A. Cain,
Thayer B. Thomas,
Jacob H. Kyger,
Joseph T. Lareau,
Marion McCray,
William J. Martin,
Paul K. Coons,
Roy L. Koester, and
James A. Harris.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of September, 1918:

Clyde D. Dahlman,
Carl Axelson,
Levi C. Houston,
Albert A. Elliott,
William S. Johnson,
Peter P. Zeller,
John R. J. Le Roy,
Cornelius J. O'Connor,
Frederick A. Olsen,
William G. Sullivan,
John J. Dallier,
Ernest C. Fiedler,
John Francis Shea,
Frank E. Powers,
John S. Bessent,
Clyde W. Jordan,
John F. Welch,
Charles E. Carlson,
Thomas J. Costello,
Edward B. Peterson,
Charles R. Jeffs,
Thomas J. Quinn,
Frank P. Moore,
Albert J. Wheaton,
Glenn C. Provost,
Arthur Brown,
Charley F. Martin,
Arthur S. Fenton,
Merion E. Hair,
Julius J. Lorzing,
Clinton W. Gray,
Edward L. Gench,
George L. Morin,
William R. Simpson, jr.,
Luttie E. Tappen, and
Clarence E. Young.

The following-named ensigns of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of September, 1918:

Robert A. McCloud,
Philip L. Emerson,
Rowland G. Evans, and
William E. Clow, jr.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of October, 1918:

Fred A. Luenser,
Clyde W. Haskins,
Charles E. Chamberlain,
Calvin A. Cole,
Guy R. Bostain,
Leo L. Waite,
Roy A. Jones,
Lawrence S. Tichenor,
Wallace Cooper,
Walter A. Irwin,
Christian W. Manegold,
Wilfred G. Lebeque,
Frank L. Burgess, and
George R. Milbourn.

The following-named enlisted men to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of October, 1918:

Elmer D. Lundberg,
Charles C. Gillis,
Carl B. Fields, and
Philip H. Taft.

The following-named ensigns of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of October, 1918:

Henry R. Wharton, jr.,
Donald D. Leonard,
Ford K. Lucas,

Julian P. Van Vorst,
Joseph R. Tobin,
Abraham S. Lewis,
Charles G. Lade,
Carletin H. Crawford,
Roy O. Hill,
Thomas F. Kilkenny,
Gordon J. Morrow,
Thomas R. Wells,
Thomas A. West,
Travis F. Beale,
Edgar R. Hill,
Clinton E. Shepard,
Ralph Hicks,
Lloyd M. Thornton,
Ned L. Chapin,
Harold C. Nye,
Hermann P. Knickerbocker, and
Arthur G. Latimer.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of August, 1918:

Philip R. Baker,
Harvey S. Haislip,
Harrison R. Glennon,
Ralph E. Dennett,
George F. Parrot, jr.,
Charles G. McCord,
Alfred S. Wolfe,
Ralph C. Lawder,
Eugene T. Oates,
Roy W. Lewis,
Marion C. Cheek,
Richard S. Field,
Robert P. Molton, jr.,
William J. Butler,
Robert H. English,
Jay K. Esler,
George D. Murray,
Carroll Q. Wright, jr.,
Oliver M. Read, jr.,
Joseph McE. B. Smith,
George J. McMillin,
William H. O'Brien, jr.,
Howard F. Kingman,
Howard S. Keep,
James G. B. Gromer,
Bushrod B. Howard, and
Rivers J. Carstarphen.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Calvin H. Cobb,
Robert B. Simons,
Lee C. Carey,
Norman Scott,
Glenn A. Smith,
Donald C. Godwin,
Richard P. Myers,
Webb C. Hayes,
Howard D. Bode,
Jay L. Kerley,
Harold E. Snow,
Robert M. Doyle, jr.,
Richard H. Booth,
Morton L. Deyo,
Harold T. Bartlett,
Robert M. Hinckley,
Ralph S. Parr,
Shirley A. Wilson,
Charles H. McMorris,
John A. Byers,
Virgil C. Griffin, jr.,
John H. Holt, jr.,
Henry M. Kieffer,
William A. Corley,
Benjamin Perlman,
Howard H. Good,
Ernest G. Small,
Carleton H. Wright,
Donald Boyden,
Robertson J. Weeks,
Herman E. Fischer,
Mark W. Larimer,
Willard E. Cheadle,
Edward P. Nickinson,
Thomas L. Gatch,
Harry G. Patrick,
Alfred E. Montgomery,
Andrew C. Bennett,
Frederick Baltzly,
Allen H. Guthrie,
Eugene P. A. Simpson,
Oliver W. Bagby,
Lawrence P. Bischoff,
James C. Clark,
James C. Monfort,
Robert D. Moore,
Carl G. Gilliland,
Harold Dodd,
Whitley Perkins,
Warren A. Shaw,
Robert A. Hall,
Guy C. Hitchcock,
Anton B. Anderson,
Ralph S. Wentworth,
George L. Woodruff,
Mahlon S. Tisdale,
Schuyler Mills,
Edmund A. Crenshaw, jr.,
James L. King,
William D. Taylor,
Davis De Treville,
Homer C. Wick,
John P. Dalton,
Louis P. Wenzell,
Robert S. Haggart,
Raymond E. Kerr,
Philip Van Horn Weems,
George H. Fort,
Lunsford L. Hunter,
Earnest W. Broadbent,
Forrest U. Lake,
Robert R. Thompson,
Elliott Buckmaster,
Nelson W. Hibbs,
Emory P. Eldredge,
Albert B. Sanborn,
Ellis M. Zacharias,
Clarence Gulbranson,
Wentworth H. Osgood,
Donald F. Patterson,
Harold B. Grow,
Donald W. Hamilton,
Herbert G. Gates, jr.,
Heister Hoegewerff,
John H. Falge,
Louis E. Denfeld,
Ralph W. Holt,
George W. D. Dashiell,
Emory W. Coil,
Nathan B. Chase,
George W. La Mountain,
Alexander W. Loder,
Harold W. Scofield,
Carroll M. Hall,
William S. Hogg, jr.,
Beriah M. Thompson,
John L. Fox,
Earl R. Morrissey,
Stephan B. Robinson,
William G. Greenman,
Harold H. Little,
Horatio J. Peirce,
Hamilton Harlow,
Hugh C. Frazer,
Thales S. Boyd,
James A. Crutchfield,
Daniel E. Barbey,
Charles P. Mason,
John J. Brown,
Grady B. Whitehead,
Carl K. Martin,
Campbell D. Edgar,
Harry P. Curley,
John P. Bowden,
De Witt C. Ramsey,
Baylis F. Poe,
Roscoe E. Schuirman,
Charles K. Osborne,

Abraham C. Ten Eyck,
Ingram C. Sowell,
Francis E. M. Whiting,
Charles A. Lockwood, jr.,
John K. Richards, jr.,
William H. Burtis,
Stanley G. Womble,
Paul S. Theiss,
John Wilbur,
Charles S. Alden,
Robert E. P. Elmer,
Charles F. Greene,
George S. Gillespie,
Garnet Hulings,
Charles W. McNair,
Otto M. Forster,
Louis R. Ford,
Leonard N. Linsley,
William H. P. Blandy,
Henry L. Abbott,
James C. Jones, jr.,
Elmer L. Woodside,
Herman E. Kelsker,
Glenn B. Davis,
Bruce G. Leighton,
Palmer H. Dunbar, jr.,
Roy J. Wilson,
Ray H. Wakeman,
Carl E. Hoard,
Harold C. Van Valzah,
Charles N. Ingraham,
Adolph V. S. Pickhardt,
Stewart F. Bryant,
Paul A. Stevens,
Kenneth R. R. Wallace,
George W. Wolf,
William B. Jupp,
Robin B. Daughtry,
William I. Causey, jr.,
Walter Seibert,
Frank L. Johnston,
Richard H. Knight,
George L. Greene, jr.,
Hugh L. White,
Reginald S. H. Venable,
Norman C. Gillette,
John A. Brownell,
Thomas Shine,
Roy Dudley,
Laurence Wild,
Lloyd R. Gray,
Herbert K. Fenn,
Solomon H. Geer,
Paul Hendren,
Chapman C. Todd, jr.,
Henry M. Briggs,
Paul Cassard,
Joseph Y. Dreisonstok,
Walter O. Henry,
John M. Kates,
Carl T. Hull,
Eric F. Zemke, and
George M. Tisdale.

Lieut. Edward J. O'Keefe to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 27th day of September, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of August, 1918:

William E. O'Connor,
William Twigg, jr.,
Frederick R. Kalde,
Burton W. Lambert,
Allen I. Seaman,
William D. Dadd,
Charles Swanberg,
Malcolm C. Davis,
William H. Muehlhause,
Leroy Neil,
Oscar D. Parker,
John A. Ward,
John C. Hines,
John Gallagher,
George W. Robbins,
Cyrus S. Hansel,
Ernest A. Healy,
Frederick G. Keyes,
William Eberlin,
Frederick Petry,
John Meyer,
Frederick Evans,
Godfrey P. Schurz,
Clarence L. Tibbals,
Thomas J. Bristol,
William Taylor,
Michael J. Breshahan,
Lafayette P. Guy,
Edmond Delavy,
Frank J. Mayer,
Horace DeB. Dougherty,
James J. Joyce,
Joseph A. Rasmussen,
Warner K. Bigger,
Frank Schultz,
Joseph Sperl,
David F. Mead,
Henry A. Lowell,
Charles Antrobus,
Oliver T. Miller,
August Logan,
John J. Coyle,
George F. Blass,
Walter S. Belknap,
George C. Lacock,
Anton Hengst,
John W. Boldt,
Fred San Soucie,
Howard H. Chambers,
Percy R. Abrams,
Vincent F. Le Verne,
Charles E. Briggs,
George B. Llewellyn,
William C. Milligan,
Frederick J. Legere,
James Reilly,
John H. MacDonald,
William A. James,
William A. Fulkerson,
Jerry C. Holmes,
Conrad T. Goertz,
Edwin R. Wroughton,
Nathan E. Cooke,
Lewis H. Cutting, and
Ernest L. Jones.

Lieut. (junior grade) William C. Carpenter to be a lieutenant in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 18th day of August, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Murry Wolffe,
Charles L. Greene,
Arthur T. Brill,
Ward T. Hall,
Michael Garland,
Erich Richter,
John C. Heck,
James L. McKenna,
George W. Waldo,
Anthony E. Bentfeld,
Arthur Boquett,
John Harder,
Sigvart Thompson,
Stephen A. Farrell,
William A. Vick,
John J. Welch,
Arthur S. Rollins,
Charles C. Stotz,
John C. Maxon,
Bailey E. Rigg,
Walter A. Buckley,
Frank E. Nelson,
Norman McL. McDonald,
Philip S. Flint,
Charles W. Wagner,
Henry A. Reynolds,
George F. Veth,
James E. Kemmer,
James A. Newell,
William W. Holton,

Fred C. Wolf,
Charles J. Naprstek,
Max Bayer,
Paxton Hotchkiss,
Leon W. Knight,
Harry M. Peaco,
Henry H. Beck,
Frank F. Webster,
John Reber,
Charles N. Koch,
Fred T. Rider,
William S. Evans,
Sofus K. Sorensen,
George J. Romulus,
Arthur L. Hecykell,
Charles King,
Quintus R. Thomson, jr.,
Ora A. Martin,
John A. Pierce,
Stephen Ingham,
William R. Spear,
William T. Shaw,
Roy K. Madill,
William R. McFarlane,
Nils Anderson,
Melvin C. Kent,
John E. Armstrong,
Albert C. Fraenzel,
William A. Martin,
Ralph B. Wallace,
James Roberts,
Joseph D. Glick,
Anthony Prastka,
Joseph W. Birk,
Edmund DuV. Duckett,
Raymond A. Walker,
Hermann Jorgensen,
Charles F. Dame,
Arthur J. Holton,
Vincent Benedict,
Ola D. Butler,
Edgar C. Wortman,
Joseph O'N. Johnson,
David Duffy,
Clyde H. McLellon,
Noel Chatillon,
William F. Schlegel,
Lee W. Drisco,
James J. Delany,
William H. Stephenson,
Arthur E. Rice,
John P. Millon,
Frank L. Elkins,
Sol Shaw,
Ernest J. Leonard,
Thomas J. Sullivan,
John P. Sasse,
Will Mueller,
John H. Chase,
Will S. Holloway,
George J. Blessing,
James D. Brown,
Patrick H. Cassidy,
Franklin A. Manuel,
Frank Flaherty,
Frank G. Waugh,
Arthur A. F. Alm,
Bennett McC. Proctor,
James Donaldson,
John A. Silva,
James Hauser,
John E. Sullivan,
Charles A. Armstrong,
Chauncey R. Doll,
James S. Trayer,
Gregoire F. J. Labelle,
Theodore Anderson,
Henry Hartley,
Eugene J. Frieh,
Philip J. Kelly,
Andrew G. C. Dafgard,
Alfred Doucet,
William E. Benson,
Fred C. A. Plagemann,
Peter J. Gundlach,
Albert M. Hinman,
Leon W. Becker,
William Cox,
Stephen A. Loftus,
Herman C. Schrader,
Asa Van R. Watson,
William A. Eaton,
James M. MacDonnell,
Herbert R. Mytinger,
Harold A. Turner,
Charles B. Bradley,
Curry E. Eason,
Samuel C. Washington,
Brice H. Mack,
James A. Featherston,
Walter N. Fanning,
Herbert J. Meneratti,
Niels Drustrup,
Abraham De Somer,
George Bradley,
Donald McDonald,
Warren E. Magee,
Robert J. Kingsmill,
Charles F. Merrill,
Charles B. Shackelton,
Benjamin F. Ranger,
Robert C. McClure,
Carl S. Chapman,
George C. Martin,
Wilmer W. Weber,
Mark Strosk,
William W. Wilkins,
Helge Ohlsson,
Elroy G. True,
James W. O'Leary,
Warren H. Langdon,
Andrew C. Skinner,
Emery Smith,
Benjamin F. Maddox,
George Keeser,
John A. Rogers,
Alfred E. Raue,
John C. Richards,
Frank W. Yurasko,
Albert H. Mellien,
Philip A. Astoria,
Thomas A. Graham,
William A. Mason,
Everest A. Whited,
John F. Murphy,
Charles A. Kohls,
Clarence R. Rockwell,
Paul E. Kuter,
William E. Snyder,
David McWhorter, jr.,
George H. Kellogg,
Elery A. Zehner,
Samuel E. Lee,
Frank Stinchcomb,
Simon L. Shade,
Ludwig W. Gumz,
Wildon A. Ott,
Hugh W. Nimmo,
Junius G. Sanders,
Frederick B. Webber,
George T. Campbell,
Charles A. Dannenmann,
Harold G. Billings,
Albert E. Freed,
Frank Kinne,
Andrew N. Anderson,
Frank Kerr,
Arthur H. Cummings,
Harry J. Hansen,
Rony Snyder,
Newcomb L. Damon,
Jack K. Campbell,
George Kleinsmith,
Albert G. Martin,
Daniel McCallum,
John M. Buckley,
John J. Madden,
Robert Semple,
Henry H. Fowler,
Stanley H. Sacker,

Elmer J. McCluen,
John M. Kirkpatrick,
Clyde Lovelace,
Claude B. Arney,
Martin Dickinson,
Jesse J. Alexander,
John J. Enders,
Jesse J. Oettinger,
William H. Farrel,
Thomas M. Buck,
John Shottroff,
John Whalen,
Raymond C. McDuffie,
Oscar Benson,
William Martin,
John S. Conover,
Fayette Myers,
John G. M. Johnson,
Frederick Clifford,
Alexander Anderson,
Frederick T. Walling,
Charles V. Kane,
Joseph M. Gately,
Joseph H. Gerrior,
George S. Dean,
Ralph A. Laird,
Charles F. Fielding,
Collins R. Buchner,
Warwick M. Tinsley,
Archie R. Wolfe,
Francis P. Brewer,
Henry A. Stuart,
Aaron Eldridge,
Judson E. Scott,
Clyde H. Dougherty,
Edward L. Newell,
Robert B. England,
Howard S. Raber,
George O. Farnsworth,
Lars O. Peterson,
Omar B. Earle,
Alfred R. Eubanks,
Thomas Flynn,
John F. Piotrowski,
Alexander B. Holman,
Ralph A. Scott,
Michael Burke,
Irwin V. Herin,
William F. Schlesinger,
Herman A. Bauchot,
Earle G. Gardner,
William W. Eagers,
William K. Johnstone,
John F. Craig,
Frank T. Green,
Augustus K. Goffe,
Robert S. Savin,
William J. Graham,
Emmette F. Gumm,
George B. Evans,
Edwin Fisher,
Charles O. Bain,
Clarence H. Fogg,
Joseph A. Flynn,
James J. Lucas,
Thomas Southall,
Bernard S. Riley,
George C. Neilsen,
Sidney C. Seale,
Joseph C. Herman,
Thomas G. Shanahan,
George R. Blauvelt,
Eric P. Teschner,
Erich O. Tauer,
Jens Nelson,
Harry A. Bryan,
Edwin H. Briggs,
George Schneider,
Frank V. Shepard,
Warren L. Graeff,
Hector L. Ross,
Emmet L. Bourke,
John H. Chinnis,
Earl V. Hand,
Alonzo W. Esworthy,
Abram L. Broughton,
Robert I. Hart,
Albert F. Blake,
Charles Waters,
William F. Morris,
Jesse S. Hooper,
Edward I. Dailey,
John Heep,
James H. Cain,
Hugh J. Finn,
Carl J. Hanson,
William H. Wright,
Thomas T. Emerton,
Charles F. Ware,
John R. McMeekin,
Edgar T. Hammond,
John R. McKean,
John D. Thompson,
Raymond R. Smith,
Clarence E. Williams,
George E. Tarbell,
Albert Wing,
John L. Scheidemen,
Harold A. Clough,
Earl Swisher,
Albert C. Buck,
Walter L. Hawk,
Jesse L. Harmer,
Fred H. Stewart,
John W. Ross,
Francis H. McAdoo,
Almy C. Maynard,
James A. Burbank,
Ralph L. Dodge,
Charles K. Cobb, jr.,
Joseph L. Day,
Raymond L. Watrous,
Bulkeley L. Wells,
Winn D. Faris,
Walter R. O'Sullivan,
Chester L. Nichols,
Jay H. Keller,
John S. Brayton, jr.,
Thomas M. Leovy,
Conant Wait,
John Hemphill,
Charles R. Westbrook,
Richard S. Maynard,
Robert M. Curtis,
Ernest Gregory,
George T. Jarvis,
Thomas Robins, jr.,
Arthur C. Saxe,
George G. Jones,
Samuel E. Raymond,
Lyman S. King,
Evans R. Dick, jr.,
Miles Wambaugh,
Herbert M. Corse,
George E. McQuestion,
Arthur W. Ford,
DeLancy Nicoll, jr.,
Lewis G. Smith,
Schuyler Dillon,
Paul A. Scherer,
Frederick A. Merrill,
Douglas G. Lovell,
William F. Kurfess,
William W. Slaymaker,
Harold F. Fultz,
Alfred G. Gennert,
Edwin Cowles,
Sydney P. Clark,
John A. Burgwin,
Frank T. Hogg,
Walter H. Wheeler, jr.,
Junius S. Morgan,
Folke E. Sellman,
Walter P. Shiel,
Arthur M. Tschirgi,
Wayne F. Palmer,
George D. Howell, jr.,
Donald McClench,
Charles Higginson,
Clifford D. Smith,

Hamilton Vose, jr.,
Robert F. Herrick, jr.,
Joseph C. Storey,
Horton Brown,
William C. Bok,
John H. Wilcox,
Edward Lloyd, jr.,
Donald M. Ryerson,
Elmer J. Stoffel,
Horace Butler,
Selim E. Woodworth,
Benjamin W. Cloud, 2d,
John S. Lionberger,
Philip C. Kauffman,
Roy D. Keyes,
Richard H. Cobb,
Frank W. Morrell,
Franklin King,
Francis T. Hunter,
Conrad Chapman,
Harold S. Simmons,
George Taylor,
Robert W. Emmons, 3d,
William T. Kirk, 3d,
Arthur T. Leonard,
William H. May,
John L. Merrill,
John E. P. Morgan,
William V. Couchman, jr.,
Thomas N. Page,
William W. Grace,
George R. Hann,
Winslow H. French,
Andrew C. Little,
Irving R. Gale,
Hallowell V. Morgan,
Howard G. Cann,
Robert B. Noyes,
Thomas I. H. Powell,
Eugene R. Sturtevant,
Bryan Frere,
Henry Hale, jr.,
Thornton Emmons,
Chester J. La Roche,
Mallery K. Aiken,
Milton H. Bird,
Paul A. Hourigan,
John R. Litchfield,
Stanford Harmon,
John D. Schuler,
Carter B. Burnet,
Clarence W. Schmidt,
John T. Scully,
Arthur C. Smith,
William J. Curtis, jr.,
Howard P. Hart,
Hayden Crocker,
Frederick S. Connor,
Matthew P. Waller,
James L. Sprunt,
Robert R. Theobald,
Arthur C. Hoyt,
Marion W. Lee,
Ralph W. Preston,
Gould T. Miner,
James H. R. Cromwell,
William E. D. Stokes, jr.,
Robert D. Bartlett,
John S. Upton,
Charles H. Bowman,
George F. Talbot,
Herbert D. Glass,
Percival V. Harris,
Allan C. Brown,
Fleet W. Corwin,
Howard W. Kitchin,
Leland D. Webb, and
William Knox.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Clyde C. Laws to be a lieutenant in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 22d day of September, 1918.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Henry E. Rung to be a lieutenant in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 27th day of September, 1918.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Edward J. Carr to be a lieutenant in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 28th day of September, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of October, 1918:

Benjamin F. Strawbridge and
Roy M. Cottrell.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Brady J. Dayton,
Philip J. Drake,
Putnam M. Morrison,
John A. Sweetser,
Frederick R. Bowes,
Raymond E. Baldwin,
Leicester S. Pettit,
John F. English,
Wilbert A. Smith,
Nelson B. Wolfe,
Thomas R. Parkhurst,
Herbert N. French,
Edward M. Shingler,
Paul R. Webb,
Jesse B. Perlman,
William H. Parsons, jr.,
John V. K. Richards,
Edgar R. Payson, jr.,
Harry L. M. Capron,
Louis S. Davidson,
Howell Evans,
Bainbridge D. Folwell,
Eben H. Ellison, jr.,
Francis D. Harrower,
Edwin B. Dunphy,
Ernest C. Haaren,
Alexander L. McKaig,
John H. Magee,
Laurence Schwab,
Douglas S. Moore,
John H. Russell,
Weyman S. Crocker,
Charles K. Wallace,
John I. Wylde,
Sumner F. Fuller,
Edward N. Crosman, jr.,
Lewis P. Scott,
Franklin Pettit, jr.,
Walter W. Burnham,
Henry M. Lamberton,
Lindsay Bradford,
Arthur E. Bartlett,
John G. Quinby, jr.,
William L. Kimball,
John B. Clapp,
Eliot L. Ward,
Francis S. Wilson,
Walter E. Chase, jr.,
Albert W. Findeisen,
Bradford Norman, jr.,
L. Selden Taylor,
Charles E. A. Speigel,
Morris Phinney,
Bennet F. Schauffler,
Gilman M. Gay,
George F. Newton, jr.,
Alden Lee,
Martin J. Quinn, jr.,
William L. G. Gibson,
Jacob S. Disston, jr.,
Henry C. Taylor,
Richard S. Walker,
Joseph Winlock,
James E. Kelly,
Arthur H. Haaren,
Harold J. Wright,
Campbell Higgins,
John S. Bauman,
Samuel M. Haslett, jr.,
Clarence H. Cull,
John B. Burnham,
Charles M. Boswell, jr.,
Johnston L. Redmond,

Francis Brooks,
Thomas L. Entwisle,
John L. Graham,
Marquis Pope,
Carl O. W. Sparkman,
John deK. Bowen,
Robert J. Orr,
William W. Baier,
Marcus A. Sutcliffe,
Anthony D. Bullock,
Franklin W. Hobbs, jr.,
Addison Stillwell,
Oliver B. Jennings,
Arthur D. Murray,
James M. Owens,
Foster M. Hampton,
Caspar S. Chisolm,
Leroy K. Howe,
Theodore C. Marceau, jr.,
Lester S. Moll,
Charles C. Savage, jr.,
Oliver P. Shattuck,
Louis M. Pratt, jr.,
John U. Lemmon, jr.,
Arleigh D. Richardson,
Harry L. Butler,
John G. Rayley,
William Durfee, jr.,
Chester J. Mattson,
Cornelius Shields,
Olin McN. Richardson,
Richard V. Dolan,
John H. Minnis,
Frederick W. Johns,
George W. Burden,
William K. B. Urquhart,
Harold J. Kline,
Thaddeus C. Jones,
Richard Williams,
J. Otto Holcomb,
John G. Gross,
Philip L. Coddington,
Wilfred I. Stiles,
George E. Finlay.
Edward M. McIlvain,
Alden Kimball,
Edgar M. Jaeger,
Francis M. Smith,
Harold M. Wright,
Edwin E. Sheridan,
Kavanaugh C. Downey,
Carl J. Koehler,
J. Willis Gale,
Gordon W. Ayer,
Nelson L. Fortin,
John P. Holland,
Carroll E. Miller,
Brothwell H. Baker,
Frank H. Storms,
Cornelius A. Wood,
Kenneth C. Woodruff,
George W. Palmer, 3d,
Burmain A. Grimball,
Fred L. McNally,
Thomas D. Shepherd,
Clarence J. O'Neill,
Albert J. Porter,
Charles A. Winter,
Thomas T. Hassell,
Elbert M. Burnett,
Stanley H. Freihofer,
Talbert N. Daughtrey,
Russell A. Beck,
John W. Chapman,
Matthew F. Tracey,
Oliver A. Bowers,
Otis E. Bennett,
John J. Gaskin,
Chester N. White,
Thomas H. Murphy,
Leo E. Schlimme,
Bernard S. Rodey, jr.,
Thomas P. Kane,
Alfred J. Byrholdt,
Oliver H. Briggs,
Frederick G. Trummer,
Francis A. Knauss,
Carl J. Hallbert,
Albert T. Lang,
Christian Christensen,
Henry L. Bixbee,
Alexander C. Cornell,
William G. Gillis,
Fred G. Peterman,
Frank E. Norlin,
Leslie R. Heselton,
Lawrence J. Murphy,
George R. Woods,
Robert J. Vierthaler,
George H. Frederick,
Carl Hupp,
John L. Blomquist,
Edwin P. Lacey,
Charles A. Goebel,
John McKean,
Heinrich C. A. Deglau,
John O. Strickland,
Raymond J. Comstock,
Virgil F. Wright,
George F. Evanson,
Clarence C. McDow,
Ralph M. Gerth,
William S. Burns,
Charles A. Strumsky,
Joseph F. Caveney,
William H. Tracy,
John D. Morris,
Charles R. Kehler,
Elliott Kauth,
James E. Finn,
Arthur O. Kolstad,
Stonewall B. Stadtler,
Homer F. McGee,
Sydney W. Ford,
John Harrison, jr.,
Washington E. Bogardus,
William T. Brown,
Philip McK. Zenner,
Stephen E. Haddon,
Clarence E. Jackson,
Arthur V. Holmes,
Frederick Ellison,
James K. Smallwood,
Thomas J. Malarkey,
Frederick T. Mayes,
Edward J. Murnane,
Harold H. Ralph,
Matthew Woessner,
Albert Wood,
Kenneth H. Stetson,
Joseph Murtagh,
John E. Pedersen,
Lansford F. Kengle,
Stanley A. Jones,
Frank A. Brandecker,
Arthur Wrightson,
Joseph A. Clark,
Arthur A. Hewitt,
William A. Lynch,
Edward H. Smith,
Martin F. Comeau,
Robert B. McEwan, jr.,
Forest W. Allen,
Dwight W. Jennings,
Robert A. Haynie,
Watson K. Blair,
Francis H. Cabot,
Ralph Forween,
Harold K. Smoot,
Adolph Bloom,
Charles C. Roberts,
Charles L. Allen,
Guy A. Walker,
Nicholas Kedinger,
Percy C. Becker,
Stockard R. Hickey,
Alfred E. Stulb,
Walter Hinton,
George B. Kessack,
Oscar Erickson,

John J. Bayer,
Oscar F. Bandura,
Guy McLaughlin,
Russell G. McNaughton,
Eduard G. Jahnke,
Otto Beran,
David J. Spahr,
William E. McClendon,
Fred S. Wade,
John W. Collier,
Enos Dahuff,
Delos A. Humphrey,
William J. Sharkey,
George H. Charter,
Edward Reavely,
Niels Andersen,
Howard C. Heald,
Robert S. Dunn,
Lawrence E. Myers,
Robert S. Smith, jr.,
John E. Hatch,
Frederick Shea,
Clarence J. Gale,
Albert Nashman,
Charles E. Olson,
Robert Martin,
William S. Quesinberry,
James C. White,
Edward Reynolds, jr.,
Henry O. Rea,
Frederick W. Boldt,
Horace L. Ham,
George Berton,
Alexander B. Provost,
Harry A. Mewshaw,
Chris Halverson,
William G. Scott,
Harry Bennett,
Elmer J. Tugend,
Morey H. Downs,
John C. Mayhew,
Tom H. Williamson,
Hubert K. Stubbs,
Harold V. Andrews,
Clarence V. Waggonner,
Henry C. Flanagan,
Omer L. Brewington,
Cecil A. McKay,
Duncan W. Frick,
Nathan Young,
Stuart Parker,
Caleb Loring,
Ralph J. A. Stern,
William L. Hickey,
B. Thatcher Feustman,
Barnes Newberry,
Bruce Burns,
Charles H. Duell, jr.,
John R. Haire,
Donald M. Lovejoy,
Edgar M. Queeny,
Charles H. Sterrett,
Allen L. Welch,
Leroy H. Ripley,
Frank A. Saunders,
Warren P. Boardman,
Benjamin J. Shinn,
William J. Clarke,
Merton R. Hinkle,
Caspar Yeager,
Lon H. Robb,
William Y. Rorer,
Cedric O. Eaton,
Charles A. Oliver,
Fred C. Forster,
George E. Ernest,
Albert J. Fern,
Frank Leghorn,
Edward F. Manning,
William G. Spurlock,
Theodore A. Kelly,
William H. Fiddler, jr.,
Frederick J. Leonard,
Alan M. Gray,
Hale G. Knight,
George L. Heyer,
Charles A. Williams,
Harold B. Collins,
William C. Eberle,
Henry John Behrends,
William Henry Meyer,
Will Frank Roseman,
Joseph Alphonse Oellet,
Howard E. Haynes,
Gustav Adolf Curt Leutritz,
Thomas Noland,
Walter Adam Krueck,
Leo John Sutton,
John Benedict Manghan,
Alexander Otto Schory,
Jesse Gilbert McFarland,
Simon Peter Swynenburg,
Joie Carwin Wilkins,
John Reid,
Charles Reading Shaw,
James Charles Humphreys,
John Joseph Coogan,
Herbert Augustus Anderson,
William G. Burgess,
Arthur E. LeGros,
William E. Bringhurst,
Robert E. Dwyer,
Leland C. Poole,
Chester C. Rounds,
Herbert J. Wiker,
George W. Brown,
John Cusick,
Clarence E. Beach,
Claudius G. Pendill,
John M. O'Neil,
John S. Danner,
John P. Dix,
Glenn F. Hulse,
Robert E. Davenport,
Ralph B. Raymond,
Louis Verbrugge,
Raymond Leo Morrissey,
Walter Hansen,
George W. Adams,
Rudolf Winzer,
Charles J. Ingersoll,
Albert J. Courtney,
Edward J. Bermingham,
Frank A. Saar,
Wiley B. Jones,
Charles H. Phillips,
Claude Farmer,
Abraham M. Rosenberg,
Harry B. Luessen,
Eldridge L. Lineberry,
Harry A. Wentworth,
William F. Verleger,
Walter E. Hewitt,
Robert L. Bryan,
Gottlieb Grosch,
Walter M. McCarthy,
Ralph J. Pyatt,
Alfred E. Green,
Rodney B. Starr,
William Wakefield,
Thomas H. Escott,
Timothy Brown,
John C. Bauman, jr.,
Harley E. Barrows,
Francis S. Page,
Irving N. Eustis,
Jay P. Clymer,
Benjamin W. Taylor,
Sidney B. Baisdell,
Harry L. Dodson,
Ray W. Bruner,
Adolphe H. Wenzel,
Oliver C. Field,
Harry R. Pendarvis,
Russel H. Lindsay,
Duane L. Taylor,
Joseph P. Maguire,
Roger F. McCall,
Oscar E. Finlay,
Clarence E. Kraehn,

Richard C. Bartlett,
Henry W. Piquet,
William L. Phillips,
Nathaniel Krasnoff,
Louis Dreller,
George S. Harris,
Frederick J. Silvernail,
Edwin J. Johannessen,
Harry J. Carey,
James H. Alvis,
Murray T. Wilkinson,
Joel R. Conrad,
Charles F. Hudson,
Edwin V. Annatoyn,
James D. Barner,
Arthur L. Mundo,
Walter L. Hunley,
Leon W. Mills,
Edward W. Neville,
Fred E. Patrick,
Philip D. Butler,
John A. Westrom,
Edward Danielson,
Harry F. Breckel,
Clyde L. Lewis,
Joseph L. Norvell,
Joseph A. Wetzel,
Andrew Simmons,
Arthur F. Dietrich,
William J. Charles,
John W. White,
Duncan P. Houser,
Edward A. Wardell,
Francis H. Stone,
Bartholomew J. Patterson,
Malcolm F. Schoeffel,
Thomas G. W. Settle,
Lucien M. Grant,
James E. J. Kiernan,
Richard M. Rush,
James R. Allen,
Daniel W. Hand, jr.,
Charles A. Nicholson, 2d,
Paul W. Hains,
Ralph A. Ofstie,
Rex LeG. Hicks,
Herbert M. Scull,
Matthias B. Gardner,
Leslie C. Stevens,
Charles H. Cushman,
Howard W. Fitch,
Creighton C. Carmine,
Robert F. Nelson,
Antonio S. Pitre,
Winfield A. Brooks,
Thomas P. Wynkoop, jr.,
Ernest E. Herrmann,
James M. Johnston,
Arthur S. Adams,
William E. Hilbert,
Hugh W. Olds,
Albert T. Sprague, 3d,
Maurice H. Stein,
Hobart A. Sailor,
William McC. Callaghan,
Rodman D. de Kay,
Harold L. Challenger,
John J. Orr,
Hubert H. Anderson,
Joseph Buchalter,
Thomas P. Jeter,
Robert G. Waldron,
Adolph O. Gieselmann,
David H. Clark,
Jeffrey C. Metzel,
Festus F. Foster,
Russell M. Ihrig,
James J. Graham,
Ralph B. Netting,
Ralph H. Roberts,
Valentine H. Schaeffer,
Floyd S. Crosley,
Eugene L. Kell,
Allen D. Brown,
John W. Roper,
William C. Vose,
Harry B. Slocum,
Charles E. Olsen,
Robert P. Briscoe,
Harry R. Thurber,
James B. Sykes,
Lyle N. Morgan,
Clarence H. Schildhauer,
Cuthbert A. Griffiths,
Franz O. Willenbucher,
Harry McC. Jones,
Thomas J. Griffin,
William H. Ferguson,
Ernest H. Von Heimburg,
Morton T. Seligman,
Douglas A. Powell,
William N. Updegraff,
Stuart S. Murray,
John O. Huse,
Charles J. Palmer,
William D. Sample,
Arthur P. Thurston,
Logan C. Ramsey,
Scott G. Lamb,
Alfred P. Moran, jr.,
William E. Clayton,
Richard B. Tuggle,
Harry Goodstein,
John H. Cassady,
Julian B. Noble,
Gerald L. Schetky,
Donald C. King,
Henry R. Herbst,
Charles E. Coney,
Dean D. Francis,
Wade E. Griswold,
William H. Mays,
Clayton Demarest, jr.,
Elmer R. Hill,
Henry D. Baggett,
William L. Marsh,
Bayard H. Colyear,
Charles L. Andrews, jr.,
Ralph W. Hungerford,
Charles B. Hunt,
George McF. O'Rear,
Herschel P. Cook,
John W. Cullens,
James D. Lowry, jr.,
Albert P. Burleigh,
Eric M. Grimsley,
Charles K. Post,
John B. Griggs, jr.,
Eliot H. Bryant,
George C. Dyer,
Alonzo B. Alexander,
Walter D. Whitehead,
David S. Crawford,
Charles J. Rend,
Everett D. Kern,
Ten Eyck DeW. Veeder, jr.,
Robert L. Boller,
Albert R. Staudt,
Henry C. Fengar,
Chauncey Camp,
John Neal,
Gordon H. Mason,
Dorrance K. Day,
Paul F. Lee,
Marshall R. Greer,
Philip P. Welch,
George J. Downey,
Walter S. Barlow,
Joseph R. Lannon,
Louis B. Pelzman,
Harry A. Rochester,
Edwin Friedman,
George Kirkland,
James J. Hughes,
Carl K. Fink,
John J. Patterson, 3d,
Walter Ansel,
Wilfred C. Wilcock,
Adrian O. Rule, jr.,
Miles P. Duval, jr.,

Walther G. Maser,
Elmer R. Rungquist,
Walton R. Read,
Daniel M. McGurl,
William E. Tarbutton,
Homer I. Sherritt,
Philip V. Sullivan,
Stephen K. Hall,
Robert McL. Smith, jr.,
Robert B. Crichton,
Paul H. Talbot,
Russell S. Barrett,
James L. Holloway, jr.,
Gustave H. Bowman,
James L. Wisenbaker,
Ralph E. Jennings,
Frank N. Sayre,
Peyton S. Cochran,
Paul B. Thompson,
Fred W. Beltz,
John B. McDonnald, jr.,
Kenneth D. Muir,
Tracy M. Kegley,
John G. Crawford,
Paul D. Dingwell,
James G. Atkins,
Frank V. Aler, jr.,
Leonard C. Parker,
Cyril K. Wildman,
Francis H. Gilmer,
Earle H. Kincaid,
Carleton McGauly,
George W. Brashears, jr.,
Charles R. Smith,
Giles E. Short,
Van Rensselear Moore,
Thomas B. Fitzpatrick,
Dixie Kiefer,
Horace R. Whittaker,
Willis W. Pace,
Harold M. Martin,
Joseph S. Ives,
Edgar R. Winckler,
John L. Reynolds,
William J. Strachan,
John R. Redman,
Ross A. Dierdorff,
George F. Mentz,
Herbert S. Woodman,
George H. Mills,
Charles Allen,
Jack C. Richardson,
Robert M. Dorsey,
Desmond J. Sinnott,
John C. Williams,
Spencer H. Warner,
John S. Spaven,
Grayson B. Carter,
Riffel G. Rhoton,
Willment P. Martin,
Franklin P. Waller,
Charles H. Rockey, and
Gordon M. Jackson.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of August, 1918:

Irving A. Chapman,
Edward P. Street,
David D. Smead, jr.,
Raymond H. Finlay,
Amory Coolidge,
Cortland F. Ames, jr.,
Wayland H. Sanford,
Albert V. Hall,
Henry R. Guild,
Louis C. Seavernes,
Edward Kneass,
Francis B. Thorne,
Benjamin F. McGuckin,
George C. Cutler, jr.,
Richard T. Guilbert,
Leslie A. Wiggins,
Harry A. Thornton,
Atherton K. Dunbar,
Warren D. Arnold,
Arthur B. Homer,
John C. Hurd,
Clifton B. Herd,
Innis O'Rourke,
Rufus D. W. Ewing,
Ayres Boal,
Donald S. Sexton,
Heroy M. Dyckman,
Clement M. Gile,
Harold W. Brooks,
James B. Bergs,
Ellis W. Taylor,
Martin L. Dunn,
James W. Ryan,
George Gregory, jr.,
Earle S. Barker,
Edwin K. Hoover,
Walter Antrim,
Laurence C. Murdoch,
John N. Leonard,
Henry G. Anderson,
Edwin Nelson,
Arthur E. Childs,
Dietrich G. Schmitz,
Thomas C. Parsons,
James M. Connally,
Edmund Ocumpaugh, 3d,
Lawrence Oliphant,
Arthur McL. Bartley,
William O. Kenney,
Thomas Buel,
John F. A. Davis,
Elliott De Bevoise,
John E. Sayler,
John R. Marsh,
Traver Briscoe,
Gorham Hubbard, jr.,
Harold E. Barden,
Edgar Denton, jr.,
Whitley P. McCoy,
Ransom Henshaw,
Donald Scott,
James H. Waller,
Percival W. Buzby,
Thomas C. Nicholls, jr.,
Roderick T. Smith,
Philler Lee,
Hobart M. Birmingham,
Richard E. Wheeler,
Robert N. Hoeflich,
Frederick H. Bosbyshell,
Theodore C. Briggs,
Arthur T. Lyman,
Earle H. Parkins,
Alfred V. Janotta,
Edwin D. King,
Edward G. Shmidheiser,
Leroy H. Davidson,
Henry E. Coe, jr.,
Norman D. Weir,
Vernon C. Bixby,
Howard W. Kitchell,
Vallette S. Church,
Joseph M. Shoemaker,
Chandler Bennitt,
Robert R. Gleason,
William M. Akin,
Julian P. Burlingham,
Thomas W. Allen,
Henry Hilton-Green,
David H. Frantz,
John Garey,
Leonard Jacob,
Frank M. Orton,
Alexander Loewy,
Newton C. Elkin, and
Kenneth C. Kennedy.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of October, 1918:

Arthur F. Peterson,
Lewis F. Kepple,
John A. Manfrin,
George O. Augustine,
Samuel M. Thompson,
Edward L. Garnett,

Philip L. Reid,
Arthur E. Maginniss,
Joseph Mather,
Otto Gmelich,
William R. Schimmeyer,
Marshall Anderson,
Denis J. Kiely,
Mortimer Laurence,
Elmer T. Marr,
Charles E. Reynolds,
John H. Kevers,
James N. McTwiggan,
Herman A. Berch,
Wade Lash,
Frederick W. Ickes, and
Ira D. Spoonmoore.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1918:

William K. Riddle and
John G. Church.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 7th day of March, 1918:

Eric L. Barr and
William M. Quigley.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 8th day of June, 1918:

Alfred E. Montgomery,
Allen H. Guthrie,
Ralph S. Wentworth,
Edmund A. Crenshaw,
Robert S. Haggart,
Forrest U. Lake,
Nathan B. Chase,
Earl R. Morrissey,
Harold H. Little,
Horatio J. Pierce, and
Abraham C. TenEyck.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 5th day of June, 1918:

Archie E. Glann,
Myron J. Walker,
Stephen H. Matteson,
Burton W. Chippendale,
Cornelius W. Flynn,
Robert W. Clark,
Winthrop Winslow,
De Witt C. Watson,
Ralph W. Christie, and
William D. Thomas.

Gunner Clarence L. Tibbals to be a chief gunner in the Navy from the 15th day of February, 1918.

Machinist Ernest A. Healy to be a chief machinist in the Navy from the 17th day of January, 1918.

Brig. Gen. (temporary) Charles G. Long to be a brigadier general in the Marine Corps from the 7th day of October, 1918.

Col. Smedley D. Butler to be a brigadier general in the Marine Corps, for temporary service, from the 7th day of October, 1918.

Col. (temporary) Newt H. Hall to be a colonel in the Marine Corps from the 7th day of October, 1918.

Lieut. Col. (temporary) Harold C. Snyder to be lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps from the 7th day of October, 1918.

The following-named captains to be majors in the Marine Corps, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918:

Ethelbert Talbot,
Louis R. de Roode, and
John A. Minnis.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918:

Robert P. Jeter,
Lawrence B. Smith,
Richard O. Sanderson,
Louis S. Davis,
Jonathan Lucas, jr.,
Archie W. French,
William L. York,
Harry D. Gibbons,
John F. Williams,
Howard B. Freeman, and
Bruce J. Mansfield.

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Marine Corps, for temporary service, from the 16th day of August, 1918:

Melvin J. Stanchfield, jr.,
Pierson M. Tuttle,
Herman L. McLeod,
Clarence H. Hartley,
John T. Selden,
Frank C. Myers,
Joseph D. Broderick,
Louis A. Perraud,
Grant L. Hill,
Arthur F. Sennholtz,
Carl R. Dietrich,
Edward B. Irving,
Wells W. Miller,
Keesler B. Low,
George Ehrhart, jr.,
Elmer E. Hall, and
Charles F. Worthen.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate October 24, 1918.

CONSUL GENERAL.

CLASS 4.

Evan E. Young to be a consul general of class 4.

CONSULS.

CLASS 5.

Albert H. Putney to be a consul of class 5.

CLASS 7.

John R. Putnam to be a consul of class 7.
William L. Jenkins to be a consul of class 7.

CLASS 8.

Frank Bohr to be a consul of class 8.
Henry B. Hitchcock to be a consul of class 8.
Luther K. Zabriskie to be a consul of class 8.

MEMBER OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE BOARD.

Albert Strauss to be a member of the Federal Reserve Board.

UNITED STATES CIRCUIT JUDGE.

George W. Anderson to be United States circuit judge, first circuit.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

Edwin R. Holmes to be United States district judge for the northern and southern districts of Mississippi.

UNITED STATES MARSHALS.

James A. Baggett to be United States marshal northern district of Texas.

Cooper Stout to be United States marshal eastern district of Illinois.

Emmet R. Jordan to be United States marshal District of Alaska, division No. 2.

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Oscar B. Gordon to be receiver of public moneys at Camden, Ark.

Homer V. Sewell to be receiver of public moneys at Little Rock, Ark.

REGISTERS OF THE LAND OFFICE.

Benjamin F. Spires to be register of the land office at Little Rock, Ark.

Benjamin M. Tribble to be register of the land office at Camden, Ark.

COLLECTOR OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Alfred Franklin to be collector of internal revenue for the district of New Mexico.

PROMOTIONS AND APPOINTMENTS IN THE NAVY.

Acting Pay Clerk Robert G. Robeson to be an assistant paymaster with the rank of ensign, for temporary service.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters with the rank of ensign, for temporary service:

Clifford W. Waters,
Michael A. Sprengel,
William Elliott,
Joseph E. Ford,
Frank M. Sherrill,
James E. Hunt,
William R. Diehl,
Hugh J. McManus,
Aner Erickson,
William E. Woods,
Jesse W. Hilts,
Roe L. Flowers,
Olaf Olsen,
Alexander W. Urquhart,
Leo A. Ketterer,
John J. Carroll,

Erwin A. McKee,
Edward H. Hulit,
Nicholas A. Brown,
Tate Mayhall,
George L. Aulmann,
John W. Overand,
Evans D. Stegar,
Howard N. Hill,
Charles H. Converse,
Alonzo A. Munsell,
William R. Davidson,
Leo V. Flavell,
William M. Rogers,
Samuel R. Ullman,
Archie J. Lourie,
Isidore R. Meyer,
Cornelius A. Brinkmann,
Gilbert A. Jones,
Albert W. Alderd,
Charles H. Cameron,
Paul J. Weiss,
David A. Cain,
Thayer B. Thomas,
Jacob H. Kyger,
Joseph T. Lareau,
Marion McCray,
William J. Martin,
Paul K. Coons,
Roy L. Koester, and
James A. Harris.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns, for temporary service:

Clyde D. Dahlman,
Carl Axelson,
Levi C. Houston,
Albert A. Elliott,
William S. Johnson,
Peter P. Zeller,
John R. J. Le Roy,
Cornelius J. O'Connor,
Frederick A. Olsen,
William G. Sullivan,
John J. Dallier,
Ernest C. Fiedler,
John Francis Shea,
Frank E. Powers,
John S. Bessent,
Clyde W. Jordan,
John F. Welch,
Charles E. Carlson,
Thomas J. Costello,
Edward B. Peterson,
Charles R. Jeffs,
Thomas J. Quinn,
Frank P. Moore,
Albert J. Wheaton,
Glenn C. Provost,
Arthur Brown,
Charley F. Martin,
Arthur S. Fenton,
Merion E. Hair,
Julius J. Lorzing,
Clinton W. Gray,
Edward L. Gench,
George L. Morin,
William R. Simpson, jr.,
Luttie E. Tappen, and
Clarence E. Young.

The following-named ensigns of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be ensigns, for temporary service:

Robert A. McCloud,
Philip L. Emerson,
Rowland G. Evans, and
William E. Clow, jr.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns, for temporary service:

Fred A. Luenser,
Clyde W. Haskins,
Charles E. Chamberlain,
Calvin A, Cole,
Guy R. Bostain,
Leo L. Waite,
Roy A. Jones,
Lawrence S. Tichenor,
Wallace Cooper,
Walter A. Irwin,
Christian W. Manegold,
Wilfred G. Lebeque,
Frank L. Burgess, and
George R. Milbourn.

The following-named enlisted men, to be ensigns, for temporary service:

Elmer D. Lundberg,
Charles C. Gillis,
Carl B. Fields, and
Philip H. Taft.

The following-named ensigns of the United States Naval Reserve Force to be ensigns, for temporary service:

Henry R. Wharton, jr.,
Donald D. Leonard,
Ford K. Lucas,
Julian P. Van Vorst,
Joseph R. Tobin,
Abraham S. Lewis,
Charles G. Lade,
Carletin H. Crawford,
Roy O. Hill,
Thomas F. Kilkenny,
Gordon J. Morrow,
Thomas R. Wells,
Thomas A. West,
Travis F. Beale,
Edgar R. Hill,
Clinton E. Shepard,
Ralph Hicks,
Lloyd M. Thornton,
Ned L. Chapin,
Harold C. Nye,
Hermann P. Knickerbocker, and
Arthur G. Latimer.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders, for temporary service:

Philip R. Baker,
Harvey S. Haislip,
Harrison R. Glennon,
Ralph E. Dennett,
George F. Parrot, jr.,
Charles G. McCord,
Alfred S. Wolfe,
Ralph C. Lawder,
Eugene T. Oates,
Roy W. Lewis,
Marion C. Cheek,
Richard S. Field,
Robert P. Molton, jr.,
William J. Butler,
Robert H. English,
Jay K. Esler,
George D. Murray,
Carroll Q. Wright, jr.,
Oliver M. Read, jr.,
Joseph McE. B. Smith,
George J. McMillin,
William H. O'Brien, jr.,
Howard F. Kingman,
Howard S. Keep,
James G. B. Gromer,
Bushrod B. Howard,
Rivers J. Carstarphen,
Calvin H. Cobb,
Robert B. Simons,
Lee C. Carey,
Norman Scott,
Glenn A. Smith,
Donald C. Godwin,
Richard P. Myers,
Webb C. Hayes,
Howard D. Bode,
Jay L. Kerley,
Harold E. Snow,
Robert M. Doyle, jr.,
Richard H. Booth,
Morton L. Deyo,
Harold T. Bartlett,
Robert M. Hinckley,
Ralph S. Parr,
Shirley A. Wilson,
Charles H. McMorris,
John A. Byers,

Virgil C. Griffin, jr.,
John H. Holt, jr.,
Henry M. Kieffer,
William A. Corley,
Benjamin Perlman,
Howard H. Good,
Ernest G. Small,
Carleton H. Wright,
Donald Boyden,
Robertson J. Weeks,
Herman E. Fischer,
Mark W. Larimer,
Willard E. Cheadle,
Edward P. Nickinson,
Thomas L. Gatch,
Harry G. Patrick,
Alfred E. Montgomery,
Andrew C. Bennett,
Frederick Baltzly,
Allen H. Guthrie,
Eugene P. A. Simpson,
Oliver W. Bagby,
Lawrence P. Bischoff,
James C. Clark,
James C. Monfort,
Robert D. Moore,
Carl G. Gilliland,
Harold Dodd,
Whitley Perkins,
Warren A. Shaw,
Robert A. Hall,
Guy C. Hitchcock,
Anton B. Anderson,
Ralph S. Wentworth,
George L. Woodruff,
Mahlon S. Tisdale,
Schuyler Mills,
Edmund A. Crenshaw, jr.,
James L. King,
William D. Taylor,
Davis De Treville,
Homer C. Wick,
John P. Dalton,
Louis P. Wenzell,
Robert S. Haggart,
Raymond E. Kerr,
Philip Van Horn Weems,
George H. Fort,
Lunsford L. Hunter,
Earnest W. Broadbent,
Forrest U. Lake,
Robert R. Thompson,
Elliott Buckmaster,
Nelson W. Hibbs,
Emory P. Eldredge,
Albert B. Sanborn,
Ellis M. Zacharias,
Clarence Gulbranson,
Wentworth H. Osgood,
Donald F. Patterson,
Harold B. Grow,
Donald W. Hamilton,
Herbert G. Gates, jr.,
Heister Hoogewerff,
John H. Falge,
Louis E. Denfeld,
Ralph W. Holt,
George W. D. Dashiell,
Emory W. Coil,
Nathan B. Chase,
George W. La Mountain,
Alexander W. Loder,
Harold W. Scofield,
Carroll M. Hall,
William S. Hogg, jr.,
Beriah M. Thompson,
John L. Fox,
Earl R. Morrissey,
Stephan B. Robinson,
William G. Greenman,
Harold H. Little,
Horatio J. Peirce,
Hamilton Harlow,
Hugh C. Frazer,
Thales S. Boyd,
James A. Crutchfield,
Daniel E. Barbey,
Charles P. Mason,
John J. Brown,
Grady B. Whitehead,
Carl K. Martin,
Campbell D. Edgar,
Harry P. Curley,
John P. Bowden,
De Witt C. Ramsey,
Baylis F. Poe,
Roscoe E. Schuirman,
Charles K. Osborne,
Abraham C. Ten Eyck,
Ingram C. Sowell,
Francis E. M. Whiting,
Charles A. Lockwood, jr.,
John K. Richards, jr.,
William H. Burtis,
Stanley G. Womble,
Paul S. Theiss,
John Wilbur,
Charles S. Alden,
Robert E. P. Elmer,
Charles F. Greene,
George S. Gillespie,
Garnet Hulings,
Charles W. McNair,
Otto M. Forster,
Louis R. Ford,
Leonard N. Linsley,
William H. P. Blandy,
Henry L. Abbott,
James C. Jones, jr.,
Elmer L. Woodside,
Herman E. Kelsker,
Glenn B. Davis,
Bruce G. Leighton,
Palmer H. Dunbar, jr.,
Roy J. Wilson,
Ray H. Wakeman,
Carl E. Hoard,
Harold C. Van Valzah,
Charles N. Ingraham,
Adolph V. S. Pickhardt,
Stewart F. Bryant,
Paul A. Stevens,
Kenneth R. R. Wallace,
George W. Wolf,
William B. Jupp,
Robin B. Daughtry,
William I. Causey, jr.,
Walter Seibert,
Frank L. Johnston,
Richard H. Knight,
George L. Greene, jr.,
Hugh L. White,
Reginald S. H. Venable,
Norman C. Gillette,
John A. Brownell,
Thomas Shine,
Roy Dudley,
Laurence Wild,
Lloyd R. Gray,
Herbert K. Fenn,
Solomon H. Geer,
Paul Hendren,
Chapman C. Todd, jr.,
Henry M. Briggs,
Paul Cassard,
Joseph Y. Dreisonstok,
Walter O. Henry,
John M. Kates,
Carl T. Hull,
Eric F. Zemke, and
George M. Tisdale.

Lieut. Edward J. O'Keefe to be lieutenant commander, for temporary service.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants, for temporary service:

William E. O'Connor,
William Twigg, jr.,
Frederick R. Kalde,
Burton W. Lambert,
Allen I. Seaman,

William D. Dadd,
Charles Swanberg,
Malcolm C. Davis,
William H. Muehlhause,
Leroy Neil,
Oscar D. Parker,
John A. Ward,
John C. Hines,
John Gallagher,
George W. Robbins,
Cyrus S. Hansel,
Ernest A. Healy,
Frederick G. Keyes,
William Eberlin,
Frederick Petry,
John Meyer,
Frederick Evans,
Godfrey P. Schurz,
Clarence L. Tibbals,
Thomas J. Bristol,
William Taylor,
Michael J. Breshahan,
Lafayette P. Guy,
Edmond Delavy,
Frank J. Mayer,
Horace DeB. Dougherty,
James J. Joyce,
Joseph A. Rasmussen,
Warner K. Bigger,
Frank Schultz,
Joseph Sperl,
David F. Mead,
Henry A. Lowell,
Charles Antrobus,
Oliver T. Miller,
August Logan,
John J. Coyle,
George F. Blass,
Walter S. Belknap,
George C. Lacock,
Anton Hengst,
John W. Boldt,
Fred San Soucie,
Howard H. Chambers,
Percy R. Abrams,
Vincent F. Le Verne,
Charles E. Briggs,
George B. Llewellyn,
William C. Milligan,
Frederick J. Legere,
James Reilly,
John H. MacDonald,
William A. James,
William A. Fulkerson,
Jerry C. Holmes,
Conrad T. Goertz,
Edwin R. Wroughton,
Nathan E. Cooke,
Lewis H. Cutting, and
Ernest L. Jones.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) William C. Carpenter to be a lieutenant, for temporary service.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants, for temporary service:

Murry Wolffe,
Charles L. Greene,
Arthur T. Brill,
Ward T. Hall,
Michael Garland,
Erich Richter,
John C. Heck,
James L. McKenna,
George W. Waldo,
Anthony E. Bentfeld,
Arthur Boquett,
John Harder,
Sigvart Thompson,
Stephen A. Farrell,
William A. Vick,
John J. Welch,
Arthur S. Rollins,
Charles C. Stotz,
John C. Maxon,
Bailey E. Rigg,
Walter A. Buckley,
Frank E. Nelson,
Norman McL. McDonald,
Philip S. Flint,
Charles W. Wagner,
Henry A. Reynolds,
George F. Veth,
James E. Kemmer,
James A. Newell,
William W. Holton,
Fred C. Wolf,
Charles J. Naprstek,
Max Bayer,
Paxton Hotchkiss,
Leon W. Knight,
Harry M. Peaco,
Henry H. Beck,
Frank F. Webster,
John Reber,
Charles N. Koch,
Fred T. Rider,
William S. Evans,
Sofus K. Sorensen,
George J. Romulus,
Arthur L. Hecykell,
Charles King,
Quintus R. Thomson, jr.,
Ora A. Martin,
John A. Pierce,
Stephen Ingham,
William R. Spear,
William T. Shaw,
Roy K. Madill,
William R. McFarlane,
Nils Anderson,
Melvin C. Kent,
John E. Armstrong,
Albert C. Fraenzel,
William A. Martin,
Ralph B. Wallace,
James Roberts,
Joseph D. Glick,
Anthony Prastka,
Joseph W. Birk,
Edmund DuV. Duckett,
Raymond A. Walker,
Hermann Jorgensen,
Charles F. Dame,
Arthur J. Holton,
Vincent Benedict,
Ola D. Butler,
Edgar C. Wortman,
Joseph O'N. Johnson,
David Duffy,
Clyde H. McLellon,
Noel Chatillon,
William F. Schlegel,
Lee W. Drisco,
James J. Delany,
William H. Stephenson,
Arthur E. Rice,
John P. Millon,
Frank L. Elkins,
Sol Shaw,
Ernest J. Leonard,
Thomas J. Sullivan,
John P. Sasse,
Will Mueller,
John H. Chase,
Will S. Holloway,
George J. Blessing,
James D. Brown,
Partick H. Cassidy,
Franklin A. Manuel,
Frank Flaherty,
Frank G. Waugh,
Arthur A. F. Alm,
Bennett McC. Proctor,
James Donaldson,
John A. Silva,
James Hauser,
John E. Sullivan,
Charles A. Armstrong,
Chauncey R. Doll,
James S. Trayer,
Gregoire F. J. Labelle,

Theodore Anderson,
Henry Hartley,
Eugene J. Frieh,
Philip J. Kelly,
Andrew G. C. Dafgard,
Alfred Doucet,
William E. Benson,
Fred C. A. Plagemann,
Peter J. Gundlach,
Albert M. Hinman,
Leon W. Becker,
William Cox,
Stephen A. Loftus,
Herman C. Schrader,
Asa Van R. Watson,
William A. Eaton,
James M. MacDonnell,
Herbert R. Mytinger,
Harold A. Turner,
Charles B. Bradley,
Curry E. Eason,
Samuel C. Washington,
Brice H. Mack,
James A. Featherston,
Walter N. Fanning,
Herbert J. Meneratti,
Niels Drustrup,
Abraham De Somer,
George Bradley,
Donald McDonald,
Warren E. Magee,
Robert J. Kingsmill,
Charles F. Merrill,
Charles B. Shackelton,
Benjamin F. Ranger,
Robert C. McClure,
Carl S. Chapman,
George C. Martin,
Wilmer W. Weber,
Mark Strosk,
William W. Wilkins,
Helge Ohlsson,
Elroy G. True,
James W. O'Leary,
Warren H. Langdon,
Andrew C. Skinner,
Emery Smith,
Benjamin F. Maddox,
George Keeser,
John A. Rogers,
Alfred E. Raue,
John C. Richards,
Frank W. Yurasko,
Albert H. Mellien,
Philip A. Astoria,
Thomas A. Graham,
William A. Mason,
Everest A. Whited,
John F. Murphy,
Charles A. Kohls,
Clarence R. Rockwell,
Paul E. Kuter,
William E. Snyder,
David McWhorter, jr.,
George H. Kellogg,
Elery A. Zehner,
Samuel E. Lee,
Frank Stinchcomb,
Simon L. Shade,
Ludwig W. Gumz,
Wildon A. Ott,
Hugh W. Nimmo,
Junius G. Sanders,
Frederick B. Webber,
George T. Campbell,
Charles A. Dannenmann,
Harold G. Billings,
Albert E. Freed,
Frank Kinne,
Andrew N. Anderson,
Frank Kerr,
Arthur H. Cummings,
Harry J. Hansen,
Rony Snyder,
Newcomb L. Damon,
Jack K. Campbell,
George Kleinsmith,
Albert G. Martin,
Daniel McCallum,
John M. Buckley,
John J. Madden,
Robert Semple,
Henry H. Fowler,
Stanley H. Sacker,
Elmer J. McCluen,
John M. Kirkpatrick,
Clyde Lovelace,
Claude B. Arney,
Martin Dickinson,
Jesse J. Alexander,
John J. Enders,
Jesse J. Oettinger,
William H. Farrel,
Thomas M. Buck,
John Shottroff,
John Whalen,
Raymond C. McDuffie,
Oscar Benson,
William Martin,
John S. Conover,
Fayette Myers,
John G. M. Johnson,
Frederick Clifford,
Alexander Anderson,
Frederick T. Walling,
Charles V. Kane,
Joseph M. Gately,
Joseph H. Gerrior,
George S. Dean,
Ralph A. Laird,
Charles F. Fielding,
Collins R. Buchner,
Warwick M. Tinsley,
Archie R. Wolfe,
Francis P. Brewer,
Henry A. Stuart,
Aaron Eldridge,
Judson E. Scott,
Clyde H. Dougherty,
Edward L. Newell,
Robert B. England,
Howard S. Raber,
George O. Farnsworth,
Lars O. Peterson,
Omar B. Earle,
Alfred R. Eubanks,
Thomas Flynn,
John F. Piotrowski,
Alexander B. Holman,
Ralph A. Scott,
Michael Burke,
Irwin V. Herin,
William F. Schlesinger,
Herman A. Bauchot,
Earle G. Gardner,
William W. Eagers,
William K. Johnstone,
John F. Craig,
Frank T. Green,
Augustus K. Goffe,
Robert S. Savin,
William J. Graham,
Emmette F. Gumm,
George B. Evans,
Edwin Fisher,
Charles O. Bain,
Clarence H. Fogg,
Joseph A. Flynn,
James J. Lucas,
Thomas Southall,
Bernard S. Riley,
George C. Neilsen,
Sidney C. Seale,
Joseph C. Herman,
Thomas G. Shanahan,
George R. Blauvelt,
Eric P. Teschner,
Erich O. Tauer,
Jens Nelson,
Harry A. Bryan,

Edwin H. Briggs,
George Schneider,
Frank V. Shepard,
Warren L. Graeff,
Hector L. Ross,
Emmet L. Bourke,
John H. Chinnis,
Earl V. Hand,
Alonzo W. Esworthy,
Abram L. Broughton,
Robert I. Hart,
Albert F. Blake,
Charles Waters,
William F. Morris,
Jesse S. Hooper,
Edward I. Dailey,
John Heep,
James H. Cain,
Hugh J. Finn,
Carl J. Hanson,
William H. Wright,
Thomas T. Emerton,
Charles F. Ware,
John R. McMeekin,
Edgar T. Hammond,
John R. McKean,
John D. Thompson,
Raymond R. Smith,
Clarence E. Williams,
George E. Tarbell,
Albert Wing,
John L. Scheidemen,
Harold A. Clough,
Earl Swisher,
Albert C. Buck,
Walter L. Hawk,
Jesse L. Harmer,
Fred H. Stewart,
John W. Ross,
Francis H. McAdoo,
Almy C. Maynard,
James A. Burbank,
Ralph L. Dodge,
Charles K. Cobb, jr.,
Joseph L. Day,
Raymond L. Watrous,
Bulkeley L. Wells,
Winn D. Faris,
Walter R. O'Sullivan,
Chester L. Nichols,
Jay H. Keller,
John S. Brayton, jr.,
Thomas M. Leovy,
Conant Wait,
John Hemphill,
Charles R. Westbrook,
Richard S. Maynard,
Robert M. Curtis,
Ernest Gregory,
George T. Jarvis,
Thomas Robins, jr.,
Arthur C. Saxe,
George G. Jones,
Samuel E. Raymond,
Lyman S. King,
Evans R. Dick, jr.,
Miles Wambaugh,
Herbert M. Corse,
George E. McQuestion,
Arthur W. Ford,
DeLancy Nicoll, jr.,
Lewis G. Smith,
Schuyler Dillon,
Paul A. Scherer,
Frederick A. Merrill,
Douglas G. Lovell,
William F. Kurfess,
William W. Slaymaker,
Harold F. Fultz,
Alfred G. Gennert,
Edwin Cowles,
Sydney P. Clark,
John A. Burgwin,
Frank T. Hogg,
Walter H. Wheeler, jr.,
Junius S. Morgan,
Folke E. Sellman,
Walter P. Shiel,
Arthur M. Tschirgi,
Wayne F. Palmer,
George D. Howell, jr.,
Donald McClench,
Charles Higginson,
Clifford D. Smith,
Hamilton Vose, jr.,
Robert F. Herrick, jr.,
Joseph C. Storey,
Horton Brown,
William C. Bok,
John H. Wilcox,
Edward Lloyd, jr.,
Donald M. Ryerson,
Elmer J. Stoffel,
Horace Butler,
Selim E. Woodworth,
Benjamin W. Cloud, 2d,
John S. Lionberger,
Philip C. Kauffman,
Roy D. Keyes,
Richard H. Cobb,
Frank W. Morrell,
Franklin King,
Francis T. Hunter,
Conrad Chapman,
Harold S. Simmons,
George Taylor,
Robert W. Emmons. 3d,
William T. Kirk, 3d,
Arthur T. Leonard,
William H. May,
John L. Merrill,
John E. P. Morgan,
William V. Couchman, jr.,
Thomas N. Page,
William W. Grace,
George R. Hann,
Winslow H. French,
Andrew C. Little,
Irving R. Gale,
Hallowell V. Morgan,
Howard G. Cann,
Robert B. Noyes,
Thomas I. H. Powell,
Eugene R. Sturtevant,
Bryan Frere,
Henry Hale, jr.,
Thornton Emmons,
Chester J. La Roche,
Mallery K. Aiken,
Milton H. Bird,
Paul A. Hourigan,
John R. Litchfield,
Stanford Harmon,
John D. Schuler,
Carter B. Burnet,
Clarence W. Schmidt,
John T. Scully,
Arthur C. Smith,
William J. Curtis, jr.,
Howard P. Hart,
Hayden Crocker,
Frederick S. Connor,
Matthew P. Waller,
James L. Sprunt,
Robert R. Theobald,
Arthur C. Hoyt,
Marion W. Lee,
Ralph W. Preston,
Gould T. Miner,
James H. R. Cromwell,
William E. D. Stokes, jr.,
Robert D. Bartlett,
John S. Upton,
Charles H. Bowman,
George F. Talbot,
Herbert D. Glass,
Percival V. Harris,
Allan C. Brown,
Fleet W. Corwin,
Howard W. Kitchin,

Leland D. Webb, and
William Knox.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Clyde C. Laws to be a lieutenant, for temporary service.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Henry E. Rung to be a lieutenant, for temporary service.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Edward J. Carr to be a lieutenant, for temporary service.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants, for temporary service:

Benjamin F. Strawbridge and
Roy M. Cottrell.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade), for temporary service:

Brady J. Dayton,
Philip J. Drake,
Putnam M. Morrison,
John A. Sweetser,
Frederick R. Bowes,
Raymond E. Baldwin,
Leicester S. Pettit,
John F. English,
Wilbert A. Smith,
Nelson B. Wolfe,
Thomas R. Parkhurst,
Herbert N. French,
Edward M. Shingler,
Paul R. Webb,
Jesse B. Perlman,
William H. Parsons, jr.,
John V. K. Richards,
Edgar R. Payson, jr.,
Harry L. M. Capron,
Louis S. Davidson,
Howell Evans,
Bainbridge D. Folwell,
Eben H. Ellison, jr.,
Francis D. Harrower,
Edwin B. Dunphy,
Ernest C. Haaren,
Alexander L. McKaig,
John H. Magee,
Laurence Schwab,
Douglas S. Moore,
John H. Russell,
Weyman S. Crocker,
Charles K. Wallace,
John I. Wylde,
Sumner F. Fuller,
Edward N. Crosman, jr.,
Lewis P. Scott,
Franklin Pettit, jr.,
Walter W. Burnham,
Henry M. Lamberton,
Lindsay Bradford,
Arthur E. Bartlett,
John G. Quinby, jr.,
William L. Kimball,
John B. Clapp,
Eliot L. Ward,
Francis S. Wilson,
Walter E. Chase, jr.,
Albert W. Findeisen,
Bradford Norman, jr.,
L. Selden Taylor,
Charles E. A. Speigel,
Morris Phinney,
Bennet F. Schauffler,
Gilman M. Gay,
George F. Newton, jr.,
Alden Lee,
Martin J. Quinn, jr.,
William L. G. Gibson,
Jacob S. Disston, jr.,
Henry C Taylor,
Richard S. Walker,
Joseph Winlock,
James E. Kelly,
Arthur H. Haaren,
Harold J. Wright,
Campbell Higgins,
John S. Bauman,
Samuel M. Haslett, jr.,
Clarence H. Cull,
John B. Burnham,
Charles M. Boswell, jr.,
Johnston L. Redmond,
Francis Brooks,
Thomas L. Entwisle,
John L. Graham,
Marquis Pope,
Carl O. W. Sparkman,
John deK. Bowen,
Robert J. Orr,
William W. Baier,
Marcus A. Sutcliffe,
Anthony D. Bullock,
Franklin W. Hobbs, jr.,
Addison Stillwell,
Oliver B. Jennings,
Arthur D. Murray,
James M. Owens,
Foster M. Hampton,
Caspar S. Chisolm,
Leroy K. Howe,
Theodore C. Marceau, jr.,
Lester S. Moll,
Charles C. Savage, jr.,
Oliver P. Shattuck,
Louis M. Pratt, jr.,
John U. Lemmon, jr.
Arleigh D. Richardson,
Harry L. Butler,
John G. Rayley,
William Durfee, jr.,
Chester J. Mattson,
Cornelius Shields,
Olin McN. Richardson,
Richard V. Dolan,
John H. Minnis,
Frederick W. Johns,
George W. Burden,
William K. B. Urquhart,
Harold J. Kline,
Thaddeus C. Jones,
Richard Williams,
J. Otto Holcomb,
John G. Gross,
Philip L. Coddington,
Wilfred I. Stiles,
George E. Finlay,
Edward M. McIlvain,
Alden Kimball,
Edgar M. Jaeger,
Francis M. Smith,
Harold M. Wright,
Edwin E. Sheridan,
Kavanaugh C. Downey,
Carl J. Koehler,
J. Willis Gale,
Gordon W. Ayer,
Nelson L. Fortin,
John P. Holland,
Carroll E. Miller,
Brothwell H. Baker,
Frank H. Storms,
Cornelius A. Wood,
Kenneth C. Woodruff,
George W. Palmer, 3d,
Burmain A. Grimball,
Fred L. McNally,
Thomas D. Shepherd,
Clarence J. O'Neill,
Albert J. Porter,
Charles A. Winter,
Thomas T. Hassell,
Elbert M. Burnett,
Stanley H. Freihofer,
Talbert N. Daughtrey,
Russell A. Beck,
John W. Chapman,
Matthew F. Tracey,
Oliver A. Bowers,
Otis E. Bennett,
John J. Gaskin,
Chester N. White,
Thomas H. Murphy,
Leo E. Schlimme,
Bernard S. Rodey, jr.,
Thomas P. Kane,

Alfred J. Byrholdt,
Oliver H. Briggs,
Frederick G. Trummer,
Francis A. Knauss,
Carl J. Hallbert,
Albert T. Lang,
Christian Christensen,
Henry L. Bixbee,
Alexander C. Cornell,
William G. Gillis,
Fred G. Peterman,
Frank E. Norlin,
Leslie R. Heselton,
Lawrence J. Murphy,
George R. Woods,
Robert J. Vierthaler,
George H. Frederick,
Carl Hupp,
John L. Blomquist,
Edwin P. Lacey,
Charles A. Goebel,
John McKean,
Heinrich C. A. Deglau,
John O. Strickland,
Raymond J. Comstock,
Virgil F. Wright,
George F. Evanson,
Clarence C. McDow,
Ralph M. Gerth,
William S. Burns,
Charles A. Strumsky,
Joseph F. Caveney,
William H. Tracy,
John D. Morris,
Charles R. Kehler,
Elliott Kauth,
James E. Finn,
Arthur O. Kolstad,
Stonewall B. Stadtler,
Homer F. McGee.
Sydney W. Ford,
John Harrison, jr.,
Washington E. Bogardus,
William T. Brown,
Philip McK. Zenner,
Stephen E. Haddon,
Clarence E. Jackson,
Arthur V. Holmes,
Frederick Ellison,
James K. Smallwood,
Thomas J. Malarkey,
Frederick T. Mayes,
Edward J. Murnane,
Harold H. Ralph,
Matthew Woessner,
Albert Wood,
Kenneth H. Stetson,
Joseph Murtagh,
John E. Pedersen,
Lansford F. Kengle,
Stanley A. Jones,
Frank A. Brandecker,
Arthur Wrightson,
Joseph A. Clark,
Arthur A. Hewitt,
William A. Lynch,
Edward H. Smith,
Martin F. Comeau,
Robert B. McEwan, jr.,
Forest W. Allen,
Dwight W. Jennings,
Robert A. Haynie,
Watson K. Blair,
Francis H. Cabot,
Ralph Forween,
Harold K. Smoot,
Adolph Bloom,
Charles C. Roberts,
Charles L. Allen,
Guy A. Walker,
Nicholas Kedinger,
Percy C. Becker,
Stockard R. Hickey,
Alfred E. Stulb,
Walter Hinton,
George B. Kessack,
Oscar Erickson,
John J. Bayer,
Oscar F. Bandura,
Guy McLaughlin,
Russell G. McNaughton,
Eduard G. Jahnke,
Otto Beran,
David J. Spahr,
William E. McClendon,
Fred S. Wade,
John W. Collier,
Enos Dahuff,
Delos A. Humphrey,
William J. Sharkey,
George H. Carter,
Edward Reavely,
Niels Andersen,
Howard C. Heald,
Robert S. Dunn,
Lawrence E. Myers,
Robert S. Smith, jr.,
John E. Hatch,
Frederick Shea,
Clarence J. Gale,
Albert Nashman,
Charles E. Olson,
Robert Martin,
William S. Quesinberry,
James C. White,
Edward Reynolds, jr.,
Henry O. Rea,
Frederick W. Boldt,
Horace L. Ham,
George Berton,
Alexander B. Provost,
Harry A. Mewshaw,
Chris Halverson,
William G. Scott,
Harry Bennett,
Elmer J. Tugend,
Morey H. Downs,
John C. Mayhew,
Tom H. Williamson,
Hubert K. Stubbs,
Harold V. Andrews,
Clarence V. Waggonner,
Henry C. Flanagan,
Omer L. Brewington,
Cecil A. McKay,
Duncan W. Frick,
Nathan Young,
Stuart Parker,
Caleb Loring,
Ralph J. A. Stern,
William L. Hickey,
B. Thatcher Feustman,
Barnes Newberry,
Bruce Burns,
Charles H. Duell, jr.,
John R. Haire,
Donald M. Lovejoy,
Edgar M. Queeny,
Charles H. Sterrett,
Allen L. Welch,
Leroy H. Ripley,
Frank A. Saunders,
Warren P. Boardman,
Benjamin J. Shinn,
William J. Clarke,
Merton R. Hinkle,
Caspar Yeager,
Lon H. Robb,
William Y. Rorer,
Cedric O. Eaton,
Charles A. Oliver,
Fred C. Forster,
George E. Ernest,
Albert J. Fern,
Frank Leghorn,
Edward F. Manning,
William G. Spurlock,
Theodore A. Kelly,
William H. Fiddler, jr.

Frederick J. Leonard,
Alan M. Gray,
Hale G. Knight,
George L. Heyer,
Charles A. Williams,
Harold B. Collins,
William C. Eberle,
Henry John Behrends,
William Henry Meyer,
Will Frank Roseman,
Joseph Alphonse Oellet,
Howard E. Haynes,
Gustav Adolf Curt Leutritz,
Thomas Noland,
Walter Adam Krueck,
Leo John Sutton,
John Benedict Manghan,
Alexander Otto Schory,
Jesse Gilbert McFarland,
Simon Peter Swynenburg,
Joie Carwin Wilkins,
John Reid,
Charles Reading Shaw,
James Charles Humphreys,
John Joseph Coogan,
Herbert Augustus Anderson,
William G. Burgess,
Arthur E. LeGros,
William E. Bringhurst,
Robert E. Dwyer,
Leland C. Poole,
Chester C. Rounds,
Herbert J. Wiker,
George W. Brown,
John Cusick,
Clarence E. Beach,
Claudius G. Pendill,
John M. O'Neil,
John S. Danner,
John P. Dix,
Glenn F. Hulse,
Robert E. Davenport,
Ralph B. Raymond,
Louis Verbrugge,
Raymond Leo Morrissey,
Walter Hansen,
George W. Adams,
Rudolf Winzer,
Charles J. Ingersoll,
Albert J. Courtney,
Edward J. Bermingham,
Frank A. Saar,
Wiley B. Jones,
Charles H. Phillips,
Claude Farmer,
Abraham M. Rosenberg,
Harry B. Luessen,
Eldridge L. Lineberry,
Harry A. Wentworth,
William F. Verleger,
Walter E. Hewitt,
Robert L. Bryan,
Gottlieb Grosch,
Walter M. McCarthy,
Ralph J. Pyatt,
Alfred E. Green,
Rodney B. Starr,
William Wakefield,
Thomas H. Escott,
Timothy Brown,
John C. Bauman, jr.,
Harley E. Barrows,
Francis S. Page,
Irving N. Eustis,
Jay P. Clymer,
Benjamin W. Taylor,
Sidney B. Baisdell,
Harry L. Dodson,
Ray W. Bruner,
Adolphe H. Wenzel,
Oliver C. Field,
Harry R. Pendarvis,
Russel H. Lindsay,
Duane L. Taylor,
Joseph P. Maguire,
Roger F. McCall,
Oscar E. Finlay,
Clarence E. Kraehn,
Richard C. Bartlett,
Henry W. Piquet,
William L. Phillips,
Nathaniel Krasnoff,
Louis Dreller,
George S. Harris,
Frederick J. Silvernail,
Edward J. Johannessen,
Harry J. Carey,
James H. Alvis,
Murray T. Wilkinson,
Joel R. Conrad,
Charles F. Hudson,
Edwin V. Annatoyn,
James D. Barner,
Arthur L. Mundo,
Walter L. Hunley,
Leon W. Mills,
Edward W. Neville,
Fred E. Patrick,
Philip D. Butler,
John A. Westrom,
Edward Danielson,
Harry F. Breckel,
Clyde L. Lewis,
Joseph L. Norvell,
Joseph A. Wetzel,
Andrew Simmons,
Arthur F. Dietrich,
William J. Charles,
John W. White,
Duncan P. Houser,
Edward A. Wardell,
Francis H. Stone,
Bartholomew J. Patterson,
Malcolm F. Schoeffel,
Thomas G. W. Settle,
Lucien M. Grant,
James E. J. Kiernan,
Richard M. Rush,
James R. Allen,
Daniel W. Hand, jr.,
Charles A. Nicholson, 2d,
Paul W. Hains,
Ralph A. Ofstie,
Rex LeG. Hicks,
Herbert M. Scull,
Matthias B. Gardner,
Leslie C. Stevens,
Charles H. Cushman,
Howard W. Fitch,
Creighton C. Carmine,
Robert F. Nelson,
Antonio S. Pitre,
Winfield A. Brooks,
Thomas P. Wynkoop, jr.,
Ernest E. Herrmann,
James M. Johnston,
Arthur S. Adams,
William E. Hilbert,
Hugh W. Olds,
Albert T. Sprague, 3d,
Maurice H. Stein,
Hobart A. Sailor,
William McC. Callaghan,
Rodman D. de Kay,
Harold L. Challenger,
John J. Orr,
Hubert H. Anderson,
Joseph Buchalter,
Thomas P. Jeter,
Robert G. Waldron,
Adolph O. Gieselmann,
David H. Clark,
Jeffrey C. Metzel,
Festus F. Foster,
Russell M. Ihrig,
James J. Graham,
Ralph B. Netting,
Ralph H. Roberts,
Valentine H. Schaeffer,
Floyd S. Crosley,

Eugene L. Kell,
Allen D. Brown,
John W. Roper,
William C. Vose,
Harry B. Slocum,
Charles E. Olsen,
Robert P. Briscoe,
Harry R. Thurber,
James B. Sykes,
Lyle N. Morgan,
Clarence H. Schildhauer,
Cuthbert A. Griffiths,
Franz O. Willenbucher,
Harry McC. Jones,
Thomas J. Griffin,
William H. Ferguson,
Ernest H. Von Heimburg,
Morton T. Seligman,
Douglas A. Powell,
William N. Updegraff,
Stuart S. Murray,
John O. Huse,
Charles J. Palmer,
William D. Sample,
Arthur P. Thurston,
Logan C. Ramsey,
Scott G. Lamb,
Alfred P. Moran, jr.,
William E. Clayton,
Richard B. Tuggle,
Harry Goodstein,
John H. Cassady,
Julian B. Noble,
Gerald L. Schetky,
Donald C. King,
Henry R. Herbst,
Charles E. Coney,
Dean D. Francis,
Wade E. Griswold,
William H. Mays,
Clayton Demarest, jr.,
Elmer R. Hill,
Henry D. Baggett,
William L. Marsh,
Bayard H. Colyear,
Charles L. Andrews, jr.,
Ralph W. Hungerford,
Charles B. Hunt,
George McF. O'Rear,
Herschel P. Cook,
John W. Cullens,
James D. Lowry, jr.,
Albert P. Burleigh,
Eric M. Grimsley,
Charles K. Post,
John B. Griggs, jr.,
Eliot H. Bryant,
George C. Dyer,
Alonzo B. Alexander,
Walter D. Whitehead,
David S. Crawford,
Charles J. Rend,
Everett D. Kern,
Ten Eyck DeW. Veeder, jr.,
Robert L. Boller,
Albert R. Staudt,
Henry C. Fengar,
Chauncey Camp,
John Neal,
Gordon H. Mason,
Dorrance K. Day,
Paul F. Lee,
Marshall R. Geer,
Philip P. Welch,
George J. Downey,
Walter S. Barlow,
Joseph R. Lannon,
Louis B. Pelzman,
Harry A. Rochester,
Edwin Friedman,
George Kirkland,
James J. Hughes,
Carl K. Fink,
John J. Patterson, 3d,
Walter Ansel,
Wilfred C. Wilcock,
Adrian O. Rule, jr.,
Miles P. Duval, jr.,
Walther G. Maser,
Elmer R. Rungquist,
Walton R. Read,
Daniel M. McGurl,
William E. Tarbutton,
Homer I. Sherritt,
Philip V. Sullivan,
Stephen K. Hall,
Robert McL. Smith, jr.,
Robert B. Crichton,
Paul H. Talbot,
Russell S. Barrett,
James L. Holloway, jr.,
Gustave H. Bowman,
James L. Wisenbaker,
Ralph E. Jennings,
Frank N. Sayre,
Peyton S. Cochran,
Paul B. Thompson,
Fred W. Beltz,
John B. McDonnald, jr.,
Kenneth D. Muir,
Tracy M. Kegley,
John G. Crawford,
Paul D. Dingwell,
James G. Atkins,
Frank V. Aler, jr.,
Leonard C. Parker,
Cyril K. Wildman,
Francis H. Gilmer,
Earle H. Kincaid,
Carleton McGauly,
George W. Brashears, jr.,
Charles R. Smith,
Giles E. Short,
Van Rensselear Moore,
Thomas B. Fitzpatrick,
Dixie Kiefer,
Horace R. Whittaker,
Willis W. Pace,
Harold M. Martin,
Joseph S. Ives,
Edgar R. Winckler,
John L. Reynolds,
William J. Strachan,
John R. Redman,
Ross A. Dierdorff,
George F. Mentz,
Herbert S. Woodman,
George H. Mills,
Charles Allen,
Jack C. Richardson,
Robert M. Dorsey,
Desmond J. Sinnott,
John C. Williams,
Spencer H. Warner,
John S. Spaven,
Grayson B. Carter,
Riffel G. Rhoton,
Willment P. Martin,
Franklin P. Waller,
Charles H. Rockey, and
Gordon M. Jackson.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade), for temporary service:

Irving A. Chapman,
Edward P. Street,
David D. Smead, jr.,
Raymond H. Finlay,
Amory Coolidge,
Cortland F. Ames, jr.,
Wayland H. Sanford,
Albert V. Hall,
Henry R. Guild,
Louis C. Seavernes,
Edward Kneass,
Francis B. Thorne,
Benjamin F. McGuckin,
George C. Cutler, jr.,
Richard T. Guilbert,
Leslie A. Wiggins,
Harry A. Thornton,

Atherton K. Dunbar,
Warren D. Arnold,
Arthur B. Homer,
John C. Hurd,
Clifton B. Herd,
Innis O'Rourke,
Rufus D. W. Ewing,
Ayres Boal,
Donald S. Sexton,
Heroy M. Dyckman,
Clement M. Gile,
Harold W. Brooks,
James B. Bergs,
Ellis W. Taylor,
Martin L. Dunn,
James W. Ryan,
George Gregory, jr.,
Earle S. Barker,
Edwin K. Hoover,
Walter Antrim,
Laurence C. Murdoch,
John N. Leonard,
Henry G. Anderson,
Edwin Nelson,
Arthur E. Childs,
Dietrich G. Schmitz,
Thomas C. Parsons,
James M. Connally,
Edmund Ocumpaugh, 3d,
Lawrence Oliphant,
Arthur McL. Bartley,
William O. Kenney,
Thomas Buel,
John F. A. Davis,
Elliott De Bevoise,
John E. Sayler,
John R. Marsh,
Traver Briscoe,
Gorham Hubbard, jr.,
Harold E. Barden,
Edgar Denton, jr.,
Whitley P. McCoy,
Ransom Henshaw,
Donald Scott,
James H. Waller,
Percival W. Buzby,
Thomas C. Nicholls, jr.,
Roderick T. Smith,
Philler Lee,
Hobart M. Birmingham,
Richard E. Wheeler,
Robert N. Hoeflich,
Frederick H. Bosbyshell,
Theodore C. Briggs,
Arthur T. Lyman,
Earle H. Parkins,
Alfred V. Janotta,
Edwin D. King,
Edward G. Shmidheiser,
Leroy H. Davidson,
Henry E. Coe, jr.,
Norman D. Weir,
Vernon C. Bixby,
Howard W. Kitchell,
Vallette S. Church,
Joseph M. Shoemaker,
Chandler Bennitt,
Robert R. Gleason,
William M. Akin,
Julian P. Burlingham,
Thomas W. Allen,
Henry Hilton-Green,
David H. Frantz,
John Garey,
Leonard Jacob,
Frank M. Orton,
Alexander Loewy,
Newton C. Elkin, and
Kenneth C. Kennedy.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns, for temporary service:

Arthur F. Peterson,
Lewis F. Kepple,
John A. Manfrin,
George O. Augustine,
Samuel M. Thompson,
Edward L. Garnett,
Philip L. Reid,
Arthur E. Maginniss,
Joseph Mather,
Otto Gmelich,
William R. Schimmeyer,
Marshall Anderson,
Denis J. Kiely,
Mortimer Laurence,
Elmer T. Marr,
Charles E. Reynolds,
John H. Kevers,
James N. McTwiggan,
Herman A. Berch,
Wade Lash,
Frederick W. Ickes, and
Ira D. Spoonmoore.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders from the 1st day of July, 1918:

William K. Riddle and
John G. Church.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants:

Eric L. Barr,
William M. Quigley,
Alfred E. Montgomery,
Allen H. Guthrie,
Ralph S. Wentworth,
Edmund A. Crenshaw,
Robert S. Haggart,
Forrest U. Lake,
Nathan B. Chase,
Earl R. Morrissey,
Harold H. Little,
Horatio J. Pierce, and
Abraham C. TenEyck.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade):

Archie E. Glann,
Myron J. Walker,
Stephen H. Matteson,
Burton W. Chippendale,
Cornelius W. Flynn,
Robert W. Clark,
Winthrop Winslow,
De Witt C. Watson,
Ralph W. Christie, and
William D. Thomas.

Gunner Clarence L. Tibbals to be a chief gunner.

Machinist Ernest A. Healy to be a chief machinist.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Sam T. Moss, Warrior.
William H. Welch, Wadley.
Hubert H. Hughston, Tuscumbia.
Clement T. Fitzpatrick, Montgomery.

ARKANSAS.

Everett A. Matthews, Ola.
John F. Hunt, Mammoth Springs.
William E. Floyd, Little Rock.
Charles B. Gregg, Jonesboro.
John A. Bridgford, Eureka Springs.
William L. Newton, Camden.

CALIFORNIA.

Anne M. Bearhope, Oceanside.
John L. Steward, Monterey.
Henry R. Gewe, Los Alamos.
Charles Brainerd, Loomis.
Charles W. Collins, El Centro.

GEORGIA.

Pleasant N. Little, Madison.

ILLINOIS.

Matthew N. Price, Zion.
Perley B. Colwell, Wyoming.
Glenn P. Wyatt, Wyanet.
Grover C. Gregory, Willisville.
William V. Lambe, Wheaton.
Mumford L. Briscoe, Westfield.
Robin Etter, Waverly.
George W. Cress, Washington.
Fred A. Ehringer, Washburn.
Charles S. Murphy, Warren.
Charles M. Webber, Urbana.

Charles B. Taylor, Tuscola.
Otto Bacmesiter, Toulon.
Herbert I. Baldwin, Tonica.
Randall A. Thompson, Thompsonville.
Herman Richarz, Techny.
Thomas J. Ronin, Sycamore.
James O. McDowell, Sumner.
Joseph P. Lawrence, Steger.
George H. Luker, Staunton.
Robert C. Probasco, Sparta.
Jennie McNulty, South Wilmington.
Clement L. Butler, Sheldon.
Charles E. Wescott, Sheffield.
George Hanlon, Shawneetown.
Edwin R. Smith, Saunemin.
Adam A. Funk, St. Joseph.
Lucian D. Lyons, St. David.
Asa B. Fagan, St. Charles.
Howard F. Dyson, Rushville.
Joseph R. Hudelson, Royalton.
Leo J. Byrne, Rossville.
Harry P. Simpson, Rock Island.
William P. Stevens, Richmond.
William P. Purviance, Pleasant Plains.
Henry Stahlle, Plano.
Henry J. Richardson, Pecatonica.
Robert T. Ross, Palmyra.
James J. Dougherty, Ottawa.
Charles S. Barker, Oswego.
Torrence B. McGovern, Oneida.
Barney A. Iaun, Olney.
William H. Evans, O'Fallon.
Franklin S. Lyman, Oak Forest.
Solomon E. Avey, Mount Morris.
William H. Ryan, Minonk.
David McFadden, Milford.
Charles A. Brandenburg, Milan.
Carl Montag, Mascoutah.
Robert D. Bolen, Maroa.
Joseph O. Smith, Manteno.
Ferdinand A. McGowan, Manhattan.
James E. Conlin, Lostant.
Charles W. Shade, Lexington.
John B. Henry, Lewistown.
William B. Hogan, Lanark.
John W. Payne, Lamoille.
Fred H. Stevens, La Grange.
William C. Stewart, Kirkland.
Fred O. Grissom, Kinmundy.
Otis E. Boyer, Kansas.
Sylvester J. Jackson, Kankakee.
Joel E. Cory, Jerseyville.
Ralph I. Dunlap, Jacksonville.
Fred C. Smith, Ipava.
Daniel W. Touhey, Hume.
William Finley, Hoopeston.
John L. Schmidt, Hinckley.
Mary B. Boyd, Heyworth.
Milton M. Sharp, Greenville.
Fred B. Bock, Girard.
Bernard J. Reilly, Gilman.
David M. Flynn, Geneva.
William H. J. Hoeft, Geneseo.
Ernest L. Benson, Galva.
William Whalen, Franklin.
Benjamin F. Wineland, Flora.
Charles D. Rock, Farmer City.
Gustav L. Burmeister, Elmhurst.
Lewis T. Rash, Elizabethtown.
Charles G. McClary, Edinburg.
Edgar H. Little, East St. Louis.
Foy O. Lovins, East Moline.
Leonard P. Cooper, East Alton.
Anson I. Graves, Dwight.
Martin B. Dolan, Durand.
Marion C. Cook, Duquoin.
Louis J. Dyroff, Dupo.
Myrtle E. Smith, Depue.
James N. Hall, Delavan.
Arthur F. Hiland, De Kalb.
Fred H. Henckler, Columbia.
John Jakle, Cissna Park.
Charles C. Wescott, Chillicothe.
William H. Stolte, Chicago Heights.
John A. O'Neil, Chatsworth.
Charles J. Mullikin, Champaign.
Elby Ozment, Carriers Mills.
Walter C. Shoupe, Carlyle.
Bernard McManus, jr., Cairo.
John A. Lentz, Blue Island.
Michael M. Morrissey, Bloomington.
Edmond P. Hectorne, Avon.
Frank W. Meisenheimer, Ava.
Louis A. Stoll, Aurora.
Alphus O. Haines, Atlanta.
John F. Atkinson, Astoria.
Joseph A. Roesler, Ashton.
John McCann, Arcola.
Frank B. Huber, Antioch.
John P. Harvey, Amboy.
Henrietta A. Rehwald, Altamont.
Charles E. Duvall, Aledo.
Frank Howey, Albion.

KENTUCKY.

John J. Hagan, Corbin.
Stephen A. D. Thompson, Owingsville.
John R. Paxton, Lawrenceburg.
Goalder Johnson, Hickman.

MAINE.

David N. Cheney, South Berwick.
Fred E. Grant, Cherryfield.
Alphonso F. Russell, jr., Canton.

MISSISSIPPI.

Essie F. McCormick, Yazoo City.

NEVADA.

Florence S. Doherty, Goodsprings.

NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Adelbert O. Jones, Dixville Notch.

NEW JERSEY.

Karl A. Anderson, Yardville.
Isaiah C. Shinn, Woodstown.
Leo M. Danerhirsh, Woodbine.
Howard J. Tombleson, Williamstown.
George N. Smith, Wildwood.
John P. Walsh, Whippany.
James Walters, Wharton.
William F. Bodecker, Tenafly.
Robert J. Quince, Sussex.
Charles W. Simonson, Spring Lake Beach.
John J. O'Hanlon, South Orange.
Edward J. Tidaback, Short Hills.
Frank C. Tomlin, Sewell.
Thomas F. Dolan, Sayreville.
James H. Mahaney, Roebling.
Henry Walter, Riverside.
Frank Pittenger, Red Bank.
William Slattery, Raritan.
Henry Bell, Ramsey.
George L. Kirchgasner, Rahway.
T. Harry Obert, Pleasantville.
Clarence D. Garis, Phillipsburg.
James J. Cowley, Passaic.
William H. Cook, Palmyra.
John J. Roche, Palisades Park.
Edward W. Sharps, Oxford.
George F. Moore, Oradell.
Benjamin F. Smith, Ocean City.
Eugene S. Burke, Morristown.
Martin A. Madden, Morris Plains.
Carlton J. Garwood, Medford.
Anton J. Mikolajczak, Maurer.
Patrick J. Devlin, Matawan.
Walter D. Finch, Mahwah.
Thomas L. Slocum, Long Branch.
Albert C. Derby, Little Falls.
Sadie M. Wood, Linden.
Andrew F. Stout, Lawrenceville.
James A. Cleary, Lambertville.
Arthur J. Halladay, Kenilworth.
Benjamin F. Apgar, Hampton.
George H. Abel, Haddon Heights.
Lewis E. Matteson, Grantwood.
Thomas J. Foley, Gloucester City.
Watson Rinehart, Glen Gardner.
Daniel J. Murphy, Fort Hancock.
Charles H. Hitchner, Elmer.
Emery Benoit, Edgewater.

William Griffin, Cresskill.
John F. Peniston, Cranford.
Reuben Coyte, Coytesville.
Arthur M. Cowie, Cedargrove.
Valentine Gleckner, Carteret.
Edward C. Wheaton, Cape May Courthouse.
Joseph P. Cullen, Boonton.
Cyrus B. Honce, Belmar.
William B. Loudenslager, Atlantic City.
Robert Bright, Anglesea.
John W. Winter, Allendale.

NEW YORK.

Joseph J. O'Reilly, Willsboro.
Albert C. Salisbury, Waterville.
C. Gordon Simmons, Vernon.
Edward J. Madden, Upper Saranac.
Edward F. Dougherty, Tonawanda.
William A. Cochran, Southold.
Anna E. Joyce, Roslyn Heights.
Albert R. Kessinger, Rome.
Horatio S. Ransom, Ransomville.
Besse R. Griffin, Quogue.
Matthew T. Hutchinson, Port Washington.
Andrew G. Senecal, Plattsburgh.
Carroll F. Simpson, Phoenicia.
George H. Steele, Oriskany.
W. Cooke Oille, North Tonawanda.
Thomas F. Connolly, Norfolk.
Stephen Van Tassel, Mount Vernon.
James A. McDonald, Mamaroneck.
George D. Hughes, Madrid.
Bessie Sullivan, Lisbon.
Wilbur C. Box, Linbrook.
Joseph E. Downs, Islip.
John D. Crosby, Inwood.
Joseph L. Durney, Huntington Station.
Mark L. Mount, Hewlett.
Francis J. Mulgannon, Hempstead.
Herbert W. Rackett, Greenport.
George H. Martens, Fort Totten.
Charles E. Dempsey, Fort Covington.
Abram Lang, Eden.
Arthur E. Hammond, East Aurora.
Owen J. Burns, Clinton.
Frank T. Kelly, Central Islip.
Nicholas Reilly, Brentwood.
Patrick A. Hallahan, Brasher Falls.
Irving Barrett, Bedford Hills.
Edward J. Woods, Bayport.
Robert E. L. Reynolds, Amsterdam.

NORTH CAROLINA.

Sarah A. Lunceford, Smithfield.
Robert N. Cook, Graham.
Benjamin B. Arrington, Beaufort.
Samuel A. Branch, Apex.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Anna Carmody, Hillsboro.
Mary A. Leavy, Granville.
Reuben H. Leavitt, Carson.

OHIO.

Della Boone, Spencer.

OKLAHOMA.

Daniel R. Wright, Taloga.
George H. Blackwood, Hominy.
Thomas P. Stone, Custer.
George W. Barefoot, Chickasha.

OREGON.

Charles W. Holloman, Haines.
Henry D. Reed, Gold Hill.
Mamie E. Gould, Burns.

PENNSYLVANIA.

George S. Dickson, Valencia.
Glenmar G. Gaston, Tionesta.
John H. Rifeuberick, Spartansburg.
Edward W. Workley, Smethport.
Thomas O. Humphrey, Sharon Hill.
Harvey Ziegler, Red Lion.
Frederick P. D. Hazell, Norwood Station.
John A. Rick, Girard.
Bernard Doherty, Clifton Heights.
William V. Wirtz, Albion.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Virginia Gantt, Wagener.
Theron L. Gregory, Kershaw.
Thomas M. Douglas, Chester.

TENNESSEE.

Lewis N. Lumpkins, Lawrenceburg.

TEXAS.

William T. McDonald, jr., Wylie.
William B. Smith, Shamrock.
William A. Garner, Runge.
Herman P. Talley, Rockdale.
Walter L. Crofford, Quitman.
Edward H. Daniel, Port Neches.
Grace R. Rubert, Port Lavaca.
Walter L. Francis, Kosse.
Joe F. Coffey, Eddy.
William G. Hardin, Brownfield.

UTAH.

Stephen W. Stoker, Milford.

WASHINGTON.

Alberta Gilson, Valley.
Mary A. Illy, Uniontown.
Jessie Knight, Shelton.
Albert Meade, Pe Ell.
Arthur Bailey, Monroe.

WISCONSIN.

Kathryn Meisner, Wittenberg.
Paul C. Dierschke, North Freedom.
Louie B. Halsey, Brandon.
Carroll R. Eaton, Adams.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 24, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou who canst right all wrongs, soothe all sorrows, and bring Thy children in harmony with Thy will, exercise, we beseech Thee, Thy holy influence upon us and guide us to clear conceptions of right, justice, and liberty, that we may protect the weak, uplift the downfallen, and further Thy purposes; that hunger, starvation, disease, and all the evils which doth beset us shall be removed. Strengthen our armies on land, sea, and sky, that a righteous peace may be established and bring all hearts under Thy sway; and we will praise and magnify Thy holy name, through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, October 21, 1918, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message from the President, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved bills and a joint resolution, as follows:

On October 16, 1918:

H. R. 12402. An act to exclude and expel from the United States aliens who are members of the anarchistic and similar classes.

On October 17, 1918:

H. R. 12982. An act to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to purchase from the Commonwealth of Massachusetts a large dry dock and appurtenant lands.

On October 19, 1918:

H. J. Res. 331. Joint resolution authorizing the readmission to the United States of certain aliens who have been conscripted or have volunteered for service with the military forces of the United States or cobelligerent forces.

On October 22, 1918:

H. R. 10609. An act authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to exchange the present Federal building site at Eatonton, Ga., for another site on the public square in said city.

On October 23, 1918:

S. 3470. An act to amend section 35 of the Criminal Code of the United States.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3735) to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the amenments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 4886) providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

The message also announced that the Senate further insisted upon its amendment numbered 28 to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and agreed to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. GORE, Mr. SMITH of South Carolina, Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. KENYON, and Mr. FRANCE as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 63) to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 322):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow the announcement of the death of Hon. JOHN A. STERLING, late a Representative from the State of Illinois.

Resolved, That a committee of six Senators be appointed by the Presiding Officer to join the committee appointed on the part of the House of Representatives to attend the funeral of the deceased.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, announced that they had found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolution of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 3735. To provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. J. Res. 63. To establish a reserve of the Public Health Service.

RECESS UNTIL NOON TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that we take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow, for the purpose of considering the deficiency bill. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] will be back to-morrow. That was one of the excepted matters.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not know but that you would take a recess until late this afternoon; but to-morrow will do just as well.

Mr. CANNON. Ordinarily the Senate does not order the printing of its amendments, but I suppose it could do so.

Mr. KITCHIN. The clerks will have that attended to.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I understand the clerk of the House committee is looking after that in order to have it here to-morrow.

Mr. CANNON. All right.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, at any rate, the conferees on the food-production bill have agreed this morning to report a disagreement, and the Senate, I presume, will act upon that to-day, so that we can take that up to-morrow, too.

Mr. KITCHIN. We could take that up to-morrow. That also is one of the excepted matters.

Mr. CANNON. The Senate can adjourn from day to day?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Is it intended if these excepted matters should come up, that the House will meet on days other than those contemplated in the agreement?

Mr. KITCHIN. We could not meet except by unanimous consent.

Mr. WALSH. The agreement contemplated that any business that was to be transacted was to be transacted on the days when the House met.

Mr. KITCHIN. Technically it might not be within the language of our agreement, but I think the spirit of our agreement was that we could take up these three matters which we excepted, if we could get unanimous consent to stand in recess, as I have asked. Otherwise we would have to wait until Monday.

Mr. CANNON. The legislative day may continue, so far as the calendar days are concerned, up to and including Sunday?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman's suggestion does not modify the agreement that was made.

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think it modifies the spirit of the agreement at all. These bills were excepted, and all that will be done to-morrow will be the appointment of a conference committee. In other words, we could meet, legislatively and parliamentarily and technically, from now until to-morrow at 12 o'clock, and all through to-day and to-night and to-morrow morning, we could remain in session and wait for that. But instead of that we can have a unanimous-consent agreement to recess until to-morrow, as we could have a recess until 3 o'clock this afternoon or until any other hour.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 8 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until to-morrow, Friday, October 25, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13112) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire additional lands for the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., and for other purposes, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 834), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. PADGETT: A bill (H. R. 13115) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire additional lands for the naval training station, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va.; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 13116) authorizing payment to certain Red Lake Indians, out of Chippewa Indian funds, for garden plots surrendered for school-farm use; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 13117) authorizing the conferring upon civilian appointees of the Government who have served the Government during at least six months of the present war without substantial compensation a suitably inscribed bronze badge; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. KNUTSON: A bill (H. R. 13118) granting a pension to Charles Fortier; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 13119) granting a pension to William Gibson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of George D. Bartlett, secretary of the Wisconsin Bankers' Association, protesting against stamp tax on bank checks; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of Genevieve Oium, protesting against the Surgeon General prohibiting the osteopathic physicians from serving in any capacity in the Medical Department of the United States Army and Navy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. OSBORNE: Petition of Earle M. Phillips and others, of Los Angeles, Cal., in favor of the Edmonds bill, to establish a pharmaceutical corps in the United States Army; also a petition of the same import by Louis Freedman and others, of Los Angeles, Cal.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, October 25, 1918.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, October 24, 1918.)

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock noon, Friday, October 25, 1918) resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, in which amendments the concurrence of the House was requested, and had asked for a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. MARTIN of Virginia, Mr. UNDERWOOD, and Mr. WARREN.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the urgent deficiency appropriation bill, which is on the Speaker's table with Senate amendments, be taken from the table, and that the House disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and that the House disagree to all the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

There was no objection; and the Speaker announced as the conferees on the part of the House Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I understand that a meeting of the conferees has been called for this afternoon, and there is a possibility that a report may be agreed upon before midnight to-night. I therefore ask unanimous consent that if the report is agreed upon it be printed in the RECORD of to-day's proceedings.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that if the conferees on the urgent deficiency bill make a report to-day it be printed in the RECORD to-day. Without objection it will be so ordered.

There was no objection.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 835).

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 8, 20, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "including necessary clerical help in the District of Columbia and other personal services," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "including not exceeding $25,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agreed to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "authorized" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed"; and in line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: At the end of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That property shall not be taken over under the foregoing power at an aggregate cost in excess of $15,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 37 of the bill strike out line 5; and the Senate agree to the same.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Inserts the amendment, proposed by the Senate, increasing the powers of the President under the trading-with-the enemy act in connection with alien property.

On No. 2: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, re appropriating for the District of Columbia militia the unexpended balances of appropriations for the fiscal year 1918.

On No. 3: Provides, as proposed by the House, that the expenditures for the establishment of plants for shipbuilding or maintenance or repair may be paid from appropriations for the construction of ships.

On Nos. 4 and 5: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $136,000, as proposed by the House, for employees in the Department of State; and appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $125,000, as proposed by the House, for clerks at embassies and legations.

On No. 6: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the payment of allotments and family allowances for enlisted men reported as missing in action until their actual status has been determined by the proper official authority.

On No. 7: Appropriates $500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for use of the Public Health Service in enforcing interstate quarantine.

On No. 8: Provides, as proposed by the House, that construction work at the quarantine stations carried in the bill shall be under the Construction Division of the War Department instead of under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 9: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the crediting of $327.04 in the accounts of Maj. Charles J. Nelson.

On No. 10: Appropriates $500,000, instead of $800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the War Department.

On No. 11: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, relative to the disposition of claims caused by explosion and fire at the plant of T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., Morgan, N. J., modified so as to direct the Secretary of War to ascertain, consider, and determine the amounts due and report to Congress within two months from the approval of the act.

On No. 12: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, for contingencies of the Army.

On No. 13: Restores the paragraph stricken out by the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of War to requisition or take over lands and buildings for hospital purposes, modified so as to limit the authority to a sum not exceeding $15,000,000.

On Nos. 14, 15, and 16: Strikes out the appropriation of $183,186 for shooting galleries and ranges; strikes out the appropriation of $1,500,000 for the acquisition of lands at Fayetteville, N. C.; and strikes out the appropriation of $1,600,000 for the acquisition of lands at West Point, Ky., as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 17 and 18, relating to the Military Academy: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, crediting cadets of the classes of 1920 and 1921 with so much of their full-course personal-equipment allowances as may remain unpaid at the date of their graduation, and appropriates $150,000 to be used by the treasurer of the academy to keep stock in cadet store, cadet mess, and cadet laundry.

On Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, relating to the Post Office Department: Appropriates $74,560, as proposed by the Senate, for clerical services; strikes out the appropriation of $20,000, proposed by the Senate, for personal services in connection with extraordinary work; appropriates $4,912.31 for compensation of postmasters and $196,045.04 for special-delivery fees, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 24: Strikes out all reference in the bill to a new vessel for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, instead of the paragraph proposed by the House, repealing the authorization for such a vessel, and the one proposed by the Senate granting authority to construct up to the full limit of cost of such vessel.

On No. 25: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, granting permanence and full classified status to temporary appointees in the Naturalization Bureau and Service.

On Nos. 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, relating to the Senate: Inserts the paragraphs proposed by the Senate for payments to the widows or legal representatives of deceased Senators and appropriates $5,000 for folding speeches and pamphlets.

On No. 31: Appropriates $501,662.50, as proposed by the Senate, for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 32: Appropriates for the payment of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

REPRINT OF AN ADDRESS OF PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I have been requested to make the following statement——

The SPEAKER. What is it about?

Mr. LEVER. It is about an extension of remarks by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON]. He requests a correction.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks for one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, on October 16 the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON] obtained leave to print in the RECORD an address of the late President Garfield. It was printed in the back part of the RECORD, but the words crediting it to Gen. Garfield were omitted. Mr. GORDON asks that this correction be made and that the address be reprinted, with the proper credit. It is short.

Mr. GILLETT. Did it appear in the RECORD as though it was an address by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON]?

Mr. LEVER. I am informed that it did.

The SPEAKER. That was one of the most famous speeches ever made by the late Gen. Garfield. The gentleman from North Carolina, in the absence of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GORDON], and at his request, asks unanimous consent that the address be reprinted in the RECORD, with the proper credit to Gen. Garfield. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, announced that they had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

S. 4886. An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

RECESS UNTIL TO-MORROW.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 12 o'clock to-morrow.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon to-morrow. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow, Saturday, October 26, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. SABATH introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 339) to designate November 8, 1918, as Czecho-Slovak day, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. ESCH laid on the Clerk's desk the petition of the Clanna-Gael, urging the intervention of America in behalf of Irish independence, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, October 26, 1918.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, October 24, 1918.)

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock noon, Saturday, October 26, 1918), resumed its session.

CORRECTION OF THE RECORD.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise to correct the RECORD. I notice that in the RECORD of yesterday the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] printed some remarks as an extension under date of Friday, October 25. The gentleman from Alabama did not receive any permission on Friday, October 25, and did not receive any permission this whole week, to my knowledge. I do not charge him with printing an extension of remarks without any permission; I presume some time he has had permission, but certainly when remarks are printed under an extension they should carry the date of the day when the leave was granted.

The gentleman from Alabama in his remarks, which he puts in as of yesterday, prints an order by the Director General of Railroads which was issued October 19, which was certainly since he received permission. He introduces a letter of the President of yesterday and some comments on that letter by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Now, I am sure, however partisan the House may be, the House intends to be fair, and I am sure the House will recognize that the gentleman had no right under the leave which was granted some time ago to put his extension in as of yesterday. It must be put in as of the day when the leave was granted, and therefore he could not put in anything after that date. So I ask that the RECORD be corrected by striking out everything that occurred after the date the gentleman received permission.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I am not surprised that the gentleman from Massachusetts—the Republican leader—wants to strike my speech from the RECORD. I printed the facts and figures from the War and Navy Departments showing that the Republican claims as to expenditures in Southern States for war purposes were untrue.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not ask that that be stricken out.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, a few days ago when certain Republicans obtained leave to extend remarks in the RECORD I rose and said, "I make the same request."

Mr. GILLETT. What date was that?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not remember the day.

Mr. GILLETT. It was not during this week?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not many days ago.

Mr. GILLETT. I know it was not this week.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman from Alabama give us the day and place in the RECORD where the permission was granted?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not looked it up. The RECORD will show the date.

Mr. GILLETT. What date was that?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not remember; but I will say to the gentleman that I always get permission to extend my remarks when Republicans are obtaining leave. I do so in order to correct Republican misstatements that are made to the country. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Mr. Speaker, when several Republicans the other day obtained permission to extend their remarks I thought that I might want to extend remarks, and maybe reply to something they were sending out, so I obtained permission. They have been appealing to sectional prejudice and stating that the North was being discriminated against by the administration, and that war funds were being lavishly spent in the South to the neglect and injury of the North, all of which is untrue. I reserved the right in order that I might print remarks in the RECORD. I have done that before, Mr. Speaker. Every Member has had this right, and sometimes permissions have been granted for weeks, to my knowledge, and the remarks were not printed until about the time that Congress adjourned. When Congress recessed or adjourned in October last year, remarks were printed from leaves that had been granted two or three weeks prior.

Mr. GILLETT. Will the gentleman allow a question?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. In all of these cases, when the remarks were printed were they not printed as of the date when the leave was granted?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know about that. It was not my purpose to show that these remarks should appear as if leave was obtained on yesterday. The RECORD will show that leave was granted. Let the gentleman look the RECORD up and see whether I had leave to print, and if I did have leave to print and extend my remarks in the RECORD, I have a right to print anything under that leave unless somebody should ask me what subject, and then I should state a specific subject. I know what the gentleman objects to. The President of the United States, because of the Republican conspiracy to slip up on him and get this House and Senate and tie his hands in the conduct of the war, was forced to appeal to the American people to give him a Democratic House and Senate, and his letter to the country is what the gentleman is objecting to. He does not want it printed and sent out in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. We might as well tell the truth and the whole truth about this situation. I had permission to extend my remarks, and I did so. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The rule about extensions is plain enough. If a gentleman rises and simply gets leave to extend remarks, he can extend them any time before the 4th of March, but he can not put into the extended remarks anything that happened after the day that he got his leave. That has been the practice of the House. Of course, the rule has not been invoked very frequently.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I have been in the House 14 years, and I never heard it invoked before.

Mr. GILLETT. I have been 14 years in the House, and I never have known a man to try to abuse that custom.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not tried to abuse it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves that the RECORD be corrected by striking out from the remarks of the gentleman from Alabama those parts that apply to a date subsequent to his getting the leave.

Mr. EAGLE rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Texas rise?

Mr. EAGLE. To make this observation: The Speaker having stated what the rule is, why is a motion requisite in order to enforce the rule?

The SPEAKER. The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is a matter entirely in the hands of the House and not in the hands of the Speaker. The Speaker stated what the rule is in a proper way.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, in order to prevent this injustice being done me and the administration which has the conduct of this war in hand, and in order to prevent the Republican minority leader from keeping this truth which is in my speech from going to the country, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama makes the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman from Alabama to withhold it for a moment.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I withhold it for a moment, but I shall make it again.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold temporarily the point of no quorum, I desire recognition upon this point.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Speaker, the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama withholds his point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not feel that the point made by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is well taken. At least, I am not prepared to concede that it is at this time. Of course, the gentleman from Massachusetts knows that I wish to be perfectly fair about the matter, but I have never heard the rule invoked that where one had authority to extend his remarks in the RECORD it meant that he could insert only whatever data he desired to insert which had occurred prior to the time or at the time of the securing of permission to extend.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it not always the practice when a Member gets permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD that the extension appears in the RECORD as of the date when he obtained permission?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I say very frankly to the gentleman that I have not noticed just what the print carries in respect to that.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman is logical, and if he will think for a moment he will realize the truth of what I say. A Member rises and makes a speech, and then asks permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Of course, that means that he extends them as of that date. It must mean that; and if the gentleman will observe the RECORD he will find that it is always printed in the RECORD as of that date. If that is so, no man who has any sense of self-respect could put in something which occurred after he obtained permission when he prints his speech; for instance, as of the date upon which he obtained permission.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the language of the gentleman from Massachusetts, and he can not apply any such language to me.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama will please suspend. The gentleman from Massachusetts was making a general statement which did not apply to the gentleman from Alabama any more than it applied to the Chair or any other Member of the House. It may have been an extreme statement, and the Chair thinks it was.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, if the Chair will observe, I said that when a Member prints a speech as of a certain date he would not, with self-respect—and this does not apply to the gentleman, because the gentleman violated the rule by not printing his speech as of the date when he was granted permission to print it, but as of yesterday—he can not with self-respect include within his remarks when printed as of a certain date matters which occurred thereafter. If the gentleman had printed his remarks as of the date when he obtained permission, he will recognize, as every Member will recognize, how absurd it would have been to print a speech as of October 17, say, and then include in it some statements which were not issued until a week after. So that I think the gentleman from Tennessee, who is a logical man and who is fair, will at once recognize that that is inevitably so, that the leave to print means that the leave is to print as of that date, and although it is not printed for many days, yet if it bears the date of the time when permission was granted or when the speech was originally delivered, it would, therefore, be preposterous for anyone to include within it something which occurred afterwards, as, for instance, to include within a speech delivered as of the date of October 17, some facts which did not occur until a week afterwards.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with the gentleman's premise, that where a Member rises, for instance, and obtains unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD, that that means the remarks must be printed as of that date in the RECORD. It has been quite a while since I recall when general leave to print was given, but, of course, in the experience of all of us here, it has occurred that general leave to print has been given for 10 legislative days, even after the adjournment of Congress in some instances.

Mr. GILLETT. But that leave always specified.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not agree with the gentleman's premise. If we admit the gentleman's premise, we will have to admit his conclusion; but I do not agree with the gentleman's premise that where general permission is given to print it necessarily follows that the Member obtaining it must print as of the date upon which permission is granted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. For that reason I am not prepared to vote to strike out the gentleman's remarks. I am anxious to protect the RECORD. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, when a gentleman rises to obtain leave to print, does he not have in mind to print remarks concerning something that has already happened or concerning something which he then has in his mind, and not to anticipate something that may happen in the future?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Not necessarily. I am sure that I can, with a little time, find and point out to the gentleman cases in which Members have obtained permission to extend their remarks in the RECORD and have inserted in the RECORD things that occurred subsequent to the date upon which permission was granted.

Mr. WOOD of Indiana. If that be true, it is no justification, for the reason that if the House is to have any control over its RECORD, and there is to be any system at all with reference to the conduct of the rule of extension of remarks, it must be in respect to something that a man has in mind at the time.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The time for the House to protect itself, if it anticipates any protection is necessary, is at the time the request is made. Of course, if matter is inserted in violation of the rules of the House it does not matter as of what date it may be inserted. The right of the House to strike out is unquestioned, but I do not understand that it is contended that the matter here is objectionable to any rule of the House.

Mr. GILLETT. Not in the slightest. I am perfectly willing that the matter should be inserted in a proper way.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It is wholly predicated upon the proposition that matters are inserted which occurred subsequent to the date at which the gentleman obtained permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman mean to say that when the House agree that a Member may extend his remarks in the RECORD that they are agreeing to something in the future that they do not know anything about? I think it is directly to the contrary, that they are agreeing he may extend his remarks upon what has already occurred.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Of course, no gentleman will insert in the RECORD any remarks which are offensive to the rules of the House. That is the only limitation. I do not think it is understood——

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. I am talking about fairness and understanding between each Member, between man and man.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not think it is understood where consent is given to a gentleman to insert——

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman from Massachusetts yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will yield.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Did I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts to say that he had no objection to the matter going into the RECORD?

Mr. GILLETT. I have not the slightest objection personally, but I do not like to see the rules violated.

Mr. BANKHEAD. The main objection I understand the gentleman from Massachusetts has to the insertion of the matter is of the date of Friday, October 25, that appears at the head of the extension of remarks?

Mr. GILLETT. They had no right to go in at all. The gentleman from Alabama had no right to put it in, and I am surprised the gentleman from Tennessee does not recognize that when a gentleman gets up and asks leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, when it goes in the RECORD it ought to go in as of the date he asked it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I do not understand there is any rule. If the right is granted in that form—I do not remember the form in which leave was granted the gentleman; I do not recall I was on the floor when it occurred—but if that leave was granted, if he arose and said, "Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD," and the question was put and that was granted without limitation, he would have the right to extend at any time during the remainder of this session——

Mr. GILLETT. Certainly.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Any time during the remainder of the session.

Mr. GILLETT. And it should have been printed as of that date.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I will.

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. As a matter of fact, has not the gentleman himself and almost every other Member of the House done that very thing?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennesse. I do not recall that I have ever extended remarks in the RECORD, except——

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I have extended mine.

Mr. GILLETT. But did not the gentleman put the date?

Mr. CARTER of Oklahoma. I put the remarks in as of the date printed.

Mr. GILLETT. I have never seen that, except as of the date of the permission to print.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GILLETT. I will.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Is there anything in the extension of remarks that is objectionable, if it was printed within the five days?

Mr. GILLETT. Except that it was not in existence within the five days.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Then I understand there is nothing in it that is objectionable——

Mr. GILLETT. It is obviously a political speech printed contrary to the rules of the House in order to circulate without paying postage the President's letter, the order of the Director General of Railroads, and Mr. SCOTT FERRIS's remarks. That is obviously the purpose of it, a political partisan speech, which I think——

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. But I understood personally the gentleman had no objection?

Mr. GILLETT. I have no objection personally. I do not think it would do any good. Of course, the President's letter has been in all the papers anyway, and I do not think the remarks of Mr. FERRIS—well, I will not say that.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Would the gentleman object to its being reincorporated in to-day's RECORD?

Mr. GILLETT. I would not have the slightest objection if the gentleman would strike it out from yesterday's RECORD, or the gentleman from Mississippi himself would ask leave——

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. But I understood the gentleman to say he would have no objection——

Mr. HEFLIN. It will not rest on any such contingency as that. What I have printed is properly in the RECORD.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, suppose I make this suggestion: Suppose this remains in the RECORD and with it there is also permitted to go into the RECORD the statement just issued by Mr. LODGE and others.

Mr. HEFLIN. No, sir; under the circumstances, I would not permit that. Leave must be granted in the regular way.

Mr. GILLETT. I thought probably not. I would like to leave it to that side of the House if my suggestion is not a fair proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. Will the gentleman yield? I will suggest that the gentleman from Massachusetts postpone his motion, and, of course, the gentleman from Alabama will withdraw for the present his point of no quorum, and let us take up and consider and dispose of, if we can, the first deficiency bill, and then the gentleman from Massachusetts can renew it.

Mr. GOOD. No; then we will adjourn.

Mr. KITCHIN. We do not want the point of no quorum made.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, when a Member receives permission to extend his remarks and then makes an extension in the RECORD, should his remarks be dated as of the date he secured the right to extend or as of some other date?

The SPEAKER. That is hardly a parliamentary question, but the Chair will answer it, anyhow. Yes; it ought to be dated when he gets leave. That is the common sense of the thing; and the Chair recollects——

Mr. NORTON. It has been my observation that that has always been done heretofore.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know whether it has or not. He will not undertake to say.

Mr. MONDELL. The propriety of the gentleman's remarks having been challenged, it seems to me the gentleman should inform the House as to the date on which and circumstances under which he secured permission to extend remarks. I do not recall any general permission to extend remarks having been granted for some time in the House to anyone.

The SPEAKER. Of course, the Chair does not undertake to speak by the RECORD; but I remember one evening there were half a dozen, and possibly more, gentlemen who hopped up and asked unanimous consent to extend their remarks in the RECORD, and the House, being in good humor, gave them all leave to do so, and among others was the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN]. Now, what the date was I do not remember.

Mr. GILLETT. Should he not show by the RECORD his leave to print?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks the burden is on him.

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman asserts that he has the right to print. I would like to have him show it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. The first time my attention was called to this question—and I have forgotten what year it was, but I think it was 1904, when President Roosevelt was a candidate for reelection—a very eminent Member of the House, not a Member of it now, got leave to extend his remarks in the RECORD, and about 30 days after the House adjourned for good he printed a speech that must have taken 20 or 30 pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and he loaded it up with every political thing he could get hold of, down to the day he put it in the RECORD. But Congress was not in session. And while there was a good deal of criticism of it and mouthing about it, by the time the election was over and we all got back here in December everybody was in a good humor and nobody ever moved to strike the speech out of the RECORD. It was the grossest case I ever saw.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to address the House for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, the point of no quorum is pending. The gentlemen's agreement, with which we are all familiar, is that when the House adjourns it adjourn to meet every three days. Our colleagues from both sides of the House are scattered all over the country in their campaign. Now, what is the situation? Here is an appropriation bill of between six and seven billions of dollars that looks to the prosecution of this war. It is important that it should be passed here and now by the House agreeing to a conference report, but it can not be passed in the event the point of order of no quorum is insisted upon.

Now, the bill is of real substance; it means shot and shell and provisions and ships. It is almost impossible to get a quorum here. It is not just to our absent colleagues that we should be called upon to get a quorum.

Now, I want to make one further remark about this matter. If the gentleman from Alabama and myself were both dead, we would be buried and the funeral expenses would be paid, and that would be the end of it. The point is made that the gentleman from Alabama has violated the customs of the House by printing something under leave to print obtained some days ago, and that he has printed the President's partisan appeal to the country, the object being that it should be frankable. Well, it is pretty well distributed in the newspapers, and, God knows, I have no objection, and I do not believe this side of the House has any objection. If that side of the House thinks it well to make it frankable, then it should be made frankable. And in view of what has taken place, and in view of the emergency that is upon us, the real emergency for the prosecution of this war and the support of the President of the United States, the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, in the prosecution of the war, where both sides of the House will vote between six and seven billions of dollars, I am going to ask unanimous consent that this whole thing may be stopped for the present, in order that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY] may call up his conference report. And after it is adopted I hope the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] may ask unanimous consent to print the matter that is objected to, and if he does not feel like that, inasmuch as he may think it might reflect against him, I will ask that it be printed. Good God, I have no objection to its being printed and sent broadcast! [Applause.] But my object is to pass this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, inasmuch as the gentleman from Alamaba is not willing that the House should pass on whether he has violated the rules or not, but makes the point of no quorum—which, of course, would be of great inconvenience to many Members on both that side and this and delay this great appropriation bill, I for the present withdraw my motion.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] withdraws his motion.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon the first urgent deficiency bill, and under the permission of the House given last night this report was printed in to-day's RECORD. I desire to call it up.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the conference report on the deficiency bill, which the Clerk will read.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, temporarily I yield, that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. LEVER] may present for printing another conference report.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I present for printing under the rule the conference report and accompanying statement on the bill (H. R. 11945) making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The conference report is ordered printed under the rule.

Following are the conference report and accompanying statement:

CONFERENCE REPORT.

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

Amendment No. 28: The committee on conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 28.

A. F. LEVER,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. M. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

T. P. GORE,
W. S. KENYON,
HOKE SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 28 to the bill (H. R. 11945) making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes," submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to said Senate amendment numbered 28, namely:

On amendment No. 28: This amendment adds new language and constitutes what is commonly known as the Pomerene antirent profiteering bill, and, among other things, provides for the appointment of a rent administrator for the District of Columbia. The conferees have been unable to agree as to this amendment.

A. F. LEVER,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION—CONFERENCE REPORT (NO. 836).

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report on the bill H. R. 13086, the deficiency bill.

The conference report was read, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 8, 20, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 7: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "including necessary clerical help in the District of Columbia and other personal services," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "including not exceeding $25,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line

3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "authorized" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed"; and in line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: At the end of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That property shall not be taken over under the foregoing power at an aggregate cost in excess of $15,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24: That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 37 of the bill strike out line 5; and the Senate agree to the same.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

STATEMENT.

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, submit the following written statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conference committee and submitted in the accompanying conference report as to each of said amendments, namely:

On No. 1: Inserts the amendment, proposed by the Senate, increasing the powers of the President under the trading-with-the enemy act in connection with alien property.

On No. 2: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, reappropriating for the District of Columbia militia the unexpended balances of appropriations for the fiscal year 1918.

On No. 3: Provides, as proposed by the House, that the expenditures for the establishment of plants for shipbuilding or maintenance or repair may be paid from appropriations for the construction of ships.

On Nos. 4 and 5: Appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $136,000, as proposed by the House, for employees in the Department of State; and appropriates $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $125,000, as proposed by the House, for clerks at embassies and legations.

On No. 6: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the payment of allotments and family allowances for enlisted men reported as missing in action until their actual status has been determined by the proper official authority.

On No. 7: Appropriate $500,000, as proposed by the Senate, for use of the Public Health Service in enforcing interstate quarantine.

On No. 8: Provides, as proposed by the House, that construction work at the quarantine stations carried in the bill shall be under the Construction Division of the War Department instead of under the Supervising Architect of the Treasury, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 9: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, authorizing the crediting of $327.04 in the accounts of Maj. Charles J. Nelson.

On No. 10: Appropriates $500,000, instead of $800,000, as proposed by the Senate, for contingent expenses of the War Department.

On No. 11: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, relative to the disposition of claims caused by explosion and fire at the plant of T. A. Gillespie Loading Co., Morgan, N. J., modified so as to direct the Secretary of War to ascertain, consider, and determine the amounts due and report to Congress within two months from the approval of the act.

On No. 12: Appropriate $200,000, as proposed by the Senate, instead of $100,000, as proposed by the House, for contingencies of the Army.

On No. 13: Restores the paragraph stricken out by the Senate, authorizing the Secretary of War to requisition or take over lands and buildings for hospital purposes, modified so as to limit the authority to a sum not exceeding $15,000,000.

On Nos. 14, 15, and 16: Strikes out the appropriations of $183,186 for shooting galleries and ranges; strikes out the appropriation of $1,500,000 for the acquisition of lands at Fayetteville, N. C.; and strikes out the appropriation of $1,600,000 for the acquisition of lands at West Point, Ky., as proposed by the Senate.

On Nos. 17 and 18, relating to the Military Academy: Inserts the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, crediting cadets of the classes of 1920 and 1921 with so much of their full-course personal-equipment allowances as may remain unpaid at the date of their graduation, and appropriates $150,000 to be used by the treasurer of the academy to keep stock in cadet store, cadet mess, and cadet laundry.

On Nos. 19, 20, 21, 22, and 23, relating to the Post Office Department: Appropriates $74,560, as proposed by the Senate, for clerical services; strikes out the appropriation of $20,000, proposed by the Senate, for personal services in connection with extraordinary work; appropriates $4,912.31 for compensation of postmasters and $196,045.04 for special-delivery fees, as proposed by the Senate.

On No. 24: Strikes out all reference in the bill to a new vessel for the Coast and Geodetic Survey, instead of the paragraph proposed by the House, repealing the authorization for such a vessel, and the one proposed by the Senate granting authority to construct up to the full limit of cost of such vessel.

On No. 25: Strikes out the paragraph, proposed by the Senate, granting permanence and full classified status to temporary appointees in the Naturalization Bureau and Service.

On Nos. 26, 27, 28, 29, and 30, relating to the Senate: Inserts the paragraphs proposed by the Senate for payments to the widows or legal representatives of deceased Senators and appropriates $5,000 for folding speeches and pamphlets.

On No. 31: Appropriates $501,662.50, as proposed by the Senate, for the payment of judgments of the Court of Claims certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

On No. 32: Appropriates for the payment of claims allowed by the accounting officers of the Treasury Department certified to Congress after the bill had passed the House.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the first deficiency bill for 1919, as it passed the House, carried $2,487,405,890.04 in cash and a contract authorization of $3,844,511,016. The Senate made no change in reference to the contract authorization, but they amended the cash provisions in the bill by striking out certain ones that had been carried in it by the House, and the result of that was to make a net reduction in the bill of $81,977.63.

The bill as it has been finally agreed to carries $2,487,003,912.41 in cash and the contract authorization that I have heretofore referred to, making a total of $6,331,514,928.41. This sum is $401,977.63 less than the bill as it passed the House.

The chief matter of importance at issue between the two Houses related to some legislation that was put in by the Senate in connection with the powers of the Alien Property Custodian. That comprises three matters. It is to make clear, first, that the power given to the Alien Property Custodian over the property of alien enemies embraced, as property, patents, trade-marks, choses in action, and so forth. There seemed to be some doubt as to whether the generic term "property" included property of those kinds, and, in order that there might be no question about that we amend the act prescribing the powers of the Alien Property Custodian so as to carry the language "including patents, copyrights, applications therefor, and rights to apply for the same, trade-marks, choses in action, and rights and claims of every character and description," this being simply a statement showing that the word "property" included such character of property.

Further, there is given to the Alien Property Custodian the right to issue stock certificates in lieu of stock certificates that were owned by the alien enemies, whether such stock certificates were now in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian or not. In some cases the Alien Property Custodian would obtain possession of shares of stock belonging to an alien enemy, because such shares were here in America and under the act were delivered to him. In other instances the books of the corporation would show such stock ownership by an alien enemy, but the actual shares of stock were in the possession of such alien enemy and not within the United States. This amendment enables the Alien Property Custodian to get the evidences of title. He already, under existing law, gets the title to such property, but he would get the evidence of such title by the issuance of new certificates of stock by the corporation in lieu of those held by the alien enemy.

It was also provided that "The sole relief and remedy of any person having any claim to any money or other property heretofore or hereafter conveyed, transferred, assigned, delivered, or paid over to the Alien Property Custodian, or required so to be, or seized by him shall be that provided by the terms of this act, and in the event of sale or other disposition of such property by the Alien Property Custodian, shall be limited to and enforced against the net proceeds received therefrom and held by the Alien Property Custodian or by the Treasurer of the United States."

In other words, it confines a suit or claim for property taken over under this act to the proceeds resulting from the sale of such property where such property has been sold, and is, I believe, a proper limitation and a limitation that would be placed in any event upon the rights of such alien enemy, even if this provision were not carried in the law.

The House concurred in these amendments, believing that they were simply carrying out the plain intent and spirit of the trading-with-the-enemy act, and that it does not change in any true sense the purpose and intent of such law, but clarifies and makes it plain. It would have been impossible, if the House should have held that the word "property" did not embrace trade-marks and patents, to have disposed of a great deal of property which is in the possession of the Alien Property Custodian and which had belonged to alien enemies, and which property for its value depended upon patent rights and trade-marks, and so forth.

In addition to that matter the Senate had a provision giving for the use of the militia to be formed under the act recently passed by Congress the unexpended balances of appropriations for the fiscal year 1918. The House will recall that within the past few days there has been passed a District of Columbia Militia act, making provision temporarily for a new militia body here, and this is simply to make available for their use the funds that existed for the District of Columbia Militia for the year 1918 and which had not been expended.

The Senate, in connection with the shipping provisions carried in the bill providing for the building of various dry docks, marine railways, and other facilities, struck out that part which made the amount to be expended for such purposes payable from appropriations for ship construction, and as it passed the Senate it would simply have resulted in increasing by some $33,000,000 the authorization in regard to the shipbuilding program. The Senate receded from that provision and let the matter remain as it passed the House.

It may be possible that later on the Shipping Board will desire to come to Congress for additional grants of power in connection with the shipbuilding program; but the House conferees believed that at this time the amount of contract authorizations and cash that they had been given was sufficient to deal with the situation as present needs require, and that later the Congress could consider, if it so desired, the question of increasing the shipping program.

There was also put into the bill by the Senate a paragraph dealing with the situation that grew up at Morgan, N. J., in connection with the explosion there of the plant of the T. A. Gillespie Loading Co. By the Senate provision the War Department was authorized to inquire into and determine the amount of damage that had been done to private property and to report to Congress within six months. As modified by the conference the War Department is directed to make such inquiry and to report within two months. In this connection I desire to say that in my judgment the War Department ought immediately to make such an investigation and detailed report as will enable the Congress very speedily to vote the moneys that are needed to relieve these people, who have suffered in many instances very great loss as the result of this explosion there. It had been very strongly urged by our colleague [Mr. SCULLY] who represents that district that Congress should at this time appropriate money directly for the relief of these people, and he has been very active in presenting the need. If it had been practicable Congress would have been very glad to have acquiesced in his suggestion, but it did not seem wise simply to vote a large lump sum to the War Department for the payment of these claims without a more accurate determination of the amount of the claims due to the various people and the character of the damage wrought. The Senate provision simply authorized this investigation and put a six months' limit upon it. We believed from the statements made by Mr. SCULLY that the War Department ought to be directed to make this inquiry, and we fixed the limit of two months, not because we thought it ought to take two months, but in order not unduly to hurry the consideration of these claims, so that they would not be properly considered from the standpoint of the Government as well as of the claimants. But I again repeat that it seems to me it is a matter that requires early dispatch on the part of the War Department, and that this Congress should be prepared when it meets after the recess to vote what moneys may be properly due to these unfortunate people who have suffered this very great loss.

The Senate struck out the provision that had been in the bill in connection with the right to condemn property for hospital purposes. The House conferees insisted that this ought to be in the bill, because of the need to have such power to prevent extortionate charges being made by owners of property that it was desirable to take over for hospital purposes. The conferees finally agreed upon the restoration of the House provision, with a limitation that not exceeding $15,000,000 of the fund that had been appropriated for hospital purposes should be used in the acquiring of property for such purposes under the condemnation powers herein conferred. That I believe to be an ample sum to safeguard the power, instead of giving them a blanket power for such purposes, and it limits it to the amount I have indicated. The Senate also struck out of the bill the provisions that were carried in it in regard to the acquisition of some land in the way of shooting galleries and ranges in Ohio and two provisions in regard to the acquisition of land at Fayetteville, N. C., and West Point, Ky., and the House conferees have agreed to the Senate amendments.

The Senate took the position that in view of the fact that at this time there has been no definite determination as to the military policy touching the number of camps that might be retained hereafter or the character of the needs for them, they did not think it was desirable to undertake the purchase of this land. Personally I felt, as I stated on the floor the other day, that the matter of purchase was an economic matter, irrespective of whether the camps should be permanently retained or not; but in view of the fact that the question of policy had not been determined by Congress or by the department touching the retention of camps subsequently to the war, the matter could well wait for such determination, and therefore the House conferees concurred.

There were certain increases of salary allowances to the State Department made by the Senate and concurred in by the House conferees on the very strong representation made by the State Department that at this time in particular there was need of added clerical service here and abroad in connection with the very great increase of work that has fallen on that department. I think it is apparent to everybody that this increase has been very great, and will continue to be for some time to come, and therefore the House conferees agreed to the Senate amendment.

They also carried a provision for an increase of clerical force in the Post Office Department. When the bill passed the House I stated that we had denied an increase of any sort in the way of clerical force here in Washington. But it ought to be said in fairness that the Post Office Department has been the one department of this Government that has shown practically no increase in its clerical force for months past.

It has been the one department in the Government that has held down the expenditures for clerical force, and whatever may be said about the management of the Post Office Department it must be admitted by all who are acquainted with the facts that there has been a continued effort in the interest of economy, and as a result of that the department has denied itself the need of clerks at times when other departments were asking great increases. In view of all the circumstances and the strong representations made by the department the House conferees concurred in the Senate amendment as to such increases.

There was also put in the bill a provision for $500,000 for additional moneys for the Public Health Service in connection with their work in conserving public health and sanitation. They had asked and sent in an estimate, which came too late to be considered by the House, for $1,950,000, but the Senate, after considering the matter, concluded that for the present $500,000 was sufficient, and the House conferees concurred in that amendment with an amendment limiting to $25,000 the amount of money that could be spent in the District of Columbia so as to insure that it would not be a fund for the building up of an unnecessarily large clerical force, and that it would go for the purpose for which it was intended.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. ESCH. That is the item in reference to the interstate quarantine service?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; the gentleman is right.

Mr. ESCH. The item being in a deficiency bill is a deficiency, and no part of the million dollars recently appropriated could be utilized in this appropriation?

Mr. SHERLEY. The million dollars recently appropriated was in regard to dealing with epidemics and particularly had relation to the needs in connection with the influenza epidemic, and by its language was made applicable for that particular disease and others. This is in connection with other work, largely around the camps and cantonments, and is incident to the war needs.

Mr. ESCH. Will the gentleman permit another inquiry?

Mr. SHERLEY. Certainly.

Mr. ESCH. During the consideration of joint resolution 63, providing for a reserve in the Public Health Service, it was stated on the floor of the House that the Surgeon General's Office of both the Army and the Navy had no jurisdiction beyond the immediate limits of the camps and cantonments. That being true, the burden of sanitating the zones outside now would fall on the Public Health Service, would it not?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes; and it was to deal with that situation that the Senate committee felt that they needed an additional amount of money, and the House conferees concurred in the Senate legislation.

The other amendments are minor in their character, and the report which has been read states the action of the conferees in each instance.

There is one other matter that ought to be touched on. The House provided that some moneys appropriated for building a ship for the Coast and Geodetic Survey should be covered into the Treasury. The Senate in lieu of that put in a provision that they should be authorized to construct for the full amount that had been authorized. The House and Senate could not agree touching the matter. It was believed by the House conferees that the matter could be taken care of properly out of the funds available for the Shipping Board. It was also believed if that was not done that the existing law under which this ship was authorized did permit a contract to be entered into. They were unwilling to agree to the Senate amendment. The result of it was that both the House and Senate provisions went out of the bill and the matter, if it needs adjustment, can be taken up subsequently. As I stated previously, there could be no building for months to come without displacing some work now being done by the Emergency Fleet Corporation.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHERLEY. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. And the matter remains as provided for in the sundry civil bill, and nothing is likely to be done.

Mr. SHERLEY. The matter is just as it rested prior to this bill.

Mr. MONDELL. It means that there is an appropriation of $50,000 which can not be utilized.

Mr. SHERLEY. I think it can be utilized under the act that was passed, but I think it ought not to be utilized, because I still think they can get from the Emergency Fleet Corporation what ship they need.

Mr. MONDELL. What I meant was it practically could not be utilized and probably would not be. That is the situation.

Mr. SHERLEY. That is probably so.

There is another matter which is important and which met with the acquiescence of the House. The Senate put into the bill a provision for the payment of allotments made by enlisted men, or the payment of war allowances under Article II of the act of October 5, 1917, in cases where men are reported as missing in action. The provision reads:

> For the purpose of the payment of allotments made by the enlisted men or the payment of family allowances under Article II of the act of October 6, 1917, as amended, an enlisted man reported as missing in action shall be considered as occupying a pay status until his actual status has been determined by proper official authority of the department in which the man served or is serving: Provided, That payments authorized hereunder shall not continue for more than one year.

The effect of this is to continue the payment of allotments in cases where a soldier is reported missing until the actual facts touching his being either captured or alive or dead can be determined. There would have been considerable hardship, as there has been in some cases, due to the fact of men being reported missing and the allotment and allowances to their families stopping forthwith. It was to correct this situation that the matter was put in by the Senate.

It had not been brought to the attention of the committee of the House prior to the reporting of the bill, or it would have been carried, I am quite sure, in the first instance. The House conferees were very glad to concur in the Senate amendment, so as to relieve the situation.

If there is any other matter in connection with the conference report which Members desire to ask, I should be very glad to explain it to the House.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I presume those words "enlisted men" will be used in their larger sense and will include officers. The gentleman knows that sometimes an enlisted man means a noncommissioned officer only, and would not include those holding commissions. It would seem to me that unless the broad construction is given it there might be some trouble.

Mr. SHERLEY. As I understand the matter, enlisted men and officers are not in the same position in the matter of allotments. The question did not come up in conference. If the gentleman is correct and there be any narrow construction given this act, I think the House ought to correct it, of course, though at this time it is not practical to do it.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adoption of the conference report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SLAYDEN). The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

The conference report was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. SHERLEY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the conference report was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD. I do this for the purpose, if I shall have the opportunity, if I am able to gather the data, of placing in the RECORD a statement as to the total amount of appropriations that will have been made for the fiscal year 1919 up to the present time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT], who is not in the Chamber at this time, I make a similar request.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts may be permitted to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. MONDELL. In the matter of a statement of appropriations and expenditures only.

The SPEAKER. In the matter of a statement of appropriations and expenditures on the same line as the gentleman from Kentucky. Is there objection?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, did the gentleman say pertaining to appropriations only?

The SPEAKER. Appropriations and expenditures.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I think the character of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] is sufficiently well known so that no one need fear he will abuse the privilege of making the usual statement with respect to appropriations made by the ranking member of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have no objection to that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD in regard to a military highway bill which I have introduced, which is pending before the committees of the House.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I will ask the gentleman to withdraw that request, as there is an agreement that no other business would be transacted.

Mr. RAKER. I had forgotten that. I withdraw the request,

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, October 28, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. LUFKIN laid on the Clerk's desk resolutions from West Newbury, Mass., Grange No. 146, protesting against the present zone system of postage on magazines, periodicals, etc., and petitioning Congress for its immediate repeal, which was referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

MONDAY, October 28, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have met together in the Senate this morning to give directions to the civil order of this great Nation. Our duties increase with the days. Our responsibilities come upon us heavier with every hour. We turn to Thee, the God of our fathers, the God of infinite providence, for Thy hand has led us in all the past and Thou hast revealed in all our history great and glorious plans. We seek Thy guidance and blessing as we address ourselves to the tasks of this day. Recognizing our infinite debt of gratitude to Thee and renewing our ancient covenant with the God of all nations, committing ourselves this morning to the Divine guidance, we would face the tasks and pray for Thy blessing upon us. Guide us this day, O God of our fathers, in wisdom, in courage, in hope, and may we at the close of the day have the comfortable assurance that our work has been pleasing in Thy sight. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITES STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., October 28, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBINSON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday last was read and approved.

NONCOMBATANT OFFICERS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of War, transmitting, in response to a resolution of April 18, 1918, a list of the men to whom commissions in the Army have been issued and who are not now and who have not heretofore been placed in command or had charge of any troops in the service of the United States, either here or abroad, etc., which, on motion of Mr. NELSON, was, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, agrees to the conference asked for by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. SHERLEY, Mr. EAGAN, and Mr. CANNON managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

S. 4886. An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash.;

H. R. 12404. An act authorizing the construction of a building for the Public Health Service, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 12438. An act authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla.;

H. R. 12976. An act providing for the protection of the users of the telephone and telegraph service and the properties and funds belonging thereto during Government operation and control; and

H. R. 13036. An act transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVAL.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had approved and signed the following act and joint resolution:

On October 25:

S. 2493. An act to amend section 3 of an act entitled "An act to provide for stock-raising homesteads, and for other purposes," approved December 29, 1916.

On October 27:

S. J. Res. 63. Joint resolution to establish a reserve of the Public Health Service.

ZENG TZE WONG (H. DOC. NO. 1334).

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. Zeng Tze Wong, a citizen of China, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point at the expense of the Government of China.

The Secretary of State points out that the passage of the resolution would be regarded as an act of courtesy by the Government of China and that it would follow established precedents.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 October, 1918.

TRANSFER OF GOVERNMENT BUREAUS FROM WASHINGTON.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read and, with the accompanying papers, ordered to lie on the table and be printed:

To the Senate:

I transmit herewith, for the information of the Senate, in response to the resolution adopted by the Senate on September 6, 1918, numbered S. Res. 296, reports made by the heads of the several executive departments and independent Government establishments in reference to the matter of transferring from Washington to other cities in the country, for the duration of the war, such bureaus, or parts of bureaus, commissions, and subdivisions of the several departments as could discharge their functions and perform their duties as well outside of said District as within its boundaries. From these reports it will be noted that the heads of the executive departments and independent Government establishments do not deem it advisable to remove any branch of the Government service now located within the District of Columbia to any other location.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 October, 1918.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented the petition of A. M. Sheldon, of Minneapolis, Minn., and a petition of the First National Bank, of Bemidji, Minn., praying for the repeal of the tax-exemption clause of the Federal farm-loan act, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the petition of Horace Lowry, president of the Twin City Rapid Transit Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., praying that utility corporations be placed in a separate classification in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of John W. Thomas & Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on tapestries and textiles in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, from the J. R. Watkins Co., of Winona, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on nonbeverage alcohol in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Security State Bank, of Lake City; the Citizens' State Bank, of Pine Island; of Lane, Jaffray & Piper (Inc.), of Minneapolis; the Security State Bank, of Owatonna; the Nobles County Bankers' Association, of Rushmore; the National Bank of Commerce, of St. Paul; the Farmers' and Merchants' State Bank, of Zimmerman; the Farmers' National Bank, of Hutchinson; the Fairmont Creamery Co., of Fairmont; the Merchants' State Bank, of North Branch; the Security State Bank, of Princeton; and the First State Bank, of Rochester, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the proposed tax on checks in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KIRBY (for Mr. THOMPSON) presented a petition of sundry citizens of Iola, Carlyle, Manhattan, Kansas City, and Humboldt, all in the State of Kansas, praying that osteopathic physicians be admitted to the medical branch of the Army, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 3219) to incorporate the Recreation Association of America, reported it with amendment.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 4991) to establish load lines for vessels in foreign trade, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 606) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5006) granting a pension to Charles M. Woodworth; and

A bill (S. 5007) granting an increase of pension to John J. Duke; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FERNALD:

A bill (S. 5008) granting an increase of pension to Patrick A. Galvin (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PAGE:

A bill (S. 5009) granting a pension to Emeline A. Spaulding (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McNARY:

A bill (S. 5010) granting an increase of pension to Robert A. Carlton; and

A bill (S. 5011) granting an increase of pension to Indian war veterans and their widows; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PENROSE:

A bill (S. 5012) granting an increase of pension to Isabell Cunningham; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 5013) to amend so much of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919," approved July 9, 1918, as provides for "longevity pay for men other than the Regular Army"; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND:

A bill (S. 5014) granting an increase of pension to Fannie R. Wells; to the Committee on Pensions.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

FIRST DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 3, 8, 20, and 25.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 9, 12, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 30, 31, and 32, and agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lines 7 and 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the following: "including necessary clerical help in the District of Columbia and other personal services," and insert in lieu thereof the following: "including not exceeding $25,000 for personal services in the District of Columbia"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the sum named in said amendment insert "$500,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In line 3 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "authorized" and insert in lieu thereof the word "directed"; and in line 8 of the matter inserted by said amendment strike out the word "six" and insert in lieu thereof the word "two"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken out by said amendment amended as follows: At the end of the matter stricken out by said amendment insert the following: ": Provided further, That property shall not be taken over under the foregoing power at an aggregate cost in excess of $15,000,000"; and the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: Omit the matter stricken out and inserted by said amendment, and on page 37 of the bill strike out line 5; and the Senate agree to the same.

THOMAS S. MARTIN,
O. W. UNDERWOOD,
F. E. WARREN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

SWAGAR SHERLEY,
JOHN J. EAGAN,
J. G. CANNON,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was agreed to.

PEACE POLICIES AND THE POLITICAL CAMPAIGN.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, I should like to request the privilege of the Senate to make a few observations upon a matter which the imminence of peace makes important. I shall not occupy a great deal of time. If I may proceed I will promise to conclude in about 30 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania asks unanimous consent to address the Senate. Is there objection? The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Pennsylvania will proceed.

Mr. KNOX. Mr. President, as the Senate is likely soon to be brought to one of its most important functions in one of the most important periods of the world's history, I feel that we ought without delay to fix our attention most earnestly upon the intricate problems that we already face and so to anticipate and prepare for the wise discharge of that function. The gravity of our responsibility could not be exceeded. The measure of the wisdom with which we shall discharge it is the studious and independent forethought we now bring to the formulation of our views upon questions that are already too clear to be postponed or neglected. It is well, therefore, to examine into the responsibility of the Senate in the present critical situation and to remark upon some of the most salient and urgent phases of that situation.

When there is a question of America's going to war, the Congress alone can declare war. The act of declaring war includes necessarily the determination of the cause of war. The determination of the cause of war includes necessarily the determination of the aim of the war, which is the removal of the cause. Therefore it is through the Congress alone that the American people give their mandate to conduct war and their mandate as to what is the aim of the war.

While this country is at war, the President, as Commander in Chief of the Army and of the Navy, is charged with the conduct of hostilities. In addition to the powers incidental to that function the Congress has bestowed upon him many other powers. Nevertheless, it is the Nation, not the President or the "administration," that is at war; it is the whole Government of the United States, and each and all of its parts, not the President or the "administration" alone, that carries on the great business of war.

When there is question of America's ceasing to make war, war can only be ended by treaty. Treaties can be made only by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Advice and consent to a treaty ending a war necessarily includes determination of the question whether the aim of the war has been achieved in accordance with the mandate of the American people—whether the treaty falls short of that mandate and also whether it goes beyond in a manner to violate that mandate. Therefore it is through the Senate of the United States, quite as much as through the President, that the people of the United States are to say when, whether, and how their mandate to conduct war has been executed by the attainment of their war aim.

To begin war has always been a comparatively quick transaction; to end war has always been a much more long-drawn-out transition. This is because a nation generally enters war with a clear-cut, simple aim; but the course of events, the fermentation of political theories in the cauldron of war, and the ambitions and pet theories of statesmen, cause to cluster around the prime war aim a multitude of corollaries and subsidiary objects, many of which may not be essential at all to the prime war aim for which the people have given their mandate. These are vastly multiplied when the number of nations at war is great.

Now, the ending of a particular war and the firm founding of the future general peace to follow it may well be regarded as two separate functions, at least in theory. And in practice the two tasks should at least be kept separate in our conceptions.

To the task of ending the war belong all things essential to our prime war aim.

To the task of firmly founding a future general peace belongs the careful examination of each and every thing that has been proposed as a corollary to our prime war aim or as a subsidiary war aim. This task is an especially heavy one, because, be it remembered, upon none of these corollaries, upon none of these proposed subsidiary war aims, has the American people given its mandate; and it will be through the Senate that such mandate must come.

The separation of the two tasks of ascertaining when the prime war aim of this Nation has been achieved and, secondly, of accepting or rejecting one by one the multifarious corollaries and subsidiary war aims that have been proposed—and many of them are adventitious and questionable—is heightened by the facts, first, that it has been sought to make this mass of clustering ideas a part of the res gestæ by linking them with tentative discussions with the enemy; and, secondly, because the array of ideas referred to has not been tested by an attempt to implement them in the form of concise, practicable stipulations.

But upon all these things, as trustees of a large share of the people's authority to make treaties, the Senate has the appalling responsibility of being prepared any day to pass.

Everything possible has been done to lighten the task of the Executive in the conduct of the war. An ephemeral proposal was made at an early stage that there should be a congressional committee to keep Congress informed on the conduct of the war. That proposal failed. No other committee was ever seriously proposed except one of consultative advisory character, designed to secure common counsel and universal cooperation so indispensable alike to democratic government and to true efficiency in statesmanship.

There have, indeed, been various attempts to create deliberative and consultative relations on matters of policy between the Executive and the Congress. Such opportunity for counsel would have enormously lightened the task of the Nation's representatives. It would have informed them for the discharge of responsibilities from which they can not in any case escape.

Even an entirely regular and proper resolution of Congress to inform itself in relation to its function of appropriating money to carry on the war was hotly branded by the Chief Executive as showing "want of confidence in the administration" when it was proposed to investigate the airplane expenditures. Now, the making of this investigation was the constitutional duty of the legislative branch. The principles upon which this is true have been followed since the foundation of our Government, and in the light of these principles it was most unfortunate that this proposal of the legislative branch to exercise its clear right and perform its imperative and indispensable duty should have been branded as a "want of confidence in the administration." One is compelled to say that heretofore Executives have rightly not so considered it.

On the occasion to which I allude, and it is quite typical, the President, in his letter to the Senator from Virginia, said:

> I protest most earnestly against the adoption of any such action and shall hope that every Senator who intends to support the present administration in the conduct of the war will vote against it. These are serious times, and it is absolutely necessary that the lines should be clearly drawn between friends and opponents.

Lincoln, speaking to a delegation in 1864, which was urging him to separate the sheep from the goats—those for him, as were the delegation, and those against him—at a time when it might mean his own defeat for reelection, uttered these lofty sentiments:

> You have spoken of the consideration which you think I should pay to my friends as contradistinguished from my enemies. I suppose, of course, that you mean by that those who agree or disagree with me in my views of public policy. I recognize no such thing as a political friendship personal to myself. * * * Now, when you see a man loyally in favor of the Union, willing to vote men and money, spending his time and money and throwing his influence into the recruitment of our armies, I think it ungenerous, unjust, and impolitic to make his views on abstract political questions a test of his loyalty. I will not be a party to this application of a pocket inquisition. * * * I have no right to act the tyrant to mere political opponents. If a man votes for supplies of men and money, encourages enlistments, discourages desertions, does all in his power to carry the war on to a successful issue, I have no right to question him for his abstract political opinions. I must make a dividing line somewhere between those who are the opponents of the Government and those who only oppose peculiar features of my administration while they sustain the Government.

And the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has just handed me a copy of the Providence Daily Journal in which is printed an extract from a letter by President Lincoln.

Mr. LODGE. From a letter to Gov. Johnson, to be found on page 359 of volume 9 of the Life of Lincoln by Nicolay and Hay.

Mr. KNOX. In that letter this sentence occurs:

> Except it be to give protection against violence, I decline to interfere in any way with any presidential election.

Mr. LODGE. I ask the Senator if he will read the previous letter in regard not to the election but the nomination of Judge Kelley, of Philadelphia—a letter of June 20, 1864, addressed to the postmaster there.

Mr. KNOX. I will send it to the desk and ask the Secretary to read it as a part of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

> The postmaster of Philadelphia being accused of interference against William D. Kelley, President Lincoln sent for him, and following his custom in grave matters, he read to him a reprimand which he had committed to paper in the following words:
>
> "Complaint is made to me that you are using your official power to defeat Judge Kelley's renomination to Congress. I am well satisfied with Judge Kelley as a Member of Congress, and I do not know that the man who might supplant him would be satisfactory; but the correct principle, I think, is that all our friends should have absolute freedom of choice among our friends. My wish, therefore, is that you will do just as you think fit with your own suffrage in the case, and not constrain any of your subordinates to do other than as he thinks fit with his."

Mr. LODGE. That relates to a party nomination.

Mr. KNOX. Alas, Mr. President, what a difference between that spirit and the partisanship and secrecy of the present administration. Of its partisanship Republicans are the peculiar victims. Under its secrecy and its aversion to taking counsel Democrats and Republicans in Congress, in office, and, with one conspicuous exception, in private life appear equally to suffer.

But Executive methods so unique in American history, so aloof in isolation from the people's representatives, so absolutely prohibitory of anything like counsel can never for one moment abrogate the constitutional power and solemn duty of the Senate to disentangle the mesh of words that cling, some as healthy growth and some as dangerous fungi, upon the sturdy tree of America's war aims, which are America's peace terms, and from which will germinate America's after-war policies. A solemn duty is before the Senate.

I will merely touch some of the quite open questions upon which the American people have never passed, but which we are warned may quite possibly be treated by the Executive in contradistinction to the senatorial branch of our treaty-making power as adjuncts to our war aims to be attained by altruistic negotiations. To be sure, all the ideas in question are so expressed as to make it difficult even to do so much, and it may be that therein lies salvation here and in the practical good sense of the American and allied nations. For example, are we, a naval power with a proud history, and whose greatest ally is the greatest sea power, to be committed in advance to sweeping changes in the well-established international law of the sea, which we did so much to fashion, while the land is conveniently left as a battle field for the military nations? Are we to be committed in advance to deny ourselves the right to make mutually beneficial understandings with the other English-speaking peoples, or with France or Italy, or with South American countries, or with Japan, or with any other power? Are we to be committed in advance to forego the tariff protection of our labor and our national prosperity and the vindication of our own treatment by other nations by means of reciprocal arrangements we may find it desirable to make?

It was always true and was early recognized by all that the object of this war was and is the permanent removal of the German menace. In the formula "restitution, reparation, and guaranties," the word guaranty is not to mean written guaranties, such as we have seen treated as scraps of paper in the cases of Belgium's neutrality, of accepted international law, of Hague conventions, of the rules of civilized warfare on land and seas. We shall have the guaranties we seek only when we know as a fact, irrespective of the solemnities of diplomatic promises, that the German menace is at an end once for all. Even "restitution and reparation"; even the return of Alsace-Lorraine to France; even just frontiers for Italy and Roumania and the rescue and restoration of Russia and independence for Jugo-Slavs, Czecho-Slovaks, and Poles, and for the nationalities oppressed by Turkey; even the liberation of Africans and others from German colonial oppression—all these matters—however absolute their intrinsic importance—for the prime purpose of the war, which is, I say again, for our guaranty against the German menace—are of chief interest because they subserve that guaranty. Viewed in any other light they are matters of post-bellum reconstruction.

We shall have our guaranty against the German menace when we know that Germany, whether as autocratic monarchy, as republic, or as democratic monarchy, can not again menace us. On this we shall require the word of Foch, of Haig, of Diaz, and of Pershing, for wars are won by bullets and blood, not by ink and eloquence.

We shall require also evidence that the German grip upon Russia, the Balkans, and Turkey has been loosed. We must never allow to be obscured the prime purpose of the war. From that purpose flows as a corollary the purpose to strive to make the menace of unjust war from any quarter as improbable as we can. From that, again, and from the chivalrous spirit of the entente allies flows the demand for restitution and reparation and for all the complicated territorial and racial readjustments, to some of which I have referred. So flows, too, the aspiration for some salutary league of nations.

As to the "league of nations" question, I will add a few words. The phrase is heard much of late. Some envisage it as a Eutopian world state. Others, less visionary, think of it as a league to enforce peace. In its most extreme form any league of nations will, I believe, have to be relegated to a future quite beyond the purview of the ending of this war or of the reconstruction of peace immediately after this war. There will be no room for a task of such problematical possibility in either of the phases of negotiation that now confront us.

We can aspire, with hope of success, to somewhat higher ideals than it would have been practicable to pursue to earth in the past. National traditions and institutions must yield something to the emancipating forces of progress. Instantaneous world communication has bound nations together in a single body for many purposes and has enabled them, sharing a common knowledge, animated by a common conscience, to take common and contemporaneous action while the need is yet fresh. It is this fact rather than broader and more enlightened views that furnishes the reason for the progress and effectiveness of international cooperation in recent as compared with earlier times. One can readily understand the force and effect of a concurrent expression of international opinion made while the subject upon which it operates is a fresh and burning one as compared with the disconnected and ineffective expression of the same opinion when made at different times after the facts upon which it rests. The peace that follows this war must rest upon a recognition of this interdependence of nations. It must satisfy the international conscience and revivify the sanctions for the rules of international conduct.

The world is in no frame of mind to forget how perfidiously Germany has violated the great compacts of international cooperation for the mitigation of human suffering which expressed the sense of the interdependence of nations and the sodality of human interest. But this sodality will not be best subserved if concurrence upon too many and too Utopian proposals and too great abnegation and too difficult obligations are made the sine qua non of its preservation.

The league of nations that now challenges our solicitude is the league of nations of which we are now a member—the glorious present alliance of the many powers with whom we are now fighting as a league to enforce and to maintain peace from disturbance by the German menace. If we should allow that league to fall apart or to be pried apart by German machinations, who can say when this world will ever again be so near to having a general league to enforce peace as it is to-day? Only a dire menace from without has given this league such solidarity. The centripetal force of a common danger has created the league we have, the entente alliance. Remove the common danger and the centrifugal forces of national individualism, if unrestrained by a firm understanding, will at once come into play. Out of the present alliance to-day, and quite irrespective of any discussions with the enemy, it would seem possible to perpetuate the league we have, already embracing the majority of the population of the globe, as a league for one single purpose of enforcing peace. The function of such a league, I take it, would be to examine any controversy that threatened war and then to throw its weight to the side of such controversy where justice and equity lay, and also to suppress with its overwhelming power any war that might break out and to indicate the just solution of the contention. Such a league, like any league, will demand some encroachment upon the conception of complete and independent sovereignty. The simpler the league, the less of such encroachment it demands, the fewer the subjects it attempts to touch, the more likely it is to prove practicable and permanent.

One must be visionary indeed to suppose that the heterogeneous peoples of the earth could so completely overcome human nature as to combine now in the real internationalism of a world State or even in a league involving a great catalogue of unnatural self-restraints. Such conceptions to-day touch rather the postulates of religion than the facts of statesmanship.

If internationalism can go far enough to minimize the possibility of wars and to enforce approximate equity and justice amongst the peoples of the earth, it will have done much. Indeed there is only one other general subject that seems to me already ripe perhaps for international action by a league of the kind I am discussing. The welfare of a people should be the first concern of government. A league might take such action as would prevent international competition from obstructing that function of government. It might do so by covenants as to hours and conditions of labor, for example.

Let me return for a moment to the two tasks that confront us. The first is the task of ending the war by the sure achievement of its prime aim—the permanent removal of the German menace. The second is the task of weeding out from the mass of proposed corollary aims and subsidiary purposes those things which are safe and wise, those things which the American people and their allies will approve, and which the Senate could approve.

Here, too, when one considers the number of nations concerned and the multiplicity of the subjects presented and of the interests involved, it requires no clairvoyance to foresee the dangerous chaos that will arise if we and our allies are to drift into an ultimate peace conference with a nebulous program, with agreement "in principle" where we should have precise understanding. Here, too, we can readily see, the simplification of the program will be vital to the preservation of that indispensable solidarity which alone is bringing victory to America and her allies.

Simeon E. Baldwin, the learned jurist and one-time governor of Connecticut, made last summer the following observations upon methods of dealing with the two questions of ending the war and of building for the future which now hang over us in mixed and complex form, surcharged with problems of vast variety:

> It may be assumed that there will ultimately be either a peace congress to close the present war, composed of representatives of the leading belligerents on each side, and probably of all the belligerents, or two peace congresses for that purpose, one composed of all the nations which are at war with Germany and her allies and one representing the latter. * * *
>
> The office of a peace congress is to make peace. Whatever more it might effect in defining or improving the public law of the world, or creating new facilities for defining or improving it, could probably be better effected by a congress called specially for that purpose, and proceeding with the deliberation necessarily to be expected from such a body.
>
> It is also true that a peace congress, after bringing a war to a close, can adjourn for a considerable period, to be reconvened as a congress for the settlement of general principles of international conduct. It may be doubted, however, whether a congress of the latter kind, even with large changes in its membership, could ever approach the subject with the freedom from influences occasioned by the war and the juristic sense and power that might be expected from a body newly and specially constituted for its consideration.

The excessive intermingling of the problem of a victorious ending of the war with a great variety of projects of world reconstruction renders our task, as I have said, most difficult. As a coordinate branch of this Government it is our duty, I believe, to make clear the Senate's sense of the immediate necessity of clarification and simplification of any program that enters into the ending of the war or the building of the future and the Senate's sense of the instant necessity of full counsel and accord upon all such programs between the Government of the United States and the Governments of our allies.

And there is a necessity that underlies these urgent needs. That is a clarification for the Senate itself of the policies to which it may later be called upon to consider giving its sanction. In this matter we are guardians of the Nation's mandate, and we can not default.

Some days ago there was made on this floor the preposterous suggestion that the Senate ratify in advance whatever might be the will of the Chief Executive. A few days ago the country was astounded and shocked to find that Chief Executive calling for the election of Democratic Senators and Representatives precisely in order that his individual authority should be untrammeled by counsel. I pass by the unjust, not to say outrageous, implications of that unique document of partisan politics. That the two proposals should associate themselves in one's mind is, I regret to say, due to the proneness of some Senators and Representatives to make themselves mere registrars of the will of the Chief Executive instead of independent deliberators upon the country's problems.

Ex-President Taft has said this of the situation in which we find ourselves:

The unified leadership he (the President) asks is autocratic power in fields in which the Constitution and principles of democracy require that he should consult other representatives of the people than himself. In pursuit of his policies he consults neither his own party nor any other. He wishes a Democratic Senate, not because he would seek the assistance of Democratic Senators in the foreign policy concerning which by the fundamental law they are to advise and consent, but because he can mold them absolutely to his will without consulting them. He has visited his displeasure on every Democratic Member of either House who has differed with him and called upon that Member's constituency to reject him.

Is it necessary for the country's welfare that he should be absolutely ruler of this Nation for the two years ensuing from March 4 next? That is the premise upon which the soundness of his appeal, in its ultimate analysis, must rest. Do we need during the life of the next Congress a dictator? One who knows the facts of this war and our part in it and who loves liberty and popular government must answer "no." The war is nearly won. It may take a year longer. We hope it will be less. The complex questions of the terms of peace are to be settled in the term of the Congress now to be elected.

The still more difficult questions of reconstruction after the war are to be met by that Congress. Do the American people by their action in the next election wish to make both the terms of peace and the reconstruction after the war depend on the uncontrolled will of Woodrow Wilson? That is the issue which he puts to them in his appeal. "Unless you give me uncontrolled power you repudiate me and my leadership before the world." Aut Cæsar aut nullus.

When there is talk of the abdication of the Kaiser it is a peculiar moment to propose that the American people should abdicate their right to have opinions or that the Senate and the House should abdicate their sworn and independent duties.

I ask Senators whether it is the will of the American people or the will of Woodrow Wilson that is to determine the policy of the United States in the two matters of ending this war and of founding a future peace? I ask them whether they propose to subject the vital interests of the American people to their own independent judgment or whether they are content, before their conscience and their country, to be the mere registrars of the will of one man? This is the issue before us.

The abdication of their constitutional duty of independent judgment by the Senate or by the House spells autocracy. No more; no less. If Democratic Members are for such abdication, if they are reluctant to join their Republican colleagues in nonpartisan, independent scrutiny of proposed policies, in insistence upon information and upon rightful share, on behalf of the people, in the determination of the courses of the American Government at this most grave and difficult time, then truly the coming elections have for the American people a transcendent importance.

During the period from 1914 until to-day, Senators will remember, the President has expressed, and always with the same solemn emphasis, the greatest possible variety of ideas and attitudes upon the nature of the war, upon America's relation to the war, and, what is now most in point, upon the terms upon which America is willing to live at peace with Germany and the world. I need not weary you with recital of how the winds of administration opinion have veered all around the compass from exaggerated neutrality even of thought; through a pride too great to be provoked to fight; through readiness, after the Lusitania, to compromise the U-boat barbarity as a breach of world law in return for a half-hearted promise to try to spare our ships; through the idea of peace without victory, and so forth and so forth, the long way around to "force without stint." This strange evolution, too, has not connoted the revealing of fundamental facts that need ever have been hidden from the clear eye of wise statesmanship. I ask, then, this question: With what reason can the Senate, can the American people, be asked to assume for the latest ideas scattered through the address of January 8, 1918, and all the later addresses, an immutable wisdom evidently lacking in the earlier ones? Yet these latest ideas, still in indefinite form, have actually been officially referred to, some as terms, others as principles, of settlement. Be they wise and safe or be they foolish and dangerous, that is not the question. The question is, Shall the conditions upon which the Senate and the American people believe they can safely live at peace with Germany and with the world—shall these conditions be decided by the fiat of one man, or shall they be tested by the unbiased, sober judgment of the Nation's representatives whose duty it will be to accept or reject, by a two-thirds vote, whatever terms may be finally presented to end war and to establish lasting peace?

Are the American people a free people of high spirit and of an intellectual ability and energy equal to the obligation of democracy, the obligation to form and to assert, through their chosen representatives, their judgment upon the policies of their country? Or are we merely a complacent people, intellectually indolent, lazily acquiescent, looking for masters and not for leaders? Which is the true American? Which type is the Senate to reflect in its action and thought on behalf of the Nation?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am glad that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] has brought this matter before the Senate and before the country at this time as he has, because it affords an opportunity to state the facts of the case in such a way as it seems to me will go far to relieve the fears and the objections to which the Senator from Pennsylvania gives voice.

Condensed, the anxiety of the Senator from Pennsylvania seems to be that the President of the United States will take into his own hands the decision of the settlement of this war. It seems to me the course of recent history indicates that the President has pursued the natural and the logical course which he is called upon to pursue, and that he occupies at this time an impregnable position.

As long ago as the 8th of January the President of the United States asked the two Houses of Congress to meet him in joint session. He came before that joint session at that time and delivered a message in which he boiled down into 14 propositions what he deemed to be the minimum essentials of peace terms which the United States should insist upon. Now, certainly that act of laying his views before the Congress did not have any relation to an attempt, in secret and personally, to settle the war alone. He took the Congress into his confidence, practically seeking its cooperation.

Mr. President, what was done with that message of the President? Ordinarily messages of the President recommending policies, or stating his attitude upon policies, are referred to the committee or committees having jurisdiction of the matter; and then is the time for anyone having opposition to those views, or proposing to question that they embody the attitude of the country, to come forward and state his case.

Was opposition raised? Was any effort made to refer this great message to one or more committees? Did anyone stand here upon the floor of the Senate to question the American principles of peace laid down in the President's message? No, Mr. President. On the other hand, almost as with one voice, Senators and Representatives, Republicans and Democrats, here and throughout the country, newspapers of both parties and all parties, acclaimed that declaration of the American terms of peace as a correct statement of the attitude of the United States.

I shall not refer to many of these statements, but I want to refer to a few statements of Republican Senators and Representatives. Before I do that, however, I want to refer to the present partisan effort on the part of the Republican Party and its responsible leaders to make political campaign issue out of article 3 of the President's declaration of terms of peace. As I said, no opposition was raised at the time; but in the exigency of this political campaign, and for the purpose of furthering an attempt to secure control of the Senate and the House of Representatives, the Republican organization has gone to work not merely to exploit this article 3 of the terms of peace, but to misrepresent its purpose and its purport.

I want to read to the Senate now an extract from a document sent out by the national Republican congressional committee under date of October 21:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 20.

The Democratic Party is committed to a free-trade policy.

In the 14 terms in President Wilson's peace program, stated to Congress January 8, the third clause reads:

"The removal, as far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance."

Now I come again to what the national Republican congressional committee says:

This is a positive declaration that the treaty of peace must guarantee to Germany free trade with the United States, without any tariff safeguards whatever to protect the American laborer, manufacturer, farmer, and business man from foreign competition in his home markets.

Under such a policy Germany will buy raw materials in the United States, manufacture these materials in Germany, and sell the manufactured products in American markets in competition with similar products "made in America" by American manufacturers, without the slightest tariff restrictions for the protection of American labor, business, and farming.

Mr. President, that was a misrepresentation of article 3. That was an attempt to make political capital by the false statement that the President was endeavoring to put into a treaty a permanent commitment of the United States for free trade. I have no doubt that it was a misrepresentation.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry on that point?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Yes.

Mr. PENROSE. I want to say to the Senator that I have made no public comment upon that paragraph of the President's message; but my own conclusion, as I understand the English language, was that the President did mean a free-trade propaganda. I may be unusually dumb in reading the presidential messages; I do not know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Well, that may be the Senator's conclusion now, but he certainly did not come forward and say so at the time. He did not stand upon the floor of the Senate and condemn this specification of peace terms on the ground that it meant free trade; and, on the other hand, a number of his associates publicly indorsed the President's message.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I want to state to the Senator on that point that I was restrained by some of my colleagues from criticizing that part of the message. I mentioned it to some of them sitting in the vicinity here, and they suggested that it would come with greater propriety at a later date. We certainly can not be expected to criticize every day the presidential utterances, or we would do nothing else. I do not want the Senator to think that silence means acquiescence by any means.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, it was not altogether a matter of silence. In the Washington paper next day former Speaker CANNON said:

> The President is always strong in his addresses. I wish this one could be read to every man, woman, and child and thoroughly explained in Germany and Austria.

And Representative FESS, who has now come forward and signed a bitter partisan appeal to the American people, based largely upon this misrepresentation of article 3, in that same paper used this language:

> I am wonderfully pleased with the message. It contains no cheap diplomacy. It is very firmly stated, leaving no doubt that Germany must be defeated as a condition of peace. It reassures the country that the loss of life and treasure thus far will not be wasted by an inconclusive peace which if made at this stage would be deferring the time when this Nation would be called upon to make a test with Germany. We are in a better position now to make that test than we will be in the future.

And Representative GILLETT, leader of the Republican minority on the floor of the House of Representatives, said:

> I am in hearty accord with the President's address unless he meant universal free trade by his allusion of economic freedom, and I do not believe that could have been his intention.

And yet Representative GILLETT is also a signer of this partisan appeal, which proposes to deprive the President of a supporting majority in Congress.

The senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] was quoted thus briefly and effectively:

> It is a very able message, presenting a concrete proposition.

So it was not altogether the negative action of Senators like the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] who restrained themselves for a more "propitious" occasion—when a campaign might be on, for instance—but it was the affirmative statement of Republican leaders at that time which gave the impression and justified the conclusion that the people of the United States of all parties were behind the President in his address of January 8; and not until this campaign comes on, in an effort to secure control of the Congress, does it develop that there is criticism.

But, Mr. President, I am not going to leave this matter of the meaning of article 3 in any doubt.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, before the Senator leaves this subject, may I ask him a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Certainly.

Mr. LODGE. The other day the President wrote a note to Austria with which I was in very full sympathy, in which he said, referring to one of the 14 points, that times had changed since that was written; that we had recognized the Czecho-Slovaks, and so forth; and he was quite right. Times have changed. Is the President the only person to whom times have changed? Is he alone to have the right to change his mind? He exercises it freely.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts means that when this declaration of the position of the United States was made, the Republicans indorsed it then, while now for some reason they are raising a question about it.

Mr. LODGE. I never indorsed it, Mr. President. I said it was an able message. It was. I took pains the other day, when I was speaking, to say that with some of the 14 points I agreed. I do agree with some of them. I agree with the one about Poland. It is definite. I disagreed from the beginning utterly with the one about Turkey, which proposes as the thing that we should make secure the sovereignty of Turkey over the Ottoman Turks. I do not think we went to war to make any part of Turkish sovereignty secure.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I trust the Senator will not divert me from the question at issue.

Mr. LODGE. No; I will not divert the Senator. I beg his pardon.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. We have here a very plain proposition. I am willing to be interrupted for any question, but I want to stick to the issue. The issue is the proposition I have made, that the President of the United States, in fulfilling his highest duty, nine months ago came to the Congress of the United States and proposed terms of peace which should represent the minimum demands of the United States—not the demands of other countries, but our demands. That proposition was accepted with practical unanimity by House and Senate, by the country, by newspapers, and by individuals; and now, at this late day, in the midst of a campaign, an effort is made—for partisan purposes, I believe—to misrepresent and distort article 3, which relates to trade conditions.

Mr. President, I felt that this attempt to misrepresent that article should receive some attention from the President of the United States; and about a week ago I addressed a letter to him, asking if he did not think it might be wise for him to pay some attention to those misrepresentations.

While I had not originally intended to do so, I am now going to read into the RECORD the reply which the President sent me at that time:

> THE WHITE HOUSE,
> Washington, 22 October, 1918.
>
> MY DEAR SENATOR: In reply to your letter of October 21st, let me say that it seems to me really not worth while to answer the Republican attacks on article 3 of the peace terms I suggested in my address of January 8th. The words I used are perfectly clear to any honest mind. They leave every nation free to determine its own economic policy, except in the one particular that its policy must be the same for all other nations and not be compounded of hostile discriminations between one nation and another, such weapons of discrimination being left to the joint action of the nations for the purpose of disciplining those who will not submit to the general program of justice and equality.
>
> It would be impossible to follow up all the perversions and misrepresentations that some of the Republicans are now indulging in, and my own judgment is that we can safely leave the matter to the good sense of our fellow countrymen who can read English.
>
> Sincerely, yours,
>
> WOODROW WILSON.
>
> Hon. G. M. HITCHCOCK,
> United States Senate.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. KELLOGG. After having read the letter, will the Senator please tell us what the economic barriers are which should be removed?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I prefer not to go any further in placing an interpretation on that language than the President has gone. We are not here for a refinement of terms.

This is the fact, Mr. President, that the President laid the matter before the country nine months ago as to what he believed the terms of peace should be. The terms were accepted by this country and the President has felt justified and has been justified in assuming that they represented the will of the country. He has gone forward.

Mr. KELLOGG. I ask in perfect good faith. I want to know what those economic barriers are, and if it is so perfectly plain from the letter I think the Senator might inform us.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am sure the Senator is as capable of placing an interpretation on it as I am, and I only omit to do so because I want to speak to the point and yield to my friend, Senator PITTMAN, who kindly gave me the floor.

The President must have the initiative in any negotiations, whether they are with our enemy, Germany, or with our allies engaged in this war, Great Britain, France, Italy, and other countries. He must have the initiative. It belongs to him. Knowing that he has the initiative he told us nine months ago what he proposed to stand for; and he has stood for it consistently with such modifications since that time as the events of the war called for.

Senators need not assume that the President is going to secretly negotiate a treaty and force it through the Senate. Senators know very well that a treaty before it can go into effect must have the approval of two-thirds of the Senate. It must not only have the approval of all the Democrats who might sympathize with the President, but it must also have the approval of enough Republicans to make the two-thirds majority required by the Constitution. That is not all. The President has got to have, must have, the full approval of our associates in this war. Then why assume and assert that he is attempting as an autocrat to dictate terms of peace? He is merely carrying out what he believes to be the will of the American people and is standing for the ideas the country accepted with approval nine months ago.

Mr. President, before I sit down I may say that the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], not having any knowledge of my action, a week later addressed a letter to the President of the United States, calling his attention to the same political assault being made upon article 3. If the Senate will permit, I will insert it in the RECORD without taking the time to read it, or would the Senator prefer that I should read it?

Mr. SIMMONS. Let the Senator read it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will read it. The letter from Senator SIMMONS can be inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The letter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON FINANCE,
October 26, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT,
White House.

DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: Certain Republican leaders are attempting to make a partisan use of paragraph 3 of your peace terms found in your address to Congress January 8, 1918. No one has authority to reply to a misconstruction of any part of your address excepting yourself; but I, as chairman of the Finance Committee of the Senate, wish you would make a reply to these statements and insinuations which are being industriously circulated by the opposition to embarrass you in the handling of these delicate matters.

Sincerely, yours, F. M. SIMMONS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The reply of the President is as follows. It is dated the 28th of October:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, October 28, 1918.

Hon. F. M. SIMMONS,
United States Senate.

DEAR SENATOR: I am glad to respond to the question addressed to me by your letter of October 26. The words I used in my address to the Congress of January 8, 1918, were:

"The removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance."

I, of course, meant to suggest no restriction upon the free determination by any nation of its own economic policy, but only that, whatever tariff any nation might deem necessary for its own economic service, be that tariff high or low, it should apply equally to all foreign nations; in other words, that there should be no discriminations against some nations that did not apply to others. This leaves every nation free to determine for itself its own internal policies, and limits only its right to compound those policies of hostile discriminations between one nation and another. Weapons of economic discipline and punishment should be left to the joint action of all nations for the purpose of punishing those who will not submit to a general program of justice and equality.

The experiences of the past among nations have taught us that the attempt by one nation to punish another by exclusive and discriminatory trade agreements has been a prolific breeder of that kind of antogonism which oftentimes results in war, and that if a permanent peace is to be established among nations every obstacle that has stood in the way of international friendship should be cast aside. It was with that fundamental purpose in mind that I announced this principle in my address of January 8. To pervert this great principle for partisan purposes and to inject the bogey free trade, which is not involved at all, is to attempt to divert the mind of the Nation from the broad and humane principle of a durable peace by introducing an internal question of quite another kind. American business has in the past been unaffected by a policy of the kind suggested, and it has nothing to fear now from a policy of simple international justice. It is, indeed, lamentable that the momentous issues of this solemn hour should be seized upon in an effort to bend them to partisan service. To the initiated and discerning, the motive is transparent and the attempt fails.

Sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Will the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As the Senator from Nebraska understands that letter, would it not prevent any discrimination by the United States against goods produced in Germany?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It would; it has that effect. It leaves that to the league composed of nations with which we are associated now in war and with which we will be associated in the league of nations to maintain peace.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is saying these 14 points constitute the conditions precedent upon which any peace may be made and they are the minimum to be demanded by the United States. If those 14 points, including this one, as explained by the President and agreed to by the other nations, prevent either us or the other nations from ever discriminating by a tariff against any goods produced in Germany, I simply want to get it in the RECORD that that is the Senator's understanding of the President's paragraph 3.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The President maintains that such discrimination is an international matter involving the peace of the world and should be left to the league of nations.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Of course it is an international matter, and inasmuch as it is an international matter and the Senate will be called upon to confirm the treaty by which the war is settled, it becomes pertinent that the Senate should understand what is meant by these various theories on these various points.

Mr. PENROSE. Do I understand the Senator from Nebraska to say that the determination of an American tariff is an international matter?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. No, sir; not at all; quite the opposite. An American tariff is a matter for the American Congress.

Mr. PENROSE. So, regardless of any other nation on the face of the earth——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the use of the tariff as a hostile war measure is a matter for the league of nations.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I understand that the league of nations is to have some kind of a right to pass upon whether an American tariff is equitable to all nations or not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Nebraska is just as obscure to my mind as the President of the United States as to the meaning of article No. 3.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very glad to be in that company. If I am no more obscure I am very fortunate.

Mr. PENROSE. What does the Senator mean?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I have stated my meaning, and I am willing to leave it at that. I merely rose because I thought the time had come when it should be frankly stated here definitely, and the matter called to the attention of the country, that Congress received from the President, as it received nine months ago, a definite statement of his idea of war terms and that Congress as well as the whole country practically accepted those war terms. Not only that, but later when Austria asked of the United States what terms of peace she could have, the President replied, "You know already what the terms of peace are"; and the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and other Republican Senators, acclaimed the response as happy and adequate to the situation. They evidently knew and approved the American terms of peace.

Mr. PENROSE. I asked the question of the Senator in entire good faith. Will the Senator enlighten me as to this final point, and then I am done? Under the President's economic theory when peace among the nations of the world is declared, would the United States have a right to make a more favorable economic agreement with the allies than with Germany?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am going to state it in my own words and not in the language of the Senator from Pennsylvania. The United States would have the right to make any tariff it pleased against the whole world, but if the treaty is made and includes the terms outlined January 8, and Great Britain and France and Italy and our associates agree to it, it would be then improper for the United States to adopt a tariff discriminating between nations. Such a tariff if hostile toward any nation would be practically commercial war against that nation. That the President opposes.

Mr. PENROSE. Including Germany?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Any nation.

Mr. PENROSE. Then German goods must be left to come in under the presidential theories on the same equality the allies would have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That does not follow.

Mr. PENROSE. It comes very near following. I am glad I smoked the Senator out.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What follows is that if a league of nations is formed, and if the United States agrees to its formation and Great Britain agrees to its formation and France agrees to its formation and the other nations agree to its formation, the league of nations will take jurisdiction over the question of hostile tariffs or trade barriers to discipline a nation where it is engaged in something contrary to the peace of the world.

Mr. PITTMAN obtained the floor.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I just want to make a brief statement. Then the Senator may want to speak at length. It will take me only a minute.

Mr. PITTMAN. I will yield to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator from Nebraska has made reference to this solemn hour, and it is a correct statement of facts, but partakes a little of cant in view of the following telegram I have been asked to read to the Senate. I will ask the Secretary to read it.

The Secretary read as follows:

RENO, NEV., October 24, 1918.

Hon. BOIES PENROSE,
United States Senate, Washington:

The Postmaster General's office is sending out to every postmaster in Nevada the following personal letter:

"MY DEAR MR. ———, Postmaster: I know the Postmaster General feels a deep interest in the senatorial race in your State. He has come to know Senator HENDERSON quite well since his service in the Senate and esteems him highly. Will you drop me a line as to the outlook for the Senator at your voting box? As you may know, for 17 years I was the private secretary of the Postmaster, and am still with him in the department. Inclosed please find stamped envelope for your reply. Thanking you in advance for your attention to this request, I am,

"Yours, truly, RUSKIN MCARDLE."

I suggest that you give this damnable outrage fullest publicity.

HARRY J. HUMPHREYS,
State Chairman Republican State Central Committee.

Mr. PENROSE. Now, Mr. President, I am through. This young Democrat who writes this letter was covered into the civil service by presidential order, a favorite method, and his biography is to be found in an available publication issued by the Government. I desire to have inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks—it is not necessary to read it—the civil-service rules and regulations concerning the activity of persons within the classified service in connection with elections.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the matter will be inserted in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IV.—POLITICAL CONDUCT.

SECTION 162—POSTAL LAWS AND REGULATIONS.

No person in the executive civil service shall use his official authority or influence for the purpose of interfering with an election or affecting the results thereof. Persons who by the provisions of these rules are in the competitive classified service, while retaining the right to vote as they please and to express privately their opinions on all political subjects, shall take no active part in political management or political campaigns.

Officers and employees of the Post Office Department and Postal Service are not precluded from exercising their political privileges, but shall not use their official positions to control elections or political movements.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, on October 10 I announced on this floor that the issue in the present campaign is between the policies and principles pronounced by Woodrow Wilson for a lasting world's peace and for reconstruction after the war and the policies and principles of the leaders of the Republican Party as they appear from their statements in this body and in the public forum. If there was any doubt with regard to the political issue that was being made by the Republican leaders, that doubt has disappeared to-day. The Republican leaders are seeking an issue for the sole purpose of attempting to establish themselves in power in the Senate and in the House of Representatives, not for the purpose of aiding in carrying out this war, because they do not condemn the conduct of the war. They dare not attempt to condemn the conduct of the war.

Never in all history have preparations been made so expeditiously and a war carried out with such vigor, ability, and grandeur as the war of America and its allies against Germany has been carried out. And yet, unless the Republican Party has an issue it has got to stand by and see the people continue in power an administration that has carried on this war successfully and has laid down a peace program that will be carried out if the Democratic majority is maintained in the Senate and House of Representatives.

They raise their hands in holy horror because, they charge, the President was insincere on January 8 at the time he delivered his message to Congress when he said politics was adjourned. The President has given no evidence of insincerity, and they have not been able to place their finger on a spot save and except his message to the American people delivered a few days ago. They know that that message was not delivered to the American people until Republican leaders and the Republican Party and the Republican campaign managers had been in politics for months in violation of the armistice that he tried to establish on January 8.

The Republican Party charges the President with violating a proposition he made that politics be adjourned, and yet as far back as February 14, 1918, a telegram of Will H. Hays, who had then been elected chairman of the Republican national committee, was quoted as follows in the public press:

I accept the chairmanship with a full knowledge of the responsibility—responsibility multiplied many times by reason of a national situation and the reconstruction that is to come.

Everyone knows that there will be political activity. The Democratic Party has been busy for months. This political activity should be open and accepted and of a character and on a plane that needs no subterfuge.

And again later, on February 26, 1918, the Republican congressional committee gave a reception at the Willard Hotel, in Washington, at which they entertained Mr. Hays. All factions, both Republican and Progressive Parties, attended the gathering. In the New York Times of February 20 it was stated that Mr. Hays had called upon Mr. Roosevelt and ex-Justice Charles E. Hughes and had talked over the political situation with them. Ex-President Taft wired him congratulations, and Mr. Hays was to talk on February 27 with Senator JOHNSON of California and Representative MEDILL MCCORMICK, of Illinois, representing the Progressive wing. Mr. Hays is quoted as saying:

The country needs to-day, as it never needed before, a united militant Republican Party. Every man who ever voted the Republican ticket, and most every other disinterested individual, knows that this is true, and what this country needs it is the duty of every man to give, regardless of personal influence, anger, pique, greed, or ambition. * * * I do not care how a man voted in 1912, 1914, and 1916, nor his reason for so doing. We are all one to-day, for we have work to do for the good of the country, and it takes us all to do it.

Again, you will find on March 2 that a luncheon was given at 120 Broadway, New York, in honor of Mr. William R. Willcox, the retiring chairman of the Republican national committee.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. PITTMAN. I shall do so when I finish this sentence. On that occasion there was again a meeting of Republicans and again political speeches were made. Now I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. I merely wish to correct the Senator in his statement that it was January 8 that the President made this proposition. It was May 27, long after the occurrences of which the Senator now speaks, that the President declared that politics was adjourned.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Wisconsin is correct; but the activities of Mr. Hays and the Republican leaders never moderated. Subsequent to that time ex-President Roosevelt, the self-announced candidate of the Republican Party for the Presidency, a man who no leading Republican dare deny will be their candidate—not particularly because they want him, but because he is the only man who has the temerity to make an issue against the Democratic Party when there is no issue—ex-President Roosevelt ever since the President proposed an armistice has been engaging in politics throughout the United States at all times. Will H. Hays has been busy at all times since the declaration was made by the President for an armistice. Not only that, but under the guise of a liberty-loan campaign the admitted candidate of the Republican Party for the Presidency for a third term spoke politics from one end of this country to the other and apparently sought to speak in those States where there were close contests for the United States Senate.

If anyone doubts that the liberty-loan speeches which he made were of a political character, I ask him to read them. They have been printed. He stated in Montana, when he commenced his speech making, that the liberty loan having already been oversubscribed, he had nothing to say upon that subject; and then he attacked the proposal for a league of nations; then he attacked the principle of a gradual reduction of the armaments of nations. Again, he uttered his militaristic principles throughout Montana. Again, by every form of insinuation, of which he is a master, he attempted to convince the people of Montana that the Government was now in wishy-washy hands; and he attempted to convince them in all of his speeches there that there was but one hope of this Government, and that was in the election of a Republican majority in the Senate and in the House of Representatives. Yet you condemn the President of the United States because he addresses the American people with regard to these issues that he considers more vital than any that have ever affected our people since the days of the Revolution.

What Democrats have been speaking of politics throughout the country? When did that occur? What Democrats were speaking politics upon the floor of this body until the armistice was violated by Senators on the other side of the Chamber? I suppose that you on the other side feel that you have the right, through interviews, through public speeches, through speeches in this body, to discredit the President of the United States; yes, to go further—to attempt to destroy the great humane program that he has for a lasting world peace; and you expect the President to stand mute through false modesty while you obtain the control of the Senate and the House of Representatives. You do not know that the President of the United States can rise above miserable, contemptible party politics; you can not understand that. You can not understand why any President in the hour of need, when the great prize that we must receive after this war is about to come to us is being grasped out of his hands for partisan purposes, should appeal directly to the people of the country to cast those who attempt that down into utter darkness and support him as they have supported him in the past.

There is no doubt that some of you on the other side—there is no doubt there are some of the Republican leaders throughout the country—who sincerely differ from the President of the United States. There are some of them who can not understand that humanity has any place in law; there are some of them who can not dream of justice ever controlling and directing nations as it directs individuals within nations; there are some of them—and they are the leaders to-day of the Republican Party—who believe that the only right, the only justice, is force, force, force to the end. I am not attacking the sincerity of those men. I pity them; I pity them as I would pity a murderer who was guilty of murder by reason of a form of insanity. I know some of the leaders on the other side whose ice-bound souls could never understand what a world democracy means. I know that there are Members on the other side to whom the very name democracy is the cause of silent mirth. Those men only differ from the Kaiser in that they are jealous and resent the power of the Kaiser that they themselves would exert with happiness and pleasure if it were in their power to do so.

Oh, the President of the United States in his message has stated that we must do justice not only to those to whom we want to do justice, but to those to whom we do not desire to do justice. That is a principle of humanity; that is a principle of Christianity; and yet that principle arouses the anger, arouses the contempt, of the leader of the Republican Party, arouses his ire to such an extent that he publicly condemns it as silly, as foolish, as mischievous. Yet the President of the United States under attacks of this character is supposed by these leaders to sit silently by and see not only a Nation but the world cast back hundreds of years because, forsooth, he might personally be charged by some one with an ulterior political purpose. Listen to this charge and tell me if there are any Republicans on the other side who indorse it. I know there are few who indorse it in their hearts; I know they permit it to go out as an argument throughout this country, and that they will utilize it for the pure, simple, unjustifiable purpose of getting back here and nothing else. Listen to this by the chairman of the Republican national committee, Mr. Will H. Hays, speaking of the address of the President of the United States to the people of the United States. What does he say?

> A more ungracious, more unjust, more wanton, more mendacious accusation was never made by the most reckless stump orator, much less by a President of the United States, for partisan purposes.

The chairman of the Republican national committee charges the President of the United States with making a mendacious statement. I do not know whether Mr. Hays believes that; I do not know whether Mr. Hays made that as a serious expression of his party's viewpoint of the President of the United States or whether it is due to an immaturity of mind; I do not know whether that represents the character of the present Republican Party or whether it represents the ignorance of the present Republican Party; yet the leaders of the Republican Party issue a statement in answer to the President's message to the people, and in that statement they insinuate that he has violated his agreement of an armistice between the parties by the issuing of this statement. The leaders of the Republican Party know that he stood to the utmost and to the last minute the worst character of political attack that has ever been made by any party before he found that it was his duty to come to the front.

When was it that the leaders of the Republican Party were opposed to doing justice to those they did not like as well as to those they did like? When was it that the Republican Party turned its back upon the effort of the world to reduce armaments? When was it that the Republican Party was willing to trample under foot the hope of all of the liberty-loving people of the world that they might get together and in one great combine rectify the wrongs of nations and perpetuate peace? When was it that the attacks upon these great principles of the President commenced? Not until it became necessary to make an issue with the President. They now shamelessly take that stand and attempt to defend it.

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], long one of the leaders of the Republican side and now a leader of the Republican side, has answered. He has answered that he did not make objection to the President's principles at an earlier date because he wanted to await a more opportune time. Are not these principles too sacred to the people of this country, are they not too necessary to the people of the world, to be held as a tool of petty politics? Would the Senator from Pennsylvania conceal a mischievous, treacherous provision in these 14 articles of the President for months and months, with the danger that they might be enforced to the detriment of his own people, in order that he might obtain a political advantage at the right time? Is that politics or is that patriotism?

Let us see. I want to read you in a few minutes what the leader of your party says on this subject, but in the meantime let me read the sentiment of the Republican Party; let me set out the issue that the Republican Party are making through their leader in this campaign. You know what that issue is as made by the Republican leaders, do you not? That the President of the United States is incompetent; that the President of the United States is dealing with mischievous, treacherous principles; that the President is about to do something that will be virtually a surrender of the United States to Germany. Those are the statements, practically and substantially, of the Republican ex-President and candidate for a third time as President of the United States, and the Republican Party have not the nerve to deny them. I will take that back and will say that the leaders of the Republican Party, the officeholders of the Republican Party, have not the nerve, have not the manhood, have not the humanity and the patriotism to throw those words back in the teeth of their perpetual candidate. If they would only find out once and for all that whenever an office seeker becomes a perpetual candidate, when he has an obsession for something for himself, he ceases to be of value to the country or to anybody else.

Listen to this; listen to what your leader says; listen to the platform of the Republican Party. On October 17, in a signed article in a Kansas City paper, Mr. Theodore Roosevelt says this:

> As regards some of the points, either the meaning is so muddy as to be wholly incomprehensible or else the proposals are very treacherous.

There is a statement, not by an ignorant man, not by a man unfamiliar with diplomatic language. There is a statement by a man who has served as President of the United States, and he insinuates that the proposals of the President of the United States are treacherous!

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, will the Senator submit to an interruption?

Mr. PITTMAN. I will.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I would suggest that that criticism of the ex-President and the ex-Progressive and the ex-Republican and the ex-Colonel Roosevelt was not only denied at the time of its fulmination by everybody of prominence that we heard from in the United States, but the denial met with the absolute approbation of every one of our allies in this war—every one of them.

Mr. PITTMAN. In the same article this maker of platforms for the Republican Party, this perpetual Republican candidate for the Presidency, this man who has a right to make issues for the Republican Party, this man without asking whose views on the matter no Republican leader will dare speak, goes further. He says, in speaking of the President's program for a reduction of armaments and for a league of nations, this:

> I gravely doubt whether a more silly or more mischievous plan was ever seriously proposed by the ruler of a great nation.

That is the issue. The Republican Party are opposed to the reduction of armaments. The Republican Party are opposed to the utilization of a league of nations as an instrumentality to hold down the increase in armaments and to rectify the little wrongs which frequently cause wars between nations. I am not here to argue now the question of a league of nations or a reduction of armaments. I stand for both. I am here to show the stand of the Republican Party as announced through their own leaders. The statesmen of the civilized world to-day, with the exception of the few in the Republican Party who are seeking office or following their candidate, stand for a reduction of armaments and a league of nations.

James Bryce, former ambassador to this country, and one of the greatest Englishmen alive to-day, stands for a league of nations. Lloyd-George, next to the President of the United States the most pronounced statesman of this era, stands for a league of nations and for a reduction of armaments.

Oh, the Republican Party have their issues. God pity the Republican Party! God pity the Republicans who have got to have these men who now constitute themselves the leaders of the Republicans Party write their platforms for them!

Ah, there are thousands of intelligent, high-class Republicans in my State who I know will never follow your candidate, will never follow your leaders against a reduction of armaments and a league of nations. It is pure delusion to think they will. They will not stay with you. Your chances are gone. Those were the statements of your candidate; those were the statements of the leader of your party; and your floor leader on that side, the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], will not deny, I believe, that he concurs entirely with the position taken by Theodore Roosevelt. If he does not agree with him, there is every opportunity for him to state that he does not agree with him.

The Senator from Massachusetts, the leader of the Republicans in this body, has stated his opposition to a league of nations. He has stated his opposition to the 14 points of the President. Oh, yes; not only has he stated his opposition to the President's pronounced words and programs and promises but he has gone further; he has shown his lack of confidence in the Chief Executive of this country. He has shown his lack of respect for a man who is respected throughout the world to-day. He has questioned the leadership of Woodrow Wilson when his leadership is admitted by Great Britain, by France, by Italy, by all of our allies, and by all the neutral countries of the world.

That is your issue. You have made it. You will stay with it. You will fight for militarism of the Czar's kind—not for victory that there may be peace and justice throughout the world, but victory that you may make something out of it, that you may make a profit out of victory. Oh, yes; and in this hour, when the principles that must control the world for years and years to come are under consideration, instead of helping the President, who has the constitutional authority to negotiate those principles, you are doing everything in your power to discredit and obstruct him.

What do you suggest in lieu of a league of nations? What do you suggest in lieu of the reduction of armaments? Nothing except an alliance—an alliance such as Germany had with Austria and Italy; an alliance such as Great Britain had with France and with Russia; an alliance such as has existed from the very beginning of history, and has been, if not the cause, at least the opportunity of every war since the beginning of time. Every Senator on that side who speaks for his party speaks for the old theories of life, for the old theories of nations, for force, for war, for murder, for death, for slaughters throughout all time, and not one word for justice or humanity or peace in the future. Those thoughts are in their souls. They have not lived the lives that lead men to think of justice, humanity, and democracy; and yet they, by fortuitous circumstances, are to-day the leaders of the great Republican Party in the United States—a party that anyone must admit has done wonderful good in its time. They are its leaders, and no matter who the Republicans may elect to this body or to the House of Representatives, those leaders will dominate and control and mold them to their way of thinking.

Oh, yes; suppose you should put five Progressive Republicans on that side, as it is constituted to-day. They would have just as much chance as a humanitarian would have to-day in the palace of the Kaiser. In one week's time they would not know whether they were on the other side of the Chamber or not. They would not know where they were or what their duties were; and yet the Republican leaders urge in one voice that they want Republicans here so as to support the President of the United States, and in the next voice they say that the President of the United States is unworthy of support. In one voice they say that they have supported the President better than the Democrats have supported him, and in the next voice, through their leader, through their perpetual candidate for the Presidency, they warn the people of the country to elect Republicans to the Senate and the House, so that the President will not have his own way and so that they can control the actions of the President.

Is that consistency? Which side do they intend to take? They know that they can not pick out any past events of this administration as the grounds of attack; therefore they are looking to the future for an issue. They not only are moved by their desire for militaristic power in the world, but they are moved by a greed which has been stimulated by an opportunity that never before existed in this country.

The Government of the United States to-day is more powerful than in all of its history. The Government of the United States to-day is more powerful than any other democratic government in the world. The Government of the United States to-day has its hand more closely upon the industry and life of the people than ever before in its history, and that life and that industry would be in danger if the reins of the Government were not in the hands of a man and supported by a Congress who believe in the people, who believe in democracy, and who believe in humanity. Oh, yes; the issues in this campaign do amount to something to the people of this country, and it was the duty of the President of the United States, in view of the character of campaign that was being made, to submit those facts to the people.

I have charged that the civilized world stood for the propositions of President Wilson. Let me read what Lloyd-George had to say with regard to the program of the President of the United States. This speech was delivered on July 5, 1918, at the battle front in France. In it he said:

> President Wilson yesterday made it clear what we are fighting for. If the Kaiser and his advisers will accept the conditions voiced by the President they can have peace with America, peace with France, peace with Great Britain to-morrow. But he has given no indication of an intention to do so. Because he will not do so is the very reason we all are fighting.

Lloyd-George sustained it. Take the statement of Bryce, to which I referred before. It is reported in a telegram from London under date of January 10:

> The address is admirable in spirit and contents. Mr. Wilson rightly points out that an international combination to arrest the aggressions of ambitious sovereigns and military castes and to secure the rights of peace-loving peoples is essential to the future well-being of mankind. In his enumeration of objects to be secured by peace, the following points seem specially important:
>
> His broad, clear assertion of the right of a nationality to self-determination, removal of economic barriers to trade, adequate guaranties for reduction of armaments, absolute independence for Belgium and full compensation for her wrongs, sympathetic comprehension and consideration of the present situation of Russia, and deliverance of all subject nationalities from the brutal and sanguinary rule of the Turks.
>
> Those in Great Britain who know how abominable the rule of the Turks has been heartily welcome this declaration and that recently made by the British prime minister that the allies and the United States regard liberation of the Christian and Arab peoples of Armenia, Syria, and Palestine as an essential condition of any just and durable peace.

Let us see what has been said in the past. There is one Republican on the other side who seems to appreciate the meaning of democracy. There is one Senator on the other side who will not utilize the power of misconstruction of language for political purposes. There is one Senator on the other side whose patriotism has always risen above his partisan politics. Yes; there is more than one; there are others. There are some, however, whose every action condemns them to the suspicions of the public. As to those the public will form their own conclusions; but I want to read what the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], a Republican, had to say about the President's 14 points. It was published on January 9 in the New York Times:

> Senator BORAH, of Idaho. I am particularly pleased with that part of the message which relates to Russia. I believe it will have a good effect in Russia. I have thought from the beginning of the Russian revolution that we should give more consideration and greater encouragement and sympathy to the people of Russia. I think in this respect the message is admirable.
>
> As to the other portion of the message, I want to say that I am in favor of prosecuting the war to an honorable and permanent peace; that is, as nearly permanent as the human mind can foresee now. Whatever readjustment of territory and other details are essential to that will have to be arranged, but the details can not, in my opinion, be known very far in advance of some intimation of Germany's breaking down.
>
> I say this, however, that I hope we will not get in the habit of discussing territorial readjustment too much. That is the European vice. What we all want is a permanent peace, and anything that is essential to that as matters develop from time to time must be made to harmonize with it.
>
> I think the paragraph of the President's peace terms with reference to trade conditions is also worthy of particular mention. The Paris conference, in my judgment, was a mistake. It was a start along the wrong line, and the President's message dealt with it in a proper manner.

There is the answer to the Senator from Pennsylvania by one of his own Republican colleagues. There is the answer by a Republican whose knowledge of international law and the language of international communication is not excelled in this body. He says that that statement of the President requires particular attention, and he tells why, in his opinion, the President puts it in that message. He refers to the conference at Paris. He refers to that conference which intimated that it was going to discriminate against the enemy after this war was over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BENET in the chair). The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it becomes the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, two Republican leaders are attempting to find fault with the principles and policies of the President of the United States. They particularize on three points; that providing for a league of nations, that providing for the reduction of armaments, and that providing for a limitation of trade restrictions as far as possible. I have discussed the first two. Now, as to the last. I have read the interpretation placed upon it by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH]. The construction placed upon it by the President of the United States has been read into the RECORD. But the astute politician, who occupies the Senate seat from Pennsylvania, is not satisfied with the assurance of the President of the United States that the provision in no way shall affect the rights of any nation to regulate its own tariff and other economic laws. He is not satisfied with that. He goes further and demands of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to know how this provision will affect Germany. The language itself states how it will affect Germany. The language is so clear that except for the misconstruction placed upon it, it would never have been the subject of argument. It reads as follows:

> The removal so far as possible of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance.

The provision, in the first place, only applies to those nations that associate themselves together under the provisions for a league of nations. If Germany comes into that league of nations, then, of course, Germany will be treated by the United States as every other member of that league of nations. If there is a league of nations, every nation which is worthy of confidence must be entitled to come into that league or it ceases to be a league of nations, and is simply an alliance. The President has stated under what terms and conditions Germany might enter that league of nations. The distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] seems afraid of free trade or protection or something else. He knows the language there means that as among those nations which shall constitute the league of nations no tariff, no financial law shall be so constructed as to favor one or more of those nations to the prejudice of one or more of the other nations.

Mr. WATSON. Will the Senator allow me?

Mr. PITTMAN. He must know that it makes no difference how high or how low the tariff in all those nations may be, it applies equally or justly to all the other nations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I do.

Mr. WATSON. Did the United States ever have a tariff at any time that did not embody these features aside from a reciprocal arrangement?

Mr. PITTMAN. I think not, and I do not think it ever should have. The only reason why that statement was put forward was not because the United States has ever proposed such a plan but because it has been suggested on behalf of some other nations which will be members of this league of nations. The principle that we shall not utilize our tariff or other economic laws for the purpose of discrimination is recognized in this country, but it may not be recognized in all the other countries, and Woodrow Wilson found it necessary to make that pronouncement.

I ask at this time that I may print in the RECORD the statement of Representative GILLETT with regard to the President's message of the 8th of January.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The statement referred to is as follows:

I am in hearty accord with the President's address unless he meant universal free trade by his allusion of economic freedom, and I do not believe that could have been his intention.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, I have very little more to say on this matter. I feel that the integrity and the sincerity of the President of the United States having been attacked by the chairman of the national committee of the Republican Party, the President's address, which was the foundation of that attack, should be included in the RECORD; and in justice, of course, to Mr. Will H. Hays, I will ask that his whole statement be published at this point, following the statement of the President of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT'S APPEAL TO YOU.

My fellow countrymen, the congressional elections are at hand. They occur in the most critical period our country has ever faced or is likely to face in our time. If you have approved of my leadership and wish me to continue to be your unembarrassed spokesman in affairs at home and abroad, I earnestly beg that you will express yourselves unmistakably to that effect by returning a Democratic majority to both the Senate and the House of Representatives. I am your servant and will accept your judgment without cavil, but my power to administer the great trust assigned me by the Constitution would be seriously impaired should your judgment be adverse, and I must frankly tell you so because so many critical issues depend upon your verdict. No scruple of taste must in grim times like these be allowed to stand in the way of speaking the plain truth.

I have no thought of suggesting that any political party is paramount in matters of patriotism. I feel too keenly the sacrifices which have been made in this war by all our citizens, irrespective of party affiliations, to harbor such an idea. I mean only that the difficulties and delicacies of our present task are of a sort that makes it imperatively necessary that the Nation should give its undivided support to the Government under a unified leadership, and that a Republican Congress would divide the leadership.

The leaders of the minority in the present Congress have unquestionably been prowar, but they have been antiadministration. At almost every turn, since we entered the war they have sought to take the choice of policy and the conduct of the war out of my hands and put it under the control of instrumentalities of their own choosing. This is no time either for divided counsel or for divided leadership. Unity of command is as necessary now in civil action as it is upon the field of battle. If the control of the House and Senate should be taken away from the party now in power an opposing majority could assume control of legislation and oblige all action to be taken amidst contest and obstruction.

The return of a Republican majority to either House of the Congress would, moreover, certainly be interpreted on the other side of the water as a repudiation of my leadership. Spokesmen of the Republican Party are urging you to elect a Republican Congress in order to back up and support the President, but even if they should in this way impose upon some credulous voters on this side of the water, they would impose on no one on the other side. It is well understood there as well as here that the Republican leaders desire not so much to support the President as to control him. The peoples of the allied countries with whom we are associated against Germany are quite familiar with the significance of elections. They would find it very difficult to believe that the voters of the United States had chosen to support their President by electing to the Congress a majority controlled by those who are not in fact in sympathy with the attitude and action of the administration.

I need not tell you, my fellow countrymen, that I am asking your support not for my own sake or for the sake of a political party, but for the sake of the Nation itself, in order that its inward unity of purpose may be evident to all the world. In ordinary times I would not feel at liberty to make such an appeal to you. In ordinary times divided counsels can be endured without permanent hurt to the country. But these are not ordinary times. If in these critical days it is your wish to sustain me with undivided minds, I beg that you will say so in a way which it will not be possible to misunderstand either here at home or among our associates on the other side of the sea. I submit my difficulties and my hopes to you.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., October 25, 1918.

"IDEA OF AUTOCRAT," HAYS CALLS APPEAL BY WILSON FOR DEMOCRATIC CONGRESS.

NEW YORK, October 27.

Will H. Hays, chairman of the Republican national committee, made public here to-night a statement in which he replied in behalf of his party to President Wilson's appeal to the Nation to return a Democratic Congress. In his statement, Mr. Hays said:

"President Wilson has questioned the motives and fidelity of your representatives in Congress. He has thereby impugned their loyalty and denied their patriotism. His challenge is to you who elected those representatives. You owe it to them, to the honor of your great party and to your own self-respect to meet that challenge squarely, not only as Republicans but as Americans. I, as your chairman, call upon you to do it.

"Mr. Wilson accords the Republicans no credit whatever for having supported the 'war measures' proposed by his administration, although they have done so with greater unanimity than the members of his own party. Despite that fact, he accuses them of having tried to usurp his proper functions.

AN INSULT, HE DECLARES.

"At no time and in no way have they tried to take control of the war out of his hands. The President knows that. The country knows it. You know it. A more ungracious, more unjust, more wanton, more mendacious accusation was never made by the most reckless stump orator, much less by a President of the United States, for partisan purposes. It is an insult not only to every loyal Republican in Congress but to every loyal Republican in the land.

"It fully merits the resentment which rightfully and surely will find expression at the polls.

"Mr. Wilson grudgingly admits that the Republicans have been 'prowar.' Then why does he demand their defeat? Because they are still prowar? Hardly that. No. It is because they are for peace, though not without victory, because they do not believe lasting peace can be obtained through negotiation; because they consider that 'U. S. stands for unconditional surrender as well as for the United States and Uncle Sam.' The Democratic Congress does not. Mr. Wilson does not. There is the issue as clear as the noonday sun. The country will decide.

THE IDEA OF AN AUTOCRAT.

"Mr. Wilson wants only rubber stamps—his rubber stamps—in Congress. He says so. No one knows it better than Democratic Congressmen. He calls for the defeat of prowar Republicans and the election of antiwar Democrats. He, as the Executive, is no longer satisfied to be one branch of the Government, as provided by the Constitution. Republican Congressmen must be defeated and Democratic Congressmen must, as they would, yield in everything. That is evidently his idea—the idea of an autocrat calling himself the servant, but bidding for the mastery of this great, free people.

"Republicans in Congress have seemed to him good enough when they assented, as they did assent with highest patriotism and sometimes against their best judgment, to his proposals. Republicans at home have seemed to him good enough to send fully a million of their sons into battle, to furnish at least half of the Army and far more than half of the money for winning the war. But they are not considered good enough to have a voice in the settlement of the war.

SAYS PRESIDENT WANTS "TWO THINGS."

"But Mr. Wilson's real purpose has nothing to do with the conduct of the war. He has had that from the beginning, has it now, and nobody dreams of interfering with his control. He wants just two things: One is full power to settle the war precisely as he and his sole, unelected, unappointed, unconfirmed personal adviser may determine. The other is full power as the 'unembarrassed spokesman in affairs at home,' as he actually demands in his statement, to reconstruct in peace times the great industrial affairs of the Nation in the same way, in unimpeded conformity with whatever socialistic doctrines, whatever unlimited Government-ownership notions, whatever hazy whims may happen to possess him at the time; but, first and above all, with absolute commitment to free trade with all the world, thus giving to Germany out of hand the fruits of a victory greater than she could win by fighting a hundred years.

"A Republican Congress will never assent to that. Do you want a Congress that will? Germany does.

"Mr. Wilson forces the Republican Party to lie down or fight. I say, fight! Answer with your votes!

"Mr. Wilson is for unconditional surrender—yes; for the unconditional surrender to himself of the Republican Party, of the country, of the allies—all to him, as the sole arbiter and master of the destinies of the world. Do you stand for that? Answer with your votes!"

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, one of our distinguished Senators here to-day was taking the President to task for having sent this message to the American people, and in that attempt he compared the President to another one of our great Presidents. There is no parallel between the two acts. One was the prevention of the interference in politics by a politician and the other was an open, free, frank message to those who elected the President of the United States. Is the time ever coming in a democracy when the President of the United States shall not be recognized as having the right to address a statement directly to the people of the United States? It was not concealed. It was not hid from the Republicans. No; it was addressed to the Republicans of this country just as much as it is addressed to the Democrats of the country. It is not an appeal, however, to the leaders of the Republican Party, because the leaders of the Republican Party have publicly demonstrated that they are beyond the barrier of any appeal on the ground of humanity or democracy. The President is appealing to Republicans against Republican leaders. He is appealing to Democrats and the men who elected him to office and who placed upon him the responsibility of that office.

But this is not the first time that these things have been done. Let me read just a few remarks here by President McKinley at the time of the campaign of 1898. In a speech delivered at Boone, Iowa, October 11, 1898, he said:

This is no time for divided councils. If I would have you remember anything I have said in these desultory remarks it would be to remember at this critical hour in the Nation's history we must not be divided. The triumphs of the war are yet to be written in the articles of peace.

Again in a speech delivered at Carroll, Iowa, October 11, 1898, he said:

Just at this hour, although hostilities have been suspended, we are confronted with the gravest national problems. It is a time for the soberest judgment and the most conservative and considerate action. As we have stood together in the war, so we must stand together until the results of that war shall be written in peace.

In a speech delivered at Creston, Iowa, October 13, 1898, President McKinley said:

My fellow citizens, I want to leave one more thought with you and that is, as we have been united and therefore strong and invincible in the war, we must continue united until the end of this struggle; we must have no differences among ourselves while we are settling differences with another government. When we have made that settlement in the interest of justice and civilization and humanity, then we can resume our domestic differences.

In a speech delivered at Springfield, Ill., October 15, 1898, President McKinley said:

Now, my friends, what we want is to have no dispute or difference among ourselves to interfere with our united judgment in dealing with the foreign problems that are before us. As we stood together in war, let us stand together until its settlements are made.

Now, then, be it remembered that at that time President McKinley was speaking in a campaign—the campaign of 1898. The country was involved in a campaign at that time, and all the campaign orators were on the stump and the politicians of both parties were in the field. The same Theodore Roosevelt, who to-day is doing everything in his power to discredit the President of the United States and to make him powerless in the execution of a peace program upon the settlement of this war, was then active in politics. He stated in the campaign of 1898 as follows in one of his speeches:

Remember that, whether you will it or not, your votes this year will be viewed by the nations of Europe from one standpoint only. They will draw no fine distinctions. A refusal to sustain the President this year will, in their eyes, be read as a refusal to sustain the war and to sustain the efforts of our peace commission to secure the fruits of war. Such a refusal may not inconceivably bring about a rupture of the peace negotiations. It will give heart to our defeated antagonists; it will make possible the interference of those doubtful neutral nations who in this struggle have wished us ill.

You could get the benefits of the victories of Grant and Sherman only by reelecting Lincoln, and we will gain less than we ought from the war if the administration is not sustained at these elections.

Again, we find former President Harrison using this language in the 1898 campaign:

If the word goes forth that the people of the United States are standing solidly behind the President, the task of the peace commissioners will be easy, but if there is a break in the ranks—if the Democrats score a telling victory, if Democratic Senators, Congressmen, and governors are elected—Spain will see in it a gleam of hope; she will take a fresh hope, and a renewal of hostilities—more war—may be necessary to secure to us what we have already won.

In that same campaign in 1898, when President McKinley was stumping the country and was speaking throughout the United States and delivering the very speeches that I have quoted, we find Senator LODGE, now the senior Senator on the Republican side, now the leader of the Republican Party in this body, now the Senator who in a signed statement condemns the President of the United States for appealing to the people for a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House, appealing on behalf of McKinley for a Republican Senate and a Republican House said:

But there is one question on which I wish to say a few words, and that seems to me to override all others. It is whether we shall stand by the administration and the President at this juncture. If we give a victory to his political opponents we say not only to the United States but we say to the world, we say to the Spanish commissioners in Paris, that the people of the United States repudiate its result and repudiate the man who has led victoriously the war and is now leading us back to peace—William McKinley.

Then, at the same time, we find another distinguished leader on the other side who is doing all in his power to obstruct the principles and policies announced by the President of the United States and to tie his hands with a Republican Senate and a Republican House taking this position in the 1898 campaign. I have read you the speeches of President McKinley at that time. I have not attempted to interpret those speeches. I intend to let the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] interpret President McKinley's speeches. What did the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania have to say in preparing to introduce President McKinley at the time he was making those speeches? This is what he said:

In a few hours President McKinley will be your guest to witness the greatest pagent the country has ever known. In his recent speeches the President has appealed not to a partisan but to a national spirit. He asks the aid of the Nation. He seeks the support of every man who believes in the result of his administration. I appeal not to the martial spirit of the Nation, great as have been our victories on sea and land. I appeal to the quiet, sober thought of the American people, who do not go to war unless for honor and humanity. I make this appeal to you that you give loyal support to President McKinley and the Republican Party in the spirit he has asked for it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield to the Senator from Ohio.

Mr. POMERENE. In view of the course the Senator's speech has taken I think it not inopportune to read a similar statement made by the Hon. Charles Wilhelm Frederick Dick, whom I had the honor to succeed in the Senate. This speech was made in 1898. It reads as follows:

[From the Akron Evening Times, Akron, Ohio, Friday, Oct. 25, 1918.]

DICK'S PLEA AS MADE TO THE VOTERS IN 1898.

We have had a recent example of what patriotism can do. We have just concluded a successful war against a common foe. The last trace of Spanish sovereignty has been driven from the Western Hemisphere. * * * The results of the war have thrust upon us mighty responsibilities * * * and it belongs to the party of progress to solve them.

In this hour of ballots what message are you going to send to Washington, to Paris, and to Spain? Are you going to cast a vote of confidence in the Government or will you show a lack of confidence? Suppose the situation was reversed and Spain were to hold an election in which support of the Government was the issue, with what eagerness, with what hope and fear, would you await the results?

What effect would it have on other countries if it should be cabled to Paris and Madrid that the Government at Washington is not upheld? That the people of the United States had elected a Congress not in accord with the President. Is it not our duty as Americans to do everything possible to prevent such a disaster?

This is a time to appeal to patriotic hearts. It is not a time to stand with yellow journals and yellow speakers, but a time to hoist the Stars and Stripes higher than ever before. Let us say on election day that liberty and freedom yet live in the hearts of the American people.

This is not only an election of county, of State, and the Nation—it is international. Every nation in Europe, friendly or unfriendly, is watching with jealous eyes the results of this election. They are watching to see whether we will take advantage of the opportunities that are offered us, opportunities that would be eagerly seized by them.

The administration should be supported by the whole people. It is in the interests of the whole people. When we are engaged in mighty contests with other nations there should be no doubt where the people stand.

To-day more than usual the administration represents the Government. The course of William McKinley appeals to the patriotism and the support of the whole people. Give him a Congress that will stand at his back; then if they fail it will be time to condemn and reject.

You know without my telling you that the affairs of the State are well and wisely conducted. I want to say one word, however, on county affairs.

Here Senator Dick disgressed in an appeal for the Republican county ticket, after which he continued:

This is no time to change the party at the helm. Men are but the representatives of principles, whether it be in county, State, or Nation.

The world is looking to the United States. We are now in the very vanguard of the procession, and our civilization will make the coming century the greatest in the world's history If as a people we measure up to every responsibility we have no cause for alarm. There is no doubt that the American people will meet and discharge every duty. When God selected us to make the test of free government He did so with a jealous eye. We must neglect no opportunity. Patriotism should dominate every man in his political creed, and on November 8 Americans should do their full duty.

My good friend, Senator Dick, is now a candidate for Congress in his district in Ohio, and if he is to be sustained in his views then every Republican in that district will have to vote for his opponent.

Mr. PITTMAN. I wish to read at the request of Senator THOMAS, who sent it to me, as he was compelled to be absent, a statement from the Indianapolis Journal of September 17, 1898, which has the following headline to it:

Albert J. Beveridge's keynote speech delivered at Tomlinson Hall at the opening of the campaign of 1898. Mr. Beveridge was a candidate for United States Senator to succeed Senator Turpie, a Democrat.

This is the speech:

In a sentence, shall the American people indorse at the polls the administration of William McKinley, which, under the guidance of Divine Providence, has started the Republic on its noblest career of prosperity, duty, and glory, or shall the American people rebuke the administration, reverse the wheels of history, halt the career of the flag, and turn to that purposeless horde of criticism and carping that is assailing the Government at Washington? * * * In the only foreign war this Nation has had in two generations will you, the voters af this Republic and the guardians of its good repute, give the other nations of the world to understand that the American people do not approve and indorse the administration that conducted it? These are the questions you must answer at the polls, and I well know how you will answer them. The thunder of American guns at Santiago and Manila will find its answer in the approval of the voters of the Republic. * * *

And the first question you must answer by your vote is whether you indorse that war. We are told that all citizens and every platform indorse the war, and I admit, with the joy of patriotism, that this is true. But this is only among ourselves, and we are of and to ourselves no longer. This election takes place on the stage of the world, with all earth's nations for our auditors.

Not a foreign office in Europe that is not studying the American Republic and watching the American elections of 1898 as it never watched an American election before. Are the American people the chameleon of the nations? If so, we can easily handle them, says the diplomats of the world. Which result, say you, will have the best effect for us upon the great powers that watch us with the jealousy strength always inspires: A defeat at the hands of the American people of the administration which has conducted our foreign war to a world-embracing success, and which has in hand the most important foreign problems since the Revolution, or such an indorsement of the administration by the American people as will swell to a national acclaim? No matter what your views on the Dingley or the Wilson laws, no matter whether you favor Mexican money or the standard of this Republic, we must deal this day with nations greedy for every market we are to invade, nations with ships and guns and money and men. Will they sift out the motive for your vote, or will they consider the result of the indorsement a rebuke of the administration? I repeat, it is more than a party question. It is an American question. It is an issue in which history sleeps. It is a situation which will influence the destiny of the Republic.

Mr. President, that was the keynote speech of the Republican Party in 1898, delivered by one of the most prominent Republicans in this country, a man who stood high in those days in the councils of the Republican Party, a man who spoke for his party. Were there ever two conditions so identical as the conditions then and the conditions now, with the single exception that at that time the war was over with Spain and the negotiations were with but one little country? To-day the war is not over. The negotiations will involve the great civilized countries of the world.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Am I mistaken in saying that I read in the press of yesterday perhaps that the Senator from Nevada had said that the war is practically over?

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator is correct. This war is practically over. It has been won while a Democratic President was the Chief Executive officer of this country and was Commander in Chief of the armies, just as the little war against Spain was won when President McKinley occupied the same position. The necessity for the support of President Wilson in the formulation of the policies that will either mean an enduring peace or early return of wars will come up to the President as after-war policies faced McKinley at the time of the campaign of 1898. The situations are practically identical. The arguments made by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], by Theodore Roosevelt, by Albert J. Beveridge, all apply to the situation to-day. I do not desire to charge them with insincerity, but I can not understand, and I do not believe the American people will understand, how those Republican statesmen could have made the speeches they made in 1898 and make the speeches and statements that they are making to-day.

Inconsistency in an ignorant man attracts little attention; inconsistency in a statesman, who owes a duty to the people who elect him, is worthy of the gravest consideration. If the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts felt in 1898 that it was necessary to elect a Republican Senate and a Republican House of Representatives in order that the world should not consider that President McKinley had been repudiated, then it is equally as necessary to-day that the people elect a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House of Representatives so that the world shall not think that President Wilson has been repudiated. Is not that true? Is there any answer whatever to it?

The Senator from New York [Mr. WADSWORTH] answers by a nod of his head that there is an answer, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] the other day gave a very cute little answer to it. He said the Philippine Islands were involved; that the thing which made it so necessary to have a Republican Senate was in order that the treaty with regard to the Philippine Islands might be ratified. There is nothing in the remarks of the Senator from Massachusetts which were made in 1898 referring to the Philippine Islands. They referred to sustaining the President who won the war, so that he would not appear to be repudiated in the eyes of the world. There is nothing in Theodore Roosevelt's speeches of that date which I have quoted which deals with the Philippine Islands. Theodore Roosevelt's speeches were the same as those of the Senator from Massachusetts. They all placed the argument on the ground that the man who has won the war must be supported not only in the Senate but in both branches of Congress, in order that the world shall know that the American people first sustain the war, and, in the second place, that they do not repudiate the man who won the war.

I listened to the argument of the Senator from Indiana the other day when he tried to change the whole tenor of the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts, and Roosevelt's speech and Beveridge's speech by saying that they were worried for fear that there would be a Democratic Senate elected, and that, if so, the Senate would not ratify the treaty with regard to the Philippine Islands. If that were so, why were they appealing for the House of Representatives? The House of Representatives has nothing to do with treaties. Oh, but the Senator will say they have control of the appropriation of the money necessary to buy the islands. Congress has never violated a treaty made in accordance with the law and the Constitution of the United States, and when a treaty has been ratified by this body the money has always been appropriated by the House of Representatives, although they have nothing to do with the ratification of the treaty.

An attempt will be made to answer this contention. Politicians will be tempted to change the plain meaning of the speech of the Senator from Massachusetts in 1898; to reconstruct the speech of Theodore Roosevelt; to befog the speech of Albert J. Beveridge; and to explain the speech of Benjamin Harrison to the people of the country. No matter how skillful may be the attempt to twist these speeches their truth has reached the American people and they know if the words of the Senator from Massachusetts and those of Roosevelt and Benjamin Harrison and Beveridge were worth anything in 1898, they can not be repudiated now under the existing conditions, and they are not going to permit those men who are simply American citizens, no matter how high their position may be, to change or to misconstrue their own open and avowed position for the present purposes of partisan gain.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Nevada yield to the Senator from Indiana?

Mr. PITTMAN. I yield.

Mr. WATSON. Does the Senator from Nevada make no distinction between a private citizen making an appeal of that kind and the President of the United States making it? At the time the Senator from Massachusetts made that appeal or the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] made it or the then Senator Beveridge made it neither man was President of the United States; neither man was in the midst of the war as Chief Executive; neither man had had the united support of the opposition party. Does not the Senator from Nevada make any distinction at all between a private citizen making an appeal of that kind and the President of the United States making it, and especially at a time when the President has had practically the united support of the opposition party, and in his own letter admits that that party has been prowar quite as much as has his own party?

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President, there is no doubt that the Republican Party has been both prowar and loyal; I know of no one who attacks that proposition at all; but it is unnecessary for me to argue as to whether or not the Republican Party has been antiadministration. We do not have to go back of to-day to prove it. The RECORD to-day is full of it. That is enough. If the question is as to whether or not there is a difference between a Senator of the United States appealing to the people for the support of the President, or the President appealing for support, I say now that there is not any difference. It does not make any difference whether the one making such an appeal is a Senator of the United States, a Representative, a plain citizen, or President of the United States. If any man, no matter what position he holds, sees that a condition is arising that is dangerous to the people of the United States and they are not being told of that danger from other sources, then it is his duty to warn them.

Do you think that the people of the United States resent the fact that their President has told them of the danger? Do you think that the people of the United States resented the fact that McKinley appealed for unity in 1898? Do you think that the people of the United States have ever resented a President appealing directly to them with regard to any matter? Why should the President not do so? Does the President of the United States stand apart from the people? Is there no relation of confidence between the people and the President? Is the President too great a man to discuss matters with the people? Is the President's position so high that he may not discuss such matters with the common people? It might have been so under a Republican administration, but it is not so under a Democratic administration, and that is what we have at the present time. There was possibly a little difference between the methods pursued when we had a Republican President and those that are now pursued under a Democratic President. The Republican President wrote letters urging the support of whatever he wanted, but the letters were not always public. The letters of the President of the United States at the present time are written to the public and are not concealed. The letters of Republican Presidents were sometimes written to politicians; the letters of the Democratic President are written to the people. As to the question of propriety, the Senator from Indiana can decide that for himself. But let me say something further. I have here a letter that possibly the Senator from Indiana remembers. I will read it and see if he recollects it. I think this letter was written by Mr. Theodore Roosevelt when he was President to Mr. JAMES E. WATSON, who was then a Member of the House of Representatives. The letter is dated "Oyster Bay, N. Y., August 18, 1906," and is as follows:

If there were only partisan issues involved in this contest, I should hesitate to say anything publicly in reference thereto. But I do not feel that such is the case. On the contrary, I feel that all good citizens who have the welfare of America at heart should appreciate the immense amount that has been accomplished by the present Congress, organized as it is, and the urgent need of keeping this organization in power. To change the leadership and organization of the House at this time means to bring confusion upon those who have been successfully engaged in the steady working out of a great and comprehensive scheme for the betterment of our social, industrial, and civic conditions. Such a change would substitute a purposeless confusion, a violent and hurtful oscillation between the positions of the extreme radical and the extreme reactionary, for the present orderly progress along the lines of a carefully thought-out policy.

This letter was written for the purpose of aiding in the election of Republicans to the Senate and the House. It was published in the Republican campaign textbook. Surely that can not be a crime in Woodrow Wilson if done by the great Republican god Roosevelt.

Again, on September 9, 1908, from Oyster Bay, N. Y., Mr. Roosevelt wrote, in part, as follows:

It is urgently necessary, from the standpoint of the public interest, to elect Mr. Taft and a Republican Congress which will support him; and they seek election on a platform which specifically pledges the party, alike in its executive and legislative branches, to continue and develop the policies which have been not merely professed but acted upon during these seven years. These policies can be successfully carried through only by the hearty cooperation of the President and the Congress in both its branches, and it is therefore particularly important that there should obtain such harmony between them. To fail to elect Mr. Taft would be a calamity to the country; and it would be folly while electing him yet at the same time to elect a Congress hostile to him, a Congress which under the influence of partisan leadership would be certain to thwart and baffle him on every possible occasion. To elect Mr. Taft and at the same time to elect a Congress pledged to support him is the only way in which to perpetuate the policy of the Government as now carried on. I feel that all the aid that can be given to this policy by every good citizen should be given, for this is far more than a merely partisan matter.

This was at a time when President Roosevelt expected to have Mr. Taft hold for four years, and in trust for Roosevelt, the presidential office. This letter was also written for political purposes, and was publicly used with President Roosevelt's knowledge and consent.

Mr. Taft, who knew of and accepted this aid of President Roosevelt, now holds up his hands in holy horror when Woodrow Wilson makes a similar plea.

I leave the question now as to whether or not the American people are going to take the advice of the Republican leaders given in 1898 or the advice given by the Republican leaders now. I leave it to the people of the country whether the Republican leaders to-day are sincere or whether they were sincere in 1898. There was argument in favor of their sincerity in 1898, but the evidence to-day is all against their sincerity. They argued in 1898 like patriots, and they quibble and debate to-day like politicians

The Republicans have made their issue. It is an issue as to whether or not the President of the United States, who has successfully conducted this war and who has the confidence of the world, shall continue it to the end unhampered, unobstructed, uninterfered with, or whether or not it shall be taken out of his hands and placed in the hands of Senator LODGE and Senator PENROSE, of Pennsylvania. That is the issue, and the people of this country are going to decide with the President. No matter what subterfuges may be used, no matter how cunningly the arguments may be presented, they will see it. You yourselves have exposed yourselves, and further exposition is unnecessary.

Mr. POINDEXTER obtained the floor.

Mr. WADSWORTH and Mr. SMOOT addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield first to the Senator from New York.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, in order that the different pronouncements which find their appearance in the press may be contained in the RECORD, I ask permission that a letter written by the President of the United States to Mr. Hennessy, who is a candidate for the United States Senate from the State of New Jersey, which was printed in yesterday's papers, if I remember correctly, be read by the Secretary, and that I be permitted to utter about two sentences upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from New York? There being none, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

MY DEAR MR. HENNESSY: May I not say how deeply interested I am in the contest you are conducting? I can not but feel that in ignoring my earnest appeal with regard to the suffrage amendment, made in the public interest and because of my intimate knowledge of the issues involved, both on the other side of the water and here, Senator BAIRD has certainly not represented the true feeling and spirit of the people of New Jersey. I am sure that they must have felt that such an appeal could not and should not be ignored. It would be a very great make weight thrown into the international scale if his course of action while in the Senate could be reversed by the people of our great State.

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Washington——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WADSWORTH. Senators will note that the President of the United States requests the people of the State of New Jersey to defeat Senator BAIRD at the polls solely because he voted against the Federal suffrage amendment. No other reason is given whatsoever. I shall not comment upon the merits or demerits of the Federal suffrage amendment or the accuracy of the President's definition of that measure as being vitally necessary to the winning of the war. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] has used the term "sincerity" more than once in his address. In view of this effort on the part of the President to defeat a Senator at the polls because he did not vote for the Federal suffrage amendment, I am wondering whether he will send a similar letter to the people of the State of Delaware and ask the defeat of Senator SAULSBURY, to the people of Tennessee and urge the defeat of Senator SHIELDS, and to the people of the State of Alabama and urge the defeat of Senator BANKHEAD, all three of whom have voted against the same Federal suffrage amendment and are running for reelection.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will have to decline further interruptions. I have been on my feet for some time; the remarks that I have to make are brief, and I would prefer if the Senator would allow me to proceed.

Mr. FLETCHER. Very well. I was simply going to ask the Senator if he would allow me to submit a report. I could have insisted on the regular order and had the report submitted at the proper time.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator merely wishes to present a report from a committee, I will yield to him for that purpose.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will wait until the Senator concludes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, it is extremely distasteful to me to discuss a political issue in the Senate. The President, however, with his great influence has projected a partisan discussion into the affairs of the Government by the letter addressed to the American people which he gave out for publication on Friday, in which he declared that he waived the scruples of good taste on account of the importance of the issues that were involved.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], in discussing the recent negotiations of the President with the German Government, seemed to take the rather curious position that there was a default on the part of the American people or of the Senate for not having declared their objections to the various terms of peace which the President has set forth in his addresses to Congress and in other documents. The Senator failed to state what the statute of limitations is. My own feeling in regard to that, Mr. President, was and is now that it was not desirable at the time the President made his address of January 8, 1918, or that of December 4, 1917, or his various other addresses and letters with regard to terms of peace that they should be discussed, and I think that was the feeling of a great many citizens. I think that generally citizens in private life and men in public office felt that it was a time to concentrate the energies of the country upon the conduct of the war rather than upon discussing terms of peace. They felt that the discussion of peace before we had really gotten into the war which we had declared to exist retarded the efforts of the American people in the preparation for the conflict.

The thing which they resented most was not that the President had in his mind certain policies in regard to the readjustment of international affairs at the close of the war, but that he discussed them, that he diverted public attention and public effort from the preparation for winning the victory to what at that time appeared, to many of them at least, to be perfectly futile discussions as to peace when there was no peace.

Now, for the Senator from Nebraska to say that because citizens of this country did not enter into a discussion with the President over terms of peace eight months after we had entered the war, before we had struck a blow, before we had landed a cannon or an aeroplane on the battle front, seems to me to be rather unsound. I think that it is perfectly fair to say to the Senator from Nebraska that, with the views which I have just stated, the people who did not express themselves in regard to the President's terms of peace occupied a very reasonable position from their standpoint and that they ought not to be charged now with having accepted the various propositions set forth by the President.

The Senator from Nebraska introduced two letters that have been written by the President in regard to one of the various peace points which he had formulated in his address of January 8, 1918, and in a colloquy on the floor stated that it was the view of the President that to the league of nations for economic freedom which the President declared himself in favor of Germany was to be admitted.

The same declaration was subsequently made by the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]. Questions were asked of the Senator from Nebraska as to whether or not, under this term of peace of the President, the United States would be prevented from levying discriminatory duties against German goods or making discriminatory provisions as to trade with Germany. As I understood the Senator from Nebraska, he interpreted the President's speech and the President's letters to mean that that matter should be left to the league of nations which he proposed.

I have before me the letters which the Senator read; and from them I think it can not be a matter of doubt that although, I suppose as a matter of course, the question would have to be left to the ultimate determination of the league of nations, yet, so far as the views of the President of the United States are concerned, he in these letters clearly declares himself opposed to any discriminatory provisions as to trade with Germany or the importation of goods from that country. Taking this letter of October 28, addressed to the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the President states:

> Whatever tariff any nation might deem necessary for its own economic service, be that tariff high or low, it should apply equally to all foreign nations. * * * This leaves every nation free to determine for itself its own internal policies, and limits only its right to compound those policies of hostile discriminations between one nation and another.

So, in the letter of the President of October 22, 1918, addressed to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], he states:

> They leave every nation free to determine its own economic policy, except in the one particular that its policy must be the same for all other nations and not be compounded of hostile discriminations between one nation and another.

I submit that there can not be any doubt as to the President's attitude upon that subject, and the country is entitled to thoroughly understand the issue. The President has been fair enough to publish to the country his partisan plea for the election of none but Democrats to Congress, and the people will have an opportunity of passing judgment upon the merits of his request. Upon this other matter, which has been set up in the speeches here to-day by the representatives of the administration as one of the central planks in the President's policy which he says Congress must support, the country is entitled to have a fair understanding of what the proposition is.

The letters which the President has written, and from which I have read, leave no doubt that the object of the President is that there shall be a league of nations formed in which Germany shall be an equal partner, and that there shall be no discrimination against her. Of course, he is entitled to advocate that. The country is entitled to understand his position, and it is for it to decide.

Mr. President, the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN]—whose declarations are stated by the newspapers in which they have recently been printed to have been made not without the assent of the administration—says that the great issue between the President and his opponents is as to whether or not there is to be a humane peace. I expect in the course of my remarks to refer briefly in detail to the issue which he describes as the program for a humane peace. I comment on it now only to say that the Senator from Nevada utterly failed to inform either the Senate or the country as to the meaning of this program for a humane peace as so expressed.

In passing I will say that there can not be any question of the intention of this country to adopt humane conditions in formulating the terms of peace so far as they affect our allies in the war; so I assume that what the Senator from Nevada means, in speaking for the administration on this matter, is that Germany must be treated humanely. Now, there is a great deal of difference of opinion as to what humane treatment of Germany would consist of, in view of her record of the last four years.

We have here, then, these several statements, which are to be interpreted together, that the great central feature of the President's program, for which he demands unquestioning support, is that there is to be a peace based on justice which will treat Germany humanely; that in the league of nations, which is another part of the program of readjusting the affairs of the world, Germany shall enter upon an equal footing with our allies who have been fighting her and her crimes since August, 1914.

The Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] seems to be very much affronted because former President Roosevelt and other Republicans have had the temerity to criticize the President. That also illustrates one phase of the present political status of the country. There is a cult abroad that has affected newspapers, that has affected the country generally, that it is an offense of some kind—a great many people have gotten the idea that it is a criminal offense—to differ with the President of the United States. The President himself, in the letter to which I will refer in a moment, does not ask the country for the election of a Democratic Congress in support of any defined policy or of any principle of Government, nor in support of any party; but he says that a Democratic Congress should be elected in order to support him in whatever course he may choose to pursue, whatever it may be, in the conduct of the affairs of the Government. Mr. President, the mere statement of such a proposition is all that is necessary to present it for the judgment of a liberty-loving people.

A great deal of emphasis has been laid on the fact that former Senator Dick, of Ohio; former Senator Beveridge, of Indiana; and Mr. Roosevelt, at a time before he had been elected to the Presidency of the United States in 1898, made speeches arguing that the administration should be supported because the country was engaged in war, and that foreign nations would interpret the rejection of the administration as a change in our attitude and policy toward the war. Now, it is quite interesting in the first place to see the Senator from Ohio, the Senator from Nevada, and the Senator from Nebraska on the Democratic side applauding and approving and following the arguments and advice and suggestions of Republicans made in 1898, which at that time I have not the slightest doubt, if they took part in the campaign at all, each one of them denounced in unmeasured terms.

Why, Mr. President, no party has objected to public speakers, whether they are Members of the Senate or whether they are private citizens, urging the support of the administration. Nobody, I take it, would object, if he cared to go that far, if the President of the United States should issue an appeal to the American people to indorse his record or to support some policy which he announced to them. The criticism which the country has expressed, and which leads to this multiplicity of defenses of the President's action here this morning in the Senate, is not that speakers have gone out over the country and urged the support of the President. They have been doing that for months, and nothing was said about it. It is not that the President submitted his record, which was known and which could be seen of all men, or some policy which he defined and which the people would have an opportunity to judge when they knew what it was, and requested their support for it. The objection and criticism which is made of the address of the President to his fellow countrymen on Friday is that he demands the election of a Democratic Congress, not to support the principles of the Democratic Party, or to indorse his record, or to advocate any particular policy, but to maintain him as the spokesman, not of the Democratic Party, but of the American people. He asked them to elect none but Democrats to the Senate and the House of Representatives, not to enable him to conduct the war to a successful conclusion. Why does he ask it, and why do the people of this country resent it? He asks it because he says he desires to keep in his hands the policy and the conduct of the war.

Now, I want to say a few words about that, Mr. President. Here are the words that the President uses:

> If you have approved of my leadership and wish me to continue to be your unembarrassed spokesman in affairs at home and abroad, I earnestly beg that you will express yourselves unmistakably to that effect.

That letter is addressed, not to the Democratic Party, but to "My fellow countrymen."

Here is what the President further says:

The leaders of the minority in the present Congress have unquestionably been prowar, but they have been antiadministration. At almost every turn since we entered the war they have sought to take the choice of policy and the conduct of the war out of my hands and put it under the control of instrumentalities of their own choosing.

I read no more from the President's message, because that is enough, and the issue rests upon that; and the scruple of good taste, which in another part of the letter the President says he waves aside, is violated, if it is violated at all, by those expressions.

Mr. President, the President of the United States is a historian and a student. I do not think he has had a great deal of experience in practical affairs until quite recently, when he came into politics, but he is serving his second term as President. He has written a history of the United States and published a book on government which I have read with a great deal of interest, and for a man of that experience, and who has presented himself as an authority on government, he expresses in the letter from which I have just quoted a strange misconception of the nature of the Government of the United States. In England the chief executive is the leader of the legislature, and if the legislature fails to follow him, under the British constitution he appeals to the people for the election of a majority in his support. The British executive administration is a committee of the House of Commons, and, of course, can not act except by the authority of the house. There the Parliament is supreme. The highest court is the House of Lords, which is ultimately also under control of the House of Commons.

Parliament exercises supreme legislative, executive, and judicial power. It is subject to no veto and to no constitution, but only to the people themselves in referendum elections. The premier, who is the chief executive of Great Britain, exercises that consolidated power of the executive, the legislature, and in the last analysis can also control the courts, because he has back of him the support of the House of Commons.

In America, under our Constitution—which the President, who is supposed to be an authority, seems utterly to misinterpret, from the appeal which he has made for the election of a Congress which will support him in every particular during the remainder of his term of office—the conditions and limitations of power are utterly different from those in Great Britain. In this country the Executive, the President, is not under the control of Congress. He is independent, within the limits of his powers as fixed by the Constitution, and neither Congress nor the courts can interfere with those powers. On the other hand, Congress and the courts are equally independent of the Executive within the limits of their constitutional power. The President has no more authority to direct or control Congress than he has to control the Supreme Court. Perhaps the most prominent feature of the American Constitution is the separation and the independence of the legislative, executive, and judicial powers. It is the ancient and familiar bulwark of our institutions, and over all and limiting all is the fixed and written Constitution, like the pillars of a cathedral, on which all else must rest or fall.

Mr. President, strange as it may seem, Mr. Wilson misconceives—and I say this with all deliberation and with the utmost respect and sincerity—his functions in the Government. He assumes—and I am speaking upon the utterances which I have just read from him—that he is chosen as the spokesman of the people "in affairs at home and abroad," and that the "choice of policy and conduct of the war" are "in his hands," to use his words. In this he is mistaken. Congress, and Congress alone, is the "spokesman of the people in affairs at home and abroad," and not the President, as he assumes in his letter. Congress, and Congress alone, has "in its hands" the "choice of the policy and the conduct of the war." The President is an executive only. With the specific exceptions of the power to make recommendations to Congress and to veto measures his authority is limited to executing the laws. The President says that certain Members of Congress have undertaken to "take out of his hands" the fixing or choice of the policies of the country. Now, Congress could not do that; Congress has not done it; nobody has attempted to do it, because Congress could not do it. They have never been in his hands; they could not be in his hands, and so they could not be taken out.

Mr. Wilson assumes, apparently, to take under his control the choice of the policy and the conduct of the war, but he can not do so under the Constitution. In that instrument it is provided that Congress shall have the sole and exclusive power "to declare war and make rules concerning captures on land and water, to raise and support armies, to provide and maintain a navy, to make rules for the government of the land and naval forces, to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers and all other powers vested by the Constitution in the Government of the United States or in any department or officer thereof, to regulate commerce with foreign nations"; and no treaty of peace can be made except with the consent and advice of the Senate, two-thirds of the Senators present concurring.

Why, Mr. President, some reference was made in the speech of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] to the initiative of the President in readjusting the affairs of Europe at the end of the war, and the propriety of his negotiating on that subject and making a declaration to the world of his views in regard to it. In a certain way the initiative is with the President, but by the acquiescence only of Congress, and no other way. The initiative is not with the President except by permission, either express or implied, of Congress. There can be no war with an European power without a declaration of war by Congress. There can be no peace with a European power until it is provided for or acquiesced in by Congress. The powers of peace and of war are in Congress and not in the President.

The President says that the Republicans have been antiadministration. I remember very well myself that the Republicans vigorously supported the President when he stood for preferential American privileges in the Panama Canal. We had built that canal at great expense; we were proud of having accomplished a great achievement; and we felt that it was for the benefit of the American people. The President had said so in a most formal and energetic way, and the Republicans supported him in that position. It is true, however, that they opposed him when he took the other side of the question; but that was probably due merely to a lack of as quick adaptability as the Democrats. On the other hand, while the Republicans were strongly against the President when he stood in opposition to the Federal suffrage amendment, this ought not to be held against them, for they lined up strongly for him when he took the other side of the question and supported it.

As a matter of fact it was the Democrats who opposed him in this, and it seems rather unfair that the President should ask the voters of New Jersey to defeat Senator BAIRD because he voted against the suffrage amendment, and at the same time ask the country to elect all the Democratic candidates who voted against it, even though he urged their support of it as a war measure. It is true the Republicans vigorously opposed the President when he stood for national unpreparedness, but when he changed his attitude on that and stood for preparedness the Republicans supported him much more vigorously than the Democrats did. They were for him when he stood with Mr. Garrison for a National Army and against him when he stood with Mr. Hay for dependence on a National Guard. When the President occupied Vera Cruz the Republicans supported him, though they opposed him in its evacuation without securing a settlement of the Mexican question. So they supported him in his punitive expedition after Villa, to protect our citizens on the border. They regretted, however, the retirement of the expedition without accomplishing any result whatever. The loss of precious lives and the expenditure of vast funds were thrown away. When the President made his second campaign on a pacifist platform and attempted to keep us out of war by writing notes about the Lusitania and other outrages perpetrated against us by Germany, it is undoubtedly true that Republicans were against that policy, because Republicans believed that immediate vigorous action in protection of the rights and lives of American citizens—the immediate dismissal of the German ambassador, the seizure of German ships in our ports—would have prevented a repetition of those wrongs and would have kept us out of war.

The Republican platform declared in favor of the protection of American citizens throughout the world. And when it was proved that diplomatic notes would not keep us out of war, the Republicans were first and foremost in support of the President in every step that he has taken to vindicate the honor of the Nation. They have granted extraordinary powers and wealth without stint or limit to carry on the war. The charge that Republicans have not supported the President in carrying on the war in the most vigorous fashion can not be established by the record. With a general measure of devotion of the whole people unsurpassed even in our annals, the Nation has supported the Government in this war. To them it was not a war in which we as a Nation had no interest. It was not so much "to make the world safe for democracy" as it was to maintain the honor and the ultimate independence of the United States. They have given their sons, and what more can be said? They gave their all for their native land. And what a land it is! As the morning sun illumines the Atlantic shore and hour by hour sends his beams toward the west until they rest again upon the waters of the sea it is yet our country. Over coastal plain and mountain range, over prairies and the mighty rivers, freedom reigns. It was to keep it so that our country went to war. It is love of country that has given and demanded support of the Government in the conduct of the war. To attempt to make political capital out of the patriotism of a people is a sordid perversion of the holiest instinct of mankind. To attempt to pervert the people's sacrifice and devotion for a great national cause to personal or party purposes is worse than bad taste. It is something like sacrilege. It is like the crime of Alcibiades in the profanation of the mysterious, as though one entered a holy temple to commit a vulgar indecency.

The President declares that politics are adjourned, but says elect none but Democrats to office. The President not only insists that Congress should have no policies and should leave all to him; but in his statement of October 14 he requests the people themselves not to discuss the most "momentous" issues that affect them but to leave such discussion to "the Governments of the United States and of the allies," while the people occupy themselves raising the revenue. Autocracy never went any further than that.

Mr. Barney Baruch, one of the President's principal representatives, says that peace should be left to the President. He states that "peace talk is affecting our output," but still insists that the President should have a monopoly of it, and that while the President is talking peace the people should "think war, talk war, make war." Considering that the President claims that the "policy and conduct of the war are exclusively in his hands," this is asking a great deal of the people. He evidently has a high opinion of them to suppose that with Congress suppressed and under complete control, and the President talking peace, the people will be able to "think war, talk war, make war."

Furthermore the people are under other handicaps. They were advised by Mr. McAdoo, in whom they have a great deal of confidence—

This—

Referring to the German reply—

if authentic—

No one ever questioned its authenticity—means unconditional surrender.

That statement was made October 14, and the daily reports of desperate fighting at the front may seem inconsistent. But to reassure the people, Senator PITTMAN, in the New York Times of October 27—he repeated it on the floor to-day in a statement which, it is said, "was not issued without sanction from the White House"—declared "the war has been practically won." The peace negotiations and the peace talk, which we are told must be left to the administration, it is reported in foreign dispatches, have strengthened Germany and alarmed our allies, and, repeated in headlines throughout the land, have retarded the efforts of the people to "think war, talk war, make war." In the meantime, the truth is, that as desperate fighting as the war has seen is now going on, and our men are dying by thousands at the front.

An intimation of the opinion of our allies of negotiations and talk of peace is shown by the debate in the House of Commons on Thursday night by the statement of the representative of the British Government that talk of peace was silenced by "common sense."

I have in my pocket a statement from Paris indicating the views of the French people on this subject under date of October 27:

NO AGREEMENT ON WILSON NOTES, SAYS FRENCH PRESS.

PARIS, October 27.

French press discussion of President Wilson's last note to Germany reveals the following facts:

1. That the allies have not formulated a common peace program.

2. That President Wilson's discussion with Germany was conducted without consulting the governments associated with the United States in the war, hence this discussion does not bind them.

3. President Wilson's speeches are not acceptable to the allies in every detail.

For example, the British take exception as regards the freedom of the seas, while the French demand the unconditional restitution of Alsace-Lorraine.

The Echo de Paris says: "The allied European cabinets must agree upon a common attitude. They are bound by nothing President Wilson has said or typewritten."

Le Gaulois says: "Not having participated in the exchange of notes between America and Germany, the allied Governments retain complete freedom of decision and action."

L'Action Francais: "We can not accept a distinction between the various forms of German Government. We might conceive of privileges accorded certain German States, provided they agree to break away from Prussia, but we will pay no premium to a democratic Germany at the expense of our own interests and future security.

Not 18 months ago, like the United States, but a thousand years ago France opposed the German aggressions."

Several papers reiterate that Germany can not have an armistice by diplomatic negotiations, but must send the white flag.

That sounds more like statesmanship, it seems to me, Mr. President; but the humiliating thing to an American citizen is that the United States, the last in the war and consequently the freshest of the allied nations, less exhausted, instead of being an inspiration and a leader, instead of holding up the morale of our allies, exhausted by a four-year struggle, we lie on our backs, so to speak, and send these peace papers to France and Great Britain and say, "You fix it," with a pretty strong intimation that we would be glad to end the war and grant an armistice. It is humiliating to the American people. I have no doubt that France and Great Britain, as judged by these expressions, which no doubt represent public opinion and also the Government views, which are not free at all times to be openly expressed, will be equal to the emergency. I have not the slightest doubt that these great allies, after the sacrifices they have made, are not going to throw away the security of the future and play false to the sacred dead in this great cause, even though we have sent peace papers to them and left the issue to their decision.

Now, it is important to know what are the policies of this Government about which the people are warned not to talk and from which Congress is to be excluded. Senator LEWIS, another spokesman of the administration, has pending a resolution by which Congress would pledge itself in advance to support these policies without knowing what they are, or any other "course the President may take." Some light is beginning to be shed on them. Mr. Frank H. Simonds, a prominent writer in the New York Tribune, states: "We are at the present time facing the greatest danger which we have had to confront since we entered the world war. It is the danger that we may become the advocate of Germany in the peace discussions which are to come." The danger and the fear is that the President, in the policy which he says should be left in his hands, but which the Constitution vests in Congress, will endeavor to form a league of nations with Germany and save her from due punishment and retribution for the wrongs she has done to mankind. The President seeks to differentiate between the German people and the German Army, when, as a matter of fact, they are one and the same.

I read with the utmost interest a speech made a few days ago in the Senate by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], one of the most complete and illuminating discussions of this entire question that I have seen. I thought so much of it that I mailed a copy of it to my son and asked him to read it. Mr. MYERS spoke in that speech very clearly and unanswerably of the fact that the German Army is the German people. Who else is it? The German Nation is at war. This war is conducted by the German people and by nobody else. It could not have been otherwise conducted. There never was an hour since Germany sprang like a tiger afflicted with hydrophobia upon helpless Belgium and unsuspecting France when the German people have not been back of the Kaiser in waging this war and perpetrating their atrocities against mankind. Yet it is talked about that if they will get up some sort of a democratic-socialistic government there, we can do business with them and they need not surrender.

I should like to know what difference it makes what is said by any purported representative of any kind of a government in Germany so long as a German Army with 3,000,000 men is under military control with arms in their hands. Grant the government to-day and take it back to-morrow! The whole proposition is simply a farce, a German peace offensive into which the United States has fallen.

Mr. Lawrence, who also speaks for the administration, says quite ominously:

If the President's democratic aims are not shared by the allies, it is possible that the prestige of our cobelligerents will not be as great as it has been before, and the interest of the American people in war aims revealed in selfish terms would be considerably altered.

That is quite a distinct threat to our allies, coming from the spokesman of the administration, who knows what he is talking about. Quoting further, he says:

* * * Mr. Wilson said in his New York speech that every nation, whether it be friend or foe, must come to the peace table ready to pay the price.

There he is laying down the hard terms to our allies.

The British labor party and the French socialists have subscribed to the President's views. * * * The President has therefore to steer a middle-of-the-road course.

There is the declaration from the White House. The British Labor Party, quoting again, and the French socialists have accepted the President's views. Probably they know no more about his views than we do in this country, but they have accepted them. We know the views of the British Labor Party leaders, not the mass of British labor but of the political leaders of certain elements of it, and of certain French socialists who are in accord with the President's views, which he wishes to have unrestricted power to put into effect by a Congress which will commit themselves in advance to support them without even having the respect of being told what they are.

We read the other day in the newspapers that Mr. Henderson, a leader of the party which it is said has accepted the President's views, came down to a port to take a ship to France to meet the French socialists and Mr. Gompers. Mr. Gompers's views are utterly different. He is an uncompromising victory man on this proposition—but he was meeting with French socialists and Henderson wanted to go to meet them. The British sailors said to Mr. Henderson, "You can not ride on our ship," and he did not. They would not take him across the channel, and he had to go back home. I do not know how he got home. The press stated that the taxicab drivers refused to allow him to ride in a taxicab because of his unpatriotic attitude toward the war. He is the man who, Mr. Lawrence says, has accepted the President's views in this great humane program toward Germany, which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] says is the chief issue of the time.

The French socialists have accepted it. How many times has Mr. Clemenceau, the great premier of France, stood in the tribune in the Chamber of Deputies and denounced the disloyalty and treason of the French socialists? When the victory and evacuation of Lille were announced, and in recognition of the escape of the citizens from enslavement the members of the Chamber of Deputies stood to receive the deputy of Lille in the Chamber of Deputies when he appeared after his release, two of these socialists refused to applaud the victory of their countrymen and the freeing of their fellow citizens. But Mr. Lawrence says the French socialists have accepted the President's program for the ending of this war on the basis of a "humane" treatment of Germany.

Mr. President, to verify the dread that was expressed by Mr. Simonds, one of the best-informed writers on the war, Senator PITTMAN, who has come forward lately as probably the most active and most prominent representative of the administration in this matter, says in his interview in the New York Times of yesterday that "there will be an armistice." Those are very few words, but they are very significant. He says "there will be an armistice." I do not think myself there will be an armistice. The reason why I do not think so is that I feel in my heart certain that France and Great Britain are not going to grant any armistice. They are not going to quit this war, after what they have suffered, until Germany is conquered. Then after that they will discuss the humanities, and "a peace based on justice," a "lasting peace," and all that sort of thing.

I think that Senator PITTMAN is wrong in stating that there is going to be an armistice, but I believe he is right in speaking for the administration that the administration is trying to bring about an armistice. These are the issues before the American people. The President has made it plain, and I do him the justice to say that by making it plain he has given the people an opportunity to decide for themselves.

Senator PITTMAN has proclaimed day after day the great divergence between the policies of Senator LODGE and the policies of the President. I do not know a great deal about the policies of Senator LODGE. I know nothing except what I have heard him say here in the Senate, and I heard him say in the Senate what I have heard a great many people say, what many people have said to me orally, by telegraph, in writing, in this country and in our allied countries in Europe. He is in favor of prosecuting this war until peace among the nations is secured by the unconditional surrender of Germany. The Senator from Nevada speaks for the administration and says that is not the policy of the administration. I know he is speaking with authority. So that is the issue before the American people. The appeal which was made by the President he has a right to make, even though, as he said, it is in bad taste. It is for the people to determine if we are to compromise the war with a weak peace, a peace which the administration says will be lasting, but which in fact would not endure beyond the generation that is now coming on.

Mr. President, no greater service could be rendered Germany than to grant her an armistice on any terms at all. Some people seem to be confused as to the effect of an armistice. An armistice by the very name and meaning of the word indicates that war has not been concluded. What it means is that although the war has not been concluded both nations will hold the battle in abeyance, retaining their arms. I am against that in the case of Germany. I have stated my reasons heretofore. I think whenever we reach that point we will end the war in effect, because we shall not be able to renew it again. We will leave Germany with her military power from that day forth to begin to recoup herself for another attack upon the world at some weak point when it is least suspecting.

The unknown policy that the President and his representatives say must be left to him alone is referred to by Senator PITTMAN as follows:

> Unless the people give the President a Senate that will follow his leadership it will be impossible for him to accomplish the adoption of his program for a lasting world's peace.

The idea here expressed is not that the Senate in this important matter should approve a policy presented by the President after consideration, but that a Senate should be elected pledged in advance to follow the President's leadership blindly without knowing what his policies may be. This is the President's idea also. It is a peculiar view of the Senate and the Constitution; but it has the merit of audacity and of being frankly presented to the people so that they will have fair notice of the consequences of the election of a Democratic Senate.

It is furthermore somewhat startling that the demand should be made for a blind following of the President as leader in a matter with which the President, under the Constitution, has comparatively little authority, the continuance or cessation of the war being exclusively under the control of Congress, and the final terms of peace being subject to the ultimate determination of the Senate. There is a widespread feeling that if the President had devoted himself to executive duties and to the duties of Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy rather than to have immersed himself to such an extent in matters that devolve upon Congress under the Constitution, we would have gotten into the actual fighting somewhat earlier and would have avoided the shipping, ordnance, and aeroplane fiascoes of last year.

Shortly after we entered the war the President began to talk peace and to declare what the terms of peace should be. He has continued that discussion from that time to this in a series of speeches, notes, inquiries, messages, and declarations.

The Senator from Nebraska referred to that again and lays great store upon the fact that the country has not been joining the President in this discussion. I think the country by not joining the President in this discussion showed its intelligence and good judgment. I rather regret myself, as a private citizen, and express it only as an individual, that while we were getting ready to fight the President was continually speaking and writing about making peace.

In a series of speeches, letters, parleys, notes, and inquiries during that period the President has set forth some 35 or 40 different points or terms of peace. Although Congress alone can make war and peace, the conclusions reached by the President were stated by him as though they were final and conclusive. Though sometimes presented in messages to Congress, the only purpose apparently was that the occasion should serve as a medium for advising the world what the President had decided.

Another peculiarity about the peace discussion which has been keeping company with the war, and sometimes getting ahead of it, has been that there is but little suggestion that our allies would have any terms of peace to propose. The President has covered the whole field; he has laid down the terms for Bulgaria and Turkey, although we have never declared war on Bulgaria and Turkey. In fact, the President began laying down terms of peace before we were in the war. Many of those terms conflict, and Austria has found it difficult to accept them fast enough, as she was informed the other day that No. 10 was no longer in effect. It must be somewhat discouraging to her.

On January 22, 1917, before we were in the war, speaking to the Senate, the President said—and I am going to quote from what the President said on several occasions and reiterated afterwards, and which he still defends, in order to define and to illuminate the program of a "humane" peace which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] is proclaiming and a league of nations, with Germany on equal terms. I remember distinctly hearing the address from yonder rostrum:

> They—
>
> Referring to the assurances of the belligerents—
>
> imply, first of all, that it must be a peace without victory. * * * Victory would mean peace forced upon the loser, a victor's terms imposed upon the vanquished. It would be accepted in humiliation, under duress, at an intolerable sacrifice, and would leave a sting, a resentment, a bitter memory upon which terms of peace would rest, not permanently, but only as upon a quicksand. Only a peace between equals can last. Only a peace the very principle of which is equality and a common participation in a common benefit.

That throws some light, Mr. President, on the definition of the Senator from Nevada of a "lasting" peace, which he reiterates and emphasizes. There is the "lasting peace" described by the President himself. This was uttered nearly two years after the Lusitania horror, after the guaranty of Belgium's neutrality had been torn up as a scrap of paper, and after two and a half years of the atrocities that have shocked the world. That was two and a half years after the use of poison gas; after the sinking of ships without a trace; after the crusifixion of Canadian soldiers and the mutilation of Scots; after the ravishment of the women of Belgium, the enslavement of their people, and the starvation of whole populations. The President says that the nation that was guilty of those atrocities must sit at the peace table as an unconquered equal.

It is all very well to say, Mr. President, that we were not at war at that time; but the people of the world had formed their judgment about the merits of this war long before that date. By their consciences and by their sense of right, by their love of freedom and of decency, they had determined for themselves the guilt of Germany; and yet the President said that Germany was not to be condemned in the terms of peace, but was to be protected as an equal.

Not only that, but the President reaffirmed this same declaration in terms eight months after we had gone into the war. On December 4, 1917, when we had been at war with Germany for eight months, before we had struck a single blow or had a cannon or an aeroplane in France, the President appeared before a joint session of Congress. For what purpose? For the strange purpose of telling the country what we were at war for. After the war had been going on for three years; after we had been in it for eight months; after a series of note writing about the Lusitania and other maritime outrages, on December 4, 1917, the President, whose policies he says must be accepted without question or consultation with Congress, appeared before Congress to inform them what the war was for. The President said:

I believe that it is necessary to say plainly what we here at the seat of action consider the war to be for.

It has seemed to be my duty to speak these declarations of purpose, to add these specific interpretations to what I took the liberty of saying to the Senate in January.

On January 22, 1917, "peace without victory."

These, Mr. President, are the addresses upon which Germany is relying; these are among the addresses to which the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. HITCHCOCK] refers, and upon which the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] bases his "humane," "lasting" peace, founded upon "justice" and a league with Germany. What are they? Says the President in the same address:

We owe it, however, to ourselves to say that we do not wish in any way to impair or to rearrange the Austro-Hungarian Empire.

No wonder they accept his terms of peace.

The President continues:

It is no affair of ours what they do with their own life, either industrially or politically. We do not purpose or desire to dictate to them in any way. We only desire to see that their affairs are left in their own hands in matters great or small.

So as to Austro-Hungary.

How as to Germany? Here is what the President said as to Germany; and I think myself that it represents the state of mind which is the impelling force back of this gradually, slowly developing scheme of things; this undefined program which Mr. Simonds says is creating great dread throughout the world:

And our attitude and purpose with regard to Germany herself are of a like kind. We intend no wrong against the German Empire.

Oh, no; it would be too harsh and cruel to commit any "wrong" against the German Empire—such a righteous Empire; such a humane people. We must be generous toward them. If their enemies should be harsh when the war is over, if France and England should attempt to look out for their interests—which I believe, so far as this war is concerned, are the interest and security of the world—the great Republic of the West must interpose and use its "high idealism," its "generosity" in international affairs, to protect Germany against any harshness. We will see that no punishment is inflicted upon those good hordes of the Kaiser who have left their trail in the blood and misery of the world on land and sea.

"We intend no wrong against the German Empire, no interference with her internal affairs." In the light of her crimes it would be interesting to know what the President would consider "wrong" in dealing with the German Empire, and whether or not a just compensation for the injury she has inflicted on mankind would be a "wrong against her."

Mr. President, it is essential to recall these declarations of policy, in view of the President's appeal for the election of none but Democrats who will leave the policies of the war in his hands without question.

So the President states to the country that if we elect a Congress of Democrats he will hold in his hand the policies of the country. So I suppose we shall take him at his word; but if he is correct about that it is well not to forget the President's views about this most important issue with which mankind has ever dealt.

Mr. President, while these terms of peace and this "humane" and "lasting" arrangement for the protection of the good German Empire are being promoted and propagated throughout the world, it is well to recall the terms of peace proposed by Germany, and I ask leave to print in the RECORD, without reading, the terms as defined by German statesmen.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the matter will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Our statesmen must in the peace negotiations be men of iron and not resemble soft wood painted iron gray. The German people mean not only to hold out but to conquer. (Count Von Reventlow.)

An indemnity which would be adequate simply to cover the cost of the war would perhaps amount to thirty billions—two billions in gold, a further four or six billions in exchange, the rest in securities. (Dr. Johann Plenge.)

Peace must assure permanently the military, economic, financial, and political interests of Germany in their widest range, including extensions of territory. (Dr. Spahn, leader of Reichstag Center.)

If we win, we must utterly destroy the power of England; we must take her colonies and her fleet. We might take the French fleet, too, and make France bear the cost of the war. Belgium could be joined to Germany. (Dr. Oppenheimer.)

The security of the Empire in a future war requires the ownership of all mines of iron ore, and to defend them the fortresses of Longwy and Verdun. (Manifesto to the chancellor.)

It is necessary to impose a mercilessly high war indemnity on France, and not forget her large colonial possessions. (Petition of German intellectuals to the Government.)

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the Preussiche Jahrbücher for July, 1918, Prof. Delbrück says:

The diplomatic offensive must go side by side with the Hindenburg offensive.

It did go side by side with it, and it has gotten away ahead of it now; the Hindenburg offensive has fallen behind, but the diplomatic offensive that Prof. Delbrück proclaims has been gaining strength day by day and is entering in as the chief issue in the election just about to be held.

It must aim not to an agreement with the English war party, but at making the war party impossible. * * * The growth of the peace parties can be so far promoted that Germany's enemies will be greatly hampered in the continuation of the war.

That is what all this is; that is the German peace offensive. I remember that one day one of the pacifists in the British House of Commons asked Mr. Andrew Bonar Law what he meant by a "peace offensive." I do not remember what his answer was, but here is the best definition I have ever seen of a peace offensive, by Prof. Delbrück, of the University of Berlin: A peace offensive is an offensive which will win over to the support of German aims the peace parties in the enemy countries—and that is what they are doing, and succeeding in a measure in doing, at the present time.

Mr. President, as an antidote to this, and in order that we may not forget, it would be well for everyone to look on page 31 of the Literary Digest of August 31, 1918, at the photograph of a group of German soldiers looking on in bestial gratification at the death agonies on the noble countenance of a crucified Canadian soldier.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that the letter of President Wilson of October 25, 1918, addressed to the American people and asking them to stand by him by electing a Democratic House and Senate, was printed in the RECORD. I now ask unanimous consent that the answer to that letter, signed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], Congressman GILLETT, Congressman FESS, and myself, may be also printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? There being none, that order will be entered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Some time ago the President said "politics is adjourned." Now, in the closing days of the campaign—delayed by the united efforts of all parties for the liberty loan—now, when all public meetings have been given up owing to the influenza epidemic, the President sends out a direct party appeal calling upon his countrymen to vote for Democrats because they are Democrats, without any reference to whether such Democrats have been or are in favor of war measures and have a war record which deserves support.

The voters of Michigan, to take a single example, are called upon to support Mr. Henry Ford—notorious for his advocacy of peace at any price, for his contemptuous allusions to the flag, for the exemption of his son from military service—on the sole ground that he will blindly support the President. The President is quite ready to admit that Republicans are loyal enough to fight and die, as they are doing by the thousands; loyal enough to take up great loans and pay enormous taxes; loyal enough to furnish important men at no salary on some of the great war boards in Washington. But they are not loyal enough, in the President's opinion, to be trusted with any share in the government of the country or legislation for it.

SUGGESTED CHANGES.

If the Republican Party controls the House, we can point out some of the things they will do. They will replace Mr. DENT, of Alabama, at the head of the Military Affairs Committee, with Mr. JULIUS KAHN, to whom the administration was obliged to turn for assistance to take charge of and carry the first draft bill against Mr. DENT'S opposition.

They will put a Republican at the head of the Ways and Means Committee, as leader of the House, instead of Mr. KITCHIN, of North Carolina, who voted against the war. They will give the country a Speaker who did not oppose and would not oppose a draft bill and would never say, as Speaker CLARK did, that "there is precious little difference between a conscript and a convict."

Although the Republicans of the House are in the minority, they cast more actual votes on seven great war measures than the Democratic majority was made to do. What is the record of the Senate? On 51 roll calls on war measures between April 6, 1917, and the 29th of May, 1918, the votes cast by Republicans in favor of such measures were 72 per cent, while only 67 per cent of the votes cast on the Democratic side were in favor of such measures. Those were the President's own measures. Does that record look as if we had hampered him? The Republican Party in Congress has supported the administration policies since the war with a unanimity and an absence of criticism unprecedented in the party history.

DOMESTIC QUESTIONS.

There are some domestic questions where we should undoubtedly differ from the course pursued by the administration. We should not, for example, fix a price on the farmer's wheat and leave the planter's cotton untouched. Another domestic question in which the Republican Party believes thoroughly is economic preparation for the coming of peace, and they are clearly of the opinion that the Congress of the United States should not be excluded from that great task.

This is not the President's personal war. This is not the war of Congress. It is not the war of the Democratic or the Republican Party. It is the war of the American people. It is more. It is the war of the United States, of the allied powers, of the civilized world, against the barbarism of Germany. In this great burden and responsibility the Republican Party, representing more than half the citizenship of the country, demands its rightful share.

If the Republican Party is intrusted with power in either or both Houses, it will do everything possible to drive forward the war and hasten the day of victory. The President speaks of the necessity of telling the plain truth. That the Republican Party in control of Congress would do, for they have no friends to shield. And they will do more. They will give all the money to the last dollar necessary to sustain our armies and our fleets, but they will check the waste now going on of the money given by the most generous people on the face of the earth.

EFFECT OF ELECTION ABROAD.

The President speaks of the effect of the election abroad. He says that there they understand the meaning of elections. They do, and they will know that if the Republicans have a majority in Congress the war will be pressed with greater vigor than ever before. They are quite aware that the power of the Senate is equal to that of the President in the consummation of peace by treaty. They well know that the Republican Party stands for a victorious peace and the overthrow of Prussian militarism. That knowledge will not depress the spirit of our allies or encourage the Government of Germany.

The Republican Party believes that the question of surrender should be left to Marshal Foch, to the generals and to the armies in the field. When they report that Germany has laid down her arms the United States and the allies should then impose their terms. Will that knowledge cause dejection to those who are fighting with us? All the world knows that the Republican Party is opposed to negotiations and discussion carried on in diplomatic notes addressed to the German Government. The Republican Party stands for unconditional surrender. There is no Republican creed so short that there is not room in it for those two words.

HENRY CABOT LODGE,
REED SMOOT,
Chairman Republican Senatorial Committee.
FREDERICK H. GILLETT,
SIMEON D. FESS,
Chairman Republican Congressional Committee.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

CONSOLIDATION OF NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it has been impossible for the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to be in the Chamber to-day. There is a bill on the Calendar which the Comptroller of the Currency is desirous of having passed at a very early date. I refer to calendar No. 344, being the bill (H. R. 10205) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations. I told the Senator from Oklahoma that I would call up the bill to-day and ask unanimous consent for its consideration. I am authorized by the Senator from Oklahoma to say that he hopes that the Senate will disagree to the five slight amendments which were reported by the committee, so that the bill will not have to go back to the House, but may go to the President direct and be signed. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. President, for the consideration of the bill to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 10205) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations, which had been reported from the Committee on Banking and Currency with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I think the bill has already been read. I ask that the five amendments reported by the committee be disagreed to.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What are the amendments?

Mr. SMOOT. I will tell the Senator. They are mere verbal changes. The first amendment is to insert the words "of the" on page 1, in line 6. The next amendment is on page 2, line 4, to strike out the word "paper" and insert "newspaper"; the next amendment is on page 2, line 7, after the word "meeting" to insert "and after posting such notice in at least three public places in the town"; the next amendment is to strike out the words "who has not voted for such consolidation"; and the last amendment is on page 3, line 18, to strike out the word "real." The rejection of the amendments will really make no difference, and the only reason why I ask that the amendments be disagreed to is, as I have stated, in order that the bill may not have to go back to the House, but may go direct to the President for his signature.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendments.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 6, after the word "either," it is proposed to insert the words "of the," so as to read: "consolidate into one association under the charter of either of the existing banks."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 4, after the words "in a," to strike out "paper" and insert "newspaper."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 7, after the word "meeting," to insert "and after posting such notice in at least three public places in the town," so as to read: "and after sending such notice to each shareholder of record by registered mail at least 10 days prior to said meeting and after posting such notice in at least three public places in the town."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 2, line 15, to strike out "who has not voted for such consolidation."

The amendment was rejected.

The next amendment was, on page 3, line 18, after the word "property," to strike out "real."

The amendment was rejected.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BRIDGE BILLS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably with amendments the bill (S. 4966) to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakeley Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala., and I submit a report (No. 604) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The amendments were, on page 1, line 4, before the word "bridge," to insert "construction of the"; and, on page 2, after line 13, to insert as a new section the following:

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for the commencement and completion of the construction of the bridge, or bridges, and trestles, authorized by the act entitled "An act to authorize the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, to construct a bridge over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay, and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakeley Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.," approved October 5, 1917, is extended three years from and after the 5th day of October, 1917.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "A bill to extend the time for the construction by the Gulf Ports Terminal Railway Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, of a bridge or bridges and trestles over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay, and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakeley Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala."

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce, I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 7637) to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg., and I submit a report (No. 602) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11709) granting the consent of Congress to the village and township of Halstad, Norman County, Minn., and the township of Herberg, Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States, and I submit a report (No. 603) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill granting the consent of Congress to Norman County, Minn., and Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States."

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11948) granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across Pearl River, at or near the north line of section 22, township 8 north, range 21 west, west of the basis meridian, in the land district east of Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi, and I submit a report (No. 605) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11949) to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La., and I submit a report (No. 600) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12631) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Camp Grant, and I submit a report (No. 607) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate, without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably without amendment the bill (H. R. 12773) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county, and I submit a report (No. 601) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia submitted the following report:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 28.

T. P. GORE,
W. S. KENYON,
HOKE SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. F. LEVER,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, perhaps I should state that the conferees were not only unable to agree, but the conferees on the part of the House declined to consider any kind of provision on this subject. We invited them to say what kind of legislation they wanted; to say in what way, if any, they objected to the Pomerene amendment; to give us something that they did think would meet the situation. Their attitude, however, was that they would not consider an amendment on this subject placed upon an Agricultural appropriation bill, and that the only possible way to obtain legislation would be through the District Committee. For this reason it is useless to ask for a further conference. While they asked for the conference, they declined to confer.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, there has not been a quorum of the House back since that time, and the House has had no opportunity to express itself on the conference report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am intensely anxious to do something to protect especially those of smaller incomes in the city of Washington, and I am willing to take any course with reference to it that can possibly help us obtain legislation. I think there is a grievous wrong going on, especially in the charges that are being put upon the workers here in Washington with limited resources.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield again?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator think that if this matter should lie upon the table until a quorum does return to the House, the House might then instruct its conferees to recede?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not ask that it be acted upon to-day. I think at least it should go over until Thursday.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand; but I am asking the Senator's opinion as to whether that might not be the case.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I had hoped so.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. President, I want to say here that from what I understand, after talking with the chairman of the House Committee on Agriculture, there is no possible chance of the House instructing its conferees to recede.

Mr. LENROOT. I have very strong hopes that that is not the case.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I shall not make any motion regarding the matter this afternoon, but I hope that the Senate will take action on Thursday.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. While the subject is up, there is just one word more that I should like to suggest. It occurs to me that if the House would name different conferees on the bills pending before the District Committee the Senate certainly would be willing to name different conferees, and we might bring about a conference in that way. I do not know how the Senator from Ohio would feel about that. I know his deep interest in the legislation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am very deeply interested in it, and I am very much disappointed to hear the opinion expressed that the conferees can not get together. I have shared the opinion of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], to the effect that if there had been a quorum in the House they might have entertained a different view from that which is entertained by the present conferees on the Agricultural bill. I am willing to do anything within reason to get legislation which will be effective. If that can be done by other conferees I shall say "Amen" to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, recognizing the Senator from Ohio as the Senator who has done such splendid work upon this subject, I am willing to follow him now in any line that he suggests. I am willing to vote for any action that he supports with regard to the present amendment or any line of conduct that he thinks is wise.

Mr. POMERENE. It is true, Mr. President, that I gave a great deal of attention to this bill, and I am keenly interested in it; but I do not believe I am any more interested in it than every other Senator in this body, because I know that they feel that a gross outrage is being perpetrated upon the temporary residents of this city and of this District by some of these landlords.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). The conference report will lie on the table.

THE COAL SITUATION.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a statement issued by the United States Fuel Administrator bearing upon the coal situation. It is desired that it be printed in the RECORD, and without asking to have it read I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the RECORD for the information of the public generally.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there any objection to this question of the Senator from Ohio? The Chair hears none and permission is granted.

The statement referred to is as follows:

STATEMENT BY UNITED STATES FUEL ADMINISTRATOR HARRY A. GARFIELD.

"As winter approaches the people of the United States desire to know what they may expect from the Fuel Administration, and they have a right to know. The experiences of last winter naturally tend to make people apprehensive. While it is not likely that the coming season will be as severe as last, the Fuel Administration has proceeded on the assumption that it might be and has made its plans accordingly. The following are the facts presented in briefest form:

"First, as to domestic fuel. Anthracite (hard) coal is the domestic fuel of the East. Hard coal all comes from eastern Pennsylvania. To prevent long hauls and unnecessary use of railroad locomotives and cars for the transportation of coal, the country has been zoned. The Railroad and Fuel Administrations have united in setting up the zones. In a general way coal must be taken from the nearest fields, although certain kinds of coal necessary for special manufacturing purposes can not be thus limited. The result of this arrangement is that people nearest (radius hard to define) the anthracite coal fields and all of the distant New England points are to burn hard coal. This happens not to be regarded as a hardship. But even if it were, this rule would have to be enforced. Also, because of the possibility of transporting coal by water to upper Lake ports, a considerable part of the Northwest is supplied with anthracite, while the allotment to certain other States has been cut down to a fraction only of the normal supply, the balance being made up with bituminous (soft) coal.

"The program of distribution of domestic coal for the entire year calls for 51,258,029 tons (this includes coal for manufacturing and for gas—about 5,000,000 tons in all) of anthracite coal, which is 2,062,323 tons more than were distributed during 1916. (Nineteen hundred and sixteen was the last normal year for coal distribution. It was, therefore, taken as the basis in making the allotment for 1918.) Up to the 1st of October, 26,388,151 tons had been delivered. (In the Northwest the coal has either been delivered or is en route.) The following schedule tells the story in brief:

States.	Allotment for the year in tons.	Delivered Oct. 1.
New England	10,331,000	5,537,779
Middle Atlantic	31,314,754	15,246,331
Virginia	102,400	73,640
Western	3,481,945	1,835,398
Northwestern	2,374,000	[1] 1,701,561
Canada	3,602,000	1,963,700
Export (principally Newfoundland and Cuba)	51,930	29,742
Total	51,258,029	26,388,151
Allotment for half year	25,629,014

[1] The coal for the northwestern district has either been distributed or is en route.

"It will thus be seen that to October 1 the Fuel Administration had exceeded its program of deliveries by 759,136 tons.

"But some dealers have found themselves without a supply of anthracite and this has inconvenienced a great many people. This was due to the fact that some dealers had moved, others had started in business this year, while still others, some because of a break in trade relations and others because their credit was not good, had not received their usual supply. This difficulty has, however, largely been overcome, so far as communities, if not individual dealers, are concerned.

"Under the arrangement now in existence, if any domestic consumer finds himself short of coal he should apply to his local fuel administrator, giving him the name of a dealer to whom he has applied and the circumstances of his case. The local administrator will present the matter to the State fuel administrator, who will issue the necessary directions to the anthracite distribution committee.

"Second, as to bituminous coal:

"While anthracite is the domestic fuel of the East, the rest of the country depends upon bituminous coal. About 75,000,000 tons of bituminous coal are used annually by domestic consumers, including apartment houses, but not including coal used for making gas and electricity. The facts as to supply are given below in connection with the industrial use of bituminous coal. I need say here only in brief that the several parts of the country are now well supplied with bituminous coal for domestic use. It must not, however, be understood that domestic users can afford to waste either hard or soft coal. Rigid economy is necessary. If the instructions issued from time to time by the Fuel Administration for the care of furnaces and the heating and ventilation of houses are followed, we shall come through the winter without hardship.

"Again, let me call attention to the fact that more domestic coal is now in the hands of consumers and dealers than at the corresponding period in normal years.

"Industry is chiefly dependent upon soft coal. Therefore its consumption has been much more largely increased by the war than the consumption of hard coal. The following schedule tells the story of increased production of soft coal since 1913:

Production of bituminous coal in the United States.

Year.	Short tons.	Increase over previous year, tons.
1913	478,435,297	[1]
1914	422,703,970	55,731,327
1915	442,624,426	19,920,453
1916	502,519,682	59,895,256
1917	551,790,563	49,270,881
1918 (estimated)	600,000,000	48,000,000

[1] Decrease.

Increase 1918 over 1916: 122,000,000 (approximate).

"The enormous increase for the present year has been made possible by cordial cooperation between the three agencies involved, namely, the mine workers and operators, the Railroad Administration, and the Fuel Administration. What is our situation to-day? The coal year begins April 1. During the first six months, to October 1, we had produced 37,000,000 tons bituminous more than we produced in the corresponding period last year. By produced I mean placed in railroad cars and delivered either as coal or coke. Coal is not produced in any commercial sense until it has been dug from the mine and delivered on board railroad cars.

"What the public wishes to know is whether this coal is being distributed in a way to meet the needs of the country and whether we have been farsighted enough to stock coal against the winter's need. The important item here is, How much coal have we managed to store up? Briefly, the answer is, More than ever before. Taking the country as a whole, we have in stock coal sufficient for eight weeks. Obviously stock piles must be greatest at points farthest from the mines.

"Never until the present year has an attempt been made to ascertain the stocks on hand. The statistical bureau of the Fuel Administration receives a weekly post-card report from each of the great and most of the small industrial plants and coal dealers of the country. Tens of thousands of small manufacturing establishments are included in the weekly returns of public utilities supplying them with power and light. Each card states the amount of coal on hand at the beginning of the week, the amount received and the amount used during the week, and the balance on hand at the end of the week. Over an average of more than 10,000 cards are received and tabulated daily. Errors and omissions are diligently followed up. Final tabulation of these reports are, at the outside, only six weeks behind. The following schedule tells the story of requirements for the year, the deliveries for the first six months, and the stocks on hand in the several States:

	Net tons.
Total estimated requirements of bituminous coal, Apr. 1 to Sept. 30, 1918, without allowance for conservation or curtailment of industry	361,730,000
Production of bituminous coal, Apr. 1 to Sept. 30, 1918	312,282,000

Number of weeks' stock of bituminous coal on hand Oct. 1 or industrial, public utilities, and coal dealers.

States.	Weeks.
Alabama	2
Arkansas	10
Arizona	4
California	6
Colorado	4
Connecticut	17
Delaware	10
Florida	10
Georgia	6
Idaho	5
Illinois	6
Indiana	5
Iowa	6
Kansas	5
Kentucky	3
Louisiana	7
Maine	17
Maryland	5
Massachusetts	19
Michigan (upper peninsula)	20
Michigan (lower peninsula)	12
Minnesota	20
Mississippi	8
Missouri	6
Montana	5
Nebraska	4
Nevada	15
New Hampshire	18
New Jersey	10
New Mexico	4
New York	6
North Carolina	5
North Dakota	11
Ohio	6
Oklahoma	9
Oregon	3
Pennsylvania	7
Rhode Island	12
South Carolina	8
South Dakota	7
Tennessee	3
Texas	4
Utah	4
Vermont	15
Virginia	4
Washington	4
West Virginia	4
Wisconsin	9
Wyoming	5

"NOTE.—The upper peninsula of Michigan and the States of Wisconsin and Minnesota and, in part, North Dakota and South Dakota have their winter supply of coal assured through the movement of coal to the head of the Lakes, which is moving forward on schedule.

"Stocks on hand for each State are reported by industries so classified as to enable me to know whether, for example, the stocks of by-product coal are sufficiently large to meet beyond peradventure the steel requirements of the War Industries Board. In this connection, it is interesting to know that the stocks of coal for by-product coke ovens average 4 weeks, ranging from 1 week at points in the coal fields to 15 weeks supply for by-product ovens at the most distant points, such as at Duluth and Superior.

"Although accurate statistics have never been taken until this year manufacturers agree that never before have we had larger stocks of coal on hand at the beginning of winter.

"The clean-coal campaign, inaugurated to relieve users of bituminous coal from the handicap they suffered last winter in the use of improperly graded or entirely unprepared coal, is being rigidly prosecuted. During the week ending October 26, 13 mines were ordered to cease shipping. Prior to that time 86 mines had been closed; 67 because the producers would not properly prepare their coal for shipment, and 19 because the coal produced was entirely unusable. In addition to these mines closed, several hundred mines have been ordered to cease taking coal from poor veins.

"Since the advent of the Fuel Administration, inspections numbering 15,369 have been made. The inspection force now comprises 79 United States Fuel Administration inspectors and 106 State inspectors working in cooperation with them. Mines under inspection by other governmental departments, such as the Pocahontas fields under supervision by the Navy Department, do not receive a duplicate inspection by the Fuel Administration.

"The present supply of coke is slightly less than the maximum demand of blast furnaces and war industries.

"There are at present 405 blast furnaces in the United States in shape to run; their monthly requirements being 4,250,000 tons. The blast furnaces take about 95 per cent of the total production of coke, this percentage amounting to 4,100,000 tons. The real shortage at present, due to certain number of furnaces being 'out of blast,' is about 75,000 tons per month.

"The war program demanding that the maximum number of furnaces be kept in operation, there has been but very slight accumulation of stocks. The distribution is being handled by telephone and telegraph direct from Washington, shipments being diverted as necessary to put the coke where most imperatively demanded. The failure to meet the maximum production requirements is due not to any lack of ovens but to shortage of labor at ovens and in mines having ovens.

"The oil situation is briefly this:

"The oil and natural-gas situation for this winter will probably be somewhat acute owing to the decrease in production of natural gas as compared with last year and the expected increase in consumption, and in the case of oil to the steadily increasing domestic and overseas demands.

"The successful solution of the oil problem is largely one of transportation. Tank ships are very scarce and existing pipe lines are now running practically to capacity.

"Additional pipe-line capacity is being built into the new field at Ranger, Tex., but the transporting of this oil from Gulf ports to North Atlantic ports will involve additional tank steamers not now easily available.

"It is essential to limit additional consumption wherever possible, pending construction of additional transportation facilities either in the form of pipe lines, tank ships, or tank barges.

"Oil stocks on September 1, 1917, and September 1, 1918, were, for gasoline, kerosene, gas oil, and fuel oil, as follows:

Stocks.	Gasoline and naphthas.	Kerosene.	Gas, oil, and fuel oil.
Sept. 1, 1917	6,025,000	11,600,000	11,375,000
Sept. 1, 1918	6,000,000	9,400,000	10,500,000

"As to labor. It is a remarkable fact that although 38,000,000 tons more of coal, anthracite and bituminous, have been produced in the first six months of the present coal year than in the corresponding period of 1917, there have been fewer laborers in the field; 50,000 to 60,000 mine workers have gone into the military service and 50,000 to 60,000 more have left the mines for more remunerative work in other fields. The response of those who have remained to the appeals of the President and of the Fuel Administration and their appreciation of the fact that the mine worker is vitally important to the soldier in the trenches, accounts, in large part, for the production results. The mine workers have merited the praise just received from Gen. Pershing by cable, 'We soldiers know that we can depend upon you to do your part as we are doing ours.' The relation of coal and steel to war is new. A hundred and fifty years ago coal and steel were relatively negligible items in war programs—that is, as compared with the soldier in the field. To bring the new relation home to the hundreds of thousands of mine workers of many nationalities and of varying degrees of familiarity with political and industrial conditions has been no small task. The Labor and Production Bureaus of the Fuel Administration deserve the greatest credit for their work in this direction.

"But labor alone can not produce coal. As stated above, coal is produced in a commercial sense only when it is dug out of the ground and loaded into cars. Coal in the mine or dumped on the ground at the mouth of the mine is of as little value as Robinson Crusoe's money. It must be transported to the bin of the consumer and to the furnace if it is to meet the need. If the Railroad Administration had not met the problem of transportation, the results achieved would not have been possible. The elimination of competitive use of tracks, terminals, and equipment—in other words, the taking over for the period of the war of the competing railroad systems and their operation under a single administrative head—has contributed more largely than any other single factor to the result obtained.

"But only of less importance was the elimination of long hauls and cross hauls, which constituted a waste of both motive power and of car tonnage. The importance of this is recognized when it is understood that more than one-third of the entire tonnage of our railroads, even in ordinary times, is used for the transportation of coal.

"From the foregoing it may be inferred that the fuel situation is so well in hand that vexing economies are no longer necessary. But this is far from true. Had less essential industries been permitted to operate without curtailment of fuel supply the stocks on hand would have been seriously reduced. We have been able to stock up because we have saved as well as because we have produced more coal than at any other time. In cooperation with other war administrations, especially with the War

Industries Board and the Food Administration, the Conservation Bureau of the Fuel Administration has made an estimated saving thus far of 12,700,000 tons of coal for the first half of the coal year, but as the saving each month is constantly increasing, there will be a much greater saving during the next six months, which includes the winter, so that it expects during the entire year to be able to report a saving of 50,000,000 tons.

"The Fuel Administration approaches the winter season well organized, with stocks of coal on hand far in excess of the stocks of other years, the report says. We are ready for an unusually severe winter, but we are still and shall continue to be dependent upon the cooperation of the people of the United States in conserving fuel and upon the several agencies concerned in the production and transportation of fuel to enable us to carry through our program to the end of the year.

"The people of the United States have demonstrated their willingness to make any sacrifice necessary, but they must be satisfied that what is asked is necessary and reasonable. The highest testimony to democracy has been furnished by the way in which the people of the United States have met the requests of the Food and Fuel Administrations, even when those requests have imported upon them personal inconvenience and sacrifice."

WHEAT AND COTTON PRICE FIXING.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, it seems that the day is to be consumed in the discussion of the address of the President and the reply of the Republican statesmen. I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to a clause in the reply of the Republican statesmen entirely sectional in its nature and not sustained by the facts.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, before the Senator proceeds, may I ask him a question outside of the matter concerning which he desires to address the Senate?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON. I believe the Senator is a member of the Military Affairs Committee, and I ask for information. Has the Senator heard anything about the Hughes report, whether or not it has been made, or will be made, or is likely to be made, or whatever has become of that report?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I have no information upon the subject except what I have seen in the press.

Mr. WATSON. No other information?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No other information.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to state what was in the press? I have not seen it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The statement was made that the report had been handed to the Attorney General Saturday afternoon, I believe.

Mr. President, I do not delight in partisan politics. I deplore sectional strife.

On Friday the Republican congressional campaign committee gave out a statement which contained the following language:

> There are some domestic questions where we should undoubtedly differ from the course pursued by the administration. We should not, for example, fix a price on the farmers' wheat and leave the planters' cotton untouched.

I deplore this appeal to sectional prejudice. I can not believe it would have been made had the facts been understood by those responsible for it.

Before giving the facts which completely answer this appeal to sectional prejudice let me protest against conceding to any branch of our Government, legislative or administrative, the right to fix the price of wheat or any other commodity and to require a producer to dispose of his property at the price fixed.

When commodities are required by the Government for public use the legislative branch of the Government can authorize, under the power of eminent domain, commodities to be taken for public use; but even then the price can not be arbitrarily fixed by the Government. If the representatives of the Government and the owners of the commodities required for public use can not agree upon the price, provision must be made for owners of the commodities to go into court and obtain an adjudication fixing the true value of the commodities and the Government must pay the amount so fixed by the court.

No power is vested in our Government, legislative and administrative combined, to fix a price at which one citizen must dispose of his property to another citizen.

The necessities of war may justify regulation of agencies engaged in handling essential commodities, but even then all care should be exercised to avoid preventing the producer from receiving the fair price which the cost of production and the law of supply and demand would fix.

It may be that regulation has borne severely upon some commodities. Such regulation should be avoided, and if already made be modified.

Wheat is the material essential to feed our armies and the armies of our allies. A large part of the crop was essential for public use. Speculators took advantage of the opportunity to corner markets and advance greatly prices after the wheat had been sold by the farmer who produced it.

Legislation was passed to regulate grain exchanges, elevator companies, and middle men. A large appropriation was made to be used by the Food Administrator with which to make purchases, and authority was given him to sell. No claim was made in this legislation of authority to fix a maximum price for wheat.

Lest this governmental control might injure the wheat grower, the legislation provided Government guaranty to the wheat grower of a price to be fixed by certain administrative agencies, but the legislation also provided that the guaranteed price should not be less than $2 a bushel. The purpose of this guaranty was plain. Congress recognized the fact that no power existed in this Government justly to interfere with the price which the grower's wheat would bring under the law of supply and demand, taking into account also the cost of production to the wheat grower, and, as the regulations provided were required to check the speculator, it was proposed to guarantee the wheat grower from any loss as the result of these regulations.

Legislation was subsequently introduced increasing the minimum price which the Government should guarantee for wheat to two dollars and a half a bushel. Although the cotton-growing States produce but little wheat, and are large buyers of wheat, practically every Senator from those States supported the legislative provision guaranteeing two dollars and a half per bushel to the wheat growers. The fact was recognized that the wheat grower was entitled to an increased price for his wheat, due to the increased cost of production and the normal effect of the law of supply and demand upon his crop. The price guaranteed by the administration was $2.20 per bushel, approximately two and one-half times the price at which wheat sold prior to the war.

The Government did not fix a maximum price for wheat; it guaranteed a minimum price.

If the regulations applied to the conduct of grain exchanges and middlemen have prevented the wheat growers from receiving full value for their wheat, the regulation should be modified, or the Government guarantee should be increased.

Corn is our greatest agricultural product. Hay is one of the greatest. If any effort has been made to interfere with the market price of corn or hay, I do not know it.

Now, I ask your attention to cotton.

No other crop requires so much human labor, and no other labor has so advanced in price. No other crop requires the use of so much commercial fertilizers. The crop this year was 25 per cent below the normal production for the acreage planted. The increased cost of production, compared to the prewar cost, exceed that of any other agricultural product. There have been very short crops for four years. The demand exceeds the supply.

Immediately prior to the war middling lint cotton was selling at 13 cents a pound. Approximately 2,000,000 families were engaged in planting and cultivating cotton, some as the owners of land, some as tenants, and some as croppers. The families engaged in this work consisted on an average of a man, his wife, and three children—a family of five—the children, of course, working part of the time. The average production per family, after paying rent, was about 5 bales. If the farmer owned his land, the portion going to the landowner should be credited to his land; the value of the labor of the family would still be 5 bales. At 13 cents a pound this paid the family $325 a year.

It is true they raised other products and had the seed, but the incidental expenses of the farm consumed this surplus and the amount fairly to be classed as compensation for the labor was cotton of the value of $325 per year.

These wages were lower than those earned by any other class of labor in the United States. They were unreasonably low, and cotton could only have been produced and sold at the low price which it brought before the war upon a basis of labor so cheap that those engaged in it did not earn a fair livelihood.

Even before the war the farmers of the cotton-growing States had begun to realize that from other products they could earn a much better return, and they had begun to give their attention to beans, to peas, to potatoes, to corn, to oats, to stock, to cattle, and to hogs. At present prices their profits from the production of these commodities are fully as great as can be earned from cotton selling at 40 cents a pound.

The demand for labor during the past year has been great. Prices have rapidly advanced. Cotton farm labor was so low that it has been especially affected by the advance. Where labor was hired for wages those wages had to compete with wages in industries and Government plants. The tenants and croppers can not be expected to continue in cotton fields unless to them is conceded compensation approximately equal to wages earned elsewhere.

The man alone constituting a part of the family cultivating cotton could leave the farm and make in a near-by industry as much as the entire family could make at cotton selling for a figure three times as great as that at which it sold before the war.

During the present year an acreage was planted in cotton which, with a normal crop, would have produced fifteen and one-half millions of bales. All the labor was expended, up to picking time, to plant and cultivate this crop, which would have produced the number of bales named. The hot winds of July and August burned up 4,000,000 bales of cotton and reduced the crop to 11,500,000 bales The cultivation of the increased acreage, which should have produced 4,000,000 bales additional cotton, added to the cost of the cotton actually produced, or, putting it in a different way, reduced the number of bales which the average family gathered. The cost of picking cotton this year was greater than at any time during the history of cotton cultivation. It was from one and one-half to two dollars per hundred pounds, but this means pounds of cotton, seed and all, and it requires 3 pounds of cotton in the seed to make 1 pound of lint cotton, so that the lint cotton cost from 4½ cents to 6 cents per pound for picking alone.

The best information I gather from cotton culture in my own State is that the crop of this year cost, wherever labor was employed for wages, from 30 to 37½ cents per pound. Many well-informed men in the cotton section insist that the average cost of the present crop has been between 35 and 40 cents a pound.

The labor to produce wheat was fairly well paid before the war. The demand for labor at the higher prices did not affect the wheat grower as it affected the cotton grower, for the advance in price did not increase the cost of labor on the wheat farm nearly so much as it increased the cost of labor on the cotton farm. The wheat crop was a normal crop. The cotton crop was 4,000,000 bales less than the planted acreage should have produced.

Another element has entered into the increased cost of producing cotton. It is the greatly increased cost of fertilizer and the difficulty of obtaining potash at any price. Many acres of the lands used for the production of cotton are a sandy loam, which must have potash furnished by the use of commercial fertilizers or the cotton will not properly fruit.

All these elements combined to increase the cost of producing the cotton crop of 1918, and three times the prewar price is now a fair price for cotton.

Goods manufactured from cotton are selling on an average of more than three times prewar prices. Indeed, the Government has paid for supplies of goods manufactured of cotton three times prewar prices.

One-half of our cotton is shipped abroad and handled by foreign manufacturers. That manufactured in the United States is consumed about one-half by the mills in the States where cotton is grown and one-half in the mills of the balance of the country. To force down the price of lint cotton without forcing down the price of the products manufactured from lint cotton would be simply to make a present of the amount taken from the selling price, one-half to the manufacturers in foreign countries and one-half to the manufacturers in this country.

Our Republican friends might have suggested that the price of the products manufactured from cotton should be touched or fixed by the administration. If price fixing were legal and resorted to for the benefit of the people of this country, it is necessary that the price fixing should attach to the products manufactured from cotton. Mere price fixing on lint cotton would not help the great consuming public.

The cotton crop for four successive years has now been a short crop. There is every reason to believe that next year's crop will be much less than the crop of the present year. It certainly will be much less if farmers can not obtain a higher price than the present price for their cotton. The cost of production, the successive short crops, the reasonable application of the law of supply and demand justify a price of 40 cents per pound for middling lint cotton. This, of course, would mean that the lower grades of a spinable character would sell down between 35 and 40 cents per pound. Three times prewar prices for cotton would be 39 cents a pound. An advance of three for one of prewar prices on cotton, considering all the elements attaching to the present crop, would not relatively exceed the prices at which other agricultural products are selling. The ships carrying cotton across the ocean are charging ten times prewar prices.

Then, too, we should not forget that during the first year of the war, in 1914, the cotton crop was very large, the markets of the world were cut off by the war. Cotton was then left unsupported by Government action. It sold as low as 5 cents a pound, and many cotton farmers were financially ruined.

The Government has guaranteed the wheat grower about two and one-half times prewar prices for wheat. It has not undertaken to fix a price of corn, the greatest agricultural product of this country. It has not undertaken to fix the price of hay, one of the chief agricultural products of the country. The Republican manifesto should not have made a sectional attack upon the cotton grower.

Now, let us consider what the administration has done with reference to the selling price of cotton.

Unless prices improve above present selling figures, the administration has not only "touched" cotton but it has hammered down the market, causing a loss of $450,000,000 to cotton growers.

During the first few days of September cotton was selling throughout the sections where it is grown at from 38 to 39 cents a pound. It was apparent that under legitimate laws of supply and demand, together with a proper recognition of the cost of raising the crop and the probable cost and size of next year's crop, cotton would easily have sold for 40 cents a pound. It has been forced down from this price 8 cents a pound. What has done it? This fall in price is clearly attributable, whether intentional or not, to the action of the administration taken through the War Industries Board.

On September 4 the War Industries Board, through the Committee on Public Information, issued a statement that—

> The announcement of another short crop of cotton raises in acute form the problem of satisfying the needs of the Nation as well as those of the allies. * * * With the approval of the President the War Industries Board will appoint a committee to study the present situation, the problems of distribution, the marketing of low-grade cottons, and the desirability and feasibility of effecting a stabilization of the prices.

This announcement followed a rise in the price of cotton to practically 40 cents a pound. It admitted the very short crop and stabilization of prices could have meant nothing but an effort to prevent the rise of prices.

Immediately upon this announcement the price of cotton declined in so startling a way that on September 5 the chairman of the War Industries Board, through the Committee on Public Information, announced that—

> The appointment of a committee to study the conditions arising from a heavy shortage in the cotton crop must not be construed as indicating that price fixing will be a certain outcome of their efforts.

This statement indicated a purpose to let normal conditions apply to cotton and the market substantially rallied.

On September 13, through the Committee on Public Information, another publication was issued by the War Industries Board containing this statement:

> The demand for high-grade cotton, which is out of proportion to the available supply, and the fact that the Government, through early agreements with the allies, must act as a common buyer for allied purchases, make it necessary to secure some basis of distribution of all grades of cotton. * * * It is believed that by this course both the producer and the consumer will be better protected than by continuation of the present chaotic conditions of the market. The plan is to create, subject to the approval of the President, a cotton committee to devise methods for broadening the channels of distribution and use of the great stock of low grades now practically unmarketable, eliminating speculation and hoarding, and apportioning the foreign orders.

There had been no chaotic conditions of the market, except that caused by the first publication from the War Industries Board. Cotton had simply been steadily increasing in market price, as the farmer realized what the crop had cost and as purchasers and farmers realized the short amount of the crop. There had been no hoarding of any character. Farmers had just begun to gather their crop. They were just beginning to sell it. Most of the cotton was still in the field.

The announcement proceeded as follow:

> It may be part of this committee's duty to recommend basic prices on cotton. If, after investigation, it is found necessary, a fair price will be fixed.

This was a threat to prevent the law of supply and demand from applying to the price of cotton. It was a threat to disregard the high cost of producing the crop. It was undoubtedly a threat to interfere with the market by undertaking to fix a price lower than the price at which cotton was selling.

On September 27 the appointment of two committees was announced by the War Industries Board through the Committee on Public Information. These committees were to "control distribution, to buy cotton for the use of the United States Government and the allies, and to consider prices."

On September 25 a statement was issued by Charles J. Brand, chairman of the committee on cotton distribution, and on September 27 a statement was issued by Thomas Walker Page, chairman of the committee on cotton.

I request, Mr. President, that all of these announcements may be printed at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That may be done.

[See appendix.]

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It will be observed that one of these committees had authority to buy cotton for the use of the United States Government and the allies. This would seem in effect to have consolidated the purchase for England, France, Italy, Japan, and other countries uniting with us in war against Germany in a single agency, thereby eliminating all competition among the principal foreign purchasers, while nothing was done to eliminate the competition among the unorganized 2,000,000 growers of cotton, who are the sellers.

As a result of this action by the administration, cotton has been hammered down 8 cents a pound below the price at which it was selling the 1st of September. If the present price is maintained the loss to the cotton growers, as a result of the "touching" of cotton by the administration, would be $450,000,000 on this year's crop. I submit in all kindness that this procedure should not have taken place. Those in charge should still seek to rectify the mistake they have made.

Of course, the cotton farmer is not obliged to sell; but many cotton farmers produce their crop under circumstances where they can not hold it. They must take the price offered in September and October. Fortunately, I believe, a large number of cotton farmers are not compelled to sell except at prices which they feel bring to them fair compensation. I hope that nearly all of what is called "distress cotton" has been disposed of and that the producers from this time on will have a voice in fixing the price which they will receive for their labors.

I oppose a regulation which would prevent the cotton farmer from receiving the price which the cost of his crop and the law of demand and supply would bring to him, just as I would have any regulation producing such a result modified in the interests of the wheat grower.

But who has received the benefit of this action by the administration which reduced the market price of cotton? Not the Government, for it has bought no spinable lint cotton. It buys goods manufactured from lint cotton and has been paying in many instances three times prewar prices for these goods. The public has not benefited, for no effort has been made to control the prices which the public wearers of the manufactured cotton goods pay.

Manufacturers could pay 40 cents per pound for cotton and at present selling prices of manufactured goods make handsome profits. I am advised that foreign cotton manufacturers are selling their products based upon an estimated price of 50 cents per pound for lint cotton.

If the War Industries Board and their committees succeed in maintaining the present depression in the price of cotton they will make a present of $225,000,000 to foreign cotton manufacturers, but they will take the present from our own farmers.

I have said our Government has no use for lint cotton. This is true, but it does use what is called linters, out of which nitrocellulose powders and other munitions are made. After the cotton is ginned the seed are carried to the oil mills, where a fine substance not removed by the gin is scraped from the seed. This substance is called linters. It is a cotton so short and so fine that it can not be used for spinning. It is normally used for bedding, quilts, mattresses, horse collars, and like purposes.

This is the material or cotton best suited for the production of munitions and used for the manufacture of explosives and nitrocellulose powders. Lint cotton is not as desirable for these purposes as linters. Where linters can be obtained in sufficient quantity for the manufacture of munitions lint cotton is not used.

Last year our Government, together with the allies, used 875,000 bales of linters for munition purposes. This year the cotton-oil mills are scraping the seed closer than ever before and will produce over a million bales of linters. They will produce all our Government and our allies will need for munitions. This is the only cotton product purchased by our Government.

Linters could have been condemned for public use, but it was not necessary. The owners of the linters met with the representatives of the Government and agreed upon the price of 4.62 cents per pound for linters. This was not more than half the price at which they would have sold on an open market. But our Government needed them, and, instead of profiteering, they were furnished to the Government at cheaper prices, relative to their value, than any commodity which the Government is buying.

The people of the cotton-growing States are contributing a full part to destroying the Prussian menace. Their boys are in France and at the front. They have bought bonds and subscribed to every activity. I think every cotton State oversubscribed the last liberty loan. There is no sacrifice they would not make to carry the flag to complete victory. If hammering down the price of their cotton 8 cents a pound below a legitimate market price is necessary to whip the Germans, then let it be hammered down; but it is difficult to see how taking 8 cents a pound from the selling price does help whip the Germans. If these were times of peace, a cry of protest would be heard; but our country is engaged in a terrible war, and our people, where they suffer, suffer with commendable patience. They are consoled by the reflection that the burden is simply an incident of the war and the difficulty, during war, to provide regulations intended with the best motives which do not bring some unfortunate results.

Perhaps I would express myself too strongly if I said they all suffer in silence. Texas and Georgia are the two largest cotton-growing States. In each of these States there is a Republican candidate for the United States Senate. The Texas candidate makes the leading plank of his platform the failure of the Democratic administration to properly protect the interests of the cotton raiser. The Georgia candidate puts his race squarely upon the manner in which the Democratic administration has not only "touched" the price of cotton but hammered it down. He charges the Democratic administration with having depressed the price of cotton to the loss of the cotton farmer $450,000,000, and he urges the people to give him their support as a repudiation of this action by the Democratic administration.

I can not concede the wisdom of destroying competition in the purchase of commodities produced by our own citizens. I can not but hope that the War Industries Board will realize the injustice done to cotton owners and withdraw all methods calculated to depress the price.

The board was shown, when price fixing for cotton was under consideration, that no price below 40 cents a pound could be fixed with justice to the farmer. They should withdraw at once any action and all action which has caused the loss of 8 cents in the market price of cotton.

Few farmers, except those holding distress cotton, have sold their cotton at present prices. I hope that cotton owners will be able to hold their cotton until manufacturers and their representatives are willing to pay a price sufficient to compensate for the labor of producing the crop, and sufficient to encourage the production of a full crop in 1919.

In the meantime permit me to suggest to the representatives of the Republican congressional organization that they withdraw their recent statement with reference to the administration leaving cotton "untouched." I am sure unless they will withdraw it they will embarrass their candidates for the Senate in Texas and Georgia. They can not undertake to break into the Senate from wheat-growing States upon the ground that cotton has not been "touched" and at the same time elect Senators from the cotton-growing States upon the ground that "the administration has overburdened cotton."

I can not concede the wisdom of any system of regulation which takes from a commodity in the hands of its producer the legitimate price it would bring under the law of supply and demand; but I shall not discuss that branch of the subject further. I only wish to commend to the attention of the candidates for the Senate in Georgia and in Texas the recent statement, made under a misapprehension, that the Government had not touched cotton; and I should be gratified to supply copies of some of the speeches that are being made by these two candidates in criticism of what the Government has done.

APPENDIX.

[From the Committee on Public Information, Sept. 4, 1918.]

Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the War Industries Board, authorizes the following:

"The announcement of another short crop of cotton raises in acute form the problem of satisfying the needs of the Nation, as well as those of the allies, and of securing an equitable distribution for the purpose of winning the war.

"Involved in the distribution is the problem of bringing about a reasonable stabilization of prices in the interest of both the producer and the consumer. With the approval of the President, the War Industries Board will appoint a committee to study the present situation, the problems of distribution, the marketing of low-grade cottons, and the desirability and feasibility of effecting a stabilization of prices. This committee will begin activities as soon as possible and will hold conferences at convenient points in the cotton-producing States and at such other places as may be found necessary in order to give parties interested an opportunity to present their views."

[From the Committee on Public Information, Sept. 5, 1918.]

Bernard M. Baruch, chairman of the War Industries Board, authorizes the following:

"The statement issued by the War Industries Board and printed in the newspapers of Thursday relative to the appointment of a committee to study the conditions arising from a heavy shortage in the cotton crop must not be construed as indicating that price fixing will be a certain outcome of their efforts. The committee, whose personnel is now being selected, will investigate the question in all its phases and will then decide as to the advisability of going into the matter of prices. The committee will report back to the War Industries Board their findings and recommendations, upon which further action will be taken."

—

[From the Committee on Public Information, Sept. 13, 1918.]

To avoid misinterpretation of the statements made concerning the stabilization of the cotton industry, the President authorizes the following:

"The demand for high-grade cotton, which is out of proportion to the available supply, and the fact that the Government, through early agreements with the allies, must act as a common buyer for allied purchases, make it necessary to secure some basis of distribution of all grades of cotton. Based on the standard grades established by the Department of Agriculture, an effort will be made to provide a way by which the low-grade cotton will be brought to sale and use along with the high-grade cotton at reasonable and just prices.

"It is believed that by this course both the producer and consumer will be better protected than by continuation of the present chaotic conditions of the market.

"The plan is to create, subject to the approval of the President, a cotton committee to devise methods for (a) broadening the channels of distribution and use of the great stock of low grades now practically unmarketable, (b) eliminating speculation and hoarding, and (c) apportioning the foreign orders.

"It may be part of this committee's duty to recommend basic prices on cotton. If, after investigation, it is found necessary, a fair price will be fixed.

"During this investigation and in order to avoid stagnation a separate committee of three is being set up with authority to buy cotton for the use of the United States Government and the allies at prices to be approved by the President."

—

[From the Committee on Public Information, Sept. 25, 1918.]

The following statement is authorized by Charles J. Brand, chairman of the Committee on Cotton Distribution selected by the War Industries Board with the approval of the President:

"The Committee on Cotton Distribution will establish offices immediately.

"The committee plans to exercise its supervision through existing customary channels by controlling the quantity and quality of cotton used by domestic and foreign consumers. This they believe can be done without disturbing to any appreciable extent the existing facilities and organizations for marketing and distributing the crop.

"The committee will require both domestic and foreign consumers to take a fair and equitable proportion of the grades below middling."

—

[From the Committee on Public Information, Sept. 27, 1918.]

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE COTTON COMMITTEE.

The public and in particular the cotton interests are warned against giving credence to unauthorized reports, rumors, and information purporting to come from the Cotton Committee or the Committee on Cotton Distribution. All authentic information will be published over the signature of Thomas Walker Page, chairman of the Cotton Committee, or Charles J. Brand, chairman of the Committee on Cotton Distribution.

The Cotton Committee now makes the following announcement:

1. The committee will not recommend that a price be fixed on raw cotton at the present time, nor will it so recommend in any event before sufficient time has elapsed to test the effect as a stabilizing influence of the work assigned to the Committee on Cotton Distribution, unless in the meantime unexpected changes occur in the cotton market of such violence as to threaten the welfare of legitimate interests.

2. The Committee on Cotton Distribution has been organized and has been directed to effect as quickly as possible an equitable distribution of cotton as to quantity and also as to grade among both domestic and foreign manufacturers, with a special view to providing for the proper utilization of the surplus of grades below middling.

NOTE.—It is planned to accomplish this distribution by regulations applying to foreign and domestic manufacturers without interference with the usual trading between farmers and buyers or merchants.

3. All purchases both for foreign and for domestic consumption will continue to be made at market prices through the marketing and distributing agencies commonly used, unless and until the Cotton Committee shall determine and announce that a necessity has arisen for making a change.

In view of this announcement the Cotton Committee hopes that agencies engaged in the cotton industry will proceed in the normal transaction of business without uncertainty or hesitation.

THOMAS WALKER PAGE,
Chairman.

—

[From the Committee on Public Information, Oct. 10, 1918.]

ADDITIONAL REGULATIONS CONCERNING APPLICATIONS TO EXPORT RAW COTTON.

The War Trade Board announce in a new ruling (W. T. B. R. No. 265), after consultation with the Committee on Cotton Distribution of the War Industries Board, certain important changes in the regulations concerning applications to export raw cotton to all countries.

Applications to export raw cotton filed with the War Trade Board October 14, 1918, or prior thereto, which cover so-called "blanket" business and which do not relate to a specific export order will be canceled.

On and after October 14, 1918, the War Trade Board will not consider applications for licenses to export raw cotton unless the application discloses—

(a) The grade specified in terms of United States Government standards (the staple must also be stated);

(b) The existence of an actual sale contract made subject to the granting of an export license; or

(c) If no sale contract has been made, that there has been a freight allotment or engagement.

Shippers' export declarations, dated October 14, 1918, and thereafter, must show the grade and staple of cotton which is being shipped thereunder, the grades to be stated in accordance with the official standards of the United States Government.

[From the Official Bulletin of Sept. 24, 1918.]

NAME COTTON COMMITTEES TO CONTROL DISTRIBUTION, TO MAKE UNITED STATES PURCHASES, AND TO CONSIDER PRICES—SITUATION IS OUTLINED—WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD ISSUES STATEMENT INDICATING SCOPE, POWERS, AND DUTIES—THOMAS W. PAGE, OF THE TARIFF COMMISSION, CHAIRMAN—RESOLUTION IS ADOPTED FOR ALLOTMENTS TO ALL DOMESTIC AND FOREIGN CONSUMERS AS TO QUANTITY AND GRADE.

The War Industries Board in behalf of the cotton and cotton distribution committees, selected by the War Industries Board and approved by the President, authorizes the following:

On September 14 the President issued a statement in connection with the present cotton situation to the effect that a committee would be appointed to devise methods for (a) broadening the channels of distribution and use of the great stock of low grades now practically unmarketable, (b) eliminating speculation and hoarding, and (c) apportioning the foreign orders; and that it might be a part of this committee's duty to recommend basic prices on cotton, and that if after investigation it be found necessary a fair price would be fixed.

MEMBERS OF COMMITTEE.

With the approval of the President, the following have been appointed members of this committee, which has been designated the cotton committee: Thomas W. Page, vice chairman, United States Tariff Commission, Washington, D. C., chairman; from 1906 to date, professor of economics, University of Virginia; member of the United States Tariff Board, 1911 and 1912; at present member of the Tariff Commission. W. R. Beattie, Greenville, S. C., president of the Piedmont Manufacturing Co., a large cotton milling concern, and an executive officer in a group of other cotton mills. R. L. Bennett, Paris, Tex., a cotton grower and seed breeder, formerly connected with the agricultural colleges of Texas and Arkansas. Ward M. Burgess, Omaha, Nebr., a retail merchant connected with the Burgess-Nash Department Store and E. M. Smith & Co., of Omaha. Edward Farnum Greene, Boston, Mass., a cotton spinner and former president of the National Association of Cotton Manufacturers; at present treasurer of the Pacific Mills. J. C. Redmon, St. Mathews, S. C., a cotton grower and member of the State Legislature of South Carolina. M. P. Sturdivant, Glendora, Miss., an active cotton grower on a large scale, and the executive manager of a cottonseed oil mill owned and operated by planters. S. W. Weis, New Orleans, La., a cotton factor and member of the firm of Julius Weis & Co., one of the oldest in the New Orleans cotton trade. D. S. Murph, Department of Agriculture, secretary; specialist in cotton marketing and warehousing in the Bureau of Markets.

SEPARATE COMMITTEE NAMED.

The President further stated that during investigation by the cotton committee and in order to avoid stagnation a separate committee would be set up with authority to buy cotton for the use of the United States Government and the allies at prices to be approved by the President. With the approval of the President the following have been appointed members of this committee, which has been designated the committee on cotton distribution: Charles J. Brand, United States Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., chairman. Mr. Brand has been Chief of the Bureau of Markets of the Department of Agriculture since its establishment, and as such is in charge of all of the cotton handling and marketing activities of the Government, including the enforcement of the United States cotton-futures act. William L. Clayton, Houston, Tex., member of one of the large and well-known cotton firms of the Southwest—Anderson, Clayton & Co.—which operates extensively in Oklahoma and Texas; J. Temple Gwathmey, New York City, member of the firm of George H. McFadden & Bro., cotton merchants, engaged in the conduct of a large domestic and foreign business, with headquarters at Philadelphia and New York City and with branches at many points in the United States and at numerous points in foreign countries. Edward H. Inman, Atlanta, Ga. Mr. Inman was formerly a member of the well-known firm of cotton merchants, Inman, Howard & Inman, of Atlanta, but since the declaration of war he has severed his connection with that firm and has been active as a purchasing agent for the United States Government.

Messrs. Clayton, Gwathmey, and Inman are disassociating themselves from their business and will remain so disassociated as long as they continue in the service of the Government as members of this committee.

RESOLUTION ADOPTED.

After full discussion, the cotton committee unanimously passed the following:

"Resolved, That the committee on cotton distribution be authorized immediately to allot cotton as to quantity and grade to all domestic and foreign consumers, and that they also be authorized to buy cotton if and when necessary for the requirements of the United States and allied Governments.

"Resolved further, That the cotton committee feels that this will have an important effect in stabilizing prices, but in the meantime they will keep in close touch with the whole situation with a view of determining the effect of this action and whether price fixing or any other measure will be necessary."

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I might add a few words to what the Senator from Georgia has said with reference to the attitude of the cotton growers and the cotton situation.

According to the figures, as I gather them, it would seem that the Government has taken about 2,000,000 bales of linters at $25 per bale less than the market price, the growers consenting thereto, thereby contributing $50,000,000 to the Government. In addition to that, my information is that the producers sold at the call of the Government 10,000,000 tons of cotton seed at $20 per ton less than the normal price, which would be a total contribution of $200,000,000. Consequently, it can not be successfully charged anywhere that the cotton growers have not been patriotic by reason of anything they have said or done in connection with this movement which has so seriously affected the market price of their product.

In addition to that, there have been some other grounds of complaint. The demand for the long-staple cotton, for instance, known as the sea-island cotton, has been somewhat reduced by reason of orders limiting the manufacture of automobile tires.

There is a large quantity of last year's crop of long-staple cotton on hand, and the new crop is now coming in. Its chief competitor is the Egyptian cotton. Notwithstanding the shortage of tonnage, the Government has imported this year 80,000 bales, of 750 pounds each, of Egyptian cotton to compete with an oversupply of long-staple cotton produced in our own country, in our own markets, leaving on hand now a quantity of the long-staple cotton for which there is practically no demand at all. I merely mention this, not that I can see how the harm already done can be cured but because I hope these conditions will be corrected and this injustice to our producers avoided in future when the matter is thoroughly understood, and by way of showing that the cotton grower should not be placed in the attitude of unreasonably or unpatriotically protesting against any Government action in the direction of control or regulation of the price, or steps of that sort, in respect to a product which is of great value and importance to the whole country, the effect of which has been to cause the price to go below the cost of production. I would rather have the price determined absolutely by the Government than to have it fixed by speculators and spinners, aided in their purpose by threat or agitation of governmental interference.

Now, Mr. President, speaking further with reference to the subject that has been so extensively discussed here to-day—a large amount of the time taken perhaps being uselessly consumed, but the discussion being indulged in with considerable liberality—I would say this:

The people of this country understand that the President was right in the beginning; he has been right all the time; and he is right to-day on these great questions. The national affairs of supreme importance to this country, the most vital and momentous in all its history, have been successfully conducted up to this time, and there is no question but that the President has the unstinted, absolute confidence of the people of every portion of the country. I am going to dismiss that subject by asking to have inserted in the RECORD, without reading, a clipping from the Florida Times-Union, an editorial of October 14, entitled "Leave it to the President."

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DREW in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the Florida Times-Union of Monday, Oct. 14, 1918.]

LEAVE IT TO THE PRESIDENT.

For a year we have been told to leave everything to the President, and in obedience to popular demand he has been given powers that the Constitution never contemplated as being intrusted to the Executive. Even before we went into the war the majority of the newspapers treated support of the President as loyalty to the Nation. Now is the time of all others to repeat this injunction and insist on it. Now the Constitution commands it, for we are now facing a situation in which under the Constitution the President must take the lead.

He has the treaty-making power, though the Senate must confirm his acts. This the Constitution says. He sees the whole situation and has intelligent plans embracing the whole scope of the issues fought out in the war. He alone has such plans. When he looks on this war and the results that will accrue from it he looks not as a man but as the embodiment of American sane aspirations. His position has required him to give his whole mind to the conflict and to the problems to be settled by it, and no other man in the United States has held a position that made any such requirements.

Different Senators and Representatives have given their attention to different phases of the struggle. The Ways and Means Committee had to provide money, but it had nothing to do with the military conduct of the war. The Committee on Military Affairs acted in an advisory capacity as to the conduct of the war, but it had nothing to do with financing it except as its members individually voted on measures proposed by the Ways and Means Committee of the House or passed on by the Finance Committee of the Senate.

The Secretary of War, the Secretary of the Navy, and the members of the various boards have been doing important work in their respective fields, but their fields were circumscribed, and even in them they were working under the President, whose field was the whole war and all the problems growing out of it.

The President occupies a position that prompts him to decide from reason and divests him of passion. A man so situated may reasonably be expected to reach decisions that will be right for the present and beneficent for the future. It is President Wilson's move. Don't interfere with the skill of his play.

WOODEN AND CONCRETE SHIPS.

Mr. FLETCHER. On another subject of very great public interest there have been some comments in the newspapers recently in regard to the program of the Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation, and intimations that in some respects they are about to abandon a part of that program. There have been some criticisms with reference particularly to the wooden ship. Claims have been made that it is not giving satisfaction; that the cargo space, the construction of the ship, and some details in connection with the wooden ship, are creating a situation that calls for some hesitation and halting on the part of the Emergency Fleet Corporation with respect to the further construction of wooden ships.

I am not going to take the time of the Senate at this late hour with a discussion of the wooden ship. The building of that kind of ship has been going on for some 2,000 years. It is a perfectly well-established standard of construction, the wooden ship as well as the steel ship, and it is a very late day now to find fault with that kind of vessel which has built countries and built empires and built cities and carried the commerce of the world for all of these years. I am going to ask, however, that there may be inserted in the RECORD, without reading, an article appearing in the Emergency Fleet News of October 17, under the title of "Hurricane Tests Coyote's Mettle." The Coyote is one of the Ferris type of wooden ships, and this article shows the experience of that ship under most exacting conditions. I ask to have it inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HURRICANE TESTS "COYOTE'S" METTLE—FIRST FERRIS TYPE ON CARGO TRIP IS HANDLED ROUGHLY IN SEVERE STORM.

Weathering a hurricane which was accompanied by the highest seas known in certain North Atlantic islands since 1899 the wood steamship Coyote, product of the Foundation Co. Kearny yard, came from her first cargo-carrying voyage with highest honors and is given a report ranking her as an excellent seagoing vessel by Thomas W. Clarke, traveling engineer of the division of wood-ship construction, Emergency Fleet Corporation.

The Coyote bears several distinctions. She is the first of the fleet corporation's design of wood ships—the Ferris type—to make a voyage with cargo; she is the first wood ship turned out in an Atlantic coast shipyard; the first constructed at the Foundation Co.'s yard; she was the first equipped with machinery at the Lord Construction Co.'s yard, Providence, R. I.; she had the deepest draft ever taken into the harbor of the North Atlantic island visited—23 feet 5 inches—and carried the largest cargo that ever entered that port, 3,032 tons of Pocahontas coal, which was sent from an Atlantic port to a coaling station, where it was needed badly.

HIT BY ANOTHER SHIP.

The hurricane which broke while the Coyote was in the harbor was terrific in force and did considerable property damage ashore. In the severe wind and the heavy seas, which at times rose 30 feet high over the reefs encircling the islands, another vessel tied up near the Coyote broke its moorings and crashed into the latter. The Coyote stood the storm well, according to the engineer's report, and the test was regarded as an excellent one to disclose the staunchness and seaworthiness of the vessel.

At times during the storm the wind reached a force of 10 Beaufort scale and a velocity of more than 90 miles an hour, according to the captain's log book. A stone sea wall, 200 feet astern of the Coyote, which had withstood the tempests and hurricanes since the big storm of 1899, was washed away in places and large bowlders were carried as far as 100 feet inland by the rush of the water. Houses were unroofed, windows blown in, and in several places the shore outlines were changed by the heavy erosion of sand and sea. Several small craft in the harbor were dashed to pieces in the fury of the hurricane. During the height of the hurricane two vessels fouled the Coyote's anchors, which fortunately held fast, enabling these vessels to ride out the storm in comparative safety instead of being swept to destruction on the reefs.

After being ashore 36 hours, the Coyote returned to this country under her own steam. On the return she carried no cargo. In his report, presented to James O. Heyworth, manager of the Wood Ship Division, Engineer Clarke says the Coyote put out to sea August 21 with 3,032 tons and 729 pounds of coal as cargo and about 275 tons of bunker coal. The crew numbered 40.

On the second day out reports were received of submarines operating about 170 miles north and the Coyote ran at night without lights, with a change of watches in the crow's nest every two hours. Every precaution was taken by the captain and crew. However, nothing occurred to cause uneasiness, and without any unusual experiences, except slight trouble with the pumps and steering gear, land was sighted soon after breakfast hour on the morning of August 25. At noon the vessel anchored.

Upon reporting to the signal station by wigwag, the Coyote was ordered to proceed into the harbor. The pilot refused to take the vessel in, saying that there was only 24 feet of water in the channel and that the vessel then drew 23 feet and 5 inches. Capt. John J. Fitzgerald refused to take the responsibility over the pilot's pretest. Although the authorities threatened to have the pilot broken for his refusal, he persisted, and in the morning a new pilot was taken on and the Coyote entered the harbor successfully.

FIND SUFFICIENT WATER.

It was found that, due to a high tide caused by a favorable wind, the depth of the channel was more than 24 feet and no trouble was experienced.

For nine days the Coyote lay discharging her cargo ashore. On September 4 a heavy gale began to blow, which later turned into one of the worst hurricanes that the island had seen in years. Capt. Fitzgerald prepared for increasing bad weather by doubling his lines and running others. Late in the afternoon a schooner parted moorings and bore down on the Coyote. Her jib boom struck the Coyote, causing the schooner to swing to port and drift down alongside another vessel also ashore at this time.

In the collision with the schooner the Coyote's flagstaff taffrail stanchions and rail on the gun platform were carried away, the after-gun lookout station demolished, the cradle of the afterport boom carried away, and a big hawser leading to the mooring buoy off the port quarter was parted.

With support from the buoy severed the Coyote was driven by the heavy wind and furious sea violently against the coal jetties, which were crushed into a mass of débris and the vessel washed ashore, where at times she listed almost 40°. The other vessel had early in the storm drifted ashore about a ship's length ahead of the Coyote and was hard aground.

At 8 p. m. the Coyote was laying against the bank, pounding slightly. By midnight the wind changed to southeast by east, accompanied by a violent rain. The storm was still in full force, and shortly before daybreak the schooner drifted alongside. Fenders were put out to prevent chafing, but they were unsuccessful, and the schooner chafed the bow of the Coyote, tearing some splinters from the planking. During the afternoon the storm began to abate and the sky showed signs of clearing.

By noon of September 6 the storm was well over and the Coyote continued to discharge its cargo. Late the next night the stern was cleared and pulled into deep water, but the bow still held, and the effort was abandoned till the next tide. Early the next forenoon the vessel got clear and hauled into deeper water.

On September 12, having discharged all her cargo, the Coyote took her departure.

The first day out the ship encountered heavy swells, but she rolled easily and made good weather, considering that she was light and had no ballast.

The next day in the Gulf Stream, with strong head winds and rough confused sea, a good opportunity was given of judging the seaworthiness of the vessel under adverse conditions during pitching and rolling.

STANCH CONSTRUCTION SHOWN.

"We hear absolutely no sound, demonstrating that the ship is of very stanch construction," reads a paragraph from Engineer Clarke's report.

"The ship seems to be a good sea boat, both loaded and light," says the captain's report.

On September 16 the Coyote anchored at an Atlantic port and later went into dry dock, where an examination disclosed that the damage sustained in the hurricane was superficial.

Summarizing his conclusions on the Coyote, Engineer Clarke says:

"From observations made on this vessel during a period of from August 20 until October 3, I am of the opinion that the vessel is an excellent design, is stanch and seaworthy. I have seen her in all kinds of weather and find her a dry vessel, i. e., not taking much water on deck. Water sweeps across the well decks, forward and aft, but this comes from the freeing ports, which are not fitted with doors. The sea did not come over the bulwark rail.

"Considerable trouble was had freeing the vessel's bilges from water, but this was due to the immense amount of shavings, chips, and other refuse which was evidently left in the bilges, and can be overcome with the proper arrangement of valves and piping. Bilge pumps are of ample capacity if the bilge suctions are kept free and the water can reach the pumps.

"The engine is excellent design, operates easily and well, and at no time showed any sign of heating. The engines operated on the entire voyage without apparent thumping or noise, except when boilers were priming.

"The sanitary system is fair. Refrigerator and electric-light plants are fair.

"The vessel was very stanch, both loaded and light, as measurements taken across the deck and fore and aft for alignment and sag show.

"She is a good cargo carrier, and although she has a seemingly small storage space abaft the engines when loaded she trims very well. If her Plimsoll mark is located, as the data in the possession of the technical department shows, this vessel can easily carry 3,500 tons of coal if her holds were trimmed full. This would probably bring her down to the Primsoll mark.

"All the faults in this vessel are matters which can be easily corrected, and when this is done in this and other Ferris type ships I feel sure we will have as fine a cargo carrier of her type as has ever been operated—a boat we can all feel proud of—and which, I am sure, is going to be a big factor in winning the war."

The following message on the Coyote's trip was sent to Franklin Remington, president of the Foundation Co., by Mr. Schwab, upon receiving a report of the voyage from Mr. Remington:

"The record of the Coyote in surviving a hurricane is certainly one to be proud of, and she has proved her stanchness. I wish to congratulate you on the good workmanship."

Mr. FLETCHER. There is another kind of construction which the Shipping Board or the Emergency Fleet Corporation has entered upon which may be regarded in some respects as experimental. No doubt the building of concrete boats up to a thousand tons or such a matter has been an experience that is quite satisfactory in many respects, highly indorsed, but when you get to the larger ship, 5,000 tons and above, I say you enter a field somewhat experimental when it comes to building ships of reinforced concrete.

I have a telegram, however, with regard to one of these ships built on the Pacific coast. Her first voyage was from San Francisco with cargo to Vancouver. She encountered rough weather on that trip, but with very few exceptions seems to have stood it quite successfully. I refer to the Faith—5,000-ton concrete ship. There were some matters of not much consequence which needed some correction and they were promptly attended to. Then the ship sailed from San Francisco to Chile and has recently returned from Chile with a cargo of nitrate, which she discharged at New Orleans. Regarding the experience of that ship I have a telegram from the Portland Cement Association, under date of October 21, which I will ask to have inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MYERS in the chair). Without objection, it is so ordered.

The telegram referred to is as follows:

CHICAGO, ILL., October 21, 1918.

Hon. DUNCAN U. FLETCHER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

A. P. Denton, our district engineer, Dallas, telegraphs: Inspected Faith, New Orleans, yesterday. She arrived recently. Cargo of nitrates from South America. Most noticeable feature, almost total absence of sweating. Careful examination revealed no cracks in beams or girders due to shear or diagonal tension. Officers enthusiastic over seaworthiness, ease of handling.

PORTLAND CEMENT ASSOCIATION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have also an article entitled "Great Britain is building concrete ships," which appeared in the Engineering News-Record of New York of September 26, bearing also on the question of concrete ships, which I desire to insert in the RECORD.

[From Engineering News-Record, New York, Sept. 26, 1918.]

GREAT BRITAIN IS BUILDING CONCRETE SHIPS.

The yards in which reinforced-concrete ships and barges are being built are multiplying in the British Isles. A recent issue of the Times Engineering Supplement states that in the west and south and on the northeast and northwest coasts of England, on the Clyde and Aberdeen in Scotland, and near Belfast in Ireland, yards are under way where some 220 vessels are in course of construction. These represent a total of about 200,000 tons of shipping and a capital outlay estimated at nearly £4,000,000, apart from the cost of the land and the shipyard plants. On the designs adopted the saving of steel is about 70,000 tons, as compared with the amount which would be required for steel ships of the same carrying capacity.

The British Admiralty gave every encouragement to the private firms which were undertaking this new industry. Following the announcement of Government aid, 70 or 80 ways were laid down immediately. On many places waste land and bare stretches of shore were rapidly converted into busy centers. Matters have advanced so far that at the present time several vessels of 1,000 tons dead-weight carrying capacity are on the point of completion.

The vessels at present in course of construction for the comptroller general of merchant shipbuilding comprise barges of 1,000 tons dead-weight carrying capacity and steam tugs of 750 horsepower. In addition, six cargo steamships of 1,150 tons dead-weight are being built for private ownership, and designs have been prepared for steamships of much larger size, which, it is understood, will be constructed after the pressing needs of the Government for smaller craft have been sufficiently met. All the barges and steam tugs, 187½ feet and 125 feet in length, respectively, now under construction in controlled shipyards are being built in accordance with the specifications and general drawings issued by the admiralty department of merchant shipbuilding. The details of the hull and of the reinforced-concrete construction are, however, in accordance with working drawings prepared by or for the various shipbuilding firms.

Most of the vessels are being molded on the monolithic principle embodying systems of reinforcement which have been used extensively for land structures. In some cases, however, the precast-slab method of hull building has been adopted, and novel systems of reinforcement have been designed. Again, in some instances, the bottom or the whole of the hull is being built on the cellular principle, while in others the hull consists of a single shell stiffened by transverse frames at frequent intervals.

Mr. President, there has been some discussion in the press and among shipowners with respect to the machinery going into these ships. We are turning them out now very rapidly; we are now building something like 300,000 tons a month, and there has been some question about our ability to furnish the engines and the boilers and the machinery for the ships as fast as needed.

Quite a few experts entitled to very serious consideration and respect have advocated the use of a different style of machinery, favoring the motor for ships, the Diesel engine. There is an editorial in the publication called Motorship, of October 19, 1918, under the heading of "Post-war Marine Commerce," which bears on this question of the motive power. It presents a matter which ought to be investigated and considered, and which, as the Motorship people believe, and a great many others believe, will have an important bearing on problems we must meet in connection with our new merchant marine. I ask to have that editorial inserted in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

POSTWAR MARINE COMMERCE.

In a recent admirable statement Mr. Edward N. Hurley, chairman of the United States Shipping Board, outlined with clearness the future shipping policy of the Government in respect to postwar trade and the reasons for building America's huge merchant fleet. Mr. Hurley, who has a trend of thought somewhat above the average in plane, frankly emphasized that these merchant vessels will not be used after cessation of hostilities for making a trade war against our gallant allies whom we now are assisting with all our might, main, men, and money.

Such sentiment, of course, is splendid, and no doubt we all wish our merchants, traders, and shipowners will live up to it. In the same way America would not have been in this real war had Germany listened and lived up to the standard of the noble ideals outlined by our own President Wilson several years ago.

Fair competition—even if strenuous—produces business that otherwise would not exist, and without foreign business many nations would go bankrupt. Obviously, then, after the war all countries will strive for "supremacy" in international trade. Consequently, although it will not be started by the United States (provided fine men like Wilson and Hurley are in authority) after peace has been declared and affairs become settled, there is bound to be such a tremendous competition among all countries for the carrying of freight on the high seas that the resultant friendly business rivalry virtually will form something approaching a trade war, once the amount of goods to be carried is less than the capacity of ships in service. Even among the American coastwise trade alone the most economically operated and best managed ships, such as motor ships, will seriously be felt by domestic shipowners who own steamers and sailing vessels, especially if the termination of war happens to leave us with more steamships than we have products to carry several years afterwards.

Also to endeavor to make America entirely self-contained and to export only and not import would be courting disaster, apart from making it impossible to operate our steamships in foreign waters, and the international money exchanges would suffer so much that our manufacturers and traders would be unable to do any business. Incidentally it will be a hard task for America to make a postwar trade campaign with her new coal-fired and oil-fired steamships, because they will have to be used on the same routes as the economical and cheaply operated foreign motor ships now being built by all other nations, including Germany.

The very future and prosperous existence of many countries will rest with their success in securing extensive international trade, and unless a nation's ships can carry produce as cheaply as those of other countries she can not be prosperous continually. That is why America previously has been a third-rate maritime commercial power. Her laws made it impossible for her ships to operate sufficiently economically to compete with the merchant vessels of other countries, and she had no motor ships. Had America previously been a great and successful ship-owning country, some of the terrible financial and bad business years probably would not have occurred. With ships, ships, and ships rests both the immediate and future well-being of all nations, particularly America; but other countries can build and operate their ships at lower cost than America can, so it is essential that America's ships be economical motor ships.

Undoubtedly other nations, when they are free to do so, will make hitherto unknown strenuous efforts to carry the products of the markets of the world—particularly Germany, whose merchant shipping now is in a state of chaos. Already the Reichstag has passed the bill for the restoration of the German merchant marine, and grants will be made after the war to Teuton shipping companies of about $500,000,000 in the form of subsidies. It seems that this money will be given, or loaned without interest, and the grants will continue for nine years after declaration of peace. During the first four years the subsidies may be from 50 to 70 per cent of the total cost of the ships. No wonder Germany is building a hugh motor-ship yard.

Sir Joseph Maclay, the British comptroller of shipping, recently stated that the transport service maintained by Great Britain only had been accomplished by the sacrifice of important trade interests, which would have to be recovered as soon as the emergency has become less acute. Now, if other nations' ships by that time are serving such routes, how can Great Britain secure back the trade without severe competition and without using her merchant ships for such purposes? So it is not surprising that Great Britain also will build motor ships, and that, as detailed elsewhere in this issue, one great British Diesel motor-ship yard now being erected will have 16 slipways.

On the other hand, it appears to be Italy's intention to increase the quality of her ships rather than the quantity. And, as Signor Ugo Ancona recently pointed out, it is with fine ships that Italy will be able to enter into competition even with England and America. Consequently we can understand why Italy is building standardized Diesel-driven motor ships, which vessels she terms her "emergency fleet."

Obviously America must have "quality," too, and it becomes more and more apparent that it is vitally important to order additional motor ships as rapidly as slipways become vacant, for in the economical Diesel-driven motor ships we have the most suitable war-time merchant vessel, also the only type of cargo carrier for postwar trade.

Although Diesel engines at present are a little more costly than steam engines and boilers, a big steel motor ship can be built cheaper than a steamer per ton of cargo capacity, because a motor ship of 10,000 tons displacement will carry overseas about 1,000 tons more actual cargo in her holds than will a steamer of the same dimensions and with the same amount of structural steel in her hull.

The same motor ship will require less men to run her (although carrying 10 per cent more cargo) because of the absence of stokers. Her fuel bill at sea will be reduced to between one-third and one-fifth and her port stand-by charges will be reduced 90 per cent, also she will not be dependent upon foreign fuel stations for her return bunkering. Furthermore, when Diesel engines are built in larger quantities the cost will be less than steam machinery, because the oil motor lends itself so excellently to standardization.

Thus there is every reason why we should build hundreds of motor ships as quickly as is feasible—but no more steamships, except big liners—and there is no sound reason why motor ships should not be built now. Only two arguments yet have been offered against motor ships, and the same are excuses rather than reasons. One is that the marine Diesel engine is not reliable, and the second is that there are insufficient trained engineers to operate such vessels. The first, of course, is totally incorrect, as the Diesel engine when properly designed, constructed, installed, and operated gives far less trouble than the average marine boiler. Even supposing it was not reliable, then its merits and advantages are so remarkable that the Nation's best engineers should at once set to and make it reliable. As regards operating engineers, these can be trained in the shops and on training ships while the engines are being built. What other countries can do America can do. So let us do.

MUNITION PLANTS AND SHIP CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I am directed by the Committee on Commerce to report the joint resolution which I send to the desk:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 181) to authorize and empower the War Industries Board to aid in equipping and expanding power plants to carry on the manufacture of war munitions and the construction of ships during the war, advance moneys for that purpose to owners and operators of private plants upon terms and conditions to be prescribed by the War Finance Corporation, and making appropriation therefor, was read twice by its title.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will state in connection with this joint resolution, Mr. President, that what is known as the emergency power bill, which passed the House and came to the Senate, was referred to the Commerce Committee, and we have been holding hearings upon that bill. We have considered it as fully as we could in the circumstances, but the committee feels that we ought to give that very important measure, containing far-reaching provisions, further consideration. We have had some difficulties to labor under, such as the absence of some members of the committee, the illness of others, and the crowded condition of matters before Congress, and we felt that we ought to hold that bill for the present in order that we may go into it more carefully and more fully before making a report regarding it.

In the meantime, the committee felt that we ought to report to the Senate a measure which would meet the immediate necessity of the situation, and therefore we have prepared and now submit this joint resolution, which provides for the appropriation of $50,000,000, in order that power plants may be created or extended where they are needed for the purpose of manufacturing munitions and building ships. That situation can be taken care of under this joint resolution, and this general power bill or the emergency bill we can reach at a later time.

I would ask now for the consideration of the joint resolution, because it is an important one and ought to be acted upon as speedily as possible; but in view of the agreement in the House I presume no final action could be reached there, and therefore I simply ask that the joint resolution shall go to the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will be placed on the calendar.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] is absent to-day and will probably be absent for the remainder of the week. His absence, I regret to say, has been occasioned by the very serious illness of his daughter. Just before leaving he received a letter from Hon. Leslie M. Shaw, sometime a member of President Roosevelt's Cabinet. The letter the Senator received from Mr. Shaw made such a severe stricture on Senator THOMAS and was in tone so offensive that Senator Thomas was prompted to reply, in view of the distinguished source from which the letter comes, namely, from a man who has had a very long public career as has Mr. Shaw. I have been requested, therefore, to read the letter to the Senate and also the reply of Senator THOMAS. The letter of Mr. Shaw is dated Washington, October 26, 1918, and is as follows:

WASHINGTON, October 26, 1918.

Senator CHARLES S. THOMAS,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I read with great interest your reply to Senator NEW'S assertion that the President's third condition of peace, being interpreted, means international free trade and spells the industrial ruin of America, in which you evidenced recognition of the fatal character of the charge, if substantiated, and sought to explain that the President did not, in fact, mean what his words imply.

You will certainly pardon me, my dear Mr. Senator, if I suggest that when one of a sheriff's posse assumes to speak for all and conducts a megaphone conversation with a fleeing band of highwaymen, gloating over their crimes infinitely worse than any which barbaric savagery ever stood charged, and announces the terms on which these bandits may be admitted to fellowship with the members of the posse, and to social equality with those whom they have robbed and ravaged, he ought to do so in such clearness of tone and certainty of diction as to need no Senatorial apologist.

Inasmuch as you have volunteered to speak for the President and to seek to explain away the fair import of his words in one instance, I ask that you extend your labors, and for these services I am willing to pay.

In his speech of September 27, the President says: "Special alliances and economic rivalries and hostilities have been the prolific curse in the modern world of the plans and passions that produce war. It would be an insincere as well as an insecure peace that did not exclude them in definite and binding terms."

Reading the foregoing in conjunction with his third condition of peace wherein he says, "The removal as far as possible of all economic barriers and the establishment of a neutrality of trade conditions," I am willing to pay you a lawyer's fee for a well-considered and comprehensive draft of a treaty provision that will "exclude in definite and binding terms all economic rivalries" between the United States and Canada or Japan, for instance, short of allowing the Chinese and Japanese people freedom of domicile in this country and the right to sell the products of their labor in our markets without encountering a protective tariff.

Second, how can "special alliances be excluded in definite and binding terms" and still preserve to the United States the right to conclude reciprocity arrangements insuring to our people advantages in certain market that are not to be enjoyed by other peoples?

Unless within a reasonable time I shall be favored with a reply containing actual drafts of provisions that will justify the President's language and will not warrant Senator NEW'S interpretations—in which I most unreservedly join—I shall continue to teach that the President's peace purposes, as distinguished from his war policies, are not only dangerous but absolutely ruinous.

Need I remind you, my dear Mr. Senator, that the Commander in Chief of the Armies and Navies of the United States is not ex officio dictator of the economic policies of the American people?

Cordially, yours,

LESLIE M. SHAW.

To this letter, which I presume was an attempt to be funny—but like many men the former Secretary of the Treasury, Mr. Shaw, is funny only when he is serious—Senator THOMAS made the following reply:

OCTOBER 27, 1918.

Hon. LESLIE M. SHAW,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR GOVERNOR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 26th instant regarding a recent discussion of the President's third condition of peace, which I have read with much interest. I think you have confounded Senator NEW with his colleague, who intruded the free-trade question in the shape of an interrogatory. You will pardon me also for saying, with the greatest respect, that in addressing me you assume the existence of some conditions which I can not concede. I neither spoke for the President on that occasion nor sought to make any explanation of the President's words. I assumed to answer questions of my colleagues; not to have done so would have been discourteous and uncalled for. If you will do me the honor to reread my remarks, I think you will agree with me. I presume that if I, upon reading your letter, should assume that you spoke for the Republican Party it would amuse you and be hotly resented by Col. Roosevelt.

Not being the administration interpreter, as you imagine, I could not if I would accept your gratuitous offer of compensation for assuming to act in that rôle. Were the fact otherwise I could scarcely feel complimented by your offer, as I have not yet reached the point where it is necessary to voice my convictions for pay.

I am not at all surprised that the Republican Party in their desperate efforts to find an issue for the campaign are struggling so hard to lift their old cry of protection from the oblivion to which the people consigned it in 1912. It must have something to distract public sentiment from the administration's magnificent prosecution of the war, and the good old tariff becomes a natural resort. However, the President's announcement of terms of peace on January 8 last, having before and since then been accepted by our allies as a basis for an enduring peace, I am constrained to believe that it will not get very far in a crusade beginning nine months after its announcement and on the eve of a general election. I expressed my own opinions and those alone to the Senate last Thursday, and I do not hesitate to say that an enduring and permanent peace between the nations is wholly irreconcilable with the Republican doctrine of a high protective tariff. If the announcement of such a view has subjected me to a charge of being a free trader, I am content. The war has not changed my convictions of a lifetime that all tariffs should be for revenue purposes only and become robbery when they transcend that point.

It is quite true, my dear sir, that the Commander in Chief is not a dictator of the economic policies of the American people. It is also true that those who would place a controverted economic question above world interest in this great crisis are not the dictators of this administration.

I am, my dear sir, very cordially, yours,

C. S. THOMAS.

Mr. President, I have simply read the correspondence as I would do for any other friend of mine in the Senate or elsewhere. I have no comment to make, of course, upon the letters. They speak for themselves.

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, apropos of the discussion which has occupied most of the afternoon, I desire to say that I have here an editorial from the New York Times under date of October 26, and under the title "The President and Congress," which I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being no objection, the editorial will be inserted in the RECORD.

The editorial referred to is as follows:

THE PRESIDENT AND CONGRESS.

Mr. Roosevelt's ill-advised and most untimely attempt to stir up a partisan strife against the President lends justification to Mr. Wilson's appeal to the country to express its confidence in the administration by returning a Democratic majority in both Houses of the next Congress. The President's appeal is unusual. It has its obvious risks. To say that the election of a Democratic Congress would be a vote of confidence in the administration connotes the opposite theory that by electing a majority of Republican Senators and Representatives the country would vote want of confidence. The President's action is bold, for the event is uncertain. But his boldness is the measure of the importance he attaches to securing in the next Congress a majority control in sympathy with his policies and purposes. Should the House and Senate pass into Republican control as the result of the election, he feels, and the behavior of Republican leaders, like Mr. Roosevelt and Senator LODGE, justifies him in that feeling, that thenceforth legislation and all action would be "taken amid contest and obstruction."

The President candidly gives credit to the Republicans in Congress for support in the prosecution of the war; they "have unquestionably been prowar." We think he lays too much stress upon the, after all, not very frequent occasions when they have shown themselves to be "antiadministration." He feels that they have sought to take the conduct of the war out of his hands and "put it under the control of instrumentalities of their own choosing." Their efforts to do that have not been very determined; they have never had any chance of success. It must be remembered that the Republican Party is very well organized; that in its membership partisan feeling runs high. Was it not to be expected that the Republicans would now and then bestir themselves to estop the Democrats from getting all the credit accruing from the successful prosecution of the war?

That is not the sole question; it may not be the most important. A Republican majority in both Houses might at times be obstructive; perhaps unpleasantly so. But we doubt that they would let partisanship betray them into failure of duty. Upon the great issues, the questions upon which the vigorous carrying on of the war will vitally depend, their patriotism and American spirit would guide them against the unpardonable blunder of carrying obstruction to the point of danger. Both the great parties are made up of patriots.

It is the construction which our friends abroad, and particularly our enemies abroad, would almost inevitably put upon a defeat of the administration party in the coming congressional elections that is chiefly to be feared. Here in the United States we know that the election of a majority in the Senate and the House would not be an expression of want of confidence in the administration in the parliamentary sense. It would not have the implications which attach to a vote that causes the fall of a ministry. The country is very evenly divided between the two leading parties, and local interest or local pride in a favorite candidate might easily prevail in a sufficient number of districts to give the majority to the Republicans which there would be no warrant whatever for viewing as an expression of the country as a whole against the administration. We could not hope that this opinion of such a result would obtain abroad; certainly not in enemy countries, where they would take great comfort from their belief that the war policies of the present administration had been repudiated by the country. We might be put to great cost and effort to overcome that impression.

Of some shortcomings in Democratic congressional leadership, notably in the House, the country is not unaware. There are corrections and compensations, for the good sense of the membership in both branches of Congress averts the more serious consequences of error. But those are matters which concern ourselves; the election of the congressional majority in sympathy with the President's purposes is a matter of concern, not to ourselves alone, but to the brave people of those nations to whose aid we have sent 2,000,000 soldiers and many billions of money for their financial support. That is a very grave matter, one on which the President lays much stress. It bulks enormously larger than any petty occasions for criticism of those responsible for war legislation in the present Congress. This is the great issue of the election which the people should keep steadily in view, that support should be given to the President, that his appeal for a House and Senate, sympathetic, not obstructive, should have a loyal response.

The President has declared that "politics is adjourned." If his earnest request that the country give him needed support in Congress is considered to be a reentry of politics, let the blame rest upon the Republicans who have forced him to take that course. In 1898, not the President, to be sure, but the responsible leaders of the Republican Party, made such an appeal on the ground that, although the Spanish War was ended before the elections the country must show an undivided front against the enemy. Mr. Wilson has tenfold the justification for his appeal that the Republicans had in that year. And Mr. Roosevelt's exhortation "to the representatives of the American people from one ocean to the other" to bestir themselves against the acceptance of principles of peace already approved by our people, by the nations united with us in the war, which the enemy powers have already pledged themselves to accept, the good faith of that pledge having been put to the test by the President, is reason enough in all conscience for Mr. Wilson's outspoken presentation of grounds for asking the country to assure him of the support during the next two years of a Congress "in sympathy with the attitude and action of the administration."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. FLETCHER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, October 31, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate October 28, 1918.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

John W. Hanan, of LaGrange, Ind., to be United States district judge, district of the Canal Zone, vice William H. Jackson, whose term has expired.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Charles F. Clyne, of Chicago, Ill., to be United States attorney, northern district of Illinois. A reappointment, his term having expired.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Harry Leypoldt, of Pennsylvania, to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce. (Vice himself by reinstatement.)

COAST GUARD.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Coast Guard, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

William P. Kain,
Floyd J. Sexton,
Clement J. Todd,
Gustavus U. Stewart,
Joseph F. Farley, jr.,
David P. Marvin,
Carl H. Abel, and
Edward M. Webster.

First lieutenants of Engineers to be captains of Engineers in the Coast Guard, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Benjamin C. Thorn,
Milton R. Daniels,
Ellis Reed-Hill,
Francis C. Allen,
Mayson W. Torbet, and
Gustavus R. O'Connor.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be first lieutenants.

First Lieut. Charles Augustus Short, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 14, 1918.

First Lieut. William Calvert Chaney, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 15, 1918.

First Lieut. Olaf Kittelson, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 16, 1918.

First Lieut. Lawrence Frederick Fisher, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 17, 1918.

First Lieut. Young Cleveland Lott, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 18, 1918.

First Lieut. Earl Edward Van Derwerker, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 19, 1918.

First Lieut. Albert Barnett Ferguson, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 20, 1918.
First Lieut. Julius Benjamin Boehm, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 21, 1918.
First Lieut. John Daniel Gillis, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 22, 1918.
First Lieut. Ralph Waldo Turner, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 23, 1918.
First Lieut. Francis John Robinson, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 24, 1918.
First Lieut. Fowler Burdette Roberts, Medical Corps, United States Army, from October 25, 1918.

PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of August, 1918:
Harry D. McHenry,
Harry R. Bogusch,
George C. Fuller, and
William M. Quigley.
Lieut. Albert R. Mack to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 18th day of August, 1918.
The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:
James A. Saunders and
John H. Culin.
The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of October, 1918:
Clarence E. Kastenbein,
James H. Stevens,
Ellsworth F. Sparks,
Trigg M. Smith,
William G. Conrad,
Orville F. Byrd,
Ellory F. Carr,
James D. G. Wognum,
Edgar C. Hartup,
Robert Von Ritter,
David A. Bachman,
Daniel L. McCarthy,
John E. Wood,
Harry A. Miller,
Harvey R. Dye,
Norris D. Whitehill,
Verney Carroll,
Louis A. Puckett,
George Scratchley,
Charles B. Forrest,
John P. Killeen,
Karl S. Farnum,
Lester B. Karelle,
Harold E. Walker,
Willard B. Hinckley,
Charles H. Gillilan,
Jacob K. Ziesel,
Hunter J. Norton,
Leon Dancer,
Charles H. Ritt,
Joseph W. Cavanagh,
Harry E. Wickham, jr.,
William O. Wood, and
Samuel E. Thompson.
The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of September, 1918:
James E. Brennan,
Joseph M. Devine,
George L. Thomas,
Theodore M. Stock, and
Chester B. Peake.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate October 28, 1918.

CLERK OF THE UNITED STATES COURT FOR CHINA.

James P. Connolly to be clerk of the United States Court for China.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEYS.

John E. Laskey to be United States attorney, District of Columbia.
Edward C. Day to be United States attorney, district of Montana.
Myron H. Walker to be United States attorney, western district of Michigan.
Harvey A. Baker to be United States attorney, district of Rhode Island.

COAST GUARD.

First Lieut. Philip H. Scott to be a captain in the Coast Guard.
The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Coast Guard:
Wales A. Benham and
Raymond L. Jack.
The following-named cadet engineers to be third lieutenants of engineers in the Coast Guard:
Louis B. Olsen,
Joseph H. Seymour,
Roger C. Heimer,
Laurence G. Bean,
William J. Kossler,
Joseph S. Walker,
Lester E. Wells,
Ulysses V. Henderson, and
Henry G. Kunz.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

To be lieutenant generals.

Maj. Gen. Hunter Liggett, United States Army.
Maj. Gen. Robert L. Bullard, United States Army.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be majors.

Capt. Herbert L. Quickel.
Capt. Chester D. Allen.
Capt. David E. Smith.
Capt. Leon A. Fox.
Capt. Charles M. Hunter.
Capt. Rossner E Graham.
Capt. Joseph H. Francis.
Capt. Charles K. Berle.
Capt. George C. H. Franklin.
Capt. William T. Weissinger.
Capt. Samuel M. Browne.
Capt. Frank L. Cole.
Capt. Gerald D. France.
Capt. Miner F. Felch.
Capt. Rowland D. Wolfe.
Capt. Bascom F. Morris.
Capt. Clarke Blance.
Capt. William A. Foertmeyer.
Capt. Cornelius O. Bailey.
Capt. Max R. Stockton.
Capt. Frank C. Griffis.
Capt. Frederick H. Mills.
Capt. Henry C. Bierbower.
Capt. Val E. Miltenberger.
Capt. Edgar F. Haines.
Capt. John P. Kelly.
Capt. Edgar J. Farrow.
Capt. Herbert L. Freeland.

To be captains.

First Lieut. Herbert L. Quickel.
First Lieut. Chester D. Allen.
First Lieut. David E. Smith.
First Lieut. Leon A. Fox.
First Lieut. Charles M. Hunter.
First Lieut. Rossner E. Graham.
First Lieut. Joseph H. Francis.
First Lieut. Charles K. Berle.
First Lieut. George C. H. Franklin.
First Lieut. William T. Weissinger.
First Lieut. Samuel M. Browne.
First Lieut. Frank L. Cole.
First Lieut. Gerald D. France.
First Lieut. Miner F. Felch.
First Lieut. Rowland D. Wolfe.
First Lieut. Bascom F. Morris.
First Lieut. Clarke Blance.
First Lieut. William A. Foertmeyer.
First Lieut. Cornelius O. Bailey.
First Lieut. Max R. Stockton.

First Lieut. Frank C. Griffis.
First Lieut. Frederick H. Mills.
First Lieut. Henry C. Bierbower.
First Lieut. Val E. Miltenberger.
First Lieut. Edgar F. Haines.
First Lieut. John P. Kelly.
First Lieut. Edgar J. Farrow.
First Lieut. Herbert L. Freeland.

POSTMASTERS.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Jacob M. Bedenbaugh, Prosperity.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, October 28, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art supreme in all Thine attributes, our God and our Father, a heavy hand has been laid upon us; thousands have died and thousands are dying through the malady which is sweeping the land and through the terrible toll on land and sea in a world-wide war.

But where faith abounds, hope inspires confidence. Where love abounds, the heart reflects Thy image; and Thy promises shall not fail if we live to the highest conception of right, and truth, and duty.

Help us, therefore, to hold to Thee and press forward at the command of the still, small voice and rest assured that Thy will, which is good will, shall be at last fulfilled in right, truth, justice, and every heart be satisfied, through Him who taught us the way and the truth and the life. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, October 26, 1918, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may extend my remarks in the RECORD on the recognition by the present administration of women in public office in connection with the administration, and also the attitude of the present administration on woman suffrage.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to say, while that is a perfectly legitimate matter to go into the RECORD, I will have to object on account of our unanimous-consent agreement. I think it would be a violation of that agreement.

Mr. RAKER. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina if that includes all unanimous consents?

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course it does. A great many consents could be asked, and personally I would not object, but under our agreement I will have to object, and I do object, Mr. Speaker.

ZENG TZE WONG (H. DOC. NO. 1334).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

I transmit herewith a report from the Secretary of State inclosing a draft of a joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to permit Mr. Zeng Tze Wong, a citizen of China, to receive instruction at the United States Military Academy at West Point at the expense of the Government of China.

The Secretary of State points out that the passage of the resolution would be regarded as an act of courtesy by the Government of China, and that it would follow established precedents.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 28 October, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

RECESS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I send to the Clerk's desk a resolution, which I ask the House to consider at the present time.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 56.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That when the two Houses of Congress adjourn on Monday, the 28th day of October, 1918, they stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Tuesday, the 12th day of November, 1918.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a moment?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Is it the thought of the gentleman that we shall remain in session until the Senate has acted on this resolution to-day?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; we will remain in session until we try to get through these matters which are to come up after the passage of this resolution. The Senate expect to pass this immediately, but if they are hung up at all they will amend it, and we could not pass this resolution as amended until Thursday, as we shall not meet to-morrow. That is the reason we had it to begin to-day. I had a talk with Senators MARTIN of Virginia and SIMMONS this morning, and they both said there would be no difficulty in passing the resolution immediately this morning. Then the discussion of other matters which the Senate may take up to-day will go on after that, and they will stay in session until those matters are concluded.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Does not the gentleman think it might be a good idea for us to recess for an hour or two, in order to give the Senate time to act upon this, so we may know to-day what the fate of the resolution will be?

Mr. KITCHIN. That would be all right.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. After the conclusion of the business of to-day?

Mr. KITCHIN. I shall ask unanimous consent then to recess until such time as we think——

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. After the passage of the other business.

Mr. CANNON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. CANNON. Have the Senate agreed to the conference report on the deficiency bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. They have agreed to it; yes.

Mr. CANNON. Has it been signed by the Speaker?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; Senator MARTIN of Virginia has taken it up now, I understand. He said he would take it up in a few minutes and dispose of it.

Mr. CANNON. This is that when we adjourn to-day we adjourn till November 12?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I said if necessary, as the gentleman from Tennessee suggests, we can take a recess to await the action of the Senate. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to ask a question?

Mr. GILLETT. The gentleman has already answered the question which I had in mind to ask.

Mr. McARTHUR. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do.

Mr. McARTHUR. I wish to ask the majority leader what plan is in mind as to the legislative program when we reconvene on the 12th of November, if there is any?

Mr. KITCHIN. The Senate Finance Committee hope by that time to report out the revenue bill, and the Senate hope to finish that bill by the 25th or 26th of November, and then that Congress may take an adjournment sine die, and while Congress is away the conferees on the revenue bill will remain in Washington and try to get together by the time we reconvene.

Mr. McARTHUR. As a matter of fact, there is no legislative program for the House, except to meet every three days.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is correct.

Mr. McARTHUR. Members living at a distance will be at perfect liberty to remain at home?

Mr. KITCHIN. Unless called here by some emergency.

Mr. QUIN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will.

Mr. QUIN. From the 12th day of November until the 26th the House will not meet, and Members can go home?

Mr. KITCHIN. As I answered the gentleman from Oregon, it will not be necessary for Members of the House, after reconvening on the 12th, to come back to Washington. There will be enough Members here to attend to matters, and we will adjourn for three days at a time, unless some emergency occurs in the meantime making it necessary to call Members to Washington.

Mr. QUIN. And telegrams would be sent out. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will permit, I was wondering if the gentleman would not think it wise to delay the passage of this resolution until matters pending to-day are disposed of?

Mr. KITCHIN. I should not think so, for the reason that some gentleman might make a point of no quorum, and then it would be impossible for us to pass this until Thursday, because we do not meet to-morrow and we do not meet Wednesday, under our agreement.

Mr. ANDERSON. I want to be entirely fair about the matter. I understand it is intended to offer a resolution continuing the agricultural stimulation appropriations. I intend to object to that resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. Would the gentleman make the point of no quorum on the stimulation bill?

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not care to pass on that proposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman may or may not, but some other gentleman may. Therefore, unless we want to come back here Thursday——

Mr. ANDERSON. I do not intend to make a point of no quorum on the passage of this recess resolution, because it is contemplated by the agreement which we made the other day, but I did say to the gentleman the other day that I should object to the passage of a continuing resolution, and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HAUGEN] gave the same notice. I do not want to mislead the gentleman now; that is all.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the recess resolution offered by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN].

The question was taken; and the resolution was agreed to.

AGRICULTURAL STIMULATION.

Mr. SHERLEY. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. SHERLEY. I desire to ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340), which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of a joint resolution which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, so far as they relate to the support of food-production operations of the Department of Agriculture heretofore provided for by law, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of November, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. I feel disposed to object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, has the gentleman from Minnesota objected?

Mr. ANDERSON. I did object.

Mr. LEVER. I wonder if the gentleman from Minnesota might not be persuaded to withdraw the objection temporarily and allow me to make a brief statement?

Mr. ANDERSON. I withhold the objection, but I intend to make it, at least for the present.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to say that the situation with reference to the food-stimulation bill is this——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEVER. The differences between the Senate and the House have all been agreed to and arranged, except Senate amendment No. 28, which is the so-called Pomerene antirent profiteering bill. The newspapers of the city quote the Senator who is in charge of this legislation at this time as saying that it is not his intention to call it up in the Senate until after the election. The Senate has the papers and of necessity must act first. There is, therefore, no possible way of getting this matter before the House. The continuing resolution which the department is now asking with reference to this bill expires on the 31st of this month, I believe. If we shall adjourn over until the 12th of November, the department will be absolutely estopped from operating along the lines contained in this bill until it gets authority to operate, else if it operates at all it will do so in violation of law.

I make this further statement: The House has not been derelict about this bill. The bill passed the House on the 23d of May under the very skillful management of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER]. It did not pass the Senate until September 6. This is a small appropriation bill, carrying about $11,000,000. There is not an item in the bill as it passed the House that was not absolutely germane to this bill, and yet when it comes back from the Senate to this body it comes back absolutely loaded down with ungermane and irrelevant amendments. There are at least four great, big, substantive propositions put upon this bill by the other body. The House conferees have been able to agree to one or two of those amendments. The Senate has receded from the others. But they insist on this rent-profiteering proposition, notwithstanding the fact that the so-called Pomerene amendment has passed the other body and is in this House now, while on the other hand this body has passed the so-called Johnson bill covering the same subject and that bill is now in the other body, with the conferees appointed by both bodies and ready to act.

It is contended that because of certain criticisms or statements made on this floor the other body refuses to deal through the regular channels with this proposition, and hence in order to get legislation at all I presume it was the intention to do it in this indirect way. I feel that the controversy between the Senate and the House now is much more fundamental and goes much deeper than the proposition involving a Member of this House. If the Senate has the right to say with respect to a matter in controversy between the two Houses that they will not serve with the House conferees, that they refuse to function in their ordinary way because they dislike personally one of the conferees, then the Senate has the right to go one step further and say, "We refuse to serve with you because we dislike the pronounced views of your conferees on the proposition in controversy." And if the Senate has the right to do that, the Senate has the right to say, "We refuse to serve with your conferees because, forsooth, one of them happens to be red-haired, freckle-faced, knock-kneed, and red-nosed, and that kind of a proposition grates upon my esthetic sensibilities." [Applause.]

Now, the proposition is, Has the House been called upon to abdicate its rights to appoint its own conferees? Is the House to abdicate its own power of legislation? If we admit that the other body has the right to control the appointment of House conferees, then you had as well abolish the House of Representatives and let the other body do the legislating for the whole country. [Applause.]

I do not regard this so much a question involving a personal controversy as a question of fundamental right on the part of the House, and I have therefore insisted upon the right of the House in the disagreement of the House conferees on this proposition. It is bad enough, gentlemen of the House, that legislation of this importance should be attempted to be put through the House in the form of riders. True, much good legislation has come to the country in the form of riders upon appropriation bills, but I do not think there is an experienced man here who will not agree with the statement that more vicious legislation has passed Congress in the shape of riders than through any other method or means. You are attempting here absolutely to transfer the jurisdiction of the District of Columbia Committee of the House to the Committee on Agriculture. I confess that I have no knowledge of District affairs except in the most general way, but I do believe, and I think in justice to the gentleman I ought to say, that there is not a man in this House on either side of that aisle who is so well informed about District affairs as the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON], the chairman of the Committee on the District of Columbia. [Applause.] I am not willing either to humiliate him by a vote of censure in this House—and this action here would be a vote of censure in the first place—nor in the second place am I willing, without the instruction of the House, absolutely through this method to abdicate the functions of the House and let the other body run it. [Applause.]

Those are the facts, and with that statement and with the further fact, which I reemphasize, that a Member in charge of this bill in the other body is quoted as saying that he will not even bring it up for discussion in the Senate, I ask what possible advantage can be had in objecting to this continuing resolution? I hope very much that my very capable friend from Minnesota will withdraw the objection and let this resolution go through.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I am not interested in the controversy between the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. JOHNSON] and certain Members of the Senate, but I do say this: That if either the gentleman from Kentucky or some Members of the Senate or the war workers in the District of Columbia must suffer, so far as I am concerned it will be either the gentleman from Kentucky or the Members of the Senate, and not the war workers in the District of Columbia.

Now, this bill has been in the hands of the conferees about six weeks. There has been ample opportunity for the conferees to get together. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr.

LEVER] says that the Senate takes the attitude on the other bill that they will not confer with the gentleman from Kentucky. I am informed that the gentleman from South Carolina has practically taken the same position with respect to this amendment. I am satisfied that if the majority conferees on the part of the House have any disposition at all to agree to the Pomerene amendment, properly amended, there would be no difficulty whatever in coming to some agreement upon it. I think the House ought not to be in the position in which it is to-day. I regret that the Department of Agriculture by any action that I should take should be deprived of any necessary funds, but I am unwilling that the controversy that exists here should be permitted longer to prevent reasonable legislation against rent profiteering in the District of Columbia, and, so far as I can by my voice assist in bringing that matter to some sort of conclusion now, I intend to object to the consideration of a continuing resolution, and I do object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Minnesota objects.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee rose.

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman allow me a minute?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes.

THE RECORD.

Mr. GILLETT. I do not wish formally to bring up the privileged resolution about correcting the RECORD, but I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], who is here, if he can kindly tell us where in the RECORD he received his leave to print? I am told by others that they can not find it. I think he ought to cite it.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not looked for it. The Speaker stated to the gentleman and to the House that he remembered that leave to print remarks in the RECORD was granted to me. It was probably two weeks ago. The RECORD will show the date; that is, if the Official Reporter did his duty in taking down the requests that were made and the leaves that were granted on that day.

Mr. GILLETT. Can the gentleman tell where it is?

Mr. HEFLIN. Not without consulting the RECORD. I requested the RECORD clerk a moment ago to look it up and let me know the date.

Mr. GILLETT. I asked the gentleman about half an hour ago if he would.

Mr. HEFLIN. I have asked him to look it up.

Mr. GILLETT. And he has not been able to find it?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have not heard from him. If the gentleman is at all doubtful about leave having been granted to me, I have several witnesses here now who are ready to testify that they were present when I obtained leave under which my speech was printed.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course, the RECORD is what decides; but I will let the matter drop now.

Mr. HEFLIN. Again I say that I had leave to print my remarks in the RECORD; and that is not all, I have another leave yet. I keep them for the purpose of answering Republican babblings. [Laughter on the Democratic side.]

RECESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, at the suggestion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock. Is there objection?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 1 p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, at 1 o'clock p. m. the House resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the conference report on the bill (H. R. 13086) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, announced that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 12404. An act authorizing the construction of a building for the Public Health Service, in the city of Washington, D. C.;

H. R. 12976. An act providing for the protection of the users of the telephone and telegraph service and the properties and funds belonging thereto during Government operation and control;

H. R. 13036. An act transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the southern branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes;

H. R. 12438. An act authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla.; and

H. R. 13086. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

RECESS OF CONGRESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, before we took the recess I offered a resolution (H. Con. Res. 56) for a recess of Congress from to-day until November 12. I did not introduce the resolution until I had conferred with Senator MARTIN, who said it was all right, that the Senate would pass it immediately, as soon as it reached the Senate. I asked him if he had conferred with the leader of the minority, and he said he had, and that it was satisfactory. Since the House passed the resolution I find that there is a pretty large opposition to the passage of such a resolution in the Senate, especially to-day, and that it will be impossible for them to consider it to-day. There is some hope that by Thursday next they can iron out the kinks and both sides agree to an adjournment resolution. In view of those facts, I ask unanimous consent to reconsider the vote whereby the resolution was passed and to vacate all proceedings under it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution for adjournment was passed and to vacate the proceedings under it. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman, for the convenience of the House, if this will make any practical difference in the necessity of Members of the House attending?

Mr. KITCHIN. I was about to state that our agreement will remain for three-day adjournments, whether we have a fixed time for adjournment or not. Gentlemen can go home with impunity, with the thought that nothing will take place in the way of business under that agreement.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Is it the gentleman's understanding that the food-stimulation bill now in conference would fall within the unanimous-consent agreement made on the 19th of this month?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement as written, in connection with the colloquy between the gentleman from Minnesota and myself, it was explicitly stated that in case a demand for a quorum on the extension resolution was made the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and myself would regard it as absolutely necessary to send out notices.

Mr. LEVER. Is it the gentleman's construction that the demand for a quorum on the extension resolution would be a breach of the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. KITCHIN. I hardly think it would, in view of what took place between the gentleman from Minnesota and myself.

Mr. GILLETT. I did not suppose that the agreement would prevent anybody from making a point of no quorum.

Mr. LEVER. That is true; but what I was driving at is, was it tacitly understood that the continuing resolution for the food-stimulation bill would fall within the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. GILLETT. Personally, I do not think it would fall within the agreement. I thought it did not.

Mr. LEVER. My construction was that it did fall within it.

Mr. GILLETT. There was some discussion on that very point.

Mr. ANDERSON. If the gentleman will yield, I distinctly called the attention of the gentleman from North Carolina to the situation that would arise under the unanimous-consent agreement if adopted in case the stimulation appropriation bill did not pass and it should be necessary to have a continuing resolution.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman did; and I think, taking the written agreement just as it is, without any further colloquy in the House, that this would be excluded under the technical terms of the agreement, because it reads that during this period "no business shall be transacted by unanimous consent or otherwise, except the final disposition of the pending appropriation bill and the Agricultural stimulation bill." Of course, the extension resolution would not be a final disposition. However, the gentleman from Minnesota made the observation which he has just repeated. Taking the agreement literally, it is not within the unanimous-consent agreement, because it is not a final disposition; but it was stated that if it became necessary, and a quorum was demanded, we would send out the notices.

Mr. LEVER. Under the interpretation of the gentleman from North Carolina, and my interpretation of his interpretation, whatever action was taken on this bill would have to be final action. It would not be possible without violating the unanimous-consent agreement even to send the bill back to conference if anybody raised the point.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; it would. That is a part of the procedure to final disposition. I submit the understanding of the House was—and the question of the gentleman from Minnesota and my reply to him as to the stimulation bill was a part of it—that we might consider that unless somebody demanded a quorum.

Mr. LEVER. The point I am trying to make is that if the gentleman's interpretation is right it would not be possible between now and the time of coming back to send the food-stimulation bill back to conference, although that is a process of final determination.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] said he thought we could, and I certainly think we could. That is one of the steps toward final disposition.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is a natural parliamentary process.

Mr. GILLETT. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. But is not the other a natural parliamentary process—a continuing resolution?

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, that is a substitute.

Mr. BUTLER. Would it be in order to consider that resolution continuing the appropriations, the one that was objected to?

Mr. KITCHIN. Under the agreement, which I had typewritten and from which I just read, I hardly think it would be, unless the House would regard the statement I made to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. ANDERSON] on his statement to me as a part of the agreement.

Mr. BUTLER. Then why was it considered this morning? Why was permission asked to consider it this morning?

Mr. LEVER. Any objection to the consideration of the joint resolution would place the responsibility for the defeat of it on the objector.

Mr. BUTLER. That is what I am after. This requires gentlemen to object.

Mr. GILLETT. I disagree with the gentleman from South Carolina. The responsibility for the defeat of the proposition rests with the conferees.

Mr. LEVER. Oh, no; not at all.

Mr. ANDERSON. The conferees had notice of exactly the situation with which they were confronted. I was very careful, as the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] will agree, to give notice of my attitude, in order that the conferees might know exactly the situation that they were running into.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman from Minnesota is correct about that.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I was planning to go home on Wednesday, and I understand that we can go home with the full assurance that no business at all will be transacted until after the elections.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; except under the agreement.

Mr. GILLETT. Just as we had made the agreement.

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. Gentlemen here are just as free to go home as they would be if the Senate had passed this concurrent resolution.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask this question. I am not sure whether or not the gentleman covered it this morning—at least, I was not clear as to his answer. When we come back on November 12 is it contemplated then to take up anything or will this gentleman's agreement continue until the Senate has voted on the revenue bill?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; but it is understood that we could send it to conference; that on or after November 12, without the necessity of having a quorum, without the necessity of Members coming back, we could send it to conference.

Mr. WINGO. After November 12 will it be possible to get the House to consider another bill or resolution?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; not under our agreement, excepting to send the revenue bill to conference.

Mr. WINGO. Then it is contemplated, unless some emergency growing out of the war should arise, that there will be no further legislation at this session of Congress except to take care of pending——

Mr. KITCHIN. Except to take care of the revenue bill, unless some emergency shall occur that we do not now contemplate, and in that event the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GILLETT] and myself will give notice to Members to come here.

Mr. WINGO. If gentlemen go home, there is no necessity for their coming back here, unless they are given notice to come, before the December session?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is practically so.

Mr. McARTHUR. Mr. Speaker, does this contemplate a sine die adjournment of this session?

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, in discussing the matter with Senators SIMMONS and MARTIN of Virginia the other day and this morning before the House met they did contemplate finishing the revenue bill by the 24th, the 25th, or 26th of November and then taking a sine die adjournment. The election will be over then, and I do not think there will be any trouble about that. Pending the election, right now, and the state of mind that some of the Senators find themselves in, it seems impossible to-day to pass this resolution for a recess until the 12th of November, although it may be possible to do so next Thursday.

Mr. McARTHUR. Under the gentleman's agreement entered into, would it be possible for gentlemen living a long distance from here to go away and remain away until the December session?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; unless some emergency should occur.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, if objection is going to be made to the passage of a continuing resolution for this food-stimulation bill, or if the point of no quorum is to be made upon the presentation of such a privileged resolution, what is to happen to the operation of the Department of Agriculture under the terms of the present continuing resolution? They will either have to stop operating or operate in violation of the law.

Mr. KITCHIN. My understanding is that it was said that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SHERLEY], stated that the President would have funds enough possibly to enable them to go until the 12th of November.

Mr. LEVER. Out of his lump sum?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. I do not know that the gentleman said that, but I understood that he said it; and that the President would probably take care of the situation until then.

Mr. LEVER. He may have that power, but it makes a very confused situation in the department.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina, to reconsider the vote by which the concurrent resolution was passed, and that all proceedings touching it be vacated?

Mr. KITCHIN. It has been suggested to me that perhaps the best procedure would be, after reconsideration, to ask unanimous consent that the resolution lie on the table. Then it goes to the file room.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, it will lie on the table, and the gentleman can introduce another one if he desires. [After a pause.] The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. That is what I propose to do on Thursday if the Senate is then ready to accept it.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Thursday, under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 19 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, October 31, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. PADGETT, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 13115) to authorize the Secretary of the Navy to acquire additional lands for the naval training station, naval operating base, Hampton Roads, Va., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 837), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SHERLEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 341) requesting the President to recommend a day for prayer that the prevailing epidemic may cease; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. POU introduced a bill (H. R. 13120) for the relief of the heirs of Frank W. Knight, which was referred to the Committee on Claims.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. GRAY of Alabama: Memorial of the United Real Estate Owners' Association, calling attention to certain inequities in the revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petitions of E. E. Richards, Bessie Richards, R. Rundolph, and S. G. Bessonall, of Mobile, Ala., urging the passage of the osteopathic bill, H. R. 5407; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, October 31, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee for the high sense of moral obligation with which we as a Nation have always addressed ourselves to the tasks that have confronted us. We have rejected utterly the doctrine and philosophy that might makes right, because we believe that right is founded upon the Divine will and that the measure of its authority and power is in the Divine law. So we recognize Thy right to rule, and we seek Thy guidance in all the affairs of our national life. We pray that the God of our fathers may lead us on to larger victory in the future. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., October 31, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBINSON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer, and directed the Secretary to read the Journal of the proceedings of the preceding session.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, and was interrupted by—

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut will state it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I make the point of order that the suggestion of the absence of a quorum can not be made until the reading of the Journal has been completed. I refer the Chair on that question to page 485 of Gilfry's Precedents, where it is ruled that "the reading of the Journal can not be interrupted by making the point of order that no quorum is present."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair thinks the point of order is well taken. The point, however, comes late.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I realize that it comes late; but I do not think it comes too late, inasmuch as no announcement has been made upon the question of a quorum, and inasmuch as it is the duty of the Chair to direct the Journal to be read and not to entertain the question of the absence of a quorum during the reading of the Journal.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will conclude the reading of the Journal. The Chair hears no objection.

The Secretary resumed and concluded the reading of the Journal of Monday's proceedings, and it was approved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Beckham	Hardwick	McNary	Robinson
Benet	Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Brandegee	Kendrick	Myers	Simmons
Chamberlain	Kirby	Nugent	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Knox	Page	Smoot
Dillingham	La Follette	Phelan	Thomas
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pittman	Underwood
France	McCumber	Poindexter	Warren

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. BANKHEAD] on account of sickness. He is in the city but confined to his room.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I desire to state that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness, and that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is absent on public business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Thirty-two Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. On that motion I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. In his absence I transfer my pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GUION] and vote "yea."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG], which I transfer to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. WARREN (when his name was called). Transferring my general pair with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] to the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND], I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK. I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILFLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. DILLINGHAM (after having voted in the negative). I have already voted, but I observe that the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH], with whom I have a general pair is not present. I therefore transfer my pair with him to the Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. BECKHAM (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND]. He is not present. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. KENDRICK. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 21, nays 12, as follows:

YEAS—21.

Beckham	Hitchcock	Phelan	Smith, Ga.
Benet	Kendrick	Pittman	Thomas
Chamberlain	Kirby	Robinson	Underwood
Culberson	Martin, Va.	Sheppard
Fletcher	Myers	Simmons
Hardwick	Nugent	Smith, Ariz.

NAYS—12.

Brandegee	Knox	McCumber	Poindexter
Dillingham	La Follette	McNary	Smoot
France	Lenroot	Page	Warren

NOT VOTING—63.

Ashurst	Guion	Martin, Ky.	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Hale	Nelson	Sterling
Bankhead	Harding	New	Sutherland
Borah	Henderson	Norris	Swanson
Calder	Hollis	Overman	Thompson
Colt	Johnson, Cal.	Owen	Townsend
Cummins	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Trammell
Curtis	Jones, N. Mex.	Pomerene	Vardaman
Drew	Jones, Wash.	Ransdell	Wadsworth
Fall	Kellogg	Reed	Walsh
Fernald	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Watson
Frelinghuysen	King	Shafroth	Weeks
Gerry	Lewis	Sherman	Wilfley
Goff	Lodge	Shields	Williams
Gore	McKellar	Smith, Md.	Wolcott
Gronna	McLean	Smith, Mich.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, November 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, October 31, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father who art in heaven, pour out, we beseech Thee, upon us abundantly of Thy spirit, and inspire us to high ideals, quicken us to worthy endeavors, and free us from the contamination of sin and evil, that we may leave behind us day by day a record of which we may be justly proud, and thus hallow Thy name; in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, October 28, 1918, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment House bills of the following titles:

H. R. 7637. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

H. R. 11949. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.;

H. R. 10205. An act to provide for the consolidation of National banking associations;

H. R. 12631. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Camp Grant; and

H. R. 12773. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following House bills with amendments, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

H. R. 11709. An act granting the consent of Congress to Norman County, Minn., and Traill County, N. Dak., to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States; and

H. R. 11948. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Great Southern Lumber Co., a corporation of the State of Pennsylvania, doing business in the State of Mississippi, to construct a bridge across Pearl River at or near the north line of section 22, township 8 north, range 21 west, west of the basis meridian, in the land district east of Pearl River, in the State of Mississippi.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed the following bill, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4966. An act to extend the time for the construction by the Gulf Ports Terminal Railways Co., a corporation existing under the laws of the State of Florida, of a bridge or bridges and trestles over and across the headwaters of Mobile Bay, and such navigable channels as are between the east side of the bay and Blakeley Island, in Baldwin and Mobile Counties, Ala.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, announced that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11949. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.;

H. R. 7637. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

H. R. 12773. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county;

H. R. 12631. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, to construct a bridge across Rock River at or near Camp Grant; and

H. R. 10205. An act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations.

APPROPRIATION FOR FOOD PRODUCTION.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations be discharged from further consideration of House joint resolution 340, and that the resolution be now considered.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to discharge the Committee on Appropriations from further consideration of the joint resolution, which the Clerk will report by title, and to take it up for immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House joint resolution 340, making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I take it that this is the continuing resolution for the Department of Agriculture?

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee. This is the same resolution that was introduced the other day by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. ANDERSON. Reserving the right to object, I would like to submit an observation or two, with the gentleman's permission. Mr. Speaker, I have thought that the passage of the food-stimulation bill immediately was of paramount importance because of the very important legislation which that bill carried. I have thought that there ought to be no further delay in the passage of rent-profiteering legislation in the District of Columbia; and so far as I could by my single action compel or help to compel the conferees to come to some agreement upon that bill, I have taken that action. It is evident that there is not a quorum of the House in town; and it is therefore evident that it is not now possible, because of the lack of a quorum, to compel any action on the part of the conferees in connection with this bill, one way or the other. I have felt that the conferees were not entirely fair in taking advantage of the situation which they and which we all knew existed in the House by reason of the lack of a quorum. Bnt there is no advantage now to be gained in this situation by depriving the Department of Agriculture of the necessary funds to carry on its activities. There would be no object in my objecting to this resolution further, because it would have no result in the direction I desire results to be achieved. Therefore, so far as I have objected heretofore, I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object—and I shall not object, and I trust no one will object, to the consideration of this resolution—we find ourselves in the rather unfortunate and regrettable situation with regard to this legislation. The Senate placed upon the bill as it was passed by the House much new legislation, entirely unrelated to the bill and its subject matter as it passed the House. The House conferees are clearly within their rights, clearly following the rule, in insisting that this new legislation, entirely unrelated to the bill, shall go off. At the same time it is regrettable that a condition exists under which it seems impossible to get an understanding between the two bodies on this matter of rent profiteering in the District. It is tremendously important that something be done.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman has been for a long time a Member of this body and one of its most distinguished Members. Does the gentleman feel that the House conferees on this rent proposition could take any other course than that which they have taken?

Mr. MONDELL. I have no disposition to criticize the House conferees, and I do not criticize them. Their attitude is the correct attitude so far as it affects the general proposition of legislation. And it is an attitude that the House must in the main maintain if legislation, passed by the House, is to be even reasonably confined to the subject matter to which it relates.

Mr. LEVER. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. LEVER. Is not the proposition involved here more than the gentleman states? Does it not go to the point of the House allowing the Senate practically to name the House conferees on a disputed proposition, and therefore making this a very peculiar case?

Mr. MONDELL. The position which is taken by the other body is one which is equivalent to an attempt to force the hand of the House in the matter of legislation, and the way in which legislation shall be presented.

Mr. LEVER. Exactly.

Mr. MONDELL. And I have no criticism to make of the attitude of the conferees. However, I do suggest——

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will, if the gentleman will allow me, in one moment. I do suggest that it is unfortunate that a condition exists under which it seems to have been impossible up to this time to secure an agreement in Congress on this highly important matter of rent profiteering. It is highly regrettable. A great many people are suffering and suffering greatly.

Now, I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANDERSON. I just wanted to suggest that some gentlemen of the House had contributed considerably to the attitude of the Senate on this matter.

Mr. MONDELL. That is unquestionably true, emphatically true.

Mr. LEVER. But be that true or not, the House must maintain its right of legislating in its own way, and of appointing its own conferees on disputed propositions. The gentleman would not controvert that proposition, I am sure.

Mr. MONDELL. I should not put it in just the way the gentleman has put it, that the House must preserve its right to legislate in its own way; but the House should preserve, as far as possible, orderly procedure in legislation, and that is the question involved here.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. TOWNER. Does the gentleman believe that under any circumstances the mere objection by the Senate to the personnel and to the personal actions and personal comments of a Member of the House would be a justification for their refusing to have anything to do with the conferees appointed by the House?

Mr. MONDELL. If I may, without transgressing the rules, express any opinion on that subject, I should say, "No"; no justification for a refusal to act because of something that might have been said by some Member of the House. There has been a way open, the orderly, usual way, to reach this matter of rent profiteering in the District. The matter can be adjusted at any time. The House stands ready to adjust it in the usual way, through legislation for that purpose, unattached to other legislation having to do with other matters. The attitude of the House according to accepted rules and practices, is correct, entirely correct in this matter, although I regret the situation that obtains.

Mr. LEVER. I am sure we all do, if the gentleman will permit me to interrupt him. But is not this other proposition true, that when an ungermane proposition is put upon a bill by either of the bodies, when the proposition has reached a deadlock, is it not the custom that the offending body putting on the ungermane proposition should recede?

Mr. MONDELL. I think there is no question or doubt in the mind of anyone as to that rule. That is the usual rule, insisted upon by both Houses in a case of that kind.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just one word more. I have no disposition to impugn anyone's motives in regard to this or any other legislation, but the legislation that is held up by reason of the failure to secure agreement is of tremendous importance.

First, the agricultural stimulation provisions are very important at this time. We are trying to cure the failure to provide, as that bill does, for agricultural stimulation, so far as we can, by the passage of this resolution, but we do not meet the situation wholly by the passage of this resolution, because the appropriations that we continue in force are not as great and far-reaching as those carried in the bill, and they do not cover all agricultural fields as do the provisions in the bill that is now in conference, so that we only partly meet the situation by the passage of this resolution, but we meet it as far as we can under the circumstances.

Now, in addition to these provisions of the bill is the tremendously important provision of the bill which would establish a condition of war prohibition throughout the Union on the 1st of July. We all know that there are folks who do not care to have that legislation pass, to put it very mildly and moderately. There are folks that are very insistent that it shall not be passed. I do not say that the attitude of anyone elsewhere than in this House—certainly the attitude of no one in this House—I will not say the attitude of anyone elsewhere in regard to the matters in question is affected by their desire to defeat the enactment of prohibition legislation, but I may very properly say, I think, that the attitude of certain gentlemen who are responsible for the present condition of things—gentlemen who do not sit in this Chamber—has prevented the enactment of this very important prohibition legislation desired and approved by the administration, and in harmony with the judgment of a great majority of the American people. Surely the House is not responsible for the fact that a reasonable District antirent-profiteering law is not on the statute books. The House is not responsible, because this agricultural stimulation bill, with its needed appropriations, is not a law. The House is not responsible because the prohibition legislation is not upon the statute books. I think it is important that that should be understood.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. The gentleman is entirely correct in stating that the House is not responsible for this situation, and is not responsible for the failure of the final passage of this bill up to the present time. My recollection is that this bill passed the House on May 23 and went to the Senate, where it was held up until September 19 before it was passed by the Senate at all. Then, when it passed the Senate, it came back to the House loaded down with riders which had absolutely no connection whatever of any kind, description, or order with the subject matter of this bill. Among them was the rent proposition known as the Pomerene bill, which was added to this bill bodily, when the Senate knew necessarily at the time the conditions that existed in reference to that. Therefore the conferees on the part of the House, under the expressed view of the House, as had been demonstrated by unanimous action taken by the House, contended that in view of the fact that this was not germane to the bill and had no connection whatever with the bill, and was not related in any way to the subject matter of the bill, it should go off the bill, and they are the ones that have stood uncompromisingly all the time demanding that this question shall be considered by the conferees under those conditions. Being one of the conferees, I took the position that legislation of that character having been put on by the other body, it was their duty to recede; but they stubbornly refused, and so we are not responsible, but the other body is responsible.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Mississippi is eminently correct.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, so far as they relate to the support of food-production operations of the Department of Agriculture heretofore provided for by law, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of November, 1918.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the joint resolution was passed was laid on the table.

LIEUT. ROYAL C. JOHNSON.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a cable news item which appeared in the Washington Evening Star of last evening, giving an account of the wounding in battle of Lieut. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, the very able and distinguished young Representative in this House from the second congressional district of South Dakota. The cablegram briefly describes the brave and gallant manner in which Lieut. JOHNSON led the men of his company over the top on September 13 at Montfaucon, and although wounded by shrapnel continued the offensive with his men until the strongly fortified German position was taken from the enemy. His fearless conduct under fire confirms the opinion his friends have always had as to the genuine American fighting blood and spirit that he possesses.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a cablegram printed in the Evening Star, referring to the wounding of Lieut. ROYAL C. JOHNSON. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The article referred to is as follows:

SEEKING CONGRESS SEAT, ALSO FIGHTS—LIEUT. JOHNSON, SOUTH DAKOTA REPRESENTATIVE, AROUSES SOLDIER ENTHUSIASM—LAUD COURAGE IN FRANCE.

WITH THE AMERICAN ARMY AT THE FRONT, October 30.

"If we could only move Baltimore into South Dakota next week we would reelect the big fellow unanimously, for he went right through with us and is a real guy," said Pvt. Tom O'Leary, of Company K, Thirteenth Infantry.

The subject of his praise was Lieut. ROYAL C. JOHNSON, Representative from the second district in South Dakota, who returned to his regiment to-day after recovering from wounds received in the unit's latest fighting.

LED COMPANY IN FIGHT.

Lieut. JOHNSON, after the other officers were wounded, led his company on September 13 when the Seventy-ninth Division, of which his regiment is a part, stormed and captured the historic German observation post Montfaucon. Though wounded in the hail of shrapnel the Germans sent over during the attack, he persisted in remaining with the company until the objective was reached, when he was relieved by another officer. A surgeon insisted that he be sent to an evacuation hospital.

It is the second time that Lieut. JOHNSON has been in a hospital service station. When he was rejected for entrance into the Army he went to a hospital, had an operation performed, applied a second time, and was accepted. The men in his company, practically all hailing from Baltimore, gave him a hilarious welcome when he returned. His fellow officers were surprised at the rapidity of his recovery. An informal dinner in his honor was arranged by Maj. Thomas Miller, of Wilmington, Del., one of the staff officers. It was as sumptuous as possible, considering that only Army fare was available.

KIND OF MEN THEY WANT.

Lieut. JOHNSON, though fighting in France, is running for reelection next week.

Maj. FIORELLO H. LAGUARDIA, of New York City, is said to be the only other Congressman member of the overseas forces.

The men in khaki enthusiastically declare that these courageous officers are the kind of men they want as Representatives in Congress, thus giving a hint as to the complexion of future American elective bodies.

SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair wishes to make a short statement. Of course, as everybody knows, the Speaker is confined in the city of Washington more closely than any other man connected with the Government. The rest of the Members can pull out at most any time, but the Speaker has to stay here. The Chair wishes to go home and vote. He does not think there is the remotest possibility of his vote changing the result in that district, but he has been here so long that he would like to go home long enough to vote. Therefore the Chair asks the House to elect a Speaker pro tempore so that he may be able to sign bills while the Speaker is away, which will be only for next week.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, be elected by the House as Speaker pro tempore in the absence of the Speaker until the 12th of November, or until the Speaker returns if he should sooner return, with the power to sign bills and resolutions.

The SPEAKER. That is the only reason for electing a Speaker pro tempore—so that he may sign bills and resolutions. The Chair could appoint him for one day, but he would not be authorized to sign bills.

Mr. MONDELL. We shall all regret the absence of the Speaker, and hope he will have a pleasant journey and a delightful visit home, and that he will receive a large majority, notwithstanding the President's letter. [Laughter and applause.] I am sure we will be delighted to have the House presided over by the gentleman from Tennessee, Mr. GARRETT, during the Speaker's absence.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I presume it will be better to take a recess until to-morrow. While the Senate appear to be in a bad humor to-day they may conclude to agree upon the continuing resolution, and if so it can be signed to-morrow. I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until to-morrow at 12 o'clock noon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 26 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until to-morrow, Friday, November 1, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting deficiency estimate of appropriation required by the Public Health Service (H. Doc. No. 1335); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. SLOAN introduced a bill (H. R. 13121) to transfer the administration of Article III, the compensation for death or disability division of the war-risk insurance act, to the Pension Bureau, which was referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. GRIEST: A bill (H. R. 13122) granting a pension to Alice G. Sturgis; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MANN: A bill (H. R. 13123) granting a pension to Jane H. Zimmerman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 13124) granting special pension to George Baldwin; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SMALL: A bill (H. R. 13125) granting a pension to Joseph R. Owens; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 13126) granting patent to next of kin of deceased soldiers, sailors, and marines who had entered upon the public land; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petitions of the George Zeigler Co. and the Badger Candy Co., of Milwaukee, and of the G. R. & W. R. Montague Co., of La Crosse, all of the State of Wisconsin, objecting to the proposed tax on the manufacturers' sale of candy; also the petition of the C. W. Fischer Furniture Co., of Milwaukee, Wis., protesting against the proposed 10 per cent floor tax on inventory; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. KING: Resolution of the Col. L. W. Shepherd Post, No. 628, Department of Illinois, Grand Army of the Republic, protesting against the placing of a statue of Gen. E. Kirby Smith in the Hall of Fame at Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, November 1, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee seeking Thy continued guidance and blessing upon us. When Thou didst call us out of our security and peace to face tremendous responsibilities and sacrifices we went forward under Thy guidance. To-day, as we face yet greater responsibilities that seem to come upon us, we seek the Divine guidance and blessing, that we may measure up to the increasing responsibilities of reconstruction. Guide us this day in the discharge of our duties. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., November 1, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. JOE T. ROBINSON, a Senator from the State of Arkansas, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. ROBINSON thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer:

H. R. 7637. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg.;

H. R. 10205. An act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations;

H. R. 11949. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.;

H. R. 12631. An act granting the consent of Congress to the County of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, to construct a bridge across Rock River, at or near Camp Grant; and

H. R. 12773. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SIMMONS. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a telegram relating to war work.

There being no objection, the telegram was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 11, 1918.

LLOYD ENGLAND,
Chairman Arkansas State Council of Defense,
Boyle Building, Little Rock, Ark.:

Am mailing you to-day, special delivery, President's letter, which I quote, as follows:

"THE WHITE HOUSE,
"Washington, October 9, 1918.

"MR. LLOYD ENGLAND,
"Chairman Arkansas State Council of Defense,
"Boyle Building, Little Rock, Ark.

"MY DEAR MR. ENGLAND: Allow me to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of October 8 and to express my sincere interest in the farmer's 'give-a-bushel war fund.' It is a most interesting and effective way to help in this time of special need, and I am very glad to express my approval not only but my admiration of it.

"Cordially and sincerely, yours,
WOODROW WILSON."

JOE T. ROBINSON,
United States Senator.

Mr. PHELAN presented a petition of the Chamber of Commerce, of San Diego, Cal., praying for the further extension of the motor-truck service of the United States Postal Department, which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry candy manufacturers in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the imposition of a 10 per cent sales tax in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Security State Bank, of Isle; the State Bank of Mayer; the Lowry State Bank, of Lowry; the People's First National Bank, of Olivia; the First National Bank of Eveleth; the Western State Bank, of Duluth; the First National Bank of Frazee; the Pennington County Bankers' Association; the Scandia American Bank, of Crookston; the Security State Bank, of Delavan; the First National Bank of Northfield; the Farmers' State Bank, of Rapidan; the First National Bank of Winnebago; the Wolverton State Bank, of Wolverton; the People's State Bank, of Cannon Falls; the Rock County Bank, of Luverne; the State Bank of Spooner; the Deposit Bank, of Winona; the First State Bank of South Haven; the Minnetonka State Bank, of Excelsior; and the First National Bank of Brainerd, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the proposed stamp tax on bank checks in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

A bill and joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. MCNARY:

A bill (S. 5015) for the relief of Preston B. C. Lucas; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 182) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States relating to amendments; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EXTENSION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I ask that the joint resolution just received from the House of Representatives continuing the Agricultural emergency appropriations may be laid before the Senate.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, has the joint resolution been read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution is before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. I asked whether the joint resolution had been read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government and of the District of Columbia for the months of July and August, 1918, and for other purposes," approved July 8, 1918, so far as they relate to the support of food production operations of the Department of Agriculture heretofore provided for by law, are extended and continued in full force and effect for and during the month of November, 1918.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I am quite sure there is no objection to the passage of the joint resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Then let us pass it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will let the joint resolution pass in just a moment.

Mr. President, the secretary of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has handed me a telegram from Albuquerque, N. Mex. The beginning of the telegram is as follows:

Senator FALL, who is still completely occupied in fighting the epidemic of influenza among members of his family and his ranch employees, requests me to wire you the following correspondence, with the request that you read it in the Senate.

I am not going to take the time, Mr. President, to read the telegram, but I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not catch the nature of the telegram.

Mr. SMOOT. I will read the telegram if the Senator desires that I shall do so.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. That is not necessary; the Senator can state it.

Mr. SMOOT. The telegram is to Senator LODGE, and it begins by saying:

Senator FALL, who is still completely occupied in fighting the epidemic of influenza among members of his family and his ranch employees, requests me to wire you the following correspondence, with the request that you read it in the Senate.

The telegram refers to charges by the President against Senator FALL and Senator FALL's statement in answer to same.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, will the Senator be kind enough to state the nature of the President's letter about Senator FALL?

Mr. SMOOT. I will state that the charges were published in the press throughout the country.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Well, I did not see them.

Mr. SMOOT. The President's letter was in answer to a telegram received from one W. P. Metcalf, of New Mexico, asking whether Senator FALL's election would be satisfactory to him, and the President's answer was, as has been the case in all such instances, that Senator FALL's election would be very objectionable to him, and he hoped that Senator FALL would not be elected.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I trust Senator FALL has not withdrawn from the campaign on that account.

Mr. SMOOT. I can assure the Senator that he has not.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair hears no objection to the request of the Senator from Utah, and the telegram will be printed in the RECORD.

The telegram is as follows:

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., October 31, 1918.

Hon. HENRY CABOT LODGE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Senator FALL, who is still completely occupied in fighting the epidemic of influenza among members of his family and his ranch employees requests me to wire you the following correspondence, with the request that you read it in the Senate.

GEORGE R. CRAIG,
Chairman New Mexico Republican Committee.

[First. Copy of a telegram from W. P. Metcalf, Socialist candidate for the Senate from New Mexico and a Democratic supporter.]

ALBUQUERQUE, N. MEX., October 26.

President WOODROW WILSON,
Washington, D. C.:

Political friends of Senator FALL are claiming that he has earnestly and sympathetically given your administration his support during the war. It is also claimed that his reelection would be satisfactory to you and that you will be willing to depend upon his support in settling our foreign relations at the conclusion of the war. Will you be kind enough to indicate your view regarding these matters for the benefit of those citizens of New Mexico who want to give you their whole support in this crisis.

(Signed) W. P. METCALF.

[Second. Copy of a telegram from Woodrow Wilson, in reply to above.]

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, D. C., October 28.

W. P. METCALF,
Albuquerque, N. Mex.:

Your question whether I would be willing to depend upon Senator FALL'S support in settling our foreign relations is easily answered. I would not. He has given such repeated evidence of his entire hostility to this administration that I would be ignoring his whole course of action if I did. No one who wishes to sustain me can intelligently vote for him. If that is the issue the voters of New Mexico wish to vote upon, it is easily determined.

(Signed) WOODROW WILSON.

The two above-quoted telegrams were published by the Democratic State committee of New Mexico in a full-page newspaper advertisement decorated with the American flag upheld by a soldier and a sailor, and stating in adding to the two telegrams the following:

"Metcalf question and the President's answer. No one who wishes to sustain Woodrow Wilson can intelligently vote for ALBERT BACON FALL for the United States Senate. Straight from the White House, where our great President is directing the destinies of our soldiers and sailors on land and sea. Like a bolt of lighting from a cloudless New Mexico sky, this telegram came yesterday to the voters of this State, characteristic of Woodrow Wilson, frank, fearless, a blow from the shoulder. Men of New Mexico, think deeply and well in this great crisis. Sink personal preference, abandon deeply rooted political prejudice, awaken to the needs of the Nation. Respond to the call of a great leader. Send W. B. WALTON to the United States Senate and Granville A. Richardson to Congress. Do what the President asks you to do."

[Third. Copy of a telegram from Senator ALBERT B. FALL to the chairman of the Republican State committee.]

Hon. GEORGE R. CRAIG,
Chairman, Albuquerque, N. Mex.:

Your wire repeating the President's message to Mr. Metcalf, saying, among other things, in reference to my candidacy, "No one who wishes to sustain me can intelligently vote for him," received. In the interests of democracy, decency, and the good name of our country, I am glad this telegram is only signed "Woodrow Wilson," and not as President, although Mr. Wilson never has understood this distinction. I always have. It is true that Roosevelt, LODGE, and others in 1898 appealed to the voters to stand by McKinley when the Democrats in Congress were not doing so. This attitude of that party, followed by their platform in 1900, is the principal reason I quit that party. The martyred McKinley, then President and Commander in Chief, had too high a conception or his great office to appeal in a partisan way to the voters. I have always stood by President Wilson, and despite his cruel and partisan appeal I will continue to do so until the 4th of March next, at any rate so long as he stands by the country, and I will as heretofore give him the benefit of the doubt. I will, however, support no Bolsheviki-German peace, nor will the great people of Britain, France, Italy, and other allies, nor the people of this country allow such a peace to be made. This is my only public utterance since my nomination and must be the last during the campaign. I left my wife, one daughter, and four grandchildren four days since in Alamogordo convalescing, thanks to that Almighty Power to which all but Kaisers in Germany and elsewhere eventually turn. I came here to give medicine and what care is possible to 10 of my people living on ranch who are yet alive and convalescing. There have been several deaths among them. We have no physician. Am returning to Alamo Gordo to-day for a few hours, for the purpose of bringing home my wife and the remaining members of my family.

ALBERT B. FALL.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, in order that the joint resolution containing the Agricultural appropriations may be perfected, it will have to go back to the House. Therefore, I suggest that the Senate take a recess until 2 o'clock p. m.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator if it is really necessary for the Senate to recess?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. In order to perfect the joint resolution and make it effective to-day, it is necessary for it to be returned to the House for enrollment. The House will notify us that it has been signed by the Speaker, and then it will be signed by the Presiding Officer of the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. Then I will ask the Senator if he will not make the hour 3 o'clock instead of 2 o'clock?

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will be very glad to make it 3 o'clock.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I hope the matter can be arranged without interfering with the meeting of the Finance Committee this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the reason why I suggested 3 o'clock was that the appointments that we make ahead—and I refer to members of the Finance Committee—are between the hours when the committee adjourns and meets again in the afternoon. That is the only time we have to meet men that come in from different parts of the country to consult with members of that committee. There is no need of the committee adjourning and no need of our coming here at all if the purpose of the session is simply to enable the Presiding Officer to sign the joint resolution.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then I see no objection to making it half past 2 o'clock, so as not to interfere in any way with the deliberations of the Finance Committee.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I will suggest that it be made 1.45. I am informed that the joint resolution can be completed by that time. I therefore will change my motion, and move that the Senate take a recess until 1.45 p. m.

The motion was agreed to.

At the expiration of the recess the Senate reassembled.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, we are waiting for the joint resolution from the House, which will be here in a few minutes. It only requires the approval of the Presiding Officer; and I hope at the end of that time we will be able, by consent, to adjourn until Monday. We have no quorum. It is really impossible for us to transact business with reference to any matter where there is a division of opinion. For this reason we can not dispose of the Agricultural bill with the provision intended to protect war workers from profiteers.

I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate adjourns to-day it adjourn to meet on Monday morning at 12 o'clock.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we can hardly consent to that now. As long as we are going to wait until the joint resolution comes over, I think the Senator had better wait until then and make the request at that time.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I do not press the request at this time, as of course I can not obtain unanimous consent unless everybody consents.

The situation with reference to the Agricultural bill is this, and I think it due the Senate that it should be brought to the attention of the Senate:

There is an agreement between the two Houses on all of the features of the bill except the amendment placed upon the bill with a view to checking profiteering in the District of Columbia. The relation between the two Houses on this subject dates back to last May. The House passed a bill looking to the control of profiteering, providing for the forfeiture in taxes of excess charges. The Senate did not accept the view of the House, at least in part, because the Senate did not desire the excess charges collected from the tenants. The Senate substitute prepared for the House bill was along the line of checking the original excess charges. I have not, however, studied the House bill with sufficient care to discuss it.

It may be that the Senate substitute was not perfect. I would change it without any hesitation myself in a number of respects if I could; an effort was made through the conferees to accomplish an adjustment and to bring about legislation, when, on account of letters written and words spoken, our Senate conferees were not willing to meet, in view of the criticism placed upon them, with the House conferees.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President, before we proceed to adjourn for to-day, would it be proper for me to ask the Senator if he thinks there is any probability of an agreement between the two Houses?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I was just coming to that; and I will try to answer the question.

The Senate agreed with the view that the references made by the House conferees, or by the chairman of the House conferees, to the Senate conferees were so offensive that we could not ask them to confer longer with the House conferees. Certainly the attitude of the chairman of the House conferees did not indicate the possibility of the kind of conference each body would desire. Now, there was a very simple remedy. We discharged our conferees. The remedy was for the House to discharge its conferees and give us new conferees, whom the Senate would have promptly met, and the legislation might have been agreed on. I will not criticize the House conferees or criticize the House. If I did I would be drifting in the direction of conduct which I am myself disposed to criticize.

The original bill and the Senate substitute can be brought before both Houses at any time by action upon the part of the House appointing new conferees. If the House insists on refusing to legislate through the Post Office Committee, and will give us a new set of conferees from the District Committee, the Senate will promptly name conferees.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator correct in saying that the Senate conferees upon that bill have been discharged? That is not my recollection, but simply that they have been instructed not to meet the House conferees.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think I have here a copy of the resolution discharging the conferees.

Mr. McCUMBER. I thought it was merely excusing them from service.

Mr. LENROOT. That is all.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will read the resolution:

Resolved, That the managers on the part of the Senate on said bill be, and they are hereby, excused from further service as such managers until otherwise ordered by the Senate, and that the Secretary of the Senate be directed to transmit a copy of this resolution to the House of Representatives.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator regard that as equivalent to a discharge of the conferees—merely excusing them on account of the statements that were made by the chairman of the House conferees?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. They are excused from further action.

Mr. LENROOT. Until otherwise ordered by the Senate; but it leaves the conferees still in existence.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. But the transmission of that resolution to the House is an invitation from the Senate to the House to name other conferees.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. The passage of the resolution by the Senate did not change the parliamentary situation; and there is no way that I know of in which the matter can be brought before the House unless the Senate shall take affirmative action discharging its conferees, which has not yet been done.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. My own view was that that resolution was tantamount to the discharge of the Senate conferees. It relieved them from further duty. It sent the original and substitute to the House with the information that the Senate conferees were relieved. It did not undertake in any way to dictate to the House, but I feel sure Senators hoped the House, in view of what had happened, would ask a continuation of conferences with new conferees.

Mr. PAGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Vermont?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. PAGE. I am quite willing to remain here an indefinite time if it will do any good in the matter of closing up this long-continued dispute; but before we adjourn I should like to have something as definite as the Senator can give us as to the probabilities of closing the dispute.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. What I was going to say was simply this: I see but two ways to bring it to a close. Either new conferees must be appointed from the Committee on the District of Columbia, or the House must agree to take up with us the amendment put upon the Agricultural bill. Those two ways only are open.

Mr. PAGE. If it is proper for me to ask the question, Have not the House conferees virtually said to us that under no circumstances would they consider a further meeting on this matter?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The conferees on the Agricultural bill have, but that subject has not come before a full House; and, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] suggested, when a full House deals with that subject they may be so interested in stopping profiteering in the District that they may take different action. So my own view is to let the whole matter go over until next week, when, after the election, there probably will be more Members of the House and the Senate present. I do not think we should undertake to dispose of it until that time.

Mr. PAGE. The Senator then has sincere hopes that something may be effected?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I always have a very hopeful disposition. I would not like anyone else to predicate action upon my hopes; but let us try again in some way to obtain action. Let us hope if the House will not accept legislation on the Agricultural bill some other plan of action will come from the House. The first bill prepared in the House by the District Committee and the Senate substitute are now in the House with the action of the Senate. I do not believe a deliberative body exists which, under similar circumstances, would have acted with more consideration than the Senate. My great respect for the House leads me to hope for some action which will make legislation possible.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Senator will examine the debate on that resolution, I think he will find that the question was raised as to whether a motion would be in order later to discharge the Senate conferees and ask for another conference, and the Presiding Officer informally held that such a motion would be in order. It was not the thought of the Senate that these conferees should be discharged by that action.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With the bill and substitute in the House probably action must first take place there.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, informed the Senate that, in the absence of the Speaker and by leave of the House, the House had appointed Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, one of the Representatives from the State of Tennessee, as Speaker pro tempore.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker pro tempore of the House had signed the enrolled joint resolution (H. J. Res. 340) making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Presiding Officer.

CALLING OF THE ROLL.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock meridian.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is a motion to adjourn to a time certain, is it not?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that motion is open to debate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Then, Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

Mr. McCUMBER. I was about to do the same thing myself.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Benet	La Follette	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Culberson	Lenroot	Page	Smith, Ga.
Fletcher	McCumber	Poindexter
Hardwick	McNary	Robinson
Hitchcock	Martin, Va.	Simmons

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Seventeen Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is not present.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

Mr. McCUMBER. On that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when Mr. BANKHEAD's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence from the Chamber of my colleague Mr. BANKHEAD, on account of sickness.

Mr. FLETCHER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "yea."

Mr. HARDWICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kansas [Mr. CURTIS]. In the absence of that Senator I transfer my pair to the junior Senator from Missouri [Mr. WILFLEY] and vote "yea."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS] to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] and vote "nay."

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SMITH of Georgia (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] to the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] and vote "yea."

Mr. UNDERWOOD (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the junior Senator from Ohio [Mr. HARDING] to the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. SMOOT. The junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. FRANCE] is necessarily detained from the Senate to-day, and he requested me to make that announcement.

Mr. FLETCHER. I have been requested to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is absent on account of illness, and that the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is necessarily absent. I wish also to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent.

Mr. SMOOT. I have been requested to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY];

The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL] with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. KENDRICK];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON];

The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. KNOX] with the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN];

The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN] with the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS];

The Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS];

The Senator from Illinois [Mr. SHERMAN] with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON];

The Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED];

The Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING] with the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECKHAM];

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN] with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN]; and

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. WOLCOTT].

The result was announced—yeas 14, nays 8, as follows:

YEAS—14.

Benet	Hardwick	Pittman	Smith, Ga.
Culberson	Hitchcock	Robinson	Underwood
Fletcher	Kirby	Simmons
Gore	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ariz.

NAYS—8.

La Follette	McCumber	Nelson	Poindexter
Lenroot	McNary	Page	Smoot

NOT VOTING—74.

Ashurst	Gronna	Martin, Ky.	Smith, S. C.
Baird	Guion	Myers	Sterling
Bankhead	Hale	New	Sutherland
Beckham	Harding	Norris	Swanson
Borah	Henderson	Nugent	Thomas
Brandegee	Hollis	Overman	Thompson
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Owen	Townsend
Chamberlain	Johnson, S. Dak.	Penrose	Trammell
Colt	Jones, N. Mex.	Phelan	Vardaman
Cummins	Jones, Wash.	Pomerene	Wadsworth
Curtis	Kellogg	Ransdell	Walsh
Dillingham	Kendrick	Reed	Warren
Drew	Kenyon	Saulsbury	Watson
Fall	King	Shafroth	Weeks
Fernald	Knox	Sheppard	Wilfley
France	Lewis	Sherman	Williams
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Shields	Wolcott
Gerry	McKellar	Smith, Md.
Goff	McLean	Smith, Mich.

So the motion was agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, November 2, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, November 1, 1918.

(Continuation of legislative day of Thursday, October 31, 1918.)

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock to-day, for the reason that it is possible the Senate will act upon the continuing resolution to-day for the food-stimulation work of the Agricultural Department.

Mr. GOOD. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman make that 2 o'clock, for this reason: If the Senate does act upon it, it will hardly do so in time for the House to act by 1 o'clock, and we could just as well come back at 2, or even later. I think we ought to give the Senate time to act, and it is quite likely that there will be some discussion over there.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, let me suggest this to the gentleman: I happen to know that there are two or three Members here who have engagements at 2 o'clock. Why not make it 1.30 o'clock? That will give us time to get some lunch, and we shall know at that time whether it is possible to do anything then or not.

Mr. LEVER. I think the situation in the Senate is such that we will know very promptly whether they will act upon the resolution. Mr. Speaker, I modify the request by asking that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 1 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed, without amendment, House joint resolution 340, making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes.

ADMINISTERING OATH OF OFFICE TO SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LEVER. The Speaker pro tempore has not been sworn in by the House, and an examination of the precedents would give the impression that it might be well that that action be taken as a precaution. I desire to inquire if the Chair has made any inquiry himself on that point, and what conclusion he has reached?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the precedents very hastily. It seems that Speakers pro tempore designated or elected have not been sworn in as Speakers pro tempore during the time that they were merely presiding. The question of the signing of bills or resolutions by a Speaker pro tempore without his being sworn does not seem to have been definitely decided, although there is much in the books about it. If the present Speaker pro tempore is called upon to sign any written resolution or bill, it is his opinion that he should be sworn.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, then I suggest that the Chair designate some one to administer the oath.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will ask the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. BYRNS] to administer the oath of office. The Chair understands that some matter is to come up that the Speaker pro tempore will be called upon to sign?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee administered the oath of office to the Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, there is another matter that I feel ought to be called to the attention of the Chair, and that is the matter of informing the Senate of the action of the House in the election of its Speaker pro tempore. The precedents upon the subject are confused, but to make the situation doubly secure I offer the following resolution, which I send to the desk, and ask that it be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 448.

Resolved, That the Clerk inform the Senate that in the absence of the Speaker by leave of the House, the House has made choice of the Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, one of the Representatives from the State of Tennessee, as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from South Carolina yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. I desire to suggest whether or not an amendment should be offered so that the President be also notified? The precedents which the gentleman says are confusing go only to the question where a Speaker pro tempore has been elected for less than 10 days. A note to the final citation in Hinds' Precedents, second volume, section 1405, says that the present usage is to send a message to the President also. I suggest to the gentleman from South Carolina, if that be true, it may be wise to amend the resolution so that the Clerk shall also notify the President.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. While there seems to be some question under the rulings that have been made, it seems to me that the logical and proper thing to do would be to amend the resolution so as to include notice to the President. The President, like the Vice President, must sign any bill or resolution signed by the Speaker pro tempore. It seems to me that he should be officially notified of the action of the House.

Mr. LEVER. The gentleman from Arkansas has had opportunity to examine these later precedents and I have not. Let me inquire of the gentleman if the message is conveyed to the President by the Clerk of the House or by a committee?

Mr. WINGO. By the Clerk. I think the pending resolution could be amended by simply adding, in proper language, that the Clerk be directed also to notify the President of the United States. After I had conferred with the gentleman just before the House reconvened, I ran down these citations that we had not run down, and I found a note which I have not had a chance to pursue further, stating that the present usage is to send a message to the President also. As a matter of safety, and for the reason stated by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL], I think the gentleman from South Carolina should amend his resolution by adding the words "and the President of the United States."

Mr. LEVER. I shall be very glad to do that. The only point I raise is that it has never come to my attention in my service here that the President was informed of any action of the House except by a committee, certainly of the election of a Speaker.

Mr. MONDELL. As a matter of making assurance doubly sure, and as a courtesy to the President, it seems to me well to amend the resolution as suggested.

Mr. LEVER. I have no objection. The only point I raise is whether we shall inform him through the Clerk of the House or through a committee of the House. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Clerk again read the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, if the gentleman will indulge him for a moment, that the usual form is to notify the President of the United States of the election of a Speaker of the House through the Clerk of the House.

Mr. LEVER. Very good. Now, if the Clerk will read the resolution we can amend it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the Clerk will again report the resolution.

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House inform the Senate——

Mr. LEVER. And then add the words, "and the President of the United States."

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk inform the Senate and the President of the United States that in the absence of the Speaker by leave of the House, the House has made choice of the Hon. FINIS J. GARRETT, one of the Representatives from the State of Tennessee, as Speaker pro tempore.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution which I presented at first may be amended as read by the Clerk just now.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the amendment proposed may be agreed to. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is upon the resolution as amended.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, for the sake of the integrity of the record, the pro tempore officer is elected in the absence of the regular officer, and by the election will this become a permanent office for the remaining part of this Sixty-fifth Congress, or during this interim?

Mr. LEVER. The action of the House yesterday completely covered that situation.

Mr. FESS. Very well.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The life of the office of the Speaker pro tempore is limited by the action taken yesterday by the House.

Mr. FESS. I beg pardon, I had not noticed it.

The question was taken, and the resolution as amended was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, announced that the committee had examined and found truly enrolled the following joint resolution, when the Speaker pro tempore signed the same:

H. J. Res. 340. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, at the request of the majority leader, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN], it becomes my arduous duty to move that the House adjourn until next Monday at noon.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will withhold that for a second, I would like to ask the gentleman if he or any other gentleman on that side has any information as to the probability or possibility of a recess being had for a few days until after the election? Does the gentleman know what the status of that matter is?

Mr. LEVER. I confess I have no information about the matter except what I observed in the other body this morning, and from my observation and information over there, I would not think there is very much hope of a recess.

Mr. MONDELL. The outlook is not hopeful?

Mr. LEVER. Not very hopeful; no.

Mr. MONDELL. It would seem a very wise and proper thing to do, so as to give gentleman an opportunity to go home to vote.

Mr. LEVER. That is very true. The House is always wise in its judgment. I now move that the House adjourn until Monday at noon.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 43 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, November 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of War submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Panama Canal authorities for the fiscal years 1918 and 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1336); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SLOAN: A bill (H. R. 13127) granting pensions to widows of officers or enlisted men who served in United States Mexican border expeditionary forces; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. DENT: A bill (H. R. 13128) to provide for the taking over, improvement, relocation, construction, and maintenance of a system of national highways and State highways designed to facilitate the movement of troops, equipment, munitions, and supplies, and to promote the general welfare of the people of the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: A bill (H. R. 13129) granting a pension to Paulina Zacher; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CHANDLER of Oklahoma: A bill (H. R. 13130) granting a pension to Flora Middleton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LEA of California: A bill (H. R. 13131) granting a pension to Flora E. Tyler; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. CARY: Petition of Weber Schlitz Candy Co., protesting against the 10 per cent tax on candy manufacturers; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Milwaukee Auto Engine & Supply Co., in regard to House bill 12863; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of the Redel Candy Corporation, in regard to the contemplated 10 per cent tax on the gross sales of manufacturing confectioners; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PADGETT: Petition of sundry citizens of the State of Tennessee favoring the passage of House bill 5407, the osteopathic bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, November 2, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we pray Thee to lay Thy hand upon those men whom Thou hast called into places of leadership and power, that they may have the wisdom that cometh from on high; that they may have hearts responsive to the highest ideals; that they may have patience and courage to work out the problems that confront them; that they may have God's richest, highest blessings as leaders of a great people in this great crisis of the world's life. We pray Thy blessing upon the men who must bear the weight of the terrible responsibility of this day. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary (James M. Baker) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., November 2, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD, a Senator from the State of Alabama, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. UNDERWOOD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Brandegee	La Follette	Page	Smoot
Culberson	Lenroot	Pittman	Thomas
Dillingham	McCumber	Sheppard	Underwood
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Simmons
Gore	Nelson	Smith, Ariz.
Knox	Nugent	Smith, Ga.

Mr. FLETCHER. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Maryland [Mr. SMITH] is detained by illness; and that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN] is necessarily absent. I wish also to announce that my colleague [Mr. TRAMMELL] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair announces that a quorum is not present, 21 Senators having answered to their names.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and five minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 4, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 4, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come to Thee and lift our hearts in praise, in grateful recognition of Thy leadership and of the blessings that Thou hast brought upon us as a people. We thank Thee for the news that comes to us from across the sea, for the supremacy of the ideals for which Thou hast called us into existence as a Nation, for the blessings that rest upon our boys in the Army and Navy and for their victories. We pray that Thou wilt hasten the day of the final victory; we pray that Thou wilt give to those who deal with the final issues wisdom and courage and strength that come alone from God, that they may so plan that the world may be reestablished upon a permanent basis of righteousness and peace. For Christ's sake. Amen.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Assistant Secretary (Henry M. Rose) read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D. C., November 4, 1918.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. MORRIS SHEPPARD, a Senator from the State of Texas, to perform the duties of the Chair during my absence.

WILLARD SAULSBURY,
President pro tempore.

Mr. SHEPPARD thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last was read and approved.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHEPPARD introduced a bill (S. 5016) for the relief of Frances Elizabeth Pool, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Claims.

THE REVENUE.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 12863) to provide revenue, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

THE TARIFF—LETTER FROM LESLIE M. SHAW.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a week ago, in my absence, a letter was introduced into the RECORD, at my request, by the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] from the Hon. Leslie M. Shaw. The Senator from Arizona inadvertently stated in introducing the letter that its contents had been offensive to me. Such was not the case. My relations with the former Secretary of the Treasury are very cordial. There were some things in his letter which I thought to be based upon wrong assumptions, but the letter was in no sense offensive. This is the first opportunity which I have had to make that correction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 5, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 4, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

We bless Thee, Infinite Spirit, our Heavenly Father, that cessation of hostilities seems imminent, and we pray that it may come right speedily in unconditional surrender of the enemies of civilization; that the entente powers may bring together the wisest statesmen, the bravest soldiers, and purest-hearted men, who shall sit in judgment upon those who have caused the world-wide war with its desolation in means and men, and who have filled the world with unprecedented sorrow and misery; that a world-wide peace may be established in justice and equity to all and upon a basis which shall forever free the world from all the chances of war through a permanent court of justice, whose duty it shall be to adjust all differences which shall arise in state and international conditions upon the principles established in the life, character, and precepts of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, October 31, 1918, was read and approved.

THE GALLERIES.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, several Members have suggested to me that the doors of the galleries of the House be reopened. Some weeks ago, it will be remembered, by order of the House the doors were closed. I understand that the Senate is to-day taking similar action. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the order closing the doors be vacated and that the Doorkeeper be instructed to open the galleries.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina asks unanimous consent that the order heretofore made closing the doors of the galleries be rescinded and that the doors be opened. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Doorkeeper will cause the doors to be opened.

HEALTH RECORD AT GERSTNER FIELD, LA.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I have a health report on Gerstner Field, aviation camp at Lake Charles, La., from the Lake Charles Press, and with the permission of the House I would like to insert it in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the matter which he has indicated.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the gentleman have it read from the Clerk's desk.

Mr. LAZARO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to have it read in my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana asks unanimous consent to have the matter read in his time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

GERSTNER HEALTH RECORD UNEQUALED—BARRING PLANE ACCIDENTS, BUT FIVE DEATHS—INFLUENZA MILD AND VERY LITTLE AT THAT—NOT A SINGLE DEATH AT THE FIELD CAUSED BY ILLNESS CONTRACTED HERE.

Gerstner Field has been established about one year, and during that time has made a record that stands alone, no doubt, in the history of all camps, fields, forts, cantonments or concentration points where men in the service are located, in its health record.

Barring accidents, there have been but five deaths at Gerstner Field since the boys began training there. Three of these deaths were accidental, though not resulting from aeroplane accidents. One boy was killed by lightning several months ago. He was out in a tent when a thunder and lightning storm came and was struck and killed by lightning. Two boys died as a result of drinking bay rum. This was accidental, of course, but had no connection with their duties and might have happened anywhere. One boy died of heart trouble and one of pneumonia, which he contracted before coming to Gerstner Field.

This is really a very enviable record for any field, and especially so in view of the present influenza epidemic which has hit the camps so hard. Camps, fields, and cantonments in all sections of the country affected by the influenza have suffered losses among their men from the disease, and pneumonia has also been a problem almost over the entire country.

Since the advent of influenza several cases have developed at Gerstner Field, but the medical corps has given statements from time to time regarding their mildness. Patients have been ill only for a few days, and none of them have been seriously ill. During the period of time the field maintains its quarantine the boys are going on with their work, and no real interruption has been occasioned by the influenza.

During the past few weeks several hundred men have been added to the camp roster, as many as 500 coming in one day. From time to time draft men have been added in groups of from 25 to 35, and with all these new people coming in from every section of the country, the disease has not spread and has given little trouble.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. LEVER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House, under its previous order, adjourned until Thursday, November 7, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota introduced a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 57) providing that the process of demobilization of the United States Army after the war shall be done gradually and that the illiterates be the last to be demobilized, and that elementary instruction be given to such illiterates before they are discharged, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 5, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee on this critical day in the world's history, when the great electorate of this country registers its choice of leadership, and we bless Thee that Thou hast given to us unity and accord, and that in the higher levels of our life there is a blessed brotherhood among us. We pray Thee to lay Thy hand upon men for places of leadership, that the power vested in them may be justified by their wisdom and their grace in dealing with the great issues of the present time. We pray Thy blessing upon our Army and Navy, and that Thou wilt hasten the day when final victory shall come to them. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

AMENDMENT OF ANTINARCOTIC LAW.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented the petition of Dr. William Y. Ward, of Ivanhoe, Tex., praying for the repeal of certain clauses in the Harrison antinarcotic law, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHEPPARD introduced a bill (S. 5017) to investigate the cost and practicability of an aerial mail route to Texas and the Southwest; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, November 6, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, November 6, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy guidance and blessing as we attempt to discharge the duties that have come upon us. We have found, even in the narrow sphere of life, that human wisdom and strength are not sufficient for human life. We dare not face the mighty issues that are now before us unless we have Thy guidance and Thy blessing.

We pray Thy blessing upon all whom Thou hast called into places of authority and power. We pray that these men who are to represent the people may represent them in their highest achievements of Christian civilization; that they may be men who fear God and seek to do His will.

Guide us in the duties of this day. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had, on the 4th instant, approved and signed the following acts:

S. 3735. An act to provide for enlistments in the National Guard of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; and

S. 4886. An act providing for the sale of certain lands in the original town site of Port Angeles, Wash.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, November 7, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 7, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we thank Thee that Thou hast so spoken to the moral judgment of all men that our answering conscience has brought us into alignment with all that is true and best in human civilization and has recorded itself as well pleased with the service and sacrifice that we have made for the freedom of the world.

We thank Thee to-day for Thy blessing and leadership, the providence that has surrounded our men on the fighting line. We thank Thee that they are sweeping on to certain victory. We pray that the day may soon dawn when wars shall be no more in all the earth, when righteousness and truth shall prevail everywhere. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn until Monday next at 12 o'clock noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 7, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon and was called to order by Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Thy grace, O Lord God, our Heavenly Father, be upon us, that as rational and moral beings, fashioned after Thine own image, we may quit ourselves like men under all the trying circumstances of life and thus prove ourselves worthy of the precious gifts bestowed upon us, until we all reach the ideals exemplified in the life and character of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, November 4, 1918, was read and approved.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] whether there has been any change in the program? I have received messages from several Members who want to know whether it is necessary for them to return.

Mr. KITCHIN. I see no reason for changing the program under which we have been operating.

Mr. WINGO. In other words, they can rely upon the statements heretofore made? No circumstances have arisen to change the conditions?

Mr. KITCHIN. No.

LEAVE TO ADDRESS THE HOUSE.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WINGO. I yield the floor.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to proceed for 15 minutes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to proceed for 15 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, of course I would like to see my friend from North Dakota have the opportunity of addressing this very full House, but under the gentlemen's agreement I understand that we have all been denied that privilege, even the privilege of extending remarks. Does the gentleman feel that under the gentlemen's agreement his request would be proper?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. May I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LAZARO] was given permission to proceed on the last day of meeting? There is nothing political in what I am going to say. I would like to proceed for 15 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. I should not object to the gentleman proceeding politically. I do not know of any more harm he could do than has been done. [Laughter.] I was not present when the gentleman from Louisiana secured permission to address the House or I would have called attention to it. I think these gentlemen's agreements, when made, should be kept. The other day I wanted to insert a telegram in the RECORD, nonpolitical, but my attention was called to the fact that it would be in contravention to the agreement, and then I had it put in the RECORD indirectly in the Senate.

Mr. LEVER rose.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman from South Carolina will recall that permission was given to the gentleman from Louisiana the other day.

Mr. LEVER. Yes.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will reduce my request to five minutes.

Mr. KITCHIN. Suppose the gentleman proceeds for one minute, which was the time granted to Mr. LAZARO, and then we will live up to the rule thereafter; or, say, two minutes.

Mr. WINGO. What does the gentleman wish to discuss?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The resolution that I introduced on November 4 providing for the gradual demobilization of the Army in order to prevent industrial disturbance, and that the illiterate soldiers be discharged last and be given a brief, intensive educational course in the three R's.

Mr. WINGO. I myself would like to address the House for an hour on that subject, and under the circumstances I do not think the gentleman ought to press his request. There are other gentlemen on this side of the House who would like to discuss the same subject, but we have agreed to defer it until we have resumed active sessions.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. You are not going to object to at least five minutes?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the gentleman proceeding for five minutes?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I will withdraw the request, as there seems to be objection to it. After the expiration of the gentlemen's agreement referred to by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. WINGO], I shall renew my request for time to discuss this highly important subject.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HAWLEY. I should like to inquire of the gentleman from North Carolina if he intends to continue the arrangement heretofore entered into for three-day adjournments?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. HAWLEY. And there will be no business coming up until what time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, as we understood, there will be no business transacted until the Senate passes the revenue bill.

Mr. HAWLEY. Has the gentleman any information as to when that may be?

Mr. KITCHIN. When I left here, about November 1, I thought I knew about when it would be, but we can not tell now when it will be. Some conditions have arisen since then that may delay it a little more than we first expected.

Mr. HAWLEY. It will not be passed within 10 days, then?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think the plan of the Senate is to report it out by the 12th, and try to finish it by the 25th.

Mr. HAWLEY. It will not be passed inside of 10 days or two weeks, then?

Mr. KITCHIN. Oh, no; certainly not before the 25th of November.

Mr. HAWLEY. And the gentleman intends to ask that the House continue its present arrangement, and that no business shall be transacted until that time?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes; no business will be transacted except on the conference report, as to which there was an understanding when we had the gentlemen's agreement.

Mr. TOWNER. Will there be any effort made to obtain a quorum on the 12th?

Mr. KITCHIN. No; there will not.

Mr. Speaker, I move that the House adjourn until Monday next.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The agreement covers that. The gentleman from North Carolina moves that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 9 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, November 11, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation for construction of additional building for Hygienic Laboratory, Washington, D. C. (H. Doc. No. 1337), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII,

Mr. FRENCH introduced a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 342) to select a commission of seven members, to be known as the United States Employment Commission, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 11, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come before Thee with inexpressible joy and gratitude because Thy power has gotten us the victory. We thank Thee that there has come the end of hostilities in the great world war. We bless God that Thou hast set Thy throne in the heavens and that Thy kingdom ruleth over all. Never again shall brute force rise up to dethrone the spiritual ideals of humanity. We thank Thee for the promise and prophecy of the coming of the reign of the Prince of Peace. Give to us in this great day wisdom for the problems that confront us, that those whom Thou dost call to settle the affairs of nations and to reestablish the relationships between peoples may be men who are wise with the wisdom that cometh from on high, strong and brave and true. So do Thou guide us on that civilization may advance and that Thine own kingdom shall rule everywhere. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, November 7, 1918, was read and approved.

NATIONAL FOREST RESERVATION COMMISSION.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In accordance with section 4 of an act to enable any State to cooperate with any other State or States, or with the United States, for the protection of the watersheds of navigable streams, and to appoint a commission for the acquisition of lands for the purpose of conserving the navigability of the navigable rivers, commonly known as the National Forest Reservation Commission, there being a vacancy on the commission, the Chair appoints the Hon. PETER GOELET GERRY, a Senator from the State of Rhode Island, a member of the commission. The Secretary will notify the Secretary of War of the appointment.

CONTINGENT EXPENSES OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA (S. DOC. NO. 299.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, transmitting, pursuant to law, a detailed statement of the expenditures from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented memorials of sundry candy manufacturers in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the imposition of a 10 per cent sales tax on candy, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials of the Stock Yards National Bank, of South St. Paul, the State Bank of Claremont, the Union National Bank of Rochester, the Austin National Bank of Austin, the First National Bank of Elmore, the People's State Bank of Milan, the Drovers' State Bank of South St. Paul, the First National Bank of St. Cloud, the State Bank of Lafayette, and the Farmers' National Bank of Alexandria, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the imposition of a 2-cent stamp tax on bank checks as proposed in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented the memorial of Benjamin T. Goldman, of St. Paul, Minn., relative to the proposed excess-profits provision in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

HENRY J. DAVIS.

Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 923) for the relief of Henry J. Davis, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 608) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bill were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred, as follows:

By Mr. MYERS:

A bill (S. 5018) authorizing the issuance of patent for certain lands to Paul Kropp; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 5019) for the construction of a memorial archway at Vicksburg, Miss., and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 5020) to amend section 10 of an act "to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes," approved March 21, 1918; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5021) granting an increase of pension to James H. Cornell; to the Committee on Pensions.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution (No. 58) authorizing the two Houses of Congress to assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, November 11, 1918, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the concurrent resolution (No. 58) just received from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the concurrent resolution of the House of Representatives, which was read, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 58.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 11th day of November, 1918, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate concur in the resolution of the House of Representatives.

The motion was agreed to.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed.

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4947) to make an appropriation to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States, and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the United States and others, and for other purposes.

It is a bill designed to initiate the well-known and admirable plan of Secretary of the Interior Lane as a part of our after-the-war reconstruction and to furnish homes on the unused public lands and certain other unused lands of the country for our returning soldiers and sailors. It is a measure of the highest importance. Nothing can surpass it now in importance. I hope the Senate will take up the bill at this time. I do not believe there will be any opposition to it. I can conceive of none. I know of no ground for any. If we do not take it up now, it will later be hard to get it up. The revenue bill will soon be coming up and then nothing else can be done. The revenue bill will consume all of our time until disposed of. The war is about to end; in fact, has ended so much sooner than anyone supposed that I think we ought right now to pay attention to this important measure and dispose of it without delay. It should not take 15 minutes to explain this bill to the satisfaction of the Senate, and a few minutes of discussion should be sufficient to put it upon its passage, and it should undoubtedly be passed. It has been favorably reported by the Senate Committee on Public Lands and is ready for consideration and action by the Senate. In fact, the reading by the Clerk of the bill and the committee's report should be sufficient to cause it to pass the Senate. No further explanation should be required. It should pass unanimously. I urge my motion to proceed with consideration of the bill.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana what amount the bill carries?

Mr. MYERS. One million dollars, or so much thereof as may be needed.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought we were going to begin a course of economy now.

Mr. MYERS. So far as the war is concerned, I think we will, and we ought to do so, and I am heartily in favor of it; but we all realize that there must be some reconstruction legislation for the peace to follow the war and to readjust economic conditions, and we can not do that without some expenditure of money. In some instances I believe it would be a wise expenditure. If the Senate thinks the amount sought by this bill to be appropriated is too much, let the Senate cut down the amount; but I think the bill ought to be considered now. If it is not considered in the next few days, it may not be heard of again during this session of Congress. This will be a very crowded session.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not think the country would suffer much if the bill never was heard of.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator is entitled to his opinion, but a great many think differently; in fact, nearly all who have heard of it think differently, and I suggest that the Senator wait to learn more of it before expressing such an opinion.

Mr. PENROSE. Here we assemble after reading with great interest in this morning's paper a statement by the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations to the effect that economy is to be the order of the day, and the first proposition that comes up is for the expenditure of $1,000,000.

Mr. MYERS. I agree that economy ought to be the motto of the day, but that does not mean that we will never expend another dollar for any purpose whatever. I think it should be taken to mean that our expenditure of money should be judiciously made and carefully guarded, but some things are necessary and must be provided for. This would be a very wise and most beneficial expenditure. I ask that Senators learn something of the bill before forming opinions.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. MYERS. I ask that the bill and the report of the committee be read by the Clerk for the information of the Senate.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator from Montana has asked for the reading of the report.

Mr. MYERS. For the reading of the bill and the report of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. As we are to be here until 1 o'clock, I make no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, with a view to providing legitimate avenues of sustenance and maintenance for the soldiers and sailors of the United States who shall return to the United States and to private life at the end of the present war in which the United States Government is engaged, and with a view to maintaining in a stable condition the economic interests of the United States and encouraging food production, agriculture, industry, and commerce and affording employment for the millions of returned soldiers and sailors and no longer needed munitions workers and shipbuilders and others employed in war industries at the conclusion of the aforesaid war, and for the general welfare and development of the country, the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized and directed forthwith to make or cause to be made a comprehensive survey and classification of all unentered public lands of the United States Government, and of all irrigable, as well as unirrigable, lands of the public domain, and of all privately owned, cut-over, and logged lands in the United States which are now idle, unoccupied, and unproductive, and of all privately owned swamp or overflowed lands in the United States now unused and unproductive, and of all other totally unused and unproductive lands of the United States, privately owned or a part of the public domain which, in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, might be reclaimed and put to productive use, with a view to ascertaining the area, location, nature, and possibilities of all such lands and any other waste lands susceptible of reclamation, settlement, and cultivation, in order to determine what may be necessary to bring them under cultivation and to put them to productive uses, and the amount of money and what methods may be necessary therefor; and he is further authorized and directed to make careful investigation of possible plans and methods of bringing the different classes of all such lands under settlement by returned soldiers and sailors of the United States and industrial laborers out of employment at or before the conclusion of the aforesaid war, and the best methods and terms of making public lands of the United States available therefor, and the best methods and terms for acquisition by the United States of all such privately owned, cut-over, logged, or overflowed lands or other unused privately owned lands, and what would be proper, appropriate, and generous terms of disposition of any or all thereof to returned and honorably discharged soldiers and sailors of the United States and to former munitions workers and others employed during all or any part of said war at war industries, and to citizens of the United States in general. That the Secretary of the Interior shall investigate thoroughly all of the aforesaid subjects and everything connected therewith and the policy of encouraging all such persons to settle on some of such lands and to engage in agriculture, horticulture, farming, and live-stock raising, and to ascertain what amount of capital it would take therefor and how it should be furnished and upon what terms. In doing so the Secretary of the Interior shall use and have at his disposition and under his control the General Land Office and all of its officials and employees, the Reclamation Service and all of its officials and employees, the Geological Survey and all of its officials and employees, and any other agency of the United States Government which, upon his request, the President of the United States may designate or direct to aid him in any of the aforesaid work, and in addition thereto the Secretary of the Interior may employ for such length of time as he may see fit any person or persons, agencies, or instrumentalities not connected with the United States Government and such other employees as he may deem necessary; and upon the completion of all thereof, which is hereby directed to be done as soon as reasonable and possible, the Secretary of the Interior shall, as soon as feasible, make full report of all thereof and of all of his work thereunder to the Congress of the United States, which report shall be accompanied by such recommendations as may be proper and as he may see fit to make, and by the submission of any scheme or plan for the disposition, settlement, and cultivation of such lands as aforesaid that he may devise and recommend, together with an estimate by him of the probable cost thereof.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying out the provisions hereof there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury of the United States otherwise unappropriated, the sum of $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be expended under the direction and control of the Secretary of the Interior and under rules, regulations, and plans to be by him made and promulgated. With the aforesaid report to the Congress the Secretary of the Interior shall make to the Congress report of how much money herein appropriated was expended and how expended.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the report of the committee.

The Secretary read the report submitted by Mr. MYERS, from the Committee on Public Lands, October 7, 1918, as follows:

The Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 4947) to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes, having had the same under consideration, begs leave to report it back to the Senate with an amendment, and as amended recommend that the bill do pass.

The bill was referred to the Department of the Interior, and the Secretary of the department furnished the committee with the following report thereon:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, September 23, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am in receipt of a copy of Senate bill 4947, introduced by yourself, together with a request from the Committee on Public Lands for a report thereon.

This bill in brief provides for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes.

This measure has my hearty approval. I believe, however, that the work necessary to do now to meet the needs of returning soldiers and sailors can be done for $1,000,000 or less.

I am now having prepared under the Reclamation Service a rough survey of the country which will show those largest bodies of land which may be wisely placed under irrigation, those which have been cut over, and those which can be reclaimed by draining. I also am gathering facts as to the size and availability of the bodies of unused tillable lands in the country, for it has seemed to me likely that each State might, to some degree, care to cooperate in the providing of farm homes for its own returned soldiers, and that it was well to have some information in hand for the Congress on this matter.

The appropriation made by the Congress of $100,000 as to irrigable lands and $100,000 for the other classes is, of course, insufficient for more than what I have termed a rough survey. It will enable us to know where those lands are which may be available. But this is no more than the beginning of the task if we are to be ready against the return of our troops from abroad to offer them an opportunity to build farm homes for themselves for which they shall repay the Government throughout a long term of years.

We must know, first, what lands are available for such use. Then we must have surveys and estimates made which will enable us to say which bodies of land of the various classes are most available, and that from many standpoints—soil, climate, markets, relative cost of reclamation. And, thirdly, when these selections are made in the different sections of the country plans in detail must be made which can be submitted to the Congress for the development of these projects. To do this as to the drainable lands of the South, for instance, or the irrigable lands of the West, will necessitate speed if we are to meet the soldiers on their return with a positive proposition that they may take new employment under the Government in constructive national work.

I beg to inclose a copy of a letter sent to the President and one to the Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY, of the House of Representatives.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

HON. HENRY L. MYERS,
United States Senate.

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, May 31, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: I believe the time has come when we should give thought to the preparation of plans for providing opportunity for our soldiers returning from the war. Because this department has handled similar problems, I consider it my duty to bring this matter to the attention of yourself and Congress.

Every country has found itself face to face with this situation at the close of a great war. From Rome, under Cæsar, to France, under Napoleon, down even to our own Civil War, the problem arose as to what could be done with the soldiers to be mustered out of military service.

At the close of the Civil War America faced a somewhat similar situation. But fortunately at that time the public domain offered opportunity to the home-returning soldiers. The great part the veterans of that war played in developing the West is one of our epics. The homestead law had been signed by Lincoln in the second year of the war, so that out of our wealth in lands we had farms to offer the million of veterans. It was also the era of transcontinental railway construction. It was likewise the period of rapid, yet broad and full, development of towns and communities and States.

To the great number of returning soldiers land will offer the great and fundamental opportunity. The experience of wars points out the lesson that our service men, because of army life, with its openness and activity, will largely seek out-of-doors vocations and occupations. This fact is accepted by the allied European nations. That is why their programs and policies of relocating and readjustment emphasize the opportunities on the land for the returning soldier. The question, then, is, What land can be made available for farm homes for our soldiers?

We do not have the bountiful public domain of the sixties and seventies. In a literal sense, for the use of it on a generous scale for soldier farm homes as in the sixties, "the public domain is gone." The official figures at the end of the fiscal year, June 30, 1917, show this: We have unappropriated land in the continental United States to the amount of 230,657,755 acres. It is safe to say that not one-half of this land will ever prove to be cultivable in any sense. So we have no land in any way comparable to that in the public domain when Appomattox came and men turned westward with army rifle and "roll blanket" to begin life anew.

While we do not have that matchless public domain of 1865, we do have millions of acres of undeveloped lands that can be made available for our home-coming soldiers. We have arid lands in the West, cut-over lands in the Northwest, Lake States, and South, and also swamp lands in the Middle West and South, which can be made available through the proper development. Much of this land can be made suitable for farm homes if properly handled. But it will require that each type of land be dealt with in its own particular fashion. The arid land will require water, the cut-over land will require clearing, and the swamp land must be drained. Without any of these aids, they remain largely "No man's land." The solution of these problems is no new thing. In the admirable achievement of the Reclamation Service in reclamation and drainage we have abundant proof of what can be done.

Looking toward the construction of additional projects, I am glad to say that plans and investigations have been under way for some time. A survey and study has been in the course of consummation by the Reclamation Service on the great Colorado Basin. That great project, I believe, will appeal to the new spirit of America. It would mean the conquest of an empire in the Southwest. It is believed that more than 3,000,000 of acres of arid land could be reclaimed by the completion of the upper and lower Colorado Basin projects.

It has been officially estimated that more than 15,000,000 acres of irrigable land now remain in the Government's hands. This is the great remaining storehouse of Government land for reclamation. Under what policy and program millions of these acres could be reclaimed for future farms and homes remains for legislation to determine. The amount of swamp and cut-over lands in the United States that can be made available for farming is extensive. Just how much there is has never been determined with any degree of accuracy. Practically all of it has passed into private ownership. For that reason in considering its use it would be necessary to work out a policy between the private owners and the Government unless the land was purchased. It has been estimated that the total area of swamp and overflowed lands in the United States is between seventy and eighty million acres. Of this amount it is stated that about "60,000,000 acres can be reclaimed and made profitable for agriculture." The undeveloped swamp lands lie chiefly in Florida, in the States along the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, in the Mississippi Delta, and in Missouri, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, and California.

What amount of land in its natural state unfit for farm homes can be made suitable by cultivation by drainage only thorough surveys and studies can develop. We know that authentic figures show that more than 15,000,000 acres have been reclaimed for profitable farming, most of which lies in the Mississippi River Valley.

The amount of cut-over lands in the United States, of course, it is impossible even in approximation to estimate. These lands, however, lie largely in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, the Lake States, and the Northwestern States. A rough estimate of their number is about 200,000,000 acres—that is, of land suitable for agricultural development. Substantially all this cut-over or logged-off land is in private ownership. The failure of this land to be developed is largely due to inadequate method of approach. Unless a new policy of development is worked out in cooperation between the Federal Government, the States, and the individual owners a greater part of it will remain unsettled and uncultivated. The undeveloped cut-over lands lie chiefly in the Pacific Northwest (particularly in Washington and Oregon), in the Lake States (Minnesota, Michigan, and Wisconsin), and in the South Atlantic and Gulf coastal States (Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, and Texas).

Any plan for the development of land for the returning soldier will come face to face with the fact that a new policy will have to meet the new conditions. The era of free or cheap land in the United States has passed. We must meet the new conditions of developing lands in advance; security must to a degree displace speculation. Some of the defects in our old system have been described by Dr. Elwood Mead in these words:

"Science (should) have gone hand in hand with the settlement of the arid and semiarid country, and all that science could give would have been utilized, first in the creation of the conditions of settlement and then in aiding the settler in difficult tasks. Because nothing was done, these heroic but uninformed souls were bedeviled by the winds, cold, drought, and insect pests. They wasted their efforts, lost their hopes and ambitions, and a tragic percentage left, impoverished and embittered. The tragic part of this history is that nearly all this suffering and loss could have been avoided under a carefully thought-out plan of development."

There are certain tendencies which we ought to face frankly in our consideration of a policy for land to the home-coming soldier. First, the drift to farm tenancy. The experience of the world shows without question that the happiest people, the best farms, and the soundest political conditions are found where the farmer owns the home and the farm lands. The growth of tenancy in America shows an increase of 32 per cent for the 20 years between 1890 and 1910. Second, the drift to urban life. In 1880 of the total population of the United States 29.5 per cent of our people resided in cities, and 70.5 per cent in the country. At the census of 1910, 46.3 per cent resided in cities and 53.7 per cent remained in the country. It is evident that since the war in Europe there has been a decided increase in the trend toward the city, because of industrial conditions. The adoption by the United States of new policies in its land development plans for returning veterans will also contribute to the amelioration of these two dangers to American life.

A plan of land development, whereby land is developed in large areas, subdivided into individual farms, then sold to actual bona-fide farmers on a long-time payment basis, has been in force not only in the United States under the reclamation act, but also in many other countries for several years. It has proved a distinct success. In Denmark, Ireland, New Zealand, and the Australian Commonwealth it has completely changed the land situation. One of the new features of this plan is that holders are aided in improving and cultivating the farm. In a word, there is organized community development. Its beneficial results have been well described by the Canadian commission which was appointed to investigate its results in New Zealand in these words:

"* * * the farmers have built better houses or remodeled their old ones, brought a larger acreage of land under cultivation that would otherwise be lying idle; have bought and kept better live stock; have bought and urged more labor-saving machinery on the farms and in the houses. * * * They keep more sheep and pigs and have so largely increased the revenue from their farms that they are able to meet the payments on the mortgages and to adopt a higher standard of living and a better one. Throughout the country a higher and better civilization is gradually being evolved; the young men and women who are growing up are happy and contented to remain at home on the farm and find ample time and opportunity for recreation and entertainment of a kind more wholesome and elevating than can be obtained in the cities."

It may be said that this country outside of Alaska has no frontier to-day. Of course, Alaska will still offer opportunity for a pioneer life. And of course Alaska likewise has yet unknown remarkable agricultural possibilities, but unless we make possible the development of this land by the men who desire their life in that field, we will lose a great national opportunity.

This is an immediate duty. It will be too late to plan for these things when the war is over. Our thought now should be given to the problem. And I therefore desire to bring to your mind the wisdom of immediately supplying the Interior Department with a sufficient fund with which to make the necessary surveys and studies. We should know by the time the war ends, not merely how much arid land can be irrigated, nor how much swamp land reclaimed, nor where the grazing land is and how many cattle it will support, nor how much cut-over land can be cleared, but we should know with definiteness where it is practicable to begin new irrigation projects, what the character of the land is, what the nature of the improvements needed will be, and what the cost will be. We should know also, not in a general way, but with particularity, what definite areas of swamp land may be reclaimed, how they can be drained, what the cost of the drainage will be, what crops they will raise. We should have in mind specific areas of grazing lands, with a knowledge of the cattle which are best adapted to them, and the practicability of supporting a family upon them. So, too, with our cut-over lands. We should know what it would cost to pull or "blow-out" stumps and to put the lands into condition for a farm home.

And all this should be done upon a definite planning basis. We should think as carefully of each one of these projects as George Washington thought of the planning of the city of Washington. We should know what it will cost to buy these lands if they are in private hands. In short, at the conclusion of the war the United States should be able to say to its returned soldiers: "If you wish to go upon a farm, here are a variety of farms of which you may take your pick, which the Government has prepared against the time of your returning." I do not mean by this to carry the implication that we should do any other work now than the work of planning. A very small sum of money put into the hands of men of thought, experience, and vision will give us a program which will make us feel entirely confident that we are not to be submerged industrially or otherwise by labor which we will not be able to absorb, or that we would be in a condition where we would show a lack of respect for those who return as heroes, but who will be without means of immediate self-support.

A million or two dollars, if appropriated now, will put this work well under way.

This plan does not contemplate anything like charity to the soldier. He is not to be given a bounty. He is not to be made to feel that he is a dependent. On the contrary, he is to continue in a sense in the service of the Government. Instead of destroying our enemies, he is to develop our resources.

The work that is to be done, other than the planning, should be done by the soldier himself. The dam or the irrigation project should be built by him, the ditches, the breaking of the land, and the building of the houses should, under proper direction, be his occupation. He should be allowed to make his own home, cared for while he is doing it, and given an interest in the land for which he can pay through a long period of years, perhaps 30 or 40 years. This same policy can be carried out as to the other classes of land. So that the soldier on his return would have an opportunity to make a home for himself, to build a home with money which we would advance and which he would repay, and for the repayment we would have an abundant security. The farms should not be turned over as the prairies were—unbroken, unfenced, without accommodations for men or animals. There should be prepared homes, all of which can be constructed by the men themselves, and paid for by them under a system of simple devising by which modern methods of finance will be applied to their needs.

As I have indicated, this is not a mere Utopian vision. It is, with slight variations, a policy which other countries are pursuing successfully. The plan is simple. I will undertake to present to the Congress definite projects for the development of this country through the use of the returned soldier by which the United States, lending its credit, may increase its resources and its population and the happiness of its people with a cost to itself of no more than the few hundred thousand dollars that it will take to study this problem through competent men. This work should not be postponed.

Cordially and faithfully, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

AUGUST 2, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. SHERLEY: I wish to express my appreciation of the action of your committee in appropriating $200,000 for the preliminary study of the unused lands of the country with the purpose in view of providing homes for returned soldiers. Since your action the President has approved a recommendation for an appropriation of $1,000,000 to be used in the same work. I am proceeding to organize this work in the hope that the larger amount will be available soon after the new session of Congress opens. In this connection I submit a brief outline of the efforts made in other countries along somewhat similar lines.

UNITED KINGDOM.

Legislation has been enacted by Parliament (6 and 7 Geo. V, c. 38) enabling the board of agriculture and fisheries to acquire land for a small number of experimental holdings for returning men in England and Wales. The measure provides for small farms not exceeding 50 acres, to be of three different types, mixed farming, dairying, and market gardening. Men without previous farming experience are to be given preliminary training on a demonstration farm, under the supervision of a director, receiving a fair living wage. When they are considered capable of taking up a holding for themselves it will be allotted. Under this small-holding scheme I understand that land has been acquired in Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. The board is likewise working out a large program, to be later recommended to the ministry. In Scotland the board of agriculture under the act above mentioned has also taken up land.

CANADA.

With reference to the Dominion lands, the reserved areas (known as Crown lands) are placed in the hands of a settlement board, which consists of three members. A free grant of 160 acres is made to the returning soldier, and the board is empowered to grant a loan of not exceeding $2,000 to each man, to be spent in erecting a house, purchasing implements and stock, and generally in preparing the land. This loan will be a first mortgage on the homestead. It will be advanced at a low rate of interest (5 per cent), and will have to be repaid in 15 years. Applicants for lands or loans must have had previous farming experience. Intending settlers among returning soldiers without previous farming experience can go upon demonstration farms for training. If they elect, however, they may go upon farms of selected and approved farmers for a definite time. In either case employment at current wages will be paid. "The classes entitled to participate," says the report of Lord Tennyson's committee, "include honorably discharged ex-service men from the forces of Canada, the United Kingdom, and any of the self-governing British Dominions, and to the widows of soldiers and sailors from other parts of the Empire whose husbands died while on active service."

Ontario: Under the act No. 150, passed in 1916, the Government grants free to ex-service men 160 acres of land. Loans of $500, bearing interest at 6 per cent and repayable within 10 years, can be secured from the provincial government. Training is provided for men with no agricultural experience. A training depot has been established at Monteith which provides living accommodations and board during instruction. A reasonable wage, under the act, is to be paid. When a sufficient number of men are trained, a settlement is to be established, farms of 80 acres, of which 10 acres will be cleared, will be granted free and a loan up to $500 advanced for farm machinery and stock, repayable over 20 years. Provisions will be made for married men to have their families with them as soon as practicable.

British Columbia: The British Columbian act (6 Geo. V, No. 59), passed in 1916, provides for the settlement of ex-service men, including the widows of men who would have come under the act. The lands are to be granted free. In addition ex-service men can obtain on payment of about $10 a preemption claim to land, the area and residence requirements to be fixed by regulation, which is to be free of all taxes except for educational purposes. The act likewise provides that a fund shall be established from the sale of Crown lands. This fund is to be used for loans to returned soldiers, and will be administered by the Agricultural Credit Commission of British Columbia.

New Brunswick: An act was passed in 1916 (6 Geo. V, No. 9) authorizing the provincial government to develop a scheme for the settlement of men who have served in the present war. The work is to be done by the farm settlement board, and an area of 20,000 acres has already been set aside for beginning settlements. Settlements are to accommodate from 100 to 250 families, and a demonstration farm is to be established to provide implements and information. The farms will be from 10 to 100 acres, and the cost will vary. Those on Crown lands will be governed by the actual cost of improvements, the payment of which will be on moderate terms, spread over 20 years. Ex-service men can obtain employment in preparing the holdings until they desire to take up a farm.

AUSTRALIA.

The Commonwealth of Australia held a conference of the Federal and State authorities in 1917. A board was appointed, which was to include a minister from each State, and the Commonwealth authorized an appropriation of $100,000,000 for the work. The board is now working on plans for advancing money to soldier settlers, with rates of interest, method of repayment, and policy yet unannounced. The various States of the Commonwealth have taken the following steps for preparing land for returning service men:

New South Wales: In 1916, under the returned soldiers' settlement act (No. 21), areas of Crown land and resumed private lands have been set aside for the settlement of returned Australian soldiers. The State government will extend these advantages to soldiers of the Empire, and has already undertaken the preparation of 1,000 farms in the Yanco irrigation area. The average farm is to be 50 acres, with a perpetual lease, and the rent 2½ per cent of the capital value, besides water rent. Advances will be made by the Government for the purpose of (1) paying off debts due the Crown, (2) for paying off encumbrances on the land, and (3) for building houses and making other improvements. During the initial stages, before the land has become productive, the Government may suspend payment. The proposed suspension applies to payments due (a) for rent, (b) water charges, (c) improvements, and (d) installments of purchase money. The Government Saving Bank of New South Wales will advance an amount up to three-fourths of the holder's interest in improvements. The legislation also provides for a previous six months' agricultural experience for the returning soldier. Otherwise, if he elects, he can go to the Government farm for the necessary training.

Victoria: Legislation indicating the policy of the Government has been introduced into the State parliament. It contains the following provisions: Irrigation land is to be open in settlements to the returning men. Settlers must pay deposits of 3 per cent on capital value, and make subsequent payment at the rate of 6 per cent per annum for 31½ years to cover the interest and purchase money. In case of soldiers from active service no payments for the first three years. In addition, advances will be made by the State government up to 70 per cent of the value of improvements, with a maximum of about $2,500. Previous agricultural experience is required before taking up land.

Queensland: The discharged soldiers' settlement act (No. 32) was passed in 1917. It provides facilities not only for the settlement of ex-service men of the Commonwealth, but extends it also to men of the United Kingdom and its allies. Crown lands and lands resumed by the State government are offered for settlement in "perpetual lease." No rent is required during the first three years, but after that time survey fees will be payable in 10 installments, and rent must be paid. On Crown lands the rent will be 1½ per cent of the capital value of the land. At the end of 15 years the rent will be determined by the land court. The lease will contain provisions for making improvements, for preparing the land, for stocking the farm, and erecting buildings—up to a sum not exceeding about $1,000. Advances to that amount can be secured from the Government Saving Bank, repayable by installments extending over 40 years. It is my understanding that an area of 60,000 acres has already been set aside by the Government in advance of this proposed legislation.

South Australia: By the returned soldiers' settlement act of 1916 (7 Geo. V, No. 1264) the State government has set aside two large blocks of lands, and liberal advances and conditions will be given returning soldiers. The administration of the land is in the hands of the land board.

Western Australia: A reservation of land has been made by the Government for the returning soldiers. Settlement on 160 acres, subject only to survey fees, is provided, and the repayment of these fees, together with charges against preliminary improvements, with the repayments of capital values, extends over 30 years. Loans can be secured from the State Agricultural Bank. On each settlement a central farm where soldiers can obtain practical training in agriculture will be established under State supervision.

Tasmania: Under the returned soldiers' settlement act of 1916 (5 Geo. V, 20) free grants of land are made to service men from Tasmania. The act provides for the sale or lease to returning men of the Australian forces and those from the United Kingdom up to 200 acres. A sum of money up to $1,500 may be advanced for improvements, implements, and stock, to be repaid in installments. No rates or taxes for four years will be payable by returning men. The legislation provides that some previous agricultural experience is necessary, otherwise the State farm at Deloraine will give adequate training necessary.

NEW ZEALAND.

The discharged soldiers' settlement act was passed in 1915 (6 Geo. V, 45) and amended in 1916, with a view to settling soldiers on the land. Provisions are made in the acts for the setting apart of areas of land for selection by discharged soldiers, and facilities are given whereby holdings may be acquired on easy terms. Advances may be made to selectors for clearing and improving the land, erecting buildings, and purchasing stock. Preference is likewise given to soldiers at the ordinary land sales. Following the example of the requirements for colonization, men who have had no previous farming experience can arrange for training on the State farms. These acts apply only to men belonging to the New Zealand forces and residents of the Dominion who have served in active military and naval forces.

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA.

It is understood that the Union Government is working on a plan for settlement for a limited number of ex-service men with special qualifications for land development.

FRANCE.

On April 9, 1918, President Poincare signed a law providing for the acquisition of small rural properties by soldier and civilian victims of the war. It provides in part for "individual mortgage loans to facilitate acquisition, parceling out, transformation, and reconstitution of small rural properties of which the value does not exceed 10,000 francs." The loans are to be made from the agricultural lending societies at a rate of 1 per cent, with a term of 25 years. Advances for improvements are provided for, and a special commission is appointed to administer the law.

Since a large part of the soldiers of France are landowners, it is evident that the problem of the demobilization of the armies at the end of the war will be a simple one. The French soldiers will simply return to their farm homes.

This outline of the plans of other nations for their returning soldiers indicates that much thought and work have been given in these countries toward the solution of this problem. Of course I realize that these policies are made to fit the conditions and conduct of each particular part, whether it be nation or state. And I do not mean to imply that we can model our plans or policies along those lines. But I do believe that this knowledge points out one lesson that has much good in it. That is this, that the preparation of plans for providing opportunity for our returning soldiers can not be left to the day when the war is over.

Cordially, yours,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Hon. SWAGAR SHERLEY,
Chairman Committee on Appropriations, House of Representatives.

The proposed legislation is for the purpose of providing an opportunity to procure homes for those of our returning sailors and soldiers who may wish them upon their return from the war, as well as giving a like opportunity to thousands of workers in munitions factories and other war industries who at the conclusion of the war will be out of employment. It is intended to promote as nothing else ever has the "back to the land" spirit. It is recognized that one of the great evils of the times in our country is the overcrowding and congestion of people in the cities, many of whom are utterly unfitted for city life and not adapted to the vocations thereof. After the war this undesirable condition will be greatly intensified. Further, there will be hundreds of thousands of young men who will have returned from service in our Army or Navy who will be out of employment and for whom there will be no jobs or positions. In addition there will be thousands and thousands of men and women, now employed in munitions factories and other war industries which will have to close at the end of the war, who will be out of employment. Many of them will have some means which they will have saved at their employment and with which they could locate upon and improve land and engage in agriculture, horticulture, or live-stock raising. All of the above-described classes of people will be needed on the land. The land will need them and they will need the land. It should be the object of the Government, and it is the object of this proposed legislation, to provide them with the opportunity of getting on the land. Furthermore, the undertaking which this proposed legislation contemplates, if embarked upon by the Government, would afford employment to thousands of men who will be out of employment at the termination of the war, when there will be a scarcity of employment in this country and when the idle will be clamoring for employment.

This bill is in line with proposed legislation suggested by the Secretary of the Interior, and the committee believes it of great importance. The committee further believes that it should be attended to in ample time and that no time should be lost in doing so. The war may end in another year, and if this scheme is to be embarked upon at all no time should be lost in doing so. The committee believes the proposed legislation and the undertaking contemplated thereby to be of great and vital importance to the country and a great and valuable economic program.

The committee recommends that, by amendment, the amount to be appropriated be reduced to $1,000,000, which in the opinion of the committee, as well as in the opinion of the Secretary of the Interior, will be amply sufficient. Of course, according to the terms of the bill, only so much thereof as would be needed is to be appropriated. With that amendment, the committee heartily recommends the bill for passage.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, some days ago the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the leader of the majority, gave out an interview upon the question of expenditures and the curtailment of expenditures by the Government for the future. I read a paragraph from that interview, as follows:

We have got to stop waste, extravagance, and reckless expenditure or the country is ruined. Unless there is an immediate cessation in piling up enormous indebtedness the people of this Nation will be "hewers of wood and drawers of water" for generations. I want to begin curtailing appropriations at once. I want to get the country back into normal condition. This must not be done violently, but as rapidly as possible.

This announces a wise and statesmanlike policy, and, for what it is worth, I want to commend the Senator from Virginia for his statement and to assure him that he will get a vast amount of support if he will carry forward this program.

Mr. President, outside of the immediate questions of the war, the most vital question with which the country has now to deal is that of the curtailment of expenditures, and that relates not alone to war expenditures, which will necessarily and promptly be curtailed when the war shall have ended, but it relates to the expenditures which have been characteristic of our Government in times of peace. I say this, Mr. President, regardless of what party is in power.

If the people really knew the method and the manner in which we expend money and the waste of which we are guilty, they would mob us. It is by reason of the fact that the details of these expenditures are kept from the people that public opinion is not aroused to its height in regard to this matter. I was, therefore, exceedingly pleased when I saw that the able Senator from Virginia, the leader of the majority, at once seized upon the proposition of initiating a program of retrenchment which, I trust, will not relate alone to expenditures which have been necessarily incurred by the war, but to expenditures which have been characteristic of the Government in times of peace. We have for years been a wasteful, extravagant Government, expending money as if it came like "manna" from heaven and not through and by the toil and energy of the people.

Mr. President, there are some items which, it seems to me, ought to receive the consideration of the departments and of of Congress at once. I want to read a statement which appeared in a recent Washington Post, as follows:

The War Department yesterday authorized the Construction Division to proceed with 13 war projects, costing $18,000,000. The largest appropriation, one of $7,500,000, was made for enlargement of Camp Grant, Ill.

Other appropriations for extensions included Camp Custer, Mich., $4,815,000; Camp Dodge, Iowa, $2,835,210; Delaware ordnance depot, $1,203,185; and aerial gunnery school, Miami, Fla., $660,000.

I am unable to say, without yet knowing the terms and conditions of the armistice, and therefore being unable to judge entirely of the future, how far these curtailments may now be carried and to what extent we may now initiate retrenchments; but it does seem to me that those items are well worthy of the consideration of the Secretary of War, with the view of eliminating that further expenditure, if possible. I believe the terms of the armistice will be such as to make it impossible for Germany to renew hostilities. We will know the terms in a few minutes, and I trust such expenditures as this may be greatly curtailed.

Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia will find, as he undertakes to carry forward this very wise program, that there will be a thousand reasons given for the continuance and maintenance of every expenditure which has been provided for. He will find that there will be a thousand reasons given for the maintenance and extension of every bureau that is now in existence; and before another fortnight has passed a powerful propaganda will have begun in this country for the purpose of satisfying the people that not only are these present organizations and institutions and bureaus and officers necessary, but that it is even necessary to enlarge and to extend them.

There is one thing that Congress has never yet been able to do, and that is to abolish a bureau or abolish an office. Congress has great capacity to make 12 men do what 1 man did before, but practically no capacity apparently to curtail or limit either the employees or the expenditures. I say to the Senator from Virginia that he will find that he has announced a program which it will be very difficult, indeed, for him to carry forward; and it is a program which, if carried out, will have to be carried forward regardless of party lines.

The reconstruction task which is soon to begin in Europe is as stupendous and overwhelming as the winning of the war itself. Millions upon millions of people will be out of employment and without the means of sustenance, and the United States must necessarily do its part in the feeding and taking care of this class of people. The burden upon the American people is already great—necessarily great—because nobody complained of a single dollar that was necessary to expend in the winning of the war; but because the burden of the American people is, and necessarily has to be, heavy, and, therefore, it ought to be the policy of Congress to eliminate and cut out every possible unnecessary expenditure. We want to do our part to the end, and let us waste nowhere and do unnecessary things.

National waste, Mr. President, has become a disease. It is not only characteristic of the National Government, and has been for years and years, but it is characteristic of township governments and county governments and city governments and State governments throughout this country. A republican form of government is necessarily a very expensive form of government at best, and especially under a Federal system such as we have, with its double layer and double tier of officers in the State and in the Nation. It is necessarily an expensive form of government; it is one of the prices which we pay for a republican form of government; but it behooves us, as the nature of it is to be expensive, to utilize our best efforts to see that it is not greater than the form of government absolutely requires.

We have been for years here creating commissions, paying stupendous salaries, and creating bureaus and enlarging them long before the war began. I am very much afraid that we will continue to do it after the war is over; but, as I said a few moments ago, if the Senator from Virginia will carry to the country the details of the expenditure of this money, we can build up public opinion in this country so that we can get results here in the Congress. You will find, however, as I have said, that there will be a powerful propaganda justifying these increased expenditures, justifying the amount which we are now paying out in different ways and for different purposes, and even insisting upon its enlargement.

What I have said has no reference to the particular bill which is before the Senate. I do not know yet what that bill provides for, or whether the expenditure under it is justified or not. I simply arose to indorse most heartily the view of the Senator from Virginia and to say to him I will follow his lead with zeal and enthusiasm even unto the full close of his program.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I notice that but a few moments remain before the Senate will take a recess and proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives, so I merely wish to say a few words at this time.

I fully indorse the statement made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in relation to the curtailment of the expenditures of our Government. I think, Mr. President, it is time now that Senators should take an interest in this subject; that they should not only make declarations that it ought to be done, but that they should point out how it can be done, then present a plan to the Senate, and ascertain if there is not a majority of the Senators in favor of a policy of restriction of expenditures. I have in mind, Mr. President, at some early date making some such recommendations; I shall wish to present them to the Senate, and I desire to assure the majority Members of this body that there will be an interest taken upon this side of the Chamber to stop every extravagant expenditure and every waste that is now taking place, so as to make every dollar of the Government's money go just as far as it would go if it were to be expended by an individual. If that policy is followed out, there is no question but that billions of dollars that are appropriated for the present fiscal year need not be expended or used.

Mr. President, I was very much pleased to read the recent statement made by the Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN], the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I had already made a statement that was published generally, I suppose, but in the New York papers at least, that I thought extravagant waste now should be eliminated in every department of our Government. I will suggest one thing that I think ought to be done, and done immediately, by every department of the Government. I am told that in some of the recently created bureaus there are to-day employed over 10,000 people, and I know of one of them as to which I stated upon the floor of the Senate the other day that the head of a division of the bureau told me that if he were allowed to select 40 per cent of the employees, and had the absolute right of directing their work, he would accomplish more than is accomplished now by the 100 per cent.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator made that statement a day or two ago, and I was very much surprised to hear it. I should like to ask the Senator why the head of this bureau has not the power to do what he says he would like to do?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the head of the division is not the one who directs the employment of the persons under him.

Mr. THOMAS. That is true of a great many of them.

Mr. SMOOT. They are sent to him by officials over him, and he is told to put them to work; and the head of this division says there are so many of them that they are in each other's way, and some of them that never ought to be employed in any department of the Government, totally ignorant of the work that they are called upon to do.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think there is no doubt about that; and yet I am satisfied that there are bureaus the heads of which have ample powers both of employment and of discharge. That is the reason why I am surprised at the statement of the Senator. I fully concur in the statement so frequently made here that there are in this District perhaps 50 per cent more employees, so called, than are necessary. I do not think there is any question about it. The chances are—and I understand that they are organizing for the purpose, and that means political power—that an effort will be made to secure their permanent retention in office.

Mr. SMOOT. That, Mr. President, is the danger we have to meet to-day.

Mr. THOMAS. The chances also are that each of the great political parties will cater to that situation, because it will be a political asset.

Mr. SMOOT. In answer to that suggestion, I want to say that, so far as I am concerned, I shall not in the future approve of an appropriation unless it is shown to the members of the Appropriations Committee, and by them to the Senate, that it is absolutely necessary that the money be expended; and when a request is made for a horizontal increase of employees, as has been done in the past, I want to say to you that the first thing we ought to do is to go into an investigation of the request and find out whether they are needed or not.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator knows that a bill is now pending in the Senate which does that very thing—the so-called Nolan bill, which has passed the House. I am very glad to hear the Senator take that position, because I am in full sympathy with it.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to a characteristic phraseology. On page 4 of the report of the committee, in the letter over the signature of Franklin K. Lane, he says:

> A million or two dollars, if appropriated now, will put this work well under way.

It is a case of throwing around millions. It does not much matter whether they get one million or two million, in Mr. Lane's opinion.

Mr. THOMAS. May I ask the Senator what the work is?

Mr. SMOOT. Survey and classification of unentered public lands.

Mr. PENROSE. It is an ingenious scheme to get money out of the Treasury for a very great purpose.

Mr. THOMAS. Is not that purpose connected with the proposed homestead policy for soldiers?

Mr. PENROSE. Yes; it is the bill that we are discussing, but it is so absurd for the Secretary of the Interior to say: "Give me a million or two million; one or two million will help along."

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator knows that in these days a million is not chicken feed when it comes to national appropriations.

Mr. PENROSE. I am hopeful, now that the war is over, that it will not be chicken feed.

Mr. THOMAS. I hope so, too.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it took us a long time to learn to use the word "billions." Members of the Appropriations Committee would be discussing a question upon the floor, and it was next to impossible for any of them to use the word "billions"; but we have got to using the word so flippantly and so often that nothing short of a billion has been thought worthy of consideration. As the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] suggests, if any member of the Appropriations Committee undertook to save a hundred thousand dollars he would be laughed at; and he might just as well have gone further and said that a mere question of a million dollars was not worthy of a moment's passing thought.

Mr. President, we have got to return to normal conditions. A reconstruction is to take place. As I have said in public many times, I have not been afraid of the outcome of the war. Success to the arms of America and her allies was as sure as that the sun would rise on the morrow. I have said that we would have no trouble raising money or enforcing laws and regulations during the time our armies were fighting the enemy of civilization; but I always had a fear as to our future after peace was declared.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. SMOOT. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I feel very certain that every Member of the Senate will subscribe to the view of the Senator that economy ought to be the watchword, but I am curious to know what the attitude of the Senator is with reference to the pending bill. Is he opposed to the scheme proposed, of providing homes for the returning soldiers upon the available lands of the country?

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator asks that question with a view of getting a direct answer, I will say that I certainly am not opposed to legislation along this line. I wanted to say to the Senator, however, that it is impossible to pass this bill to-day. There are Senators who are opposed to some provisions of it; and we do not want to call for a quorum before 10 minutes to 1 o'clock, as there is not a quorum in the city.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will understand that I was not endeavoring to hurry his observations.

Mr. SMOOT. As the time has arrived for the joint meeting of the two Houses, I will say no more. In the near future I expect to point out to the Senate some of the ways that I believe will save the Treasury of the United States untold millions of dollars, and the quicker we get at it the better it will be.

JOINT MEETING OF THE TWO HOUSES.

The VICE PRESIDENT (at 12 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m.). The hour having arrived at which, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the two Houses, the Senate is to proceed to the Hall of the House of Representatives to receive a communication from the President of the United States, the Sergeant at Arms will take charge.

Thereupon the Senate, preceded by its Sergeant at Arms and headed by the Vice President and the Secretary, proceeded to the Hall of the House of Representatives.

ADDRESS BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 1339).

The address of the President of the United States this day delivered at a joint meeting of the two Houses of Congress is as follows:

GENTLEMEN OF THE CONGRESS: In these anxious times of rapid and stupendous change it will in some degree lighten my sense of responsibility to perform in person the duty of communicating to you some of the larger circumstances of the situation with which it is necessary to deal.

The German authorities who have, at the invitation of the Supreme War Council, been in communication with Marshal Foch have accepted and signed the terms of armistice which he was authorized and instructed to communicate to them. Those terms are as follows:

I. MILITARY CLAUSES ON WESTERN FRONT.

One. Cessation of operations by land and in the air six hours after the signature of the armistice.

Two. Immediate evacuation of invaded countries: Belgium, France, Alsace, Lorraine, Luxemburg, so ordered as to be completed within fourteen days from the signature of the armistice. German troops which have not left the above mentioned territories within the period fixed will become prisoners of war. Occupation by the Allied and United States forces jointly will keep pace with evacuation in these areas. All movements of evacuation and occupation will be regulated in accordance with a note annexed to the stated terms.

Three. Repatriation beginning at once and to be completed within fourteen days of all inhabitants of the countries above mentioned, including hostages and persons under trial or convicted.

Four. Surrender in good condition by the German armies of the following equipment: five thousand guns (two thousand five hundred heavy, two thousand five hundred field), thirty thousand machine guns. Three thousand minenwerfer. Two thousand aeroplanes (fighters, bombers—firstly D. Seventy three's and night bombing machines). The above to be delivered in Simmstu to the Allies and United States troops in accordance with the detailed conditions laid down in the annexed note.

Five. Evacuation by the German armies of the countries on the left bank of the Rhine. These countries on the left bank of the Rhine shall be administered by the local authorities under the control of the Allied and United States armies of occupation. The occupation of these territories will be determined by Allied and United States garrisons holding the principal crossings of the Rhine, Mayence, Coblenz, Cologne, together with bridgeheads at these points in thirty kilometer radius on the right bank and by garrisons similarly holding the strategetic points of the regions. A neutral zone shall be reserved on the right of the Rhine between the stream and a line drawn parallel to it forty kilometers to the east from the frontier of Holland to the parallel of Gernsheim and as far as practicable a distance of thirty kilometers from the east of stream from this parallel upon Swiss frontier. Evacuation by the enemy of the Rhine lands shall be so ordered as to be completed within a further period of eleven days, in all nineteen days after the signature of the armistice. All movements of evacuation and occupation will be regulated according to the note annexed.

Six. In all territory evacuated by the enemy there shall be no evacuation of inhabitants; no damage or harm shall be done to the persons or property of the inhabitants. No destruction of any kind to be committed. Military establishments of all kinds shall be delivered intact as well as military stores of food, munitions, equipment not removed during the periods fixed for evacuation. Stores of food of all kinds for the civil population, cattle, etc., shall be left in situ. Industrial establishments shall not be impaired in any way and their personnel shall not be moved. Roads and means of communication of every kind, railroad, waterways, main roads, bridges, telegraphs, telephones, shall be in no manner impaired.

Seven. All civil and military personnel at present employed on them shall remain. Five thousand locomotives, fifty thousand wagons and ten thousand motor lorries in good working order with all necessary spare parts and fittings shall be delivered to the Associated Powers within the period fixed for the evacuation of Belgium and Luxemburg. The railways of Alsace Lorraine shall be handed over within the same period, together with all pre-war personnel and material. Further material necessary for the working of railways in the country on the left bank of the Rhine shall be left in situ. All stores of coal and material for the up-keep of permanent ways, signals and repair shops left entire in situ and kept in an efficient state by Germany during the whole period of armistice. All barges taken from the Allies shall be restored to them. A note appended regulates the details of these measures.

Eight. The German command shall be responsible for revealing all mines or delay acting fuses disposed on territory evacuated by the German troops and shall assist in their discovery and destruction. The German command shall also reveal all destructive measures that may have been taken (such as poisoning or polluting of springs, wells, etc.) under penalty of reprisals.

Nine. The right of requisition shall be exercised by the Allied and the United States armies in all occupied territory. The upkeep of the troops of occupation in the Rhine land (excluding Alsace-Lorraine) shall be charged to the German Government.

Ten. An immediate repatriation without reciprocity according to detailed conditions which shall be fixed, of all Allied and

United States prisoners of war. The Allied Powers and the United States shall be able to dispose of these prisoners as they wish.

Eleven. Sick and wounded who cannot be removed from evacuated territory will be cared for by German personnel who will be left on the spot with the medical material required.

II. DISPOSITION RELATIVE TO THE EASTERN FRONTIERS OF GERMANY.

Twelve. All German troops at present in any territory which before the war belonged to Russia, Roumania or Turkey shall withdraw within the frontiers of Germany as they existed on August first, 1914.

Thirteen. Evacuation by German troops to begin at once and all German instructors, prisoners, and civilian as well as military agents, now on the territory of Russia (as defined before 1914) to be recalled.

Fourteen. German troops to cease at once all requisitions and seizures and any other undertaking with a view to obtaining supplies intended for Germany in Roumania and Russia (as defined on August first, 1914).

Fifteen. Abandonment of the treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk and of the supplementary treaties.

Sixteen. The Allies shall have free access to the territories evacuated by the Germans on their eastern frontier either through Danzig or by the Vistula in order to convey supplies to the populations of those territories or for any other purpose.

III. CLAUSE CONCERNING EAST AFRICA.

Seventeen. Unconditional capitulation of all German forces operating in East Africa within one month.

IV. GENERAL CLAUSES.

Eighteen. Repatriation, without reciprocity, within a maximum period of one month, in accordance with detailed conditions hereafter to be fixed, of all civilians interned or deported who may be citizens of other Allied or Associated States than those mentioned in clause three, paragraph nineteen, with the reservation that any future claims and demands of the Allies and the United States of America remain unaffected.

Nineteen. The following financial conditions are required: Reparation for damage done. While such armistice lasts no public securities shall be removed by the enemy which can serve as a pledge to the Allies for the recovery or repatriation for war losses. Immediate restitution of the cash deposit, in the National Bank of Belgium, and in general immediate return of all documents, specie, stocks, shares, paper money together with plant for the issue thereof, touching public or private interests in the invaded countries. Restitution of the Russian and Roumanian gold yielded to Germany or taken by that power. This gold to be delivered in trust to the Allies until the signature of peace.

V. NAVAL CONDITIONS.

Twenty. Immediate cessation of all hostilities at sea and definite information to be given as to the location and movements of all German ships. Notification to be given to neutrals that freedom of navigation in all territorial waters is given to the naval and mercantile marines of the Allies and Associated Powers, all questions of neutrality being waived.

Twenty one. All naval and mercantile marine prisoners of war of the Allied and Associated Powers in German hands to be returned without reciprocity.

Twenty two. Surrender to the Allies and the United States of America of one hundred and sixty German submarines (including all submarine cruisers and mine laying submarines) with their complete armament and equipment in ports which will be specified by the Allies and the United States of America. All other submarines to be paid off and completely disarmed and placed under the supervision of the Allied Powers and the United States of America.

Twenty three. The following German surface warships which shall be designated by the Allies and the United States of America shall forthwith be disarmed and thereafter interned in neutral ports, or, for the want of them, in Allied ports, to be designated by the Allies and the United States of America and placed under the surveillance of the Allies and the United States of America, only caretakers being left on board, namely: Six battle cruisers, ten battleships, eight light cruisers, including two mine layers, fifty destroyers of the most modern type. All other surface warships (including river craft) are to be concentrated in German naval bases to be designated by the Allies and the United States of America, and are to be paid off and completely disarmed and placed under the supervision of the Allies and the United States of America. All vessels of the auxiliary fleet (trawlers, motor vessels, etc.) are to be disarmed.

Twenty four. The Allies and the United States of America shall have the right to sweep up all mine fields and obstructions laid by Germany outside German territorial waters, and the positions of these are to be indicated.

Twenty five. Freedom of access to and from the Baltic to be given to the naval and mercantile marines of the Allied and Associated Powers. To secure this the Allies and the United States of America shall be empowered to occupy all German forts, fortifications, batteries and defense works of all kinds in all the entrances from the Categat into the Baltic, and to sweep up all mines and obstructions within and without German territorial waters without any question of neutrality being raised, and the positions of all such mines and obstructions are to be indicated.

Twenty six. The existing blockade conditions set up by the Allies and Associated Powers are to remain unchanged and all German merchant ships found at sea are to remain liable to capture.

Twenty seven. All naval aircraft are to be concentrated and immobilized in German bases to be specified by the Allies and the United States of America.

Twenty eight. In evacuating the Belgium coasts and ports, Germany shall abandon all merchant ships, tugs, lighters, cranes and all other harbor materials, all materials for inland navigation, all aircraft and all materials and stores, all arms and armaments, and all stores and apparatus of all kinds.

Twenty nine. All Black Sea ports are to be evacuated by Germany; all Russian war vessels of all descriptions seized by Germany in the Black Sea are to be handed over to the Allies and the United States of America; all neutral merchant vessels seized are to be released; all warlike and other materials of all kinds seized in those ports are to be returned and German materials as specified in clause twenty-eight are to be abandoned.

Thirty. All merchant vessels in German hands belonging to the Allied and Associated Powers are to be restored in ports to be specified by the Allies and the United States of America without reciprocity.

Thirty one. No destruction of ships or of materials to be permitted before evacuation, surrender or restoration.

Thirty two. The German Government shall formally notify the neutral Governments of the world, and particularly the Governments of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland, that all restrictions placed on the trading of their vessels with the Allied and Associated Countries, whether by the German Government or by private German interests, and whether in return for specific concessions such as the export of shipbuilding materials or not, are immediately canceled.

Thirty three. No transfers of German merchant shipping of any description to any neutral flag are to take place after signature of the armistice.

VI. DURATION OF THE ARMISTICE.

Thirty four. The duration of the armistice is to be thirty days, with option to extend. During this period, on failure of execution of any of the above clauses, the armistice may be denounced by one of the contracting parties, on forty-eight hours' previous notice.

VII. TIME LIMIT FOR REPLY.

Thirty five. This armistice is to be accepted or refused by Germany within seventy-two hours of notification.

The war thus comes to an end; for, having accepted these terms of armistice, it will be impossible for the German command to renew it.

It is not now possible to assess the consequences of this great consummation. We know only that this tragical war, whose consuming flames swept from one nation to another until all the world was on fire, is at an end and that it was the privilege of our own people to enter it at its most critical juncture in such fashion and in such force as to contribute in a way of which we are all deeply proud to the great result. We know, too, that the object of the war is attained; the object upon which all free men had set their hearts; and attained with a sweeping completeness which even now we do not realize. Armed imperialism such as the men conceived who were but yesterday the masters of Germany is at an end, its illicit ambitions engulfed in black disaster. Who will now seek to revive it? The arbitrary power of the military caste of Germany which once could secretly and of its own single choice disturb the peace of the world is discredited and destroyed. And more than that,—much more than that,—has been accomplished. The great nations which associated themselves to destroy it have now definitely united in the common purpose to set up such a peace as will satisfy the longing of the whole world for disinterested justice, embodied in settlements which are based upon something much better and much more lasting than the selfish competitive interests of powerful states. There is no longer conjecture as to the objects the victors have in mind. They have a mind in the matter, not only, but a heart also. Their avowed and concerted purpose is to satisfy and protect the weak as well as to accord their just rights to the strong.

The humane temper and intention of the victorious governments has already been manifested in a very practical way. Their representatives in the Supreme War Council at Versailles have by unanimous resolution assured the peoples of the Central Empires that everything that is possible in the circumstances will be done to supply them with food and relieve the distressing want that is in so many places threatening their very lives; and steps are to be taken immediately to organize these efforts at relief in the same systematic manner that they were organized in the case of Belgium. By the use of the idle tonnage of the Central Empires it ought presently to be possible to lift the fear of utter misery from their oppressed populations and set their minds and energies free for the great and hazardous tasks of political reconstruction which now face them on every hand. Hunger does not breed reform; it breeds madness and all the ugly distempers that make an ordered life impossible.

For with the fall of the ancient governments which rested like an incubus upon the peoples of the Central Empires has come political change not merely, but revolution; and revolution which seems as yet to assume no final and ordered form but to run from one fluid change to another, until thoughtful men are forced to ask themselves, With what governments, and of what sort, are we about to deal in the making of the covenants of peace? With what authority will they meet us, and with what assurance that their authority will abide and sustain securely the international arrangements into which we are about to enter? There is here matter for no small anxiety and misgiving. When peace is made, upon whose promises and engagements besides our own is it to rest?

Let us be perfectly frank with ourselves and admit that these questions cannot be satisfactorily answered now or at once. But the moral is not that there is little hope of an early answer that will suffice. It is only that we must be patient and helpful and mindful above all of the great hope and confidence that lie at the heart of what is taking place. Excesses accomplish nothing. Unhappy Russia has furnished abundant recent proof of that. Disorder immediately defeats itself. If excesses should occur, if disorder should for a time raise its head, a sober second thought will follow and a day of constructive action, if we help and do not hinder.

The present and all that it holds belongs to the nations and the peoples who preserve their self-control and the orderly processes of their governments; the future to those who prove themselves the true friends of mankind. To conquer with arms is to make only a temporary conquest; to conquer the world by earning its esteem is to make permanent conquest. I am confident that the nations that have learned the discipline of freedom and that have settled with self-possession to its ordered practice are now about to make conquest of the world by the sheer power of example and of friendly helpfulness.

The peoples who have but just come out from under the yoke of arbitrary government and who are now coming at last into their freedom will never find the treasures of liberty they are in search of if they look for them by the light of the torch. They will find that every pathway that is stained with the blood of their own brothers leads to the wilderness, not to the seat of their hope. They are now face to face with their initial test. We must hold the light steady until they find themselves. And in the meantime, if it be possible, we must establish a peace that will justly define their place among the nations, remove all fear of their neighbours and of their former masters, and enable them to live in security and contentment when they have set their own affairs in order. I, for one, do not doubt their purpose or their capacity. There are some happy signs that they know and will choose the way of self-control and peaceful accommodation. If they do, we shall put our aid at their disposal in every way that we can. If they do not, we must await with patience and sympathy the awakening and recovery that will assuredly come at last.

The Senate returned to its Chamber at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m. and the Vice President resumed the chair.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, November 12, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 11, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we approach Thee with gratitude welling up in our hearts and praise upon our lips, that truth has again vindicated itself, right is marching on, and Thy will is in the ascendency.

Hostility has ceased. Democracy lives, and is spreading its wings over the earth. Autocracy, militarism, Kaiserism, and all the evils connected with them shall cease to be. Freedom, liberty, truth, justice, righteousness live, to the glory and honor of Thy holy name.

Let Thy wisdom descend upon those of the entente powers whose business it shall be to readjust the affairs of the world, that they may make it a safer place for Thy children to dwell in; that wars shall forever cease and peace reign. "The one sin in the world is selfishness; the one virtue is love. In these two rest all the theology and philosophy of the ages." Grant that out of this terrible war these truths may be thoroughly established; in the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, November 8, 1918, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I desire to ask at this time unanimous consent that FREDERICK ESSEN, elected a Representative from the tenth district of Missouri, be sworn in. His credentials have not arrived, but there is no question about his election. His majority is somewhere near 20,000.

The SPEAKER. Mr. ESSEN's majority was over 19,000. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. ESSEN, accompanied by Mr. DYER, appeared at the bar of the House and took the oath prescribed by law.

JOINT SESSION OF SENATE AND HOUSE.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution (No. 58):

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 11th of November, 1918, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

PORTO RICO.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to address the House for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Reserving the right to object, what does the gentleman propose to talk about? Last week similar requests were refused several times.

Mr. TOWNER. I hope the gentleman from North Dakota will not object.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. I withdraw the objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What I shall say refers to the situation in Porto Rico.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I desire to make a statement to the House relative to the situation in Porto Rico, and then to submit to the judgment of the House whether any action shall be taken.

In the month of October a very severe earthquake occurred on the westerly side of the island of Porto Rico. It was followed by a tidal wave and by minor quakes and caused damage, according to the statement contained in the official communication sent to me by the Secretary of War, of $4,000,000 in property and the loss of a number of lives.

Considerable Government property has been destroyed. The Governor of Porto Rico has made an appeal to Congress for relief, and an appropriation of $300,000 is asked for the purpose of restoring what we may call the Federal building; also the governor desires that there shall be such legislation as will enable the Government of Porto Rico to make an appropriation out of the treasury of Porto Rico to supplement the Federal appropriation for the purpose of giving this relief, which undoubtedly is urgently required.

If I may read this one section from the communication addressed by the Governor of Porto Rico to the War Department, it will perhaps enable the gentlemen to understand better the situation:

The property loss in the cities and towns directly affected by the earthquake is so enormous and the cessation of commerce and industry so complete and sudden that I do not think it possible for us to accomplish a restoration of anything like normal conditions in any reasonable time without congressional aid, and I feel confident Congress will help. I am sure it would if they could see matters as they now exist in the wrecked cities and towns.

On Friday evening last the Secretary of War sent to me by special messenger a letter, in which he inclosed the report of the Governor of Porto Rico, and made a recommendation that the request be granted, explaining its urgency; and on the strength of that a meeting of the Committee on Insular Affairs was called, which was held this morning. That committee unanimously adopted a resolution and directed that I, as chairman, submit the matter to the House and see whether or not unanimous consent could be obtained, provided, of course, I could obtain the floor, for the consideration of this joint resolution, which appropriates $300,000 and which confers on the Legislature of Porto Rico the authority to appropriate out of the Porto Rican treasury, an authority they have not had under the organic act. I will ask that the resolution be read.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. Was there a majority of the Committee on Insular Affairs present?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. No; but the point of no quorum was not made. There was not a quorum of the committee present.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman know whether concurrent action will probably be had during the day in the other branch if this resolution is passed by the House to-day?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. All I can say is that I conferred with Senator SAULSBURY, who is chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. He inquired, first, if there was any pending appropriation bill upon which it might be possible to secure this insertion by way of amendment. I told him I did not think there was. He seemed to think that, as far as he was personally concerned, he would be able in the Senate to secure the passage of the resolution. They have no sort of agreement that will interfere in any way with this matter. He seemed to think that immediately after we received these communications. That is all the information that I could give the gentlemen about it.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman state if the matter is of such an urgent character that a day or two would probably make a considerable difference in this work of relief?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Red Cross has been contributing. Authority was given to draw upon the Red Cross for $10,000, and out of that fund they have been taking care, as much as possible, of those who have been rendered helpless and are in want. In addition to the appropriation, this resolution also carries authority to the Secretary of War to loan Army tents and advance supplies out of material on hand. That part of it, I should say, in view of the fact, as I understand it, that the Red Cross funds have been practically depleted, would be extremely urgent. The earlier they begin the reconstruction of Government buildings, of course, the earlier they are going to be able to give employment to needy people.

Mr. WALSH. My last inquiry was prompted by the condition resulting from the agreement which was entered into in respect to the sessions of the House, and I wanted the gentleman's opinion whether he thought this was such an emergency as could not wait the termination of the time fixed by the agreement, which, I understand, will be to-morrow—whether he thought a delay of a day or so would be serious, and whether he thought it might pass the other branch to-day if prompt action was had by the House.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I am not able to state any more than I have said as to the possibility of its passing the other branch of Congress.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman from Tennessee will permit, I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that the agreement to which he refers does not terminate to-morrow. It terminates only when the Senate disposes of the revenue bill, unless in the meantime some emergency should happen, and then the agreement provided that the majority and minority leaders should give notice of that fact.

Mr. WALSH. As I recall, the agreement was that no business should be transacted before November 12.

Mr. KITCHIN. No. The date November 12 was mentioned in the discussion for the reason that it was then thought that we would make an agreement with the Senate whereby we could pass a joint resolution to adjourn until November 12, but the Senate failed to pass the adjournment resolution.

Mr. WALSH. If that is a correct interpretation of the agreement, then I will say to the gentleman from Tennessee that personally I have no objection, although it seems to me to be hardly of such an emergency character that it ought to be taken up now. I shall not object, however.

Mr. KITCHIN. I think it ought to be taken up. I do not believe there would be any objection if the whole membership of the House were present. It is one of those emergencies which are provided for in the agreement, but we provided that the majority and minority leaders should give notice to the membership; and the only question now is whether we should give such notice before we take this up for consideration. For myself, I believe the entire membership of the House, if present, would agree to this, and also that not being present, they will have no criticism to make of us if we here waive that portion of the agreement and pass the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. I will say to the gentleman from North Carolina that the statement of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] certainly shows that it is a very great emergency, and I have no doubt if a quorum were here that the resolution would pass practically without opposition. The only point is whether it is wise to attempt to project it into the proceedings in view of the agreement; but, as I understand the interpretation of the agreement made by the gentleman from North Carolina, it is that the agreement does not terminate to-morrow.

Mr. KITCHIN. According to the letter of the agreement, this would be a violation of it, and it is only a question of whether we who are present shall take the responsibility upon ourselves of technically violating the agreement to the extent of not requiring the majority and minority leaders to give notice to come in and vote on this proposition.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two or three minutes before the resolution is read.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will permit me to make this statement before that request is put: Of course, I am quite familiar with the agreement, and I have no personal desire whatever to do anything that would even appear to violate it; but it did seem that this was of such an urgent character that we would be justified at least in submitting the question to the judgment of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, this matter has really been pending for consideration since the occurrence of this calamity. Soon thereafter an appeal was made by the Governor of Porto Rico and it was submitted to the members of the Committee on Appropriations and others, with the idea of seeing if something could not be done to secure immediate action. It was thought that perhaps under the agreement it was best not to make the attempt at that time. Since then, however, repeated requisitions have come from the island, and the reports as to the extent of the calamity and the amount of damage done have been constantly increasing. The amount of damage done and suffering of the people is a matter that could hardly have been appreciated earlier. I think there is no possible question but that we would be justified, in view of the existence of these facts, in taking this action, notwithstanding our agreement, and, of course, it can be done, as I understand it, by unanimous consent.

The matter has been quite carefully examined by the chairman of the Committee on Insular Affairs, and by myself and others of the committee, and we have become satisfied that we would be derelict in our duty if we did not present it for the consideration of the House at this time. Gentlemen will understand that Porto Rico is not rich. They have very little taxable property on which to levy to support the government of the island. Their schoolhouses in half a dozen towns have been completely destroyed, and they have no money to rebuild them. Many of the public buildings belonging to the United States Government in the island have been destroyed, and, of course, it is our duty to rebuild those. Hundreds of men have been thrown out of employment. They have been deprived of their homes by the hundreds. The situation is very deplorable. Gentlemen will understand that the Red Cross have extraordinary demands made upon them. They have given to what they consider the extent of their ability in appropriating $10,000 to meet the immediate needs of the calamity. However, that is vastly insufficient. It has been supplemented in part by private contributions. Help has been given in various ways, but with all of these they are unable to meet the extent of the calamity and the extent of injury and the necessity for some immediate action. I sincerely hope that there will be no objection on the part of anyone to the consideration of this resolution.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Kansas rise?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, for the purpose of saying——

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas asks unanimous consent to proceed for three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I sincerely hope that no one will invoke the gentleman's agreement that was made with respect to bringing up matters of legislation during the interim that was agreed upon. This resolution presents a very serious situation among a helpless people. The only help they can get is through our Government. Hours of delay means serious loss and inconvenience to those people. I hope in the interest of the Porto Rican people, for whom we are acting, that no objection will be made, and I am sure that if the whole membership of the House were here not a single voice would be raised against this resolution. I hope, therefore, that no objection will be made, and that it will be agreed to.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) to provide relief of sufferers from earthquakes occurring in Porto Rico during the month of October, 1918.

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to loan, issue, or use such tents, provisions, and supplies pertaining to the Quartermaster Corps and Medical Department of the Army from any stores now on hand as he may deem necessary for the temporary relief of destitute persons in need of the same in the districts affected by earthquakes in Porto Rico during the month of October, 1918, under such regulations for the care and return of articles not consumed in the use as he may deem necessary.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of War, as in his judgment may be necessary, is authorized to purchase additional supplies for the relief of said earthquake sufferers and to provide employment on public works, including the rebuilding and repairing of the public buildings belonging to the United States Government which were partially or totally destroyed by said earthquakes, and for this purpose there is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $300,000, to be expended under the direction and in the discretion of the Secretary of War.

SEC. 3. That the Legislature of Porto Rico is hereby authorized to extend relief and assistance in any form and in any manner to those destitute persons who have been rendered homeless or are in needy circumstances as a result of the said earthquakes, and to those municipalities in the island which are in urgent need of aid or assistance as a direct result of the said earthquakes, nothwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 19 of section 2 (being the bill of rights) of an act to provide a civil government for Porto Rico, and for other purposes, approved March 2, 1917.

SEC. 4. That there is hereby appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, such an amount as may be necessary to reimburse the several appropriations of the Army for such moneys or property as have already been expended or furnished in affording such temporary relief as is provided for herein.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the resolution be amended by striking out the words "Be it further resolved" where they appear at the beginning of sections 2, 3, and 4. Those words are unnecessary and are surplusage.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the amendment will be agreed to.

There was no objection.

The resolution as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until five minutes of 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until five minutes before 1. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the House stood in recess until 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.

AFTER RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House (at 12 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) resumed its session.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had agreed to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 58) that the two Houses of Congress assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives on Monday, the 11th day of November, 1918, at 1 o'clock in the afternoon, for the purpose of receiving such communication as the President of the United States shall be pleased to make to them.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Leave of absence was granted, as follows:

To Mr. SCOTT of Michigan, indefinitely, on account of illness; and

To Mr. LAZARO (at the request of Mr. DUPRÉ), indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

JOINT MEETING OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE.

At 12 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the Vice President of the United States and the Members of the United States Senate.

The Members of the House rose.

The Senate, preceded by the Vice President and by their Secretary and Sergeant at Arms, entered the Chamber.

The Vice President took the chair at the right of the Speaker, and the Members of the Senate took the seats reserved for them.

At 12 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m. the Doorkeeper, Mr. J. J. Sinnott, announced the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court entered the Chamber and took the seats reserved for them in front of the Speaker's rostrum.

The SPEAKER. On behalf of the House, the Chair appoints the following committee to conduct the President into the Chamber: Messrs. KITCHIN, GARRETT of Tennessee, HARRISON of Mississippi, CAMPBELL of Kansas, and MADDEN.

The VICE PRESIDENT. On the part of the Senate, the Chair appoints as a like committee Senators MARTIN of Virginia, SAULSBURY, SIMMONS, MCCUMBER, and FRELINGHUYSEN.

At 1 o'clock and 2 minutes p. m. the President of the United States, escorted by the committees of Senators and Representatives, entered the Hall of the House and stood at the Clerk's desk, amid prolonged applause.

The SPEAKER. Gentlemen of the Sixty-fifth Congress, I present the President of the United States.

ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT—TERMS OF ARMISTICE SIGNED BY GERMANY (H. DOC. NO. 1339).

The PRESIDENT. Gentlemen of the Congress, in these anxious times of rapid and stupendous change it will in some degree lighten my sense of responsibility to perform in person the duty of communicating to you some of the larger circumstances of the situation with which it is now necessary to deal.

The German authorities who have, at the invitation of the Supreme War Council, been in communication with Marshal Foch have accepted and signed the terms of armistice [applause] which he was authorized and instructed to communicate to them. Those terms are as follows: I read them as transmitted by cable:

I. MILITARY CLAUSES ON WESTERN FRONT.

One. Cessation of operations by land and in the air six hours after the signature of the armistice.

Two. Immediate evacuation of invaded countries: Belgium, France, Alsace Lorraine, Luxemburg [applause], so ordered as to be completed within fourteen days from the signature of the armistice. German troops which have not left the above mentioned territories within the period fixed will become prisoners of war. [Applause.] Occupation by the Allied and United States forces jointly will keep pace with evacuation in these areas. All movements of evacuation and occupation will be regulated in accordance with a note annexed to the stated terms.

Three. Repatriation beginning at once and to be completed within fourteen days of all inhabitants of the countries above mentioned, including hostages and persons under trial or convicted.

Four. Surrender in good condition by the German armies of the following equipment: five thousand guns (two thousand five hundred heavy, two thousand five hundred field), thirty thousand machine guns. Three thousand minenwerfer. Two thousand aeroplanes (fighters, bombers—firstly D. Seventy-three's and night bombing machines). The above to be delivered in Simmstu to the Allies and United States troops in accordance with the detailed conditions laid down in the annexed note.

Five. Evacuation by the German armies of the countries on the left bank of the Rhine. These countries on the left bank of the Rhine shall be administered by the local authorities under the control of the Allied and United States armies of occupation. [Applause.] The occupation of these territories will be determined by Allied and United States garrisons holding the principal crossings of the Rhine, Mayence, Coblenz, Cologne, together with the bridgeheads at these points in thirty kilometer radius on the right bank and by garrisons similarly holding the strategetic points of the regions. [Applause.] A neutral zone will be reserved on the right of the Rhine between the stream and a line drawn parallel to it forty kilometers to the east from the frontier of Holland to the parallel of Gernsheim and as far as practicable a distance of thirty kilometers from the east of the stream from this parallel upon the Swiss frontier. Evacuation by the enemy of the Rhine lands shall be so ordered as to be completed within a further period of eleven days, in all nineteen days after the signature of the armistice. [The arithmetic is not correct, but I do not feel at liberty to correct the cablegram.] All movements of evacuation and occupation will be regulated according to the note annexed.

Six. In all territory evacuated by the enemy there shall be no evacuation of inhabitants; no damage or harm shall be done to the persons or property of the inhabitants. No destruction of any kind to be committed. Military establishments of all kinds shall be delivered intact as well as military stores of food, munitions, equipment not removed during the periods fixed for evacuation. Stores of food of all kinds for the civil population, cattle, etc., shall be left in situ. Industrial establishments shall not be impaired in any way and their personnel shall not be moved. Roads and means of communication of every kind, railroad, waterways, main roads, bridges, telegraphs, telephones, shall be in no manner impaired.

Seven. All civil and military personnel at present employed on them shall remain. Five thousand locomotives, fifty thousand wagons and ten thousand motor lorries in good working order with all necessary spare parts and fittings shall be delivered to the Associated Powers within the period fixed for the evacuation of Belgium and Luxemburg. The railways of Alsace Lorraine shall be handed over within the same period, together with all pre-war personnel and material. Further material necessary for the working of railways in the country on the left bank of the Rhine shall be left in situ. All stores of coal and material for the up-keep of permanent ways, signals and repair shops left entire in situ and kept in an efficient state by Germany during the whole period of armistice. All barges taken from the Allies shall be restored to them. A note appended regulates the details of these measures.

Eight. The German command shall be responsible for revealing all mines or delay acting fuses disposed on territory evacuated by the German troops and shall assist in their discovery and destruction. The German command shall also reveal all destructive measures that may have been taken (such as poisoning or polluting of springs, wells, etc.) under penalty of reprisals.

Nine. The right of requisition shall be exercised by the Allied and the United States armies in all occupied territory. The upkeep of the troops of occupation in the Rhine land (excluding Alsace-Lorraine) shall be charged to the German Government.

Ten. An immediate repatriation without reciprocity according to detailed conditions which shall be fixed, of all Allied and United States prisoners of war. [Applause.] The Allied Powers and the United States shall be able to dispose of these prisoners as they wish.

Eleven. Sick and wounded who can not be removed from evacuated territory will be cared for by German personnel, who will be left on the spot with the medical material required.

II. DISPOSITION RELATIVE TO THE EASTERN FRONTIERS OF GERMANY.

Twelve. All German troops at present in any territory which before the war belonged to Russia, Roumania, or Turkey shall withdraw within the frontiers of Germany as they existed on August first, 1914. [Applause.]

Thirteen. Evacuation by German troops to begin at once and all German instructors, prisoners, and civilian as well as military agents, now on the territory of Russia (as defined before 1914) to be recalled.

Fourteen. German troops to cease at once all requisitions and seizures and any other undertaking with a view to obtaining supplies intended for Germany in Roumania and Russia (as defined on August first, 1914).

Fifteen. Abandonment of the treaties of Bucharest and Brest-Litovsk and of the supplementary treaties. [Applause.]

Sixteen. The Allies shall have free access to the territories evacuated by the Germans on their eastern frontier either through Danzig or by the Vistula in order to convey supplies to the populations of those territories or for any other purpose.

III. CLAUSE CONCERNING EAST AFRICA.

Seventeen. Unconditional capitulation of all German forces operating in East Africa within one month. [Applause.]

IV. GENERAL CLAUSES.

Eighteen. Repatriation, without reciprocity, within a maximum period of one month, in accordance with detailed conditions hereafter to be fixed, of all civilians interned or deported who may be citizens of other Allied or Associated States than those mentioned in clause three, paragraph nineteen, with the reservation that any future claims and demands of the Allies and the United States of America remain unaffected.

Nineteen. The following financial conditions are required: Reparation for damage done. While such armistice lasts no public securities shall be removed by the enemy which can serve as a pledge to the Allies for the recovery or repatriation of war losses. Immediate restitution of the cash deposit, in the National Bank of Belgium, and in general immediate return of all documents, specie, stocks, shares, paper money together with plant for the issue thereof, touching public or private interests in the invaded countries. Restitution of the Russian and Roumanian gold yielded to Germany or taken by that power. [Applause.] This gold to be delivered in trust to the Allies until the signature of peace.

V. NAVAL CONDITIONS.

Twenty. Immediate cessation of all hostilities at sea and definite information to be given as to the location and movements of all German ships. Notification to be given to neutrals that freedom of navigation in all territorial waters is given to the naval and mercantile marines of the Allied and Associated Powers, all questions of neutrality being waived.

Twenty one. All naval and mercantile marine prisoners of war of the Allied and Associated Powers in German hands to be returned without reciprocity.

Twenty two. Surrender to the Allies and the United States of America of one hundred and sixty German submarines (including all submarine cruisers and mine laying submarines) with their complete armament and equipment in ports which will be specified by the Allies and the United States of America. [Applause.] All other submarines to be paid off and completely disarmed and placed under the supervision of the Allied Powers and the United States of America. [Applause.]

Twenty three. The following German surface warships which shall be designated by the Allies and the United States of America shall forthwith be disarmed and thereafter interned in neutral ports, or, for the want of them, in Allied ports, to be designated by the Allies and the United States of America and placed under the surveillance of the Allies and the United States of America, only caretakers being left on board, namely: Six battle cruisers, ten battleships, eight light cruisers, including two mine layers, fifty destroyers of the most modern type. All other surface warships (including river craft) are to be concentrated in German naval bases to be designated by the Allies and the United States of America, and are to be paid off and completely disarmed and placed under the supervision of the Allies and the United States of America. [Applause.] All vessels of the auxiliary fleet (trawlers, motor vessels, etc.) are to be disarmed.

Twenty four. The Allies and the United States of America shall have the right to sweep up all mine fields and obstructions laid by Germany outside German territorial waters, and the positions of these are to be indicated.

Twenty five. Freedom of access to and from the Baltic to be given to the naval and mercantile marines of the Allied and Associated Powers. To secure this the Allies and the United States of America shall be empowered to occupy all German forts, fortifications, batteries and defense works of all kinds in all the entrances from the Categat into the Baltic, and to sweep up all mines and obstructions within and without German territorial waters without any question of neutrality being raised, and the positions of all such mines and obstructions are to be indicated.

Twenty six. The existing blockade conditions set up by the Allies and Associated Powers are to remain unchanged and all German merchant ships found at sea are to remain liable to capture. [Applause.]

Twenty seven. All naval aircraft are to be concentrated and immobilized in German bases to be specified by the Allies and the United States of America.

Twenty eight. In evacuating the Belgian coasts and ports, Germany shall abandon all merchant ships, tugs, lighters, cranes and all other harbor materials, all materials for inland navigation, all aircraft and all materials and stores, all arms and armaments, and all stores and apparatus of all kinds.

Twenty nine. All Black Sea ports are to be evacuated by Germany; all Russian war vessels of all descriptions seized by Germany in the Black Sea are to be handed over to the Allies and the United States of America; all neutral merchant vessels seized are to be released; all warlike and other materials of all kinds seized in those ports are to be returned and German materials as specified in clause twenty eight are to be abandoned.

Thirty. All merchant vessels in German hands belonging to the Allied and Associated Powers are to be restored in ports to be specified by the Allies and the United States of America without reciprocity.

Thirty one. No destruction of ships or of materials to be permitted before evacuation, surrender or restoration.

Thirty two. The German Government shall formally notify the neutral Governments of the world, and particularly the Governments of Norway, Sweden, Denmark and Holland, that all restrictions placed on the trading of their vessels with the Allied and Associated Countries, whether by the German Government or by private German interests, and whether in return for specific concessions such as the export of shipbuilding materials or not, are immediately canceled.

Thirty three. No transfers of German merchant shipping of any description to any neutral flag are to take place after signature of the armistice.

VI. DURATION OF THE ARMISTICE.

Thirty four. The duration of the armistice is to be thirty days, with option to extend. During this period, on failure of execution of any of the above clauses, the armistice may be denounced by one of the contracting parties, on forty eight hours' previous notice.

VII. TIME LIMIT FOR REPLY.

Thirty five. This armistice to be accepted or refused by Germany within seventy two hours of notification.

The war thus comes to an end [prolonged applause]; for, having accepted these terms of armistice, it will be impossible for the German command to renew it.

It is not now possible to assess the consequences of this great consummation. We know only that this tragical war, whose consuming flames swept from one nation to another until all the world was on fire, is at an end and that it was the privilege of our own people to enter it at its most critical juncture in such fashion and in such force as to contribute in a way of which we are all deeply proud to the great result. [Applause.] We know, too, that the object of the war is attained; the object upon which all free men had set their hearts; and attained with a sweeping completeness which even now we do not realize. Armed imperialism such as the men conceived who were but yesterday the masters of Germany is at an end [applause], its illicit ambitions engulfed in black disaster. Who will now seek to revive it? The arbitrary power of the military caste of Germany which once could secretly and of its own single choice disturb the peace of the world is discredited and destroyed. [Applause.] And more than that,—much more than that,—has been accomplished. The great nations which associated themselves to destroy it have now definitely united in the common purpose to set up such a peace as will satisfy the longing of the whole world for disinterested justice, embodied in settlements which are based upon something much better and much more lasting than the selfish competitive interests of powerful states. [Applause.] There is no longer conjecture as to the objects the victors have in mind. They have a mind in the matter, not only, but a heart also. Their avowed and concerted purpose is to satisfy and protect the weak as well as to accord their just rights to the strong.

The humane temper and intention of the victorious governments has already been manifested in a very practical way. Their representatives in the Supreme War Council at Versailles have by unanimous resolution assured the peoples of the Central Empires that everything that is possible in the circumstances will be done to supply them with food and relieve the distressing want that is in so many places threatening their very lives [applause]; and steps are to be taken immediately to organize these efforts at relief in the same systematic manner that they were organized in the case of Belgium. By the use of the idle tonnage of the Central Empires it ought presently to be possible to lift the fear of utter misery from their oppressed populations and set their minds and energies free for the great and hazardous tasks of political reconstruction which now face them on every hand. Hunger does not breed reform; it breeds madness and all the ugly distempers that make an orderly life impossible.

For with the fall of the ancient governments which rested like an incubus upon the peoples of the Central Empires has come political change not merely, but revolution; and revolution which seems as yet to assume no final and ordered form but to run from one fluid change to another, until thoughtful men are forced to ask themselves, With what governments, and of what sort, are we about to deal in the making of the covenants of peace? With what authority will they meet us, and with what assurance that their authority will abide and sustain securely the international arrangements into which we are about to enter? There is here matter for no small anxiety and misgiving. When peace is made, upon whose promises and engagements besides our own is it to rest?

Let us be perfectly frank with ourselves and admit that these questions can not be satisfactorily answered now or at once. But the moral is not that there is little hope of an early answer that will suffice. It is only that we must be patient and helpful and mindful above all of the great hope and confidence that lie at the heart of what is taking place. [Applause.] Excesses accomplish nothing. Unhappy Russia has furnished abundant recent proof of that. Disorder immediately defeats itself. If excesses should occur, if disorder should for a time raise its head, a sober second thought will follow and a day of constructive action, if we help and do not hinder.

The present and all that it holds belongs to the nations and the peoples who preserve their self-control and the orderly processes of their governments; the future to those who prove themselves the true friends of mankind. To conquer with arms is to make only a temporary conquest; to conquer the world by earning its esteem is to make permanent conquest. [Applause.] I am confident that the nations that have learned the discipline of freedom and that have settled with self-possession to its ordered practice are now about to make conquest of the world by the sheer power of example and of friendly helpfulness. [Applause.]

The peoples who have but just come out from under the yoke of arbitrary government and who are now coming at last into their freedom will never find the treasures of liberty they are in search of if they look for them by the light of the torch. They will find that every pathway that is stained with the blood of their own brothers leads to the wilderness, not to the seat of their hope. They are now face to face with their initial test. We must hold the light steady until they find themselves. [Applause.] And in the meantime, if it be possible, we must establish a peace that will justly define their place among the nations, remove all fear of their neighbours and of their former masters, and enable them to live in security and contentment when they have set their own houses in order. I, for one, do not doubt their purpose or their capacity. There are some happy signs that they know and will choose the way of self-control and peaceful accommodation. If they do, we shall put our aid at their disposal in every way that we can. If they do not, we must await with patience and sympathy the awakening and recovery that will assuredly come at last. [Prolonged applause.]

At 1 o'clock and 31 minutes p. m. the President retired from the Hall of the House.

At 1 o'clock and 32 minutes p. m. the Speaker announced that the joint session was dissolved.

Thereupon the Vice President and the Members of the Senate returned to their Chamber.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House, in accordance with previous agreement, adjourned until Thursday, November 14, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials of the following titles were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WINGO: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 343) to provide for the procurement of a site in France and the erection thereon of a suitable monument or monuments or other memorials commemorating the valor and services of the American military forces; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. BARKLEY: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 344) declaring July 18 of each year to be a national holiday; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) to provide relief for sufferers from earthquake occurring in Porto Rico during the month of October, 1918; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, the following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Memorial of the Allied Printing Trades Council of Greater New York favoring the immediate passage of the Smith-Bankhead bill, providing for the rehabilitation of men and women disabled in industry; to the Committee on Education.

Also, a joint resolution of the Northern New York Federation of Women's Clubs asking for the passage of House bill 5407; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, November 12, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we seek Thy divine guidance. We pray that we may address ourselves to the nobler tasks of peace with the same enthusiasm and the same efficiency with which we gave ourselves to the conflict in which we have just been engaged. We pray especially that Thy blessing may rest upon those agencies that minister to the moral and spiritual welfare of the boys who have responded so willingly to the call of the country and who have so gloriously won the victory. We pray that there may be thrown about them to protect them Christian sympathy and helpfulness and service, and that they may return to us nobler men, unsoiled by their experience abroad, to enter once more with fresh vigor and life and high ideals upon all the affairs of our civil and commercial life. We pray that these agencies which minister to the welfare of the boys may receive the hearty and enthusiastic support of all the people of this country. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

COST OF PRODUCTION OF AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS (S. DOC. NO. 300).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of September 24, 1918, certain information relative to the cost of producing wheat and other farm products, which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry and ordered to be printed.

Mr. NORRIS subsequently said: I should like to inquire whether the report from the Secretary of Agriculture, which I understand has been made in response to a resolution submitted by myself and which the Senate passed several weeks ago, has been laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. NORRIS. That is the order I wanted to have made.

PRESIDENT WILSON'S DIPLOMACY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I ask consent of the Senate to read a resolution passed by the chamber of commerce in the city of Atlanta, where I live. The telegram to me states:

The following resolution was unanimously adopted this morning by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce: "Resolved by the directors of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce, That the following telegram be sent to Hon. Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States:"

The telegram to President Wilson reads:

In this hour of victory and universal thanksgiving for the deliverance of the world from barbarism, we salute you not only as the Commander in Chief of our Nation but as the leader in the world's struggle for liberty whose words have shaped the issues of the contest and guided the oppressed peoples of many lands to freedom. Your counsel has been the healing of the nations and the inspiration of our soldiers and our people in the glorious service and sacrifice which have turned the tide of war and rescued the world from slavery. For your enlightened leadership we are profoundly thankful, and we congratulate you upon the happy and successful termination of the contest. As at the outset this organization tendered you its services in carrying on the war, we now pledge to you the best efforts and full cooperation of ourselves and our people in meeting the weighty responsibilities and difficult problems of reconstruction.

Mr. President, this resolution expresses the view of a splendid body of men, and in this connection I will add that the terms of the armistice could not be more satisfactory. If unconditional surrender had been required the result would not have been more complete. In this hour of joy at the cessation of bloodshed, the triumph of liberty, all fair-minded men should be ready to concede that the diplomacy of President Wilson, criticized by some during the past 60 days, has really saved the world from 12 months more of war and sacrifice. He carried the battle for democracy into the heart of Austria and into the heart of Germany. He conducted the struggle there which contributed not less than the forces of Gen. Foch on the front to bring the war to a speedy and triumphant conclusion.

The world recognizes this to be true, and every American citizen should realize the part played by our President and the personal value of that part to each of us as well as to all the world.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. NELSON presented the memorial of Dr. E. O. Thorson, of Luverne, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed sales tax on medicinal preparations in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a telegram in the nature of a petition from L. S. Pomeroy, of Minneapolis, Minn., praying for the enactment of legislation allowing the deduction of a reasonable percentage of the value of merchandise inventories before arriving at the taxable profits, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Northwestern Hardwood Lumberman's Association, of Minneapolis, Minn., relative to the relaxation of present restrictions on the shipment and use of lumber, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

He also presented the memorial of H. D. Thorp, of Redwood Falls, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on photographic supplies in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented memorials from the Farmers and Merchants' State Bank of Oklee, the Glenwood State Bank, the First State Bank of Stacy, the Peoples' State Bank of North Mankato, and the Pelican Rapids State Bank, all in the State of Minnesota, remonstrating against the proposed stamp tax on bank checks in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. McCUMBER presented petitions of sundry citizens of Fargo, Bismarck, Buffalo, Plaza, Epworth, Carrington, Ray, and Moffit, all in the State of North Dakota, praying for the enactment of legislation granting the same rights and privileges to chiropractors that are granted to other branches of the medical profession in the Army and Navy, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. TRAMMELL introduced a bill (S. 5022) to authorize and grant to all officers and enlisted personnel of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps one month's furlough on full pay prior to being discharged from the service, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. CALDER. I submit a resolution and ask that it be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

The resolution (S. Res. 328) was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution numbered 75, agreed to on April 3, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the employment of an additional clerk by each Senator having no more than one clerk, one assistant clerk, and one messenger for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, for the remainder of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, at the rate of $100 per month, said compensation to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, continued and extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

PEACE NEGOTIATIONS.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I offer the following resolution to go over under the rule. I ask that it may lie on the table for the present.

The resolution (S. Res. 329) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Whereas the cause of the United States in the present war against the German and Austro-Hungarian Empires is identical with that of our allies, all having as a common object complete and permanent victory over the enemy and a peace on such terms as will prevent a recurrence of the catastrophe; and

Whereas the United States and her allies have established unity of military command in the prosecution of the war, and it is desirable that there should likewise and for the same reason be unity of diplomatic action between the United States and her allies with reference to their common enemy; and

Whereas the German Government addressed peace proposals to the United States Government separate and apart from the allies of the United States, and has attempted to bring about a separate agreement with the Government of the United States upon the terms of peace, and has requested the Government of the United States to act as an intermediary or mediator between the Government of Germany and the Governments of the allies of the United States in securing for Germany an armistice of arms and a discussion of terms of peace; and

Whereas the purpose of the German Government in such representations to the United States is to bring about a division of interests between the United States and her allies and a disagreement between them as to the settlement of the war: Therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that for the purpose of the existing war the United States should enter into full alliance with the other belligerent nations at war with Germany, and should conduct no separate peace negotiations, lay down no separate terms of peace, nor carry on any separate discussion with the German or Austro-Hungarian Governments as to treaty of peace, nor make any separate agreements with the German or Austro-Hungarian Governments as to peace or the terms of the same; and be it further

Resolved, That for the reason and purposes stated above the United States Government should, through its proper representatives, become a signatory to the agreement already made between our cobelligerents, having for its object complete unity between them in the matter aforesaid, known as the pact of London.

ADDRESS BY JOSEPH J. SLECHTA.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I have here the address of Mr. Joseph J. Slechta, traffic manager Gaston, Williams & Wigmore Steamship Corporation. The address was delivered at the annual convention of the American Manufacturers' Export Association, held in New York October 30 and 31, 1918, and is entitled "How shall we have a real merchant marine?"

I beg to say that I know Mr. Slechta very well. He was in the Consular Service in Brazil for several years, and later was New York manager of the Brazil Steamship Co. He has been a frequent contributor to the leading journals in the country of articles relating to shipping and the shipping interests.

I ask that this address may be referred to the Committee on Printing with a view to having it printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That action will be taken.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, I rose to ask the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH] concerning the conference report on the agricultural extension bill. I understand that the Senator from Georgia has charge of the matter, and I wish to know what is the present status of the report.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think we can get it up before the end of the week.

Mr. KENYON. Why can it not come up now? Is there any reason why it can not?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I think there may be some advantages by way of adjustment between now and the last of the week, and we can determine upon the course we will be compelled to pursue with reference to the disagreement in conference. It may be found that the only thing to be done will be simply to introduce a resolution continuing the Saulsbury resolution for six months after the declaration of peace. I feel sure that we can call up the conference report and have action upon it before the week passes. I will state to the Senator that I will aid in bringing it up before the end of the week.

Mr. KENYON. I will state that when I left a few days before the election I gave the chairman of the committee the power to use my vote in conference to recede from the rent amendment rather than to imperil the prohibition feature in the bill.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It was the Senator's power to use his vote in conference that brought the conference report into the Senate. His name was signed to the conference report which reached a disagreement.

Mr. KENYON. I do not want to see the prohibition feature of the bill under the present circumstances absolutely lost by the contest over the rent proposition.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It can not possibly be lost by delay. When we take up the conference report the Senate can recede from the Pomerene amendment if the Senate so desires.

Mr. KENYON. The Senator will bring it up during the week?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is my purpose to bring it up during the week. I move that the Senate adjourn until Friday.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Before the Senator from Georgia makes that motion, I should like to call attention to a matter which is one of emergency and I think possibly the Senate had better adjourn until to-morrow. An earthquake occurred in the western part of Porto Rico on the 11th of October. It resulted in destroying probably $4,000,000 worth of property and some lives. There is an emergency resolution which has just passed the House, the attention of the chairman of the House committee having been called to the state of the case and to the need for immediate relief in Porto Rico. That resolution proposes to appropriate $300,000, which is subject to the disposal of the War Department for emergency relief in Porto Rico. I should like very much to get the attention of the Senate to it at as early a day as possible. The Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico has met and practically agreed upon the resolution. I would suggest to the Senator, if agreeable to him, that the adjournment be taken until to-morrow. The resolution has not yet come over from the House, but I hoped it would reach the Senate to-day.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. It is generally conceded that a quorum of Senators is not now in the city. As the result of some conference among members of the steering committees on both sides it was practically agreed that a motion should be made to adjourn until Friday. It would seem that Friday would be as early as we could have a report from the Senator's committee. They could consider the resolution informally and be ready to report on Friday, could they not?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will say to the Senator that has already been done by the Senate committee and I think it probably would be better not to adjourn until Friday. The House has adjourned until Thursday. The committee has instructed me when the joint resolution comes here to report it favorably with an amendment. So if the Senate would adjourn until Thursday, I could get action on it and the House having adjourned until Thursday it could then take action on the Senate amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I desire the RECORD to show that at this time I am opposed to an adjournment to Friday or until to-morrow or any other day. There is much important business here to attend to, and if we keep on just meeting and adjourning from day to day, without doing anything else, until the revenue bill is reported, with business waiting for attention, it will never be attended to. The revenue bill will then displace everything else. Nothing else will have any show.

I refer particularly to the bill (S. 4947) to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States, and all unused cut-over, logging, and swamp lands and certain other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others for homes and for other purposes.

I think that legislation ought to be attended to without further delay and that we should not simply meet and adjourn from day to day, wholly disregardful of such important legislation. I emphatically protest against such procedure. We are here to attend to business and should do it and not be wasting time. I shall vote against the motion to adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT TO FRIDAY.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I move that the Senate adjourn until Friday next.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 12 o'clock and 15 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Friday, November 15, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 14, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God, our Heavenly Father, we bless Thee for that silent yet potent influence which is ever going out from Thee to uphold, sustain, and guide Thy children in right thinking and pure living.

Make us, we beseech Thee, more susceptible to the heavenly influences, that we may be guided in this critical hour by Thy judgments, which are true and righteous altogether.

Man proposes but God disposes. Never was the old adage more clearly illustrated than in the terrible war through which the world has been passing.

Grant that the conclusions which shall be finally reached may guide to a peace which shall live forever and aye, and righteousness make glad the hearts of all mankind. In the spirit of the Lord Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, November 11, 1918, was read and approved.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has telegrams from the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. BRUMBAUGH, and the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. LOBECK, asking indefinite leave of absence on account of sickness in the family. Without objection, the requests will be granted.

There was no objection.

NATIONAL BANKS.

Mr. EAGLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent as acting chairman of the Banking and Currency Committee to address the House for 10 minutes concerning the desirability of the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 179, proposing to amend the banking and currency law in such a way as to permit national banks to contribute to the seven organizations which are raising a fund of $170,500,000 for the united war-work service.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to address the House not to exceed 10 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Reserving the right to object, I want to ask the gentleman whether the Committee on Banking and Currency has acted on the bill to which he refers?

Mr. EAGLE. The committee has not, because this has been the first day since the recess of Congress when it was even possible that a majority of the committee were in the city. Nine only were present and responded to the call, while others sent telegrams expressing their thought about the measure; but there was not a majority present, whereupon the committee of necessity declined to take action.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Is it the purpose of the gentleman from Texas to ask unanimous consent for the passage of the bill if his request is granted?

Mr. EAGLE. I asked for the present consideration of the bill.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. I am frank to say that while I have no objection to the gentleman speaking, I should object to the passage of the bill under the circumstances.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is a subject which I presume practically everybody in the House would like to speak in favor of if it were in order. Why should the gentleman from Texas alone be allowed 10 minutes now in breach of our agreement? Is he acting chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency?

Mr. EAGLE. I am, and it was in that capacity I made the request.

Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, under the circumstances, with all due respect to the gentleman from Texas, I am obliged to object.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, if I may make a short statement, I think I would have been compelled to object myself in order to keep faith with the membership of the House in carrying out the agreement that we made. It is a matter, of course, perfectly legitimate to be discussed in the House, and personally I would like to have heard the gentleman's remarks. But having entered into this agreement and having shaped the agreement myself and asked the House to enter into it, I think I should notify the membership of the House that I feel it to be my duty to object to any extension of remarks or discussion on the floor of any subject unless it is some emergency, such as happened the other day with respect to Porto Rico.

Mr. EAGLE. If the gentleman will yield, I think the emergency to which he refers, that of Porto Rico, is no greater than the emergency that induced me to ask for the present consideration of joint resolution 179.

Mr. KITCHIN. We have had to object to other gentlemen who desired to address the House since this agreement was entered into, and, as I say, I feel that I am compelled to carry out the agreement to keep faith with the membership of the House.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state what the agreement is to which he refers?

Mr. KITCHIN. It is an agreement to take up no business, no extension of remarks, no unanimous-consent requests, until after the Senate disposes of the revenue bill, unless some emergency should occur, and in that event the majority and minority leaders would give notice to the membership so that it might return to Washington.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is satisfied that under the situation, so far as the Senate is concerned, that agreement will prevent the taking up of any business by the House for the rest of the session?

Mr. KITCHIN. That was the agreement.

Mr. DYER. Then why can not the House adjourn?

Mr. KITCHIN. The House can not adjourn for more than three days at a time without the consent of the Senate.

Mr. DYER. Does not the gentleman think that the Senate would, under the circumstances, agree to it?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think so.

Mr. DYER. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will try it again.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] made a request that he address the House——

Mr. WALSH. Oh, that has already been objected to.

Mr. WINGO. So as to show the House the situation, just as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] did the other day. I trust the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE] and the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KITCHIN] will at least permit the gentleman from Texas, who does not care to make a speech, but simply desires to lay the matter before the House as acting chairman of the committee, to address the House, and then, after having received the facts if the gentleman thinks it does not present an emergency situation, he can object.

Mr. KITCHIN. There is no question about this. The gentleman from Arkansas has been present here and has heard Members object to others addressing the House upon the ground that it is a violation of the agreement.

Mr. WINGO. Did the gentleman object to the gentleman from Tennessee when he made the statement?

Mr. KITCHIN. What gentleman from Tennessee?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. GARRETT made a statement the other day and got a bill passed as an emergency measure. The gentleman from Texas seeks to make a similar emergency request.

Mr. KITCHIN. But we all considered that that was an emergency, a great emergency, and the gentleman was present at the time.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. EAGLE] has stated that he desires to call the attention of the House to an emergency, and the gentleman refuses to permit the acting chairman of one of its committees to address the House upon an emergency so that he may lay the facts before the House and have it determine whether it is an emergency and coming within the spirit of the exceptions provided in the agreement itself.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman knows that it is a violation of the agreement.

Mr. WINGO. No; I do not. I have not been able to find out just what the agreement is. I thought it permitted consideration of emergency matters; and consideration of emergency matters has been permitted.

Mr. KITCHIN. The gentleman ought to have been present in the House or ought to read the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. I have been present.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order. This wrangle ought to stop sometime.

Mr. WINGO. I have been present in the House more regularly than has the gentleman from North Carolina.

Mr. WALSH. That is not in order.

Mr. WINGO. It may not be in order, but I have stated it anyway.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that the gentleman is not in order.

The SPEAKER. This conversation is out of order and has been for the past 10 minutes.

Mr. WINGO. I have not the slightest doubt of that, and the remarks of the gentleman from North Carolina were out of order; and no rule of this House is going to keep me silent when those who are seldom here question my attendance.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, on November 11 the House passed, by unanimous consent, House joint resolution 345——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WINGO. Has the gentleman from Tennessee obtained unanimous consent to make this explanation?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman does not have to have unanimous consent to correct the RECORD.

Mr. WINGO. But he has not stated that he desires to have the RECORD corrected.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Military Affairs be discharged from further consideration of House joint resolution 345, which has already been passed, and that the same be referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, to which it belongs.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent to change the reference of House joint resolution 345 from the Committee on Military Affairs to the Committee on Insular Affairs. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman whether or not that is an emergency?

Mr. MADDEN. The resolution has already been passed.

Mr. WINGO. Is there any emergency?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. WINGO. We all know that often controversies arise over changes of reference, and if a member of the Banking and Currency Committee—the acting chairman—can not be permitted to even submit a request for consideration of an emergency measure I shall object to consideration of all other matters.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the request of the gentleman from Tennessee. Is there objection?

Mr. WINGO. Not knowing that an emergency exists, I shall object, and I shall also object to any business being transacted that is not of an emergency nature.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas objects.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I think the gentleman from Arkansas is right in objecting. I would myself.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is a motion to adjourn.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 17 minutes p. m.), in accordance with the order previously made, the House adjourned until Monday, November 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11640) granting a pension to Mary J. Hood; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 6992) granting a pension to James P. Newton; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CLARK of Florida: A bill (H. R. 13132) authorizing the construction of additional vaults in the Treasury Building, Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. GOULD: A bill (H. R. 13133) to grant all officers and men in the military services extra full-duty pay when honorably discharged or mustered out; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HICKS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 346) declaring November 11 in each year to be a national holiday; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 347) declaring November 11 of each year to be a legal public holiday; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. VARE: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 348) declaring November 11 of each year a national holiday; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. FESS: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 349) providing for a world celebration in the city of Washington, D. C., July 4, 1919, to commemorate the ending of the war; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. VARE: Concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 59) requesting the President to negotiate with foreign governments to make November 11 of each year an international holiday; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. DENISON: A bill (H. R. 13134) granting an increase of pension to Homer H. Hanson; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 13135) for the relief of Lillian D. Boone; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McKINLEY: A bill (H. R. 13136) granting a pension to Sarintha A. Cashman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13137) granting an increase of pension to John E. Saxton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WARD: A bill (H. R. 13138) granting a pension to Isabelle Monroe; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Petition of the aviation committee of the Special Aid Society, asking for increase of pay for cadet aviators; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of sundry citizens of Brooklyn, urging the passage of the Edmonds bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petitions of John Pierson, the Joseph Fallert Brewing Co., Sarah B. Van Brunt, and George T. Stockham, all of Brooklyn, N. Y., asking for the passage of the osteopathic bill; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of the Federal Employees' Union, No. 4, urging the passage of the McKellar-Keating retirement bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

Also, memorial of the United Spanish War Veterans, National Soldiers' Home, Danville, Ill., asking further relief for veterans of the Spanish War; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, resolution of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, favoring amendment to section 202 of the war-revenue bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, memorial of the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, favoring House concurrent resolution 53; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. WALSH: Petition of certain subscribers to the fourth liberty loan, residents of Mattapoisett, Mass., urging absolute and unconditional surrender of the enemy; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, November 15, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we desire to address ourselves to the tasks of this day with a sense of the Divine presence and leadership. We seek even-handed justice. We remember that Thou hast established Thy throne in the heavens and that Thy kingdom ruleth over all. Thy hand alone can hold the balance exact. Thy inspiration alone can give to us the wisdom and patience and love necessary to do justice as well as to love mercy. So we pray Thee to guide us by Thine own Spirit with regard to the difficult duties that now confront us. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Tuesday, November 12, 1918, was read and approved.

DEEP WATERWAYS SYSTEM FROM DULUTH TO NEW YORK (S. DOC. NO. 301.)

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of Commerce transmitting, in response to a resolution of September 21, 1918, a report on the commercial advantages of ship canals connecting Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and Lake Ontario and the Hudson River, which, with the accompanying paper, was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a joint resolution (H. J. Res. 345) to provide relief for sufferers from earthquakes occurring in Porto Rico during the month of October, 1918, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

CONGRATULATORY CABLEGRAMS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is an order of the Senate that no communications from foreign governments shall be received save and except they are transmitted by the President of the United States. The Chair believes that was intended to apply to any business that might be desired to be transacted with the American Government. Certain communications have been received of a congratulatory character from foreign governments to the Senate of the United States, and, if there is no objection, the Chair will have them read.

The Secretary read as follows:

LAPAZ, BOLIVIA.

PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington:

I have the honor of communicating to the honorable Chamber presided over by you the following resolutions approved by the Bolivian Senate to-day:

"On receipt of confirmation of victory of the cause upheld by the allies in the European war, the national Senate of Bolivia rejoices over the victory of the cause of justice and right and is proud in the fact that Bolivia was the first South American Nation to break relations with Germany as a protest against the German methods of warfare, and resolves to address cablegrams of congratulations to the corresponding legislative chambers of the allied nations, as also to those who like her broke off relations formulating a vote in favor of a speedy arrival of such a peace as will guarantee the tranquillity of the world.

"ISMAEL VASQUEZ,
"ATILIANO APARICIO."

I offer you my respectful considerations.

ISMAEL VASQUEZ,
President of the Bolivian Senate.
ATILIANO APARICIO,
Secretary of State.

HABANA, CUBA, November 11, 1918.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE,
Washington:

The Senate of Cuba being organized, on this day hears the news of the signing of the armistice and unanimously passes the resolution—the Senators present standing—to suspend its session in honor of so auspicious an event and sends to its brother body its highest and most generous congratulations and makes wishes that a peace will be definitely secured which will guarantee liberty, justice, and democracy to the peoples.

RICARDO DOLZ,
President of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair also lays before the Senate a message from Montevideo to the American Senate, which says:

MONTEVIDEO.

The American Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The Senate of Uruguay felicitates the American Senate upon the decisive victory of the grand people of Washington upon the triumph of democracy.

RICARDO ARECO, President.
M. MAGARINOS SOLSONA,
Secretary.

The Chair thinks that being addressed to the Senate of the United States some response ought to be made to these communications.

Mr. POMERENE. I suggest that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The communications will be so referred.

RELIEF OF PORTO RICAN SUFFERERS.

H. J. Res. 345. Joint resolution to provide relief for sufferers from earthquakes occurring in Porto Rico during the month of October, 1918, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am instructed by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico to report back favorably with amendments the House joint resolution just referred to it. The amendments are as follows: Strike out all of section 4 of the joint resolution——

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there has been so much confusion in the Chamber that no one on this side could hear what was the request of the Senator from Delaware. Will the Senator please state it again?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I will state to the Senator that I have made no request. I am making a report on the joint resolution which has just been received from the House, and which was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. I am making a report from that committee favorably with certain amendments the committee has made. I was directed to make a report on the joint resolution. It is an emergency measure, and I propose to ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration as soon as I state what the report is.

The report from the committee is that section 4 of the joint resolution be stricken out, and that after the words "for this purpose," where they first appear in section 2, the following words be inserted:

And to reimburse the War Department for the several appropriations of the Army already made or expended in affording the temporary relief herein sanctioned.

In explanation of this report, I desire to say that the joint resolution passed by the House contains an appropriation of $300,000 to be expended under the direction of the Secretary of War for the relief of sufferers by earthquakes in Porto Rico and for the rebuilding and repairing of public buildings which have been destroyed or injured by earthquake. There was a very severe earthquake in the western portion of Porto Rico on the 11th of October, followed by successive small ones, and there has been within the last few days another earthquake in Porto Rico, which has caused some destruction. The War Department already, by allowing houseless Porto Ricans to use tents, has afforded relief. It has also placed at the disposal of the needy Porto Ricans certain portions of war supplies under the control of the War Department in Porto Rico. The House appropriated $300,000 as an additional amount to the amount already expended or used by the War Department. The effect of the Senate committee amendment is to make the total appropriations for this emergency, including the money already expended, $300,000. The War Department as yet has no data showing how much has been expended or exactly what was done.

Mr. SMOOT. Will the Senator repeat the amendment?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The amendment is to strike out section 4, which validates all previous expenditures but which will be covered by the other amendment, which I shall now read. It is to insert, after the words "and for this purpose," in section 2, the following:

And to reimburse the War Department for the several appropriations of the Army already made or expended in affording the temporary relief herein sanctioned.

The effect of the amendment is to make the total amount which has been and may be expended by the War Department $300,000. I am informed by a letter from the Secretary of War and by letters from the Governor of Porto Rico that it is very necessary that some aid be afforded by the Federal Government. The temporary relief, so far as the suffering is concerned, will not be a great expenditure. The money will not be chiefly applied to that, but will be applied to repairing and rebuilding public buildings in Porto Rico which have been damaged and destroyed and thereby give employment to persons who have been deprived of employment by the destruction of their property.

Mr. PENROSE. There was some confusion in the Chamber while the Senator was bringing this matter up. I should like to ask him what committee reports the joint resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. PENROSE. It ought to go to the Committee on Appropriations or the Committee on Military Affairs. Mr. President, I do not say that I am going to oppose in this case the expenditure of money, but I do intend to take the stand that the time has come to call a halt. The Senate does not hold a meeting any day that some Senator does not bring up a bill to expend a million or half a million or some other considerable sum on some specious pretext. If we are not going to stop I do not know where we are going to end.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I say to the Senator that I have not the slightest objection, if the Senate desires to have the joint resolution referred, to send it to any committee the Senate wants to refer it to. This is a matter which has been delayed for now nearly a week by reason of the adjournment of the Senate from time to time and by reason of the joint resolution not getting over here. It is an emergency which exists in Porto Rico for relief, which I think is entirely proper. If the Senator desires to have the joint resolution reported on by the Committee on Appropriations or any other committee I have no objection. I will have performed my duty by bringing this measure to the attention of the Senate and asking that it be acted upon.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I move to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations, with the request that they furnish a full report to the Senate of the character of the damage done, with an itemized statement of the expenditures already made and some kind of information as to the expenses contemplated.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If I may reply to the Senator's remark, I only desire to say that I think the condition of affairs in Porto Rico is such that Congress ought to act immediately on this matter. I have taken the matter up with the Chief of the Insular Division and endeavored to get the facts. Probably, if the Government of the United States waits until it gets detailed reports of the expenditures and what has been done there, the people of Porto Rico who are suffering will continue to suffer for a very considerable time. I shall vote against the motion, because the joint resolution has been reported from a committee. I did not seek to have it referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. It is simply to tide over an emergency in Porto Rico and to relieve people there in distress.

It seems to me we ought to be very much more careful regarding the people of Porto Rico than we would be regarding any one of the States of the Union, because the status of the Porto Ricans is one which is rather anomalous, as I conceive it, under our American Government. I think we should seek in every way to benefit those people, and particularly to relieve them from the great hardships which exist in their island, which we would not hesitate to do for one minute if there was a flood in the Johnstown district again, or if there were floods in Ohio, such as we have relieved. I think the emergency is the same. I shall vote against the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, because I think it should be attended to at once.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator may be convinced that this appropriation ought to be made. I do not think any other Senator has the slightest information about it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The committee, of course, has considered it.

Mr. PENROSE. I suppose the committee considered it. I do not know how many members of the committee were present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. A majority of the committee met last Monday and considered the joint resolution, anticipating that it would be here from the House and be referred to it as the proper committee.

Mr. PENROSE. The committee does not seem to have had very much information submitted to it. If we are to continue on every pretext of flood and famine and earthquake to spend public money on a large scale without any data, I do not know how we are to reduce the war taxes, which will be urged on us by everybody, in office and out of it. We have dealt rather generously with the people of Porto Rico. We freed them from tyranny; we put them in a position to control their affairs; and they are in receipt of a very liberal income as a result of the generosity of the United States.

I should like to have some little evidence that the Government of Porto Rico can not take care of the loss of $300,000 worth of property by an earthquake. Does the Senator from Delaware have any evidence as to how many buidings have been demolished by the earthquake and in what parts of the island?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I think if the Senator desires he might be enlightened by hearing the letter from the Governor of Porto Rico and the letter of the Secretary of War, which I will send to the desk. They have been considered by the committee.

I want to say, if the Senator was as familiar with what is known as the organic act of Porto Rico——

Mr. PENROSE. I voted for it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes; one frequently votes for a bill when he is not thoroughly familiar with its provisions, especially if not on the committee which considered it.

Mr. PENROSE. Especially during the last two years.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Has unanimous consent been granted for the consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. No; there is a motion to refer it to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. CUMMINS. I insist on the regular order.

Mr. PENROSE. If the Senator from Iowa objects to the consideration of the joint resolution, I will withdraw my motion and let it go to the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It can be reached again in three minutes under the call for reports of committees. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials, if the Senator from Iowa insists on postponing it until later.

Mr. FLETCHER. It came from the House regularly and was laid before the Senate.

Mr. SMOOT. The joint resolution just came from the House and has just been handed down?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and, without objection, the Senator from Delaware was making a report upon it.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to inquire when the joint resolution was referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This morning.

Mr. PENROSE. The committee had about one minute's session upon it, if any session at all.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I stated that the committee anticipated that the joint resolution would come from the House, and last Monday had a meeting, at which a majority of the committee were present, and they instructed me when the joint resolution did come from the House to make the report upon it which I have made.

I want further to say in reply to the Senator from Pennsylvania that there is a prohibition against appropriations being made by the Legislature of Porto Rico, possibly not in this case, but in many other cases, and it is questionable whether they could give relief in this case. This joint resolution authorizes the Legislature of Porto Rico to make appropriations for this particular purpose.

Mr. PENROSE. Then we have got to pay for every expenditure in Porto Rico that their local law does not permit?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The organic law, for which the Senator has already stated that he voted, paragraph 19, section 2, provides:

That no public money or property shall ever be appropriated, applied, donated, used, directly or indirectly, for the use, benefit, or support of any sect, church, denomination, sectarian institution or association, or system of religion, or for the use, benefit, or support of any priest, preacher, minister, or other religious teacher or dignitary as such, or for charitable, industrial, educational, or benevolent purposes to any person, corporation, or community not under the absolute control of Porto Rico.

Then it goes on with other provisions.

Mr. PENROSE. That does not include flood or famine or earthquake, but it expressly says, "Not under the absolute control of Porto Rico." Let them control this expenditure.

Mr. SAULSBURY. But the joint resolution includes the word "charitable." Of course, the Senator did not hear that word.

Mr. PENROSE. I did hear the word "charitable," but that is used in an entirely different sense from the relief of an emergency. This is sectarian charity, and there is a provision contained in the constitution of every State in the Union that appropriations shall not be made for sectarian charity, and it is a very proper one. But the Legislature of Porto Rico could make an appropriation for a nonsectarian charity under that provision.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am quite hopeless of being able to convince the Senator from Pennsylvania that the phrases which I have read, which seem to me to be perfectly clear, do not mean what he has construed them to mean. I do not know that it is worth while for me to try further in regard to that. The only desire I have in regard to this matter having been to correct a misapprehension under which I think the Senator is laboring about the meeting of the committee, the action which they have taken, and the very full consideration that they gave this subject or tried to give it—as full consideration as I know of any measure of this character having ever received by any committee of which I am a member—I think it would be perfectly proper to vote on the motion of the Senator to refer the resolution to the committee. I shall certainly vote against it, however.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wish to suggest that I hope the Senator from Delaware will not impliedly agree that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not agreeing to that.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think that the Senator from Delaware, as the chairman of the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, ought to insist on the jurisdiction of that committee over the joint resolution. I understand that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] only desires to have a full consideration of the matter and to have adequate data before the Senate votes on the proposition. The best way to have further consideration would be to have the matter referred back to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. The matter is properly in the jurisdiction of that committee; and it would be a reflection upon the committee, an attack upon the committee's work and upon the jurisdiction which has been allotted to it under the rules of the Senate, to take it away from that committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I agree with the Senator from Washington. I think that the joint resolution was properly referred in the first instance. I am obliged to the Senator, who is a member of that committee and who met with the other members of the committee to consider the joint resolution, for his statement. I am not consenting to the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania, and I am going to vote against it; but it seems to me that we are wasting a great deal of time in finding fault with very small appropriations which are necessary, in the opinion of the committee, which has, in my judgment, proper charge of the matter, just because, I suppose, there is an idea that any possible appropriation would be objected to. I regard it as a petty objection to a very necessary appropriation, and it will occasion a delay which will work great hardship to the people of Porto Rico. It seems to me that we may certainly place $300,000 at the disposal of the War Department to repair buildings which have been injured or destroyed by earthquakes and to assist the suffering people of that island. I shall vote for it.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator from Delaware will yield to me, I should like to ask him when this earthquake occurred? I confess I do not know anything about the earthquake or when it occurred.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The chief earthquake occurred on the 11th of October. There have been subsequent smaller ones, and within the last two or three days another has occurred, knowledge of which has come to me from the Bureau of Insular Affairs of the War Department.

Mr. OVERMAN. Was there much destruction of human life?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I presume there was destruction of life; but I think the best way for me to inform the Senator as to that is to have the letters in relation to the matter read.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not want the letters read. I merely desired to know if there was any destruction of life.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I can not say positively to the Senator whether or not lives were destroyed; but the destruction of property amounted to over $4,000,000. A great many people were rendered homeless, public buildings were injured, and many people were thrown out of employment by the destruction of buildings.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator from Delaware to allow the joint resolution to go to the Committee on Appropriations, for the reason that I can not call to mind a single appropriation of this character which has not been referred to the Appropriations Committee. This is a direct appropriation, if ever there was one; I do not know anything about its details, except what I have heard the Senator state; but I think that where there is money appropriated directly out of the Treasury, as is proposed to be done in this case, no matter whether it may be for Cuba or Porto Rico or for sufferers in the South on account of flood or sufferers in Ohio or sufferers by earthquake in San Francisco, it makes no difference; legislation for that purpose ought to go to the Appropriations Committee. Therefore I hope that the Senator from Delaware will allow this joint resolution to go to that committee.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, I think the joint resolution was properly referred to the committee of the Senate having jurisdiction of matters of this kind coming from Porto Rico. They are supposed to have some general knowledge in regard to subjects down there.

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to say to the Senator——

Mr. SAULSBURY. If the Senator will permit me to continue for a moment——

Mr. OVERMAN. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. The course pursued in the Senate with regard to this joint resolution was the same as that pursued in the other House. The joint resolution in the House of Representatives was not referred to the Appropriations Committee, but it was referred to the Committee on Insular Affairs, which I think is the name of the committee having jurisdiction of the matter in that body. When the joint resolution came over here it was very properly referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. It is now reported from that committee. I have no personal desire that the joint resolution shall be referred to any committee of which I happen to be the chairman or a member; but it seems to me that it should be referred to the proper and appropriate committee, and that that was done in this case. The Senator from Washington is a member of the committee; doubtless there are other members of the committee who are present, and I should be very glad to have them say anything they desire to say about it; but I think the motion to refer is an improper motion.

Mr. VARDAMAN. May I ask the Senator from Delaware what committee considered the joint resolution?

Mr. SAULSBURY. It was considered by the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico.

Mr. VARDAMAN. On what day was the joint resolution considered?

Mr. SAULSBURY. On Monday.

Mr. VARDAMAN. On Monday last?

Mr. SAULSBURY. Yes. The Senator from Mississippi was notified of the meeting of the committee, but he was not present.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator will yield to me, I desire to say that there is no reflection intended on his committee. All legislation appropriating money should be referred to the Appropriations Committee. That is the committee which considers appropriations. The Porto Rican Committee is concerned in regard to Porto Rican domestic affairs and the laws of Porto Rico. Heretofore the appropriations in regard to Territories and for Porto Rico have been before the Appropriations Committee. We ought to refer to that committee all legislation making direct appropriations from the Treasury. If we do not do so we are going to find ourselves in inextricable confusion. The Committee on Appropriations is formed to consider these matters, and I wish to say, in answer to the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], that I do not think it would be any reflection on the committee of which he is a member to have the joint resolution referred to the Committee on Appropriations. That committee ought to be in touch with these matters. It is their duty to consider every appropriation which is to come directly from the Treasury. That is why the committee was established. The Committee on the Pacific Islands and Porto Rico was formed for the purpose of reporting legislation in regard to Porto Rico. They have performed that duty, and they have done it very wisely. I am not proposing to reflect on the committee, and I do not think anyone else is proposing to do so who favors a reference of the joint resolution to the Appropriations Committee. Not only this joint resolution, but every piece of legislation of a similar nature ought to go to that great committee, which has such matters in charge. They know the condition of the Treasury and they will get all the details in regard to the matter when it is proposed to pass a law making appropriations. That is their duty, and that is the committee to which, in my judgment, the joint resolution ought to be referred.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know that the proposition which the Senator from North Carolina states has been agitated. It has been agitated by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], and I think it has been advocated to a certain extent by some prominent members of the Appropriations Committee in the House, that all appropriations should be considered and recommended by the Appropriations Committee; but that is a change in the allotment of business of the Senate which has not yet been made. The Senator's statement that all appropriations ought to be considered and recommended by the Appropriations Committee is in the face of the fact that the Committee on Military Affairs prepares and recommends appropriations——

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. Just a second. That the Committee on Naval Affairs prepares and recommends vast appropriations, and that various other committees in connection with their jurisdiction over particular matters, such as the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, the Committee on the District of Columbia, and any number of other committees, prepare and recommend appropriations. Matters that relate peculiarly to Porto Rico and to the Pacific islands, which means the Hawaiian Islands, are within the jurisdiction of the committee on that subject, including the appropriations which relate distinctly and separately to those islands.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me, I desire to state that the rules of the Senate themselves provide where appropriation bills shall go. Naval appropriations, under the rules of the Senate, go to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and military appropriations, under the rules of the Senate, go to the Committee on Military Affairs. What the Senator from Iowa has been contending for is that all appropriations shall go to the Appropriations Committee, and I am rather inclined to agree with him; but under the rules of the Senate the Committee on Military Affairs, the Committee on Naval Affairs, the Committee on Agriculture, and certain other committees are designated by those rules to consider certain appropriations. Therefore every other appropriation, according to the spirit and meaning of the rules, should go to the Appropriations Committee. It is the duty of that committee to consider such appropriations, and they ought to perform that duty.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, the situation with reference to the joint resolution seems to be that it came over from the House, was referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, and that committee has now made a report on the joint resolution. It was reported with an amendment, and now the Senator from Pennsylvania moves to refer the joint resolution to the Committee on Appropriations. I have never heard of such a procedure as that being followed in the Senate. It is a distinct reflection, it seems to me, on the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, which committee has considered this joint resolution, has gone into the details, has made inquiry and investigation regarding it, and is prepared to furnish information to the Senate to the same extent as any other committee could furnish it.

The Senator seems impatient and to want information. One Senator even suggested that he never heard of the earthquake in Porto Rico that occurred about a month ago, by which more than $4,000,000 worth of property was destroyed, people were rendered homeless, thrown out of employment, and are in a very distressing condition. They ought to be given relief.

The appropriate committee to consider that matter is the committee which considers all matters with relation to Pacific Islands and Porto Rico. That committee has considered the joint resolution; it has acted on it, and has the information here ready to lay before the Senate. Why can we not go on and consider the resolution? If it appropriates too much, or if the data furnished by the committee are not sufficient to warrant their conclusion, we can alter it, change it, or amend it as we see fit, but we can get just as much information on that subject now as we can a week or a month from now, after the Appropriations Committee makes a similar report on the resolution.

The committee charged with this particular duty has considered the joint resolution. It did not originate in the Senate; it originated in the House of Representatives; it has passed the House and was there considered by a similar committee. It came to the Senate and was referred to the committee having particular jurisdiction—special jurisdiction with regard to Porto Rico. That committee has investigated it, has reports from the War Department and from other departments upon the subject, giving all the data with reference to it. The newspapers of Porto Rico have been full of it, and have furnished information. I have read several issues of papers from that island describing the awful destruction of property and the tidal wave that swept over a large portion of the coast. The committee has found that those people ought to be given some relief. If that is true, why should we not act on it now? There is no use to give relief a month or two from now, when the people will have died or have suffered all the distress of this terrible calamity to the limit. I think we ought to act on it now. The reference to another committee is simply procrastination and delay, and will accomplish no good result.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I presume that if there is any necessity for acting upon this resolution there is a necessity for acting quickly; but it seems to me that if the facts are in the possession of the committee which has reported the resolution the facts might be laid before the Senate, and the Senate can determine now as well as a week later whether or not it desires to vote this appropriation at all. Certainly if we are to act we ought to act in time to help the people whom we are assuming to help. I trust therefore that we may go ahead, have the facts laid before the Senate, and determine whether or not it is necessary to appropriate at all; and if it is necessary to appropriate, to appropriate in time to serve the people whom we wish to help.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Just a moment; let us get somewhere. We are in this parliamentary situation exactly: The joint resolution came over from the House of Representatives, and the Chair referred it to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, to which committee the Chair thought it properly belongs. The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico, without objection from the Senate, made a report with an amendment, and just at the point when the Senator from Delaware was, so he says, about to ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the joint resolution, the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] interposed with a motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on Appropriations. The Chair thinks that motion is in order and must be disposed of one way or another, but there is as yet no right for the present consideration of this joint resolution. On objection of a Senator, it will go over until to-morrow at least.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Would it not first be necessary to discharge the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico from further consideration of the joint resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has already been discharged; it has already made its report. The Chair's opinion may amount to nothing, but he thinks it is no reflection upon the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico at all to refer the matter to another committee. The Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico have made their report. It is here now. There is no occasion to refer it back to them that the Chair can see. It went to them, in the view of the Chair, properly, and they very properly made a report, and it is here now. The only thing now to be done is to vote on the motion of the Senator from Pennsylvania to refer the resolution as reported to the Committee on Appropriations. If that is voted down and if there is objection to the consideration of the joint resolution, of course it can not be now considered, and goes to the calendar.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I am not acquainted at all with the facts of the case before the Senate. Therefore what I shall say has no bearing on the real merits of this controversy. Neither do I intend to reflect upon the committee that reported the joint resolution, for I have no doubt they have given it as careful consideration as any other committee of the Senate would do if referred to them; but I think there is a question involved in this report that is very material to the orderly business of the Senate.

We have gone through a period of war where the control of legislation has been more or less lax and where, when the necessity presented itself, we have not hesitated to draw technical rules as to the jurisdiction of committees. But there is a reason behind the rules of the Senate, or the rules ought to be abolished; and, as I understand, the reason of the rules is not only for the conduct of orderly business in the Senate, but to preserve the rights of the Government; and one of those rights is to protect the Treasury.

Mr. President, there can be no doubt that a vast amount of money has been appropriated in the past year that was unnecessary because there was not an absolute coordination of effort on the part of one set of men with a view to protecting the Treasury against waste. When you scatter your appropriation bills among a number of committees there is not the check and balance that you have when they go to one committee.

To a certain extent that already has been done by the rules of the Senate. The very fact that the House and the Senate under their rules have deprived the general Appropriations Committee of part of its jurisdiction and have scattered the power to legislate in reference to appropriations is one of the reasons why we hear continual talk through the country to the effect that we should have some system of control of the Treasury expenditures, some budget committee, or some plan of that kind. It is because you have lost control where control ought to be placed.

The rules of the Senate provide that all appropriation bills shall go to the general Committee on Appropriations, unless the rules specifically provide in specific cases that they shall go to some other committee, and those are very clearly set out. In matters of war expenditures, the bills carrying appropriations go to the Committee on Military Affairs; bills in reference to naval expenditures, to the Committee on Naval Affairs; bills in reference to agricultural expenditures, to the Agricultural Committee; and a few other exceptions. But outside of those exceptions the Senate has given sole jurisdiction in matters of appropriation to the general Committee on Appropriations, for the purpose of conducting orderly business and for the purpose of conserving the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just one moment. Now we have reached an era in the history of this country, with the war over and war expenditures still hanging on the Nation, when the battle cry of the people of the United States of necessity must be retrenchment and reform in these matters. There can be no other course. It is idle to say that we will increase taxation when we can accomplish the same result by proper expenditures and reach it by economy.

I yield to the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, merely for information, the Senator has stated that the rules provide that all appropriation bills must go to the Committee on Appropriations, except as the rules otherwise specifically provide. Can the Senator inform me where there is any such rule of the Senate?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have not it at hand. I can find it for the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I can inform the Senator where the rule is to be found. It is on page 17 of the Standing Rules of the Senate, paragraph 1.

Mr. LENROOT. That applies only to general appropriation bills. Of course this is not a general appropriation bill, and it has been held many times that specific appropriations do not come within that rule.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It has been held sometimes in the Senate in recent years, on points of order, that specific appropriations do not come within the language of the rules in reference to general appropriations. That has never been the holding in the House of Representatives, and has not been the holding in the Senate until recent times. I think it is a very lax ruling and a very improper one for the orderly conduct of business and the conservation of the Treasury.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I should like to ask the Senator from Alabama if he will state to the Senate that it is his judgment that under a rule the general appropriation bills, except where specifically otherwise provided, shall be referred to the Appropriations Committee, a specific appropriation, one item for a particular case, should be referred to the Appropriations Committee?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not think there is any doubt about it. I am not talking about the technical language of the rule. The rule has been here for years. In the House of Representatives there never has been any question about it, and the rule reads in practically the same way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As I understand it, then, that is a holding to the effect that the language "general appropriation bill" also includes a specific item of appropriation.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does where that is the gravamen of the bill. That is a general appropriation if it is the gravamen of the bill. I do not contend that a revenue bill might not be brought into the Senate, where the purpose of the bill is to produce revenue, and carry certain appropriations within the terms of the bill that are a minor matter, for the purpose of carrying out that bill; or that a bill relating to railroads and the government of railroads might not be reported from the Interstate Commerce Committee, having jurisdiction of it, and, as an incident to that bill, carry a certain amount of appropriations for the purpose of enforcing the terms of the law. But when it comes down to the sole question of the expenditure of money, and no other provision is contemplated, then I say that all bills of that class should go, and properly go, to one committee. Otherwise you leave this loose practice of allowing bills for the appropriation of money to go to practically any committee in the Senate, through some reason or other, pretext or excuse, good or bad. My criticism is not directed to this particular case, because if this joint resolution does not go to the Appropriations Committee I admit that it was properly referred to the Committee on Pacific Islands and Porto Rico; but if you allow measures of this kind to be scattered throughout the committees of the Senate you give an opportunity to those who are anxious to secure appropriations to pick the committees where they will get favorable reports and steer bills in that direction. The only way you are going to conserve the Treasury of the United States, the only way we are going to meet this situation that is going to confront the people of the United States in the next decade, of economy in order to meet past war expenditures, is to have a committee that has the power and the jurisdiction and the ability to properly conserve the great appropriations of the Government, and by that I mean the small as well as the great appropriations that come before us purely as matters of appropriation.

If the Senate is going to continue—and there is precedent for it—its past policy of a loose distribution of bills, why should not this situation arise with regard to the Committee on Cuban Relations, for example? I do not know that that committee functions in any particular way at this time, or ever has; but it seems to me that if some American battleship were wrecked off the coast of Cuba, or some other question arose that needed money, and purely money, in Cuba, it would be absurd to say that that committee, which has no jurisdiction of the matter, and does not consider questions of appropriations, should have the right to bring in a bill appropriating large sums of money.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very much gratified to hear the Senator from Alabama and other Senators express an ardent desire to curtail expenditures and protect the Treasury, but I am somewhat surprised at his statement that the Appropriations Committee is able and willing to do that. My impression of the Appropriations Committee—of course it has had the excuse of the emergency of the war, which, however, is now in part ended—is that it has been appropriating money here with about as reckless disregard of economy and of the burdens imposed upon the people as it was possible for the imagination to conceive. The impression that I have had, and my observation of the action of the committee, is that without question, without adequate investigation, without data, without attaching wise or prudent conditions as to the expenditure of the money appropriated, it has granted out of the Treasury of the people the amounts asked for by the departments and the various emergency commissions and committees which have been set up for the expenditure of this money.

One of the most powerful proofs of that that could possibly be introduced would be, if a man cared to use evidence of that kind, to take a moving-picture camera, station it out here by the Senate door, and focus it on the group of men who are engaged in constructing a vast number of temporary buildings here, and observe through it the actions of these men, who are being paid large wages out of the appropriations made without condition or limitation by the Appropriations Committee. Why, in a group of 20 you will see not more than 3 of them working or moving at one time, the rest of them being idle.

I might call the Senator's attention to the getting out of spruce by the Government, which I understand is still going on, although the armistice has been agreed to, and the probability is that there will be no further fighting in the war. There have been in the spruce woods of the Northwest a great army of men, at enormous wages——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the Senator will allow me, I am very glad to yield to him in my time for a question in regard to the matter under consideration, namely, appropriations that are within the control of the Senate; but I hope he will not take my time to discuss the question of how the money has been disposed of after it has left the control of the Appropriations Committee, because that is the issue involved.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I just wanted to call attention to the fact that those appropriations were made by the Appropriations Committee.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I suppose it is natural enough for the Senator to take the position that he has taken, because he is not a member of the Appropriations Committee and he is not informed on the question. The reason why the Senator has made the statement he has just made is because of lack of information on his part, and I shall be glad to demonstrate that to the Senator. Being a member of the Appropriations Committee, I have some knowledge on the question.

I do not hesitate to say that that portion of the Senator's speech which relates to war expenditures to a large extent is true. I do not mean to say that the committee has not given careful study and a careful understanding of the facts so far as it was possible to ascertain the facts, but we plunged into this war without any knowledge whatever of what was needed or what was necessary to carry on the war. The executive branch of the Government, to a large extent, were just as blind as the committees of Congress, and we had to appropriate money in millions—yes, in billions—without an absolute knowledge of what could be accomplished by it, because it was war. But when the Senator says that the Appropriations Committee, when you go beyond the jurisdiction of war, has been reckless in its expenditures, he is not informed of the facts.

The bills that have been reported to the Senate from the general Appropriations Committee in matters of government that did not directly relate to the war issue have been cut to the bone. In every way they have economized. The committee has sat there month after month and refused to increase expenditures. It has been besieged from every source, in the Senate and out of the Senate, to increase wages and increase expenditures, but outside of war endeavor we have refused to do so continually and systematically.

Just to illustrate, the Senator refers to this housing proposition. Probably if the war had gone on for two or three years these buildings would have been necessary; but I concur with what the Senator says. The war having ceased, peace having come, the expenditure for these buildings is probably almost an entire loss.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to ask him a question on that point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator says I am misinformed. I do not believe I am. I do not think the country is; but aside from that, let me ask the Senator this question: The Senator says the Committee on Appropriations acted carefully, and he says that he wants data in regard to the item that is now before the Senate. Did the Committee on Appropriations make an estimate or have an estimate or have any data whatever as to the reasonable cost of erecting these houses for temporary occupancy? I should like the Senator to advise me as to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will call the Senator's attention to where he is misinformed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What I should like to have the Senator do is to answer my question.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am going to answer it, but I am giving the facts, and I am sure what I shall say will be a complete answer to the Senator.

This appropriation did not originate with the general Appropriations Committee of the Senate. The whole housing proposition came before the Senate Appropriations Committee originally and was turned down and they refused to grant the appropriation. Then it came over here, I think, as a House bill from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, carrying an authorization, I think, originally of fifty millions for buildings outside of the District of Columbia and ten millions for buildings in the District of Columbia. It did not go to the general Appropriations Committee, but it went to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds and was passed as a legislative bill, carrying an authorization. I suspect, although I do not know, that the Senator himself voted for it. I do not say he did, because I do not know, but I know of no serious objection on his part. When that authorization was made by law—was made by the Senate, not by the Appropriations Committee, and had been signed by the President and was the law—there was nothing in the world for your Appropriations Committee to do but to appropriate the money. We originally, as a committee, refused to pass amounts of this kind, and the matter was taken out of our jurisdiction, and we were directed by the law itself. So I say I think if the Senator would fully inform himself on these questions so far as they relate to the functions of the general Appropriations Committee of the Senate, he would find that where we had any reasonable opportunity we have conserved the public funds. I admit that in war expenditures in many places and to a large extent we had to make appropriations blindly, because the war drove us into that situation.

That is the real condition of things. I am not criticizing the joint resolution. I do not know the facts about it. I am not criticizing the report that is before the Senate. But I do say that if the Senate proceeds to scatter its appropriation bills to all the committees in the Senate you are going to have numerous instances, just such as the Senator has himself pointed out, of building $10,000,000 worth of houses in the District of Columbia that probably will not be used in the future.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, inasmuch as this matter, which I regard as entirely out of order, is likely to proceed interminably, I ask unanimous consent to present a petition.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If the Senator raises a point of order, the presentation of petitions and memorials is in order.

Mr. CUMMINS. I raised a point of order, and I insisted on the regular order after I made a parliamentary inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair did not so understand it. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

MEASURES LIMITED TO THE WAR.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have a memorandum of important measures that were limited to the period of the war on the face of the statutes providing for them. I think it would be useful to Senators and others, and I ask unanimous consent that it be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

IMPORTANT MEASURES LIMITED TO THE PERIOD OF THE WAR ON THE FACE OF THE STATUTES PROVIDING FOR THEM.

Sixty-fifth Congress, first session.

Public act 23, making appropriations to supply deficiencies for 1917.

PRESIDENT'S PROCLAMATION TO DECLARE WHEN WAR HAS TERMINATED.

SEC. 4. That the service of all persons selected by draft and all enlistments under the provisions of the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, shall be for the period of the war, unless sooner terminated by discharge or otherwise. Whenever said war shall cease by the conclusion of peace between the United States and its enemies in the present war the President shall so declare by a public proclamation to that effect, and within four months after the date of said proclamation or as soon thereafter as it may be practicable to transport the forces then serving without the United States to their home station, the provisions of said act, in so far as they authorize compulsory service by selected draft or otherwise, shall cease to be of force and effect.

Public act 23, making appropriations to supply urgent deficiencies in appropriations on account of war expenses for the fiscal year 1917, and for other purposes.

UNITED STATES SHIPPING BOARD AND EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION.

The emergency shipping fund provision of June 15, 1917, at paragraph 10, provides that "all authority granted to the President therein, or by him delegated, shall cease six months after a final treaty of peace is proclaimed between this Government and the German Empire."

Under section 11 of Public act No. 268 of the Sixty-fourth Congress, known as the United States shipping act, the United States Shipping Board was authorized, in order to carry out the purposes of the act, to form under the laws of the District of Columbia one or more corporations for the purchase, construction, equipment, lease, charter, maintenance, and operation of merchant vessels in the United States. Section 11 goes on in the last paragraph to provide that "at the expiration of five years from the conclusion of the present European war the operation of vessels on the part of any such corporation in which the United States is then a stockholder shall cease, and the said corporation shall stand dissolved. The date of the conclusion of the war shall be declared by proclamation of the President. The vessels and other properties of any such corporation shall revert to the board (Shipping Board)."

Public act 24, to punish acts of interference with the foreign relations, the neutrality and the foreign commerce of the United States, to punish espionage, and better to enforce the criminal laws of the United States and for other purposes, known as the "espionage act."

TITLE I.

SEC. 3. Whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully make or convey false reports or false statements with intent to interfere with the operation or success of the military or naval forces of the United States or to promote the success of its enemies and whoever, when the United States is at war, shall willfully cause or attempt to cause insubordination, disloyalty, mutiny, or refusal of duty, in the military or naval forces of the United States, or shall willfully obstruct the recruiting or enlistment service of the United States, to the injury of the service or of the United States, shall be punished by a fine of not more than $10,000 or imprisonment for not more than 20 years, or both.

TITLE VII.

SECTION 1. Whenever during the present war the President shall find that the public safety shall so require and shall make proclamation thereof, it shall be unlawful to export from or ship from or take out of the United States to any country named in such proclamation any article or articles mentioned in such proclamation, except at such time or times, and under such regulations and orders, and subject to such limitations and exceptions as the President shall prescribe, until otherwise ordered by the President or by Congress: Provided, however, That no preference shall be given to the ports of one State over those of another.

The appropriations for the War Trade Board are based upon authority contained in this and the "trading-with-the-enemy act."

Public act 26, to authorize condemnation proceedings for lands for military purposes.

Hereafter the Secretary of War may cause proceedings to be instituted in the name of the United States, in any court having jurisdiction of such proceedings, for the acquirement by condemnation of any land, temporary use thereof, or other interest therein, or right pertaining thereto needed for certain military purposes. * * *

(No limitation.)

Public act 29, authorizing the President to increase temporarily the Signal Corps of the Army and to purchase, manufacture, maintain, repair, and operate airships, and to make appropriations therefor, and for other purposes, for and during the present emergency.

Public act 40, to provide for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products.

SEC. 12. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect when the national emergency resulting from the existing state of war shall have passed, the date of which shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President; but the date when this act shall cease to be in effect shall not be later than the beginning of the next fiscal year after the termination, as ascertained by the President, of the present war.

Public act 41, to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of food products and fuel.

SEC. 24. That the provisions of this act shall cease to be in effect when the existing state of war between the United States and Germany shall have terminated, and the fact and date of such termination shall be ascertained and proclaimed by the President * * *.

Public act 48, to create the Aircraft Board and provide for its maintenance.

SEC. 3. That said board and tenure of the members thereof shall continue during the pleasure of the President, but not longer than six months after the present war.

Public act 91, to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes, known as the "trading-with-the-enemy act."

Nearly all activities authorized in this act cease upon the termination of the war, except certain duties of the Alien Property Custodian in handling property in his possession.

The appropriations for the Alien Property Custodian, the War Trade Board, and for censorship are based wholly or in part upon authority contained in this act.

Sixty-fifth Congress, second session.

Public act 102, to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire, and to sell or otherwise dispose of improved or unimproved land, houses, buildings, and for other purposes, and provide housing facilities for its employees.

(No limitations.)

Public act 107, to provide for the operation of transportation systems while under Federal control, for the just compensation of their owners, and for other purposes.

SEC. 14. That the Federal control of railroads and transportation systems herein and heretofore provided for shall continue for and during the period of the war and for a reasonable time thereafter, which shall not exceed one year and nine months next following the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, however, That the President may prior to July 1, 1918, relinquish control of all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation further Federal control of which the President shall deem not needful or desirable; and the President may at any time during the period of Federal control agree with the owners thereof to relinquish all or any part of any railroad or system of transportation. The President may relinquish all railroads and systems of transportation under Federal control at any time he shall deem such action needful or desirable. No right to compensation shall accrue to such owners from and after the date of relinquishment for the property so relinquished.

SEC. 16. That this act is expressly declared to be emergency legislation enacted to meet conditions growing out of the war; and nothing herein is to be construed as expressing or prejudicing the future policy of the Federal Government concerning the ownership, control, or regulation of carriers or the method or basis of the capitalization thereof.

Public act 121, to provide further for the national security and defense and, for the purpose of assisting in the prosecution of the war, to provide credits for industries and enterprises in the United States necessary or contributory to the prosecution of the war, and to supervise the issuance of securities, and for other purposes, known as the War Finance Corporation act.

TITLE I. WAR FINANCE CORPORATION.

That the Secretary of the Treasury and four additional persons (who shall be the directors first appointed, as hereinafter provided) are hereby created a body corporate and politic in deed and in law by the name, style, and title of the "War Finance Corporation" (herein called the corporation), and shall have succession for a period of 10 years: Provided, That in no event shall the corporation exercise any of the powers conferred by this act, except such as are incidental to the liquidation of its assets and the winding up of its affairs after six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be fixed by proclamation of the President of the United States.

TITLE II.—CAPITAL ISSUES COMMITTEE.

SEC. 200. That there is hereby created a committee to be known as the "Capital Issues Committee," hereinafter called the committee, and to be composed of seven members to be appointed by the President of the United States, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. At least three of the members shall be members of the Federal Reserve Board.

The terms during which the several members of the committee shall respectively hold office shall be determined by the President of the United States.

SEC. 206. That this title shall continue in effect until, but not after, the expiration of six months after the termination of the war, the date of such termination to be determined by a proclamation of the President of the United States, but the President may at any time by proclamation declare that this title is no longer necessary and thereupon it shall cease to be in effect.

Public act 149, to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs.

SEC. 5. That the power and authority granted therein shall cease with the termination of the present war, except the power and authority to care for, sell, or rent such property as remains undisposed of and to conclude and execute contracts for the sale of property made during the war. Such property shall be sold as soon after the conclusion of the war as it can be advantageously done: Provided, That before any sale is consummated the same must be authorized by Congress.

All moneys received by the United States in carrying out the act entitled "An act to authorize the President to provide housing for war needs," approved May 16, 1918, may be used as a revolving fund until June 30, 1919, for further carrying out the purposes of the said act. (Additional urgent deficiency act for fiscal year 1918.)

Public act 152, authorizing the President to coordinate or consolidate executive bureaus, agencies, and offices, and for other purposes, in the interest of economy and the more efficient concentration of the Government.

For the national security and defense, for the successful prosecution of the war, for the support and maintenance of the Army and Navy, for the better utilization of resources and industries, and for the more effective exercise and more efficient administration by the President of his powers as Commander in Chief of the land and naval forces the President is hereby authorized to make such redistribution of functions among executive agencies as he may deem necessary, including any functions, duties, and powers hitherto by law conferred upon any executive department, commission, bureau, agency, office, or officer, in such manner as in his judgment shall seem best fitted to carry out the purposes of this act, and to this end is authorized to make such regulations and to issue such orders as he may deem necessary, which regulations and orders shall be in writing and shall be filed with the head of the department affected and constitute a public record: Provided, That this act shall remain in force during the continuance of the present war and for six months after the termination of the war by the proclamation of the treaty of peace, or at such earlier time as the President may designate: Provided further, That the termination of this act shall not affect any act done or any right or obligation accruing or accrued pursuant to this act and during the time that this act is in force: Provided further, That the authority by this act granted shall be exercised only in matters relating to the conduct of the present war.

Public act 181, making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and for other purposes.

NATIONAL DEFENSE.

For the national security and defense, and for each and every purpose connected therewith, to be expended at the discretion of the President, $50,000,000.

WAR EMERGENCY SERVICES.

To enable the Secretary of Labor during the present emergency to furnish such information and to render such assistance in the employment of wage earners throughout the United States as may be deemed necessary in the prosecution of the war and to aid in the standardization of all wages paid by the Government of the United States and its agencies, including personal services in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, per diem in lieu of subsistence at not exceeding $4, traveling expenses, rental of quarters in the District of Columbia and elsewhere, heat and light, telegraph and telephone service, supplies and equipment, and printing and binding, $5,500,000: Provided, That no money now or hereafter appropriated for the payment of wages not fixed by statute shall be available to pay wages in excess of the standard determined upon by the War Labor Policies Board.

To enable the Secretary of Labor, during the present emergency, to carry on the work of war-labor administration, including mediation and conciliation in labor disputes, the working conditions of wage earners in the most essential war industries, the acquiring and diffusing of information on subjects connected with labor, the employment of women in industry, and the training and dilution of labor, including personal services and rent in the District of Columbia and in the field, per diem in lieu of subsistence not to exceed $4, traveling expenses, law books, books of reference, periodicals, newspapers, supplies and equipment, and contingent and miscellaneous expenses, in amounts not exceeding the following: Commissioners of conciliation, $300,000; working conditions service, $45,000; information and education service, $225,000; woman in industry service, $40,000; investigation and inspection service, $300,000; personnel service, $15,000; training and dilution service, $150,000; Secretary's office, $110,000; printing and binding for all services, $150,000; in all, $1,335,000.

Public act 193, making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919.

CHAPTER XXI.

Power of the President to increase the drafted Army: That the authority conferred upon the President by the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," is hereby extended so as to authorize him during each fiscal year to raise by draft as provided in said act and acts amendatory thereof the maximum number of men which may be organized, equipped, trained, and used during such year for the prosecution of the present war until the same shall have been brought to a successful conclusion.

Public act 220, to provide further for the national security and defense by encouraging the production, conserving the supply, and controlling the distribution of those ores, metals, and minerals which have formerly been largely imported, or of which there is or may be an inadequate supply.

SEC. 10. Upon the proclamation of peace the President shall proceed as rapidly as possible to wind up and terminate all transactions under this act, and to dispose as fast as practicable of all property acquired thereunder, and after said proclamation of peace no contracts shall be made, property acquired, or other transaction performed under this act except such as shall be necessary for the purpose of this section and incidental thereto, and two years after such proclamation of peace this act shall cease to have effect and all powers conferred thereby shall end: Provided, That the termination of this act shall not prevent the subsequent collection of any moneys due the United States, nor shall it affect any act done or any right or obligation accrued or accruing, or any suit or proceeding had or commenced before such termination, but all such collections, rights, obligations, suits, and proceedings shall continue as if this act had not terminated, and any offense committed or liability incurred prior thereto shall be prosecuted in the same manner and with the same punishment and effect as if this act had not terminated.

Public resolution 38, to authorize the President, in time of war, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, and to provide just compensation therefor.

The President during the continuance of the present war is authorized and empowered, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the national security or defense, to supervise or to take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems, or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, which supervision, possession, control, or operation shall not extend beyond the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace: Provided, That just compensation shall be made for such supervision, possession, control, or operation, to be determined by the President; and if the amount thereof so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same, such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code: Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may affect the transmission of Government communications or the issue of stocks and bonds by such system or systems.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. NORRIS. I give notice of a proposed amendment to the rules. I ask that the Secretary may read the notice and the proposed amendment.

The Secretary read as follows:

I hereby give notice that on to-morrow, or as soon thereafter as the Senate shall be in session, I will propose the following amendment to the Standing Rules of the Senate:

"Resolved, That Rule XXV of the Standing Rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto a new paragraph, as follows:

"'3. After the 4th day of March, 1919, any Senator who is chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, Finance, Foreign Relations, Interstate Commerce, Judiciary, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, or Post Offices and Post Roads, while holding such chairmanship shall not be a member of any of the other of said committees.'"

G. W. NORRIS.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until 12 o'clock meridian on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the papers yesterday carried an all too brief report of a most important address delivered by the Premier of Great Britain the day before, and also a brief report of the address made by the Chancellor of Great Britain. As it touches a subject of very great importance, I ask that it be printed in the RECORD. I ask it at this time, Mr. President, because in a conversation with an exceptionally well-informed gentleman only a few days ago he expressed to me the view that the idea of a league of nations for insuring the future peace of the world, to which the President of the United States stands committed, does not meet with the approval of the American people, and in his judgment would be opposed by the leading men of the nations allied with us.

In this speech Premier Lloyd-George comes out squarely in favor of a league of nations to secure peace, and it occurs to me it would be wise to give the greatest possible publicity to it. I read from the newspaper report the following:

Discussing the question of a league of nations, the premier said that such a league would be more necessary now than ever. He pointed out that the conditions which prevailed in the Balkans before the war were now affecting practically two-thirds of Europe.

"A large number of small nations have been reborn in Europe," he continued, "And these will require a league of nations to protect them against the covetousness of ambitious and grasping neighbors. In my judgment a league of nations is absolutely essential to permanent peace."

We shall go to the peace conference to guarantee that a league of nations is a reality. I am one of those who believe that without peace we can not have progress. A league of nations guarantees peace and guarantees also an all-around reduction of armaments, and that reduction of armaments is a guarantee that you can get rid of conscription here.

Mr. PENROSE. I should like to ask the Senator a question on that subject, if this is a suitable opportunity. I have not read the speech of Lloyd-George. So I would be glad if the Senator from Montana could inform me whether this so-called league of nations, which up to the present time has a very nebulous aspect to my mind, includes economic freedom and a kind of free-trade alliance between the nations who are members of such a league.

Mr. WALSH. I expected the Senator would——

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, I call for the regular order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The regular order is the presentation of petitions and memorials.

Mr. PENROSE. I hope I have not offended the feelings of anyone by my inquiry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question before the Senate is whether these articles shall appear in the RECORD.

Mr. PENROSE. Before I refrain from objecting I should like to have an answer to my inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. I would be very glad to answer the question.

Mr. PENROSE. I do not ask the Senator to argue it. I ask for information.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Iowa calls for the regular order, and a colloquy is out of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. We have a right to finish the morning business so that those who desire to busy themselves elsewhere can do so.

Mr. PENROSE. Unless I can get information as to a very important feature of this declaration of a very novel idea, which we certainly ought to consider very carefully, I shall have to object to the insertion in the RECORD of the document. If the Senator from Montana will tell me, I will withdraw the objection.

Mr. WALSH. If the Senator from Iowa will withdraw his objection, I will be very glad to answer the Senator's question. If not, I will take a later opportunity to do so, if the Senator will honor me with his presence.

Mr. PENROSE. I shall try to be present.

TRIAL OF WILLIAM AND HIS COPARTNERS.

Mr. McKELLAR. I present a telegram from F. L. Pittman, mayor of Union City, Tenn., stating that at a mass meeting of 8,000 citizens of Union City and Obion County resolutions were passed approving an editorial in the Commercial Appeal of November 11 demanding that the head officials of the Imperial German Empire be tried before a tribunal selected by the allies for the crimes committed against humanity and civilization in the recent war. I ask that the telegram and editorial be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the telegram and editorial were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

UNION CITY, TENN., November 11.

K. MCKELLAR,
Washington, D. C.

At a mass meeting of 8,000 citizens of Union City and Obion County held here to-night resolutions were passed approving an editorial in the Commercial Appeal of November 11 demanding that the head officials of the Imperial German Empire be tried before a tribunal selected by the allies for the crimes committed against humanity and civilization in the recent war between the German Empire and the allies. It would be an outrage to permit the responsible parties for this cruel war to escape punishment. Will you transmit this telegram to the State Department as an expression from the citizenship of Obion County?

F. L. PITTMAN,
Mayor of Union City.
W. E. JACKSON,
President of the Commercial Club.

[From the Memphis Commercial Appeal, Monday, Nov. 11, 1918.]

WILLIAM AND HIS COPARTNERS SHOULD GO ON TRIAL FOR THEIR LIVES.

Murder is murder, whether committed by sewer rat, aristocrat, general, or king.

In all nations where murder is done there must be a recompense to human society.

Even barbarians and savages have their criminal codes and under them murder done meets with punishment.

In the wild excitement of war there are occasional lapses from its well-defined rules. Officers and men at times do things which are unlawful, according to well-defined military regulations. These infractions when detected are usually punished by the military authorities of the army of which the offenders are members.

In the Civil War soldiers were shot for doing unlawful things, even against the persons who gave allegiance to the enemy.

The rights of noncombatants in war regulations are as well defined as are the rights of a citizen in civil codes.

Some one is responsible for the sinking of the Lusitania. That act was committed in violation of all the legitimate rules of warfare. The act was committed in violation of the civil law of all nations. It can be justified by no commentator on the rules of war nor upon the rules of international custom.

The violation of the soil of Belgium was confessed to be illegal by the legitimate speaking authority in Germany. If the first act was unlawful then all things done in Belgium were unlawful.

A sea captain, commanding an unarmed ship, was taken into the German lines, court-martialed, and shot.

It was claimed that Edith Cavell was shot because she violated German law by giving aid and comfort to the enemy.

There are well-authenticated cases of murdered women and children and rape done in Belgium.

When the German Army sent deadly gases against the English, without warning, those German soldiers and officers responsible for their action committed murder.

There are thousands of cases of alleged murder and other crimes committed by Germany. These cases were so frequent, the crimes were so numerous that one is warranted in the charge that they were done according to a well-defined policy.

The German policy of frightfulness was a part of their war program.

The Germans believed that if it were necessary, by terrorizing civilians and by destruction of civilian property, to win a war, these things were right.

No man can be a law unto himself.

No nation can be a law unto itself.

A monarch surrounded by millions of armed men, having upon his forehead the chrism of coronation, holding in his hand the scepter of rule, is just as responsible for acts he commits contrary to the common law of human society as is a highwayman who proceeds to kill and murder, if he finds it necessary, in order to come in possession of the money of the man making a journey on the public road. Indeed, the monarch and his court are the more culpable because, having the greater power and greater position, the greater is their accountability.

William of Hohenzollern is now a private citizen. He has given up the office of German Emperor. He has also resigned the office of King of Prussia. He is no longer commander in chief of the imperial army. He followed the traditions of his family until Saturday. East Prussia is the original home of the Hohenzollerns. Centuries ago in this region they robbed, they pillaged the villages of their enemies, and they took toll from whomsoever they were able to master. In those days they were acting according to the customs of those times. Even then they were a defiant lot.

Centuries ago, once a week, a trumpeter, richly dressed, mounted the walls surrounding their castle and blew four blasts, one to the north, one to the east, one to the south, and one to the west. It was the defiance of the Hohenzollerns to all other knights, counts, and kings. They sent this challenge so far as the winds of heaven would carry it. During all the centuries since the foundation of the dynasty this ceremony was gone through every week. For the first time in the history of the house the note of defiance is hushed. The bugle blast no longer terrifies the ears of the world.

But William, the last of the Hohenzollern rulers, takes off the trappings of office. The scepter of power falls from his crippled hand. He who 10 years ago said to the young officers, "Your souls and your bodies are mine; if I command you to kill even your parents it is your duty to obey," is now a wanderer upon the face of the earth, but he is a wanderer just as Cain was. The mark of Cain is on his brow. No false pity must go after him. No soothing message of "go and sin no more" must come within his hearing. Justice, impartial, stern but fair, must be requited. William must be dragged from his lair in the swamps of Holland and made to answer.

The allies should constitute a great international court. In that court articles of indictment should be drawn against William, against his advisers, and against his responsible generals. They should be cited to appear. Prosecutors should be appointed. They should be given the benefit of counsel. They should be placed in the dock and tried, and every man, whether he be king, field, marshal, or cabinet minister, proven to be guilty beyond a reasonable doubt, should be punished.

The proceeding is not without precedent.

Let there be an international grand-jury investigation, and let those indicted, be they William, Hindenburg, or Michael the Sergeant, be put on trial for their lives.

"Stand up, William of Hohenzollern, look on the jury. Jurors, look on the defendant."

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CUMMINS presented a petition of the Vigilance Corps of the American Defense Society (Inc.), of Grinnell, Iowa, praying for the enactment of legislation for the suppression of newspapers printed in the German language, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of the Williams Hardware Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., and a memorial of G. Sommers & Co., of St Paul, Minn., remonstrating against the imposition of a floor tax on inventories in the pending revenue bill, which were referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. KENYON presented a petition of sundry citizens of Iowa, praying for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

GERMAN ATROCITIES.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Reports of committees are in order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before we pass from the other order, I ask leave to submit a letter addressed to me from Mr. George Creel, and an editorial——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it a petition or a memorial?

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is an editorial in the Christian Science Monitor, one of the soundest and most excellent journals in the world. What I am presenting is also somewhat in the nature of a personal privilege, Mr. President, because the letter is a denial of certain statements which I made some time ago in the Senate in regard to the Committee on Public Information. To disprove the statements as to Gen. March in the letter from Mr. Creel, and to show that the Christian Science Monitor is mistaken in its editorial, I submit an article from the Washington Star of this city of August 26, 1918. In support of my former statement that the Committee on Public Information had made a general attack upon reports of German atrocities by American soldiers I submit a few paragraphs from a Bulletin of the Committee on Public Information.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I do not desire to object to the remarks of the Senator from Washington, but I rise to call the attention of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. CUMMINS. I object. I call for the regular order.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My understanding was that the regular order was the submission of documents for printing in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is not of what the Senator from Iowa complains.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I was accompanying it by a very few words of explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The explanation is objected to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Very well. I submit a further statement from the Bulletin of the Committee on Public Information, which has the official stamp of the committee, of October 11, 1918, in disproof of the statement in the letter from Mr. Creel that "the Committee" (on Public Information) stated explicitly that "the crucifixion (of Sergt. Cole) took place in July, 1915."

Mr. CUMMINS. I have no objection in the world to putting all these things in the RECORD, but there are some of us who have routine morning business to transact, and there will be abundant opportunity afterwards for these matters.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair has ruled with the Senator from Iowa that remarks are out of order.

Mr. CUMMINS. Precisely, and I hope I may be permitted to present routine business.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In the same connection I submit a letter by myself addressed to a correspondent, a letter from Frederick F. Forbes, a statement from the Washington Post of November 6, 1918, showing that others have not the same poor opinion of soldiers' letters as the Committee on Public Information. I submit a document, and suppose I may state the title of it. I appreciate the very strict application of the rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is not objecting; the Senator from Iowa is objecting.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I understand the Senator from Iowa objects.

Mr. CUMMINS. I am quite willing to bear my share of the responsibility. I think we ought to be permitted to transact routine morning business before these long interpolations occur.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I present a document entitled "A Searchlight on Germany," certain pages of which that I have marked I ask be printed in the RECORD, and also two other letters on the same subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, they will be inserted in the RECORD.

The matter referred to is as follows:

COMMITTEE ON PUBLIC INFORMATION,
Washington, D. C., October 23, 1918.

Hon. MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: In your speech of October 21 you charged that "on a previous occasion Gen. March felt called upon to issue a statement repudiating news items" given out by the Committee on Public Information in his name. I trust that you will be glad to learn that this charge is absolutely without base in fact. Never at any time did Gen. March make any such statement.

You said also that the Committee on Public Information, in the name of Gen. March, had issued a denial of the crucifixion of Sergt. A. B. Cole, of East Liverpool, Ohio. Never at any time or in any way has the name of Gen. March been connected with this incident. Nor has the Committee on Public Information at any time or in any way issued any such denial. The committee merely corrected the impression that Sergt. Cole was a member of the American Expeditionary Forces, stating explicitly that as the crucifixion took place in July, 1915, it was obviously the case that Sergt. Cole was serving with the Canadians.

You said, "I am concerned with the persistent and continued effort on the part of the Committee on Public Information to create the impression that the Germans have abandoned the practice of cruelty to prisoners and civilians in the occupied territory."

There has been no such "persistent and continued effort." Only two releases out of thousands have had bearing on this subject. On July 10, 1918, we issued the following cable from Gen. Pershing:

"A St. Louis, Mo., paper recently received here states that a sergeant, one of 50 men sent back in connection with the liberty-loan campaign, is making speeches in which he states:

"'The Germans give poisoned candy to the children to eat and hand grenades for them to play with. They show glee at the children's dying writhings and laugh aloud when the grenades explode. I saw one American boy, about 17 years old, who had been captured by the Germans, come back to our trenches. He had cotton in and about his ears. I asked some one what the cotton was for.

"'The Germans cut off his ears and sent him back to tell us they want to fight men was the answer. They feed Americans tuberculosis germs.'

"As there is no foundation whatever in fact for such statements based on any experience we have had, I recommend that this sergeant, if the statements quoted above were made by him, be immediately returned for duty here, and that the statements be contradicted.

"PERSHING."

On October 15 the committee released a statement headed, "The daily German lie." It was this statement that served as a base for your speech. You omitted to mention that the opening paragraphs were concerned entirely with official refutations of German lies to the effect that American soldiers had killed 150 German prisoners as a measure of retaliation.

It is true, however, that the statement did comment specifically upon certain German atrocity stories utterly disproved by official investigation. But these corrections were accompanied by the following paragraph that you did not see fit to quote:

"This is not inspired by a desire to suppress criticism of Hun cruelty. That he has been guilty of atrocities has been clearly proven. The request is designed to prevent vitiation of the unimpeachable case which has been established against him by the British Bryce report and the findings of other official agencies which have investigated instances of his cruelty. Publication of charges of atrocities that are not susceptible of proof would enable him to make a propaganda attack upon the proven cases."

I feel that this paragraph is a justification of policy that will be accepted by the people of America, even as it has been approved and urged by the responsible military authorities.

Very truly,

GEORGE CREEL, Chairman.

[Editorial from Christian Science Monitor of Oct. 28, 1918.]

One in the position of George Creel, chairman of the United States Committee on Public Information, must of necessity, in the present state of popular thought, incur displeasure and invite criticism. He would be more than human if he succeeded in escaping either. Doubtless he has made mistakes, and some that should not be repeated, but the record shows clearly that Senator POINDEXTER, in his recent charges against this particular public official, was in error. It can not possibly do any harm to deal justly with a public agency toward the conduct of which millions of eyes are directed.

—

[Article from the Washington Star of Aug. 26, 1918.]

When Dr. Howard's story was related to Gen. March to-day, the Chief of Staff said he had never received a report that Sergt. Cole was crucified in the Marne fighting. He added that Gen. Pershing would almost certainly have made a special report of that sort of a case.

—

THE NORTH AMERICAN,
Philadelphia, November 1, 1918.

Senator MILES POINDEXTER,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR POINDEXTER: Your letter of the 26th ultimo asking for data on which we based our statement that Gen. March had denied expressions attributed to him in news given out from the War Department has been referred to me by Mr. Van Valkenburg.

The case is as follows: Afternoon editions of date of September 6 carried a dispatch from Washington in these words:

"WASHINGTON, September 6.

"Confidential messages from Gen. Pershing and other reports from France indicate that the American Army now is supplied with sufficient airplanes of all kinds to protect its men and in battle. Gen. March, Chief of Staff, gave this information to members of the House Military Committee to-day at their weekly conference of the War Department."

That this was sent out under the authority of the Commitee on Public Information is undoubtedly true. In a private letter from George Creel to Mr. Van Valkenburg, under date of September 6, Mr. Creel says: "There is not a single item of official news concerning our Army and Navy that does not pass through the committee's hands.

That Gen. March denied having made the statement is also undoubtedly true, for later in the afternoon the Associated Press sent out the following:

"WASHINGTON, September 6.

"EDITORS: In day story on the conference between Gen. March and the House Military Committee. Kill all reference to airplane supply for the American Expeditionary Forces. Requested by Gen. March on the ground that he made no such statement.

"THE ASSOCIATED PRESS (ED.)."

Later the Associated Press sent another bulletin on the same subject, as follows:

"WASHINGTON, September 6.

"EDITORS: The Committee on Public Information, at the request of Gen. March, Chief of Staff, issues this confidential note to editors regarding stories sent from Washington to-day in which Members of Congress quoted Gen. March as saying that there are sufficient airplanes for the American Expeditionary Forces: 'A report anonymously quoting members of the House Military Affairs Committee was sent out from Washington to-day to the effect that Gen. March had said that the American Army in France has airships in plenty. Gen. March made no such statement. The Chief of Staff does not wish to be put in the position of publicly denying such an anonymous statement, and therefore requests editors to discountenance that report.'

"THE ASSOCIATED PRESS."

The North American has in its possession the original copy of the Associated Press on these bulletins. We regard it of so great importance that we can not let it out of our possession except in the most urgent cause. However, should you need it we would be very glad to forward it to you. On the other hand, you can get verification from the office of the Associated Press in Washington.

I want to congratulate you, Senator PIONDEXTER, on the very able fight you have been leading for virile Americanism and for freedom of thought and expression in our public life. I am sure that Mr. Van Valkenburg joins me in these congratulations.

Very truly, yours,

FREDERICK F. FORBES.
Managing Editor, the North American.

—

COMMITTEE ON PUELIC INFORMATION, SERVICE BUREAU,
October 14, 1918.

As a result of the campaign to deceive and inflame and confuse the American people with fake atrocity stories, the Military Intelligence Branch of our War Department has sent the following letter to newspapers that have been imposed upon:

"Atrocity stories are daily bandied around Army camps abroad; they gain credence through circulation; and frequently they are communicated to this country in news dispatches or soldiers' letters as fact. Many of these stories are extremely difficult, if not absolutely impossible to trace to the source of origin. Consequently we are asking editors to refrain from publishing atrocity stories, whether charged against the enemy or against our allies, until facts embraced in them shall have been substantiated and officially made public by our Government or the Government of one of our allies."

* * * * * * *

In this connection it is well to note that there has been an error made in the published story of the crucifixion by Germans of an American soldier named Sergt. A. B. Cole, of East Liverpool, Ohio. A circumstantial account of the atrocity has been printed by the Salvation Army, as related by Dr. P. H. Howard, a member of the St. Louis Chamber of Commerce, who visited France to gather first-hand information about the war. Dr. Howard was quoted as giving the story on the authority of Pvt. A. C. Cole, a brother of the victim, who found the crucified soldier pinned with bayonets to a door.

To an inquiry from the War Department, Dr. Howard has replied that he has Pvt. A. C. Cole's signed statement of how he "found his brother crucified by Uhlans, battle of Ypres, July 21, 1915." But if the atrocity was committed in July, 1915, Sergt. Cole was not a member of the American Expeditionary Forces but was enlisted probably in the Canadian Army.

—

[Letter to a correspondent by Senator POINDEXTER.]

OCTOBER 25, 1918.

Am just in receipt of yours of the 22d instant with inclosures, which latter I herewith return as requested.

I agree with you, of course, that no false statements relative to German atrocities should be made. However, in view of the fact which has been proved, at least by a thousand witnesses, and embodied in official findings of the Governments of France and Great Britain and filed in their archives, showing the Germans to be guilty of practicing every imaginable kind of indecency, brutality, and atrocity, and to have made a general practice of the same and to have introduced unheard-of and barbarous methods of warfare, barred by international law, some of these recently being certified by the President in his note to the German Government, I fail to see why our people should labor to find disproof of well-authenticated reports of particular instances of this general practice.

Dr. P. H. Howard, whose office is 709-714 Jaccard Building, St. Louis, Mo., fortunately took the precaution before reporting the fact of the crucifixion of Sergt. A. B. Cole, of the Canadian Army, to secure the written statement of A. C. Cole, at present a member of the First Canadian Tunneling Company, and of Fred A. Robinson, of the Forty-eighth Canadian Infantry. These men in their statements assert that they found the body of A. B. Cole, the brother of A. C. Cole, crucified by the Germans after the battle of Ypres, July, 1915. Dr. Howard also testified to having had the oral statements of five other members of the First Canadian Tunneling Company, corroborating the written statements of Cole and Robinson. Dr. C. R. Wheeler is given by Mr. Elmore Leffingwell, director of publicity, national headquarters, Salvation Army, 122 West Fourteenth Street, New York City, as a witness who personally informed Leffingwell that he, Dr. Wheeler, was with Dr. P. H. Howard when the latter received the statements of the soldiers referred to, and that he, Wheeler, also personally talked with these soldiers and heard them make the statements reported by Dr. Howard.

There are in the possession of returned soldiers of the Canadian Army, whose names and addresses I have, negatives and photographs taken therefrom of the crucified remains of Canadian soldiers crucified by Germans, showing witnesses present whose names and addresses and authenticity are given. All of this, however, is so revolting as to repel its use or reference to it except when required by solemn necessity or occasion. There is no such occasion now, as the denial of the crucifixion of Sergt. Cole, of the Canadian Army, is supported by no evidence whatever, but the atrocity itself is proved by the most conclusive evidence of eyewitnesses.

The statement in the newspaper clipping which you forwarded to me that "the subject came up in the United States Senate and there were men there who deliberately argued that even if the story were not true it was a good thing to print it," is absolutely false. No such argument or contention was ever made in the United States Senate. What was stated in the Senate was in substance what I have stated in the beginning of this letter, which is quite a different thing from that quoted from your newspaper clipping.

This matter has been confused, whether purposely or not I do not state, by controversies as to the date when the crucifixion occurred and the locality of the previous residence of the Cole brothers. Neither of these circumstances is in any degree material, and there has been no confusion or uncertainty as to either one of them in the proof submitted by Dr. Howard. Changing the details and controversies about immaterial circumstances in newspaper reports dressed up to create a sensation do not in any way affect the material question involved.

With kind regards, very truly, yours,

MILES POINDEXTER.

P. S.—Look on page 31 of the Literary Digest of August 31, 1918.

M. P.

—

[From the Washington Post of Nov. 6, 1918.]

MARINES TO WRITE HISTORY—CALL FOR LETTERS FROM MEN IN FRANCE AS FIRST BASIS OF WORK.

It will be the Marines themselves who are now fighting for democracy who will write marine history later on, according to marine headquarters here yesterday. The Marine Corps yesterday issued a call for letters from Marines in France describing the flattening out of the St. Mihiel sector, the fighting in the Champagne, and the capture of Mont Blanc, in which the Marines participated. The letters will be used as the basis of marine history.

—

NEW YORK, October 22, 1918.

DEAR SENATOR: Isn't it possible to stop the writing of any more notes? I don't know where we are going to end; we have all these Germans licked, and why not let Gen. Foch finish the job?

If Senator POINDEXTER, of Washington, wants any more evidence of instances of crucifixion, he can get a story that beats the one he told all to pieces from Col. Hamilton Gault, formerly of Montreal, who commanded the Princess Patricias, and Gault could get this corroborated by a Dutch major who was under his command when the Canadian soldiers were crucified. Both of them have told me the story, and I think you would have no trouble in getting their affidavits. Gault is at present abroad. He has recently been on a holiday in England at his home in Somersetshire, but a letter or cable addressed "Col. Hamilton Gault, Princess Patricia's Light Infantry, Canadian Expeditionary Forces, France," would certainly reach him.

* * * * * * * *

Yours, sincerely,

H. W. MARSH.

Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

—

509 WEST ONE HUNDRED AND TWENTY-FIRST STREET,
New York City, October 23, 1918.

SIR: If you are seeking further verification of the crucifixion of a Canadian soldier, a fact denied by the Committee on Public Information, according to the Tribune of October 22, I think I can put you on the track of confirmatory evidence.

In the third year of the war, when it was still hard to convince many people of the truth of atrocities, the popular belief being in a Hohenzollern devil leading astray a flock of innocent German sheep, a natural irritation at having my story of this incident met with incredulous smiles led me into an investigation on my own account.

A letter to the Great War Veterans' Association, of Montreal, led to their giving me the address of James William Smith, post-office box 122, Edmonton, Alberta, Canada.

I quote from a letter received from Sergt. Smith:

"In answer, will state that I have 11 negatives of the instance you speak of. As you are a total stranger to me, I will not allow any of these pictures to be used for show purposes by anyone or to get into the possession of anyone I am not personally acquainted with, for the reasons mentioned above, as I will not allow anyone to make profit from the afflictions of my comrades.

"If this will meet with your requirements, I will forward an enlarged picture from the original negative, 24 by 36, and the original negative, to New York for you just to view, and then to be returned to me—no reprints to be taken—with full details and names of all persons standing about the scene as they were taken down."

As his letter was sufficient confirmation, and he spoke of the pictures being revolting, I did not ask to have them forwarded.

Yours, truly,

M. HAMILTON.

To Senator MILES POINDEXTER.

A SEARCHLIGHT ON GERMANY—GERMANY'S BLUNDERS, CRIMES, AND PUNISHMENT.

[By Dr. William T. Hornaday, member board of trustees American Defense Society, Preparation Pamphlet Series.]

But the German in uniform is not the only agent of hate and brutality. "The people of Germany" are only one short step behind him. Let every person who doubts this send 5 cents to the Saturday Evening Post, Philadelphia, for its issue of July 14, 1917, and on page 16 read "Englander Schwein" ("English Swine"), the diary of Corpl. Edwards, of Canada's top regiment, the Princess Patricia's C. L. I., who was captured by the Germans. Read it, if you have in your heart even one soft spot for "the people of Germany."

It is a story of revolting filth inflicted upon refined gentlemen, of three days' utterly needless hunger torture inflicted on half-starved men taken out of their cars three times a day, lined up, and compelled to watch German soldiers stuffed with food by German women, with "Nein!" "Nein!" to them when they begged for food. It is a story of horribly neglected wounds, arms rotting off, slow starvation in the prison camp on food consisting of 200 gallons of water to one small bag of potatoes, etc.

Of the murders and mutilations in the trenches there is not time to speak. But read this account of the treatment the Canadians received along the railway from the women of Germany—even "gentlewomen":

"The mob surged around us, heaping on us insults and blows—particularly the women. They spat on us, with hate in their eyes. We had to take that or the bayonet. These were the acts not only of the rabble but also of the people of good appearance and address. One very well dressed woman came rushing up. Under other circumstances I would have judged her to be a gentlewoman. She was screaming invectives at us as she forced her way through the crowd. 'Schwein!' she screamed, and struck at the man next to me. Then, drawing deep from the very bottom of her lungs, she spat the mass full in his face."

WORK OF THE GERMAN TOYMAKERS ON THE CHILDREN OF FRANCE.

In essaying to give in one article even an outline sketch of the crimes of Germany one is perplexed by the many different kinds of atrocities and the great mass of instances and proofs bearing upon them. Out of it all there thrusts up the ugly fact, like a spear from a pile of corpses, that many of these crimes were committed intentionally, with malice aforethought, and often were deliberately ordered by German officers, both high and low. For example:

Gen. Stenger issued a printed order to kill all the wounded.
Bissing was the refined torturer of all Belgium, in many orders.
Manteuffel was the chief murderer at Louvain.
Bulow and Schonmann were the wild beasts of Ardenne.

And it was Bayer at Dinant, Bohn at Sommerfeld and Termonde Nieher at Wavre, Wittenstein at Clermont-en-Argonne, and so on until you are tired.

1. THE MURDER OF CIVILIANS.

This flourishing German industry began at Louvain, at the very outbreak of the war, and has continued right down to the present. It is astounding to see how quickly murders began, with the most revolting brutality, immediately after the Germans entered Belgium. Sometimes the excuse was made that "mann hat geschossen"—that "civilians have fired"—and then the indiscriminate slaughter began.

The thick volume of "Evidence" taken by the Bryce commission on the German atrocities is crowded full of testimony; and so are many subsequent publications of the British and French Governments.

The stories written down in their diaries by German soldiers are both terrible and amazing. In an uncountable number of villages old men, old women, boys, girls, women, and children were shot by dozens and by hundreds; and hundreds were stabbed to death by bayonets.

There are sickening accounts, from eyewitness testimony, of German soldiers bayoneting children and girls, but the most spectacular crime of that kind was committed at Malaines (d4, Bryce Evidence), when a German soldier, walking down the main street singing, "drove his bayonet with both hands through a living child's stomach, lifting the child into the air on his bayonet, and carrying it away on his bayonet, he and his comrades still singing." (Page 82.)

In the village of Sempst an Uhlan cut off the breast of a woman with his sword, and a little boy was burned to death in an attic. (K. 33.) At Aerschot a girl of 18 or 20 was found "absolutely naked, with her abdomen cut open," and "her body covered with bruises, showing that she had made a struggle." Jack the Ripper in a spiked helmet!

And our Government has just now admitted 4,000 cases of recently-made German toys for our children! Will Congress stand for it?—W. T. Hornaday.

And again at Aerschot (C. 38) did the German jack get in his work on another girl of 18. She was found (dead) with "her arms nailed to the door in extended fashion, * * * her left breast cut away, and numerous bayonet wounds in the chest, some piercing through to the back." (Told by a Belgian soldier, who helped to recapture the place.)

A British subject saw on September 15, 1914, in the Wetteren Hospital, a girl of 11 from Alost with 17 bayonet thrusts in her back, "practically flayed, and at the point of death." (F. 13.) "Out of the 1,300 inhabitants of Noumeny at least 150 were killed (murdered) by the Germans." (French Police Report, Aug. 24, 1914.)

This list could be extended by hundreds of other cases, and a long chapter could be filled with such instances as the above. Geographically they reach all the way from Louvain to the beginning of the great German defeat before Paris.

In order to form estimates of what the quiet little country villages of New England might expect if the armed wolves and mad dogs of Germany ever gained a foothold here, let us consider a few figures compiled from official reports and published by the Illustrated London News. They relate solely to the murder of unarmed, inoffensive civilians—old men, women, girls, boys, and children:

In Brabant, 897 persons shot or bayoneted.
In Luxembourg Province, over 1,000 persons shot or bayoneted.
At Arlon, 119 persons shot or bayoneted.
Dinant Arrondissement (French), 606 killed, from 3 weeks to 77 years old.
Neufchatel, 18 shot.
Etalle, 30 shot.
Hondemont, 11 shot.
Tintiguy, 157 shot.
Izele, 10 shot.
Rossignol, 106 shot.
Bertrix, 21 shot.
Ethe, about 300 shot; "530 in all missing."
Latour, only 17 men left.
Maissin, 12 shot, 1 a young girl.
Aloy, 52 men and women shot.
Claireuse, 2 men hanged.

And so on, indefinitely. On the most trivial pretexts, or none at all, the Germans slaughtered unresisting noncombatants who were in their power. Out of a lot of 40 German soldier diaries, only 6 express disapproval or disgust, and at least 30 diaries treat murders either exultingly or as being merely a part of the day's work.

The slaughtered innocents of Belgium, France, Serbia, and Poland would, in each of those countries, undoubtedly run far up into thousands if it were possible to count them.

Thanks to the diligence of the British and French Governments in collecting evidence now while evidence is procurable, there is already enough printed testimony to damn Germany in the eyes of the world for at least two centuries.

2. KILLING OF PRISONERS AND WOUNDED MEN BY GERMANS.

The crimes of Germany under this head have been literally innumerable. Judging by German, French, Belgian, and English evidence, it seems as if German soldiers have slaughtered probably 100,000 defenseless prisoners and wounded men. Prof. J. H. Morgan states that von der Goltz, the evil genius of Turkey, "predicted some years ago that the next war would be one of inconceivable violence"; and he declares that "the Germans have no sense of honor in the field.". He was hideously correct.

German prisoner murder began before Antwerp on October 6, 1914, when the captain of the Eighty-fifth Regiment, Ninth Corps, Fourth Company, said to his men, "I do not want to see any Englishmen prisoners in the hands of this company." To which the company cried "Bravo!" And Richard Gerhold, Seventy-first Regiment Reserve, Fourth Army Corps (killed in September, 1914), wrote in his precious diary thus: "Great atrocities are of course committed upon Englishmen and Belgians. Every one of them is now knocked on the head without mercy."

The famous Stenger order of August 26, 1914, brings us to a capital case. A German brigadier general, Stenger by name, issued this written order to his brigade:

"To date from this day no prisoners will be made any longer. All the prisoners will be executed. The wounded, whether armed or defenseless, will be executed. Prisoners, even in large and compact formations, will be executed. Not a man will be left alive behind us."

The instances of the murder of helpless prisoners by Germans are far too numerous to be cited in detail. Beyond reasonable doubt a hundred thousand soldiers were murdered on the Stenger basis.

And after the war is over, if we resume friendly "relations" with Germany we may see Stenger in Washington as military attaché to his excellency the German ambassador, shaking hands with the President of the United States.

3. THE BOMBING OF CIVILIANS IN LONDON AND ELSEWHERE.

The Kaiser and Zeppelin and the German people have spent many millions of dollars in deliberate attempts to slaughter the unarmed inhabitants of London and strafe England. All the German talk about attacking "the fortress of London" is beneath contempt. Rarely, indeed, has a soldier been injured in London or any other English city by a Zeppelin or an airplane bomb. It has been the helpless women, school children, and other noncombatants who have been blown to pieces.

These murders of civilian men, women, and children have served only to send furious Englishmen rushing to the trenches in droves for vengeance. Had the squareheads deliberately attempted to stimulate British enlistments, the dropping of bombs on London would have been the ideal plan. At last the British public demand reprisals on the basis of an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth, which would be absolutely right.

But thus far the statesmen of England firmly say:

"No! We will not descend to the low level of the Huns of Germany."

Nevertheless Zeppelin died of a broken heart. From a military point of view his campaign has proven a complete fiasco—just as Americans long ago predicted that it would—and his "frightfulness" gas bags are now on the scrap heap.

4. TIRPITZ AND THE SUBMARINE MURDERS.

For a submarine to sink a war vessel with all on board is merely war, no more and no less. No one whines about atrocities of that sort. All the world does object, however, and very strongly, too, to the sinking of unarmed passenger steamers, hospital ships, and Belgian relief ships. All such acts of murder as these are the acts of monsters, not of men. Of course we know that Germany sees her doom, and her people are wild over the certainty of defeat. But even a 90 per cent defeated prize fighter must not deliver a foul blow.

The submarine murders are so well known to Americans as to require no comment, but a few murder statistics will be worth while, lest we forget:

March 28, 1915, steamer Falaba, 111 lost.
May 7, 1915, steamer Lusitania, 1,198 lost.
June 28, 1915, steamer Armenian, 30 lost.
August 19, 1915, steamer Arabic, 30 lost.
November 7, 1915, steamer Ancona, 208 lost.
December 30, 1915, steamer Persia, 385 lost.
March 24, 1916, steamer Sussex (channel boat), 52 lost.

HOSPITAL SHIPS MALICIOUSLY DESTROYED BY THE GERMAN "NAVY."

Portugal, March 17, 1916, 45 Red Cross nurses lost; 40 of the crew.
Britannic, November, 1915, about 50 lost.
Asturias, March 20, 1915, 43 lost.
Gloucester Castle, March 30, 1915, all wounded saved.
Donegal, 41 lost.
Lanfranc (152 wounded Germans saved by British Navy), 19 British wounded lost; 15 German wounded lost.

On a very few occasions a few German submarine captains have acted humanely, and some even gallantly; but all these acts have been besmirched by the acts of cowardly and brutal men who have deliberately fired upon hospital ships and open lifeboats loaded with men attempting to save themselves from drowning. In one celebrated instance a U-boat captain and his crew came out upon their deck and at close range jeered at drowning men and women who were struggling in icy water.

And here is the latest feat of the brave and gallant German "Navy":

On July 31, 1917, 200 miles from land a German submarine engaged in combat and sank the unarmed British freighter Belgian Prince. They assembled the entire crew of 40 men on the submarine's deck, stripped from them their life belts, and smashed all their lifeboats with axes. Then the brave Germans went below, closed their hatches, ran on the surface for 2 miles, then suddenly submerged. Thirty-eight were drowned, but two lived to be picked up and tell the story.

A new trick. Look for frequent repetitions.

5. POISON GAS, LIQUID FIRE, AND POISONED WELLS.

Early in the war the much-vaunted German "men of science" invented poisonous gases (chiefly of chlorine), liquid-fire apparatus, and other forms of deviltry forbidden in civilized warfare. The "flammenwerfer" is now a favorite German institution, but occasionally it gets into trouble by being exploded by shell fire in the hands of the men using it. One result of poison gas and liquid fire is the everlasting odium that it has fastened upon the German Army. The British soldiers say that "the Germans are dirty fighters," and the name will stick forever.

In German Southwest Africa, when the Boer general, Louis Botha, captured Swakopmund, he found that all six of the wells had been poisoned with arsenical cattle dip. Bags of the poison hung in the wells, and the crime was acknowledged and defended in writing by Lieut. Col. Franke, commander of the German forces. Previous to that time the new German governor had murdered in cold blood 208 of the leading natives of the capital town to teach the surviving Hereros the advantages of life under the black vulture of Germany.

6. BACTERIA OF GLANDERS AND ANTHRAX SENT INTO ROUMANIA.

"The world owes much to German science." This remark is not original. We have heard it about 147,500 times, but the world has not heard quite so often how the worthy "scientists" of Germany sent large collections of living and active bacilli of glanders for horses and anthrax for cattle into Roumania under the German diplomatic seal just before war was declared by Roumania. The precious cultures were found buried in the garden of the German consulate, and in their usual bludering way the dunderheads did not know enough to destroy the evidence of their newest species of crime. All this has been set forth by the Roumanian Government in a neat little pamphlet very useful to students of criminology and degeneracy.

7 THE MURDER OF EDITH CAVELL.

Not in 200 years will the world forget or forgive this dastardly crime. If Bissing is not now in hell for it, then there is no such place. The cities of civilized countries should erect Cavell monuments and name streets Cavell, lest we forget. Only Germans or Turks could have done a deed so unnecessary, so brutal and unchivalrous. But it seems that the Germans stick at no atrocity.

8. THE MURDER OF CAPT. FRYATT.

This crime was committed in cold blood, unchecked by the criminal Kaiser, because on March 28, 1915, Capt. Fryatt escaped from a German submarine by attempting to ram it. On June 23, 1916, he was captured, taken to Zeebrugge, and by a naval court-martial sentenced to death. Great "sports" were those German naval officers! They have in their veins about as much sporting blood as so many hyenas, but no more.

On several occasions the British have actually honored the fine seamanship and daring and skill of German sea raiders, even after great destruction while at sea. But the British Navy men are good sports, while the men of the German Navy do not seem to recognize a bold and capable seaman when they see one, and they have no sense of sportsmanship. When did the German Navy ever rescue a British or French sailor from drowning? But British sailors have saved many Germans.

The murder of Capt. Fryatt brands the whole German Navy with a mark that it will wear forever.

9. THE GERMAN OUTRAGES UPON WOMEN.

It is here that the pen falters, and the heart turns sick with horror and loathing. Thus far the newspapers of the United States have shrunk from printing the awful details that have been available on this subject.

For 50 years we have been reading of the wars of nations—white, black, red, brown, and yellow—but never in modern times have we seen such ghastly, such loathsome, such shocking, and sickening brutalities of lust as German officers and soldiers inflicted, wholesale, upon the women of Belgium and northern France. At present we will say little of Poland for the subject is too vast.

I shall not give instances, even though there are hundreds at hand, well authenticated and undoubtedly true. But let all Americans remember this: Never within the last 400 years or more have any women ever been so brutally abused, so extensively raped by violence, often accompanied by murder in Jack the Ripper fashion, or so disgustingly maltreated before the eyes of fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, and groups of men as were the wretched women of Belgium and northern France.

The rage of the German brutes whose great conquest of France was balked seemed to be visited with particular fury and cruelty upon the women of the captured territory between 14 and 40 years of age. I have before me one instance so awful and so revolting that the woman upon whom it was inflicted immediately went mad. The details are published only in French in order that only a few English-speaking persons may read them.

No wonder that when the armies of Gen. Joffre and Gen. Foch were chasing the German ravishers back to the banks of the Marne that the French women of the recaptured towns and villages dragged themselves to their windows, leaned out, and begged the French soldiers to "Take no prisoners! Kill them—all!"

The total number of women who have been cruelly abused by German officers and private soldiers never will be known; but it must run up into hundreds of thousands. Only the devil himself knows how many miserables have been "given to the soldiers," just as was the Polish maid of an American lady, Madame Turczynowics, now in New York, who tells about it in her book, "When the Prussian Came to Poland" (p. 138). This is the passage:

"* * * we pushed our way into the room where Manya was. * * * what had been Manya. * * * An officer came in to ask our business with the girl.

"She is my maid—stolen! This is her father. I have come to take her home."

"I am very sorry, but you are not allowed to take her. She belongs to the soldiers."

"Don't you see, Herr Offizier, the girl is dying?"

"Ill she is and shall have the best of care. We have a doctor to attend to just such cases." And I had to leave her!

10. GERMANY'S COLOSSAL CRIME IN ARMENIA.

A little pamphlet of 24 pages, obtainable from the G. H. Doran Co., New York, for 5 cents, is quite enough to damn Germany past all forgiveness from now to the end of time. It is entitled "The Horrors of Aleppo. Seen by a German Eyewitness," and it is "a word to Germany's accredited representatives, by Dr. Martin Niepage, higher grade teacher in the German Technical School at Aleppo."

The enormous extent and the extreme savagery of the slaughter of Armenian Christians by the Turkish allies of Germany literally stagger the imagination and sicken the heart. The mind can scarcely grasp the idea of men, women, and children being massacred en masse in 1916 literally by the thousand But let me quote a few lines of strictly German testimony:

Page 14: "It is utterly erroneous to think that the Turkish Government will refrain of its own accord even from the destruction of the women and children unless the strongest pressure is exerted by the German Government. Only just before I left Aleppo last May (1916) the crowds of exiles encamped at Ras-el-Ain, on the Bagdad Railway, estimated at 20,000 women and children, were slaughtered to the last one."

Page 11: "Many more appalling things were reported by the engineer of the Bagdad Railway * * * or by German travelers who met the convoys of exiles on their journeys. Many of these gentlemen had seen such appalling sights they could eat nothing for days. One of them, Herr Grief, of Aleppo, reported corpses of violated women lying about naked in heaps on the railway embankment at Tel-Abiad and Ras-el-Ain. Another, Herr Spiecker, of Aleppo, had seen Turks tie Armenian men together, fire several volleys of small shot with fowling pieces into the human mass, and go off laughing while their victims slowly perished in frightful convulsions.

"The German consul from Mosul related in my presence at the German Club at Aleppo that in many places on the road from Mosul to Aleppo he had seen children's hands hacked off in such numbers that one could have paved the road with them. * * * The Arabs of the village declared that they had killed the Armenians by the Government's (Young Turks) orders."

And so forth, and so on, until you are sick!

Thus do the "Young Turks" of Turkey (on whom may all the curses of Allah alight), who are determined to Turkify all Asia Minor. Thus have 1,500,000 Christians perished at the hands of Germany's ally—an ally absolutely under German control—and without one protest or prohibition from the archcriminals of Potsdam and Berlin. And this under "our dear, good, kind Emperor" William!

The crimes of Germany were not committed by the officers of the army or the navy or of the State alone. They were perpetrated partly by the common people of Germany as represented by the fathers, sons, and husbands making up the army and the navy. The officers are not alone to blame. Therefore the curses of mankind and the punishment of the ages should fall and will fall upon all the Germans of Germany and their children unto the tenth generation. To them the Germans of to-day will bequeath a vast legacy of world scorn and world aversion.

Americans should be the last people on earth to talk to outraged England, France, Russia, and Serbia of "magnanimous" terms to Germany and peace "without annexations or indemnities." Germany must pay for her war and her crimes.

PROVINCETOWN, MASS.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I send to the desk a telegram which I have received from the selectmen of Provincetown, Mass., which relates to a very interesting event in our history. I should like to have it read.

There being no objection, the telegram was read, as follows:

PROVINCETOWN, MASS., November 11, 1918.

Hon. JOHN W. WEEKS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

This day the town of Provincetown, Mass., commemorates the signing at Provincetown of the Pilgrims' compact and the establishment of democracy for America, November 11, 1620, old style, and celebrates the signing of the armistice and the establishment of democracy for the world November 11, 1918, new style.

S. A. P. HANNUM,
JAMES BIRAM,
CHAS. N. ROGERS,
Selectmen.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERKS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 328, submitted by Mr. CALDER on the 12th instant, reported it favorably without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 75, agreed to on April 3, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the employment of an additional clerk by each Senator having no more than one clerk, one assistant clerk, and one messenger for himself or for the committee of which he is chairman, for the remainder of the second session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, at the rate of $100 per month, said compensation to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, continued and extended in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SAULSBURY:

A bill (S. 5023) granting an increase of pension to John F. McLaughlin; and

A bill (S. 5024) granting an increase of pension to Oliver L. Bell; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 5025) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes"; and

A bill (S. 5026) to amend an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 5027) to withdraw certain authority heretofore granted to the President and to other executive and administrative departments of the Government relating to priorities in transportation and to restrictions upon the sale and distribution of commodities; to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Maryland:

A bill (S. 5028) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the spread of contagious diseases in the District of Columbia," approved March 3, 1897; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. LENROOT:

A bill (S. 5029) declaring the 11th of November of each year a legal holiday in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. KENYON:

A bill (S. 5030) granting a pension to William H. Johnson (with accompanying papers); and

A bill (S. 5031) granting an increase of pension to Lucina E. Smith (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OWEN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 183) providing that November 11 shall be set apart and designated a national holiday to be known as "Democracy Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 184) extending a loan to the Republic of Colombia; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

RENT ADMINISTRATOR FOR THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I introduce a joint resolution and ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) to extend the provisions of a joint resolution to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia, approved May 31, 1918, was read the first time by its title, and the second time at length, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the provisions contained in the joint resolution to prevent rent profiteering in the District of Columbia be extended and continued so that the same will be effective for six months after a treaty of peace shall have been definitely concluded between the United States and the Imperial German Government.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. BORAH submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4947) to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

TAX ON CHILD-LABOR PRODUCTS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I desire to present an amendment to the revenue bill which provides for an excise tax of 10 per cent on the net profits of persons employing child labor within prohibited ages in addition to all other taxes. I may say that during the past several months a bill was presented on this subject by the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and one by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] and two by myself. The amendment which I present is the result of the collaboration of the junior Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON], the junior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT], and myself. Of course there are certain constitutional questions which are involved. I do not care to discuss them now, but at some later date I may ask that privilege.

I ask that the amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be so ordered.

The amendment proposes to insert the following:

SEC. —. That every person (other than a bona fide boys' or girls' canning club recognized by the Agricultural Department of a State and of the United States) operating (a) any mine or quarry situated in the United States in which children under the age of 16 years have been employed or permitted to work during any portion of the taxable year; or (b) any mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment situated in the United States in which children under the age of 14 years have been employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 have been employed or permitted to work more than eight hours in any day, or more than six days in any week, or after the hour of 7 o'clock post meridian, or before the hour of 6 o'clock ante meridian, during any portion of the taxable year, shall pay for each taxable year, in addition to all other taxes imposed by law, an excise tax equivalent to 10 per cent of the entire net profits received or accrued for such year from the sale or disposition of the product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment.

SEC. —. That in computing net profits under the provisions of this title, for the purpose of the tax there shall be allowed as deductions from the gross amount received or accrued for the taxable year from the sale or disposition of such products manufactured within the United States the following items:

(a) The cost of raw materials entering into the production;

(b) Running expenses, including rentals, cost of repairs, and maintenance, heat, power, insurance, management, and a reasonable allowance for salaries or other compensations for personal services actually rendered, and for depreciation;

(c) Interest paid within the taxable year on debts or loans contracted to meet the needs of the business, and the proceeds of which have been actually used to meet such needs;

(d) Taxes of all kinds paid during the taxable year with respect to the business or property relating to the production; and

(e) Losses actually sustained within the taxable year in connection with the business of producing such products, including losses from fire, flood, storm, or other casualties, and not compensated for by insurance or otherwise.

SEC. —. That if any such person during any taxable year or part thereof, whether under any agreement, arrangement, or understanding or otherwise sells or disposes of any product of such mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment at less than the fair market price obtainable therefor either (a) in such manner as directly or indirectly to benefit such person or any person directly or indirectly interested in the business of such person; or (b) with intent to cause such benefit; the gross amount received or accrued for such year or part thereof from the sale or disposition of such product shall be taken to be the amount which would have been received or accrued from the sale or disposition of such product if sold at the fair market price.

SEC. —. (a) That no person subject to the provisions of this title shall be liable for the tax herein imposed if the only employment or permission to work which, but for this section, would subject him to the tax, has been of a child as to whom such person has in good faith procured at the time of employing such child or permitting him to work, and has since in good faith relied upon and kept on file a certificate issued in such form, under such conditions, and by such persons as may be prescribed by a board consisting of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the Secretary of Labor, showing the child to be of such age as not to subject such person to the tax imposed by this title. Any person who knowingly makes a false statement or presents false evidence in or in relation to any such certificate or application therefor shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than three months, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

In any State designated by such board an employment certificate or other similar paper as to the age of the child, issued under the laws of that State, and not inconsistent with the provisions of this title, shall have the same force and effect as a certificate herein provided for.

(b) The tax imposed by this title shall not be imposed in the case of any person who proves to the satisfaction of the Secretary of the Treasury that the only employment or permission to work which but for this section would subject him to the tax, has been of a child employed or permitted to work under a mistake of facts as to the age of such child, and without intention to evade the tax.

SEC. —. That on or before the first day after the third month following the close of each taxable year, a true and accurate return under oath shall be made by each person subject to the provisions of this title to the collector for the district in which such person has his principal office or place of business, in such form as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, shall prescribe, setting forth specifically the gross amount of income received or accrued during such year from the sale or disposition of the product of any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment, in which children have been employed subjecting him to the tax imposed by this title, and from the total thereof deducting the aggregate items of allowance authorized by this title, and such other particulars as to the gross receipts and items of allowance as the commissioner, with the approval of the Secretary, may require.

SEC. —. That all such returns shall be transmitted forthwith by the collector to the commissioner, who shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax found due and notify the person making such return of the amount of tax for which such person is liable, and such person shall pay the tax to the collector on or before 30 days from the date of such notice.

SEC. —. That for the purposes of this act the commissioner, or any other person duly authorized by him, shall have authority to enter and inspect at any time any mine, quarry, mill, cannery, workshop, factory, or manufacturing establishment. The Secretary of Labor, or any person duly authorized by him, shall, for the purpose of complying with a request of the commissioner to make such an inspection, have like authority, and shall make report to the commissioner of inspections made under such authority in such form as may be prescribed by the commissioner with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury.

Any person who refuses or obstructs entry or inspection authorized by this section shall be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000, or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both such fine and imprisonment.

SEC. —. That as used in this title the term "taxable year" shall have the same meaning as provided for the purposes of income tax in section 200. The first taxable year for the purposes of this title shall be the period between 60 days after the passage of this act and December 31, 1919, both inclusive, or such portion of such period as is included within the fiscal year (as defined in sec. 200) of the taxpayer.

EDNA F. EVANS.

Mr. FRANCE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 330), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Edna F. Evans, widow of Clarence C. Evans, late clerk to Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE, Senator from the State of Maryland, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

GENERAL PEACE HOLIDAY.

Mr. SHEPPARD submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 331), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Resolved, That it is the sense of the United States Senate that the nations of the world, or as many of them as practicable, should hold a general holiday on the day of the beginning of peace among the present belligerent powers; and

Resolved further, That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized and requested to cause negotiations to be instituted with this purpose in view.

IDA M. SHAW.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 332), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Ida M. Shaw, widow of Richard A. Shaw, late a laborer on the rolls of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—HATTIE F. RICHARDSON.

On motion of Mr. HALE, it was Ordered, That the papers accompanying the bill S. 3764, Sixty-fifth Congress, second session, granting a pension to Hattie F. Richardson, be withdrawn from the files of the Senate, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the article to which I referred a short time ago, and which I shall send to the desk, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. SMOOT. Is morning business closed, Mr. President?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Not yet. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. PENROSE. I object, Mr. President, until morning business is closed. Then I shall still have to object unless I am informed as to the nature of the document.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to inform the Senator.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there further morning business? [A pause.] Morning business is closed. The Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the nature of the article is disclosed in its headline, which is as follows:

TERMS MUST BE FAIR—LLOYD-GEORGE MAKES JUSTICE ISSUE IN COMING ELECTION—NO VENGEANCE OR GREED—RIGHT PEACE WILL END CONSCRIPTION AND RIVAL ARMAMENTS—BRITAIN GOING TO PEACE CONGRESS TO GUARANTEE LEAGUE OF NATIONS IN REALITY—NEEDED MORE THAN EVER TO PROTECT LITTLE NATIONS OF NEW EUROPE FROM AVARICE AND AMBITION—SEES END OF ANIMOSITIES.

For the information of the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. President, I shall now read the article. It is as follows:

LONDON, November 13.

"One of the principal issues at the forthcoming general election will be the nature of the peace settlement. It will mean the settlement of the world."

Premier Lloyd-George made this announcement in an address to his Liberal supporters on November 11.

"What are the principles on which that settlement is to be effected?" he asked. "Are we to lapse back into the old national rivalries, animosities, and competitive armaments, or are we to initiate the reign on earth of the Prince of Peace? It is the duty of liberalism to use its influence to insure that it shall be a reign of peace.

JUSTICE AND FAIR PLAY.

"What are conditions of peace? They must lead to a settlement which will be fundamentally just. No settlement that contravenes the principles of eternal justice will be a permanent one. The peace of 1871 imposed by Germany on France outraged all the principles of justice and fair play. Let us be warned by that example.

"We must not allow any sense of revenge, any spirit of greed, any grasping desire, to override the fundamental principles of righteousness. Vigorous attempts will be made to hector and bully the Government in an endeavor to make them depart from the strict principles of right and to satisfy some base, sordid, squalid ideas of vengeance and of avarice. We must relentlessly set our faces against that.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS NEEDED.

"The mandate of the Government at the forthcoming election will mean that the British delegation to the peace conference will be in favor of a just peace."

Discussing the question of a league of nations, the premier said that such a league would be more necessary now than ever. He pointed out that the conditions which prevailed in the Balkans before the war were now affecting practically two-thirds of Europe.

"A large number of small nations have been reborn in Europe," he continued. "And these will require a league of nations to protect them against the covetousness of ambitious and grasping neighbors. In my judgment, a league of nations is absolutely essential to permanent peace.

NO PROGRESS WITHOUT PEACE.

"We shall go to the peace conference to guarantee that a league of nations is a reality. I am one of those who believe that without peace we can not have progress. A league of nations guarantees peace and guarantees also an all-round reduction of armaments, and that reduction of armaments is a guaranty that you can get rid of conscription here.

"Of course, we must have in this country an efficient army to police the Empire, but I am looking forward to a condition of things, with the existence of a league of nations, under which conscription will not be necessary in any country."

HOLD FUTURE OF WORLD.

Lord Robert Cecil, assistant secretary of foreign affairs, in an address yesterday on the subject of a league of nations, declared that the allies had in their hands the political future of the entire world. On their decisions, he added, might depend the peace and happiness of many generations. The most glorious victory, he continued, would scarcely be distinguishable from defeat unless by it there were laid the foundations of a lasting peace.

The suggested league of nations, said Lord Robert, could not be restricted to a certain group of nations, but must be open to every nation which could be trusted by its fellows. It would be incomplete and proportionately ineffective unless every civilized nation joined it.

Lord Robert said the machinery to enforce the principles was the real problem. He thought, however, that all that would be necessary would be a treaty binding the signatories never themselves to wage war or to permit others to wage war until a formal conference of nations had been held to inquire into and, if possible, decide upon the dispute.

Mr. President, I desire to invite especial attention to these words of the assistant secretary for foreign affairs, who declares that the league of nations will be ineffective and fail of its purpose unless it includes all civilized nations.

We find, Mr. President, that only a short while ago an eminent American citizen, whose words have no little influence upon public opinion in this country, in the course of an address delivered in my State declared it to be an unwise policy to admit Germany particularly to the league of nations. On that occasion he said this:

If it seems advisable when the time comes to have a league of nations, all right, but let's be a little careful whom we invite in. The allies at this moment have a league of nations that's a pretty good going concern.

As for inviting Germany, Austria, Turkey, and the present Government of Russia—any Lenine and Trotsky, or Bolsheviki, into a joint league of peace—I would just as lief ask so many road agents and gunmen to join a sheriff's posse.

I would approve of going into any rational-plan peace affair—not guarantee peace affair—to lessen the likelihood of war, but when all is said and done I would accept such a plan only as an addition to but never as a substitute for Uncle Sam preparing his own strength for his own defense.

Mr. President, it might as well be recognized that when an orderly government is established in Germany, she must either be admitted to the league of nations, if one is to be organized, or we and our allies must perpetually maintain a military establishment sufficient for all time to overawe that country.

One of the most valuable contributions made to the literature of this subject is a recent book by that brilliant and versatile English writer, Mr. H. G. Wells, entitled "In the Fourth Year." It exhibits such a warm admiration of the American system as a model for the league of nations that I venture to read a few extracts from the book. Mr. Wells says:

It happens, very fortunately for the world, that a century and a quarter ago 13 various and very jealous States worked out the problem of a Union, and became—after an enormous, exhausting wrangle—the United States of America. Now, the way they solved their riddle was by delegating and giving over jealously specified sovereign powers and doing all that was possible to retain the residuum. They remained essentially sovereign States. New York, Virginia, Massachusetts, for example, remained legally independent. The practical fusion of these people into one people outran the legal bargain. It was only after long years of discussion that the point was conceded; it was, indeed, only after the Civil War that the implications were fully established, that there resided a sovereignty in the American people as a whole, as distinguished from the peoples of the several States. This is a precedent that everyone who talks about the league of nations should bear in mind. These States set up a Congress and President in Washington with strictly delegated powers. That Congress and President they delegated to look after certain common interests, to deal with interstate trade, to deal with foreign powers, to maintain a supreme court of law. Everything else—education, militia, powers of life and death—the States retained for themselves. To this day, for instance, the Federal courts and the Federal officials have no power to interfere to protect the lives or property of aliens in any part of the Union outside the District of Columbia. The State governments still see to that. The Federal Government has the legal right perhaps to intervene, but it is still chary of such intervention. And these States of the American Union were at the outset so independent spirited that they would not even adopt a common name. To this day they have no common name. We have to call them Americans, which is a ridiculous name when we consider that Canada, Mexico, Peru, Brazil are all of them also in America. Or else we have to call them Virginians, Californians, New Englanders, etc. Their legal and nominal separateness weighs nothing against the real fusion that their great league has now made possible.

Now, that clearly is a precedent of the utmost value in our schemes for this council of the league of nations. We must begin by delegating, as the States began by delegating. It is a far cry to the time when we shall talk and think of the sovereign peoples of the earth. That council of the league of nations will be a tie as strong, we hope, but certainly not so close and multiplex as the early tie of the States at Washington. It will begin by having certain delegated powers and no others.

I observe that the Senator from Pennsylvania is not giving me his attention at this time. Perhaps the sentence I just read will in a measure be an answer to the question propounded to me by the Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I beg the Senator's pardon. I was interrupted for a moment when he read the last sentence, and I should like to have him read it again.

Mr. WALSH. I shall be very glad to read it again:

That council of the league of nations will be a tie as strong, we hope, but certainly not so close and multiplex as the early tie of the States at Washington. It will begin by having certain delegated powers and no others. It will be an "ad hoc" body. Later its powers may grow as mankind becomes accustomed to it. But at first it will have, directly or mediately, all the powers that seem necessary to restrain the world from war; and unless I know nothing of patriotic jealousies, it will have not a scrap of power more. The danger is much more that its powers will be insufficient than that they will be excessive.

I read this, Mr. President, as an indication of the line of thought of one of the leading thinkers of the world upon this subject; and I now answer the Senator from Pennsylvania that I do not believe any man has yet undertaken to work out all the details of the constitution, if you may so call it, under which the league of nations will operate, if it ever comes into being. I do not believe that it will be possible to announce in advance by anyone just exactly what powers that league of nations shall possess. So I say to the Senator that I am unable to answer his question, and I am unable to direct him to anybody who can. The league of nations, if it ever comes into being, will be the result of the activities of the statesmen of the world. Whether they shall deem it wise to include in the constitution such powers as suggested by the Senator from Pennsylvania, I am unable to say, but I should rather think not.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, the Senator has addressed an inquiry to me; and if he is ready for me to reply, I should like to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SUTHERLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. WALSH. I do not remember having addressed an inquiry to the Senator.

Mr. PENROSE. I thought the Senator asked me whether that was a sufficient answer to my inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. No; I did not.

Mr. PENROSE. Then the Senator does not care to be interrupted at this moment?

Mr. WALSH. I have not the slightest objection to the Senator interrupting me at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. Then I will ask the Senator this question: He states that while this proposition of a league of nations is so nebulous that no one in this generation can define its character, it being a kind of rainbow vision——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, just a moment. If the Senator undertakes to quote me, he must quote me accurately.

Mr. PENROSE. I was paraphrasing the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I did not make any such statement.

Mr. PENROSE. I will not go on with the description if it does not suit the Senator; but he says that the first proposition that is generally admitted is that it shall be the duty of such league of nations to enforce peace. I take it the Senator stated that that was a general admission of the primary purpose of the league—to police the world and preserve peace. President Wilson has stated, and others of a free-trade tendency, that one of the great causes of war is economic rivalry and economic boycotts; and in the discharge of these high duties of preserving world peace, following out that theory, it would seem to me from a practical, common-sense point of view that the league of nations would be called upon to give the same reciprocal advantages in trade to our late opponents as they would to our recent allies. Would that be the Senator's thought?

Mr. WALSH. I am not undertaking to lay down the constitution of the league of nations at this time.

Mr. PENROSE. The Senator undertook to describe it.

Mr. WALSH. I do not undertake to reply to that question.

Mr. PENROSE. It is evident to my mind that the Senator is unwilling to reply.

Mr. WALSH. I am not undertaking at this time to lay down the details of the constitution which is to govern the league of nations. I did not have any such purpose at this time, and it does not seem to me that it is appropriate to the discussion. The Senator is endeavoring, it seems to me, simply to divert the public mind from the question as to whether we should have a league of nations to preserve the peace of the world.

Mr. PENROSE. Mr. President, I only want to say, in closing, if the Senator will permit me, that the fanciful generalizations quoted from the book of Mr. Wells ought to occupy close rank on the shelf with the equally ridiculous novel of that great diplomatist, Col. House.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I proceed.

I read from the book the following encomium upon the Constitution of the United States. He says, at page 22:

I turn from any European precedents to that political outcome of the British mind, the Constitution of the United States. Because we must always remember that while our political institutions in Britain are a patch-up of feudalism, Tudor, Stuart, and Hanoverian monarchist traditions and urgent merely as European necessities, a patch-up that has been made quasi democratic in a series of afterthoughts, the American Constitution is a real, deliberate creation of the English-speaking intelligence.

And, Mr. President, to show how clearly the author appreciated the purposes for which this great war has been waged, I read the following from page 69:

We are asking Germany to become a different Germany. Either Germany has to be utterly smashed up and destroyed or else Germany has to cease to be an aggressive military imperialism. The former alternative is dismissed by most responsible statesmen. They declare that they do not wish to destroy the German people or the German nationality or the civilized life of Germany. I will not enlarge here upon the tedium and difficulties such an undertaking would present. I will dismiss it as being not only impossible but also as an insanely wicked project. The second alternative, therefore, remains as our war aim. I do not see how the sloppiest reasoner can evade that. As we do not want to kill Germany, we must want to change Germany. If we do not want to wipe Germany off the face of the earth, then we want Germany to become the prospective and trustworthy friend of her fellow nations. And if words have any meaning at all, that is saying that we are fighting to bring about a revolution in Germany. We want Germany to become a democratically controlled State, such as is the United States to-day, with open methods and pacific intentions, instead of remaining a clenched fist. If we can bring that about we have achieved our war aim; if we can not, then this struggle has been for us only such loss and failure as humanity has never known before.

But do we, as a Nation, stick closely to this clear and necessary, this only possible, meaning of our declared war aim? That great, clear-minded leader among the allies, that Englishman who more than any other single man speaks for the whole English-speaking and western-thinking community, President Wilson, has said definitely that this is his meaning. America, with him as her spokesman, is under no delusion; she is fighting consciously for a German revolution as the essential war aim. We in Europe do not seem to be so lucid. I think myself we have been, and are still, fatally and disastrously not lucid. It is high time, and over, that we cleared our minds and got down to the essentials of the war. We have muddled about in blood and dirt and secondary issues long enough.

His admiration for our political institutions, Mr. President, as will be perceived from the extract just read, is not exceeded by that which he entertains toward the Chief Executive of this Nation. The book is filled with remarks expressive of the high appreciation he holds of the capabilities and the purposes of the President.

I read from page 2:

The common talk is of a "league of nations" merely. I follow the man who is, more than any other man, the leader of English political thought throughout the world to-day, President Wilson, in inserting that significant adjective "Free."

From page 26:

This peace congress is too big a job for party politicians and society and county families. The bulk of British opinion can not go on being represented forever by President Wilson.

From page 96:

Every day when I am in London I walk past Buckingham Palace to lunch at my club, and I look at that not very expressive façade and wonder—and we all wonder—what thoughts are going on behind it and what acts are being conceived there. Out of it there might yet come some gesture of acceptance magnificent enough to set beside President Wilson's magnificent declaration of war.

From page 129:

The one man who has risen to the greatness of this great occasion, the man who is, in default of any rival, rapidly becoming the leader of the world toward peace, is neither a delegate politician nor the choice of a monarch and his councilors. He is the one authoritative figure in these transactions whose mind has not been subdued either by long discipline in the party machine or by court intrigue; who has continued his education beyond those early twenties when the mind of the "budding politician" ceases to expand; who has thought, and thought things out; who is an educated man among dextrous undereducated specialists. By something very like a belated accident in the framing of the American Constitution the President of the United States is more in the nature of a selected man than any other conspicuous figure at the present time. He is specially elected by a special electoral college after an elaborate preliminary selection of candidates by the two great party machines. And be it remembered that Mr. Wilson is not the first great President the United States have had; he is one of a series of figures who tower over their European contemporaries. The United States have had many advantageous circumstances to thank for their present ascendancy in the world's affairs—isolation from militarist pressure for a century and a quarter, a vast virgin continent, plenty of land, freedom from centralization, freedom from titles and social vulgarities, common schools, a real democratic spirit in its people, and a great enthusiasm for universities; but no single advantage has been so great as this happy accident which has given it a specially selected man as its voice and figurehead in the world's affairs.

Mr. President, there is just one more extract from the book which I desire to read because of the questions addressed to me by the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE], and more because of the spirit in which they were asked than because of the questions themselves. He is discussing here the objections that will be urged to the league of nations to insure and enforce peace; and he says, on page 32:

Disarmament is, in fact, a necessary factor of any league of free nations, and you can not have disarmament unless you are prepared to see the powers of the council of the league extend thus far. The very existence of the league presupposes that it and it alone is to have and to exercise military force. Any other belligerency or preparation or incitement to belligerency becomes rebellion, and any other arming a threat of rebellion, in a world league of free nations. But here, again, has the general mind yet thought out all that is involved in this proposition? In all the great belligerent countries the armament industries are now huge interests with enormous powers. Krupp's business alone is as powerful a thing in Germany as the Crown. In every country a heavily subsidized "patriotic" press will fight desperately against giving powers so extensive and thorough as those here suggested to an international body. So long, of course, as the league of free nations remains a project in the air, without body or parts, such a press will sneer at it gently as "Utopian," and even patronize it kindly. But so soon as the league takes on the shape its general proposition makes logically necessary, the armament interest will take fright. Then it is we shall hear the drum patriotic loud in defense of the human-blood trade.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH. I will finish the quotation in just a moment.

Are we to hand over these most intimate affairs of ours to "a lot of foreigners"? Among these "foreigners" who will be appealed to to terrify the patriotic souls of the British will be the "Americans." Are we men of English blood and tradition to see our affairs controlled by such "foreigners" as Wilson, Lincoln, Webster, and Washington? Perish the thought! When they might be controlled by Disraelis, Wettins, Mount-Battens and what not! And so on and so on. Krupp's agents and the agents of the kindred firms in Great Britain and France will also be very busy with the national pride of France. In Germany they have already created a colossal suspicion of England.

Here is a giant in the path.

I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. I wanted to ask the Senator if he indorses that statement—if he believes that the munition makers of the world control the press of the world?

Mr. WALSH. Why, Mr. President, there is not any such statement here.

Mr. REED. As I interpret the language, that is the purport of the quotation.

Mr. WALSH. I am sure the Senator has misinterpreted it. The expression is:

In every country a heavily subsidized "patriotic" press will fight desperately.

Mr. REED. Yes. Now, of course, that expression means that the press is heavily subsidized.

Mr. WALSH. Not the press; a press.

Mr. REED. Well, a press.

Mr. WALSH. That is, some of the papers.

Mr. REED. And that it is a pretense that it makes that it is patriotic. The word "patriotic" is used in the ironical sense.

Mr. WALSH. Evidently.

Mr. REED. Now, I will ask the Senator if he believes that in the limited sense in which he now puts it there is a press in every country, subsidized by the munition interests, powerful enough to affect public opinion? Does the Senator indorse that statement?

Mr. WALSH. Why, I have not the slightest doubt in the world about it. I have not the slightest doubt in the world that money is put into newspapers for the purpose of controlling the public mind in favor of industries that are incidental to the conduct of war, and I have not the slightest doubt in the world that money is put into newspapers for the purpose of controlling public opinion with reference to many other subjects of legislation; and the Senator from Missouri has abundant reason for concurring with me in that opinion.

Mr. REED. The Senator is discussing a question a little different from the one I put. I suppose there are some newspaper men and some newspaper enterprises in every country that might be controlled by money; but does the Senator think that the munition makers of this country and of other countries in the world have subsidized the press, or a press, to such an extent as to materially control or affect public opinion? I do not think so.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator may not think so; but I have not the slightest doubt in the world that if a league of nations, such as is contemplated, is in process of formation, the men who have millions invested in business that will be destroyed if the league of nations comes into being will as a matter of course spend some of their money to control public opinion, as they believe, possibly honestly, but with prejudiced minds, in the public interest; and I shall be much surprised if the Senator from Missouri will not agree with me that those gentlemen are not going to see their business destroyed if they can help it.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CURTIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. If the Senator will pardon an interruption, I hope this discussion of the league of nations is not going to be put upon the sordid basis that there are some men interested in making gunpowder and cannon, and that they and all who are opposed to the league of nations are acting from selfish motives. I am sorry to find that injected into the debate. Speaking for myself, I question whether there is a man in the United States engaged in the making of munitions who would postpone for one moment the day of universal peace, if that be possible, in order to perpetuate his profits.

Mr. WALSH. The trouble about it is that he thinks he is not postponing the day of universal peace. He argues to himself, and quite satisfactorily, that the way to preserve peace is to build up a tremendous military organization, and he believes it honestly; but, of course, his view is a prejudiced one. His observation is obscured by the fact that he is interested in the matter.

Mr. REED. I will undertake to make this further statement, and then dismiss the subject: When the question comes to be investigated it will not be shown that the munition makers of the United States control a single first-class newspaper in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that is, of course, a very small consideration in the discussion of the entire subject, and I should hate to have the Senator from Missouri or anyone else believe that that is the only line of argument that will be pursued. As a matter of course there are many, many people who have no faith whatever in the maintenance of peace by any such scheme or plan. The Senator from Missouri expressed himself upon the subject some time ago. None of us could imagine for a moment that the Senator is moved by any consideration but the highest patriotic motives, and there will be many other people in this country who will feel exactly the same way. The munition makers will be actuated by high motives and purposes, but their judgment will be wrong about it, in my humble opinion. As a matter of course they will be spending their money, not only to preserve their own individual interests, but, as they believe, to promote the interests of the country.

Mr. REED. As a matter of course, they will be spending their money. That is an assumption that has been demonstrated. I simply dismiss the matter, as far as I am concerned, with the statement that I have never seen the evidence produced that a single munition maker of the United States has ever undertaken to suborn the press or that he has ever undertaken to control public opinion in the interest of his business. It is within the limits of possibility that some one may have done so. I hold no brief for these gentlemen, certainly not, but I, at this time, solemnly protest against the argument being made that men who are opposed to this league of nations are opposed to it for selfish reasons.

I shall take occasion to make some remarks on that subject later.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which the Secretary will state by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified service.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the remarks of the Senator from Montana——

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have just a sentence to conclude.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thought the Senator had concluded. He had taken his seat.

Mr. WALSH. I simply desire to add that I commend the extracts that have been read to the very careful attention of the Members of this body.

Mr. PENROSE subsequently said: Mr. President, as part of my colloquy this morning with the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I ask permission to have inserted in the RECORD an editorial from a Philadelphia newspaper entitled "An Australian Prime Minister's Protest," in regard to the protest of Mr. Hughes, the prime minister of the Australian Commonwealth, against the 14 points enunciated by the President, and distinctly declares his opposition to economic union and reciprocity.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial referred to will be inserted in the RECORD.

The editorial is as follows:

AN AUSTRALIAN PRIME MINISTER'S PROTEST.

Mr. W. M. Hughes, the prime minister of the Australian Commonwealth, is none too well pleased with the 14 points enunciated by the President which are to serve as the basis of peace, and he is feeling sore because the dominions were not consulted prior to their adoption. Judging from what he said in a recent interview, he is laboring under the impression that they are to be embodied without interpretation, amplification, or modification in the compact eventually to be formulated, and he wishes it to be clearly understood that this is a prospect with which he and his fellow countrymen are deeply dissatisfied.

He especially objects to the third point providing for "the removal, so far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of an equality of trade conditions among all the nations consenting to the peace and associating themselves for its maintenance," which he construes as threatening to impose an obnoxious and intolerable restriction on Australia's right as a self-governing dominion. "Australians," he says, "would not permit Great Britain to curtail their economic freedom," and he wants to know why they should allow anyone else to do so.

So far as his criticism on this particular point is concerned, it may be remarked that many Americans have shared the apprehensions which he expresses, and that for their reassurance an explanation of the objectionable third paragraph has been furnished from official sources which minimizes its significance and eliminates its menace. It is not directed toward the universal institution of free trade, which, in view of the President's well-known free-trade proclivities, had been not irrationally surmised. It is directed against the erection of tariff barriers designed to exclude the products of any particular country; but to Premier Hughes, even as thus attenuated, it is unwelcome, and his position is that if Australia wishes to discriminate against German commodities it must reserve the right to do so.

That position admits of a strong defense which need not at the moment be discussed. Premier Hughes apparently assumes that the 14 points are identical with the terms of peace, and he complains of their acceptance as constituting a "fait accompli" consummated without the assent of the dominions, in which, however, they are bound to acquiesce. His view of the matter is a mistaken one. The 14 points have been accepted as the basis of peace, but they are far from comprising the conditions upon which the coming peace will eventually be established. They are in large part abstract propositions, the details of whose application remain to be determined, and it is unimaginable that at the conference, where the British self-governing dominions will be represented, the rights and interests of those dominions will not be unequivocally recognized and effectually conserved.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I merely wish to say a few words in immediate connection with the development of this idea of a league of nations, which has been brought out by the Senator from Montana as the most appropriate occasion for calling the attention of the Senate and the country to the issue as it shapes itself.

A great many of the observations of Mr. Wells about our institutions are accurate, and there are a good many of them that are inaccurate. Mr. Wells's statement that we have in the United States no titles of nobility is correct, but his statement that we are free from social vulgarities is about as far from being correct as any criticism of the country could be. We have an element in this country, as there is in every country in the world, who indulge in social vulgarities; and I think a certain element, due to conditions—the rapid accumulation of wealth—is probably more marked in that respect than in any other country in the world.

I only call attention to it to show the unreliability of Mr. Wells's observations in all respects as to conditions and institutions in the United States.

Mr. Wells is one of the best-known socialists of Great Britain. He is a pronounced radical socialist, a brilliant author and novelist, a philosopher in a certain sense, a brilliant writer upon social and economic questions. He has never, so far as I know, had any part in the British Government. He is a pacifist, although after Great Britain entered the war he supported the war.

Furthermore, Mr. Wells, whose dissertation upon the subject of a league of nations has been read from at such length by the Senator from Montana, and, I think, in a spirit of general approval and recommendation by the Senator from Montana of the ideas and the propositions and the arguments made by Mr. Wells—Mr. Wells in addition to being a pacifist and a socialist is an internationalist, and that term has come of recent months to have quite a concrete and vital significance. Mr. Wells belongs to a very large and growing class of socialists and radicals who minimize the value of nationality.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. In just a moment. I would prefer that the Senator should interrupt me just a little later.

Mr. Wells belongs to that political element in England, in Germany particularly, in France, and of growing importance in the United States, who believe that the great political issues of the day are not national or to be determined by the sovereign powers which have been established through the natural evolution of things but that they are to be determined upon a horizontal cleavage of classes of people. He is more attached to the socialist class than he is to the nation to which he belongs.

This gentleman, whose setting forth and elucidation of the character of this proposed league of nations is emphasized by the Senator from Montana, believes in encouraging class warfare. He does not believe, I assume, in the possibility of the elimination of classes so far as the adjustment of economic and national political questions are concerned.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator is not very accurately informed about Mr. Wells's views, which are quite aside from the line of the argument. So I did not read that portion of the book which argued for the abolition, for instance, of the monarchy and aristocracy.

Mr. POINDEXTER. As far as the abolition of monarchy and aristocracy is concerned, it was not necessary for the Senator to read that, because it is not an issue in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; but the Senator stated as a fact that the writer was advocating a war of classes.

Mr. POINDEXTER. He is advocating an issue between classes. I mean, of course, a political war, and, I assume, carrying it to the extent of a military war if necessary. He is a believer in the doctrine of the social class, and that the political party to which he belongs should extend beyond the confines of the country and should join hands with the same class and the same party in all other countries in the world, and that there should be set up over them by their amalgamation a world power.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I decline to yield just at this moment. I will yield just a little later. I call the Senator's attention to the fact that aside from the details of having a sovereign king or emporor that that is the same doctrine that was advocated by the late Kaiser of the German Empire. He was an internationalist. He believed in world power or downfall. It is in the same category. Although, of course, he advocated world peace under his central control, there is little else to distinguish the Kaiser's dream from the doctrine that is now being advanced under the mild term of a league of nations in favor of the establishment of a central power with armies and with navies which will impose its dictates upon every people and upon every nation as to their relations with each other.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. When I rose to interrupt the Senator a while ago, I was going to remark that it was not very important to us what Mr. Wells's views are except as they coincide with those of the premier of Great Britain, Lloyd-George, and the Assistant Secretary of State. I dare say that the Senator could hardly make that kind of a stricture against Robert Cecil.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator calls them strictures. I did not regard them as strictures. I was undertaking to give a definition. I assume that Mr. Wells would consider it a eulogy and a compliment, because he believes in the doctrine. I am simply undertaking to get at the real situation and the actual facts. Whether or not Mr. Wells's views are important is a matter which the Senator from Montana has settled for us all, because he has thought them of importance enough to bring his book here and read it at length and commend it to the attention of Senators.

A few days ago in the debate in the Senate as to the relation which the United States should occupy toward Germany in the reestablishment of the world, I called attention to the statement of the principal press spokesman of the administration, in which he said that the views of President Wilson had the approval of the British Labor Party and of the French Socialists. They belong to the same general internationalist party that Mr. Wells belongs to. At that time attention was called to the fact that when Mr. Henderson, who is one of the leaders of the labor party, whose support was set forth as evidence of the esteem in which internationally the President of the United States is held, undertook to go to Paris to meet there with the French Socialists, he was held up by the British sailors. He was not allowed to take passage upon a ship, and when he undertook to return to his home the taxicab drivers refused, according to the dispatches, to allow him to ride in their taxicabs, and they took that position because of what they considered his unpatriotic attitude toward the war in which Great Britain was engaged at that time for its honor and its independence. He agreed with Mr. Wells in preaching the doctrine of internationalism upon which the doctrine of a league of nations is founded. With whatever sophistry we may be engaged in defining the proposition, the fact is it is proposed that the sovereign power of the United States, which was won by the sages and patriots of the Revolution in blood and effort and sacrifice, is to be surrendered in this year 1918.

One of the surprising features about this is that it is carried here to the extent of having a member of that party which has stood the strongest in time past for local self-government in all respects, for distribution of power rather than centralization, present to us extracts from a book which sets out, in sharper outline than perhaps has been set out before, the astounding proposition of an international government molded on the principle of the Federal union of the States.

The Senator from Montana reads it to us and commends it to our attention, notwithstanding all of the heritage and traditions which he has received, along with the rest of us, in the struggles and the conquests which our people have made for a national independence, for individual liberty, for national freedom.

Mr. President, they propose expressly, in some of the extracts which have been read, that international commerce shall be controlled by the league. That at once would take out of the hands of the United States any power to regulate a tariff, to levy import duties.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I can not let that statement go unchallenged.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will yield to the Senator to challenge it, but let me say, in order that he may answer it all at once, that Mr. Wells, whose statement he just now read, compares this league and its ultimate ideals and developments to the Federal union of the United States and expressly said that his idea, which the Senator commends to us, was that the league should control the international commerce of the various members of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I desire to challenge that statement. There was nothing of the kind in what I read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Of course, as far as that is concerned the extracts which the Senator read will have to show whether my understanding or his is correct.

Now, I want to call attention to this, that once we have entered into a league of nations I assume that the Senator from Montana will admit that this league, its representative government, of whatever kind it may be, which has not yet been defined, will have power to curb one of its constituent members from beginning a war against another member. Otherwise there will be no object whatever in forming it, as it would be no advance at all over The Hague convention which already exists, the worthlessness of which in the face of the perversities of human nature, as exemplified by the German nation, has been shown to all the world.

Once we form this league, that league having this power, the league, and not any member of it, will determine what its powers shall be, whether they shall be curtailed or whether they shall be extended. That, in general, has been the tendency of the Federal Union in its relations with the States. The inventions of science, however, and the spread of intelligence have made our happy domain as one community. Its independence, its sovereignty, is the chief jewel in its crown. It can not be surrendered without a struggle.

Only a few days ago on the floor of the Senate the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee said that, in the question of international trade, as to whether or not there should be any discrimination between the United States and any other nation, that question would be determined by the league. Now, there is the whole proposition admitted away, for if this plan is adopted the power of determination has gone from the United States. It is in the hands of an alien power; it is in the hands of rival powers; it is in the hands of Europe. The United States will have surrendered its birthright; it will have given up the spirit as well as the fact of sovereignty. Your Monroe doctrine will be absorbed in your league of nations. It will become obsolete, as some of the internationalists have already been preaching, circulating pamphlets with the phrase, "The Monroe doctrine an obsolete shibboleth." That will become a realization if this league of nations that is proposed by the Senator from Montana, as near as I can gather his idea, is carried out.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. OWEN. I want to remind the Senator that the Monroe doctrine was in reality a declaration by the United States that it would regard as an unfriendly act the establishment of a system of autocracy by any of the European powers on our shores; and that, of course, is impossible now, because the autocracies of Europe have been destroyed by this war. I take it that any league that might be made would be in view of the maintenance for all future time of the principles of democratic government throughout Europe and throughout the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. That evidences, I think, the general attitude that is taken by most of those who advocate a league of nations. They assume that the issues that had to be fought for in the past, for which we have had to fight in the past, are not going to arise again. The Senator assumes that because autocracy for the time being, at least, is in a state of confusion and abdication, temporarily anyhow, in Germany, the purposes for which the Monroe doctrine were set up have been fulfilled; and according to that idea of course the necessary conclusion would be that the Monroe doctrine becomes obsolete, and it verifies just what I said before.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator's inference or conclusion from my observation has no justification, because I only pointed out that the Monroe doctrine was a declaration by the United States that it would not permit autocracy to be established on the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know what the Monroe doctrine is, and I suppose all of us do. It goes further, however, than the Senator has stated, and is not limited to autocracies in its exclusion of further European colonization in the Western Hemisphere.

Mr. OWEN. I do not believe it is generally understood that it arose out of the treaty of Verona and a war of the autocracy of Europe on the democracies of the world. That was the cause of the action of President Monroe.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON. I should like to ask the Senator from Oklahoma whether he believes that the Monroe doctrine should be abrogated or abandoned as the American policy?

Mr. OWEN. Not at all. Nobody believes that, and no one has suggested it as far as I know.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will proceed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am going to pursue the statement justifying my conclusion, not the conclusion of the Senator from Oklahoma, based on his statement that the conditions now being so different from those existing at the time of the Holy Alliance there is no danger of the occupation of American territory by European powers. I draw the conclusion that if he feels that the reason for the Monroe doctrine no longer exists, the doctrine itself is obsolete. It seems to me to be a legitimate conclusion to draw from his remarks.

Now, let us see. In the first place, I think the Senator is too optimistic, and I might say idealistic, to assume that as a result of this war the same passions and ambitions that have actuated the governments of nations in the past are not going to be in full play in the evolution of the future. Your league of nations is established. We all know that most of the European nations have never accepted, perhaps none of them in express terms, the validity of the position taken by the United States in setting up the so-called Monroe doctrine. They have never admitted its validity. The populations of these powers are going to increase, the struggle for existence, for bread, is going to continue in the future as it has in the past. The necessity for expansion and for colonization are not matters that are determined by the form of government or by the terms of peace. They are governed by fundamental influences, the primal instincts of man, and they are going to be in as full play after the terms of peace between Germany and the allies have been settled as they were at the time the Monroe doctrine was set up by the American statesmen of a previous generation. Trade is going to be carried on. Rivalry and controversy about trade, about property rights, about personal rights, are going to arise. Does the Senator from Oklahoma suppose that Europeans are not going to seek business, to acquire property, to have rights in Mexico, in Brazil, in the Argentine Republic in the future as they have in the past? If he does, then it seems to me he leaves out of account the necessary continuity of the ambitions and the activities of mankind. They are going to continue these activities.

Now, let us suppose that some question of that kind arises. The league of nations is in control. We set up the Monroe doctrine in opposition to some proposition of a European member of this league, of a protectorate or direct governmental control in order to protect the property, or the trade, or the person of its nationals in Central or South America or in Mexico. What is the result? It inevitably goes before the league. The constituted authority of the league will pass on it, not the United States. They will determine it. Do you suppose that they are going to accept for their guidance the Monroe doctrine, which has never been admitted by them and which the United States alone, for its protection and for the preservation of a democratic form of government, has set up and maintained by physical power? Of course not. They are going to determine it according to their own ideas. The sovereignty of the United States in maintaining its doctrine, its principles, its tradition, its Constitution will all be gone.

In the second place, Mr. President, a league of nations as proposed by the Senator from Oklahoma and the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] who is not here, but whom I have heard express himself on this floor on that subject, would necessitate, if we are going to be governed by law, a revision of the Constitution of the United States. I know it has become quite unpopular nowadays to refer a question to the Constitution. But this league of nations which is proposed assumes, if it assumes anything at all, that the ultimate control in regard to war or peace rests in the league. Under the Constitution of the United States it rests in the Government of the United States, and if you take it away from that Government and submit it to a league, then you set aside your Constitution in effect, whether you do it expressly or not.

There is another circumstance to which I want to call attention that seems to me to be somewhat surprising. The chief support of this strange doctrine comes from the South, many of whose greatest men did not even want to surrender their independence to the extent of joining the Federal Union. Virginians brought Patrick Henry and George Mason from retirement to the convention of Virginia to make the greatest fight that they ever made in their lives against surrendering the independence of Virginia, even in order to become a member of the Federal Union. Now from the South comes the chief advocacy of the proposition that the Federal Union itself, continental though it is in its domain—and powerful enough to uphold righteousness in the world, a league of nations in itself—shall surrender its sovereignty, its control over its international affairs, and merge its nationality in a centralized league of the world. The Federal Union, in the providence of God, has become the apple of our eyes, and our very heart's desire; but because it is so should make us turn as from a sacrilege from the surrender of its control to alien hands and the merging and losing of our peculiar ideals in the common stream of mankind. It is a wonder that the mighty shades of Jefferson and Calhoun, of Washington and Marshall do not walk and cry out against such a betrayal.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WATSON in the chair). Does the Senator from Washington yield to the Senator from Oklahoma?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield.

Mr. OWEN. The very principle which the Senator from Washington condemns of the Southern States that seceded, or of a Southern State or any other State that did not wish to join a Union for purposes of common protection, and the Senator approving the Union, nevertheless, for purposes of common protection, is logically driven to recognize the value of international cooperation for mutual protection. That can be done without sacrificing in any degree the entire and complete control of the internal affairs of each and all of the nations that might be confederated for the common purpose of protecting the world against a recurrence of so gigantic a disaster as that now drawing to a conclusion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the Senator from Oklahoma is correct in saying that the internal affairs of the several constituent elements of the league of nations would still be under their control. That was the theory of the Federal Union—that the internal affairs of the several States should be under their control—and I am very glad indeed for the colloquy to have taken place, for more and more it brings clearly out the outlines, at least, of this league of nations as it is conceived by its advocates. The statement just made by the Senator from Oklahoma puts the league of nations relatively in the position with the affairs of the world that the United States Government now has over the United States. The Senator implies by his statement that the league, not the United States, would control the foreign affairs of the United States and its relations of war and peace.

Mr. OWEN. Not at all, Mr. President. The Senator from Oklahoma did not concede anything of the kind. All that was involved in what was said by me was that the international relationship might be under the control of an international league; but that would merely be the control of the seas, the protection of each nation in its right to a free sea, and to those principles of international right that are clearly recognized by everybody.

Mr. POINDEXTER. My inferences of the Senator's conclusion were based upon his own remarks. I think that they were justified; but, of course, the Senator is entitled to put his own construction upon what his intentions are.

The idea that is always assumed, that such a league as is now proposed is in the interest of peace, is in the face of all history. We did not even prevent war in the United States by forming a Federal Union. The most gigantic war that the world had ever seen up to that time occurred between the constituent members of the league, or of the Union, as it was called in that case. The Senator, as I said before, can not stop the rivalries and ambitions of men by joining them in a Federal league. They are going to continue whether you have a Federal league or not. The undertaking to interfere with the sovereign right of the United States to determine its policy, to set up a Monroe doctrine, if it sees fit, to levy a tariff against other nations, to make such shipping regulations as it proposes, and to give preferences to its own ships in passing through the Panama Canal, if it wants to, as against the ships of other nations will lead to trouble and to warfare instead of to that dream of peace which the Senator from Oklahoma has in mind. As a member of the league, instead of following the advice of Washington and keeping aloof as far as possible from the embroilments of other nations, we would be inextricably involved in the increasing complications of race and a party to every quarrel which growing populations and the struggle for land and trade will inevitably force upon the world.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, I remind the Senator from Washington that every war which has ever arisen has arisen out of the defects in the structure of government. The war between the States of this Union was due to the fact that the structure of government in our original Constitution provided that the minority might veto the will of the majority; that one-fourth of the States could prevent a change of the Constitution; and the Constitution was interpreted as having nationalized and legalized slavery in this country. That is what caused our war. If the league of nations keeps that in mind, there will be no future wars.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Oh, the Senator's idea that any human institution is going to prevent future war illustrates the difficulty of this entire socialistic internationalist program.

Mr. OWEN rose.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Now, if the Senator will allow me, I shall conclude in just a moment.

I want to call attention to this inconsistency in the situation, that the advocates of this league of nations have even declined—at least the administration, which I put in the class of the advocates of the league of nations, has declined—to join the league of nations which has been formed for the purpose of conducting this war against Germany. It seems to me that if the United States Government, or those at present in control of it, advocate as a practical proposition a league of nations in this greatest emergency which the world ever saw, where such a league ought to have increased value, they would take advantage of the opportunity to carry out their theory, would sign the pact of London, and become in truth and in fact an ally of Great Britain and France for enforcing the peace of the world against recalcitrant Germany.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is a league of nations now that on the battle fields of Europe has controlled the autocracy of Europe, brought them to their knees, and brought the abdication of every petty Teutonic emperor, king, grand duke, or whatnot in that country.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, the United States has not joined that league and has expressly and very carefully stayed out of it, declining to call the United States an ally, but speaking always of "our associates" in the war, and undoubtedly has a deliberate purpose in doing so.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator from Washington stands on a barren and empty technicality in talking about the United States not being a party. In fact, it is just as much an alliance as if the United States did not call itself an associate Nation. That is a mere matter of diplomatic usage in the use of terms. The truth is that here there are joined together the military, the financial, the political powers of 22 nations, standing like a solid rock against autocracy and bringing a triumph for civilization and liberty throughout the world.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Well, they ought to be joined for the purposes of this war in that pact; but, as a matter of fact, they are not. The Senator from Oklahoma says it makes no difference whether we have signed it or not. That is equivalent to saying that the pact is a mere scrap of paper; that it adds nothing to the obligations of the nations which have joined it. I attach more importance to the deliberate actions of the administration in control of the Government in deciding great questions of that kind than to assume that they regard that as a negligible proposition. To show that it is not inconsequential, not a mere negligible incident, as assumed by the Senator from Oklahoma, we see from day to day the German Government, the Austrian Government, even the Turkish Government, attempting to divide the United States from its associates in this war, making addresses to the President of the United States to intervene to secure a modification of the armistice which Gen. Foch recently imposed upon the German Army. This morning we saw a new appeal made to the President, to act as an intermediary between Germany and France, Italy, and Great Britain. We have seen the United States standing on the outside of this pact and refusing even to give its moral support to our associates in the war by declaring war against Bulgaria and Turkey.

What has brought this war to a conclusion has been a series of events, beginning with the conquest of Bulgaria by France, Serbia, England, and Italy; followed, as an immediate consequence, by the downfall of Turkey, exposing the borders of Austria to invasion, leading to Austria's downfall, and so opening up the German Empire to the attacks of the allies, and leading to the final surrender of Germany. In the two essential steps which began this series of great events, the United States was not even nominally a party. We not only declined to give them material aid, but we declined to give them moral aid. We even declined to go in with them and to make a common cause with them against the autocracy and the cruelties of Turkey and against its alliance with Germany, and as a consequence they are appealing to the President of the United States from day to day to interpose, not as one of the allies but as an intermediary, to secure a humane peace, to mitigate the terms of the armistice; and, strange to say, we find the President of the United States responding, putting himself in the position of negotiating, entirely apart from France, which has suffered most, even now with the German people, undertaking to differentiate the German people from the German Army, of which the German people were the component parts, and which was supported in everything that it did by the German people with a unanimity that was never evidenced before in the case of any people in the world. The President, standing outside of this pact, declining to sign it, is negotiating with the present government of Germany for the interposition of his influence and that of the American people for a modification of terms in behalf of Germany against France and Great Britain!

Mr. President, if Germany desires to obtain concessions in regard to peace or to the armistice, the courteous thing, the thing which in good faith would reflect credit and honor upon the people of the United States, would be for the American Government, when they are approached in these matters, to refer the German Government to her nearest neighbors, who have been the principal belligerents in this war and have suffered and are now suffering most from German crimes, and not undertake to intervene between them in a matter in which we have borne the least part.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator having concluded, I should like to submit an observation in regard to this matter.

On August 15, 1917, I introduced a joint resolution proposing an international convention for the purpose of establishing an international government in lieu of the international anarchy which was then and is still prevalent. Without reading, I ask to put in the RECORD as an exhibit that joint resolution, together with several other resolutions to the same effect, which I introduced at different times, to explain what I regard as essential to the proposed international league.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolutions referred to are as follows:

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) proposing as a war measure an international convention for the purpose of terminating international anarchy, establishing international government in lieu thereof, and coercing the Teutonic military conspiracy by the organized commercial, financial, military, and naval powers of the world.

Resolved, etc., That it is the opinion of the representatives of the people of the United States assembled in Congress that international government, supported by international force, should be immediately organized to take the place of the existing international anarchy; that competing armaments should be replaced by a noncompetitive international army and navy; that the Teutonic military conspiracy to dominate the world should be overthrown by the combined commercial, financial, military, and naval powers of the world.

That international government should be based upon the following principles:

First. Every civilized nation and informed people should have the unquestionable right of internal self-government, with exclusive control within its own territory over immigration, emigration, imports, exports, and all internal affairs, with the right to make its own political and commercial affiliations.

Second. The oceans and high seas should be free and open under international rules. All international waterways, straits, and canals should be open on equal terms to the citizens of all nations. Equal terms should be arranged for fuel repairs, and dockage in all ports for the ships belonging to the citizens of all nations.

Third. All interior nations having no seaports should have the right of shipment of their goods in bond on equal terms and conditions, without tax, through any intervening territory to the seaports of any other nation with equal access to shipping facilities.

Fourth. That there should be established by international agreement an international organization of all civilized nations with an international legislative council to draft rules of international law to be submitted to the several nations for approval. That when such rules of international law are approved by the parliaments, or lawmaking branch of the governments of three-fourths of the member nations, representing three-fourths of the total population of all the member nations, such international rules should be binding on all member nations. Such rules should be limited to the powers expressly delegated to such international legislative council and strictly confined to international affairs.

Fifth. The international legislative council should elect and define the duties of a representative international executive cabinet to execute and enforce the rules established as international law.

Sixth. The international legislative council should have representatives from each member nation exercising a voting power according to relative population, relative wealth, and relative governmental development, to be determined by international agreement.

Seventh. The international legislative council should establish and define the duties of an international supreme court, with power to pass upon all questions of international controversy incapable of diplomatic adjustment, but with no power to pass on questions affecting the reserved rights of nations.

Eighth. The international legislative council should formulate the method for raising an international army and navy and for establishing an international blockade and other means for enforcing the rights of member nations under international law, such army and navy to be provided and sustained by the member nations pro rata according to relative population and wealth.

Ninth. With the conclusion of the present war the nations of the world should agree to reduce in progressive stages their land and sea forces to a point preferably not to exceed internal or local police purposes and the quota required for the international army and navy.

With progressive disarmament and international peace safeguarded by world government dissatisfied nations now held captive by dominent nations for strategical purposes could be safely given their liberty.

Tenth. That the international army and navy should not be authorized to exercise military force further than to prevent or suppress the invasion of the territorial integrity of any of the member nations and in the blockade and embargo to enforce international law.

Eleventh. That it should be a violation of international law and the highest international crime for any nation on any alleged ground to invade the territorial limits of another nation. The penalty of such invasion should be immediate international blockade of the invading nation, embargo on all mail, express, and freight to or from such nation, and the suppression of such invasion by the international army and navy.

Twelfth. That nations backward in education, industrial and economic development, and in the knowledge of the principles of government should have their rights safeguarded on the principles of freedom, humanity, and justice by international agreement, with a view to future self-government.

Thirteenth. It is clearly realized that the program of progressive disarmament or permanent world peace is impossible of attainment until the military forces now ruling the Teutonic people, first, either voluntarily acquiesce in progressive disarmament and international justice as the basis of world peace; second, are forced to do so by the Teutonic people; or, third, are coerced to do so by the combined powers of the world.

Fourteenth. That in order to bring this war to an early termination, the belligerent nations opposing the Teutonic powers should immediately cohere on a plan of international government pledging justice and peace to all member nations and the coercion of the military autocracy of Prussia by the commercial, financial, military, and naval forces of the world, giving assurance, nevertheless, to the Governments of Germany and Austria of their willingness to admit the Teutonic powers as members of the proposed international union on equal terms with other nations when they shall have met the conditions and given satisfactory guaranties.

Fifteenth. In our opinion no reliance should be placed upon the vague suggestions of peace of the Teutonic military autocracy, but that their obscure proposals should be regarded merely as a military ruse. The peace resolution of the Reichstag, while promising well for the attitude of the German people, when they achieve self-government, can not at present be regarded as a proposal binding on or capable of enforcement by the German people, because they do not control their own Government, but are mere subjects and puppets of a military autocracy which has long conspired and still dreams of conquering the world by military force and terrorism. The United States and the nations opposing militarism should strenuously prosecute the war with every available resource, and no separate peace should be made by any of them until the menace of the military autocracy of Germany is removed.

Sixteenth. It is our opinion that if a world-wide agreement can be established on the above principles, and the men now engaged in slaughter and destructive activities can be returned to productive industry, the world could quickly recover the gigantic shock of the present war and would be able without serious difficulty to soon repair the material injuries and losses already suffered.

Seventeenth. The United States does not enter this war for material advantage, for any selfish purpose, or to gratify either malice or ambition. The United States will not approve forcible annexations or mere punitive indemnities, but it will approve a free Poland, the restoration of territory wrongfully taken from France and Italy, and restorative indemnity to Belgium and Serbia, and the adjustment of other differences by international conferences. It will favor extending international credits for the restoration of all places made waste by war. The United States enters this war in self-defense; to protect its own citizens and the nations of the world in their present and future rights to life and liberty on land and sea. It does not wish the world to remain an armed camp.

Eighteenth. No peace is desirable until the world can be safeguarded against a repetition of the present war. Competitive armaments must be ended and replaced by international cooperative armaments in order to assure permanent world peace.

Nineteenth. That the President of the United States shall immediately submit the above resolution to the belligerent nations now defending themselves against Prussian military autocracy and invite them and all neutral nations by wire to an international convention for the purpose of considering the above principles and taking affirmative action for the early suppression of the Teutonic military autocratic conspiracy by the combined commercial, financial, military, and naval powers of all nations.

Twentieth. The sum of $400,000 is hereby appropriated to meet the cost of promoting such convention.

—

Senate concurrent resolution 17.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), The United States declared a state of war existing between the Imperial Government of Germany and the Imperial and Royal Government of Austria and the United States because of their repeated willful violations of the rights of the people of the United States under the acknowledged principles of international law; the sinking of unarmed merchant vessels and of hospital and Red Cross ships; the destruction of the lives of unoffending American citizens on their lawful business on the high seas on many occasions; filling the United States with spies and secret agents; conspiring the wholesale destruction of American industries by arson, by explosions, and murder; systematically promoting sedition and treason among our citizens, and the criminal violation of our laws by the German and Austrian aliens residing in the United States; endeavoring to incite the hostility and aversion of other nations against the United States, and to persuade Mexico and Japan to make war upon the United States, and many other wrongful acts contrary to the laws of nations and in violation of justice and of humanity; and for the further reason that it had finally become known to the United States from indisputable evidence that the military masters of Germany and Austria had deliberately and secretly conspired to bring about an elaborately prepared offensive war by which and through which they intended, first, to dominate Europe, nation by nation, and then to dominate the other unprepared nations of the earth and establish a military world dominion.

For many years past the governing powers of Germany and Austria have by world-wide intrigue carried on a systematic attempt to disorganize public opinion in the United States and in the other nations of the world for the purpose of breaking down the powers of resistance of other nations against this conspiracy for world dominion by exciting nation against nation and internal disorders among the nations that might oppose this sinister design.

The United States has not forgotten that the military rulers of Germany and Austria deliberately prevented international agreements at the various Hague conventions for arbitration of international differences, abatement of armaments, and world peace.

The United States recognizes this war as an offensive war of the completely prepared German and Austrian military autocracies against the unsuspecting and inadequately prepared democracies of the world in pursuance of the policy laid down in the first and second articles of the secret treaty of Verona of November 22, 1822, in which the autocratic rulers of Prussia and Austria solemnly pledged their powers to each other to overthrow all "representative" governments on earth, the consummation of which design the Prussian and Austrian autocratic group has steadily and secretly kept in view, and that this war had for its objects the premeditated slaughter and robbery of the innocent peoples of other nations for the sordid and base purposes of annexation, indemnity, robbery, and commercial profit by military force and terrorism and ultimate world dominion.

The United States finally recognized the unavoidable necessity of meeting the forces of this military conspiracy on the battle fields of Europe in order to prevent the military rulers of Germany and Austria succeeding in the first step of mastering Europe as a means to mastering and robbing America.

The United States can not be deceived by those military leaders of Germany and Austria who now, before their own people, pretend to be waging a war of defense and to desire an honorable peace, but whose every act has clearly demonstrated to the whole world that they deliberately planned and are still persisting in this unspeakably brutal war, with their sinister purposes unchanged, and which they are still attempting to carry out by terrorism, intrigue, and systematic falsehood and deceit at home and abroad.

The United States can not confide in any statement or promise emanating from such a perfidious source until the German and Austrian people in fact and in sober truth can control the conduct of their agents and compel them to observe the rules of morality and good faith.

The unbounded ambition and deceit of the Prussian military autocrats are again exposed in shameless nakedness before the German and Austrian people, their allies, and the world at large in their present demands of annexation of adjacent Russian territory and other demands contemplating the domination of the Russian and Polish people, in flat violation of their own Reichstag's recent pledges against annexation and indemnity.

The United States feels for the Russian people the liveliest sympathy in their great losses in life and property at the hands of the German and Austrian autocrats, as well as their magnificent and glorious struggles in behalf of freedom and democratic world peace.

Having passed through many severe tests and trials in establishing popular government in America, the people of the United States, through their own directly elected representatives, desire to extend to the Russian people the cordial hand of fellowship in their new-found freedom and to assure their democratic brothers in Russia that we earnestly desire to render them, so far as possible, every assistance they may need and which they themselves desire.

The United States did not enter this war for material advantage or for any selfish purpose or to gratify either malice or ambition.

The United States will not approve of forcible annexations or mere punitive indemnities even on the misguided people of Austria or of Germany, but demands the complete evacuation of all territory invaded during the present war by the German and Austrian troops and the restoration and indemnity of Belgium, Serbia, Roumania, and Montenegro.

The United States believes that righting the wrong done to the French people by the Prussian Government in 1871 in the matter of Alsace-Lorraine will remove long-pending grievances due to previous military aggression and will promote future world peace.

The United States believes that a readjustment of the frontiers of Italy should be effected along clearly recognized lines of nationality; that an independent Polish state should be established over territory indisputably occupied by Polish people; that the peoples of Austria-Hungary, of the Balkans, and of the Ottoman Empire should have the right of autonomous development.

The United States will favor recognizing and protecting by an international alliance the territorial integrity of all nations, great and small; the maintenance of the right of unembarrassed self-determination of all nations, and the right of such nations to manage their own affairs by internal self-government; and safeguarding the rights of backward peoples by international agreement.

The United States will favor extending international credits for the restoration of all places made waste by war.

The United States will insist that the oceans and high seas and international waterways and canals shall be open on equal terms to the citizens of all nations; that all nations shall have the untaxed right of access to the sea of their goods in bond through any intervening territory to the seaports of other nations, with equal access to shipping facilities.

The United States will favor the removal, as far as possible, of all economic barriers and the establishment of equal trade conditions among all the nations of the world consenting to peace and associating themselves for its maintenance, without interfering with the right of any nation to govern its own imports and exports.

The United States will insist that adequate guaranties shall be given and taken to the end that national armaments on land and sea should be reduced to the lowest points consistent with domestic safety.

The United States will favor an open-minded and absolutely impartial adjustment of all colonial claims based upon a strict observance of the principle that in determining all such questions of sovereignty the interests of the populations concerned must have equal weight with the claims of the Governments whose titles are to be determined.

The United States recognizes that a general association of civilized nations must be formed under specific covenants for the purpose of affording mutual guaranties of political independence and territorial integrity to nations, great and small alike, and of maintaining world peace, and believes that under such a system dissatisfied peoples now held under subjection to dominating nations for strategical purposes could be safely given their liberty and autonomy as the rights of the dominant nation would be made safe by the general association of nations, and the subject nation would cease to be a coveted asset against future war.

The United States believes that under such general association of nations it should be a violation of international law and the highest international crime for any nation, on any alleged ground, to invade by military power the territorial limits of another nation, and that the penalty for such invasions should be the immediate international blockade of the invading and offending nation, an embargo on all mail, express, and freight to and from such nation, and the suppression of such invasion by the combined forces of the general association of nations organized for the protection of world peace.

The United States believes that all future international treaties should be made in the open, where all the world may know of the proceedings in the framing of such treaties, and that secret diplomacy and international intrigue should end.

The United States desires to be on friendly terms, political, commercial, and social, with the people of every nation, including those now under the control of the German and Austrian military autocracies, and to restore as speedily as possible these friendly relations with the German and Austrian people as soon as they organize a government responsible to the will of the people of Germany and Austria, and whenever they shall themselves demonstrate a willingness to deal with the other nations of the world on a basis of equality, justice, and humanity, and are willing to abandon the atrocious and detestable doctrine of making war for annexation, indemnity, and profit.

The United States entered this war to protect the rights of its own citizens to life and liberty, to protect its own future, to make the world safe from the future menace of military despotism, dynastic ambitions, or competing armaments, to establish permanent world peace on a basis of international justice, righteousness, and humanity, and, in cooperation with the self-governing belligerent nations, will maintain these principles, whatever the cost, with firmness and resolution until these ends are fully accomplished.

—

Joint resolution (S. J. Res. 153) requesting the President to invite the entente allies to declare the rules of international law and require the German Government to accept such rules under penalty of progressive international boycott, etc.

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States is hereby requested to invite Great Britain, France, Italy, and Japan and their allies in the present war brought upon them by the Hohenzollerns to enter into a treaty declaring the fundamental rules of international relationship and to bring to the knowledge of the commercial and financial interests now backing the Hohenzollern war that instead of profit out of this war they shall be visited with assured commercial and financial loss so long as they refuse to conform to the reasonable rules of international law and so long as they maintain militarism and defend the immoral doctrine that "might makes right" and deny to smaller nations the right to unembarrassed self-determination.

SEC. 2. That the fundamental principles of international relationship and of international law upon which the future peace of the world must depend are as follows:

Every civilized nation has the unquestionable right to exercise full powers of internal self-government, with exclusive control within its own territory over emigration, immigration, exports, and imports, and to complete unembarrassed territorial integrity, but no right to menace other nations by militarism.

That the oceans and high seas and international waterways should be absolutely free and open under international rules to the citizens of all nations recognizing international law.

That the right of access to the sea by shipment in bond without tax through intervening territory should be conceded to all nations recognizing international law.

That all international differences should be definitely and finally settled by arbitration, but no case questioning the validity of the fundamental rules of international law is justiciable.

That the invasion of the territorial integrity of one nation by another on any alleged ground is the highest of all international crimes, and any nation offending this law should be regarded by all civilized nations as an international outlaw.

That subordinate nations or colonies, backward in education and in industrial and economic development, should have their human rights safeguarded on the basis of the principles of freedom and justice by international agreement.

That Alsace-Lorraine, Terra Irredenta, and Poland should be assured unembarrassed self-determination under international agreement.

That Germany and Austria must immediately, under the rules of international law, evacuate all territory invaded by them during the present war and make full reparation to Belgium and Serbia.

That progressive reciprocal disarmament of the nations shall be agreed upon as an international rule of conduct to go into effect immediately after the termination of this war to an agreed basis of actual requirements for domestic and international police.

That an international police army and navy shall be established by international agreement after the termination of this war for the purpose of enforcing international law.

SEC. 3. That in order to remove the hope of profit and to establish the certainty of loss upon the commercial and financial forces now backing the German military machine in this war that the international agreement hereinbefore proposed shall further stipulate that if within 30 days after such international agreement be signed the German Government shall not by resolution of the Reichstag and by referendum of the German people agree to the above principles of international law, then and in that event the nations of the world now at war with Germany should solemnly pledge themselves by an irrevocable agreement to enforce the following commercial and financial stipulations until the Reichstag of Germany and the German people accept the proposed principles of international law, to wit:

STIPULATIONS OF BOYCOTT.

First. To refuse clearance to any of their vessels to any German port.

Second. To refuse entry to any of their ports of any vessel under the flag of Germany or a vessel under any other flag engaged directly or indirectly in trade with Germany or owned in whole or in part by any subject of Germany.

Third. To prohibit the exportation, direct or indirect, of any merchandise, goods, wares, raw materials, or other natural products, whether of domestic or foreign origin, to Germany.

Fourth. To refuse to permit the importation, direct or indirect, of any merchandise, goods, or wares, whether of domestic or foreign origin, from Germany.

Fifth. To prohibit the exportation, direct or indirect, to Germany of coin, bullion, or paper money, or securities, or any other form of indebtedness, or bills of exchange, or of other negotiable instruments, or of banking or commercial paper.

Sixth. To forbid any postal, telegraphic or telephonic, or express communication with Germany or with any person in Germany.

Seventh. To prohibit the transfer to their own nationals, either directly or indirectly, of any stocks, shares, mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness owned by a resident subject of Germany, and to confiscate all property, including patents and patent rights, owned in the entente allied countries by German subjects residing in Germany and use the same or the proceeds thereof as an indemnity to their own nationals owning property lost or confiscated in Germany.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the world has been brought to this unspeakably horrible war by reason of the fact that we had no established international law. We had merely precedents; we had merely practices; there was no actual existing international law, because a rule of conduct which is not enforceable before any tribunal or a rule of conduct which depends merely upon ethics amounts to practically no law, amounts to anarchy when you are face to face with an existing international armed military menace, such as the Teutonic empires presented, which defies and nullifies the so-called law.

The world has long felt the necessity for cooperation for mutual protection, and at various times at The Hague international conventions have been entered into looking to an end of military autocracy in the world. Many years ago it was proposed to have gradual disarmament and to have established at The Hague conventions by which international relationships should be clearly understood and made a matter of deliberate written agreement between the nations of the world. In every instance it was Germany, with its influence over Austria, Turkey, and Bulgaria, that prevented The Hague conventions providing for gradual disarmament and providing, therefore, a means by which the peoples of the various nations would govern themselves as progressive democracies. If military establishments had been disarmed under The Hague convention agreements Germany would not have been a menace to Europe, and the German people in that event would, in all human probability, have been an established parliamentary government; but now we are face to face with the question as to whether we shall organize the world for the lawful protection of our future peace or whether we shall leave ourselves unprotected by world agreements or by a world league. If we fail to do so, sometime we may perhaps be confronted with the organization of militarism in the Orient. A good many people live in the Orient; they are fatalists; they do not fear to die, and they might be organized into a military machine that would make the whole world tremble. The time to establish the doctrines of peace, of justice, of humanity, of mercy, is at hand, and this great Republic of ours ought to take a leading part in safeguarding the future of mankind and join other free nations in establishing an era of a thousand years of peace.

Such action does not involve giving up in any degree the sovereignty of the United States. No man suggesting a league of nations for the better protection of international relationships has ever suggested that any nation participating in such a league should give up its territorial integrity or internal sovereignty. On the contrary, the very purpose of the international league would be to make it an international high crime to invade the territorial integrity of any one of the member nations, great or small, and impose suitable penalties to prevent it.

It does not involve giving up to some foreign power the right to frame the tariff schedules of any one of the member nations or to interfere in internal affairs relating to immigration or emigration of any one of the member nations; but the internal affairs of every member nation would be, in any arrangement looking to an international league of nations, carefully safeguarded by the representatives of every nation party to it.

Every citizen, Mr. President, yields something of his right in order that he may have an orderly, peaceful relationship with other men. Counties do the same within the State; States do the same in their relation to each other in the Union of the 48 States; and nations, in establishing a league of nations, would give up something of their independence in order to be assured of a future measure of right, justice, and peace.

We want the seas to be free. Shall we rely upon our own Navy to make them free? Shall Great Britain rely upon its own navy to make them free? Shall one nation be competitive with another nation in building up, at great expense to the taxpayers, more and more gigantic armaments upon the sea, at a cost of hundreds of millions of dollars, with long-range, powerful guns? Shall we go on in competition with Great Britain as a builder of giant warships?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, am I to assume that the Senator from Oklahoma is opposed to our building any more battleships?

Mr. OWEN. I will answer that in due time. Are we to go on in a competitive system? If we have no international arrangement, we must go on in order to defend our rights. Is it not better for us to say at the peace table that we will abate our own shipbuilding program of these monsters of war by an agreement between the nations to have an international fleet available for the protection of the rules we lay down in common? We have now a three years' naval program, involving hundreds of millions of dollars, for the purpose of enlarging the great war fleet of the United States. Shall we stop building without any understanding? Shall we say to the workers in the shipyards, "Lay down your tools; make no more dreadnaughts or superdreadnaughts or torpedo boats," while we know that other nations could under those circumstances impose upon our rights as Germany did impose upon us with her submarines? Or shall we pursue the other alternative, of coming to an understanding at the peace table with the great free nations of the world whereby we would abate the building of these engines of war made to destroy human life as well as to protect human rights?

Mr. President, I am in favor of a league of nations; I approve what the President of the United States has said with regard to a league of nations; I approve of what Lloyd-George said yesterday with regard to it; and I approve what he said with regard to the establishment of peace.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I can readily see how Lloyd-George, being a member of the Liberal Party of Great Britain—and I presume now that the war is over that very likely the coalition Government of Great Britain will not last very long, for there is as sharp a division of opinion between the parties in Great Britain as there is between parties in the United States—I can readily see why a British free-trader, advocating a doctrine which is perhaps the central one of British policy, should eagerly grasp at the idea of a league of nations, one of whose principal aims is economic freedom between nations.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator and many of his colleagues——

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I add that if Great Britain could secure—I am not saying whether or not she can—but if Great Britain could secure as a consideration for going into this league of nations the power of such a league to regulate the United States tariffs she would be a great gainer by it.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the Senator and some of his colleagues continually come back to that ancient and venerable fetish with which they play so lovingly at all seasons, known as the protective tariff. I say to the Senator flatly that I am in accord with him on the protective tariff to the extent that it shall not exceed the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad. All I ask is that that principle in framing our laws shall be carried out with intellectual integrity. I will say more to the Senator—and I ask him to listen to this—that international debts are paid by "commodities," using the term to include services. Commodities pay for commodities. To the extent that we ship goods to other people, they must pay us in goods. They can not pay us in gold or credits except for the briefest possible space of time. They must retain their gold as a means of protecting their paper currency and their credits at home. They must maintain their per capita circulation, unless they want to have violent fluctuation of prices within their own borders. So that in the long run and through the years nations pay each other for commodities by commodities. Whatever we ship abroad is paid for by the things that people ship here from abroad, and in no other way.

We may give them temporary credit, but they will have to pay that back with interest, and they can not pay it back with interest in gold. They are obliged to pay it back with interest in "commodities." Therefore it follows with inexorable logic, from which no man with mental integrity dare to depart, that just to the extent to which we prevent imports into our country we prevent exports from our country and prevent our people from engaging in larger activities and in greater industrial development.

Mr. President, I approved Lloyd-George's great declaration—and I ask to insert it in the RECORD without reading—in which he demands a peace of justice, of humanity.

I am opposed to a peace of mere hard-hearted vengeance. But I agree also that those who have been guilty of the gigantic crime against the world of bringing about this war should be held to a strict personal account for high crimes against humanity, whether it be done by their own tribunals where justice may be assured, or be done by international military court-martial. But, Mr. President, we can not afford to deal with brutality and with absolute indifference to life with the people within the Teutonic Empires. We have all read the appeal which was made to Mrs. Woodrow Wilson this morning by the distressed women of Germany, calling attention to the fact that at least the poor women and the children of Germany were not responsible for the cataclysm of war which has deprived them of life and of everything they held dear. I think we would do well to listen to that call for food and for succor.

I ask, without reading, to put the letter of the German women into my remarks.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. KING in the chair). Does the Senator from Oklahoma yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. OWEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Before that is done, my recollection of that appeal is that it was that Mrs. Wilson should use her influence to secure a modification of the terms of the armistice. Does the Senator think that she should do that?

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, it is not necessary to change the purpose of the armistice in the least degree. The purpose of the armistice was to disarm the military autocracy that has made war on the world, and that end has been accomplished. But those same cars can be used under the authority of Marshal Foch to transport food from the fields to those who must have food or die without reenforcing the military machine of Germany.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, France has been so much closer to this war, and has played a so much larger part in it than the United States, and is so much more important in the present situation than the United States, that it would seem to me that she at least ought to be consulted about what is to be done with Germany, and that the appeal for modifications of the armistice, in all due respect to that great nation which has done so much for the world, ought to be addressed to France and to Great Britain, who fought the war for three years before the United States was in it.

Mr. OWEN. Oh, Mr. President, the United States is not going to take any action without the sympathetic cooperation of France and Great Britain. This appeal was made to the President of the United States because he was in a better position to have his eyes free from blood and tears than the men who have suffered the agonies of death in this great battle, and a suggestion coming from him would be entitled to receive consideration, and will receive it. I have no belief that Marshal Foch desires the death of the women and children of Germany. I know he does not. No great soldier would desire that, and Foch is unsurpassed in the annals of the world as a great military commander.

I ask, Mr. President, that the declaration of Lloyd-George and the letter of the German women to which I have referred may be printed in connection with my remarks, without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

Premier Lloyd-George made this announcement in an address to his liberal supporters on November 11:

"What are the principles on which that settlement is to be effected? Are we to lapse back into the old national rivalries, animosities, and competitive armaments, or are we to initiate the reign on earth of the Prince of Peace? It is the duty of liberalism to use its influence to insure that it shall be a reign of peace.

JUSTICE AND FAIR PLAY.

"What are conditions of peace? They must lead to a settlement which will be fundamentally just. No settlement that contravenes the principles of eternal justice will be a permanent one. The peace of 1871 imposed by Germany on France outraged all the principles of justice and fair play. Let us be warned by that example.

"We must not allow any sense of revenge, any spirit of greed, any grasping desire, to override the fundamental principles of righteousness. Vigorous attempts will be made to hector and bully the Government in an endeavor to make them depart from the strict principles of right and to satisfy some base, sordid, squalid ideas of vengeance and of avarice. We must relentlessly set our faces against that.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS NEEDED.

"The mandate of the Government at the forthcoming election will mean that the British delegation to the peace conference will be in favor of a just peace."

Discussing the question of a league of nations, the premier said that such a league would be more necessary now than ever. He pointed out that the conditions which prevailed in the Balkans before the war were now affecting practically two-thirds of Europe.

"A large number of small nations have been reborn in Europe," he continued. "And these will require a league of nations to protect them against the covetousness of ambitious and grasping neighbors. In my judgment a league of nations is absolutely essential to permanent peace.

NO PROGRESS WITHOUT PEACE.

"We shall go to the peace conference to guarantee that a league of nations is a reality. I am one of those who believe that without peace we can not have progress. A league of nations guarantees peace and guarantees also an all-round reduction of armaments, and that reduction of armaments is a guaranty that you can get rid of conscription here.

"Of course, we must have in this country an efficient army to police the empire; but I am looking forward to a condition of things, with the existence of a league of nations, under which conscription will not be necessary in any country."

BERLIN, November 12, 1918.

To Mrs. WOODROW WILSON,
White House, Washington, D. C.

MADAME: According to the terms of the armistice, Germany has to surrender a very large part of the rolling stock of her railways. At the same time she has to feed the troops of her former enemies in the occupied provinces of Germany. The German women and children have been starving for years. They will die from hunger by the millions if the terms of the armistice are not changed.

We need the rolling stock of the railways to bring food from the farms to the cities. It will be impossible to feed the soldiers of the occupying armies if we can not get large amounts of food from overseas. The women and children all the world over have been the innocent sufferers of this terrible war, but nowhere more than in Germany. Let it be through you, madame, to implore our sisters in the United States of America, who are mothers like ourselves, to ask their Government and the allied Governments to change the terms of the armistice so that the long suffering of the women and children of Germany may not end in unspeakable disaster.

For the National Council of Women of Germany.

GERTRUD BAEUMER.
ALICE SOLOMON.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the people of Germany are human beings, after all. They are fathers and mothers, sisters and brothers. They love and laugh and sing as well as hate, fight, and die. Under happier circumstances, as a free people, the good qualities God has planted in all men will develop in the German people. I believe justice and mercy should go hand in hand in dealing with the Germans. They have greatly sinned against the world. I do not in the least condone their conduct. They must make reparation, and we should require and help them to do it; but I can not help but remember the frailty of human nature, and that they also have been greatly sinned against. I can not help but remember what I know to be the historical fact, that since the days of the Elector of Brandenburg these people have not enjoyed free speech or liberty. They have not enjoyed a free press. The military powers in control of them as subject people—and you might as well call them slaves as subjects—the Hohenzollerns, have controlled the printing press, the magazines, the newspapers, the kindergartens, and the gymnasium schools and the universities. They have controlled the press, the platform, and the pulpit.

They have taught these people the doctrine of militarism, the doctrine of autocracy, the doctrine of divine right; that the emperor is synonymous with patriotism, synonymous with the fatherland, synonymous with love of country, synonymous with God and religion. Their minds have been poisoned, and they have been betrayed by the doctrine of militarism, schrecklicheit, "Deutschland uber alles," and so forth, and they are now going through a violent revulsion of feeling. Their kings and princes and dukes are running like rats from the wrath of the deceived German people. The Kaiser and Crown Prince have fled into Holland, where they are politely interned, awaiting the action of an international council. The German people—no longer subject—are trying to establish order; and they are in great danger now, during this violent intellectual and moral revolt, of going into complete anarchy and bolshevism.

We may think that it is none of our concern whether Germany goes into anarchy or bolshevism. The same kind of argument would say that we were not concerned in the bubonic plague in Europe, or in Asiatic cholera, or in the Spanish influenza abroad. We have had a dose of it recently which ought to be a gentle reminder that we are very much concerned. The meanest answer ever made to a question in all literature was the answer which Cain gave in the Garden after murdering his brother Abel: "Am I my brother's keeper?"

Mr. President, America has the opportunity of all the centuries to take the lead in establishing on earth the doctrines of humanity, of democracy, of the people's rule system of government. America has the opportunity of leading the way for all the world along the lines of orderly democratic government, where human industry can supply every human want, where all men and all women and all children shall be abundantly fed, abundantly clothed, well housed, and given a reasonable liberty to walk in the fields and look upon the flowers of the fields, and look into the sky and realize the truth that God reigns over all men, that men are brothers at last, and the children of "Our Father."

Under the blessings of liberty the German people will in due time make amends for the past, as far as human atonement is possible, and will prove that under happier conditions they will cherish free institutions, liberty, and humanity and morality as loyally as others who have had more favorable surroundings.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask leave to print as part of my remarks a brief editorial from the St. Paul Dispatch.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UTTERLY BEYOND BELIEF.

From Washington is wired the incredible statement that "the central powers," the President is said to hold, "should be treated as magnanimously by their conquerors as the South was treated by the North at the end of the Civil War." This is too monstrous for the belief that it emanated from the President, himself of southern antecedents. It would put the men of the South on a par with the unspeakable Hun. It would make Robert E. Lee and Stonewall Jackson rank with Ludendorff and Hindenburg. When the Civil War was ended the North, following the course of the great-hearted Lincoln, received the South back as erring and forgiven brothers, but as brothers. After all of the horrors indescribable, the wanton brutality, the extremity of barbarity that characterized German warfare for over four years, are we to grasp the bloody hand and kiss the foul cheeks of the Hun? "As the South was treated!" Did the men of the South bayonet babies, crucify children, sink hospital ships, and drop bombs upon Red Cross stations? It would be interesting to hear what the chivalric people of the South would say to a proposition that the conquered Hun is entitled to the same treatment that they received when the sound died away from the last shot in the lost cause. It is incredible that such a view should be held by President Wilson.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I had hoped to get a vote on the civil-service retirement bill to-day, but the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has asked that it go over until Monday, with the assurance that after he has made a speech on the subject he will no longer oppose a vote, and I am assured by various Senators that there will be no objection to a vote on Monday; so I am not going to insist on a vote this afternoon.

I therefore move——

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I do not now have any intention of opposing a vote on this bill on Monday, but I do not want to sit in silence in the face of a statement of that kind lest I might be bound by it. I have not had an opportunity to fully examine this bill. I hope to do so between now and Monday, and it may be that I shall have something to say upon it which will prevent a vote on that day.

Mr. McKELLAR. I trust not.

Mr. THOMAS. I want the Senator to understand that I do not now have any intention of doing so, but I want to reserve the right——

Mr. McKELLAR. Why, surely.

Mr. THOMAS. So that I can not be misunderstood by reason of my silence.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 10 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 18 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, November 18, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 15, 1918.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY.

CLASS 4.

Charles Henry Chapman, of San Francisco, Cal., to be a secretary of embassy or legation of class 4 of the United States of America.

ASSOCIATE JUSTICE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Percy M. Moir, of Virginia, to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands, vice Frederick C. Fisher, resigned.

ATTORNEY GENERAL OF PORTO RICO.

Howard L. Kern, of Iowa, to be attorney general of Porto Rico. (Reappointment.)

RECEIVERS OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Owen E. Thomas, of Montana, to be receiver of public moneys at Kalispell, Mont., his term of office having expired. (Reappointment.)

George G. Beams, of Nebraska, to be receiver of public moneys at Lincoln, Nebr., his term having expired. (Reappointment.)

COAST GUARD.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Coast Guard, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

William J. Keester,
Eugene A. Coffin,
John S. Baylis,
Charles G. Roemer,
Wilfred N. Derby,
Leo C. Mueller,
Clarence H. Dench,
William K. Scammell,
Roy A. Bothwell,
Wilmer H. Eberly,
Russell L. Lucas,
Stephen S. Yeandle,
Frederick A. Zscheuschler
Thomas S. Klinger,
Charles E. Anstett,
Henry G. Hemingway,
Jeremiah A. Starr, and
Joseph E. Stika.

First Lieut. of Engineers Herbert N. Perham to be captain of engineers in the Coast Guard, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918.

The following-named third lieutenants to be second lieutenants in the Coast Guard, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

George W. McKean and
John Trebes, jr.

Third Lieut. of Engineers John A. Curran to be second lieutenant of engineers, for temporary service, in the Coast Guard from the 21st day of September, 1918.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be first lieutenants.

First Lieut. Hugo Muench, jr., United States Army, from October 26, 1918.

First Lieut. Jarrett Matthew Huddleston, United States Army, from October 27, 1918.

First Lieut. George Eason Blue, United States Army, from October 28, 1918.

First Lieut. Earl Calvin Padgett, United States Army, from October 29, 1918.

First Lieut. David Oscar Nathaniel Lindberg, United States Army, from October 30, 1918.

First Lieut. Cecil Emerson Johnson, United States Army, from October 31, 1918.

First Lieut. Harry LeRoy Smith, United States Army, from November 1, 1918.

First Lieut. Carl Bearse, United States Army, from November 1, 1918.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS, BY PROMOTION, IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Arthur W. Stanley, from August 9, 1918.
Second Lieut. Harold E. Brailey, from August 21, 1918.
Second Lieut. Carleton Burgess, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Frederick H. Vandegrift, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Harry E. Dodge, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Charles F. Palmer, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Jay D. D. Marcellus, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Lewis D. Cooper, jr., from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Charles J. Davis, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. George W. Outland, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. John M. Moose, jr., from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Nelson R. Perry, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Innes Randolph, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Carl B. Byrd, from August 28, 1918.
Second Lieut. Thomas Brady, jr., from August 30, 1918.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Frank C. Delaney, from August 17, 1918.
Second Lieut. Pell W. Foster, jr., from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Kennedy Hassenzahl, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Arthur P. Patterson, from August 27, 1918.
Second Lieut. Robert P. Reynolds, from September 18, 1918.
Second Lieut. Philip G. Hodge, from September 25, 1918.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY.

To be lieutenant colonels.

Maj. John W. Barker, from August 27, 1918.

Maj. James P. Harbeson (subject to examination required by law), from September 18, 1918.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. John A. Hoogewerff to be a rear admiral in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1918.

Capt. Marbury Johnston to be a rear admiral in the Navy from the 28th day of November, 1918.

Lieut. Commander Fletcher L. Sheffield to be a commander in the Navy from the 18th day of January, 1918.

Lieut. Commander Louis Shane to be a commander in the Navy from the 20th day of March, 1918.

Ensign Merrill T. Kinne to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy from the 5th day of June, 1918.

Capt. Charles F. Hughes to be a rear admiral in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 11th day of October, 1918.

Commander Allen Buchanan to be a captain in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 11th day of October, 1918.

Lieut. William L. Wright to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of October, 1918.

Lieut. Hamilton V. Bryan to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 10th day of October, 1918.

Lieut. Elroy L. Vanderkloot to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 11th day of October, 1918.

Lieut. Wilbur J. Ruble to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 14th day of October, 1918.

Lieut. John R. Palmer to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of October, 1918.

The following-named naval constructors, with the rank of commander, to be naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of captain, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918:

Henry Williams and
Henry T. Wright.

The following-named naval constructors, with the rank of lieutenant commander, to be naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of commander, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918:

Alexander H. Van Keuren,
Roy W. Ryden,
Waldo P. Druley,
Paul H. Fretz,
Fred G. Coburn, and
Herbert S. Howard.

The following-named assistant naval constructors, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), to be assistant naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, for temporary service, from the 24th day of September, 1918:

Henry R. Oster,
William H. Hopkins, jr.,
Lawrence B. Richardson,
Homer N. Wallin,
William J. Malone,
Ralph S. McDowell, and
William C. Wade.

The following-named officers to be assistant naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service, from the 15th day of October, 1918:

Michael C. Faber,
William A. Nightingale,
Frank A. Saar, and
Garrison R. Arey.

Commander Frank H. Clark to be a captain in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1918.

Lieut. Commander Allen Buchanan to be a commander in the Navy from the 26th day of May, 1918.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1918:

Clarence L. Arnold and
Frederick L. Oliver.

Lieut. Commander John M. Enochs to be a commander in the Navy from the 23d day of July, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy from the 1st day of July, 1918:

Claude A. Bonvillian,
Herndon B. Kelly,
Hamilton F. Glover, and
George H. Bowdey.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 7th day of March, 1918:

Franklin S. Steinwachs,
James A. Logan, and
Richard P. Myers.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy from the 8th day of June, 1918:

Carleton H. Wright,
Schuyler Mills,
Carroll M. Hall,
John J. Brown,
James C. Monfort,
Lunsford L. Hunter,
Daniel E. Barbey,
Walter S. Haas, and
John P. Bowden.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy from the 5th day of June, 1918:

Homer H. H. Harrison,
James R. Kyle, jr., and
Albert R. Stephan.

Midshipman Herschel P. Cook to be an ensign in the Navy from the 7th day of June, 1918.

Boatswain Edmund Delavy to be a chief boatswain in the Navy from the 19th day of February, 1918.

Machinist John A. Ward to be a chief machinist in the Navy from the 17th day of January, 1918.

Lloyd C. McDonald, a citizen of Kansas, to be an assistant dental surgeon in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), from the 1st day of July, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Conrad Ridgely,
Edward O. McDonnell,
Walter S. De Lany,
Hans Ertz,
Hubert V. La Bombard,
Thomas M. Shock,
Robert P. Mohle,
Robert A. Lavender,
Walter S. Haas,
Aaron S. Merrill,
Charlie P. McFeaters,
George D. Hull, and
James E. Brenner.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 23d day of July, 1908:

William Seyford,
George E. Maynard,
Gottlieb Sherer,
Arthur B. McCrary, and
Axel Lindblad.

Lieut. (Junior Grade) Seldon L. Almon to be a lieutenant in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 26th day of July, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Thomas W. Mather and
Charles L. Poor, jr.

Ensign Stuyvesant Wainwright, jr., to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918.

The following-named warrant officers for temporary service to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of November, 1918:

William Pfeffer,
Benjamin V. Goepfert,
Lester E. Auger,
Charles R. Hoffecker,
Samuel A. Katz,
Walter G. Neal,
Edward G. Nolan,
Walter F. A. Dixon,
Edward A. Stein,
William R. Ross,
Scott E. Peck, and
Angus V. Chisholm.

The following-named enlisted men to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of November, 1918:

George E. Hummer,
Arnold Hanchett,
Charles F. Grisham,
William Hartenstein,
Leonard Sicer,
Henry L. Burmann,
Edward J. Tyrrell,
Virgil D. Duke,
Charlie S. East,
William C. Betzer,
Ralph E. Thomas,
Richard W. Thompson,
John H. Thomas,
James M. Haynes,
Jesse F. Cordes,
Joe R. Robson,
John S. Hawkins,
Erastus E. McClaine,
Reuben F. Davis, and
Charles H. Trask.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 15th day of September, 1918:

Mason E. Mitchell and
Albert T. Creightney.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 1st day of November, 1918:

Ervine R. Brown,
Charles Musil,
Forrest Ivanhoe,
Ray E. Snedaker,

Samuel L. Bates,
Clifton I. DuFilho,
George W. Davis,
Guild Bruda,
Chauncey J. Buckley,
Don M. Robinson,
Evans C. Sorenson,
Edwin E. Thiele,
Arthur C. Schroeder,
John T. Knox,
Robert R. Blaisdell,
Fred W. Lynch, jr.,
Charles Schaaf,
Edmund J. Flynn,
Louis F. Randall,
Ray W. Byrns,
Walter Wilson, jr.,
William W. Wise,
John T. Neighorn,
Guy E. Holmes,
Alvin S. Reid,
William D. Blaker,
Howard B. Stout,
Robert H. Lenson,
Arthur C. Wallen,
Edward F. Ney, and
Ernest C. Middleton.

The following-named citizens to be acting chaplains in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service, from the 17th day of October, 1918:

Carl W. Becker, a citizen of Montana,
William F. Blackard, a citizen of Tennessee,
Edward C. Boynton, a citizen of Massachusetts,
John A. McCarthy, a citizen of New Hampshire, and John R. Spann, a citizen of Texas.

Umphrey Lee, a citizen of Texas, to be an acting chaplain in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service, from the 23d day of October, 1918.

The following-named officers to be assistant naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), from the 23d day of September, 1918:

Henry R. Oster,
William H. Hopkins, jr.,
Lawrence B. Richardson,
Homer N. Wallin,
William J. Malone,
Ralph S. McDowell, and
William C. Wade.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 15, 1918.

POSTMASTERS.

MICHIGAN.

Charles C. Jackson, Algonac.
George H. Mitchell, Birmingham.
George H. Anklam, Pigeon.
Dorr A. Rosencrans, Reed City.
Noah C. Sutherland, Romeo.
Earl W. Eckfeld, Unionville.
Freeman Ware, White Pigeon.

NEW YORK.

Silas Springstead, Cobleskill.
William J. White, Livingston Manor.
Lawrence M. Kenney, Saugerties.

SENATE.

MONDAY, November 18, 1918.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, as we face the unsolved problems of to-day we ask for divine direction and blessing. We pray Thee to lay Thy hand upon master spirits in all nations, bringing them together under the inspiration of Thy truth and the guidance of Thy Spirit. Help them together to take counsel for the reestablishment of the brotherhood of nations and for the reign of the Prince of Peace. We pray that out of the concert of nations, the prayers of the people, the achievements of Christian civilization, there may come a new day, with all prosperity and blessing to the people who fear Thy name and keep Thy commandments. We ask it for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Vice President being absent the President pro tempore assumed the chair.

The Journal of the proceedings of Friday last was read and approved.

SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Mr. MOSES, of New Hampshire, which I ask may be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The credentials will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, GEORGE H. MOSES was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of New Hampshire a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term of the late JACOB H. GALLINGER, ending on the 3d day of March, 1921.

Witness: His excellency our governor, Henry W. Keyes, and our seal hereto affixed, at Concord, this 15th day of November, in the year of our Lord 1918.

[SEAL.] HENRY W. KEYES, Governor.

By the governor:
EDWIN C. BEAN, Secretary of State.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. MOSES is here, and I move that he be now sworn in.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have just conferred with one of the Senators on the other side, and I understood this matter would be taken up to-morrow. I think in view of the fact that this request is now made I ought to state to the Senate that some days ago a telegram came charging that there had been certain acts of corruption in connection with this election and that an application had been made for a recount. I have since been informed that the application for a recount has been granted, the application having been made under the New Hampshire statute to the secretary of state, and that a recount had been ordered to begin on the 9th of December.

Such correspondence as I have had on this subject I submitted to the Committee on Privileges and Elections on last Friday. I am not prepared now to say what the precedents require us to do, but since the meeting on Friday some additional letters have come containing certain affidavits charging corruption, and so forth, in the purchase of votes. It should be said that none of these affidavits bring the information home to Mr. MOSES, but under the circumstances I feel that probably his commission ought to be referred to the committee for a brief conference and let them determine what should be done in the matter. Personally I have no disposition to stand in the way of having Mr. MOSES sworn in if the committee feel that that should be done.

I may say that if the Senate approves my suggestion I feel it of the greatest importance that the committee should be called together at once, so that there may be quick action, to the end that Mr. MOSES may not be deprived of any of the privileges which he should have under the law.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the official count has been made by the State authorities. There is no provision for a recount in New Hampshire; the provision is for an inspection of the ballot, with a view to form the foundation of a contest. I take it that the Senator does not question the authenticity or regularity of the governor's certificate?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no; Mr. President, I assume that it is by authority.

Mr. LODGE. I was sure the Senator would not. It is regular in form and certifies that Mr. MOSES was elected in the form required by the Senate. Without question, he has therefore the prima facie right to a seat. In the House, as we know, the Clerk there makes up the roll according to the prima facie title. If there is a contest, it follows. This is the well-settled practice of the Senate, I think. It was certainly decided very clearly in the SMOOT case, when Mr. HOAR—made a statement to the effect that he (the chairman) understood the orderly and constitutional method of procedure in regard to administering the oath to newly elected Senators to be that when any gentleman brings with him or presents a credential consisting of the certificate of his due election from the executive of his State he is entitled to be sworn in, and that all questions relating to his qualification should be postponed and acted upon by the Senate afterwards.

His reasons for this procedure are here set forth, as follows:

"If there were any other procedure, the result would be that a third of the Senate might be kept out of their seats for an indefinite time on the presenting of objection without responsibility and never established before the Senate by any judicial inquiry. The result of that might be that a change in the political power of this Government which the people desired to accomplish would be indefinitely postponed." (Senate election cases from 1789 to 1913, p. 929.)

Mr. SMOOT, with the approval of the Senate, on that statement was thereupon sworn in. I have not been able to look at all the cases, but I am informed that it is almost an unbroken precedent. Of course if there is a contest, that is for the Senate to decide.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. LODGE. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. In order to bring the matter before the Senate, I move that the commission be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Mr. LODGE. I moved that the Senator elect be now sworn in, which is a motion of the highest privilege—I have looked at the authorities—and it must be disposed of.

Mr. POMERENE. Allow me to make a statement further in the matter. I want to say very candidly to the Senate that I know nothing about the facts in this case, save and except as they have come to me in the way I have indicated. I have the affidavits here with me of a certain kind. I think that the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to have the opportunity to go through these affidavits, to the end that they may determine what should be done.

I distinguish between the so-called Smoot case and the case at bar in this, that the question there was one as to the qualifications growing out of a certain political or religious belief, as I understand it. Here the question is as to whether or not the Senator elect who presents his credentials is entitled to the office, and the question is raised that there has been certain fraud in connection with his election. If the State authorities had taken no action with regard to it, then it seems to me the Senate should take a somewhat different view of it, but because of the fact that an application has been made for a recount and that application has been granted, and it is ordered to begin on the 9th day of December, my belief is that before we take final action the members of the Committee on Privileges and Elections should have an opportunity to counsel together with respect to this matter. I may state that if the matter should be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections I shall call the committee together at once and we can then determine what should be done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will ask the Senator if he can refer the Chair to any precedent for such a course?

Mr. POMERENE. Since this matter has come up I have not had the opportunity to investigate the precedents. I may say that I was waited upon by one of the Senators on the other side this morning and I was informed that the credentials were here, and it was suggested at that time by him that the matter should go over until to-morrow, so that we could have an opportunity to confer together. That is as far as I am cognizant of the matter.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. LODGE. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. This matter may come to a vote without a roll call, and therefore I should like briefly to state my view of the question.

I think the important question before the Senate in reference to the seating of a Senator is that the State from which he comes may have the representation of the people of that State; that they may have a voice in the Senate according to their own selection.

Mr. President, it seems to me very clear that if a Senator elect presents himself at the bar of the Senate and his credentials are in proper form, indicating that he has been the selection of his State for a seat in the Senate, that makes out a prima facie case that he is the man entitled to the seat, and nobody else is; and that it is the plain duty of the Senate at the earliest moment to administer the oath of office to the Senator elect and allow him to exercise his functions in this body. Of course if there is a contest of the election that is a matter that can come up afterwards. His taking the oath of office does not preclude a subsequent contest on the part of some one else.

If this rule was not followed and because a contest may be threatened a Senator is deprived of his right to take the oath of office when he presents his credentials, you might face a contingency here where one-third of the Senate would be prevented from acting because objection was made to their taking the oath of office when their credentials were presented.

I think that is the only question involved in the case, and so far as I know the universal precedent almost heretofore has been in accord with this proposition. There may be one or two exceptions, but they are exceptions growing out of other matters. I recall the exception of the Roberts case in the House, where Mr. Roberts presented his credentials to the House showing that he was duly elected, but on objection he was not allowed to take his seat because of some question growing out of his religion. However, there were a large number of men in the House at that time who refused to sustain that precedent because they contended then that the highest question involved was the right of the State to its representation in the bodies of Congress, and no one has the right to challenge the certificate of that State except in the way provided by law, and that is by a contest before the properly organized committees of the House.

I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to pardon me for occupying his time, but feeling that this question goes to the fundamental questions of government and the real and important question is as to the right of a people to representation on the floor of the Senate according to their own will, and as I understand the Senator who desires to be sworn in has presented credentials that are unquestioned, that are in due and proper form, it seems to me clearly that he ought to be allowed to take the oath of office at once, and then if anyone desires to contest his seat afterwards there will be full and ample opportunity to do so.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has stated my view of the general question, the view I held in the House, and have always held since. The precedents are overwhelmingly in favor of the procedure which the Senator from Alabama has outlined. For instance, there is the case of former Senator Morgan, a Senator from Alabama, and there are many others. A Senator comes to the bar and presents a certificate of unquestioned authenticity, regular in form. If there is a contest or a reason for his being unseated, that follows his taking his seat and is in no way impaired by his doing so.

The danger of this other system is very great, Mr. President. I left it on the statement of Mr. Hoar, which I read; but if a man comes here with his credentials in due form—the credentials of the State by the governor—and we undertake to hold them up and discuss them on charges, charges may be brought, founded or baseless, against every Senator who comes here with a credential. It would not be confined to one case. You open the door for what would be a most dangerous and most obnoxious practice.

As I have said, I could go on and give other cases here—I have a number—but I thought it was fully decided by the Smoot case, where the statement was made which I have read; and in that case the investigation followed, which took a long time. I hope we shall not open the door to such a dangerous precedent as it would be to refuse to swear in a Senator who comes here with the proper credentials, unquestioned, authentic, regular in form, from the governor and duly constituted officials of the State. It was in that view I made the motion that Mr. MOSES be now sworn in.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, in the argument of the Senator from Massachusetts it is assumed that this commission is in regular form and that all preliminary conditions entitling a Senator to his seat exist. That is one of the very questions, it seems to me, which the Committee on Privileges and Elections ought to pass upon. I remember when I came to the Senate——

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will allow me, has the Senator compared the credentials in this case with the required form?

Mr. FLETCHER. I have not.

Mr. LODGE. Well, I have, and they are in regular form.

Mr. FLETCHER. I do not doubt that in the judgment of the Senator that is correct.

Mr. LODGE. I mean the credential is verbatim the same as the form furnished in the rule.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, when I came to the Senate there were 32 Members on this side of the Chamber, and the practice at that time was unbroken to refer credentials to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. I remember perfectly well when my credentials were presented that they were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections. It was accepted as a matter of course that that committee should pass upon the question as to whether or not the credentials were in proper form.

Now, the suggestion is made by the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections that there are reasons why this commission should go to that committee. I am not advised as to those reasons, nor am I advised as to the character of these credentials, whether or not they do comply with the requirements of the rules and the law. Those are matters which the committee should pass upon. It may be that the Senator from Massachusetts is entirely correct and that the credentials are in due form; that they are correctly certified, and all that sort of thing; but it may be that there is a question about that. At any rate, the Committee on Privileges and Elections has for its function the determining of those very questions, and it seems to me the regular practice heretofore pursued—pursued all the time, so far as I am advised, when the other side had a majority in this Chamber, with unbroken and continued regularity, that credentials presented were referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections—should be now pursued.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I have no desire to do anything at this time which is not warranted by the rules of the Senate and by precedents which have been established.

There is a great deal in the argument of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] which at first blush is unanswerable. As a general proposition there can be no question that the course which the Senator suggests is the one which should be pursued.

It is too much, however, Mr. President, to say that the precedents referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts are without exception or that the unbroken custom of the Senate has been, whenever a certificate in due form has been presented, to at once swear in the Member presenting such credentials. There is a historic precedent, doubtless growing out of the fevered political condition of that time, which is furnished in the case of William Pitt Kellogg, of Louisiana, whose credentials, if I remember correctly, were entirely regular, but whose seat was vigorously contested for months, the Senator being finally sworn in by a bare majority vote. In the Book of Precedents, on page 398, I find this statement of date February 17, 1865:

Mr. Willey presented the credentials of the Hon. Joseph Segar, elected a Senator by the legislature of the State of Virginia to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of the Hon. Lemuel J. Bowden; which were read.

A motion was made by Mr. Sumner that the credentials be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

On motion by Mr. Howard to amend the motion of Mr. Sumner by adding thereto the words "and that the committee be instructed to inquire and report upon the election, returns, and qualifications of the claimant,"

After debate,

On motion by Mr. Sherman that the credentials lie on the table,

Mr. McDougall raised a question of order, to wit: That the subject under consideration being a question of privilege, affecting the organization of the Senate, the motion to lie on the table, which precluded debate, was not in order.

The President pro tempore (Daniel Clark) decided that a question of privilege, when brought before the Senate for its action, was subject, like other questions, to such motion as any Senator may think proper to submit; and decided that the motion of Mr. Sherman was in order.

From this decision Mr. McDougall appealed.

The decision of the Chair was, however, sustained. There are doubtless other instances, Mr. President, in which motions to refer credentials to the appropriate committee have been made, have been considered, and have been granted.

I understand that the motion of the chairman of the Committee on Privileges and Elections is that, owing to certain representations made, and of which he has given an intimation, these credentials be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, which would be immediately called together for the purpose of considering them. In my judgment that motion is not only entirely appropriate, but in view of what the Senator has said he would be remiss in his duty if he did not press the motion upon the consideration of the Senate, there being, of course, no disposition—I assume that, at least—to delay consideration of the matter in the slightest, and giving to the subject such due diligence as its importance requires.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if there is any question raised as to the regularity of the certificate, if any Senator will rise in his seat and say that the certificate is not regular in its form, is not duly authenticated, then, in my opinion, that question ought to go to the Committee on Privileges and Elections because of the dispute as to the certificate; but——

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. REED. I think, if the Senator will let me finish my sentence, he will perhaps not desire to interrupt. But I understand no such question is raised; and if no such question is raised then we have this kind of a case: A man comes to the Senate with a certificate from the governor of his State in due and regular form. No one challenges the validity of the certificate. If that is the case, what is to be gained by sending it to the Committee on Privileges and Elections? Clearly nothing in the matter of passing upon the form of the certificate, for that is admitted to be right. There remains, therefore, only one other thing the committee could do, and that would be to institute a challenge to the election itself; in a word, the committee would be obliged to start an election contest, and while the election contest was pending to deny a seat to a man who had a certificate in due and proper form.

It is not, as I understand, the custom of Congress, when a man presents himself in either House with a certificate in proper form, to deny him his seat pending the contest. If, then, we were to refer this matter to the committee, what is to be gained by it? The certificate is in proper form; that is admitted. Do we propose to keep this man from his seat while the Committee on Privileges and Elections institutes an inquiry as to whether or not an election contest ought to be started, and then to keep him from his seat during all of the contest, for all the weeks or months that that contest might proceed? If that course is to be followed in this case, then it can be followed in all other cases; and if it is followed in all other cases, as was so well said by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], one-third of the Senate might be kept from their seats and business of the greatest importance might be transacted while representatives of one-third of the States of the Union were deprived of the opportunity to sit in this Chamber.

It seems to me, therefore, that the better practice is at once to permit the swearing in of any man who comes here with a certificate the regularity of which is not challenged, and then, if a contest is instituted, let that question be tried; but in the meantime the State should not be deprived of its representation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I think from what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has stated that there can be no question about the regularity of the form of the certificate. I have no desire to interfere with the Senator elect being qualified, if that is thought to be the judgment of the Senate; but I did feel that it was my duty to call these matters to the attention of the Senate, so that they could be before the body prior to any action, if they desired to take any action, with respect to it.

I realize very fully that if the question is one of fraud, that is a matter that must be investigated. The thought that raised some doubt in my mind was the fact that a recount had already been ordered, and I was disposed to think that, as a matter of orderly procedure, perhaps we ought to wait until that had been completed. However, if the Senate feels differently about it, this matter can be investigated later; and, so far as I am personally concerned, I withdraw my objection to the Senator elect being qualified.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, the question of the form of the certificate must be passed on by some authority of this body. I assume from what the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has said that the form is in due and ancient order; but the question of whether it is or not does not lie with any individual Senator of this body, but that question should be passed upon in due order by the proper committee of this body that would have such a matter come before it. That committee has been the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

With the observations made by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] I am in accord, but I do think the orderly procedure is to have this matter go before the Committee on Privileges and Elections and have a report made to this body that the certificate is in due order; and until that matter has been before the committee I do not think that this body should be troubled with the consideration of it.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if there were nothing involved in the matter now before us except the suggestion that there was fraud in the election, I do not see how there could be any very extensive diversity of opinion concerning the justice of administering the oath to the Member who presents himself, for, notwithstanding that suggestion, that would be simply a ground for a contest of his election. But the suggestion goes further than that. It is represented, as I understand, that pursuant to the laws of New Hampshire, an application has been made for a recount of the vote, and that that proceeding is now in progress.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. WALSH. If I am in error about that, I should be very glad to be corrected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. LODGE. There is no provision for a recount under the law of the State of New Hampshire. After the official count is made, all that can be done is to ask for an inspection of the ballots, with a view to the foundation of a contest; but there is no provision for a recount.

Mr. WALSH. I assume, as a matter of course, because of the positive manner in which the Senator from Massachusetts speaks, that he is fully advised about that——

Mr. LODGE. I am advised.

Mr. WALSH. But the information that came to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, as I understood the chairman, was to the effect——

Mr. LODGE. I am advised by the sitting Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. DREW, that I have stated the law correctly.

Mr. WALSH. Well, I should like to see that statute. It ought not to be difficult to get it for the advice of the Senate.

However, I was going to remark, Mr. President, that under the statutes of many States provision is made, upon the demand of anyone directly interested, for a recount of the vote. Such a statute exists in the State of Rhode Island, for instance, and I believe in other New England States, and I was under the impression, from the information that came to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that a similar statute existed in the State of New Hampshire. Now, it occurs to me that under a law of that character the actual work of canvassing the returns is not complete until the recount is had, if proceedings to that end have been initiated and are progressing, because that would naturally interrupt the effect of the original certification just the same as a motion for a new trial would ordinarily interrupt the effect of a judgment in a proceeding in court. Of course, if I am in error about that, then the suggestion has no force.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator whether he thinks his observation would be true in any case where the statute of a State provided that a certificate might be issued, even though there might be provision for a subsequent recount?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, if the statute provides that its force and effect should not be disturbed by the other provision, I would, of course, say that it had lost none of its efficacy.

Mr. LENROOT. But in the absence of any such provision——

Mr. WALSH. But if the statute of a State provided for the original canvassing of the returns and then the issuance of a certificate, and then provided that a recount might be had within a certain limited time upon taking the proper steps, I would then say that the legal force and effect of that would be to suspend the operation of the certificate. It seems to me that no other conclusion can be justly reached from such a statute as that; because of what significance is it? Suppose now that the Member here tenders a certificate in regular and due form, then a recount is had, and it is discovered by the recount that he really is not elected a Member from his State, and a certificate issues to another person. Meanwhile, he is sworn in as a Member of this body. In what situation are we? Here are two Members with two certificates. This Member is seated. Is it essential that the new Member institute a contest against the sitting Member, and have that contest referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and that the rightful Member be excluded until the committee reports? I can not believe that that is correct? So it occurs to me that the question that confronts us is, What is the statute of the State of New Hampshire concerning the matter of the recount?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, in the case the Senator supposes, it would be impossible for there to be two certificates. It is unthinkable that the statutes of any State would authorize the issuance of a second certificate unless provision had been made for the cancellation of the first; and if the first had been canceled, and it was presented to this body in connection with the presentation of a second one, would it not be in the same situation as if he had presented it originally?

Mr. WALSH. I do not see any necessity for a provision for cancellation; but whether there is or not, as a matter of course the original certificate would be displaced by the proper official recital of the result of the recount.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the Senator referred to the law of New Hampshire. I have the statute here:

> The secretary, as soon as may be, shall lay all such returns before the governor and council, and the votes shall be examined and counted, and the election of the person having the largest number of votes declared and certified, and the certificate thereof made out and transmitted in the manner hereinbefore directed.

That has been done. There is no provision for any recount after the count of the State officers. The provision about inspection of ballots is simple:

> If any person for whom a vote was cast and recorded for any office at a biennial election, before the expiration of 90 days, shall apply in writing to the secretary of state for an inspection of the ballots given in for all persons for such office, and state in his application the names of the opposing candidates, the secretary of state shall appoint a time for the inspection not earlier than 15 days after the receipt of the application. Such inspection shall take place in the statehouse, and the secretary shall order the applicant to give notice thereof by giving to each of the opposing candidates, or leaving at his place of abode, a copy of the application and order of notice seven days at least prior to the day so appointed for inspection of the ballots. No other notice shall be required.

It is a mere right of inspection; and to-day in New Hampshire there are cases among the State officers where men have the certificates, and will take their seats, where the inspection of ballots has been ordered. The inspection carries with it no power to change the count.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, a copy of the statute has been placed in my hands, and I find it to be in substantial accord with the statement made by the Senator from Massachusetts. There seems to be no provision whatever for any further official act with reference to the determination of the result. It simply provides for an inspection of the ballots, which might become the foundation of a contest.

Mr. LODGE. With a view to the foundation of a contest.

Mr. WALSH. Apparently. So that there appears to be no reason, so far as the statute is concerned, why the oath should not be administered to the Member.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion of the Senator from Massachusetts is that Hon. GEORGE H. MOSES, who is properly certified in accordance with the formal resolution of the Senate, which will be found on page 8 of the standing rules, giving the form of such certificate, shall be now sworn in as a Senator from New Hampshire. [Putting the question.] The "ayes" have it, and the Senator elect will present himself at the desk.

Mr. MOSES was escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. LODGE, and, the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him, he took his seat in the Senate.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LODGE. I present certain resolutions of the New York section of the Society of Chemical Industry. I should like to have them printed in the RECORD without having them read. They are very brief and very important.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The resolutions are as follows:

> Whereas for many years the German Government has fostered the chemical and other "key industries" with the object of reducing other nations to dependency upon her and at the same time rendering herself independent of others and establishing industries which in time of war would give her an enormous advantage over those she was planning to attack and rob; and
>
> Whereas from the very beginning of her outrageous attack upon the civilized nations of the world Germany has pursued a deliberately organized course having for its object the permanent economic injury or destruction of other countries who had been her competitors in the world markets; and
>
> Whereas in pursuance of this course Germany has deliberately—
>
> First. Stolen and carried away whatever machinery she could.
>
> Second. Destroyed whatever machinery and property she could not steal or carry away.
>
> Third. Deported or destroyed communities of skilled artisans.
>
> Fourth. Murdered or by studied brutal ill treatment permanently injured prisoners of war and innocent civilians so as to deprive their countries of their skill and labor.
>
> And
>
> Whereas it is essential that the allied civilized nations must as a matter of self-protection render Germany impotent to do further harm from a commercial as well as from a military standpoint and prevent her, although defeated on the field of battle, from reaping a commercial triumph as the result of her deliberate wickedness above referred to: Therefore be it
>
> Resolved, That the New York section of the Society of Chemical Industry requests that the proper authorities of the various allied Governments take special note of the above facts and insist that Germany, where possible, be compelled to restore the stolen machinery and other property or replace the stolen property and also whatever machinery or property has been destroyed by equivalent machinery or property taken from German factories, and that they furthermore see to it that all allied industries are fairly and justly safeguarded under the ultimate terms of peace against the machinations of an insidious and conscienceless enemy, whose express intention is to reduce other nations to industrial subservience and dependence.

Mr. LODGE. I present a petition from the Selectmen of Provincetown, Mass., where the compact of the Mayflower was agreed to on the 11th of November, 1620 (old style), rejoicing that on that same date—November 11, 1918 (new style)—the signing of the armistice was announced to the United States. The petition is very short and I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

> PROVINCETOWN, MASS.,
> OFFICE OF THE SELECTMEN,
> November 11, 1918.
>
> Whereas on November 11, 1918, the town of Provincetown, Mass., did gratefully and solemnly observe the two hundred and ninety-eighth anniversary of the signing at Provincetown of the first constitution of American democracy, known as the Pilgrims' Compact, November 11, 1620 (old style), and did rejoice heartily that there was signed the armistice of peace that establishes democracy for the world November 11, 1918 (new style),
>
> It becomes a further duty to call attention to the Nation's equal obligation to honor these two great 11th days of November:
>
> Therefore it is requested that on its anniversary in the new style November 11, 1918, there be presented for public reading in the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States the Pilgrims' Compact.
>
> A. P. HANNUM,
> JAMES BIRAM,
> CHARLES N. ROGERS.
> Selectmen of Provincetown.
>
> COMPACT.
>
> In the name of God. Amen:
>
> We, whose names are underwritten, the loyal subjects of our dread sovereign, Lord King James, by the grace of God, of Great Britain, France, and Ireland, King, defender of the faith, etc., have undertaken for the glory of God and advancement of the Christian faith and the honor of our King and country a voyage to plant the first colony in the northern parts of Virginia, do by these presents solemnly and mutually, in the presence of God and one another, covenant and combine ourselves together in a civil body politic for the better ordering and preservation and furtherance of the ends aforesaid; and by virtue hereof do enact, constitute, and frame such just and equal laws, ordinances, acts, constitutions, and officers, from time to time, as shall be thought most meet and convenient for the general good of the colony; unto which we promise all due submission and obedience. In witness whereof we have hereunto subscribed our names at Cape Cod the 11th of November, in the year of the reign of our sovereign Lord King James of England, France, and Ireland, the eighteenth, and of Scotland the fifty-fourth, anno Domini, 1620.

Mr. KNOX presented a petition of sundry citizens of New Castle, Pa., praying for the adoption of an amendment to the Constitution to prohibit polygamy, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented a memorial of sundry citizens of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against the enactment of legislation to prohibit the sale of narcotics, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Allegheny County, Pa., praying for the substitution of the oath required of enlisted men for the oath required of officers, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

He also presented petitions of sundry citizens of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of legislation requiring the examination of practitioners of osteopathy for commissions in the Medical Reserve Corps of the Army, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. TOWNSEND presented a memorial of Richland Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Richland, Mich., and a memorial of Vine Grange, Patrons of Husbandry, of Tawas City, Mich., remonstrating against the continuance of the so-called postal-zone system, which were referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

PURCHASE OF METAL FOR MINOR COINAGE.

Mr. OWEN. From the Committee on Banking and Currency I report back favorably the bill (H. R. 12998) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes, and I submit a report (No. 609) thereon. The bill proposes to appropriate $400,000 for minor coinage, upon the recommendation of the Director of the Mint. I ask for the present consideration of this measure, as the coinage is much needed by the business of the country.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. SMOOT. Let the bill be read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill.

During the reading of the bill the Vice President resumed the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not object to the consideration of this bill, but I will object to the transaction of any other business until the morning business is concluded.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I object to the consideration of the bill until the conclusion of the morning business.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection being made, the bill will go to the calendar.

GOVERNMENT CONTRACTS.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4726) to prohibit "cost-plus" Government contracts and to prohibit the payment of commissions for the awarding of Government contracts, reported it without amendment.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED.

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. LODGE:

A bill (S. 5032) to regulate the sale of goods, wares, and merchandise in whole or in part the growth, product, or manufacture of Germany or Austria-Hungary; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CUMMINS:

A bill (S. 5033) to give to every soldier and sailor in the Army and Navy of the United States the uniform he is wearing at the time of his honorable discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. POINDEXTER:

A bill (S. 5034) to give officers and enlisted men of the Russian Railway Service Corps the same status and benefits as officers and enlisted men in the railway engineer's organizations of the United States Army; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HALE:

A bill (S. 5035) for the relief of William Sands; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PITTMAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 186) authorizing the President of the United States to cause to be struck bronze medals commemorating the winning of the world's war and the valor of our military forces and to distribute and present such medals to the officers and men of our land, sea, and air forces; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL PAGES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 333), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 184, agreed to on January 17, 1918, authorizing and directing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to employ three additional pages for the Senate Chamber at $2.75 per day each for a period lasting until the end of the present session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

COMMITTEE ON ECONOMY AND RETRENCHMENT.

Mr. GORE. I submit a resolution, and I ask that it lie on the table subject to call.

The resolution (S. Res. 334) was read and ordered to lie on the table, as follows:

Resolved, That a select committee on economy and retrenchment be, and hereby is, authorized and constituted to consist of the chairmen of of the Committee on Appropriations, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, Agriculture and Forestry, and Finance, and two other members of each of said committees to be designated by the chairman thereof.

It shall be the duty of the committee on economy and retrenchment to make a thorough investigation of all appropriations heretofore made and authorized in connection with the changed needs and requirements of the Government resulting from the change in the military situation, and to recommend such economies and reductions of expenditures as may be consistent with the efficiency of the public service.

The chairman and the clerk of the Committee on Appropriations shall act as chairman and clerk of such select committee. The committee on economy and retrenchment herein created is also empowered to collaborate with any like committee on behalf of the House of Representatives to effect all practical and proper retrenchment of public expenditures.

EXPORTS OF COTTON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I submit a resolution, which I ask to have read.

The resolution (S. Res. 336) was read as follows:

Whereas the authority to place an embargo on exports was stricken in the United States Senate from the original bill upon the ground that the embargo might be used to depress the price of our products but was subsequently restored upon the assurance that it would only be used to prevent products from reaching enemy countries; and

Whereas the war is now practically over, and no possible danger could arise from permitting cotton to go freely to Japan, Spain, Italy, France, Great Britain, Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden; and

Whereas any restriction upon the exportation of cotton is a serious injury to the cotton grower, to the merchants, and business men of one-fourth of the Union, in which cotton is the largest agricultural product, and to our entire Nation, which depends so largely upon the sale of cotton abroad to care for our international balances, and upon the part the cotton-growing States contribute to the commerce of our entire country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the War Trade Board is hereby directed to report, as early as possible, to the United States Senate to what extent the export of cotton is still being restricted, the reasons for such course, and the time within which restrictions as to shipments will be removed and cotton permitted to be exported without further hindrance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I shall not ask for the immediate consideration of the resolution, but I shall endeavor to call it up to-morrow morning for consideration, at which time I shall present facts that I consider extremely important to the Senators who support the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will lie over under the rule.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. FLETCHER submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 335), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution No. 198, agreed to on September 28, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 per month, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, until the end of the present session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

ANNIE V. HICKS.

Mr. CURTIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 337), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, from the miscellaneous items of the contingent funds of the Senate, to Annie V. Hicks, sister of John A. Hicks, late a laborer in the employ of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

REPORT OF CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION (H. DOC. NO. 1437, 65TH CONG., 3D SESS.).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, which was read, referred to the Committee on Civil Service and Retrenchment, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the act of Congress to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States approved January 16, 1883, I transmit herewith the Thirty-fifth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, 18 November, 1918.

NOTE.—Report accompanied similar message to the House of Representatives.

THE PARTITION OF TURKEY.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I ask to have printed in the RECORD a short memorandum, which has been sent to me by Mr. William Chandler, formerly a Member of the House of Representatives, in regard to the partition of Turkey. It is a very condensed and very useful memorandum, and I am sure Senators will be glad to examine it. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that order will be made.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE PARTITION OF TURKEY.

1. It is taken for granted that the Turkish Empire will cease to exist as at present constituted and be divided according to its several nationalities, with a possible further subdivision in the form of protectorates under certain of the allies.

2. The only real obstacle to this division is the Ottoman debt, held principally by British, French, and German subjects, and it is unthinkable that the civilized nations of the world can not devise some practical method for overcoming this obstacle. Possibly the separate newly formed States or protectorates might assume a pro rata share of the debt.

3. The real Ottoman Turks number less than 10,000,000, and are for the most part settled in Anatolia, a rich country, ample in size for their present needs, and also for their future development for years to come.

4. The Turkish population is most illiterate (the partially educated classes numbering less than 100,000) and capable only of performing agricultural labor, and possess few arts, the chief among them being rug making and brass work, but both of these are largely in the hands of Greeks and Armenians. They come originally of a pastoral and nomadic race, and have in five centuries only taken one step toward civilization; that is, they have stopped wandering and have become a people with a fixed abode.

5. Anatolia corresponds with what is called Asia Minor. If this whole territory is given to the Turks, they would possess a good port on the Black Sea, Bafra, and many on the Mediterranean shore. However, the Italians and Greeks would doubtless be allotted the principal cities on the coast (Smyrna among others), with a considerable hinterland. In Anatolia are several cities, such as Broussa (the ancient capital), Khonich, and Angora, quite ample to satisfy the urban population of the Turkish race.

6. Constantinople will doubtless become neutralized and placed under the protection of the allies, together with the Dardanelles. Adrianople, with the land lying between the Maritza River and the Black Sea, should be attached to Constantinople as hinterland and as a buffer against Bulgaria. The latter country's needs to a seaport on the Ægean Sea being satisfied by Dedeagatch.

7. The only civilized portion of Anatolia is the coast line, and this is peopled mostly by Greeks—some 500,000—who control the higher trades and professions other than those allied to religion. (The judiciary, such as it is, is closely linked to the priesthood in Mahometan countries.) The Greeks should be given ample opportunity to protect their interests, and many towns should be given them, beginning with Trebizond on the Black Sea.

8. Armenia should be erected into a self-governing community, and all Armenians scattered throughout the Turkish Empire should be induced to settle there, thus forming a Christian barrier between the Turks and the Mahometans of northern Persia (Kurds, etc.), and shutting off forever Turkish ambitions to influence their coreligionists in Afghanistan, Turkistan, etc.

9. Syria, with some of its seaports, should be put under the French, who have for many years had large interests and great influence there.

10. Palestine for the Hebrews. South of Palestine, extending to the fertile portions of Arabia (Yemen Shamar and Nejid), lies the Hedjaz, in which are situated the holy cities of the Islamic world—Mecca and Medina.

11. It has been the possessions of these shrines that has enabled the Turks to control the Arab tribes of Mesopotamia and Arabia, despite their undying hatred of the Turkish race and Government. In 1242 the Turks seized the Khalifat, or the representation of Mahomet on Earth (somewhat similar to the papacy in the Catholic Church), then held by a royal Arab family called Abbasides. The Turks assumed the religion and system of government of the Arabs as a political measure, and though professing the Islamic faith are in no sense a religious people and are in no degree in touch with the spiritual aspirations and conceptions of the Arabs, who are a highly endowed race intellectually, but have been crushed into almost insensibility by brutal Turkish methods of oppression.

12. There has been lately established a Kingdom of the Hedjaz, under the sovereignty of the Cherif of Mecca, an Arab of good family and great influence. He is lending his aid to the British in Palestine and welcomes the opportunity of throwing off the Turkish yoke and freeing his fellow Arabs and coreligionists throughout the world from the incubus of the Turkish influence. The possession of the holy places to this man's hands and his known sympathy with the allies renders it advisable to make him the medium of the restitution of the Khalifat or spiritual control to the Arabs, from whence it was wrested by the Turks. He or some member of his family should be made Khalifa.

13. Practically all of the allies have Mahometan subjects (the United States possess in the Moros a certain number) and are deeply interested in aiding the leaders of that religion into friendly and sympathetic paths.

14. The situation of Mecca, with its seaport Jiddah, is ideally central as to the geographical distribution of Mahometan people and is easily accessible of physical control, should this become necessary. The Kingdom of Hedjaz and Khalifat should be guaranteed by the allies, and all should have representatives at Jiddah. South of Hedjaz lies the fertile portion of Arabia, composed of Shamar and Nejid in the north and Yemen in the south. There are still a few Turkish troops in these localities, but the countries are each really controlled by a separate Arab ruler. These men by diplomacy and presents could be easily induced to acquiesce in the Khalifat being placed in the hands of the King of Hedjaz, in which case the rest of the Mahometan world would make no objection. One must never forget that Islam is an Arab religion and that these people are the only followers of that faith who actually understand it and believe thoroughly in it. Therefore Arabia will have to be consulted.

15. It is to be hoped that Great Britain will place no obstacles in the way of the transference of the Khalifat to the Hedjaz, though her ambitions will doubtless lead her to wish it placed in the hands of the Sultan of Egypt, their vassal. This would give her too much power in the Mahometan world.

16. It would be advisable to annex Shamar and Nejid to the Hedjaz, and this can be done. The British are at Aden and should have that part of Yemen which forms its hinterland. Italy undoubtedly should have a portion of Yemen, as it lies opposite to and not far from her possessions of Eretria (Massowah), and one of the ports, either Mocha or Hodeida, with some hinterland.

17. Mesopotamia naturally should rest under British control and should extend to the southern boundary of Armenia; also, of course, the Egyptian Government should extend to the frontiers of Palestine, in order to protect the Suez Canal.

18. The Turkish people are in such an impoverished and weakened condition that they will be led with little difficulty to accept the mandate of the allies. The defeat of the central powers will cut them, or rather their government, from all sources of supply, financial or otherwise, which have enabled them to continue the war, and peace will naturally arrive. The character of the new Sultan is little known, but it can hardly differ from that of his predecessors in degree of intelligence, for his lack of education is similar to theirs. The Government is practically in the hands of the Grand Vizier, Talaat, who is assisted by three men (Hakki Pacha, having recently died)—Enver, chief of staff and minister of war; Djemal Pacha, commanding the armies in the field against the British; and Djavid, the minister of finance.

19. These men, with Talaat as their chief, represent the party of union and progress or the Young Turk Party. They are hopelessly corrupt and are without the slightest pretension of possessing patriotism, though in the case of Talaat it is possible that ambition forces him to appear patriotic. Either they can be purchased to carry out the will of the allies or can be exiled and a more favorable government established. The present leaders are so hated that it will be an easy matter to remove them.

20. With the disbanding of the Army brigandage will become prevalent. The allies can suppress this, and when suppressed, even with the Turks in control of Anatolia, the old system of gendarmerie, under command of European officers, should be organized and maintained at the cost of the Turks until they prove themselves fit to govern.

21. Until the arrival of the Young Turks all Government services were managed by Greeks or Armenians—post and telegraph, railroads, etc. The Young Turks tried to employ their own race, but found them too ignorant. Once these people are settled in Anatolia and forced to lead a peaceful life, they will either be forced to become educated or to employ educated people to run their affairs. In either case progress will be made under civilized supervision.

22. Up to the present the principal interest of the United States in Turkey has been the protection of their schools and missionaries. With the break up of the Empire the above task will become easier and our commercial interests will increase by leaps and bounds.

23. It is worth considering whether it is not worth while to acquire a coaling station or trading base when the break up of the Empire occurs.

24. It is to the interest of the United States to watch the dismemberment of the Turkish Empire at every step, for unless it is done skillfully it will hold the germs of the future wars. It is not a difficult undertaking as the Empire lends itself readily to partition upon both geographical and racial lines.

25. The first step is the removal of the Khalifat, which is alone what enables the Turks to maintain the supremacy. So anxious are the Turks to retain this that lately a special secret mission has been established in Switzerland for the purpose of leading the allies to allow the Turks at least nominal control of the holy cities Mecca and Medina in order to maintain their spiritual supremacy.

INDEPENDENT POLISH STATE.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I offer the following Senate resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 338), as follows:

Resolved, That in the opinion of the Senate an independent Polish State should be erected which should include the territories inhabited by indisputably Polish populations, which should be assured a free and secure access to the sea and whose political and economic independence and territorial integrity should be guaranteed by international covenant.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the words of that resolution are identical with the words of point 13 used by the President in his 14 points. That statement is very brief and very explicit and I think it will be very well at this time for the Senate to join itself with the President in the statement on that point in regard to Poland.

The reason why I say that is this. You will observe that the President speaks of access to the sea. That access to the sea can only be at Danzig at the mouth of the Vistula. The Vistula is inhabited entirely along both banks by Poles, but Danzig is a German city and I have already seen attempts to say that as a German city they must continue to hold it and give certain rights to the Poles. The access to the sea that the Poles will get if Danzig is held will not be worth having. Guaranties can be given to the people of Danzig. I think nothing is more important than the President's proposition about access to the sea.

My other reason for offering and hoping the Senate will adopt the resolution is that I have information which I think good that there is a movement on foot, a strong movement, though underground, here and abroad to prevent the establishment of a strong independent Poland. They want to break it up for some reason and have a small State, with a German or a Hapsburg prince, and probably a small State with a republican form, but with tendencies to defeat it. I thought at this moment it would be well to show that the Senate is with the President in his statement in regard to what should be done for Poland, which was absolutely explicit.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would the Senator have any objection to having the resolution referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations for consideration this week?

Mr. LODGE. No; I will make no objection if the Senator wants to correct the President's words.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Not at all, but it is a matter of large importance.

Mr. LODGE. I have merely quoted the President's exact words.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it would be better to have it referred to the committee and permit a little consultation with the State Department before the Senate goes on record.

Mr. LODGE. If they are not ready to accept the President's words in the State Department, I think it is queer.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator is hardly justified in saying that, but the reading of a resolution is hardly sufficient warrant for the action of the Senate in a matter of as large importance and dignity; and if the Senator will consent to allow it to go to the committee——

Mr. LODGE. I have no objection to its going to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where I suppose it will be buried. I judge it is going to be buried there, but it is on record, and that is what I wanted.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I hope the Senator will not make an assumption of that sort. He is a member of the committee.

Mr. LODGE. I make no objection to its reference to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, speaking as a member of the committee, I wish to say that I am willing to meet to-morrow morning for the consideration of the resolution, and I am willing to stand by the President not only with regard to Poland, but with regard to the entire 14 propositions.

Mr. LODGE. If the Senator will add those, we will talk it over here in the Senate.

Mr. THOMAS. Should I do that the Senator would then insist on its going to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. LODGE. I am personally willing to discuss the 14 points here now or at any time.

Mr. BORAH. I wish to ask the Senator from Massachusetts if he would be willing to include in the resolution also point 1?

Mr. LODGE. About secret diplomacy?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. LODGE. That is hardly serious.

Mr. BORAH. I understand the Senator does not want to include it, but before a resolution including the 14 points, or any part of them, is passed upon by the Senate it will be a matter of serious consideration here in the Senate.

Mr. LODGE. I shall be very glad to have it seriously considered.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask that the resolution may be referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

AMENDMENT OF THE RULES.

Mr. NORRIS. I offer the resolution which I gave notice on Friday that I would offer to-day to amend the rules. I ask that it be read and referred to the Committee on Rules.

The resolution (S. Res. 339) was read and referred to the Committee on Rules, as follows:

Resolved, That Rule XXV of the standing rules of the Senate be amended by adding thereto a new paragraph, as follows:

"3. After the 4th day of March, 1919, any Senator who is chairman of the Committees on Appropriations, Finance, Foreign Relations, Interstate Commerce, Judiciary, Military Affairs, Naval Affairs, or Post Offices and Post Roads while holding such chairmanship shall not be a member of any of the other of said committees.

PURCHASE OF METAL FOR MINOR COINAGE.

Mr. OWEN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12998) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes reported by me this morning.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, of course I will not object to that motion, but this is Calendar Monday and surely we ought to have the calendar called on Calendar Monday. There are a number of bills which are relatively unimportant that ought to be disposed of, and the only opportunity there is to have these considered is when the calendar is called, because they are not of such crying and national importance as to cause them to be considered in any other way. I shall vote for the Senator's bill, but I hope we will not have any more motions like it.

Mr. OWEN. There is very urgent need for minor coin. No one has any objection to the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope the bill will be passed, but I wish that we might have the calendar on Calendar Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Oklahoma under the new rule is not in order.

Mr. OWEN. I should like to have the Chair state the new rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It provides:

That on Mondays the calendar shall be called under Rule VIII, and during the morning hour no motion shall be entertained to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject upon the calendar, except the motion to continue the consideration of a bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject against objection as provided in Rule VIII.

Mr. OWEN. I ask unanimous consent to dispose of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. OWEN. I offer an amendment on page 2.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 5, after the word "assay," insert a colon and the following proviso:

Provided, That the director shall purchase the silver metal needed for such coinage at not less than $1 per ounce, as required by law.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed, and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the conference report on House bill 11945, the agricultural stimulation bill, which provides for prohibition and a number of other things.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am not sure that it would be in order, under the rule, to move its consideration, but I bring it to the attention of the Senate and submit to the Chair whether the recent amendment to Rule VIII, providing for Calendar Monday, excludes a motion to consider a conference report. If so, we can reach it after 2 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I promised the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] and one or two other Senators if we would delay action until to-day I would bring the matter to the attention of the Senate at this time.

Mr. KENYON. I understood the promise of the Senator was that he would move to take it up, not to call attention to it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I will move to take it up if the Chair says it is in order. I submit to the Chair the question whether it would be in order, under the recent amendment to Rule VIII, providing for Calendar Monday?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The conference report is not on the calendar. It is on the table.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It is on the calendar under the head of "Bills in conference."

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is the rule:

The presentation of reports of committees of conference shall always be in order, except when the Journal is being read or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing; and when received the question of proceeding to the consideration of the report, if raised, shall be immediately put and shall be determined without debate.

Since that rule was enacted paragraph 3 of Rule VII has been adopted by the Senate, heretofore read—

That on Mondays the calendar shall be called under Rule VIII, and during the morning hour no motion shall be entertained to proceed to the consideration of any bill, resolution, report of committee, or other subject upon the calendar except the motion to continue the consideration of a bill, resolution, report of a committee, or other subject against objection as provided in Rule VIII.

The Chair is rather of the opinion that a conference report should not go to the calendar. It lies upon the table. In the opinion of the Chair, except when the Journal is being read, or a question of order or a motion to adjourn is pending, or while the Senate is dividing, a motion can be made to take it up, and it must be decided at once without debate. The Senator from Georgia moves that the Senate proceed to consideration of the conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate the conference report.

The report was read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11945) making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

The committee of conference have been unable to agree on the amendment of the Senate numbered 28.

T. P. GORE,
W. S. KENYON,
HOKE SMITH,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

A. S. LEVER,
E. S. CANDLER,
G. N. HAUGEN,
J. C. MCLAUGHLIN,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. KENYON. I move that the Senate recede from amendment numbered 28, commonly known as the Pomerene amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, before that motion is acted upon, I think the absence of a quorum should be suggested. I have given no public notice that this matter would come up at this time, and yet a number of Senators have spoken to me about asking when it would come up. I do not think it would be fair to the Senate to act without calling for a quorum and thus giving an opportunity to all to know what is before the Senate and to be present.

I wish to add that I have introduced a resolution providing for the extension of what is known as the Saulsbury resolution. I am not in favor of extending this resolution without some modification. I believe, to illustrate, that the provision which does not allow a man at the conclusion of a lease to take possession of his own house and occupy it unless he is a war worker is extreme and no longer reasonable. There have been owners of property who have been denied the privilege of coming back into their own houses in Washington because they had leased them to other parties, the owners not having been war workers. I think the resolution of extension should be modified by striking out the words "necessarily requires" and "bona fide" and striking out the words "whilst in the employ or officially connected with any branch of the Government." The owner of property who had rented and when the lease expired wanted to occupy his own house certainly ought not to be denied the privilege of occupying his own house because he was not a war worker.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator intend to try to put that modified resolution on this conference report——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. No.

Mr. SMOOT. Or is he just giving notice of what he intends to do?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I am calling attention to the fact that although I introduced the resolution to extend the Saulsbury resolution, I am not in favor of extending the resolution except with certain modifications. At the time I drew the resolution I did not have time to specify the modifications I deemed desirable. I wished to have the subject of rent profiteering pending before the Senate even if the Senate receded from the Pomerene amendment to the Agricultural bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I am glad the Senator is making the explanation, because I have received I do not know how many letters deploring the fact that the Senator had moved to extend the Saulsbury resolution. I answered every one in only one way, that the Senator from Georgia assured me that the resolution would be amended, and that he had it referred to the committee for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I expected to have the resolution extending the Saulsbury resolution with the modification in it ready to present. The resolution was prepared for me and sent to my desk as the Senate met and I found it was an entirely new resolution not referring to the Saulsbury resolution, using the substance of the Saulsbury resolution and changing it to meet the suggestions I have mentioned and certain other suggestions protecting a little more fully against the misconduct of tenants themselves. I believed it better to extend the Saulsbury resolution than to undertake new legislation.

I believe that perhaps the worst profiteering in the District has been by those who have made leases and obtained extortionate prices for subleases. I think there is more just cause for complaint on account of conduct of that character than any other.

Mr. REED. I should like to ask the Senator when the resolution will expire?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. With the proclamation of peace.

Mr. REED. If it is to expire with the proclamation of peace, why should we offer it at all, in view of the fact that we are now so much at peace that the orders are already being prepared to demobilize 1,700,000 troops in this country?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I misunderstood the Senator. The resolution I offer is an extension of the Saulsbury resolution, which expires with the peace. I propose to extend it in some modified form for six months.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator if he believes that Congress has any such constitutional right in a time of peace as to undertake to extend contracts made between landlords and tenants or to deny the due process of the law to the courts?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I believe that Congress has power over the subject in the District of Columbia for a limited length of time, growing out of war conditions and conditions that we ourselves have brought about by bringing to Washington large numbers of Government employees, and that Congress can control rents to a limited extent. I do not think we have the right to go now as far as the present resolution, and I have presented several modifications to it.

Mr. REED. The Senator from Georgia thinks the Constitution of the United States can be set aside to a limited extent?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think you can set aside the Constitution. I do not think you can set aside the Constitution under any circumstances, and I do not believe that in time of war you can set aside the Constitution of the United States without violating the fundamental law of the land.

Mr. REED. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. And such a course I regard as inexcusable.

Mr. REED. I am glad to hear that. Now, I should like to have the Senator, as a constitutional lawyer, tell me how the Congress of the United States can extend or alter the obligation of contracts between two individuals—taking property without due process of law—without denying to the citizen the equal protection of the law, and without, if he undertakes to effect a remedy, denying to the citizen due process of law?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the Senator from Missouri has finished, I desire to say that I decline to enter into a categorical discussion of the subject with him. For the present I have simply introduced the resolution to which I have referred, and it has gone to the Committee on the District of Columbia; it is not before the Senate at present for action. I was bringing to the attention of the Senate the fact that, although I introduced the resolution in general terms, I would favor, when it came back to the Senate, a modification of some of the provisions of the Saulsbury resolution, and did not mean to ask that the Saulsbury resolution be extended in its exact language. Beyond that I am unwilling to carry the discussion at the present time. I am sure that the modifications that I suggest are in the line of constitutional action which will meet the approval of the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I do not want to engage in a discussion of constitutional law, but I feel like saying just a word regarding the observations made by the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH]. One of his statements was that he did believe that Congress possessed these peculiar powers when it was dealing with conditions which grew out of the war, and which it, that is, Congress, had itself created. Of course, if Congress does not have the right to pass a certain statute at all it does not have the power to create a condition which will afford an excuse for passing a statute and then to pass it. The question is one of power. Absent the power to pass a law, a law can not be passed merely because the Congress has created a bad condition by the enactment of some other bad law. Neither is this question which we are about to discuss affected by degree of the invasion of the rights of the citizen, for if the Constitution of the United States gives to a citizen the protection of his property rights it gives him the protection of all of his property rights. You do escape violating the Constitution by the claim that you have only invaded the property rights 1 per cent or 10 per cent or 30 per cent. Such an invasion is as fatal as is the invasion of the whole of the citizen's property rights. If you can invade the property rights of a citizen 1 per cent, then you can invade them the 100 per cent, for the 1 per cent is as much a property right as the 100 per cent is a property right. There is no escape from that line of argument, in my opinion.

I am wondering—and I throw this in by way of preliminary to some things I am going to say a little later on—whether it is not about time for the rule of reason once more to obtain; whether we have not arrived at a time when sanity is once more to control in the councils of the world; whether it is not time for the cry, "Back to the Constitution," to be reraised and heeded; whether, of all times in the history of this country and of the world, it is not the duty of the American Congress to set an example of obedience to law and of reverence for the Constitution.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. REED. Gladly.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. In the first part of the Senator's remarks there was the suggestion that he referred to views which I entertain with reference to the Constitution and this legislation. I expressed no opinion so definite as to justify a statement of what my views were. I wish to repeat that my suggestion was a modification of the provisions of the Saulsbury resolution on the right of an owner of property to take possession of his property at the close of a lease. I am sure such a modification would be constitutional whether the original provision was or not. As to the original provision, I do not mean to express an opinion. The other suggestion I made was with reference to a sublease. I believe that in the District of Columbia, where we have entire legislative control, Congress can provide by legislation against subletting property. But I do not mean to say that I am prepared to sustain the constitutionality of such a provision if it is intended to apply to an existing contract.

Mr. REED. The Senator, I am glad to see, is apparently not far removed from the views I entertain.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I only make this statement lest what had occurred might be cited hereafter as an indication of a constitutional view which I do not entertain.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I want to make this observation in all seriousness to the few Members of the Senate who are present. The greatest menace to the world to-day is an uprising against law and order; not a mere uprising against a monarch, but the denial of all the fundamentals of law which must be a part of every civilized government and upon which civilization itself is dependent. The one great Republic in the world, aside from France—indeed, the only great Republic in the world that has furnished an example through the storms of more than a century to all the rest of the world—is the United States. It has given evidence of the fact that the people can rule themselves and rule according to law and constitutions.

Notwithstanding some remarks that were made on the floor of this body a few months ago to the effect that republics could not make war, it has been demonstrated that this Republic can make war. Now, I say that with governments falling all about us, and with the sinister visage of anarchy lifting itself in every land, with organizations that have for their basic principle the denial of all principle, of all law, and of all government, there never was a time in the history of this Nation or in the history of this world when it was so much the duty of lawmakers and of public servants to uphold the structure of honest government. To do that we must maintain inviolate the Constitution of this free people. Our example will be of incalculable benefit. Just so far as we dare to lay a finger of distrust or to strike a blow that injures the Constitution of the United States we destroy the faith of the people of the world in free institutions and we tend to encourage the evil, the unlearned, and the ignorant masses of other countries, who can not distinguish between license, rapine, and murder and lawful liberty.

So I hope that in the Senate we will be prepared to turn again to the Constitution of the fathers and to cease trifling with that instrument. I say without any hesitation that there is not a lawyer in the Senate who dares stand upon his feet and declare that at a time like this a law that proposes to annul contracts that have been made between private citizens with reference to their private property can be constitutional so long as there is nothing immoral or injurious to the public health or contrary to public policy in such contracts.

Mr. President, if the question which has been suggested by the Senator from Georgia is coming before the Senate, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is that a suggestion of the absence of a quorum?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator to withdraw his suggestion for a moment.

Mr. REED. Not having made it, I will not make it, if the Senator from Arizona desires to speak.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I crave just a moment. It is obvious that the pending matter will take some half hour or more. I am not feeling at the very best to-day and I wish to go home, but there is pending on the calendar a bill in which I am interested. The bill is of no national importance, and unless I can get it up on Calendar Monday I will probably never be able to secure its passage. I am going to make a very brief statement as to what the bill is and then I am going to ask the Senate to consider it for a moment.

In 1913 an act was passed providing an appropriation of $110,000 for a customhouse at Nogales, Ariz., and an additional appropriation of another $10,000 for a site for a post office; in other words, two sites were authorized. Two sites are not necessary, Mr. President, and, indeed, not proper, because if two sites were paid for and purchased inevitably there would be a clamor for two buildings, whereas one building and one site are sufficient.

I have in my hand a copy of a bill which has passed the House amending the act of 1913 and simply providing that there shall be one building and one site. This bill, if it could pass the Senate, would save ultimately about $100,000 to the Federal Government.

I will read a brief extract from the House committee's report:

> Briefly stated, the purpose of the bill is to consolidate two separate authorizations made for Nogales in the act of March 4, 1913, one providing for a customhouse and the other providing for the post office and other governmental offices. It is assumed that these two separate authorizations were inadvertently placed in the bill, which was passed and approved without the error being detected.

That is true, the two sites were authorized inadvertently. The legislation, to wit, Calendar No. 535, being Senate bill 282, repeals and amends the former legislation, so that there will be authorized but one site and one building instead of one building and two sites.

I do not wish to interrupt at this time the pending bill, and I will ask the Senator from Georgia to allow me to have five minutes in order that I may ask unanimous consent for the consideration of this bill, which will save $100,000, I think, in the future.

If it takes over two or three minutes, I will withdraw the request.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not now consider myself in charge of the pending matter. I have performed my agreement by bringing the subject up. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] are now in charge; and the motion pending is the motion of the Senator from Iowa, which heretofore I have been resisting, but now I am content that action by the Senate be had upon it.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, there are not many requests the Senator from Arizona could make that I would not be willing to accede to. Nevertheless, the Senator will find that as soon as his bill is up there will be interminable discussion upon it, because there is something behind the whole matter besides the Senator's bill.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, Mr. President, I will withdraw the request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, just a moment. We have been talking about billions; I have offered to the Senate an opportunity to save $100,000. Surely the Senate is not going to refuse to avail itself of this opportunity. We talk of economy, but at the very moment an opportunity is presented to save $100,000 is that opportunity to be passed by? Is our economy only to end in talk?

I withdraw the request at this time because there is nobody here more anxious for war-time and peace-time bone-dry prohibition than I am, with the understanding that when we act on the pending conference report we will take up the calendar. The reason I am so earnest about it is this: The Senate will adjourn to-day or to-morrow until December.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Oh, no.

Mr. ASHURST. Yes, sir; until December; and when it does adjourn and meets in December it will be utterly impossible to pass little bills of this sort.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why does the Senator say the Senate will adjourn on that day?

Mr. ASHURST. I know what I am talking about. I beg the Senator's pardon, but I know that we are going to adjourn until December, because I know it; that is all. I think we ought to pass all these bills which do not affect the Nation at large but which affect the Federal Treasury. I happen to be one of those who believe that economy should be something more than talk. The way to quit spending money is to stop spending it; that is the only way to economize.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator opposing the pending matter?

Mr. ASHURST. No; I am not opposing it; I am in favor of it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Hitchcock	Moses	Sherman
Baird	Johnson, Cal.	Myers	Simmons
Bankhead	Jones, N. Mex.	Nelson	Smith, Ga.
Beckham	Kellogg	Norris	Smith, Md.
Borah	Kendrick	Nugent	Smoot
Cummins	Kenyon	Overman	Sutherland
Curtis	King	Owen	Swanson
Dillingham	La Follette	Phelan	Thomas
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pittman	Trammell
France	Lewis	Poindexter	Vardaman
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Pomerene	Warren
Gerry	McCumber	Reed	Watson
Gore	McKellar	Saulsbury	Weeks
Hale	McLean	Shafroth
Harding	Martin, Va.	Sheppard

During the calling of the roll,

Mr. CURTIS (when the name of Mr. MARTIN of Kentucky was called). I desire to protest against the calling of the name of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. MARTIN]. We can pass on the question later on, if the Chair desires to let the matter go over until after the call.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is of the opinion that it is for the Senate to determine the qualifications of its own Members. It is not desirable to take up the question just now.

Mr. CURTIS. I think it had better go over until afterwards. I just wanted to file a protest. We can determine it later on.

After the roll had been called,

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is detained by illness.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I announce the absence of my colleague [Mr. GOFF] on account of illness.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-eight Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The pending question is the motion of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON] that the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 28.

The motion was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate recedes, and the bill is passed.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as the rules do not permit a motion at this time, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4947, to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes. I make this request on account of the extreme importance of this measure.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection?

Mr. ASHURST. I object, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Objection is made.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, ordinarily I would not object to the consideration of this most salutary piece of legislation, which I hope will pass; but Calendar Monday was set up, I repeat, to give an opportunity for the passage of bills that are relatively unimportant, that have no national importance, yet are proper, and should be passed. I feel that in good faith we ought to observe these Calendar Mondays. However salutary and however wise any proposed legislation may be, I feel constrained to object, and ask that we proceed with the calendar for the balance of the day under the Calendar Monday rule.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, my reason for making the request was that there is only 10 minutes left in which to call the calendar, and I did not think much could be done in that time.

Mr. FLETCHER. I call for the regular order.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask unanimous consent that for the balance of the afternoon we proceed with the calendar under Calendar Monday rule.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There is not any necessity for that. We will go ahead with the calendar under Rule VIII, if we can get a chance.

THE CALENDAR.

The first business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 39) to appropriate $3,000,000 to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to prosecute the work of eradicating the southern cattle tick.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 53) authorizing the President to appoint two additional Assistant Secretaries of Agriculture, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over

The bill (S. 1725) to stimulate the production of food upon private and public lands within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 91) extending the authority of and provision for the committee appointed under S. Res. 92, Sixty-third Congress, first session, to investigate the charges of alleged attempts to influence legislation was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. I ask that that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 10) authorizing the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the causes of the recent riots in East St. Louis, Ill., and to report thereon, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (H. J. Res. 200) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States extending the right of suffrage to women was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 12) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States providing for the election of President and Vice President without the intervention of the electoral college, establishing their term of office from the third Tuesday of January following their election, and fixing the time when the terms of Senators and Representatives shall begin was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. When a bill goes over, does it go under? [Laughter.]

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I want to say a word with reference to this measure, Senate joint resolution 12.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not in order. There is nothing before the Senate.

The bill (S. 23) granting to the State of Nevada 7,000,000 acres of land in said State for the use and benefit of the public schools of Nevada and the State university of the State of Nevada was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 90) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3311) to increase and expedite the supply of munitions of war was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 1795) to relieve Congress from the adjudication of private claims against the Government was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 951) to provide for the sinking of artesian wells, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 758) to increase the productive agricultural area of the United States by the reclamation of arid and swamp lands was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 132) to amend section 14 of the food-control act by increasing the guaranteed minimum price of wheat for the crop of 1918 from $2 to $2.50 per bushel was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 136) providing for the registration for military service of the subjects or citizens residing in the United States of a foreign country with whose Government the United States has concluded or hereafter concludes a convention or agreement consenting to such aliens being drafted into the military forces of the United States under the terms of the act approved May 18, 1917, entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," and all amendments thereto, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, that joint resolution may be indefinitely postponed. It has been included in other legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Florida moves that the joint resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 4185) to require the Commissioner of Education to devise methods and promote plans for the elimination of adult illiteracy in the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 39) to authorize the printing of 250,000 copies of the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, etc., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution will be passed over.

Mr. SMOOT subsequently said: Mr. President, referring to House concurrent resolution 39, to authorize the printing of 250,000 copies of the soldiers' and sailors' civil relief act, approved March 8, 1918, I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The bill (S. 3899) to repeal the sixth section of an act approved July 12, 1882, entitled "An act to enable national banking associations to extend their corporate existence, and for other purposes," was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (H. R. 10691) to amend section 5200 of the Revised Statutes as amended was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3893) to amend and reenact section 5239, Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3894) to amend and reenact section 5147, Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3896) to amend and reenact section 691a of chapter 18, subchapter 7, of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3897) to amend and reenact section 713 of chapter 18, subchapter 10, of the Code of Laws of the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3901) to authorize national banking associations to establish and maintain branches was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3903) to amend and reenact section 5137, Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3905) to amend and reenact section 5209 of the Revised Statutes of the United States was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3910) to prevent usury, provide penalties for its violation, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. OWEN. Mr. President, there are a number of those bills that have been reported by the Banking and Currency Committee which I have observed from time to time have been objected to as they came up. I do not believe there is any particular reason for the objection, but still the bills have been disposed of in that way. I merely rise to say that I regard this practice of disposing of the Calendar by unanimous consent as an ill-advised parliamentary practice.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator has overlooked one of the provisions of the rule. He can move to take up any one of these bills, if he wishes, right now.

Mr. OWEN. The time is so short now—there being only five minutes left—that I do not care to do that. I have no particular personal interest in these bills. They are bills the passage of which is desired by the Comptroller of the Currency.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is in error in saying that there is only five minutes left. This is Calendar Monday.

Mr. OWEN. I do not care to move to take them up. There is not time to discuss them.

The bill (S. 3904) to amend and reenact sections 5222 and 5230, Revised Statutes of the United States, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. 229) to request the Committee on Foreign Relations, to which was referred S. J. Res. 145, to give said resolution early consideration and report to the Senate thereon was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3907) to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from Oklahoma if that bill should not be indefinitely postponed? We passed a bill similar to this, but it was a House bill.

Mr. OWEN. I ask that it go over at present.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4426) to amend and reenact sections 5235 and 5236 of the Revised Statutes of the United States by providing for a guaranty fund for payment of certain deposits, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3172) to provide for the abandonment of Piney Branch Road between Allison Street and Buchanan Street NW., in the District of Columbia, was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3914) authorizing a right of way for the transportation of water for improvement of grazing and development of the live-stock industry upon public and national forest lands in Arizona was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has some objection to that bill. I will ask, therefore, that it go over, since he is not in the Chamber.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

EMMA H. RIDLEY.

The bill (S. 3944) for the relief of Emma H. Ridley was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes and directs the Secretary of the Treasury to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $3,000 to Emma H. Ridley, widow of Dr. George V. Ridley, who lost his life January 7, 1907, in the discharge of his duty in the Canal Zone while in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ETHEL PROCTOR.

The bill (S. 3258) for the relief of Ethel Proctor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, to strike out "$5,000" and insert "$2,100," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury of the United States not otherwise appropriated, to Ethel Proctor, widow of Almon R. Proctor, the sum of $2,100 to compensate her for the death of her husband on June 26, 1912, due to malarial poisoning contracted while in the discharge of his duty as sanitary inspector on the Panama Canal in the employ of the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee having this measure in charge, or having reported it, if there is not some general rule or general law to reach these cases; and if not, under what principle do they proceed to establish liability against the Government and reach the amounts which have been recommended in payment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. There seems to be nobody here to answer the Senator's question.

Mr. KING. I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3260) to remove the charge of desertion from the record of Wilbur F. Lawton was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

MANUSCRIPT OF CHARLES CHAILLE-LONG.

The bill (S. 3986) to acquire the manuscript of Charles Chaille-Long, containing an account of the unveiling of the McClellan Statue, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS and Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, may I ask who asked that that bill go over?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS].

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I have an opportunity to explain about it?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly; I will withhold the request for the present.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I was waiting here for the bill to be reached. I do not know whether the Senators know who Charles Chaille-Long was. He was a very gallant and distinguished officer, who did a great deal of work for this country, particularly in the Near East and in Egypt and on the upper Nile. This work which he did was authorized and requested of him.

Mr. THOMAS. By whom?

Mr. SAULSBURY. By the memorial committee having charge of the exercises; and he did it very well. He died. The bill has already passed the Senate. It passed it, I think, at the last session of the other Congress, and was sent over to the other House and failed because of lack of time to consider it. If I had thought the bill was coming up, I would have had here a description of the life and services of Charles Chaille-Long; but he was a very useful citizen of this country, and has represented the country in the Near East and in the Far East, in Korea, and in that vicinity, during the time of the troubles in Korea.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator for what purpose the information is desired which this gentleman has collated?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The memorial committee in regard to this statue asked him to prepare this account of the exercises, and he did it and did it very well.

Mr. THOMAS. Was that memorial committee an official body appointed by Congress?

Mr. SAULSBURY. I believe it was. I can not say. It certainly had authority over those matters, and he did the work pursuant to the authority that existed.

Mr. THOMAS. If this committee was one acting under the authority of Congress, and the work was done by its direction, I am not disposed to object.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I am not sure that the committee was authorized to have the memorial prepared. My impression is that it may not have been authorized; but they did, as a part of their duty, request that this literary work be done by Col. Charles Chaille-Long, who did it very well and who was a very proper person to do it.

Mr. THOMAS. I will withdraw my objection.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator, after acquiring the manuscript containing an account of the unveiling of the statue, where it will go when prepared.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It belongs to the Government. I think it has been furnished to the Library Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. I suppose the bill would state that, but I have not heard the bill read.

Mr. SAULSBURY. So far as I know it may have been delivered to the Library Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Have any of the departments of the Government requested that this manuscript be prepared?

Mr. SAULSBURY. The committee in charge of the memorial exercises requested Col. Charles Chaille-Long to prepare this literary document commemorative of those exercises.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, I do not know very much about the matter, although I do feel that it is embarking on a new scheme of expenditure of public money. It may be and it may not.

Mr. SAULSBURY. This matter has been considered several times by the Senate. I simply do not happen to have the data with me concerning it.

Mr. FLETCHER. The Senate committee says in its report that—

The committee is of the opinion that as the services for which the claim is made were authorized and directed by a Committee of the Library of a former Congress, and as the services were rendered, involving the expenditure of considerable time and labor on the part of the claimant, the amount asked for should be paid, and your committee recommend that the bill be passed.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Undoubtedly the services were performed pursuant to a supposedly proper request.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

ARMY MINE-PLANTER SERVICE.

The bill (H. R. 9898) to establish in the Coast Artillery Corps of the Regular Army an army mine-planter service was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, I think the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the unfinished business must be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is Calendar Monday, and we will go through the calendar.

Mr. FLETCHER. The bill just reached on the calendar has been incorporated in the Army bill. I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4459) to amend an act entitled "An act to authorize the President to increase temporarily the Military Establishment of the United States," approved May 18, 1917, was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 249, to print the article entitled "The Electoral College and presidential suffrage" as a Senate document.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 2933) for the relief of the Philippine Scouts.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4221) for the relief of private owners of lands within or near the Bitter Root National Forest, Mont., was next in order on the calendar.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

LAND OFFICE AT SPRINGFIELD, MO.

The bill (S. 2171) to abolish the United States land office at Springfield, Mo., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with an amendment, in line 4, to strike out the words "first day of July, 1917," and insert the words "date of this act," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the land office at Springfield, Mo., shall be, and is hereby, abolished from and after the date of this act; and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to transfer to the State of Missouri such of the transcripts, documents, and records of the office as are not required for the use of the United States and as the State may desire to preserve.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4366) to amend section 5 of an act entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1914, and for other purposes," approved June 23, 1913 (38 Stat. L., 4, 75), was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 3269) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of John H. Armstrong was announced as next in order.

Mr. FLETCHER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

MINIMUM WAGES FOR WOMEN AND MINOR WORKERS.

The bill (S. 4548) to protect the lives and health and morals of women and minor workers in the District of Columbia, and to establish a minimum wage board, and define its powers and duties, and to provide for the fixing of minimum wages for such workers, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed. A similar bill has heretofore passed the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1089) to amend and reenact an act for the establishment of a probation system for the District of Columbia was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 3379) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to exchange public coal lands for private coal lands in certain cases was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4439) to provide for the survey of a national highway connecting certain national monuments in the States of Utah, Arizona, and New Mexico, was announced as next in order.

Mr. LENROOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2494) to provide for the exchange with the State of Oregon of certain school lands and indemnity rights within the national forests of that State for an equal area of national forest land was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. As neither of the Senators from Oregon is here, I object to the consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 2898) to provide for the erection of a public building at Knoxville, Knox County, Tenn., was announced as next in order.

Mr. NELSON. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

ALBERT H. CAMPBELL.

The bill (S. 1661) for the relief of Albert H. Campbell was announced as next in order.

Mr. KING. I object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. CURTIS. I hope the Senator from Utah will withdraw his objection to this bill. It is a very meritorious measure. If the Senator will read the report he will find that the Judge Advocate General at one time recommended that the disability incurred by his sentence be removed and the governor of Kansas be notified that there was no further objection to this man being commissioned, and such a notice was sent to the governor of Kansas, but there was no necessity afterwards for his services. Under the circumstances I hope the Senator will let the bill go through.

Mr. KING. Reserving the right to object, I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be read.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Albert H. Campbell shall hereafter be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States as captain of Company G, Fourteenth Regiment Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, on the 30th day of May, 1865.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment to add the following proviso:

Provided, That no pension, pay, bounty, or allowance shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the Senator from Kansas if this is not a bill for the purpose of relieving the individual mentioned in the bill of the charge of desertion and then giving him a pensionable status?

Mr. CURTIS. No; the officer in this case was court-martialed because he was interested in a contract which sold to the Government 1,500 cords of wood delivered at Fort Smith, Kans., the report states; it must have been Fort Smith, Ark. He was tried for being interested in that contract while he was an officer. Afterwards an application was made by Col. Judson, of the Sixth Kansas Cavalry, for the removal of the disability.

The committee report states:

This application was referred to the Judge Advocate General of the Army, who, under date of March 1, 1866, in reviewing the case stated that the contract in which Capt. Campbell was concerned was the furnishing of 1,500 cords of wood upon an advertisement of the quartermaster at Fort Smith, Kans. The Judge Advocate General stated that there did not appear to be any fraud in the performance of the contract; that the actual offense consisted in the violation of the act of Congress approved July 16, 1862, entitled "An act to prevent Members of Congress and officers of the Government of the United States from taking consideration for procuring contracts, office, or place from the United States." He further stated that the conviction of conduct prejudicial to good order and military discipline was merely as a corollary to the violation of the act referred to, and the Judge Advocate General concluded his remarks with reference to the case as follows:

"In consideration of the previous good character of this man, his meritorious service during the Rebellion, the fact that the contract in which he illegally engaged was performed in good faith, without fraud upon the Government, and the severe penalty he has already suffered, it is believed that the disability incurred by his sentence may be removed without detriment to the public interests."

That was the finding of the Judge Advocate General.

Thereupon, by direction of the President, the governor of Kansas was informed, in a letter from this office dated March 23, 1866, that the disability resulting from the dismissal of Albert H. Campbell, formerly captain, Fourteenth Kansas Volunteer Cavalry, was thereby removed, and that he might be recommissioned should the governor so desire.

Of course, that was so late that no other commission was issued. Of course, the discharge by court-martial prevented him from getting a pension, but, as a matter of fact, he has been entitled to one all the time. This act should have been passed years and years ago.

Mr. KING. Is he receiving a pension?

Mr. CURTIS. No, sir.

Mr. KING. Is the bill retroactive?

Mr. CURTIS. It is not. The amendment provides that no pension shall be allowed until after the passage of the act.

Mr. KING. I withdraw the objection.

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

GRANTING OF NEW TRIALS.

The bill (S. 68) to amend section 269 of chapter 231 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, lines 3 and 4, to strike out the words "of chapter 231"; on the same page, before the word "amended," in line 7, to insert the words "and the same is hereby"; on page 2, line 4, before the word "defects," to strike out the words "or"; and, in the same line, before the word "exceptions," to strike out the word "to," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 269 of the act approved March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 269. All of the said courts shall have power to grant new trials, in cases where there has been a trial by jury, for reasons for which new trials have usually been granted in the courts of law. On the hearing of any appeal, certiorari, writ of error, or motion for a new trial, in any case, civil or criminal, the court shall give judgment after an examination of the entire record before the court, without regard to technical errors, defects, or exceptions which do not affect the substantial rights of the parties."

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read, "A bill to amend section 269 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary."

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1930) for the relief of Elizabeth T. Wells was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

TENNESSEE RIVER BRIDGE.

The bill (H. R. 10818) to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River, near Loudon, Tenn., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I offer the following amendment to add a new section.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add a new section, as follows:

That the provisions of section 5 of the act entitled "An act making appropriations for the service of the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1918, and for other purposes, approved March 3, 1917, relating to intoxicating liquors in interstate commerce, as amended by section 1110 of an act entitled "An act to provide revenue to defray war expenses, and for other purposes," approved October 3, 1917, and the same are hereby made applicable to the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending bill is hardly an appropriate place for the amendment.

Mr. KING. I understand we are considering a bill granting permission to erect a bridge over a navigable river in Tennessee, and the Senator from Texas desires to introduce some legislation in the form of an amendment in regard to intoxicating liquors in the District of Columbia.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has to do with water.

Mr. SHEPPARD. It applies the so-called Reed bone-dry law to the District of Columbia, and is offered in order to correct a shameful situation now prevailing in the matter of the shipment of intoxicating liquors from Baltimore into Washington.

Mr. KING. This is not the time to discuss that question. I may agree entirely with the Senator from Texas, but I think the bill had better go over.

Mr. SHEPPARD. If the Senator asks that the bill go over, I withdraw the amendment. I will not imperil the bill, but I shall continue to take advantage of every opportunity to offer an amendment to correct the situation I have described, and I believe there would have been no objection at this time except for the remark made by the Vice President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Is the amendment withdrawn?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BUSINESS PASSED OVER.

The next business on the calendar was Senate resolution 297 directing the Committee on Military Affairs to investigate and report relative to enforcement of the draft.

Mr. SMOOT. I move that the resolution be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 1857) for the relief of Patrick McMahon.

Mr. KING. Let the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 3602) for the relief of John L. O'Mara.

Mr. KING. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

CREDIT FOR LOST INTERNAL REVENUE STAMPS.

The bill (S. 4272) for the relief of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and his accounts with $2,980, being the representative value of 172 pipe-line beer stamps returned to him for destruction by the collector of internal revenue of the first collection district of New York, which stamps, after being received by the said commissioner and charged to him September 2, 1914, were lost or irregularly destroyed.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The bill (S. 4271) for the relief of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue was considered as in Committee of the Whole and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to credit the Commissioner of Internal Revenue and his accounts with the sum of $5,000, being the value of one hundred $50 documentary stamps charged to him and believed to have been stolen from the stamp vaults of his office during the month of January, 1915.

Mr. KING. I should like to ask the chairman of the committee having this measure in charge if there is not some general statute that will reach cases of this character? Is there not some provision under which they would automatically go before some tribunal or some board and where credit could be obtained?

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to my colleague that there is no statute on the subject. The only way the Commissioner of Internal Revenue can receive credit is by a special act of Congress. He is in the same position as a postmaster when stamps are stolen from him. In this particular case, of course, they do not know whether they were stolen or not, but there is not any question but that they are not in his office. His account does not balance within $5,000, and he requests that this legislation be passed.

Mr. KING. It seems to me before an appropriation is made there ought to be some certainty.

Mr. SMOOT. It is virtually a credit; it is not an appropriation. If the stamps ever turn up, they can not be used unless somebody presents them, and if they are presented we will find out whether they were stolen or how taken, and the Government will not be out of any money.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NATIONAL BUDGET SYSTEM.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 121) creating a commission to report a plan for the adoption of a national budget system was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. KENYON. Will the Senator wait?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; I will withdraw the objection for the present.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to perfect the joint resolution, and after I offer some amendments I shall not ask to have it considered at this time. I move to strike out the preamble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the joint resolution will be taken up as in Committee of the Whole for the purpose of amendment.

Mr. KENYON. I move to strike out the preamble down to and including the word "therefore," in line 2, page 3. That is the first amendment. I will send to the Secretary's desk the amendment. Then it commences with the words "Be it resolved," and so forth.

I move further to amend section 1 of the joint resolution by striking out, in line 3, the word "out" and also the words "adoption of." I shall then ask to have the joint resolution reprinted. Let the Secretary read the amendment.

The SECRETARY. Strike out the preamble down to and including the word "therefore." in line 2, page 3. Strike out, in line 3, the word "out," also the words "adoption of." Strike out, in line 5, the word "and" and insert after the word "two" the word "members"; strike out all of line 6; so that the first section will read:

That a joint commission to report a plan for a national budget system is hereby established. Its membership shall consist of the Secretary of the Treasury, two members to be appointed by the President, three Members of the Senate and the three Members of the House, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the House and Senate, respectively.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendments will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. KENYON. I move to amend section 3, line 14, by striking out "1918" and inserting "1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. On page 4 I move to insert at the end of section 4 the following:

Within the limits of the amount appropriated under section 5.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. In section 6 I move to strike out "June" and insert "March," and to strike out "1918" and insert "1919."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KENYON. I ask that the joint resolution as amended may be reprinted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENYON. And that it retain its place on the calendar.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will retain its place on the calendar.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4891) making certain officers of the Army eligible for appointment as Chief of Staff Corps and Departments was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4892) to amend section 4 of chapter 5 of an act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, approved July 9, 1918, and to make said amendment retroactive was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

The bill (S. 4893) transferring the tract of land known as Craney Island from the jurisdiction of the War Department to the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department and transferring the tract of land known as Fishermans Island from the jurisdiction of the Treasury Department to the jurisdiction of the War Department was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

The bill (S. 4852) to create an executive department in the Government to be known as the Department of Aeronautics, and for the appointment of a Secretary of Aeronautics and an Assistant Secretary, and providing for appropriations for said department was announced as next in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will go over.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

The bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service was announced as next in order.

Mr. McKELLAR. I ask that the bill be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It has been read.

Mr. FLETCHER. Can we not finish the calendar and come back to it? We shall soon be through with the calendar. There are only a few more bills on it to be reached.

Mr. McKELLAR. I should like very much to go on with the bill. We have spent some time on the calendar. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4637.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am very much in favor of this legislation which is the unfinished business. The Senator from Tennessee has the skill and the patience and the ability to press the bill. He has a great many sympathizers. I am sure that many Senators here appreciate his work. But I fear if the bill were now to be taken up the balance of the afternoon would be consumed. I make no objection, but I am tremendously interested in a bill which is to follow on the calendar and that I have watched for three or four years. I understand, of course, it is utterly impossible to pass my bill because it saves the Federal Government several hundred thousand dollars. I know, of course, if it had appropriated a million it would have passed long ago. I appeal to the Senator from Tennessee, who is a practical legislator, to let his bill go over at least until my bill is passed.

Mr. McKELLAR. I can not agree to that when the Senator has been three of four years trying to get his bill passed. I hope the Senator will withdraw any objection. As to his bill that will save the Government several hundred thousand dollars, I will say to the Senator that I will help him in every possible way to get it passed. I hope the Senator will not object to the unfinished business coming up. I think it will take only a short time to dispose of it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I merely wish to suggest to the Senator from Arizona that if he will offer an amendment proposing to appropriate $1,100,000, the bill will then pass, according to his statement, and the $100,000 which he proposes to save will be secured for the Treasury.

Mr. McKELLAR. I will say to the Senator from Arizona that I do not think it is going to take more than a few moments to pass the bill which I now desire considered. The bill has been read; I understand what is to be said upon it is going to be said immediately, and that it will take but a short time to dispose of the bill. And I hope the Senator will withdraw the objection.

Mr. ASHURST. I have no objection.

Mr. MYERS. I understand if the motion to proceed with the consideration prevails the bill is to be considered under the calendar rule and the speeches will be limited to five minutes. Am I correct in that?

Mr. McKELLAR. I hope so.

Mr. KING. Then I object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. McKELLAR. I move to proceed to the consideration of the bill, notwithstanding the objection; and I ask for a vote upon the motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from Tennessee moves to proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this is a pretty important bill. I have some observations to submit upon it and I can not submit them in five minutes. If the five-minute rule is to prevail in the consideration of the bill, I shall certainly object to its consideration, though I am in sympathy with its purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The five-minute rule will not apply if the consideration of the bill is proceeded with notwithstanding the objection.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Harding	Myers	Smoot
Bankhead	Hitchcock	Nelson	Swanson
Beckham	Jones, N. Mex.	Norris	Thomas
Borah	Kellogg	Nugent	Townsend
Culberson	Kenyon	Overman	Trammell
Cummins	Knox	Phelan	Underwood
Curtis	La Follette	Poindexter	Vardaman
Fletcher	Lenroot	Pomerene	Walsh
France	Lewis	Saulsbury	Warren
Frelinghuysen	McCumber	Shafroth	Weeks
Gerry	McKellar	Sheppard
Gore	Martin, Va.	Smith, Ga.
Hale	Moses	Smith, Md.

Mr. LEWIS. I wish to announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], who is detained by illness in his family.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Forty-nine Senators have answered to the roll call. There is a quorum present. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR] to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4637.

The motion was rejected.

ADJOURNMENT TO THURSDAY.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it stand adjourned until Thursday at 12 o'clock meridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Virginia.

Mr. McKELLAR. I call for a division, Mr. President.

The question being put, on a division the motion was agreed to.

PROPOSED EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, if it is not inappropriate, I should like to move, with the consent of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, for an executive session, in view of the pendency of certain appointments which need confirmation. Would such a motion be inappropriate at this moment?

The VICE PRESIDENT. Such a motion is always in order.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Let us finish the calendar, Mr. President.

Mr. LEWIS. I was under the impression that we had concluded the consideration of business on the calendar. That not being so, I withdraw the suggestion.

LOUISIANA MARSHALS AND DISTRICT ATTORNEYS.

The bill (S. 1590) providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshals and for the United States district attorneys for the western and eastern districts of Louisiana was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary with amendments, on page 1, line 6, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$4,000" and to insert "$3,500"; in the same line, after the word "year," to strike out "and the salary of the United States marshal"; on page 2, line 1, after the word "shall," to strike out "each"; and in the same line, after the words "rate of," to strike out "$5,000" and to insert "$4,000"; so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That from and after the passage of this act the salary of the United States marshal and the salary of the United States district attorney for the western district of Louisiana shall each be at the rate of $3,500 per year, and the salary of the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana shall be at the rate of $4,500 per year.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshal and district attorney for the western district and for the United States district attorney for the eastern district of Louisiana."

SALE OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 4472) providing for the sale of public lands for the purpose of using the proceeds arising therefrom in the construction of roads and other permanent improvements in national parks was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, was this bill reported from the Public Lands Committee?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator from Idaho that the bill has received the approval of the Public Lands Committee; that it applies to the public-lands States and the parks that are located in public-lands States, and only from the public lands situated in those States is there to be any appropriation of land made.

Mr. BORAH. Though the Secretary read the bill rather deliberately I did not fully catch the language.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill simply provides that in public-lands States where there are public parks located, for the purpose of maintaining the parks and making permanent improvements in the parks, such as roads and other necessary improvements, there shall be set aside an equal area of public land which may be sold at a price not less than $2.50 per acre.

If the Senator from Idaho will permit me, I will call attention to the fact that new parks have been established in my State and perhaps in his, and there has been a limitation placed upon the amount of money that can be appropriated for the maintenance of such new parks to $10,000.

In the case of the Rocky Mountain Park, which is one of the most magnificent parks in the world, that sum is totally inadequate. It is not even sufficient to police the park. Consequently any improvement in the way of roads or other permanent improvements can not be made. We have endeavored to have passed and have had passed through this body a number of times bills providing for the appropriation of a greater amount than $10,000 for this purpose, but invariably the other House has ruled such appropriations out on the ground that the bill itself creating the park has limited the amount which could be expended in the park to $10,000. Consequently for the last four or five years we have been tied up so that we can get no improvement whatever in those parks. It has, therefore, seemed to me to be the proper thing to do, without calling on the Treasury to expend any money, that we should appropriate some of the public lands in the States where the parks are situated to the purpose of making permanent improvements in the park. I can not see any better purpose to which such lands could be put.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado if he thinks that any money arising from the sale of such public lands would ever again go into the Treasury if this bill should pass?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes; I think unquestionably it would.

Mr. WEEKS. Does the Senator not think that the pressure to build roads and expend money for the purposes in connection with the parks would be sufficient to consume the proceeds of the sales of public lands?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, no; this applies to unappropriated lands. These lands, of course, will be taken up in the end, and the Government will get nothing whatever from them. By reason of the fact that now, while they are available, they can be set aside and can be sold, there will be no draft on the Treasury hereafter.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask if the lands which may be sold under this proposed act are such lands as could be homesteaded?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Well, there is no limitation, except that they shall be unappropriated, unreserved, nonmineral public lands.

As the Senator from Idaho is aware, there has been considerable talk about lands for the soldiers when they return, but I am confident that the soldiers had rather pay $2.50 an acre and then obtain the land than to be required to live on the homestead for five years. I am satisfied that they would seize the opportunity. The whole matter being in the hands of the Secretary of the Interior, the land could be utilized to better advantage for that very purpose at an expense of $2.50 per acre, which, it seems to me, would be inconsiderable compared to the difficulty of a man having to go, enter, and live five years upon the land.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I desire to ask the Senator from Colorado whether the provisions of this bill limit the sale of lands to public lands within the State where a particular park is located?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Oh, yes. For instance, if there is any improvement to be made upon a Colorado park only Colorado lands may be sold for that purpose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I wish also to ask the Senator another question. What effect would the passage of this bill have on lands which have been set aside for irrigation purposes in what are known as the arid-land States?

Mr. SHAFROTH. The provisions of the bill would not apply to lands which had been set aside, but only to unappropriated lands.

Here is the wording of the first section of the bill:

That the Secretary of the Interior shall select and reserve and within two years thereafter sell at public auction in each of the States in which national parks are situate, unappropriated, unreserved, nonmineral public lands in amount equal to the total area of the national parks within such State, and the proceeds thereof shall be expended in aid of the construction, improvement, and maintenance of roads or other permanent improvements in and leading to the national parks situate in such State.

It will readily be seen, Mr. President, that, having tied these public parks up so that we can not get anything out of the Treasury for them, if at the same time we do not provide a fund from the public lands of the State in which the parks are situated we will have a number of public parks that are of practically no use.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I am asking the question more for information than for any other purpose. I think the Senator and myself were on the committee when the original irrigation bill was passed.

Mr. SHAFROTH. We were.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have in mind what happened then, but the act has been amended since that time, and I am not sure whether my conception of the law is correct. My understanding is, however, that the proceeds of all sales of public lands within the 18 arid States were to be converted into a fund for the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. And if this bill is passed it will divert a part of that fund from the purpose of irrigation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. It will to a limited extent, but we have been continually doing that. For instance, when we create public parks we do that. We have made many inroads in regard to the source from which the irrigation fund is derived, and yet the enormous amounts of money obtained from locations under irrigation projects will continue to come into the Treasury, will be paid back and constitute a revolving fund for the purpose of the irrigation enterprises undertaken by the Government.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I realize that; but it may be that the present irrigation fund as a revolving fund is not large enough to meet the conditions. I am not informed as to that, but, at least, if we pass this bill it will constitute a diversion of part of the fund that would otherwise go to irrigation.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In the first place the Senator is mistaken in this, that nine-tenths, if not ninety-nine one-hundredths, of these lands will yield nothing, because they will be taken up by homesteaders, and the Government does not receive any return whatever from the location of a homestead, aside from the filing fees and the fees that are paid the register and receiver. The funds are derived very largely from the commutations which are made in order to get title to the land a little quicker than by living upon it, or by the sale of mineral lands, which sales are continually going on, the locator taking patent to the land and paying $5 an acre. By that means the irrigation fund is built up more than in any other way. If these lands lie there and are located upon under the homestead act, the Government gets no money out of them at all.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I should like to have this bill go over until Thursday in any event. I do not wish the Senate to pass hurriedly upon a bill which takes homestead lands and offers them at public sale for the purpose of improving public parks which already have a very large donation from the Treasury.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that the difficulty arises very largely from the fact that in the case of many of these parks the bills creating them contain provisions that no more than $10,000 can be appropriated for the different purposes in connection with the parks, and that is totally inadequate in many cases. Inasmuch as the money which will be secured from the operation of the bill now under consideration will be applied to a good purpose—for we can not have a better improvement than public roads in a park—and inasmuch as it will cost the General Treasury nothing, the money coming from lands that are within the borders of the States in which the parks are situated, I should like it very much if the Senator would allow the bill to pass.

Mr. BORAH. I should like to have the bill go over until Thursday, at any rate.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the bill is finally disposed of for the present, inasmuch as I may not be here when the bill is next taken up, I want to say a word in relation to it. I regret very much to differ with my distinguished friend from Colorado [Mr. SHAFROTH] in regard to the merits of this bill, I have not been able to give it my approval, although we have a large and most interesting national park in the State of Montana, the improvement of which would undoubtedly be speeded by some such provision as this. But, Mr. President, that would mean taking 3,000 sections of land out of the body of land which goes to make up the reclamation fund, and to that extent would deplete the reclamation fund.

I sympathize very much with the Senator from Colorado in his feeling that the national parks have not been treated as liberally by our Government as their importance justifies; in fact, I feel that we could not make a better investment than in the construction of roads and other improvements to make these parks attractive and to keep tourists here instead of having them go in droves every year to Switzerland, where the scenery, according to the testimony of those who are familiar with our mountain scenery and with the scenery of Switzerland, by no means compares with that which can be seen in the great national parks in the West. A most miserly and niggardly policy has thus far been observed with reference to these parks; but, Mr. President, these parks are created for the benefit of the people of the whole country, and are available to the people of the whole country, and there is no reason at all why the lands in the States in which these parks are located should be appropriated to the making of improvements within them.

The Glacier National Park has an area of practically 3,000 square miles, and that means 3,000 square miles of public land in the State of Montana, which when sold would go to swell the reclamation fund, are to be sold and the amount appropriated for the making of improvements in this park.

Mr. SHAFROTH. But does not the Senator recognize the fact that if these lands are taken up for homesteads not one dollar will go into the reclamation fund.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that.

Mr. SHAFROTH. That being the case I do not see how it can deplete the reclamation fund.

Mr. WALSH. According to the argument the Senator makes there would not be anything to go into the reclamation fund at all. The available land will not necessarily be taken up exclusively by homesteaders, but even if it is taken up by homesteaders the homsteader is entitled to commute, so that in many cases, indeed I might say in a majority of cases, the homesteader pays for his land instead of living on it the entire period of five years.

Mr. SHAFROTH. In some instances he does, but I do not think in the majority; in the greater number of cases I think the homesteader lives upon the land.

Mr. WALSH. But to my mind there is another objection to the bill, Mr. President. I do not want to take 3,000 square miles of land available for homestead entry in my State and put that land up for sale to speculators. There is no restriction; a man may buy land, paying not less than $2.50 an acre for it, without any purpose whatever to cultivate it; he may hold it for any purpose he may desire.

I think the Senator from Colorado is unduly apprehensive about the restriction in the bill creating the Rocky Mountain National Park. Even though it does provide that no more than $10,000 shall be spent annually in the making of improvements in the park——

Mr. SHAFROTH. And for maintaining the park—policing it and everything else.

Mr. WALSH. That is no restriction at all, for any Congress may appropriate $100,000 for the improvement of that park if it so desires.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Yes; and I have had incorporated in appropriation bills a provision repealing that section, but it has always gone out on a point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I rise to a question of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the debate is proceeding beyond the five-minute rule, and I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. MYERS. I hope the Senator will not do that.

Mr. OVERMAN. Are there any more bills on the calendar?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; and we had a tacit agreement to finish the call of the calendar.

Mr. OVERMAN. If there is a tacit agreement to finish the calendar, I will withdraw the motion.

Mr. SHAFROTH. Mr. President, I wish to say another word with relation to the bill under discussion, and that is that there is a limitation as to the number of acres sold to any one person, so that the land can not be the subject of speculation, as is suggested by the Senator from Montana.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. SHAFROTH. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator, with reference to the $10,000 limitation, if he is not aware that the limitation was put in for the express purpose of confining appropriation for the parks to which it applied to police regulation and not improvement, and that it was put in when the parks were created for the sole purpose of preserving them and not with the idea of expending money upon them? In reference to the Rocky Mountain National Park, I wish to ask the Senator if he is not aware that the position of the House is that they are willing to repeal the limitation as to that park just as soon as the war is over?

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will state to the Senator that I have been before the Public Lands Committee with the object of securing a repeal of the $10,000 limitation, but there has been continual objection made to the repeal. There has been a suggestion by the Senator from Wisconsin that after the war he would be willing to have that provision repealed, but I do not know whether the other members of the committee will agree to it now or not.

Mr. LENROOT. If I may say so to the Senator, I presume I am responsible for the $10,000 limitation; but, so far as the Rocky Mountain National Park is concerned, before I left that committee they were unanimously of the opinion that that limitation should be repealed as soon as the war was over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. This bill goes over under objection. The Secretary will state the next bill on the calendar.

FORT PECK INDIAN RESERVATION, MONT.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, considered the bill (S. 4178) providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.

The Secretary read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That any person who has made homestead entry under the provisions of the act of Congress approved May 30, 1908 (35 Stat. L., 558), entitled "An act for the survey and allotment of lands now embraced within the limits of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, in the State of Montana, and the sale and disposal of all the surplus lands after allotment," may obtain an extension of time for one year from the anniversary of the date of entry last preceding the passage of this act within which to pay the one-half of the installment, then due of such part of any preceding installment, where payment has not yet been made and where an extension of time therefor is not authorized by the act of Congress approved March 2, 1917 (39 Stat. L., 994), by paying interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum on the sums to be extended from the maturity of the unpaid installments to the expiration of the period of extension, the interest to be paid to the receiver of the land office for the district in which the lands are situated, within such time as may be prescribed for that purpose by the Secretary of the Interior: Provided, That the one-half of any installment which becomes due within one year from the passage of this act and for which an extension of time for payment is not authorized by the said act of March 2, 1917, may also be extended for a period of one year by paying interest thereon in advance at the said rate: Provided further, That any payment so extended may annually thereafter be extended for a period of one year in like manner, but no payment shall be extended beyond eight years from the date of entry nor shall any extension be granted for less than one year: And provided further, That if commutation proof is submitted, all the unpaid payments must be made at that time.

SEC. 2. That moneys paid as interest provided for herein shall be deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the Fort Peck Indians, the same as moneys realized from the sale of the lands.

SEC. 3. That the failure of an entryman to make any payment that may be due, unless the same be extended, or to make any payment extended either under the provisions hereof or under the provisions of the said act of March 2, 1917, at or before the time to which such payment has been extended, shall forfeit the entry and the same shall be canceled, and any and all payments theretofore made shall be forfeited.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC LANDS FOR SOLDIERS AND SAILORS.

The bill (S. 4947) to provide for a survey and classification by the Secretary of the Interior of all unentered public lands of the United States and all unused, cut-over, logged, and swamp lands and other unused lands of the United States, with a view to disposing thereof to honorably discharged soldiers and sailors and others, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I should like to have the bill read. I was not here when it was read before.

The Secretary will read the bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the chairman of the committee reporting this bill if it is not a fact that the Secretary of the Interior is now making the investigation which the bill just read contemplates shall be made?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, the Secretary is now making a preliminary investigation, in an initial way, of this plan of reconstruction. Congress last July, at the request of the Secretary of the Interior, appropriated $200,000 for gathering certain necessary data and statistics and making a purely preliminary investigation of the subject, and that is now going on, but the Secretary, at the time he asked for that, stated that for the permanent survey and classification of these lands the sum of about $1,000,000 would be needed. The bill reads "$2,000,000," but at the suggestion of the Secretary of the Interior the committee reported an amendment to reduce that to $1,000,000 only. The sum that was appropriated in July was understood at that time to be merely an initial sum for a preliminary investigation of the subject and for doing certain preliminary work, but the Secretary in his report on this bill says he hopes that not later than the 1st of December the further sum of $1,000,000 will be appropriated for the completion of the work. At the top of page 2 of the report he says:

> The appropriation made by the Congress of $100,000 as to irrigable lands and $100,000 for the other classes is, of course, insufficient for more than what I have termed a rough survey. It will enable us to know where those lands are which may be available. But this is no more than the beginning of the task if we are to be ready against the return of our troops from abroad to offer them an opportunity to build farm homes for themselves for which they shall repay the Government throughout a long term of years.

He then further says that he hopes the further appropriation of $1,000,000 necessary for the completion of the work will be made not later than the 1st of December.

Mr. KING. Then, as I understand the Senator, the present bill will carry $1,000,000?

Mr. MYERS. One million dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary. The Senate committee recommended that the amount originally asked for, $2,000,000, should be reduced to $1,000,000, or so much thereof as might be found necessary.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I will say to the Senator that it is almost imperative that this bill should be passed soon, because the soldiers are going to return soon, and these fields ought to be open for the purpose of location upon their part and the settlement of these lands. I think the bill is a most excellent one and ought to pass.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, as I understand, this is a provision authorizing the use of a million dollars in money for the purpose of determining what can be done to advantage with certain so-called waste lands in all parts of the country. I assume that it is part of a scheme of reconstruction after the war is over. I assume that it has been brought forward with an idea of taking care of some of the men who will be discharged from the Army.

I do not know how practical this plan is. On the face of it, it seems to me to be reasonable to try to improve some of the waste lands. I can not imagine that it is a scheme for the purpose of allowing the exploitation of certain sections of the country at the Government expense; and yet it is such a novel idea and so difficult to understand in a practical way that one is almost warranted in imagining anything that might grow out of such a measure. But assuming that it is in reality a part of the scheme of reconstruction, does not the Senator from Montana believe that it would be wise to allow this to come in to be considered with the general plan that I understand is to be adopted here in order that we may know what is the best way to spend the millions of dollars—the separate millions of dollars—which will be required in a process of reestablishment such as is proposed here?

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, this plan was launched by the Secretary of the Interior, wholly separate and apart from any general plan of reconstruction and economic adjustment after the war, not tied up with any other plans, but solely for the purpose of getting people on the vacant, idle land of the country; for the purpose of providing homes for returned soldiers and sailors and hundreds of thousands of workers in the munition plants of the country who will be out of jobs as soon as the war is officially declared ended and as soon as those munition plants cease to operate. Some of them are ceasing to operate now and the need for this legislation is very urgent and very great. Some of these munition plants, as I say, are closing down now and many others of necessity will close down in the very near future, and thereby there will be hundreds of thousands of people thrown out of employment and the country will be thrown into a state of industrial confusion and paralysis. These people will have to turn somewhere else to make a living for themselves and their families; our soldiers and sailors are now being returned. I want to assure the Senator that it is not in the least degree intended, by virtue of this bill, to exploit or benefit any one section of the country at the expense of other sections of the country. It applies to waste, swamp, cut over, logged, unused, and uncultivated lands in every section of the country. There is not a section of the United States that will not be benefited by this legislation, if enacted. The need for it is great and crying. There is an emergency which calls for its immediate enactment. Delay would be deplorable, and I hope there may be none. Necessarily this scheme is separate from and disconnected with any of the general schemes suggested for reconstruction and rehabilitation after the war. Its very nature makes it so. It should not be tied up with any other. It is sui generis. The demand for it is peculiar. There can be no delay if the plan is to be a success.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator if it is not also true that this bill does not undertake to distribute the lands, but merely to get the necessary information, so that the Congress can distribute the lands if it fits in with the general plan?

Mr. MYERS. That is true. That is a good point. I will say to the Senator from Michigan that this is merely to classify and survey these lands, make plans, and get the proposed work well in hand, so that when Congress enters upon a general scheme of reconstruction it may have the benefit of the information and knowledge and preliminary work which this survey and classification will bring. It may not take $1,000,000. The bill does not necessarily appropriate the sum of $1,000,000. The appropriation clause reads:

> That * * * $1,000,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary—

Is appropriated for this work. The bill has the indorsement of governors of States and commercial bodies and associations of people all over the country who are interested in the welfare of the country. It has met with universal approbation, and I think it is very meritorious, and I am glad to see that the Senator from Michigan finds some merit in the plan. It has been submitted to the President of the United States, governors of States, Representatives in Congress and Senators, commercial bodies, and clubs, and not one word of criticism has it heretofore elicited. To the contrary, it has evoked and received many expressions of unbounded and unqualified approval and commendation. It has evoked hearty, widespread, and almost universal approbation. Many Senators and Representatives have commended it and committed themselves to its support. Its merit is apparent. We must do something for our returning soldiers and sailors. They are even now returning. The people of this country are now being asked to subscribe $170,000,000 by private subscription for their welfare and entertainment in Europe. Shall we hesitate to appropriate $1,000,000 to provide homes for them and make useful citizens of them and make useful our waste lands? I hope I have satisfied all inquirers, I hope there will be no delay in the passage of this bill.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I understand, of course, that this bill provides only a million dollars, or so much thereof as may be needed. No one doubts, however, that it will absorb the $1,000,000. What is disturbing me is whether it is a wise thing for the country for the Congress at this time to appropriate a million dollars to be used in this kind of a scheme. I understand also that it is true, as the Senator says, that this is a proposition to be undertaken by the Secretary of the Interior on his own hook, and that it has no reference to concerted action by the Government to determine what it is best as a whole to do. That is one of the reasons why it seems to me it is unwise. I should like to see a plan of reorganization or reconstruction established in order that we may expend the money properly.

I hope the munition workers and the discharged soldiers are not going to be abused through all the months that are to come by assuming that they are to be the beneficiaries of all kinds of legislation, the same as winning the war has been abused during the past few months. I should like to have some reason given for the plan; I should like to have it established on a basis of its own so that we may know that this is desirable legislation. Not all of these soldiers and these munition makers are going to flock into the reclaimed marshes or burned-over or cut-over lands. In my judgment they are not as a whole earnestly looking for a job of that kind.

I go back, however, to the original proposition: If we have land that should be reclaimed for the benefit of the country I am in favor of reclaiming it; but I do not like to start in in this way on these separate schemes by different secretaries or other gentlemen each trying to establish a system of reconstruction on his own hook. I should like to have concerted action so that we can know what the general scheme is to be.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan if an investigation of this question generally has not been ordered by somebody or some department?

Mr. TOWNSEND. I am obliged to the Senator for calling my attention to that. I had forgotten one thing that I had in mind when I was going over the bill. I think we have almost complete records already in existence of all of the classes of lands that we have here. I do not think there is a single tract in the United States that is not already get-at-able, so far as the records are concerned. I do not think there is any doubt about that, and I am obliged to the Senator from Mississippi for calling my attention to it. That is practically all that this $1,000,00 is for, according to the statement of the Senator from Montana, namely, to provide information which is already in hand.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me for interrupting him further, I wish to say that we all desire that the soldiers coming back from France who are willing to go to the country shall be given an opportunity to build homes there and become farmers. In my judgment the future of this Republic depends very largely upon the character of the men and women who live in the country; but I want the Senate and the Congress in the consideration of this measure not to overlook the fact that there is an effort made along this line by interested parties who have a great deal of utterly worthless land which they are going to try to sell the Government and have the Government give it to these soldiers, or sell it to them on easy terms, which will be of no benefit whatever to the soldiers when they get it. I know of some lands that are being offered to the Government for these purposes that will be an incumbrance rather than a benefit to the soldier if given him free of cost. The owners of these lands, in the name of patriotism, will dispose of them to the Government for their own personal profits rather than for the good of the patriotic man who defends the flag in a foreign land. I think this matter ought to be carefully considered before taking definite action on it. Therefore I shall ask that the bill go over, that I may have something to say when the matter comes up for final consideration later.

Mr. TOWNSEND. Mr. President, I am going to ask that this bill go over until Thursday next. We are to have another meeting of the Senate then, and I want a little more information in reference to the matter.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. MYERS. Then, Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill notwithstanding the objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Montana. [Putting the question.] The "noes" have it, and the motion is lost.

Mr. MYERS subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to say that my motion to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 4947, notwithstanding the objection thereto, was put to the Senate and defeated while I was on my feet and had the floor and was engaged in the act of addressing the President of the Senate and the Senators. It was put and voted on in the midst of my remarks. I had no opportunity to conclude my remarks or to give my reasons for my opposition to the request of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND] that the bill go over, nor to make any argument, as I wished to do, in support of my motion for its immediate consideration.

Notwithstanding the Senate has refused to proceed with the bill to-day, I wish to say this bill has been very carefully considered by the Senate Committee on Public Lands, which recommends its passage, and by the Secretary of the Interior. It has the approval of a great many governors and other high officials. It is approved by commercial bodies and associations in this country which have given it very careful consideration. I do not know what further consideration could be or should be given it. If the bill is always to be put off for alleged lack of consideration, as has now been done twice, of course it never can be considered on its merits and disposed of. By the next time it comes up. I hope those Senators who now say they want to give it further consideration will have considered it to their satisfaction and may let us have a vote on the bill and let us either pass the bill or defeat it, because the time is here when it is imperative to do something with this bill, one way or the other. It is not fair continually to postpone disposition of the bill on the plea that it has not been sufficiently considered. This is an important measure. Those who are not decided as to its merits should study it and consider it and not require those of us who are satisfied of its merit to submit to its postponement day after day. A week or more ago the bill was printed in the RECORD, together with the committee report on it, which is exhaustive and goes much into detail. I hope those Senators who have not read the report will read it. I protest against further delay.

I have here a communication, addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, from the International Farm Congress, assembled at Kansas City, Mo., on the 17th day of October, 1918, in relation to the merits of this bill and making some suggestions about the proposed plan. I ask that it may be printed in the RECORD in connection with my remarks.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

KANSAS CITY, MO., October 17, 1918.

HON. FRANKLIN K. LANE,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The undersigned, acting under the authority and direction of the International Farm Congress, assembled at Kansas City, Mo., this the 17th day of October, A. D. 1918, representing the following States, desire to express to you our hearty approval of the policy outlined in your letter of May 30, 1918, to the President, to provide useful employment and homes for returning soldiers, and our desire to cooperate in every way in bringing that policy into effect.

We believe that the legislation that is to be enacted in regard to this matter should embrace the following features:

The proposed legislation should provide for the cooperation of the Federal and State Governments under laws to be enacted by the Congress and legislatures of the several States.

A State board should be created in each State to act in cooperation with the Federal authorities.

The Federal Government to provide the money for reclamation works, and to be expended in the preparation of farms for cultivation and the reclamation work to be carried out by the Federal Government.

If privately owned or State owned land is used, the State should provide it.

The land submitted by the State should be subject to the approval of the Federal Government, both as to quality and cost.

The States to provide facilities for the agricultural training of soldiers lacking experience or knowledge of local conditions.

Wherever such agricultural training is provided, the State and the Federal Government shall share the cost equally.

Money provided for the acquirement and reclamation of lands and the preparation of farms shall be repaid in small payments, extending over long terms, at low rates of interest.

A. J. McCune, of Colorado, State engineer; Charles F. Tew, of Colorado; Fred S. Lucas, of Colorado; Kurt Grunwald, of Colorado; W. I. Drummond, of Oklahoma; Alfred S. Rollo, of Moore Haven, Fla.; Alfred C. Siebolth, of Arizona; Jona Las Cetrite, of California; Leonard Tillotson, of Texas; Chas. McCaffree, of South Dakota; Frank M. Byrne, of South Dakota; Thomas M. Potter, of Peabody, Kans.; Andrew Kimball, of Thatcher, Ariz., also representing New Mexico; Fred D. Sherman, of Minnesota; Jewett Mayes, of Jefferson City, Mo.; W. W. Burr, of Lincoln, Nebr.; N. B. Coffman, of Chehalis, Wash., also representing State of Oregon under commission of its governor; Geo. S. Bruce, of Houston, Tex.; F. B. Linfield, of State of Montana; E. C. Leedy, of Great Northern Railway; E. G. Peterson, of Logan, Utah; W. O. Wolf, president of Kansas State Board of Agriculture; T. S. Minter, for State Department of Agriculture of Texas; Geo. Albert Smith, of Salt Lake City, Utah; W. M. Jardine, president Kansas State Agricultural College; E. F. Benson, of Olympia, Wash.; E. A. Willson, for North Dakota; Wm. A. Reef, of Denver, Colo., secretary.

GOVERNMENT SUPPLIES.

The bill (S. 4858) to provide method of settlement for materials, stores, and supplies transferred between different bureaus, departments, or agencies of the Government, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, in section 1, page 2, line 4, after the word "Government," to insert:

Provided, That the Secretary of War may by regulations prescribe the basis for fixing the prices to be charged and paid for all War Department materials, stores, or supplies so transferred, and the method of settlement therefor.

And at the end of section 1 to insert a new section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever authorized transfers of materials, stores, and supplies are made between bureaus of the War Department, or between a bureau of the War Department and any other executive department or independent establishment of the Government, payments therefor may be made by the proper disbursing officer of the office, bureau, department, or independent establishment to which such transfer is made, and the same method may be employed in the settlement of other transactions between appropriations under bureaus of the War Department, or between any such bureau and any other executive department or independent establishment of the Government: Provided, That the Secretary of War may by regulations prescribe the basis for fixing the prices to be charged and paid for all War Department materials, stores, or supplies so transferred, and the method of settlement therefor.

SEC. 2. That all acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT NOGALES, ARIZ.

The bill (H. R. 282) amending the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz., was considered as in Committee of the Whole, and was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of section 4 of the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913 (37 Stats., p. 873), as authorizes the acquisition of a site and the erection of a suitable building thereon for the United States customhous t Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $110,000, and so much of ction 5 of said act (37 Stats., p. 877) as authorizes the acquisition of a site for the United States post office and other Government offices at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $10,000, be, and the same are hereby, amended so as to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire, by purchase, condemnation, or otherwise, one site and to erect thereon one building for the accommodation of the United States post office, customhouse, and other Government offices at Nogales, Ariz., at a cost not exceeding $120,000, of which limit of cost not exceeding $15,000 shall be expended for such site; and that the appropriation of $16,000 made by the act of Congress approved July 29, 1914 (38 Stats., p. 563), in pursuance of said authorization of March 4, 1913, for a site and building for said customhouse, be, and the same is hereby, made available for the acquisition of the site and the commencement of the erection of the building hereinbefore authorized for said post office and customhouse.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Arizona what change this bill makes in the present law?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in order to answer that question I shall have to make a preliminary statement, which will be very brief.

In 1913, in the public buildings bill, there was authorized a public building—to wit, a customhouse and the site therefor—at Nogales, Ariz., and an appropriation of $110,000 was made for that purpose. In the same act, the public buildings bill of 1913, there was an additional appropriation of $10,000 for another site for a post office. Now, Mr. President, this is only corrective legislation. Two sites are not needed. Two sites would only be an incentive to erect another building. This is simply corrective legislation, to provide that there shall be but one site and one building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 3 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Thursday, November 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 18, 1918.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

John W. Davis, of Clarksburg, W. Va., to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Great Britain.

SOLICITOR GENERAL.

Alexander C. King, of Atlanta, Ga., to be Solicitor General, vice John W. Davis, resigned.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Passed Asst. Surg. Friench Simpson, to be surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from October 6, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Robert Louis Allen, to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 22, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Ora Howard Cox to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 21, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Marion Sunsari Lombard to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 21, 1918.

Asst. Surg. Carl Michel to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 22, 1918.

Asst. Surg. William Francis Tanner to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 21, 1918.

Asst. Surg. William Charles Witte to be passed assistant surgeon in the Public Health Service, to rank as such from September 22, 1918.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

The following-named cadets, graduates of the Military Academy, to be second lieutenants with rank from November 1, 1918:

Louis George Horowitz.
David Albert Newcomer.
Boyd Wheeler Bartlett.
Alfred Maximilian Gruenther.
Laurence VanDoren Harris.
Herbert Bernard Loper.
Ivan Crawford Lawrence.
Benjamin Mace Hedrick.
Robert Gibbons Gard.
Robert Ammons Hill.
David Horn Whittier.
Sidney Ward Gould.
Herbert Maury Jones.
Fred William Marlow.
Orville Wells Martin.
William Joseph Regan.
Roy Green.
Forrest Eugene Cookson.
John Paul Kennedy.
Alexander Sharp Bennet.
George Sheldon Price.
Carl Spencer Molitor.
Philip Stueler Lauben.
Wyburn Dwight Brown.
Robert Miller Montague.
Charles Pollard Jones.
Anthony Clement McAuliffe.
Robert Leonard Johnson.
Lester Francis Rhodes.
Albert Rhett Stuart Barden.
Romeo Francis Regnier.
Don Gilmore Shingler.
Harlan Nelson Hartness.
Louis Brainard Ely.
Julius Easton Slack.
Bertram Francis Hayford.
Ernest Aaron Bixby.
Robert Rossiter Raymond, jr.
Harris Fulford Scherer.
Donald Miller Davidson.
Ernest John Riley.
Clarence Emil Burgher.
Thomas Benoit Hedekin.
Joseph Vincie Phelps.
Charles Norton McFarland.
Charles Alvin Pyle.
Alexander Griswold Kirby.
John Ray Hardin.
Herbert Weldon Semmelmeyer.
William Wilkeson Barton.
Maurice Place Chadwick.
Walter Ernest Bullock.
Foster Joseph Tate.
Carl Robinson.
Richard Tobin Bennison.
Henry John Dick Meyer.
Elton Foster Hammond.
Ernest Marion Brannon.
Francis George McGill.
Rollin Franklin Risen.
Butler Lyons Hill.
Oscar Alan Saunders.
John Wyville Sheehy.
James Battle Rivers.
John Joseph Burns.
Leslie Edgar Jacoby.
John Raikes Vance.
Clarence John Kanaga.
Richard Powell Ovenshine.
Edwin Virgil Kerr.
Thomas McGregor Shillock.
Harrison Howell Dodge Heiberg.
William Irwin Allen.
Paul Andrew Donnally.
James Edmund Parker.
William Wesson Jervey.
George Raymond Burgess.
Edward Lynde Strohbehn.
Maurice Keyes Kurtz.
William Holmes Wenstrom.
Paul Lewis Harter.
Leo Clement Paquet.
Thomas Maurice Crawford.
Eugene McGinley.
Hugh Brownrigg Waddell.
Leslie DeLong Flory.
Paul Robert Menzies Miller.
Isaac Haiden Ritchie.
Augustine Francis Shea.
Carlisle Visscher Allan.
Marion Patton Echols.
Roy Anthony Moore.
John Edward McCarthy.
Francis Otis Wood.
Hobart Hewett.
Richard Thomas Rick.
Waldemar Sven Broberg.
James Holden Phillips.
John Edwin Leahy.
George Washington Lewis.
Frederick Weed Drury.
Leander Dunbar Syme.
Ellis Vern Williamson.
Leroy Clark Wilson, 2d.
Nathaniel Alanson Burnell, 2d.
William Goebel Stephens.
John Bartlett Murphy.
James Lowe Harbaugh, jr.
Virgil Farrar Shaw.
Paul Alpheus Noel.

Michael Gibson Smith.
Syril Emerson Faine.
Arthur Maxon Parsons.
Harry Welling Barrick.
William Travis VandeGraaff.
Howard Rand Perry, jr.
Edward Hamilton Young.
Nathan Arthur Smith.
Gerald Saint Claire Mickle.
Benjamin Randolph Farrar.
Harris Ellis Sanderson, jr.
Hugh French Thomson Hoffman.
David Stanley Holbrook.
Walter Scott Winn, jr.
Willard Gordon Wyman.
John Leonard Whitelaw.
Edward Henry Bowes.
Edwin Malcolm Sutherland.
Joseph Andrew Holly.
Henry Baldwin Nichols.
William Douglas McNair.
Charles Forrest Wilson.
Robert Francis Carter.
Hugh Garnett Elliott, jr.
Nathan Farragut Twining.
William John Crowe.
George Whitfield MacMillan.
L. Hoyt Rockafellow.
Percy Emery Hunt.
Douglas Alden Olcott.
Roland William McNamee.
John Carpenter Raaen.
Lentilhon Wheeler.
Winfred George Skelton.
Lambert Benel Cain.
Edmund Bower Sebree.
Ignatius Lawrence Donnelly.
Merritt Brando Booth.
Raymond Clay Barlow.
Frank Greene Davis.
Emmett James Bean.
Donald Allen Fay.
Charles Henry Noble.
Walter Towle O'Reilly.
Kenneth Pierce.
Charles Henry Bryan.
John Endler.
John Howell Collier.
Dean Luce.
Vincent Coyle McAlevy.
George Gordon Elms.
John Dimmick Armstrong.
Ralph Francis Stearley.
Donald Handley Nelson.
Edward Ora Hopkins.
John Victor Domminey.
James Verne Cole.
Horace Parker Sampson.
Ralph Bernard Kindley.
John Adam Bruckner, jr.
Clarence Archibald Frank.
Frederick Bradstreet Dodge, jr.
Clarkson Deweese McNary.
Bernard Albert Byrne, jr.
Charles Ream Jackson.
George Lincoln Dillaway, jr.
Warren Wilson Christian.
Dale Wilford Maher.
Robert Barrett Hutchins.
Joseph William Kullman.
George Dewey Rogers.
Harold Edward Marsden.
Robert Jones Merrick.
William Henry John Dunham.
Landon Garland Daniel.
Raymond Francis Kilroy.
Irvin Alexander.
John Harvey Madison.
George Edward Bruner.
Thomas Llewellyn Waters.
Urban Niblo.
Thomas Houston Dameron.
Roger Sherman Evarts.
Charles Linton Williams.
Kenneth Sharp Olson.
William Lighton McEnery.
Robert Montgomery Springer.
Russell John Nelson.
Charles Maine Wolff.
Simon Foss.
Davis Ward Hale.
Edward Melvin Starr.
Joseph Sladen Bradley.
Arthur Launcelot Moore.
Robert William Crichlow, jr.
Martin Anthony Fennell.
Ralph Harris Bassett.
Harold Allen Brown.
Albert Sidney Johnson Stovall, jr.
Donald Carson Hardin.
Harold Clifton Zimmerman.
John Thomas Keeley.
Albert Smith Rice.
James Wellington Boyd.
Joseph Conrad Odell.
Vincent Harold Kelly.
Josiah Tony Dalbey.
Logan Osburn Shutt.
Stuart Little.
Hilton Edward Heineke.
Galen Magnus Taylor.
John Francis Laragnino.
Royal Wheeler Park.
Daniel Phillip Buckland.
Philip McIlvaine Whitney.
John Morris Works.
Christopher Hildebrand.
Joseph Holleman Warren.
Edgar Mortimer Gregory.
John David Frederick.
Richard Ray Coursey.
William Ramsey Bready.
Joseph Charles Panzarella.
Dwight Lyman Adams.
John Charles Hyland, jr.
Thomas Gordon Cranford, jr.
Lester George Degnan.
Henry Bennett Sheets.
Archie William Cooly.
Edwin Robert Samsey.
William Robert McMaster.
Paul Revere Carl.
Cornelius Emmett O'Connor.
Joseph Alfred Cranston, jr.
Maurice Ladin Rosenthal.
Willard Leslie Isaacs.
Horace Speed, jr.
Fred William Makinney, jr.
William Benjamin Kean, jr.
Harold Robert Emery.
David Sanderson McLean.
William Joseph Moroney.
Russell Lowell Williamson.
Charles Leslie Keerans, jr.
Howard Adams White.
Howard Dohla Johnston.
Albert Carroll Morgan.
Franklin Leroy Rash.
Robert Watson Child.
Edgar Harvey Snodgrass.
Claude Birkett Ferenbaugh.
Adna Chaffee Hamilton.
Harold Stuart Ruth.
Sterling Eugene Whitesides, jr.
Lewis Stone Sorley, jr.
Albert Coady Wedemeyer.
David Best Latimer.
Ralph J. Miller.
Isaac Wiley Finley.
John Leighton Denny.
Roswell Boyle Hart.
Haldor Hegland Myrah.
Herbert Joseph Riess.
Martin Loeb.
Henry Ignatius Szymanski.
Ulric Lee Fomby.
Frederick Brenton Porter.
Bryan Sewall Halter.
Gordon Leslie Chapline.
Hughes Steele.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

To be second lieutenants with rank from November 1, 1918.

David Wood Griffiths.
Bernard Skinner Stearns.
Arthur William Pence.
Leslie Richard Groves, jr.
Henry Gray Lodge.
Lemuel Pope, 3d.
James Logan Rhoades.
Frederic Bates Butler.
Leverett Griggs Yoder.
Harry Alexander Montgomery.
Wilson Gordon Saville.
Mark Mayo Boatner, jr.
David Ayer Dupue Ogden.
Frederick Adolph Platte.
Karl Browne Schilling.
John Hawkins Elleman.
Elmer Ellsworth Barnes.
William Wesley Wanamaker.
Beverly Carradine Snow.
Richard Lee.
Howard Louis Peckham.
John Southworth Niles.
Charles Richard Bathurst.
Wendell Phillips Trower.
Robert Gilbert Lovett.
Cornman Louis Hahn.
Edwin Potter Lock, jr.
Morris Williams Gilland.
David Terrill Johnson.
Edwin Gunsolus Shrader.
Randolph Pierson Williams.
Otto Praeger, jr.
Allison Miller.
Newell Lyon Hemenway.
Archie Trescott Colwell.
Arthur Joseph Sheridan.
James George Christiansen.
Benjamin Franklin Chadwick.
Charles Dickson Jewell.
Heath Twichell.
Joseph Jones Twitty.
Robert Everett York.
Chester Krum Harding.
William Victor Hesp.
William Clarence Bennett, jr.
Claude Henry Chorpening.
Frank Otto Bowman.
James Postell Jervey, jr.
Joseph Shirley Gorlinski.
George Sackett Witters.
Albert Riani.
Orville Ernest Walsh.
Harvey Drexler Dana.
Peter Paul Goerz.
Robert Blake Coolidge.
John Peter Dietrich.
William Aylett Callaway.
Howard Voorheis Canan.
Vere Alfred Beers.
Doswell Gullatt.
John Bell Hughes.
Eugene Luther Vidal.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

To be second lieutenants, with rank from November 1, 1918.

George Brooke McReynolds.
Frederick Atherton Stevens.
Harrison Shaler.
Edmund Wilson Searby.
Roger Manning Wicks.
Hugh Archer Palmer.
George Vernon Keyser.
Homer William Blair.
Lawrence Bradford Bixby.
Harry Crawford.
William Washington Webster.
John Hamilton Hinds.
William Powell Blair.
William James Epes.
John Hinton.
Eric Spencer Molitor.
Richard August Ericson.
Richard Brobst Madigan.
James Vincent Carroll.
William Henry Barlow.
Ernest Calhoun Norman.
Charles Rolland Gildart.
Gerald Alexander O'Rouark.
Charles Edward Hixon.
Bryan Evans.
Francis Andrew March, 3d.
John Sheridan Winn, jr.
Roger Williams Autry.
Myrl Milton Miller.
Alfred Nathan Bergman.
Stuart Millikin Bevans.
John Hiram Lewis, jr.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

To be second lieutenants with rank from November 1, 1918.

John Marks Moore.
Eugene Germanus Miller.
Joseph Coolidge Kilbourne, jr.
Brooks Scott.
Arthur Emil Mickelsen.
Paul Boyle Kelly.
Leon Harold Dunn, 1st.
James Clyde Styron.
Bonner Frank Fellers.
Richard Ravenel Spring.
Melton Adams Hatch.
Kenneth Seymour Stice.
George Maurice Badger.
Marion Van Voorst.
Edwin Boyd Fitzpatrick.
Dean Richard Dickey.
William Amberson Sexton.
Hobart Reed Yeager.
Gervais William Trichel.
Thomas William Munford.
James Longstreet Whelchel.
John Hadley Fonvielle.
Joe David Moss.
Edward Arthur Dolph.
Felix Max Usis.
Edward Ward Hendrick.
Bernard Wellington Slifer.
Lee Earl Gray.
Donald William Sawtelle.

CAVALRY ARM.

To be second lieutenants, with rank from November 1, 1918.

George Gage Eddy.
Charles Edward Morrison.
Christian Knudsen.
Francis Bassett Valentine.
Thomas Tipton Thornburgh.
William Covington Benton.
Vincent John Conrad.
David Adams Taylor.
Ronald Austin Hicks.
Elmer Vaughan Stansbury.
Edwin Leslie Hogan.
John Creel Hamilton.
Mark Rhoads.
Joseph Kittredge Baker.
Charles William Leng, jr.
Albert Walker Johnson.
Willard Ames Holbrook.
Auston Monroe Wilson, jr.
Samuel Powell Walker, jr.
Fred Glover Sherrill.
Sol Mark Lipman.
William Theodore Powers.

INFANTRY ARM.

To be second lieutenants with rank from November 1, 1918.

Benjamin Abbott Dickson.
Charles Mason Wells.
William Bobbs Miller.
Richard Carrick Babbitt.
Wade Rushton Cothran, jr.
Percival Bolling Banister.
Claude Desha Anderson, jr.
Hammond McDougal Monroe.
John William Middleton.
Clarence Arthur Rosendahl.
Frank Johnstone Cunningham.

Edward Ward Smith.
John Bartlett Sherman.
John Joseph Breen.
James Arthur Kehoe.
Frederick Pearson.
Charles Frederick Colson.
DeWitt Hicks.
Donald Frederic Carroll.
Robert Alvin Schow.
John Harrison Stokes, jr.
Jesse Ellis Graham.
Jerome David Cambre.
William Howell Cocke.
Burrowes Goldthwaite Stevens.
Alexander Thomas McCone.
Thomas Markhan Brinkley.
John Kennedy Buchanan.
Ivins LaRue Browne.
Kenneth Willey Leslie.
Beverley St. George Tucker.
John Trites Brown.
John Coachman Cullens, jr.
Reginald Hubbell.
Wesley Collins Dever.
John May Tatum.
Gerald Burnett O'Grady.
Paul Wilkins Kendall.
John Franklin Farley.
Charles Henry Moore, jr.
James Wentworth Freeman.
Alexander John Mackenzie.
Wiley Vinton Carter.
Ira Platt Swift.
Wilbur Eugene Dunkelberg.
James Hicks Carney Hill.
Victor Crippen Broome.
Thomas Reynolds Denny.
Frank Mathews Corzelius.
Julius Lynch Pyland.
Arthur Pulsifer.
Farrin Allen Hillard.
William Jesserel Mason.
Elliott Watkins.
Francis James Gillespie.
Jesse Lewis Gibney.
Robert Hale Vesey.
Clarence Miles Mendenhall, jr.
Kester Lovejoy Hastings.
George McKnight Williamson, jr.
Howard Waite Brimmer.
Charles Milner Smith, jr.
Albert Brownfield Goodin.
Walter Joseph Muller.
Harry Lovejoy Rogers, jr.
George Bryan Conrad.
William Stephen Murray.
Harry Krieger.
Raymond Wainwright Odor.
James Clyde Welch.
Miner Welsh Bonwell.
John Perry Pence.
John Leo Binder.
Joseph Magoffin Glasgow.
Elmer Mike Jenkins.
James Lawrence Keasler.
Rutherford Dent McGiffert.
Richard Bryan Wheeler.
Thomas Roswell Aaron.
Charles Llewellyn Gorman.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be first lieutenants with rank from November 9, 1918.

First Lieut. John Murray Welch.
First Lieut. Merrill Clary Sosman.
First Lieut. Jacob John Mann.
First Lieut. John Luverne Hemstead.
First Lieut. Charles Gilbert Irish.
First Lieut. George Palmer McNeill, jr.
First Lieut. Sidne Ober Rees., jr.
First Lieut. Oscar Thweatt Kirksey.
Capt. William Walsh Lerman.
First Lieut. Victo Roland Turner.
First Lieut. Frederic Damrau.
First Lieut. Charles William Henderson.
First Lieut. William Donaldson Fleming.
First Lieut. Harry Gardner Johnson.
First Lieut. John Henry Murphy.
First Lieut. Charles Anthony Cibelius.
First Lieut. James Winn Sherrill.
First Lieut. Philip Lewis Cook.
First Lieut. Edward Augustus Lane.
First Lieut. Charles Fremont Snell.
First Lieut. Arthur Luis Guerra.
First Lieut. Maximilian Mark Nemser.
Capt. Charles Henry Manlove, jr.
Capt. Eugene Vernon Powell.
First Lieut. Henry Tayloe Compton.
First Lieut. John Henry Bullock.
First Lieut. Howard Barton Swan.
First Lieut. Walter van Olinda Moore.
First Lieut. John Nagle Hayes.
First Lieut. Edgar Harvey Albers.
First Lieut. Benjamin William Lewis.
First Lieut. Lawrence Henry Fitzgerald.
First Lieut. George Heinrichs Preston.
First Lieut. Edgar William Kemner.
First Lieut. Walter Schneider Bennett.
First Lieut. Louis Frederick Sanmann.
First Lieut. Maurice Blocher Bender.
First Lieut. Clifford Edward Bergin.
First Lieut. John Bunting Haines.
First Lieut. Guy Champion Milnor.
First Lieut. Robert Bogan.
First Lieut. James Wright Clarkson.
First Lieut. Floyd Ellsworth Best.
First Lieut. Paul Seibert Seabold.
First Lieut. Sidney Jonas Wolfermann.
First Lieut. Ralph Maurice DeGraff.
First Lieut. Thomas William Connolly.
First Lieut. Irl Cephas Riggin.
First Lieut. Whitman Carlisle McConnell.
First Lieut. Clarence Mansfield Reddig.
First Lieut. Ernest Jackson Steves.
First Lieut. John Adams Logan.
First Lieut. Raymond Edwin Elliott.
First Lieut. George Arnold Brown.

To be first lieutenants with rank from November 15, 1918.

Maj. Jesse P. Truax.
Maj. Charles Henry Stearns.
Maj. Ralph Waldo Newton.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Albert P. Niblack to be a rear admiral in the Navy from the 20th day of March, 1918.

The following-named officers to be assistant naval constructors in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), from the 23d day of September, 1918:

Willis C. Sutherland,
Frederick E. Haeberle,
Grover C. Klein, and
Norborne L. Rawlings.

The following-named pay inspectors to be pay directors in the Navy, with the rank of captain, for temporary service, from the 5th day of November, 1918:

George R. Venable,
David V. Chadwick,
Trevor W. Leutze, and
Eugene C. Tobey.

The following-named paymasters to be pay inspectors in the Navy, with the rank of commander, for temporary service, from the 5th day of November, 1918:

Elijah H. Cope,
William N. Hughes,
Harold W. Browning,
Harry E. Collins,
Ellsworth H. Van Patten,
Maurice H. Karker,
Brainerd M. Dobson,
John N. Jordan,
Lewis W. Jennings, jr.,
Charles E. Parsons,
John F. O'Mara, and
Raymond E. Corcoran.

Carpenter Everette O. Smith to be an assistant naval constructor in the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service, from the 15th day of October, 1918.

Acting Pay Clerk Hunter J. Norton to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of ensign for temporary service from the 15th day of September, 1918, to correct the date from which he takes rank as previously confirmed.

Acting Pay Clerk Aner Erickson to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of ensign for temporary service from the 15th day of August, 1918, to correct the date from which he takes rank as previously confirmed.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy for temporary service from the 21st day of September, 1918:

Herschel P. Cook,
Charles R. Smith, and
Gordon M. Jackson.

Ensign Wilfred E. Shuit, of the United States Naval Reserve Force, to be an ensign in the Navy for temporary service from the 1st day of November, 1918.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 18, 1918.

UNITED STATES CONSUL.

CLASS 4.

George A. Bucklin to be a consul of class 4.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGE.

John W. Hanan to be United States district judge, district of the Canal Zone.

UNITED STATES ATTORNEY.

Charles F. Clyne to be United States attorney, northern district of Illinois.

COAST GUARD.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Coast Guard for temporary service:

William P. Kain,
Floyd J. Sexton,
Clement J. Todd,
Gustavus U. Stewart,
Joseph F. Farley, jr.,
David P. Marvin,
Carl H. Abel, and
Edward M. Webster.

First lieutenants of Engineers to be captains of Engineers in the Coast Guard for temporary service:

Benjamin C. Thorn,
Milton R. Daniels,
Ellis Reed-Hill,
Francis C. Allen,
Mayson W. Torbet, and
Gustavus R. O'Connor.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Charles F. Hughes to be a rear admiral for temporary service.

Commander Allen Buchanan to be a captain for temporary service.

Lieut. William L. Wright to be a lieutenant commander for temporary service.

Lieut. Hamilton V. Bryan to be a lieutenant commander for temporary service.

Lieut. Elroy L. Vanderkloot to be a lieutenant commander for temporary service.

Lieut. Wilbur J. Ruble to be a lieutenant commander for temporary service.

Lieut. John R. Palmer to be a lieutenant commander for temporary service.

The following-named naval constructors, with the rank of commander, to be naval constructors, with the rank of captain, for temporary service:

Henry Williams and
Henry T. Wright.

The following-named naval constructors, with the rank of lieutenant commander, to be naval constructors, with the rank of commander, for temporary service:

Alexander H. Van Keuren,
Roy W. Ryden,
Waldo P. Druley,
Paul H. Fretz,
Fred G. Coburn, and
Herbert S. Howard.

The following-named assistant naval constructors, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), to be assistant naval constructors, with the rank of lieutenant, for temporary service:

Henry R. Oster,
William H. Hopkins, jr.,
Lawrence B. Richardson,
Homer N. Wallin,
William J. Malone,
Ralph S. McDowell, and
William C. Wade.

The following-named officers to be assistant naval constructors, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service:

Michael C. Faber,
William A. Nightingale,
Frank A. Saar, and
Garrison R. Arey.

Capt. John A. Hoogewerff to be a rear admiral.

Capt. Marbury Johnston to be a rear admiral.

Lieut. Commander Fletcher L. Sheffield to be a commander.

Lieut. Commander Louis Shane to be a commander.

Ensign Merrill T. Kinne to be a lieutenant (junior grade).

Commander Frank H. Clark to be a captain.

The following-named lieutenant commanders to be commanders:

Allen Buchanan,
John M. Enochs,
Clarence L. Arnold, and
Frederick L. Oliver.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders:

Claude A. Bonvillian,
Herndon B. Kelly,
Hamilton F. Glover, and
George H. Bowdey.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants:

Franklin S. Steinwachs,
James A. Logan,
Richard P. Myers,
Carleton H. Wright,
Schuyler Mills,
Carroll M. Hall,
John J. Brown,
James C. Monfort,
Lunsford L. Hunter,
Daniel E. Barbey,
Walter S. Haas, and
John P. Bowden.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade):

Homer H. H. Harrison,
James R. Kyle, jr., and
Albert R. Stephan.

Midshipman Herschel P. Cook to be an ensign.

Boatswain Edmund Delavy to be a chief boatswain.

Machinist John A. Ward to be a chief machinist.

Lloyd C. McDonald to be an assistant dental surgeon with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade).

The following-named officers to be assistant naval constructors with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade).

Henry R. Oster,
William H. Hopkins, jr.,
Lawrence B. Richardson,
Homer N. Wallin,
William J. Malone,
Ralph S. McDowell, and
William C. Wade.

The following lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders for temporary service:

Conrad Ridgely,
Edward O. McDonnell,
Walter S. De Lany,
Hans Ertz,
Hubert V. La Bombard,
Thomas M. Shock,
Robert P. Mohle,
Robert A. Lavender,
Walter S. Haas,
Aaron S. Merrill,
Charlie P. McFeaters,
George D. Hull, and
James E. Brenner.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants for temporary service:

William Seyford,
George E. Maynard,
Gottlieb Sherer,
Arthur B. McCrary,
Axel Lindblad,
Seldon L. Almon,
Thomas W. Mather, and
Chares L. Poor, jr.

Ensign Stuyvesant Wainwright, jr., to be a lieutenant (junior grade) for temporary service.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns for temporary service:

William Pfeffer,
Benjamin V. Goepfert,
Lester E. Auger,
Charles R. Hoffecker,
Samuel A. Katz,
Walter G. Neal,
Edward G. Nolan,
Walter F. A. Dixon,
Edward A. Stein,
William R. Ross,
Scott E. Peck, and
Angus V. Chisholm.

The following-named enlisted men to be ensigns for temporary service:

George E. Hummer,
Arnold Hanchett,
Charles F. Grisham,
William Hartenstein,
Leonard Sicer,
Henry L. Burmann,
Edward J. Tyrrell,
Virgil D. Duke,
Charlie S. East,
William C. Betzer,
Ralph E. Thomas,
Richard W. Thompson,
John H. Thomas,
James M. Haynes,
Jesse F. Cordes,
Joe R. Robson,
John S. Hawkins,
Erastus E. McClaine,
Reuben F. Davis, and
Charles H. Trask.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters with rank of ensign, for temporary service:

Mason E. Mitchell,
Albert T. Creightney,
Ervine R. Brown,
Charles Musil,
Forrest Ivanhoe,
Ray E. Snedaker,
Samuel L. Bates,
Clifton I. DuFilho,
George W. Davis,
Guild Bruda,
Chauncey J. Buckley,
Don M. Robinson,
Evans C. Sorenson,
Edward E. Thiele,
Arthur C. Schroeder,
John T. Knox,
Robert R. Blaisdell,
Fred W. Lynch, jr.,
Charles Schaaf,
Edmund J. Flynn,
Louis F. Randall,
Ray W. Byrns,
Walter Wilson, jr.,
William W. Wise,
John T. Neighorn,
Guy E. Holmes,
Alvin S. Reid,
William D. Blaker,
Howard B. Stout,
Robert H. Lenson,
Arthur C. Wallen,
Edward F. Ney, and
Ernest C. Middleton.

The following-named citizens to be acting chaplains, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service:

Carl W. Becker,
William F. Blackard,
Edward C. Boynton,
John A. McCarthy,
John R. Spann, and Umphrey Lee.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders for temporary service:

Harry D. McHenry,
Harry R. Bogusch,
George C. Fuller,
William M. Quigley,
Albert R. Mack,
James A. Saunders, and
John H. Culin.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters for temporary service:

Clarence E. Kastenbein,
James H. Stevens,
Ellsworth F. Sparks,
Trigg M. Smith,
William G. Conrad,
Orville F. Byrd,
Ellory F. Carr,
James D. G. Wognum,
Edgar C. Hartup,
Robert Von Ritter,
David A. Bachman,
Daniel L. McCarthy,
John E. Wood,
Harry A. Miller,
Harvey R. Dye,
Norris D. Whitehill,
Verney Carroll,
Louis A. Puckett,
George Scratchley,
Charles B. Forrest,
John P. Killeen,
Karl S. Farnum,
Lester B. Karelle,
Harold E. Walker,
Willard B. Hinckley,
Charles H. Gillilan,
Jacob K. Ziesel,
Hunter J. Norton,
Leon Dancer,
Charles H. Ritt,
Joseph W. Cavanagh,
Harry E. Wickham, jr.,
William O. Wood,
Samuel E. Thompson,
James E. Brennan,
Joseph M. Devine,
George L. Thomas,
Theodore M. Stock, and
Chester B. Peake

Brig. Gen. (temporary) Charles G. Long to be a brigadier general in the Marine Corps.

Col. Smedley D. Butler to be a brigadier general in the Marine Corps, for temporary service.

Col. (temporary) Newt H. Hall to be a colonel in the Marine Corps.

Lieut. Col. (temporary) Harold C. Snyder to be lieutenant colonel in the Marine Corps.

The following-named captains to be majors in the Marine Corps, for temporary service:

Ethelbert Talbot,
Louis R. de Roode, and
John A. Minnis.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Marine Corps for temporary service:

Robert P. Jeter,
Lawrence B. Smith,
Richard O. Sanderson,
Louis S. Davis,
Jonathan Lucas, jr.,
Archie W. French,
William L. York,
Harry D. Gibbons,
John F. Williams,
Howard B. Freeman, and
Bruce J. Mansfield.

The following-named second lieutenants to be first lieutenants in the Marine Corps, for temporary service:

Melvin J. Stinchfield, jr.,
Pierson M. Tuttle,
Herman L. McLeod,
Clarence H. Hartley,
John T. Selden,
Frank C. Myers,
Joseph D. Broderick,
Louis A. Perraud,
Grant L. Hill,
Arthur F. Sennholtz,
Carl R. Dietrich,

Edward B. Irving,
Wells W. Miller,
Keesler B. Low,
George Ehrhart, jr.,
Elmer E. Hall, and
Charles F. Worthen.

POSTMASTERS.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Owen A. O'Neil, Chatham.

NEW MEXICO.

Harvey Springer, Dawson.

MISSISSIPPI.

John R. Meunier, Biloxi.
Charner W. Triplett, jr., Carthage.
Josie P. Bullock, Drew.
Robert M. Izard, Newhebron.
John J. Stokes, Osyka.
Harrison L. Robins, Rienzi.
William W. Cain, West.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, November 18, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty Father, dispenser of all wisdom, power, and goodness, we bless Thy holy name that the world-wide war is over; but in the readjustment which must inevitably follow we pray that Thy counsels may prevail in the task of selecting strong, pure, noble men who shall sit in the peace council; that they may measure out justice to those who need discipline, mercy to those who need mercy, reparation to those who need reparation, and comfort to those who are in sorrow; and that, above all, great principles for the guidance of nations shall be established in a peace which shall endure forever; that Thy kingdom may come and Thy will be done in earth as in heaven, through the precepts and example of Thy Son Jesus Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Thursday, November 14, 1918, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER ELECT.

Mr. COADY. Mr. Speaker, I ask that Mr. CARVILLE D. BENSON, of Maryland, who was elected to fill the unexpired term of our late colleague, Mr. TALBOTT, be sworn in this morning.

The SPEAKER. The Chair has the credentials of the gentleman from Maryland, and they are in regular form.

Mr. BENSON appeared before the bar of the House and took the oath prescribed by law.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES.

A message in writing from the President of the United States was communicated to the House of Representatives by Mr. Sharkey, one of his secretaries, who also informed the House of Representatives that the President had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

On October 29, 1918:

H. R. 12976. An act providing for the protection of the users of the telephone and telegraph service and the properties and funds belonging thereto during Government operation and control.

On October 30, 1918:

H. R. 12404. An act authorizing the construction of a building for the Public Health Service in the city of Washington, D. C.

On November 1, 1918:

H. J. Res. 340. Joint resolution making appropriations for certain necessary operations of the Government for the month of November, 1918, and for other purposes.

On November 4, 1918:

H. R. 13086. An act making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, and prior fiscal years, on account of war expenses, and for other purposes.

On November 5, 1918:

H. R. 12438. An act authorizing the conveyance of the United States jail and land on which the same is located at Guthrie, Okla., to Logan County, Okla.

On November 7, 1918:

H. R. 7637. An act to authorize the construction and maintenance of a dike on Depot Slough, Lincoln County, Oreg.

H. R. 11949. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Pearl River, between Pearl River County, Miss., and Washington Parish, La.

H. R. 12631. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Winnebago, in the State of Illinois, and the town of Rockford, in said county and State, to construct a bridge across Rock River, at or near Camp Grant.

H. R. 12773. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Little Calumet River, in Cook County, State of Illinois, at or near the village of Riverdale, in said county.

H. R. 13036. An act transferring jurisdiction and control for the period of the war over the Southern Branch of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers from the board of managers of the National Home for Disabled Volunteer Soldiers to the Secretary of War for use for Army hospital purposes.

H. R. 10205. An act to provide for the consolidation of national banking associations.

REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE (H. DOC. NO. 1437, 65TH CONG., 3D SESS.).

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States, which the Clerk read, as follows:

To the Senate and House of Representatives:

As required by the act of Congress to regulate and improve the civil service of the United States, approved January 16, 1883, I transmit herewith the Thirty-fifth Annual Report of the United States Civil Service Commission for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918.

WOODROW WILSON.

THE WHITE HOUSE, November 18, 1918.

The SPEAKER. Ordered printed and referred to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service.

REFERENCE OF THE ADDRESS OF THE PRESIDENT.

The SPEAKER. The message read by the President of the United States here the other day about the armistice the Chair neglected to refer, and he now refers it to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. BRUMBAUGH, by unanimous consent, was granted leave of absence, for two weeks, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn until Thursday next.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, November 21, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. SCOTT of Michigan: A bill (H. R. 13139) providing for the free transportation of soldiers, sailors, and marines in the service of the United States on all railroads operated and controlled by the United States; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HICKS.: A bill (H. R. 13140) giving to every person who receives an honorable discharge from the naval service a bonus of one month's pay; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13141) giving to every person who receives an honorable discharge from military service a bonus of one month's pay; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 13142) making the 11th day of November in each and every year a legal public holiday; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. DUPRÉ: A bill (H. R. 13143) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of New Orleans, La.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Resolution (H. Res. 449) relating to allowance for railroad fare, quarters, and subsistence of discharged soldiers; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DRANE: Resolution (H. Res. 450) authorizing the Clerk of the House to pay Mary B. Jones, daughter of Thomas D. Jones, late an employee of the House of Representatives, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death; to the Committee on Accounts.

By Mr. HEFLIN: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 350) declaring the 11th day of November a national holiday to be known as Wilson Day; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. MAHER: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 351) declaring November 11 of each year to be a national holiday; to the Committee on the Library.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred, as follows:

By Mr. ANDERSON: A bill (H. R. 13144) granting an increase of pension to Michael Fogarty; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13145) granting a pension to Feronka Dotzenrot; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HICKS: A bill (H. R. 13146) for the relief of Carolyn Wheeler Kobbe; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SHERWOOD: A bill (H. R. 13147) granting a pension to Albert Beehler; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13148) granting an increase of pension to John C. Koepplinger; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13149) granting an increase of pension to Bavin Copeland; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13150) granting an increase of pension to Manly R. Yardley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13151) granting an increase of pension to John Daily; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13152) granting an increase of pension to William H. Ramey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII,

Mr. DARROW presented a resolution of the United Business Men's Association of Philadelphia, Pa., in favor of legislation providing for the retirement of superannuated Government employees, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, November 21, 1918.

The chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we have come to Thee with the great burdens of state upon our hearts and minds. Thou hast brought us to the day of victory and great glory has come to our arms. Thou hast brought us into vital contact with the nations of the earth. Thou hast given us a place of great power in the world. We desire in the exercise of our great obligations and duties to keep before us Thy will, to build states and to build a world citizenship upon the unchanging principles of Thy revealed will. Guide us day by day as we labor to advance the interests of mankind. Give us constantly the assurance of Thy presence and blessing. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Monday last, when on request of Mr. SHEPPARD and by unanimous consent the further reading was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

SENATOR FROM MISSOURI.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I present the credentials of Senator-elect SELDEN P. SPENCER, of Missouri, and ask that they be read to the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read.

The Secretary read, as follows:

THE STATE OF MISSOURI,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

TO THE PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, SELDEN P. SPENCER was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of Missouri a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the unexpired term of the late William Joel Stone.

In testimony whereof, I hereunto set my hand and cause to be affixed the great seal of the State of Missouri. Done at the city of Jefferson, this 19th day of November, A. D. 1918.

FREDERICK D. GARDNER,

By the Governor:
[SEAL.]

JOHN L. SULLIVAN,
Secretary of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the credentials? [After a pause.] Is the newly elected Senator in the Chamber?

Mr. REED. He is.

The VICE PRESIDENT. He will present himself at the desk and take the oath of office.

Mr. SPENCER was escorted to the Vice President's desk by Mr. REED, and the oath prescribed by law having been administered to him he took his seat in the Senate.

SENATOR FROM KENTUCKY.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, at the last meeting of the Senate I objected to calling the name of Senator MARTIN of Kentucky because there had been no one selected at the general election to fill out the short term occasioned by the death of the late Senator James. As this raises a new question, I ask unanimous consent that the question as to Mr. MARTIN's right to a seat in the Senate be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for investigation and report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

SENATOR FROM NEW HAMPSHIRE.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair presents the credentials of Hon. HENRY W. KEYES, Senator elect from the State of New Hampshire for the term of six years beginning March 4, 1919. The credentials will be printed in the RECORD and placed on file.

The credentials are as follows:

STATE OF NEW HAMPSHIRE,
EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT.

To the PRESIDENT OF THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES:

This is to certify that on the 5th day of November, 1918, HENRY W. KEYES was duly chosen by the qualified electors of the State of New Hampshire a Senator from said State to represent said State in the Senate of the United States for the term of six years, beginning on the 4th day of March, 1919.

Witness: His excellency, our governor, HENRY W. KEYES, and our seal hereto affixed at Concord, this 15th day of November, A. D. 1918.

HENRY W. KEYES, Governor.

By the governor:
[SEAL.]

EDWIN C. BEAN,
Secretary of State.

CONGRATULATORY CABLEGRAMS FROM AMERICAN REPUBLICS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a congratulatory cablegram from the president of the Council of State of Haiti, which will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

PORT AU PRINCE, November 17, 1918.

To the Senate of the United States,
Washington:

The Council of State of Haiti, happy at the success of the arms of the United States and allies, expresses to the Senate of the United States its confidence in a final peace founded on right, justice, and humanity.

LEGITIME,
President of the Council of State.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The cablegram will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, before it is referred I should like to state that the Committee on Foreign Relations have had under consideration several messages of a similar sort from legislative bodies of American Republics and have instructed me to report a resolution requesting the Vice President to acknowledge the receipt of the same, and I should like to have the privilege of incorporating this message from Haiti for the same purpose.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. If there is no objection, I will report at this time the resolution which the Committee on Foreign Relations presents and ask that the Secretary incorporate with the names in the resolution the message received from the Republic of Haiti. I do this because we are on the eve of final adjournment and there ought to be a prompt acknowledgment. I ask that the Secretary may read the resolution as modified.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 340) as modified and accompanying report, as follows:

The Committee on Foreign Relations, to which were referred the cablegram addressed to the President of the Senate of the United States by Ricardo Dolz President of the Senate of the Republic of Cuba, dated November 11, 1918; and also the cablegram addressed to the President of the Senate of the United States by Ismael Vasquez, president of the Senate of the Republic of Bolivia, and Atiliano Aparicio, secretary of state of Bolivia; and also the cablegram addressed to the President of the Senate of the United States by President Legitime, of the Council of State of Haiti; and also the cablegram addressed to the American Senate by the Senate of the Republic of Uruguay, and signed by Ricardo Areco, its president, and M. Solsona, the secretary, all of which congratulate the Senate of the United States upon a successful termination of the war, having had the same under consideration, favorably report for adoption the following resolution:

Resolved, That the Vice President be, and he is hereby, requested, in the name of the Senate of the United States, to acknowledge the receipt of the cablegrams addressed to the Vice President of the United States by the Senate of Cuba, the Senate of Bolivia, the Senate of Uruguay, and the Council of State of Haiti, all of which congratulate the Senate of the United States upon a successful termination of the war, and to express the appreciation of the Senate for the friendly greetings and congratulations contained therein.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the resolution is adopted.

AFFAIRS IN COSTA RICA.

Mr. LODGE. I present a cablegram from San Jose, Costa Rica, and ask that it may be read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SAN JOSE, COSTA RICA, November 16, 1918.

Senator LODGE, Washington, D. C.:

President Tinoco declared twelfth holiday. Enthusiastic celebration by Government officials and people of Costa Rica, joined by all foreign residents of allied nations. Resolution in joint session of Congress to celebrate allied victory opposed strenuously by anti-Tinoco and pro-German Congressman Roberto Hernandez, Carlos Diaz, Everisto Mora. After day of excitement, friends of Tinoco, pro-allied members, passed resolution. Our chargé d'affaires's [Johnson] indiscreet public speech was construed and discussed under great excitement in Congress as an attack upon the Government. About 20 young men gathered near our legation, attempting demonstration against the Government, crying "Death to the Government," under the delusion they would be protected by Johnson. The police immediately dispersed them, causing some friction with our representative. The great pro-German and German influence will not be able to destroy the present Government. Financial condition good, farmers prosperous, and pro-allies happy. Johnson's open approval for more than a year of pro-German attempts to destroy the present Government and his notorious attempt to have the agent here of the British bondholders seriously injure the country financially should be immediately investigated by our Government.

JOHN N. POPHAM.

TRANSPORTATION OF THE MAILS (S. DOC. NO. 302).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Postmaster General, transmitting, pursuant to law, certain information relative to the authorization and direction for the readjustment of compensation to be paid to railroad companies for the transportation of the mails, etc., which was referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by G. F. Turner, one of its clerks, announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 60) providing that in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11945, an act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes," the Clerk be authorized to make certain corrections, etc., in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to a concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 61) authorizing the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 21st day of November, 1918, at 5 o'clock post meridian, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 282. An act amending the public buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz.; and

H. R. 10818. An act to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. KELLOGG obtained the floor and presented matter which follows the reference of the House concurrent resolution.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota will yield to me, I will ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution which has just been received from the House of Representatives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. KELLOGG. If the consideration of the concurrent resolution is going to involve debate I shall have to object until I finish my remarks, which will only occupy a few moments.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I do not think the resolution is debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is not debatable.

Mr. BORAH. The Chair asked if there was objection to the consideration of the resolution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to hear the resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. If there is an objection the resolution must go to the Committee on Appropriations. If not the Chair will lay the resolution before the Senate for consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should like to have the resolution read, if there is no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will lay the resolution before the Senate and see what can be done.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is no question but that the Committee on Appropriations is unanimously in favor of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 61.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 21st day of November, 1918, at 5 o'clock post meridian.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, it has been suggested by the Senator from Virginia that the resolution is not debatable. I ask the Chair whether that is a correct interpretation of the rule?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks that the resolution is the same as a motion to adjourn.

Mr. CUMMINS. And is not debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. And that motions to adjourn are not debatable.

Mr. CUMMINS. This, however, is a resolution for adjournment sine die.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. There is, I believe, a precedent that a resolution to adjourn sine die is not debatable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair thinks the resolution is not debatable. Senators know whether they want to adjourn or whether they do not.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, the Senator from Virginia has suggested that if the resolution went to the Committee on Appropriations undoubtedly the committee would be unanimously in favor of it. I do not intend to make any particular opposition to adjournment, but I do not think it is well advised; and if there is an opportunity to vote, I shall vote against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. BORAH. I am going to object to the present consideration in order to give us time to know whether we want to adopt it or not.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I did not hear what the Chair ruled in respect to the final adjournment resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The concurrent resolution was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, there being an objection to its consideration.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Chair if he ruled that the resolution must go to the committee? Can not a motion to adjourn be considered without going to a committee?

The VICE PRESIDENT. This is a resolution which invariably goes to the Committee on Appropriations, unless by unanimous consent it is considered by the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Very well, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Such resolutions have been referred to the Committee on Appropriations ever since the present occupant of the chair has presided in the Senate.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I am not making any question about the ruling, but I suggest that that course has been pursued for convenience. That committee has jurisdiction of the matter, if any committee has, but I have never known that it was obligatory to refer a motion to adjourn or a resolution to adjourn to a committee. If it goes to any committee, it goes to the Committee on Appropriations, and I am perfectly willing that it should go to that committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair will suggest that reports of committees will soon be in order.

CONTROL OF CABLE LINES.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I send to the desk the resolution adopted by the Association of State Railway and Utilities Commissions at a meeting held in Washington the 13th and 14th of November, pertaining to the taking over of the cable, telegraph, and telephone lines, and I ask that the same be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Whereas it is apparent that the ends sought to be attained by Federal control of telephone and telegraph lines as a war measure have already been satisfied as far as is possible, and it is not perceivable that under existing conditions it is desirable that further Government control be exercised pending the return of such properties to State control; and

Whereas during the short period of such control and operation by the Federal Government there has been practically no interference or change in the corporate organization, management, or properties of said telephone and telegraph companies; and

Whereas pending the natural termination of such Federal control the State commissions are embarrassed by the assumption by the Postmaster General of exclusive control over rates: Therefore be it

Resolved, That this association does respectfully recommend to the Postmaster General that the Federal control of the telephone and telegraph lines cease as soon as practicable and the military necessity therefor shall have ended.

Mr. KELLOGG. I also send to the desk a public statement from Mr. Clarence H. Mackay, president of both the Postal Telegraph & Cable Co. and the Commercial Cable Co., together with a letter of Mr. Mackay addressed to Mr. Burleson, Postmaster General, which I ask to have read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Secretary read as follows:

PRESIDENT MACKAY PROTESTS.

Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. and the Commercial Cable Co., on being asked regarding the Government taking the control of the cable lines, said:

"I can not understand why the Government takes over the cables as a war measure notwithstanding the war being now practically ended. The cable companies have rendered splendid service ever since the outbreak of the European war four years ago. Why at this late day the Post Office Department takes over the cables as a war necessity, in the face of the fact that the Navy Department has censored all cable messages since April, 1917, and is still censoring them, is beyond my comprehension. And why, also, the Government should saddle itself with this added burden when, on the other hand, it is trying to reduce the war expense is a mystery.

"The cables, except for the last few days, have been worked to their full capacity, and Government operation can not increase that capacity nor make the rates any cheaper. In fact, I have no doubt that Government operation will result in loss, just as the Government operation of the land lines will undoubtedly result in a very heavy loss. Only a few days ago I wrote Mr. Burleson requesting that the land lines be turned back to the companies, so as to limit the loss of the Government. That letter is quite in point, and reads as follows:

"'NOVEMBER 11, 1918.

"'Hon. ALBERT S. BURLESON,
"'Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

"'MY DEAR MR. BURLESON: In view of the fact that an armistice with Germany has now been signed and a treaty of peace will probably be agreed upon quickly, I take the liberty of suggesting that the telegraph lines be returned to the two telegraph companies at once, as authorized by the President's proclamation, which states that you shall be at liberty to relinquish "in whole or in part to the owners thereof * * * any telegraph * * * system or any part thereof."

"'Such action on your part would save the Government a great deal of money, because, as I am informed, the compensation which has been agreed upon between you and the Western Union Telegraph Co. is much more than that telegraph company is now earning from month to month. That compensation is even more than that company's earnings for 1917, which was the most profitable year in its history. The earnings of that company for the first seven months of this year as reported to the Interstate Commerce Commission were $1,357,225 less than they were for the same period of last year (including cable operations, but any decrease in such cable earnings was undoubtedly more than offset by the alleged decrease of $578,000 in taxes), which would indicate that the year ending July 31, 1919, will show a loss to the Government in connection with that company of at least $2,326,668, and in all probability considerably in excess of that figure. I do not know what the corresponding figures of the Bell Telephone Co. are, but there is no reason for the Government continuing to bear these losses, inasmuch as it can stop them immediately by returning the lines to the telegraph companies. That such a step would meet with general approval is indicated by the speech of Senator MARTIN, of recent date, in which he urges immediate retrenchment in all branches of the Government.

"'There is no such deficiency in your operation of the Postal Telegraph lines, inasmuch as no compensation has yet been agreed upon as to that company.

"'Again, the sooner competition in the telegraph business is restored the greater I believe will be the satisfaction of the public. As you are aware, the joint resolution of Congress of July 16, 1918, authorizing the taking of control of the telegraphs and telephones was purely a war measure "for national security and defense," and this is emphasized by the fact that Congress provided that Federal control "shall not extend beyond the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace," as against the railroad Federal-control bill, which continued the period of Federal control for a period of 21 months after the war. If Congress had intended the telegraph and telephone Federal-control act to be other than a purely war measure, Congress would have made its continuance last for the same period as the railroad control. The fact that the telegraph-telephone control was purely a war measure was also most emphatically emphasized in the debates in both Houses of Congress when the resolution was passed.

"'Certainly the war no longer justifies the Government's retaining these telegraph lines for war purposes. In fact, since August 1, 1918, when the Government first took control of the telegraph lines for war purposes, there has not been a single act in such operation, so far as I can ascertain, that has been different from what such operation would have been if the telegraph companies had been allowed to continue their own control and the Government had not taken over the lines for war purposes. This merely emphasizes the propriety and wisdom of the lines being turned back at once.

"'The compensation to the Postal Telegraph-Cable system is now in course of discussion with your committee, but if you think well of the suggestion to return the lines to both telegraph companies, the Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. is willing to waive any claim for compensation and accept what the lines have actually earned since the beginning of Federal control. All this would save the Government from the loss which it is now sustaining from month to month.

"'On the other hand, if the Government is to continue to keep control of our lines, we certainly are entitled to the same profits that we made during the year prior to July, 1918, which you will notice includes the first six months of 1918, in which six months, as stated above, the Western Union earnings showed a considerable decline, but which was apparently not considered in arriving at their compensation. You will observe, therefore, that the basis on which we are willing to accept compensation is more favorable to the Government than you have granted to the Western Union. Apparently war compensation is based upon war profits, and we are entitled to the same treatment as the Western Union in this respect. I am,

"'Yours, respectfully, CLARENCE H. MACKAY,
"'President.'"

When Newcomb Carlton, president of the Western Union, was asked for a statement regarding the Government's seizure of the cables he said:

"I have nothing to say on the matter. Any statement must come from Washington."

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, if there is no objection in the Senate, I should like to make a few very brief remarks upon this petition and statement.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, it will be remembered that we had carried on the war for nearly a year and a half before it occurred to anyone that it was necessary to take over the telegraphs and telephones and cables as a war measure. When the bill was reported to the Senate for that purpose, the advocates of the bill made no claim that there was any necessity then existing for taking over the telegraph lines. The principal advocates upon the floor of the Senate, the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] and the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LEWIS], made it very plain to the Senate and to the country that the President had no immediate intention of taking over the telegraphs and telephones; that they knew of no necessity for so doing then existing; but that the passage of the bill was simply asked to empower the President to take over the telegraphs and the telephones in the event the necessity of the war should demand it thereafter. I now wish to call attention very briefly to the language of these Senators upon this subject and to show how the action of the Government squares with the spokesmen of the administration. Mr. UNDERWOOD said:

The committee does not present this bill to the Senate with a viewpoint that there is any necessity in this hour confronting the country as a reason why these lines should be taken over.

But it was simply an act, he said, empowering the President to meet the emergency if it should arise. The Senate will remember, I think, the speech of the Senator from Illinois, in which he said:

I deny absolutely that there is a foundation for the charge made that the joint resolution authorizes the President to operate the properties to the exclusion of the companies which own them.

Sir, I do hold and present to these honorable Senators this thought: That when we had passed the joint resolution the President under no wise takes possession of this property, under no circumstances but one does he assume to operate it. The power to him granted by the joint resolution is never to be exercised until subsequently to its passage there are circumstances manifest to him from evidence incontrovertible, proved and evident, that for the national security or for the defense of the country he should step in and assume that control.

And he proceeded to say that the telephone and telegraph lines would be operated by the companies as usual. He said:

The owners will exercise the same domination over the plant; there will be nothing disturbed; there will be nothing interrupted.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. LEWIS. I only desire that the Senator from Minnesota make clear what I knew was his intention. He referred to the speech of the Senator from Illinois, and I should like to have the RECORD show that it was myself and not my colleague [Mr. SHERMAN] who made those observations, in order that he may not bear the responsibility. I also desire that it shall appear that the remarks were made upon a resolution that was then pending before the body, if the Senator from Minnesota will allow me to make that suggestion.

Mr. KELLOGG. I think everyone understood that I referred to the junior Senator from Illinois.

Mr. President, it was also stated upon the floor of the Senate that Congress was about to take a recess, and that something might happen that would require the President to take over the telegraph and telephone lines during the recess.

Mr. President, some of us had doubts upon that subject. We believed that it was part of a scheme really inaugurated by the Postmaster General, who had always been in favor of it, to take over the telegraph and telephone and cable lines as preliminary to Government ownership and Government operation, as we believed the same step was taken in the case of the railroads. We were assured, however, that it was simply a war measure for the national security and defense. Now, what happened? Immediately after the passage of the resolution the President issued a proclamation taking over the telegraph and telephone lines and placing the Postmaster General in charge of their operation; but the cables were not taken over for reasons, I believe, that everybody understands. In the first place, the cable lines were thoroughly censored; not a message since 1917, following our entry into the war, has been or could be sent over the ocean cable lines until it had been read or censored by officers of the United States Government, which was and is as it should be. There was apparently no necessity for taking them over; there was no necessity for taking over the telegraph and telephone lines, as subsequent events have clearly developed.

Now, after the war is over we are met by the astounding proposition that as a war necessity, for the national security and defense, it is necessary to take over the cable lines, or at least a part of them—those cable lines only, I believe, running to Europe. I can not find out that any of the cable lines running to South America have been taken over. I do not know whether the cable lines across the Pacific have been taken over, but I assume that they have been, as they are a part of the Commercial Cable Co.'s lines.

After the war is over, when we are assured that it can not be resumed, because the central empires will be rendered impotent to carry it on, when we are assured by Mr. Creel, according to a statement in the morning papers, that there is to be no further censorship of the cables, there can not be any war necessity whatever for taking them over, we are met by a proposition to take over the cable lines. This demonstrates, it seems to me, beyond question that there never was a war necessity, but that it is a part of a plan to fasten upon this country Government ownership of cables, telephones, and telegraphs, although the Government ownership of telephones and telegraphs certainly has not been profitable, according to the letter of Mr. Mackay. The Government is paying to the Western Union Co. much more than the receipts of the company for the use of the lines, and there is a loss, Mr. Mackay says, of over $2,000,000 already in the operation of those lines. He further offers, I observe by his letter, to take back the Postal and the cable lines without any charge to the Government at all, to assume all the obligations of Government operation and save the Government from any loss.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. CUMMINS. I desire to ask the Senator from Minnesota a question. He has just suggested that the motive for taking over the cable lines may be to advance the Government ownership and operation of those lines in time of peace. Upon reflection, does he not think that the proposed visit of the President of the United States to Europe may present an emergency that has something to do with the assumption of the cable lines by the Government?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I do not see how the President's visit to Europe can in any way be made an excuse for taking over the cable lines; and beyond that I do not desire to speculate on the subject to the Senate. It is perfectly evident that there was and is no war necessity for taking over the cable lines; but, under the guise of a war necessity, we are to be given Government operation of the cables as well as Government operation of telegraphs and telephones, although the latter has not been particularly profitable or agreeable to the American people.

I ask permission to submit as part of my remarks a petition of the Minnesota Railway and Warehouse Utilities Commission having charge of rates and service on telegraphs and telephones, in which they petition Mr. Burleson not to increase enormously the charge for installation. These charges have been increased all the way from $5 to $15 per installation, and more than double the normal rates, costing the people of my State many hundreds of thousands of dollars.

Mr. REED. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Minnesota yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. KELLOGG. I yield.

Mr. REED. There has been some confusion in the Chamber and I could not hear the latter part of the Senator's remarks. Did he say that the rates had been increased for installing telephones in houses?

Mr. KELLOGG. I presented a petition from my State stating that the rates for the installation of telephones had been increased.

Mr. REED. I do not wish to interrupt the Senator, but will he advise us what the extent of the increase has been?

Mr. KELLOGG. I can not say to what extent it has been increased generally over the country. I simply file the petition, and ask that it be made part of my remarks. I do not wish to stop now in the morning hour to read it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the petition referred to by the Senator from Minnesota will be printed in the RECORD.

[The petition referred to will be found as Appendix A.]

Mr. TOWNSEND. May I interrupt the Senator on that point for just a moment?

Mr. KELLOGG. Yes.

Mr. TOWNSEND. It is not only true that rates have been increased, but an order has been issued locally to the effect that telephones can not be temporarily discontinued. For instance, when a man leaves his home, as I leave mine in the summer time, he discontinues the use of his phone and then continues it again when he returns; but notification has been given that that can not be done under the orders of the administration controlling the telephones.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I think there are very substantial reasons why the cable lines especially should not be taken over to Government operation, and certainly not to Government ownership. I stated those reasons in a speech to the Senate on the 11th of July, when a bill on the subject was before the Senate, and I shall not repeat what I then said; but I will remind the Senate that no nation in the world owns its own cable lines extending into foreign countries. They have considered it inadvisable because of the natural objections of a particular country to allowing foreign countries to own public utilities within its territory. As I said before, the landing rights of every cable line that runs to the South American countries contain clauses for their forfeiture in the event that they are assigned to any Government, the principal object being to prevent the United States Government from owning cable lines into those countries. I have no doubt that the President may have obtained the consent of Great Britain temporarily, perhaps—perhaps permanently; I do not know—to take over the cable lines reaching England, and that he perhaps may have obtained the consent of Portugal and France to take over the cable lines reaching those countries.

Mr. President, the development of cable lines to foreign countries is one of the most important things to this country, to our trade and commerce in times of peace; and the extension of those lines is to-day occupying the attention of the great cable companies operating lines to South America. I hope that nothing will be done to imperil the future of our commerce by taking them over to Government operation.

APPENDIX A.

ST. PAUL, MINN., September 9, 1918.

Hon. A. S. BURLESON,
Postmaster General, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: The Minnesota Railroad and Warehouse Commission respectfully begs to enter a protest against the putting into effect in the State of Minnesota of your order No. 1931, in which you order that the telephone companies shall charge "a readiness to serve" or "installation charge" of $5 to $15, dependent upon the monthly rental of the service required by the subscriber.

This commission, upon an application by the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co. and the Tri-State Telephone & Telegraph Co. and the Zenith Telephone Co. to place into effect certain charges for service connections, conducted a hearing on July 9 and 10 last and have attempted to go thoroughly into the merits of an installation charge.

It is not the intention of this commission to raise any objection as to the fundamental principles of a service charge, and will assume, for the purpose of this objection only, that such a charge is a proper charge in building the rate structures for telephone service. The commission does object to the amounts charged on the following grounds:

First. That the sums are excessive and that the telephone companies can not justify such amounts by any cost figures that they may produce.

Second. That the expense of an installation has no connection with the monthly rental charged for telephone service, and that a graduated charge based upon monthly rental has no foundation in theory or practice.

Third. That the installation fee as ordered will actually reduce the number of telephone subscribers and impair the value of the service, and will reduce the operating revenues of the companies and will cause facilities of the companies to remain idle that could be used at a very slight expenditure of labor and material.

The commission bases its objections upon evidence presented to it by the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co., and all of which is of record in this office.

The Northwestern Co. presented figures compiled for the year 1917, derived from cost figures for the making of 42,350 service connections for new subscribers. The company built up its figures from only noncapitalized expense, which, of course, would be the only items that could possibly be taken into consideration in figuring what would be the proper service connection charge. Every dollar of expenditure for the construction work of the installation of a telephone is charged to the capital account, under the accounting system promulgated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, and the only item of expense connected with the original installation that the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co. claimed to be a proper expense charge was a charge for commercial, traffic, and accounting expense of 57 cents. Where the installation was made, where there had been a previous installation that was discontinued, there was an expense item of 68 cents per station for inspecting and putting in shape the inside wiring that had previously been installed. All of the other expense claimed by the telephone company, which amounted to $4.02, was expense not arising at the time of the installation, but was an expense due to the discontinuance of a subscriber's station and loss of inside wiring and drop wires, which had to be credited to capital account.

The total expense built up by the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co. amounted to $5.27. This expense was based upon loss arising from 19,000 stations discontinued and not reused, and was spread over a total of 42,350 installations. It would therefore appear that an installation charge of $5 would reimburse the company for any loss that they might have from the installations, and all over and above the sum of $5 would be in the nature of a gift to the company and would be a great burden upon the telephone subscriber. All items of expense shown by the company were taken from the station removal and change account, according to the accounting system prescribed by the Interstate Commerce Commission.

In regard to the second objection, the records of this office show that telephone rates are dependent upon many varying conditions and circumstances, and that no classification of service can be made just based upon the monthly rate alone; that many telephone companies that have been conscientiously serving the public and maintaining a low, reasonable rate will have only a $5 installation charge, while other companies that have carried on their business for mere personal gain, without consideration of the public, and have excessive rates, will be receiving a $10 or $15 installation charge.

In regard to the third objection, in view of the fact that it is generally conceded that the telephone systems of the country are absolutely essential for the prosecution of the war, it therefore follows that telephone communication to as many subscribers as can possibly be reached is a desirable situation. In carrying on of local war program in connection with liberty loan, Red Cross, war savings stamps, Fuel and Food Administrations, draft boards, and the many other organizations for war purposes, it will generally be found that the heads of the local organizations are among the busiest men in their various communities; that they are absolutely dependent upon telephone service for the successful conduct of their duties. The saving of time and labor of these volunteers and patriotic local committee men is essential and important, and in the aggregate means immense value in time and labor.

At first thought it would appear that the installation charges under order No. 1931 would merely curtail any further development or construction of telephone facilities, but it is well to consider the telephone business and the number of changes that are made in telephone subscribers each year. As stated above the new service connections made by the Northwestern Telephone Exchange Co. for the year 1917 were 42,350. The Northwestern Co. do not operate half of the total number of telephones within the State of Minnesota and carrying that as the average would mean that over 85,000 installations were made in the State during the year 1917.

According to the testimony of the telephone companies at said hearings there is a gain of one subscriber for every six or seven installations; in other words, that where there are six new installations there are five subscribers who discontinue the service. That is, out of the 85,000 installations in the State of Minnesota for the year 1917 there would be a gain to the companies of not over ten or twelve thousand new subscribers, while there would be a discoutinuance of something like 75,000 stations. Each discontinuance of service means the releasing of telephone facilities for a new subscriber. If the installation charge remains as in order No. 1931, it will mean that out of 85,000 installations, which would be a normal condition without the installation charge, a large percentage—and our estimate would be in excess of 50 per cent of the subscribers normally taking telephone service—would not under the new order take telephone service. That will mean a reduction in the number of telephone subscribers, a reduction in the revenues to telephone companies; a reduction in the number of citizens that can be reached over the telephone lines of this State.

The restriction of the additions of new facilities or new construction could be provided for by a direct order to that effect, and without imposing a hardship upon the citizens seeking new service through facilities already owned by the telephone companies and in place for use.

The commission has submitted these facts to the Federal Telephone Administration, trusting that the investigation made by this commission would be of some service to the Federal administration. It is the desire of this commission to work in harmony with the Federal Telephone Administration in all possible ways and to make the administration of telephone properties as successful as possible.

We trust that you will give the matters herein set forth careful consideration, as we firmly believe that an injustice is being done to the telephone subscribers in the State of Minnesota and that the telephone service will be hindered rather than aided by the installation charge.

Yours, very truly,

IRA B. MILLS, Chairman.
O. P. B. JACOBSON, Commissioner.
FRED W. PUTNAM, Commissioner.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I ask that the resolution which I send to the desk be now read. I sought to have it read before the eminent Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] began, but I did not wish to interrupt him. It bears directly upon this subject, and I desire to have the resolution read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it a petition?

Mr. LEWIS. It is a resolution, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is presenting it?

Mr. LEWIS. Yes; I am presenting this resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We have not yet reached the order of resolutions. We have not started yet. The Senator from Minnesota was given unanimous consent to proceed out of order.

Mr. LEWIS. But upon a resolution, and I thought thereby other resolutions were in order. I should like to ask unanimous consent at this moment to have this particular resolution read, as it bears upon this subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. LEWIS. I shall not address myself to it at this time. I will wait until after the morning hour.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 348) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That it is the expression of the United States Senate that the policy of the United States Government for the future should be that of Government ownership of interstate railroads, telegraphs, telephones, and also national lines of communication necessary to complete postal and telegraphic service to the citizens of the Nation.

Resolved further, That the Government should possess and own all natural agencies for the production of fuel produced and created from the land and produced and created as the result of natural agencies. It shall construct and own ships and agencies of water transportation necessary for merchant marine, all to be maintained and continued in behalf of the United States and for the advancement of its commerce so as to facilitate the dealings of the citizens of the United States in matters of trade and shipping with all citizens of other countries.

Resolved further, That the method of the operation of these agencies heretofore mentioned is a subject to be regulated and adjusted in each instance according to the demands and circumstances surrounding the operation of that particular agency at the particular time of the demand for the use of that agency, be it railroad, steamship, telephone, telegraph, coal, or oil.

COTTON EXPORTS.

Mr. GORE. I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a letter addressed by the Director of the Bureau of Markets to Chairman McCormick, of the War Trade Board, in regard to the discontinuance of the embargo on cotton, also a letter which I have myself addressed to Mr. McCormick on the same subject. I ask also to have inserted in the RECORD two or three other statements and letters which I will furnish at a later day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, November 20, 1918.

MY DEAR SIR: I am writing you in regard to the existing embargo on raw cotton. The embargo was originally authorized with the distinct understanding that it was to be used in order to hinder the shipment of supplies, either directly or indirectly, to our enemies. This purpose and object must, of course, be justified by every loyal citizen. So long as a technical state of war continues between the United States and the central powers there can be no objection on the part of the cotton farmers or their friends to the continued application of the embargo to cotton shipments which might find their way into the hands of the enemy. The same objection does not apply, however, to the shipments of cotton destined either to the allies or destined in good faith to neutral countries. To prohibit or restrict the shipments of cotton to the allies or neutrals must inevitably depress the price of this staple commodity. This is a direct loss, not merely to the individual farmer who produces the cotton but to the United States taken collectively. It is both a social and a national loss, as well as an individual loss subtracted from our aggregate resources.

It has been estimated that by lifting the embargo and by providing ample shipping facilities Great Britain could and would use 1,000,000 bales more this year than last; that Japan would use 900,000 bales more this year than last; that Italy would use 600,000 bales more this year than last; that Spain would use 500,000 more bales this year than last, not to mention the lesser neutral and belligerent countries nor the central European countries after the proclamation of peace. Here is a vast potential demand for the present crop of cotton, which would be converted into an effective demand if the embargo were removed and if ample shipping accommodations were provided. The cotton farmers are entitled to whatever enhancement of price would follow upon the timely and judicious removal of these artificial restraints. This is the more so in view of the practical certainty that if next year's cotton crop should be extraordinarily large there would be no artificial interference by the Government to sustain the price and to protect the farmer. Let me repeat, the cotton farmers only desire that equal justice which the President has fitly characterized as the heart of democracy.

The interest of the producers and the interest of our country, taken as a whole, would be greatly subserved by the revocation of the embargo. This would enhance the value of this great national asset while it is still in our own hands, and, what is more, it would be an act of simple justice to our cotton farmers. These considerations justify me in urging most earnestly the immediate revocation of the embargo so far as shipments to the allies and neutrals are concerned.

Most respectfully,

T. P. GORE.

WASHINGTON, November 16, 1918.

HON. VANCE C. MCCORMICK,
Chairman War Trade Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Reference is made to the telegram which you received to-day from New Orleans, signed by more than 50 cotton dealers in that market, and to a request from your board that the committee on cotton distribution make recommendations relative to the subject matter of this telegram. I have received a similar telegram.

The need for cotton by our allies, the neutrals, and the central powers is very great. Many of their spindles are idle. We are preparing to furnish them food. Along with food they must have work to do, and it is necessary to this end that they have raw materials which they may work up into manufactured products. Further, the cessation of hostilities will release additional labor for their mills. The stocks of raw cotton in Europe are very greatly depleted, little reserve stock being left on hand. The representatives of foreign nations with whom we have conferred have recognized and stated very frankly their great need for cotton. They are ready to buy, both to replenish their reserve stocks and to operate their machinery.

With the coming of peace, through the operation of numerous factors, such, for instance, as the release of tonnage from war activities, the stoppage of sinkings by submarines, the building of new tonnage, and the release of neutral and enemy country tonnage, a great deal of additional tonnage will become available for commerce. With the keen need that is felt for cotton there is no doubt that a substantial part of this tonnage will be used for carrying this staple. If the exportation of cotton is facilitated through the ready issuance of export licenses and otherwise, it is altogether likely that even tramp steamers will carry it over from this country.

The cotton situation in the South at the present time is very serious. The stocks of raw cotton in this country at the end of July, 1918, were 3,312,000 bales, being larger than in any prewar year, and if the exports and domestic consumption for the present cotton season are no greater than last season the stocks at the end of July, 1919, will be approximately 4,500,000 bales. There is no doubt, of course, due to conditions already pointed out, that the requirements of the world for the present season will be largely in excess of requirements for the past season. However, during the present critical period of transition from war to peace there is great stagnation, and it is very essential that everything possible be done to alleviate this condition immediately. This is the season during which the producers of cotton harvest their product. Their financial obligations become due during the fall season, and they must sell their product in order to cancel these obligations. With little movement for cotton, either they can not sell it or they are compelled to sell it at a price which represents great sacrifice. This condition touches directly about 3,000,000 citizens of this country, as cotton is produced by a very large number of small producers and not by a very small number of large producers, as in the case of many other commodities. If the cotton is sold at this season at a sacrifice, the result is a loss to those who are least able to bear it. It must also be borne in mind that an unsatisfactory price at this season of the year will result in a curtailment of production next year and in the consequent reduction in the cotton available for clothing the world. Moreover, the question involved concerns the Nation as a whole, and not merely the producers, since cotton in normal times forms our most important article of export.

In view of the conditions outlined above, it is recommended that all possible steps be taken to facilitate the exportation of cotton, and that, so far as is consistent with sound public policy, limitations or restrictions upon the granting of licenses shall be removed. Particularly with reference to Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, and Japan it appears that a very generous policy as regards export licenses ought to be adopted. With reference to Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland it is recommended that until the allies and the United States have in their hands guarantees of the acceptance by Germany of the armistice terms exportation be allowed under licenses on the basis of their prewar consumption or in accordance with the trade agreements now in force with these countries. In any event, it is our opinion that these neutrals should be permitted at least to buy and store in this country the quantity of cotton due them under present trade agreements. After the guarantees required of Germany under the armistice terms are in our hands we are of the opinion that exports of cotton to neutral groups should be permitted on substantially the same terms as exports to our allies.

If the movement of cotton is to be restrained, in view of the coming peace conference, some steps must be taken to avert the immediate disaster which threatens the cotton-producing sections of the United States and the impending misfortune to the Nation at large and the rest of the world through the enforced curtailment in the production of cotton next season.

Very truly, yours,

CHARLES J. BRAND, Chairman.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. SUTHERLAND presented petitions of sundry citizens of Charleston, W. Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to increase the efficiency of the Medical Department of the United States Army, to provide a pharmaceutical corps in that department, and to improve the status and efficiency of the pharmacists in the Army, which were referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Mr. NELSON presented a memorial of the Watkins Medical Co., of Winona, Minn., remonstrating against the proposed tax on nonbeverage alcohol in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a resolution adopted by the Minnesota Federation of Women's Clubs, favoring the passage of the new Federal child-labor bill, which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

He also presented a memorial of the Kondon Manufacturing Co., of Minneapolis, Minn., remonstrating against the extension of the excess-profits tax provision to partnerships and individuals in the pending revenue bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. ASHURST (for Mr. OWEN), from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 10) conferring jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to hear, consider, and determine certain claims of the Cherokee Nation against the United States, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 610) thereon.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 5025) to amend an act entitled "An act for the establishment of marine schools, and for other purposes," reported it with an amendment.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (S. 5026) to amend an act entitled "An act to define, regulate, and punish trading with the enemy, and for other purposes," approved October 6, 1917, reported it without amendment. (S. Rept. No. 612.)

Mr. OVERMAN, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (S. 4785) to incorporate the American Committee for Relief in the Near East, reported it without amendment.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I report from the Committee on Appropriations the adjournment resolution (H. oCn. eRs. 61), and I ask that it be considered at once.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the title of the concurrent resolution.

The SECRETARY. Concurrent resolution providing for the adjournment of the two Houses of Congress on this day at 5 o'clock.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the concurrent resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the concurrent resolution.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, upon the passage of the concurrent resolution I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, the concurrent resolution is not debatable?

The VICE PRESIDENT. That is the opinion of the Chair. It is simply a resolution for an adjournment sine die, and every Senator knows what he wants to do about it.

Mr. SMOOT. I rose simply to make a statement of explanation, but I recognize the ruling of the Chair to be correct.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENDRICK (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New Mexico [Mr. FALL]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and vote "yea."

Mr. KNOX (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] and vote "nay."

Mr. McCUMBER (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. Understanding, however, that if he were present he would vote as I shall upon this question, I vote "yea."

Mr. McLEAN (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. WALSH (when Mr. MYERS's name was called). I announce that my colleague [Mr. MYERS] is absent from the city on official business.

Mr. PENROSE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. As he is absent, I will refrain from voting.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. HOLLIS] and vote "yea."

Mr. SHERMAN (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH]. In his absence I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHAFROTH (when Mr. THOMAS's name was called). I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THOMAS] on account of official business.

Mr. WALSH (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] to the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] and vote "yea."

Mr. LEWIS (when Mr. WILLIAMS's name was called). I announce the absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS], occasioned by illness in his family.

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GERRY]. I transfer that pair to my colleague [Mr. WADSWORTH] and will permit my vote to stand.

Mr. CURTIS. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] and therefore withhold my vote. If at liberty to vote, I should vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR. I announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] is paired with the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON].

The result was announced—yeas 41, nays 18, as follows:

YEAS—41.

Ashurst	King	Pittman	Sutherland
Bankhead	La Follette	Poindexter	Swanson
Beckham	Lewis	Pomerene	Townsend
Benet	Lodge	Ransdell	Underwood
Culberson	McCumber	Saulsbury	Vardaman
Dillingham	Martin, Ky.	Shafroth	Walsh
Fletcher	Martin, Va.	Sheppard	Warren
Gore	Nelson	Simmons	Wolcott
Hitchcock	Nugent	Smith, Ga.
Jones, N. Mex.	Overman	Smith, Md.
Kendrick	Phelan	Smoot

NAYS—18.

Borah	Hale	Knox	Trammell
Brandegee	Harding	McKellar	Watson
Calder	Johnson, Cal.	Moses	Weeks
Cummins	Kellogg	Reed
France	Kenyon	Spencer

NOT VOTING—37.

Baird	Guion	Myers	Smith, Mich.
Chamberlain	Hardwick	New	Smith, S. C.
Colt	Henderson	Norris	Sterling
Curtis	Hollis	Owen	Thomas
Fall	Johnson, S. Dak.	Page	Thompson
Fernald	Jones, Wash.	Penrose	Wadsworth
Frelinghuysen	Kirby	Robinson	Williams
Gerry	Lenroot	Sherman
Goff	McLean	Shields
Gronna	McNary	Smith, Ariz.

So the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

PRESENTATION OF MEDALS.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate joint resolution 186, which I report (No. 611) favorably from the Naval Affairs Committee. Before I make the request I ask that the report and the joint resolution be read.

The SECRETARY. The Senator from Nevada reports favorably from the Committee on Naval Affairs Senate joint resolution 186, authorizing the President of the United States to cause to be struck bronze medals commemorating the winning of the world's war and the valor of our military forces, and to distribute and present such medals to the officers and men of our land, sea, and air forces.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask, also, that the correspondence with regard to the joint resolution be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection? The Chair hears none.

The Secretary read as follows:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
COMMITTEE ON TERRITORIES,
November 13, 1918.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: The heroic services of our military forces upon the land, the sea, and in the air have won the admiration of the world and the undying gratitude of oppressed people everywhere. I know that you, on behalf of the American people, have an eager desire to see that a fitting testimonial and memento be presented to each and all of these American heroes. I know that you have in mind and will suggest a suitable plan for the accomplishment of this patriotic purpose.

Very sincerely, yours,

KEY PITTMAN.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, 18 November, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I talked with the Secretary of War about this resolution and find that he approves as heartily as I do. In haste,

Cordially and sincerely, yours,

WOODROW WILSON.

Hon. KEY PITTMAN,
United States Senate.

Mr. PITTMAN. At a committee meeting this morning the matter was discussed, and I think I am at liberty to say that it met no objection and was favorably passed unanimously by the committee. As the commission to be constituted under the joint resolution will have to prepare the necessary designs, and it will take some time, I request the present consideration of the joint resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendments were on page 1, line 7, to strike out the word "medal" and insert "medals"; and on page 2, line 2, to strike out the word "medal" and insert "medals," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, authorized to cause to be struck bronze medals commemorating the winning of the world's war and the valor of our military forces upon the land, the sea, and in the air, and to present such medals to each and every officer, soldier, and seaman engaged in the service of our Government at any time during the war as a memento of the glorious achievement and as an expression of gratitude on behalf of our Government and of all the people of the United States.

The President is further authorized to appoint a commission to select the form and design of such medals and attachments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 344), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That a committee of two Senators be appointed by the Vice President, to join a similar committee appointed by the House of Representatives, to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses, having completed the business of the present session, are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The VICE PRESIDENT appointed Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. LODGE as the committee under the resolution.

RETRENCHMENT OF WAR EXPENDITURES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. Mr. President, I have a communication from the Secretary of War, which I will send to the desk and ask that it may be read. I will state that it is a communication which I am sure will interest every Senator and interest the country. The armistice with Germany was signed on the 11th day of November. Seven days elapsed between the signing of the armistice and the letter of the Secretary of War. He addressed himself immediately to the very important and all-absorbing question of dispensing with war appropriations and reducing the expenditures of the Government, and in those seven days which have elapsed, as shown by his letter, he has canceled contracts which have saved expenditures to the amount of $1,336,800,818. I think it is a marvelous result that in seven days a billion and a third should have been saved from money that was appropriated for war purposes. I believe all the other departments of the Government are at work on the same line and that they will meet the expectation of the country. There never was a more unanimous sentiment in the country than there is now that war expenditures shall cease, and cease immediately. I ask that the communication from the Secretary of War may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, November 18, 1918.

MY DEAR SENATOR MARTIN:

I am writing this letter because I think, as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, it is important that you should know of the steps so far taken by the War Department to cut down the expenditures of this department in view of the signing of the armistice, which brought about a cessation of hostilities.

The armistice was signed on the 11th of November. Up to and including to-day the War Department has canceled contracts in process of execution, effecting a total saving of $408,900,818.

On contracts which have been let but upon which no work had as yet been done, cancellations aggregate a saving of $700,000,000.

An order was made on the 11th of November cutting out all overtime and Sunday work. The amount saved by this order aggregates about $2,900,000 a day.

The foregoing amounts are exclusive of cancellations in aircraft production or in engineers.

In the Bureau of Aircraft Production orders have been telegraphed out stopping all production on a large number of items, including planes of various types, engines, parts, and special instruments, which aggregate, in the estimated saving, $225,000,000.

In addition to the foregoing, plans have been made to begin the demobilization of the forces under arms in this country and to begin returning at once to the United States such portions of the armed forces abroad as are not needed for the purpose of occupying enemy territory. How rapidly it will be possible for us at present to return soldiers from overseas can not be immediately determined. The demobilization in this country, however, can proceed at once. Blanks have been distributed, physical examinations are being had and records made, so that within a period of two weeks 200,000 soldiers will have been demobilized, and thereafter the work will progress rapidly.

We are reducing the officer personnel of the Army by discontinuing all commissions and honorably discharging officers whose services are no longer needed. The number possible to be dispensed with increases from day to day, and there will, of course, be a corresponding decrease in civilian employees.

In the termination of contracts for supplies and material, the War Department is working in close harmony with the War Industries Board and the Department of Labor, in order that there may be the utmost freedom for the resumption of civil business and the most complete opportunity for labor released from war industries and military service to find suitable and profitable industrial and commercial employment. I have no doubt that within a few days the figures above set forth will show substantial increases, and the savings effected will mount day by day. In general, it is my earnest desire to restore the soldiers to their homes and their civil occupations and to cut down as speedily and completely as possible the extraordinary expenditures which the War Department was obliged to undertake for the prosecution of the war.

I have not set up here the details of the contracts canceled, because the list is long and the individual items are not of special significance, but if at any time you desire to have detailed information it will give me great pleasure to supply it.

Cordially, yours,

NEWTON D. BAKER,
Secretary of War.

Hon. THOMAS S. MARTIN,
Committee on Appropriations,
United States Senate.

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, I wish to remark that I introduced a resolution (S. Res. 334) a few days ago raising a committee on economy and retrenchment. The committee was to consist of the chairmen of the Committees on Appropriations, Naval Affairs, Military Affairs, Agriculture, and iFnance, and two other members of each of those committees. The object of the committee was to study the appropriations made to meet the expenditures of the present fiscal year and also to consider appropriations that would be necessary for the next fiscal year with a view to effecting every possible retrenchment and economy.

Under the Constitution, Mr. President, the Congress is constituted the custodian of the public purse. That duty is ours; that responsibility is ours. We may neglect the duty but we can not vacate the responsibility. I do not think that measures of retrenchment and economy ought to be committed entirely to the discretion of the executive branch of the Government. I rejoice at whatever retrenchments have been made. I trust that this happy beginning will be rigorously followed up and followed out.

If there be one thing concerning which the American people are unanimous it is that the pruning knife should be applied to all unnecessary appropriations, that they should be reduced to an irreducible minimum. We have been appropriating in terms of billions, not millions. We must now retrench in terms not of millions but of billions. Since war was declared last year this Congress has appropriated $53,000,000,000. That is one-fifth of our total national wealth. That is $9,000,000,000 more than all the money appropriated by all the Congresses from the beginning of Washington's first administration to the close of Wilson's first administration. We had to take the chance of waste in the haste of preparing for war. We now have the leisure, and we are under the heaviest obligation to cut out every item of expense that is not dictated by overpowering duty or necessity. We must pull up extravagance by the roots. This should be done not haphazard, not inconsiderately. This surgery should be done with due care, but with unflinching hand.

I repeat, while the executive branch may in a greater or less measure accomplish this result, the real duty and the real responsibility belongs to the Congress itself.

I shall not at this time call up my resolution as adjournment is pending, but unless the progress of retrenchment is satisfactory to the Congress and the country I shall at the earliest possible time call up the resolution and insist upon its adoption. This is a matter concerning which we can not afford to dally or delay.

PURCHASE OF METALS FOR MINOR COINAGE.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to an error committed on Monday in the passage of the bill (H. R. 12998) to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes. It is a bill which doubles the appropriation for minor coinage. It had already been passed by the House and was upon its passage in the Senate when the chairman of the Committee on Banking and Currency [Mr. OWEN] offered the following amendment:

Provided, That the director—

That means the Director of the Mint—shall purchase the silver metal needed for such coinage at not less than $1 per ounce, as required by law.

I am informed by the Director of the Mint that no silver is required, the metal used being copper and nickel, and that the amendment was a mistake, of which fact I have informed the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. He is out of the city and I understand the bill is back in the House. I therefore desire to move that the votes upon the third reading and passage of the bill be reconsidered. I ask for information whether it is necessary to couple that with a request for a return of the bill from the House.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The motion will be to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed and at the same time to accompany it with a motion to request the House to return the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I make that motion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The latter motion must first be put. The Senator from Nebraska moves that the House be requested to return House bill 12998.

Mr. SHAFROTH. I desire to ask the Senator a question for information, as I could not hear the statement which he made with respect to the bill.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The bill provides simply for minor coinage in which no silver is used. Under a misapprehension the Senator from Oklahoma incorporated an amendment providing the price which shall be paid for silver. As no silver is to be purchased, it simply makes confusion in the bill. I think the Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] will bear me out in that statement.

Mr. SHAFROTH. The bill provides for the purchase of metals for minor coinage, and does not indicate whether it shall be silver or nickel.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. It is the amendment which stipulates that silver is to be purchased.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. Section 528 of the statute which is referred to in the bill provides for a revolving fund for the purchase and distribution of minor coin. Section 3515 of the Revised Statutes reads as follows:

SEC. 3515. The minor coins of the United States shall be a 5-cent piece, a 3-cent piece, and a 1-cent piece. The alloy for the 5 and 3 cent pieces shall be of copper and nickel, to be composed of three-fourths copper and one-fourth nickel. The alloy of the 1-cent piece shall be 95 per cent of copper and 5 per cent of tin and zinc, in such proportions as shall be determined by the Director of the Mint. The weight of the piece of 5 cents shall be seventy-seven and sixteen-hundredths grains troy; of the 3-cent piece, 30 grains; and of the 1-cent piece, 48 grains.

In other words, in the minor coin as laid out in the statute of the United States there is no silver. The bill deals purely with the minor coins described in the statute, and therefore there should be no reference to silver in it.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I desire to interpose an objection to the introduction of any matter before 2 o'clock until the regular morning business is concluded.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. This is to recall a bill from the House which has to be enrolled and signed to-day, and the Senate is to adjourn at 5.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is in the possession of the Senate and the question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed. It will be reconsidered without objection. The question is on the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed to a third reading. It will be reconsidered without objection. The question is on reconsidering the vote concurring in the amendment in the Senate. Without objection it is reconsidered, and the Senate refuses to concur in the amendment made as in Committee of the Whole. Without objection the bill will be read the third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. To correct another difficulty I call attention to this concurrent resolution to correct an error in House bill 11945, entitled "An act making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes.'"

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a concurrent resolution from the House of Representatives which will be read.

The concurrent resolution was read, as follows:

House concurrent resolution 60.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 11945) entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products,'" the Clerk be, and he is hereby authorized and directed, to strike out, in line 1 of Senate amendment 31, "Sec. 27" and insert in lieu thereof "Sec. 6," that the sections of said bill may appear in consecutive numerical order and also to relieve from a typographical error in conference disposition of Senate amendment numbered 15, making the amount therein mentioned $150,000.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The typographical error was the printing of $150 for publication instead of $150,000.

The concurrent resolution was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

REPORTS FROM COMMITTEE ON CONTINGENT EXPENSES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. From the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate I report favorably sundry resolutions which provide for the payment of funeral expenses of employees of the Senate, and for the extension of the employment of clerks who have been heretofore authorized by the Senate, and I shall ask for their immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The reports will be received.

IDA M. SHAW.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 332, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Ida M. Shaw, widow of Richard A. Shaw, late a laborer on the rolls of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and other allowances.

ANNIE V. HICKS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 337, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, to Annie V. Hicks, sister of John A. Hicks, late a laborer in the employ of the United States Senate, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EDNA F. EVANS.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 330, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate to Edna F. Evans, widow of Clarence C. Evans, late clerk to Hon. JOSEPH I. FRANCE, Senator from the State of Maryland, a sum equal to six months' compensation at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death, said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL PAGES.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 333, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 184, agreed to on January 17, 1918, authorizing and directing the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate to employ three additional pages for the Senate Chamber at $2.75 per day each for a period lasting until the end of the present session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 335, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

Resolved, That S. Res. 198, agreed to on September 28, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the Committee on Commerce of the United States Senate to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 per month, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, until the end of the present session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, be, and the same is hereby extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS INTRODUCED.

Bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. FLETCHER:

A bill (S. 5036) to further regulate radio communication; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. SHAFROTH:

A bill (S. 5037) to adopt the weights and measures of the metric system as the standard weights and measures in the United States; to the Committee on Standards, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. SMITH of Georgia:

A bill (S. 5038) extending the use of the special fund for vocational education provided by section 7 of the vocational rehabilitation act, approved June 27, 1918, and authorizing the Federal Board for Vocational Education to accept gifts and donations for specific purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 5039) to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

A bill (S. 5040) to give preference in all forms of public employment to men who have been honorably discharged from the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 5041) authorizing donation of obsolete ordnance to the town of Torrington, Wyo.; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 5042) granting an increase of pension to Ferdinand Mussack; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KNOX:

A bill (S. 5043) relating to the review and determination by the Supreme Court of cases which, within six months after the taking effect of the act of September 6, 1916, amending the Judicial Code, were brought into the court by writ of error instead of by certiorari; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CALDER:

A bill (S. 5044) relative to the United States Naval Reserve Force; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. WATSON:

A bill (S. 5045) granting an increase of pension to James Manning; and

A bill (S. 5046) granting a pension to Jacob D. Emery; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ASHURST:

A bill (S. 5047) granting a pension to Edith Bailey Macon; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. KING:

A bill (S. 5048) to establish the Zion National Park in the State of Utah; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. LEWIS:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 188) providing for pay to soldiers and sailors for three months after discharge; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. PHELAN:

A joint resolution (S. J. Res. 189) making November 11 of each year a national holiday, to be known as "Liberty Thanksgiving Day"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

CORRUPT PRACTICES.

Mr. POMERENE. By direction of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, I introduce a bill which was favorably reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections during the Sixty-fourth Congress, and I ask that it be referred back to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

The bill (S. 5049) to revise, amend, and codify the laws relating to publicity of contributions and expenditures made for the purpose of influencing the nomination and election of candidates for the offices of Senator and Representative in the Congress of the United States, extending the same to candidates for nomination and election to the offices of President and Vice President of the United States, limiting the amount which may be expended, providing for the publicity of campaign expenses, and for other purposes, was read twice by its title.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. This bill the Senator wants to have recommitted?

Mr. POMERENE. It was introduced and favorably reported by the Committee on Privileges and Elections during the Sixty-fourth Congress. I am now simply reintroducing the bill——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Oh!

Mr. POMERENE. And asking that it be referred back to the Committee on Privileges and Elections for its consideration.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Is it a bill on the calendar now? Is it a live bill?

Mr. POMERENE. No; it is not on the calendar. It died with the expiration of the Sixty-fourth Congress.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator is now introducing the bill de novo?

Mr. POMERENE. De novo.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections.

REGENT OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION.

Mr. LODGE. I introduce a joint resolution for which I ask present consideration. It is not usual to refer to a committee a joint resolution to fill vacancies in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be read.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 187) providing for the filling of a vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution of the class other than Members of Congress, by reason of the death of the Hon. Charles Warren Fairbanks, of Indiana, be filled by the appointment of Robert S. Brookings, of Missouri.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. POMERENE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, which was ordered to lie on the table and be printed.

THE CENSUS.

Mr. FRANCE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11984) to provide for the fourteenth and subsequent decennial censuses, which was referred to the Committee on the Census and ordered to be printed.

THE COMMITTEE ON FINANCE.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 342), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 300, agreed to on September 11, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the Committee on Finance of the United States Senate to employ an additional clerk, at the rate of $150 per month, for a period lasting from September 14, 1918, until the end of the present session of the Sixty-fifth Congress, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

EMPLOYMENT OF ADDITIONAL CLERK.

Mr. POMERENE submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 341), which was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That Senate resolution 158, agreed to on January 28, 1918, being a resolution authorizing the Committee on Privileges and Elections of the United States Senate to employ an additional clerk at the rate of $100 per month, to be paid out of the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate, for a period lasting until the end of the present session of the Congress, be, and the same is hereby, extended and continued in full force and effect until the end of the Sixty-fifth Congress.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico, subsequently, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred the foregoing resolution, reported favorably thereon, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to.

POTASH.

Mr. HITCHCOCK submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 349), which was read and ordered to lie on the table:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and it is hereby, directed to advise the Senate as soon as may be as to the number of tons of potash salts imported into the United States and used by the fertilizer companies for each of the three years immediately preceding the war, and also the number of tons purchased by the fertilizer companies of American product in the years 1915, 1916, 1917, and up to the present time in 1918.

Resolved further, That the Federal Trade Commission be directed to make whatever investigation may be necessary to procure the above information, together with such investigations as may be necessary to advise the Senate as to the amount of crude potash already produced in the United States during the present year and held in storage because of the failure or refusal of the fertilizer companies to purchase same. Also, to make such investigation as may be necessary to advise the Senate whether any combination or arrangement between the various fertilizer companies, or any of them, has been entered into for the purpose of restricting or avoiding the use of American potash in fertilizers manufactured during the present year, and what effect, if any, upon the potash industries of the country such a combination is having.

Also, to advise the Senate as to the amount of crude potash of American production now held in storage without any available market.

Also, what, if any, connection, either corporate or individual, exists between any or all of the fertilizer companies in the United States and potash interests in Germany, and what, if any, officials of the fertilizer companies of the United States have potash interests in Germany.

GOVERNMENT OF RUSSIA.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 347), which was read and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations:

Whereas after more than four years of unprecedented struggle at arms, with the unmeasured spending of blood and treasure, the allied Governments and the United States have triumphed over the autocratic, reactionary, and militaristic forces of the central empires; and

Whereas the victorious powers are about to convene in council for the purpose of establishing the terms of peace and, among other things, for the purpose of determining the territorial boundaries of the nations, and to join in a covenant whereby said powers will jointly and reciprocally acknowledge their several and rightful territorial boundaries, and enter into such covenants with respect to the national boundaries of each other as may be necessary, and to ordain that the boundaries thus fixed by convention shall not be disturbed by war between nations; and

Whereas Russia was the first of the nations engaged in the great struggle for liberty to interpose her arms against the unrighteous aggressions of Germany and Austria, and battled with heroism, fortitude, and sacrifice for the cause of liberty, and in such cause sacrificed the lives of millions of her sons; and

Whereas certain anarchists and enemies of society and law and order, in the perfidious service of Germany, did usurp public property, and by their treason to Russia and the Russian people sought to destroy all forms of government and to subject Russia and her people to economic and political anarchy; and

Whereas under the name of "Bolshevism" said persons have attempted to destroy all law and order and forms of government among the Russian people and to break Russian territory into a number of disorganized and impotent States, and under their disintegrating policy Russia is threatened with partition into small and distracted nations, the result of which would be the progressive domination and subjection of such States to Prussia in her future activities and development; and

Whereas the great mass of the Russian people, united in suffering, desire to establish the liberty of the people to live and to labor in peace with security of their possessions and the rights of property and of contract with respect thereto; and

Whereas to secure these liberties, to provide for the common defense, and to promote the welfare of Russia, the people of Russia desire to establish democratic governments in the communities, cities, and Provinces, and to unite the Russian Provinces in a federal republic which shall exercise authority throughout the Russian domains and make of Russia a great independent political power among the nations, founded upon liberty and law, and the equal and common rights of all men of whatever estate or station in life; and

Whereas it is necessary for the economic development and progress of Russia that she have free access from the Black Sea to the Mediterranean Sea through the Dardanelles, and from the Baltic Sea to the North Sea through the Kiel Canal, and for this purpose that these waterways should be internationalized; and

Whereas for the protection of her ports and coasts, Russia must control and dominate the Aland Islands and the Gulf of Finland, and for these purposes possess the fortifications which command the Gulf of Finland; and

Whereas the integrity of the territories of Russia must be preserved for the accomplishment of her political and economic dignity and independence, excepting only the territories which are inhabited by the Finns and the Poles; and

Whereas to save Russia from the menace of Prussian domination, limits must be set to the Prussian power, and Prussian territory be compressed within the Vistula, the Rhine, and the Kiel Canal; and

Whereas it is imperative for the accomplishment of these principles that Russia shall be represented and participate in the peace conference; and

Whereas Russians who profess these principles have established a government which has its seat at Omsk, which government is republican in form and practice, and is loyal to the treaties of Russia with the entente powers, and is in harmony with the international policy of the United States and the entente powers: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the republican Government at Omsk should be recognized as the de facto Government of Russia, and that delegates to be named by this Government should be admitted to the peace conference, to speak for Russia and to properly represent her interests and views in the conference; that steps be taken at the conference to preserve and guarantee the territorial integrity of Russia, and to afford every liberty and facility for the Russian people by a constituent assembly to determine and establish a future government for that country; that to secure Russia's access to the sea, the peace terms shall include the internationalization of the Dardanelles and the Kiel Canal and the restriction of the limits of Prussia to the Vistula on the Polish frontier so as to interpose an effectual barrier to Prussian interference with the political and economic independence of Russia; and be it further

Resolved, That it be the sense of the Senate of the United States, that the Government of the United States and the Governments of the entente powers should take immediate measures to render financial and military aid to Russia, to overthrow bolshevist tyranny and anarchy, to provide food and other material assistance for the people, and to assist the Russian people in bringing their country into economic order and progress as a sound basis for the prosperity and independence of the new federal republic of Russia.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that a committee of three members of the House had been appointed to join a similar committee from the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them, and that the Speaker had appointed as the committee on the part of the House Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. MONDELL.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message also announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills, and they were thereupon signed by the Vice President:

H. R. 11945. An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out, during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12998. An act to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes.

SHIP CONSTRUCTION.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President, I send to the desk a resolution, which I should like to have the Secretary read, because I want to ask the indulgence of the Senate for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 343) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board and the Emergency Fleet Corporation be requested to furnish to the Senate Committee on Commerce a report of all existing contracts for ship construction, the cost of such construction, in both private and Government shipyards, the provisions for the cancellation of contracts made for emergency war needs, together with a report of ships delivered and the disposition thereof, and ships in process of construction; and also a report of contracts and deliveries of materials for fabricated ships.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Being objected to, the resolution goes over.

Mr. HARDING. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If the consideration of the resolution will take no time, I am willing to withdraw my objection.

Mr. HARDING. I do not believe that an extended explanation of the resolution is needed. It comes with the unanimous approval of the Committee on Commerce. In just a word, I will state that the resolution is inspired by the publication in the press of utterances of the president of the Shipping Board and of the director general of the Emergency Fleet Corporation that there are places in the shipyards now for 200,000 men additional to the present force. It requires but a little figuring to present the fact that that means an additional expenditure over our present outlay of more than $600,000,000 per year for labor alone. No matter what the policy of the Government may be as to the future, and no matter how earnestly we all favor the construction of the largest merchant marine in the world, it is inconceivable that the Government will go on appropriating money for ship construction at the present rate, which is at from four to six times the normal cost. It is to get that information that the resolution is offered.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the adoption of this resolution bring out the information as to how many wooden ships have sunk?

Mr. HARDING. The resolution calls for the number of ships which have been constructed and the disposition made of them. If the Senator from Idaho accepts the sinking of a ship as a disposition of it I think an answer to the resolution will furnish the information.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President, I desire to say, in that connection, simply that under the law the Shipping Board will make a report to Congress on the 1st of December next, but that report is general in its character, and it may not cover the specific information which the resolution asks, and which I think is very important and desirable.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the resolution was considered, and agreed to.

Mr. CUMMINS. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Are we in the order of Senate resolutions or are we in the order of bills and joint resolutions?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is proceeding under the order of the introduction of bills and joint resolutions.

Mr. CUMMINS. It seems to me that Senators ought to pay some attention to the rules of the Senate. I do not object, however; I simply call it to their attention.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair would like to coincide with the view of the Senator if it were proper for him to do so.

PRINTING OF PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS (H. DOC. NO. 1339).

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask unanimous consent that the President's address to the Congress, on November 11, be printed as a Senate document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. WARREN, it was Ordered, That the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES] be assigned to membership on the Committee on the Library and the Committee on Printing.

SOLDIERS' RAILROAD PASSENGER RATES.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that Senate resolution No. 336, presented last Monday, be laid before the Senate.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, before that is done I should like an opportunity to offer a concurrent resolution. We have not reached that order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. We have not reached that order.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Of course I yield to the Senator from Iowa. I only desire to bring before the Senate the resolution to which I have referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It is impossible for the Chair to know for what purpose a Senator arises.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Has the Senator from Florida a bill or a joint resolution to present?

Mr. TRAMMELL. I have been awaiting the order of Senate resolutions; and I desire to submit a Senate resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senate is proceeding under the order of Senate resolutions.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 350), as follows:

Resolved, First. That the Director General of Railroads be, and he is hereby, requested to authorize a passenger rate of 1 cent a mile to all officers and enlisted personnel of all grades and ranks of the United States Army, Navy, and Marine Corps for a period of three months immediately following honorable discharge from military service.

Second. That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, directed to transmit a certified copy of this resolution to Hon. William G. McAdoo, Director General of Railroads.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, in view of the fact that Congress is to adjourn this afternoon and the benefits of this resolution will not accrue to the soldiers who are now being demobilized throughout the country, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. If it is not to be discussed, I do not object; but if it is to be discussed I do object to its getting precedence over the resolution which I introduced on last Monday.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator is asking the Chair to be a mind reader.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I do not care to discuss the resolution; it is a very simple resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to have the resolution again read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will again read the resolution.

The resolution was again read.

Mr. SMOOT. I inquire of the Senator from Florida if it is a Senate resolution or a concurrent resolution?

Mr. TRAMMELL. It is a Senate resolution carrying with it a request.

Mr. SMOOT. And that is all?

Mr. TRAMMELL. A request is all; it is more in the nature of a suggestion.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. And the resolution is adopted.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, is the question upon agreeing to the resolution?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair asked if there was any objection and heard none.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not know——

Mr. CUMMINS. I object to discussion upon the resolution.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Then the resolution goes over.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I did not wish to discuss the resolution; I wished to ask whether or not it would be proper to have it referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce?

Mr. CUMMINS. It is merely a request to the Director General. I do not care anything about it.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I rise to a point of order. I understood the Chair to announce a decision.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Oh, yes; but in these formal matters a decision never stands if a Senator who has not had an opportunity to vote objects. That would hardly be fair.

JOINT COMMITTEES ON RECONSTRUCTION.

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the resolution which I am about to offer is a modification or enlargement of the resolution presented some time ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS], and generally termed "a plan for reconstruction." This resolution—and I only make the observation that I do in order to explain the reference I intend to add—this resolution, which is a concurrent one, provides for the appointment of six joint congressional committees, each authorized to take into consideration for the purposes of investigation the problems which we all know have arisen and will continue to arise for some time to come. The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] introduced a bill some time ago, which has been referred to the Judiciary Committee, providing for the appointment by the President of a commission to make the investigation in the general way proposed in the resolution which I now offer.

The issue between the two plans is that upon our side we propose a legislative inquiry, while under the bill introduced by the Senator from North Carolina it is proposed to make an administrative or executive inquiry. That is the issue. We all recognize that the work must be done, and the sooner we prepare ourselves for the settlement of that vital proposition the better it will be for the country. I think it would be proper to refer this resolution under ordinary circumstances to the Committee on Rules, as it provides for the creation of certain committees of more or less permanency; but inasmuch as the bill introduced by the Senator from North Carolina has been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary—and very properly so—and inasmuch as the same general question is presented by both proposals, I ask, Mr. President, that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator ask for the reading of the resolution now?

Mr. CUMMINS. No; I do not. I ask, however, that it be printed in the RECORD, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The resolution was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, as follows:

Concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 25) to provide for the appointment of certain joint congressional committees on reconstruction.

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there are hereby created six committees, to be known as the joint congressional committees on reconstruction. Each of said committees shall be composed of five Senators and five Representatives in Congress. The members of said committees shall be selected as follows:

The Senators in the manner provided in the rules of the Senate for the selection of the standing committees of the Senate and the Representatives in the manner provided in the rules of the House for the selection of the standing committees of the House.

The members of these committees shall be subject to change from time to time by the Senate and House, respectively, as are said standing committees, and all vacancies shall be filled in the same manner as the original selections were made.

The said committees shall make, respectively, investigations of the subjects hereinafter named and herein assigned to them, respectively, and shall report to Congress from time to time with such recommendations as to additional legislation or otherwise, as they, respectively, may deem advisable.

The first committee, which shall be known as the Joint Congressional Committee upon the Demobilization of the Army and Navy, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) The employment of discharged soldiers and sailors in civil pursuits.

(b) The allotment of lands to returned soldiers and sailors and their establishment in homes upon the public domain.

(c) All legislation which may be required in the proper care for those who have suffered the dangers of war, and especially those who have been disabled and whose ability to earn a livelihood has been impaired.

The second of the said committees, which shall be known as the Joint Congressional Committee upon Foreign Trade and Commerce, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) Duties on imports for the protection and encouragement of home industry.

(b) The development of new foreign markets.

(c) Combinations for the purpose of increasing our selling facilities.

(d) Changes in our banking facilities necessary to cooperate with such trade.

(e) Our merchant marine, including the construction of ships, the continuance of Government ownership and operation, and in general with respect to the various problems of transportation upon the high seas.

The third of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee on interstate transportation, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) The permanent relation which the Government of the United States should sustain to the common carriers of the country.

(b) Whether the systems of transportation now in possession of and being operated by the Government should be returned to their former owners and operated as heretofore, or whether Government operation should continue with or without Government ownership; or if private ownership is to continue and private operation resumed, what system of regulation and control will be best adapted to secure efficiency in service, reasonable rates of transportation, and fairness to the capital invested.

(c) The relation which should be established between inland water transportation and the railways, including the control of the former.

(d) All questions relating to communication by wire.

The fourth of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee on domestic business, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) To what extent, if any, should our laws relating to trusts and combinations be modified?

(b) What cooperation should be permitted in order to increase efficiency, reduce cost, and enable this country to successfully meet foreign competition?

(c) To what extent should the Government undertake to control prices?

(d) Government loans to private enterprises.

(e) Government supervision of capital issues.

(f) The supply and control of raw materials and encouragement in the production of articles that have not heretofore been manufactured in this country.

The fifth of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee on employers and employees, shall so investigate and report upon the following matters, to wit:

(a) Conciliation and arbitration in labor disputes.

(b) The relation of men and women in similar employments.

(c) Substitution of female employees for male employees and vice versa.

(d) The organization of permanent employment agencies.

(e) The distribution of labor, including employment of surplus labor on public works.

(f) The sanitary housing of employees and the disposition of houses constructed by the Government during the war.

(g) The freedom of labor and of employment in its relation to trade, unionism, and wages, hours, and conditions of employment.

The sixth of said committees, which shall be known as the joint congressional committee upon natural resources, shall so investigate and report on the following matters, to wit:

(a) The encouragement of private enterprise in the development of the resources of the public domain.

(b) The tendency toward urban population and the best means of checking it, including the requirements for farm labor and the best means of securing it.

(c) Government loans to farmers.

(d) The distribution of food products.

(e) Our timber problems.

(f) The adequate production and proper distribution of our mineral resources, including coal, petroleum, and other fuels.

(g) The development and control of water power.

Each of said committees is empowered to take up and examine any other subject which, in the course of its investigation, it finds to be inseparably connected with the subjects herein assigned to it and which ought to be considered in view of the change from the activities of war to the pursuits of peace, and especially the demobilization of war commissions, administrations, bureaus, and other civilian war agencies and the adjustment of the forces employed therein to private industry and commerce under normal peace conditions.

Each of said committees is authorized to employ such clerical assistance as it may deem necessary, including the services of experts, and may by subcommittee or otherwise send for persons or papers, administer oaths, and employ stenographers, at a cost not to exceed $1 per printed page, to report such hearings as may be had in connection with any subject before it.

Each of said committees may sit during the sessions or recesses of the Senate and House of Representatives.

EMERGENCY FLEET CORPORATION.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 345), which was read and referred to the Committee on Commerce:

Whereas by the act approved March 1, 1918, entitled "An act to authorize and empower the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation to purchase, lease, requisition, or otherwise acquire, and to sell or otherwise dispose of improved or unimproved land, houses, buildings, and for other purposes," an appropriation of $50,000,000 was made to meet the emergency requiring adequate housing facilities in the shipyards, which emergency has now passed; and

Whereas it is reported that said United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation is unnecessarily expanding its housing operations under said act and is beginning new and unnecessary construction: Now therefore be it

Resolved, That the United States Shipping Board Emergency Fleet Corporation be directed to report to the Senate a complete account of its operations under said act, including a detailed report of the expenditure of moneys, which shall specifically state the amount expended for overhead expenses, what buildings and improvements have been made, the separate cause of the same, what work is at present being done, and what plans have been formed for further construction or for the further expansion of the activities of said corporation under the said act; also what, if any, steps are being taken to change, modify, or alter the program for housing adopted by said corporation.

PURCHASE OF MILITARY SUPPLIES.

Mr. KING submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 346), which was read and referred to the Committee on Military Affairs:

Resolved, That the Secretary of War transmit to the Senate the names of all commissioned officers in the Army and of all other persons who since the 6th day of April, 1917, have been authorized by the War Department to purchase ordnance, quartermaster, medical, and other supplies for the use of the Military Establishment of the United States, and to inform the Senate as to what interest, as shareholders, partners, employees, or security holders, such officer or persons may have, directly or indirectly, so far as the Secretary may be advised, in any corporation, company, partnership, firm, or business which has been awarded contracts for the furnishing of ordnance, quartermaster, medical, or other supplies for the Military Establishment.

EXPORTS OF COTTON.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I ask that Senate resolution 336 be laid before the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate Senate resolution 336, coming over from a preceding day, which will be read.

The Secretary read the resolution, as follows:

Whereas the authority to place an embargo on exports was stricken in the United States Senate from the original bill upon the ground that the embargo might be used to depress the price of our products, but was subsequently restored upon the assurance that it would only be used to prevent products from reaching enemy countries; and

Whereas the war is now practically over and no possible danger could arise from permitting cotton to go freely to Japan, Spain, Italy, France, Great Britain, Holland, Denmark, Norway, and Sweden; and

Whereas any restriction upon the exportation of cotton is a serious injury to the cotton grower, to the merchants, and business men of one-fourth of the Union, in which cotton is the largest agricultural product, and to our entire Nation, which depends so largely upon the sale of cotton abroad to care for our international balances, and upon the part the cotton-growing States contribute to the commerce of our entire country: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the War Trade Board is hereby directed to report, as early as possible, to the United States Senate to what extent the export of cotton is still being restricted, the reasons for such course, and the time within which restrictions as to shipments will be removed and cotton permitted to be exported without further hindrance.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I regret that only one-fourth of our States produce lint cotton. If this great national asset were distributed to all of the States, its value would be more fully understood, and it would always find friends everywhere. Our country has almost a monopoly in the production of the character of lint cotton needed to clothe the world. It is our great national asset. It furnishes employment to more of our citizens than any other commodity.

On the 28th of October I brought to the attention of the Senate the fact that during the early part of September lint cotton was selling at from 38 to 39 cents a pound. What I mean is that the farmer drove to his near-by town with his cotton and readily had a market at from 38 to 39 cents. I also at that time demonstrated to the Senate that cotton this year cost the cotton farmer approximately 35 cents a pound to produce it. At that time I also called attention to the fact that the War Industries Board, when cotton was selling at 38 cents a pound, took hold of cotton, appointed committees, threatened an effort to fix prices or to stabilize prices, and created such uncertainty in the market that buyers suspended purchases, and the market price was hammered down 8 cents a pound, a total of $450,000,000 on the entire crop.

At last, a few days ago, these special boards appointed by the War Industries Board found and declared they had no authority to fix a price, no power to maintain a price, no control whatever over it, and that there was no necessity for interference. They practically found what I stated to the Senate on the 28th of October—that the price at which cotton was selling in the early part of September was but a fair price compared with the cost of production and the relative prices of agricultural commodities throughout the United States. But the price had been broken and did not rally.

Then, Mr. President, we looked around, and what did we find? Those of us who have studied this question understand that 50 per cent of the cotton crop is used by foreign mills. To reach a market it must be exported. England, before the war, used of it 3,250,000 bales a year; France, a million to a million and a half bales. Over half the crop goes abroad for its market. About half is consumed by American mills.

What did we find? It will be recalled that the power of embargo on exports was granted by us for military purposes. The Senate rejected it when it was first before the Senate upon the ground that we recognized the danger of giving such a power to Presidents or committees or anybody in our country. We rejected it for fear that it would be used to depress the prices of American products. We finally agreed to the embargo provision on exports that it might be used to exclude supplies from Germany. The President placed cotton in the embargo list, and exports could only be made under license from the War Trade Board. The regulations with reference to license that were established by the War Trade Board during the past few months almost amounted to a suppression of exportation. Five hundred thousand bales of cotton were piled up in the ports. Licenses were not issued for its exportation and the foreign market was greatly restricted.

I recall with pleasure—yes, with pride—the criticism I placed upon granting power to anyone to use the embargo against the exportation of American products. I made that criticism at the time this measure was first pending before the Senate, and the Senate struck out the privilege. Subsequently, we were assured in executive session that it would be used only to keep commodities from reaching enemy countries, and that it was essential to help whip the Germans. Well, now the Germans are whipped. The real question with Germany is whether she has strength enough to sustain a government at all. It is impossible for them to raise an army of resistance against the allies; and yet what was the situation with reference to cotton exportation? I will give an illustration.

Spain was rationed at 35,000 bales of cotton each month. This must be distributed among Spanish dealers; various grades of cotton must be taken by each; and no purchases could be made except upon proof that sales had also been made abroad, and no purchases could be made for accumulation.

Japan, an ally, was practically cut off from purchase; and Japan was in this position: India this year has raised the smallest crop since she began to cultivate cotton, not more than enough for her own mills. Japan last year used 600,000 bales of ours. This year, because none can be obtained from India, Japan will need a million bales; yet shipments of cotton to Japan were greatly restricted. Even England and France received cotton with limitations of the privilege of shipment which handicapped sales of cotton.

I am not criticizing the past. We were ready to stand much to whip the Germans, and it was such a glorious thing to whip them that we all stood it without complaint, and it was all right. I wish to consider the present.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. KING. Would it not be fair in this connection for the Senator to state that there was an insufficiency of shipping, and that perhaps the refusal of the license was based upon the inadequacy of bottoms in which to ship the products?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Not at all. Japan had her ships. That did not have anything to do with shipping to Japan.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact that the Japanese ships were employed elsewhere for the shipping of food and munitions, and that there was a shortage of bottoms upon her part?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do not think that was the controlling consideration in the Japanese matter. It certainly was not in the Spanish situation. But, as I said, I am not criticizing the past. I am making a statement for certain conclusions that I intend to present, because to-day I shall praise the War Trade Board for what it did yesterday.

Mr. FLETCHER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I do.

Mr. FLETCHER. May I suggest to the Senator, if we had tonnage enough to import 80,000 bales from Egypt, why was there not tonnage enough to export it?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The War Trade Board liberally allowed long-staple cotton to come in from Egypt while it suppressed the export of American short-staple cotton.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, is it not perfectly plain that if there had been no ships to haul the cotton it would not have been necessary to make any embargo, and therefore the embargo was made for the purpose of stopping the shipments?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. As the Senator suggests, there would have been no necessity to restrict licenses for shipments if the ships were not there to haul it. The restrictions reached to prohibiting purchase and accumulation of cotton for foreign account.

Mr. President, an investigation discloses the fact that Japan now can take a million bales of our cotton, and that they want it and need it. Spain can take 600,000 bales. They want it; they need it.

France can use a million bales and spin it before the next crop comes to market. This is agreeable news, because it has only recently been learned on this side that about half the cotton mills in northern France and Alsace-Lorraine, supposed to have been wrecked, are still in shape for immediate use. Italy needs and will use 600,000 bales. I have just stated that France can use approximately a million bales. Great Britain used last year 2,250,000 bales, and is prepared this year to take 3,250,000. Sweden was allotted 65,000 bales for the year. Sweden is asking for 100,000 bales. Holland was allotted none, and Denmark none. Holland needs 100,000 bales and Denmark and Norway 100,000. This year's exports, if an opportunity is given for cotton to move, will exceed 6,500,000 bales.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Georgia yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. The embargoes to which the Senator refers have not been limited to cotton. They have included other articles of merchandise which are produced in America. But what I rose for was to suggest this:

The war is over, if we are to judge from the fact that hostilities are suspended. Belgium is absolutely prostrate, and so is northeastern France. These people need all of the building material, all of the iron and steel for the reconstruction of the manufactures which have absolutely disappeared from the face of the earth. Indeed, they need every material thing which is essential to the rehabilitation of the people, and they have got to get it from the United States. Now, I ask the Senator whether he thinks that priority should be given for cotton or for anything else until these absolute essentials are supplied to the people of those suffering countries?

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Mr. President, I answer the Senator that next to food clothing is necessary, and for clothing cotton is an essential. The operation of the cotton mills in northern France and in Holland and in Denmark will furnish work for their people and clothing for their people and contribute as greatly to the rehabilitation of those countries as any industry within them. Furthermore, I am not asking for priority of shipments as to cotton. I ask that the ships of those nations ready and desirous of hauling cotton shall not be forbidden from taking it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, there is no question but that what the people of those countries need directly is food and clothing, but the Senator is entirely in error when he says that the mills of Belgium and northern France can immediately proceed to the manufacture of cotton. There are no mills there. The Germans have swept the country like a besom of destruction.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. The Senator did not hear my statement on that subject.

Mr. THOMAS. No; I did not.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. I did not say mills were ready in Belgium, but I stated that one-half the cotton mills of northern France, Alsace, and Lorraine are still in condition for immediate use. This definite information has been received by the committee on cotton distribution of the War Industries Board within the past few days.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be, but Belgium has none. Now, if these people need clothing—and they do—we should manufacture the clothing, or the cloth for the clothing, and send it to them; but for one I shall insist that the present condition of trade and the power of the War Trade Board shall continue until the people of those suffering countries shall receive those things which are absolutely essential for their commercial and industrial rehabilitation.

Mr. SMITH of Georgia. Why, Mr. President, it is absolutely essential for their commercial rehabilitation that they be given a chance to go to work. They can spin and weave much clothing for themselves. The ships are ample. There is no difficulty about transportation. We will bring back our soldiers and send over supplies. And you give them a chance to go to work when you give them the raw material with which to work.

Now, Mr. President, I come to a pleasanter part of my task of to-day. At first the Cotton Distribution Board of the War Industries Board seriously injured the cotton grower, some of the board hardly understood the situation; but they all realize conditions as they are now, and to-day they have furnished a letter to the War Trade Board which I desire to present to the Senate. Before doing so, I will read from a telegram sent to the War Industries Board from New Orleans, signed by 50 of the largest cotton merchants of that section.

I will read the telegram:

NEW ORLEANS, November 14, 1918.

Bernard M. Baruch, Chairman War Industries Board, Washington, D. C.
Charles J. Brand, Chairman Cotton Distribution Committee, United States War Industries Board, Washington, D. C.
E. T. Pickard, Bureau of Exports, War Trade Board, Washington, D. C.

In view of the statement issued by Chairman Brand, of the cotton-distribution committee, that the world's requirements of cotton will be on a continuously ascending scale, and that exports will probably be 2,000,000 bales more than last year, we respectfully suggest that an effective method of steadying the cotton market would be to remove all export restrictions and that you use your good offices to that end. Prominent cotton exporters state that they have on hand large orders for cotton from practically every neutral country in Europe, but that these orders can not be filled, because export licenses can not be secured except under difficulty and delay. Now that the need of shipping men and munitions for war purposes no longer exists, we feel that the cotton interests of the country may justly request that a larger share of tonnage be made immediately available by the Government for cotton exports. We are firmly of the opinion that if such action as outlined were taken that the market would at once feel the stimulating effects of a general spot demand.

M. Levy & Sons; C. A. Francis & Co.; S. Gumbel & Co. (Ltd.); John M. Parker Co.; H. R. Gould & Co.; Herman Loeb; Norman Mayer & Co.; Jevite Cau; A. M. West, Agent; Geo. N. McFadden Bros. Agency; Herrman & Wolf; C. F. Witherspoon & Sons; Weil & Walshe; N. W. Sloan Co.; Frank B. Nayne; Dodson & Williams; The Buckworth Co.; J. J. Lowrey & Co.; Lehman Stern & Co. (Ltd.); Esteve Bros. & Co.; J. L. Newcomb; A. J. Ingersoll & Co.; Julius Weis & Co.; A. W. McLellan, president Alden Mills; Wilson, Nabers & Pape (Inc.); Kahn's Pickery; S. N. Kahn; E. N. McGlassen, Agent Southern Products Co.; Pferdmenges Preyer & Co.; Wm. T. Wardie & Co.; Richardson & May Land & Planting Co. (Ltd.); L. Blum & Co.; Silvan Newburger & Co.; W. J. Davis & Co.; Shepard & Gluck; Muckle & Woodfin; Bentley Joynson & Co.; Mason Smith & Co.; Coate Bros.; R. B. Eskrigge & Co.; E. S. Stahel & Co.; Goold & Co., by N. N. Lawler; W. B. Thompson & Co.; John F. Clark & Co.; Minoprio & Co.; Hubbell Slack & Co.; Weatherford, Crump & Co.

I desire to call attention to the letter written by the distribution board of the War Industries Board to the chairman of the War Trade Board dated November 16. This letter presents so powerfully the necessity for permitting cotton to be exported without restriction I will read it. I wish to thank the cotton distribution committee for writing the letter and to publicly say I believe they are doing all in their power to broaden the cotton market.

1358 B STREET SW., ROOM 521,
November 16, 1918.

Hon. VANCE C. MCCORMICK,
Chairman War Trade Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Reference is made to the telegram which you received to-day from New Orleans, signed by more than 50 cotton dealers in that market, and to a request from your board that the committee on cotton distribution make recommendations relative to the subject matter of this telegram. I have received a similar telegram.

The need for cotton by our allies, the neutrals, and the central powers is very great. Many of their spindles are idle. We are preparing to furnish them food. Along with food they must have work to do, and it is necessary to this end that they have raw materials which they may work up into manufactured products. Further, the cessation of hostilities will release additional labor for their mills. The stocks of raw cotton in Europe are very greatly depleted, little reserve stock being left on hand. The representatives of foreign nations with whom we have conferred have recognized and stated very frankly their great need for cotton. They are ready to buy both to replenish their reserve stocks and to operate their machinery.

With the coming of peace, through the operation of numerous factors, such, for instance, as the release of tonnage from war activities, the stoppage of sinkings by submarines, the building of new tonnage, and the release of neutral and enemy country tonnage, a great deal of additional tonnage will become available for commerce. With the keen need that is felt for cotton, there is no doubt that a substantial part of this tonnage will be used for carrying this staple. If the exportation of cotton is facilitated through the ready issuance of export licenses and otherwise, it is altogether likely that even tramp steamers will carry it over from this country.

* * * * * * *

There is no doubt, of course, due to conditions already pointed out, that the requirements of the world for the present season will be largely in excess of requirements for the past season. However, during the present critical period of transition from war to peace there is great stagnation, and it is very essential that everything possible be done to alleviate this condition immediately. This is the season during which the producers of cotton harvest their product. Their financial obligations become due during the fall season, and they must sell their product in order to cancel these obligations. With little movement for cotton, either they can not sell it or they are compelled to sell it at a price which represents great sacrifice. This condition touches directly about 3,000,000 citizens of this country, as cotton is produced by a very large number of small producers, and not by a very small number of large producers, as in the case of many other commodities. If the cotton is sold at this season at a sacrifice, the result is a loss to those who are least able to bear it. It must also be borne in mind that an unsatisfactory price at this season of the year will result in a curtailment of production next year and in the consequent reduction in the cotton available for clothing the world. Moreover, the question involved concerns the Nation as a whole, and not merely the producers, since cotton in normal times forms our most important article of export.

In view of the conditions outlined above, it is recommended that all possible steps be taken to facilitate the exportation of cotton, and that, so far as is consistent with sound public policy, limitations or restrictions upon the granting of licenses shall be removed. Particularly with reference to Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, Spain, Portugal, and Japan, it appears that a very generous policy as regards export licenses ought to be adopted. With reference to Holland, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, and Switzerland, it is recommended that until the allies and the United States have in their hands guaranties of the acceptance by Germany of the armistice terms exportations be allowed under licenses on the basis of their prewar consumption or in accordance with the trade agreements now in force with these countries. In any event, it is our opinion that these neutrals should be permitted at least to buy and store in this country the quantity of cotton due them under the present trade agreements. After the guaranties required of Germany under the armistice terms are in our hands, we are of the opinion that exports of cotton to neutral groups should be permitted on substantially the same terms as exports to our allies.

If the movement of cotton is to be restrained, in view of the coming peace conference, some steps must be taken to avert the immediate disaster which threatens the cotton-producing sections of the United States and the impending misfortune to the Nation at large and the rest of the world through the enforced curtailment in the production of cotton next season.

Very truly, yours, CHARLES J. BRAND, Chairman.

You will observe that these restrictions went to such an extent that neutrals could not buy and store cotton in the United States. The foreign world was cut out of the market practically both for export, for purchase, or for storage, except as the different countries were rationed.

Mr. President, I have just read a letter that is gratifying to me. Now, let me state that with to-day a change comes. The War Trade Board has pulled down within the past 24 hours nearly all these restrictions. They have pulled down the restrictions as to our allies. They have practically pulled them down as to Spain. They have modified them everywhere and only retained them so far as it is still essential in connection with the terms of the armistice to enforce the blockade against Germany and Austria, and as soon as that is no longer necessary as an incident to the armistice I am sure these restrictions also will come down.

I will read the letter delivered this morning to Mr. Brand, written by Mr. Vance McCormick, chairman of the War Trade Board, as a result of the action of the Trades Board:

NOVEMBER 20, 1918.

Mr. CHARLES J. BRAND,
Chairman Committee on Cotton Distribution,
War Industries Board, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We beg to acknowledge receipt of your letters of November 16 and November 19, referring to the exportation of cotton. We also confirm our understanding of the recommendations which we have adopted, agreed to at the conference with your committee and Senator HOKE SMITH yesterday evening, as follows:

We are withdrawing the regulation requiring that for securing an export license the grade and staple be specified, and other requirements which were adopted some weeks ago and published in the War Trade Board regulation effective October 14.

We are also withdrawing the requirements for specific export licenses to Great Britain, France, Italy, Belgium, and Japan.

In regard to shipments of cotton to Spain, we are withdrawing the regulation whereby the quantity which should be shipped to Spain was limited and allotted among our various shippers.

We are advising the representatives here of the European neutral countries with which we have entered into agreements that they may purchase their entire annual requirements.

We have consulted with the representatives of the countries above mentioned, associated with us in the war, and notwithstanding considerable inconvenience in administration is caused by our acting quickly. We have received their hearty cooperation.

Yours, very truly,

Inclosure. VANCE C. MCCORMICK.

You will observe there has been a restriction as to the quantity that could be purchased here. No matter how desirous foreign cotton merchants might have been to purchase their year's supply they had not the right, they were limited, they were restricted in quantity. Most of the restrictions hampering exports and depressing prices ended to-day.

I desire, Mr. President, to say that I have no doubt these restrictions, these suppressive restrictions as an incident to the war, were put upon cotton with the view of promoting the national welfare and contributing to the defeat of the Germans. I find it unnecessary to express an opinion now as to whether the course was wise or otherwise. I am sure that the present course is wise and right, and I feel also sure that another onward step will be taken in a few days, and all restrictions as to the exportation of cotton will be removed.

I realize the burdens that have been upon the War Industries Board and upon the War Trade Board. Patriotic men of great ability have served upon them, and while hardships have been occasioned by some of their orders, we may not overestimate the contribution made by the members of these boards toward winning the war.

Mr. President, let me say that I do not believe in board government. We all stood it because we had to whip the Germans. They were so thoroughly organized we concluded we had to a little overorganize ourselves to whip them. But Germany will never be a military menace to the world again, and let us, as we move on with our legislative responsibilities, remember that some of the things that have been done in the direction of extreme organization ought not to be considered precedents even in time of war, and every possible facility should be given at once to let every industry in this country have what it needs to again do business without restriction, and every commodity in this country produced by our citizens be given the opportunity through its owners to reach the markets where it is needed. This great country was built with liberality of treatment extended to individual effort. In the exercise of our ingenuity, our ability, our productive capacity, we have not found it necessary to have guardians and directors at the capital to tell our business men and our manufacturers and our farmers just what they should do. I thank God the time has about come when the average man can again conduct his business without restriction, and I hope that the freest opportunity will be given to all the products of this country to seek the markets of the world, to spread, to strengthen our commerce, and to help place our commerce where we will have the business with which to use a great fleet.

I wish to add, I hope our fleet will grow stronger and that we will determine not only on the land but on the water our country shall recognize no leader and submit to no dictation.

During the delivery of the speech of Mr. SMITH of Georgia,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia will please suspend while the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, the hour of 2 o'clock having arrived. It will be stated by title.

The SECRETARY. A bill (S. 4637) for retirement of employees in the classified civil service.

After the conclusion of the speech of Mr. SMITH of Georgia,

CONTROL OF CABLE LINES.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. President, I do not deem it to be the province of a minority party or of any individual member of it to offer criticisms of an administration merely for the sake of criticizing it. To use the ordinary street expression, I do not believe in throwing a monkey wrench into the machinery in order to have the pleasure of witnessing the destruction it works. This is especially true of the Republican Party, because having always been the party of aggression and the party of construction it ill comports with its character to take upon itself a campaign of mere criticism for the purpose of obstruction.

But while this is true generally it is also true that to gloss over errors and to conceal mistakes may be in the long run just as destructive as even to point out errors which do not exist, because if mistakes and if errors of a vital character are concealed they may in the end become festering sores that will require more drastic methods to remove. Therefore whenever a Senator sees an administration's mistakes it becomes, as I conceive it, his solemn duty to point out those mistakes for the consideration of his fellow Senators and for the benefit of the country at large. It is for that purpose that I rise to speak on this occasion.

Last week the press informed us that the President of the United States by proper proclamation had taken over under governmental control and operation the express companies of the Nation. The President did not assign us any reason for that action, and therefore we are left to the broad field of conjecture as to why he did it. It is quite true that we are safe in assuming that the action was taken under the act of Congress passed in 1916, by which the President was empowered to take over all the transportation systems of the country, and it is safe to assume that in this act he regarded the express companies of the Nation as a part of the transportation system of the country. With that conclusion I have no quarrel; but it is passing strange, Senators, that during all the time of storm and stress, during the period of unparalleled congestion of the railroads of the United States, during the time when we were transporting millions of soldiers from one portion of the Republic to another portion of the Republic, to the camp, to the cantonment, to the training stations, and to points of embarkation, while an incalculable quantity of munitions and of food and of equipment were being transported by the railroads, and while this congestion was unprecedented in the history of this or any other country, it was not thought essential by the President to take over the express companies in order to relieve that congestion or to carry on the transportation of the country. Now, when the Hun is at our mercy, when Germany lies prostrate at our feet, when the last cloud of war is sinking below the horizon and the sun of peace fills all our skies, he has taken over the express companies of the country for operation by the General Government.

I believe that that is a breach of good faith on the part of the President of the United States. Congress voted him this extraordinary power for war purposes only. We yielded up our authority in order to put power in the President's right hand and authority in his left hand for the sole purpose of winning this war, and now during all the time of war, during the exigent necessities of the transportation problems of the country, not finding it essential to take over the express companies, now when peace is at hand and war has passed, the President of the United States, as I believe, violates the spirit, if not the letter, of the act which conferred this power upon him in taking over the express companies to be operated by the Government.

Why is that step taken? It is taken, Mr. President and Senators, in my belief, simply because of the fact that the President is loath to give up any of the power with which we have clothed him, and that the subordinates about him, including those in the Cabinet, do not intend to relinquish that power unless compelled to do so by legislative action.

We are also informed that by proclamation the President has taken over the cables to be operated by the Government. If what I have said with reference to the express companies be true, with how much greater force do these same words apply to the cables? It will be recalled that during the debate on the problems with refereuce to taking over the express and telephone lines of the country it was repeatedly stated on the other side by the sponsors for the measure and by the spokesman of the administration that in all probability not even the telegraph or telephone lines would be taken over, that in all probability the power thereby conferred upon the President would never be used, and one man after another on the other side rose up to say that there was no occasion for taking over the cables, because their owners had not in anywise violated any of the secrets that had been confided to them, but ha ' operated them wholly and solely in accordance with governmental suggestions. It was stated repeatedly on the other side by those who advocated that measure that they wanted that provision inserted in the act wholly as a precaution. Congress was about to adjourn for a time, we were about to go to our various homes, and it was said that in case of a contingency, in case something unforeseen should arise, it was wise to bestow this power upon the President, so that he might use it in time of stress or in an hour of peril. Yielding to that sort of argument, without there being any basis of justification for it at the time, we placed it in the bill and conferred upon the President that power.

Now, after all this declamation, and now after every hour of emergency has passed, and now after peace has come upon us, and now after war has taken his wrinkled front from the presence of the world, we have the President of the United States violating, as I believe, the letter and the spirit of that law by taking over the cables for governmental operation.

It is exceedingly significant, Senators, that this action of taking over the cables comes just at the time when the President of the United States is about to visit a foreign country. I am not going to quarrel with the decision of the President about going abroad. I do not believe that it is an unconstitutional proposition. It is new and it is novel, and in some respects it wears aspects that are quite startling. I do not believe there is any necessity for his going abroad, provided he were willing to confide in others as much as I believe he might at this time confide in many of his qualified fellow citizens. But it is singularly significant that just at the time the President is about to go abroad he takes over the cables, after having declined to take them over during all the years of war and all the time of storm and peril, and when every necessity for his having taken them over has ceased if, indeed, any necessity for such action has ever existed.

Therefore, we are again left to the wide field of conjecture as to why the President sees fit to take this particular action at this particular time. Certainly no one will claim that he is taking them over as a necessity of war. Certainly no one will claim that this is in anywise related to a war proposition, because there is no war and because during all the time while hostilities were active he declined to take them over. If during all that time private management was doing all that was needed to be done, both with the express companies and the cables, how can it be said that private management will fail, now that the war is over and the days of peace have come upon us? Therefore I insist that there is some other reason that the President has not stated, which is not apparent, as to why the cables are being taken over, because in this instance, as in the other, the President has given us no reason.

It will be recalled by those who were present—and I remember that nearly all the Senators were present—during the debate on the question of taking over the telegraph and telephone lines that it was repeatedly stated that there was no real war reason for taking them over. Three witnesses appeared before the committee on the question. Those were Secretary Daniels, Secretary Baker, and Postmaster General Burleson. They gave no reason as to why those lines should be taken over. The only one that was ever assigned by any man on this floor in debate was that there might arise some necessity for it, and we had better bestow that power upon the President as a precautionary measure.

It will further be recalled that these three gentlemen, the three members of the Cabinet I have named, recited in their testimony that there was no reason existing at that time why this action should be taken, but that that policy should be the uniform policy of the country. All of them said that they thought the Government should own these lines and operate them permanently. Therefore, Senators, we come face to face, just as I told you in that debate, with the proposition of the permanent Government ownership of these and of other public utilities as well. Am I in error about that?

The Senator from Illinois himself this morning, he being one of the men who stood upon the floor of the Senate and stated repeatedly that it would not be necessary to take over these lines, but that this power ought to be bestowed as a precautionary measure—that Senator himself introduced a resolution to-day looking to the permanent Government ownership and operation of all public utilities and, in addition to that, of various other private properties. Therefore the Senator himself, my honored friend from Illinois, is accentuating the very idea I have been trying to impress upon Senators here for a long period of time, and that is, that various members of the President's Cabinet and a large number of those who are socialistically inclined who surround him are seeking to fasten upon this country now a program of state socialism. There is no other excuse or pretext of excuse for taking over the express companies and for taking over the cables at this particular time. Therefore, we may as well recognize that policy and prepare to confront it as one of the stupendous problems that perplex the Republic at this vital hour.

Why is the President taking over the cables just at the time he is going abroad? The President, I verily believe in all good faith, might have taken his fellow citizens into his confidence and given his reasons for taking over the cables. He might have taken his fellow citizens into his confidence and stated his reasons for taking over the express companies. He has not seen fit to do so. If there be any reason why it should be done I should be glad if some Senator would voice it. No man has risen to give a reason, except the hidden and sinister reason that it is a part of the general policy of Government ownership and is the opening door to the existence of the socialist state. Therefore, I am left to the wide field of conjecture, as are all other Senators, as to why the President at this particular time has taken this particular action.

It is quite significant that the President is taking with him as one of his companions on this trip George Creel, master of the Republic's instruction. I take it for granted that when the President leaves these shores to all intents and purposes the cables are cut. I take it for granted that the President has taken over these lines because he does not intend that any man at the peace table shall know what is being said in the House of Representatives or on the floor of this body. I take it for granted that we are not to know on this side what they are doing over there and that they are not to know on that side what we are saying over here. I can conceive of no other reason for this action at this particular time save the desire to inaugurate a permanent policy of Government ownership. Why does George Creel go along? Clearly in order to send back whatever news may be required. With George Creel at that end controlling all the messages and with Albert S. Burleson at this end controlling all the sources of information, the country may well be warned that they may take at least with a grain of salt whatever is published as to what happens at the peace conference.

It occurs to me that in all fairness the American people ought to know every transaction that occurs at that peace table. Certainly the Senate of the United States should be apprised of the transactions that occur there. We, under the Constitution of the United States, are a part of the treaty-making body; it is ours to confirm whatever may be there done; it is ours to ratify whatever may there be written; and yet we are to be deprived of all knowledge of the events that there occur, not only those obtained by personal contact—for it is quite evident that no Member of the Senate will be appointed to accompany the President—but we are also to be denied all knowledge that might be transmitted by cable of the transactions that occur at that great conference. Under all the circumstances I regard this as the most remarkable transaction in the history of our entire diplomacy. It seems to me to be inconceivable that such a thing can happen at such a vital time in the history of this country and in the history of the world.

Therefore I am led to believe that when the President of the United States thinks what this step means and how much it involves he may be willing to appoint some Members of the United States Senate to go abroad on this errand with him if he still insists on such an unusual proceeding.

Now, Senators, I have said that these gentlemen do not desire to surrender the power we have heretofore bestowed upon them. This is evidenced by the fact that instead of relinquishing it they are reaching out for more even that they did not take during the progress of the war. And it is further evidenced by the fact that at least in some places in the South they are proceeding with the building and construction of cantonments the same as if the war were still on. The honorable Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] read here a few moments ago a letter from the Secretary of War, and the Senator congratulated the country and bestowed great praise upon the Secretary because $1,780,000,000 worth of contracts had been canceled up to this time. While he was reading there was placed in my hands a copy of the News and Observer, a paper owned and published by Secretary Josephus Daniels at Raleigh, N. C., bearing the date of Friday morning, November 15. I hold it up for your inspection that all may see its language:

United States Employment Service needs 12,000 skilled and unskilled laborers for James Stewart & Co., contractors, Camp Bragg, Fayetteville, N. C. Apply to nearest United States Employment Service office, Raleigh, Charlotte, Winston-Salem, Elizabeth City, Asheville.

And, in addition, a letter from a gentleman whose integrity is unquestioned and who stands without blemish in his community, in which he says:

NOVEMBER 15, 1918.

I inclose an ad. taken from to-day's News and Observer. It was announced two or three weeks ago that there were 8,000 to 10,000 men at work there then. The News and Observer, in issue of the 8th, states that a contract had just been let for 80 miles of standard road to be built through property of Camp Bragg, at a cost of $2,500,000, making a total of $16,000,000 to be spent in Camp Bragg. It is announced that Camp Polk (tank camp), Raleigh, will be completed. Contractor advertised a few days ago for 2,000 men.

This is a tank camp. Why should tanks be built now? For the same reason that cable and express companies should be taken over now.

They have let contract of $10,000,000 additional to Camp Jackson, Columbia, S. C.

Camp Humphreys, Va., had their labor agents out last week stating that a large addition will be added to Camp Humphrey. Why all this waste and the war over? I understand fully why this hurry at Camp Bragg. It is reported that they are building 700 modern bungalows there, and with fine concrete road, also railroad built to it, water, sewerage, and so forth, this would make an ideal manufacturing village. But why spend $16,000,000 now with war over? It is a shame.

I commend that article, if it be true—and I take it for granted that it is, because here is the advertisement in Secretary Daniels's paper—to the consideration of the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. So we may take it for granted that, while some contracts have been suspended and while some demobilization has taken place, after all, in the essential thing of the Government control of public utilities, there has been no alteration in the intention of the gentlemen in the Cabinet and those who immediately surround the President of the United States. These are the only reasons that I have in my mind or that I can conjure up as to why the President at this time of all times should take over the express companies and the cables running from this country to Europe.

I take it for granted that none of us is in such great haste as to demobilization; we believe that the boys in cantonments in this country should be sent back home as speedily and as rapidly as possible, but we are all aware of the fact that those who are abroad can not come back home until after the treaty of peace shall have been signed. However, after the signature of that great document, we believe that they should be sent back to their country just as rapidly as transportation facilities across the ocean can be secured. With those propositions of the administration we are not at quarrel. The thing that stirs me to the very depths is the fact that under these circumstances those in authority continue not only to hold, but also to take over, additional facilities and utilities for the express purpose of fastening upon the country the policy of Government ownership and establishing a system of state socialism, which, if followed to its logical conclusion, will pull down the pillars of the Republic and bury us all in its melancholy ruins. That is why I lift my voice at this particular time against this policy of the administration.

I well agree with the editorial which I find in the New York Times of yesterday, which I commend to my friends on both sides of this Chamber. It is as follows:

The resolution adopted by the caucus of Republican Senators "that the Congress shall assert and exercise its normal and constitutional function, including legislation necessary for reconstruction," expresses an intention which should not be opposed by Democratic Senators. Congress gave up a great deal of its power to the Executive for the patriotic purpose of pushing the war. But the war is over, and Congress would fail in its duty if it continued in times of peace the policy it pursued in the bloody and dangerous time just passed.

If there should be among the Democrats any Senators foolish enough to dissent from this proposal of the Republicans, we presume that they will base their dissent on the fact that, though the war is over, reconstruction is not. But that is an argument for, not against, the resolution of the Republican Senators. It is in the work of reconstruction that the powers committeed to Congress are peculiarly necessary. In time of war it becomes necessary to centralize authority, to sacrifice everything to the winning of the war, but no such necessity appears in times of reconstruction, and the people are very jealous of their Constitution, with its threefold government. They will not be pleased with any party or any set of public officials who, under any pretext whatever, attempt to continue the autocratic power with which the people willingly vested the executive officers of the Government so long as the country was actually in danger.

I agree most heartily with the sentiment and the logic therein expressed. In the day of stress and in the hour of peril we gladly gave over to the keeping of the President of the United States such power as he asked for. Many of us on this side of the Chamber—and I speak for myself—voted power and authority into his hands that we really did not believe he needed; but no man when his country is at war intends to haggle over minutiæ, over details, and we said, "We will give the President the power that he asks, because he asks it and because he says he needs it." After all, the surprise is the greater, when the day of storm is past, when all the war clouds have rolled by, that this authority which we placed in his hands for the purpose of winning the war has not been turned back to the Congress that bestowed it or to the people who conferred it, but is being held and added to from day to day for the express purpose of fastening upon us a system of socialistic ownership, which is contrary to the fundamental principles of the Republic and of the underlying ideas of the Constitution of the United States. That is why at this time in these brief remarks I lift my voice against the action of the President of the United States. I should be glad if the Senate, in this hour of rehabilitation and in this time of reconstruction, would reassert itself to the extent of passing some sort of resolution voicing its opposition to this action on the part of the President of the United States.

Mr. SHERMAN. Mr. President, I read in the Constitution, as I remember it, that in certain events the Vice President shall exercise the powers and duties of the President, but the conditions precedent are the death, resignation, or inability of the President. It makes no provision for the absence of the President from the territorial limits of the United States. In pursuance of the constitutional mandates, therefore, the exercise of executive power inheres in the person who occupies officially the place of President, so long as he does not fall within any of the disabilities mentioned in the Constitution so as to devolve the power and the duties of the office upon the chief Presiding Officer of this body, the Vice President. Therefore, when this proposed visit is made, some time, I assume, after the first Monday in December, 1918, the White House will be transferred officially to Paris, France; 3,000 miles of salt water will send its heaving tide between the sole remaining powers of government in the United States and the Executive. There will be left the Supreme Court of the United States, when it shall convene; there will remain the Senate and the House of Representatives; but the Executive and the White House and all its vast powers will be transferred to Europe, where they will abide, if I am to trust press reports, a considerable time. Yesterday's advices informed us that there would be no precipitate departure of the President from the scene of peace negotiations. It induces sober reflection to contemplate the migration of presidential sovereignty to foreign and distant soil.

He will be attended by the usual retinue. He will have his press bodyguard, the redoubtable Creel, who will "creel" every message in approved and official form before it shall be transmitted by cable to this continent. Mr. Creel has seen fit to protest, and, as the poet says, in protesting too much, he but approves the charge. Mr. Creel hastens this morning by the public press to say:

With respect to my charged connection with the cables and cable censorship, there is no such connection, nor will there be any. There is no press censorship of any kind existing in the United States to-day. No plan of resumption has been suggested or even contemplated.

* * * * * * *

The one proper effort of the Committee on Public Information will be to open every means of communication to the press of America without dictation, without supervision, and with no other desire than to facilitate in every manner the fullest and freest flow of news.

I am reminded of an old Spanish proverb which says, "Never lock up a reformed drunkard alone in a wine cellar." [Laughter.]

The PRESIDING OFFICER. However justifiable the laughter, the Chair is obliged to call attention to the fact that it is not permitted under the rules.

Mr. SHERMAN. The proverb is quite old in its truth, but will soon be extinct in practice under a pending constitutional amendment. Mr. President, I regret the levity with which the announcement of this great truth is received. I only sought to impress the similarity of the two cases when they are confronted with temptation. Can Creel, with the entire commercial telegraph system, both public and private wires, on this continent, and with 17 trans-Atlantic cable lines all resting in the palm of his imperial hand, resist? Did he not testify before a Senate committee not many months ago that in his earlier days he was given somewhat to sophomoric excesses; that sometimes his language was too lurid; that he spoke sometimes in gigantic terms of red headlines from force of habit? A horse that balks once will balk again. How can he resist? He will burst with suppressed desire and our paean of victory will end in a dirge over his exploded remains. That is an aphorism among horse traders, and it is the rule of conduct always observed among those gentlemen in such transfers of personal property. This is a horse trade. I suggest to the Senate that when we trade Mr. Creel, reformed and alone with the cables in his hand, for Mr. Creel as he has been in years past, when he lived in Denver, when he was about Indianapolis, and when his habitat was the loop in Chicago, we do not gain by the transaction. Men do not make themselves overnight; character-building is not of that ephemeral nature. They are made by a lifetime of action, following precept and example. Mr. Creel is still Creel. The chairman of the Committee on Public Information in Paris will be the same reformed reportorial drunkard in exaggeration in the journalistic wine cellar that he was in Denver and is in Washington to-day.

Why is his presence required, Mr. President? Is he possessed of diplomatic knowledge? Is he a great constitutional lawyer? Has he read and does he know all the precedents from the time of Hugo Grotius to Robert Lansing in diplomacy and in connection with the controversy upon the freedom of the seas? He has no such record. Is his presence deemed necessary, mayhap, for the safety of the Chief Magistrate? He has no record as personal bodyguard or as a valorous man of war, save as Falstaff and as Jack Cade—

My dagger is in my teeth,
My weapons are my words.

Nowhere has he sought the bubble reputation at the cannon's mouth. His name ranged high as a space filler and defamer of every safeguard of stable government. Now he is to measure out to the mighty free press of America what may enter its columns. This is his mission and purpose, and none other, save as a sonorous court trumpeter of his chief.

Such is Creel's record. Why is he needed in Paris? I understand, Mr. President, that the Executive will go abroad in the best steamship that plies on the Atlantic. He will be attended by the usual and necessary secret-service men. No doubt also officers of the Army of high rank and wearing resplendent, glittering uniforms will attend him to gay Paree, now relieved, we all rejoice to say, from the stress of war conditions, so that the display and the splendor of the occasion will rise to the full level of the magnificent affair to be attended by our Executive abroad.

Again, he breaks all precedents. No other President has ever seen fit to leave his country's soil. I earnestly hope, under the blessings of a benign Providence, that his voyage will be attended with safety, that no unkind commotion of the elements, that none of the floating mines or hidden perils of the deep will interfere with his safe return when he shall have performed his full duty, as he sees it, abroad; but I can not understand why the cables on this particular occasion should have been seized preceding his departure for Europe.

I learn by consulting again that veracious chronicle, known as "The real Col. House," who is now abroad—I am speaking under some time limitations, and I hope I may keep within them—that:

From all historic precedent, the United States looks to one man to lead the country's forces in the war. That man is Woodrow Wilson. To him will go the credit for victory or the obloquy of defeat.

I have some idea that in all human probability the private soldier who carried a rifle, who worked a machine gun, who suffered privations and hardships in the trenches, that his captain and the colonels and all the officers who are in this mighty host that went across the sea that some whose pulseless clay sleeps in graves far from sorrowing homes would have some credit. I know that greatness at last is a mere crown upon the apex of the pyramid of the lives of countless millions. Somebody in history touches the peak and the mighty multitude that sacrificed and died and gave up their priceless treasures of human life are only the insensate foundation for the glory of those who are heralded to future ages as the conquering hero; but I protest against the text I have read, that to Woodrow Wilson will go the credit for victory. The victory belongs to the American people, to their instant union, and their heroic sons. It is a part of their imperishable history. It is a part of the great chapter of human events they have written around the world. It belongs to no man; it is the heritage of patriots and the common birthright of human freedom. The attempt to monopolize that credit shows a strange perverseness and misunderstanding of the genius of our institutions. Such a claim is repugnant to the sentiments of every Senator and every citizen of our country.

With the cables taken over recently the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], I think, has touched one of the predominant notes in the reason why. I think there is another that precipitated it at the inopportune time and way it was done. Let some gentleman who desires to sojourn abroad, whether it be to go across the Rio Grande or to go to Japan, much less the other way, across the Atlantic, attempt to get a passport from the Department of State. Go across for your constituents and try to get a passport now, if you can. Although we are feeding Europe, we are living on cornmeal and buckwheat and sorghum molasses out West, in order that the Hun may be saved from the pangs of starvation. It avails but little. Children are gathering potatoes, staying out of school, in my home country. I saw them. They are stripping cane, and the humble sorghum is supplementing the sugar crop of this country, both beet and cane. Corn is rotting in the fields, and the housewife has left her kitchen and the affairs of her home and has gone into the cornfield; the children who can not reach an ear of corn are husking the down row that is found sometimes nearer the ground. Under these conditions, with the great sacrifices and the efforts we have made to save the food crop of the year, we think that at least we are doing our part, and that if we wanted to go abroad we might in all reason be permitted at least the poor courtesy of a passport.

Try to get one, if you can, unless you belong to the charmed circle. If I were one of Creel's assistants, I could have a passport; but I doubt if a Senator could get a passport to-day. Try it and see. Try it for one of your constituents. I know whereof I speak. Ask Gifford Pinchot whether he can get a passport. Ask Villard, with whose sentiments I do not agree; but if he wants a passport, I would say, God speed him when he gets the passport to go away and stay just as long as he wishes; to stay at least until he changes some of the sentiments he has heretofore entertained.

There are a number of other gentlemen in this country who ought to be provided either with passports, with a kindly admonition to use them at as early a date as possible, or with deportation decrees from a court of competent jurisdiction, backed up by adequate legislation from Congress. But at any rate passports are denied; the cables are controlled, and Creel sits as an imperial dictator at the source of every action and event or source of information that precedes the formal submission to the Senate of a draft of a treaty of peace for ratification. That is what I complain of.

The Senate is a treaty-making body. Last September—on September 3, 1918, as I remember—I remarked upon the time when a treaty, or a form of it, would be submitted to the Senate and immediate action asked. What it will contain nobody knows; and with censored cables, with no ability to learn of the details that precede its formation, of the conditions that attended the negotiation, with nothing except Creeled news from beginning to end the information that will be laid before the Senate will be of the most meager character.

Oh, I am reminded. "Read 'The New Freedom' and 'Pitiless Publicity.' Is not that a guaranty?" It is like the man who made a statement at one time, under the influence of stimulants, that he had caught lobsters that weighed 40 pounds down here somewhere along the coast. Other fishermen jealous of the veracity of their craft took him to task about it; all he was able to produce was the affidavit of two old retired sailors, that they had seen lobsters that they thought weighed 40 pounds apiece. The tribunal appointed to pass upon the truth or falsity of the statement made a report that affidavits were not lobsters. That is still true. Promises in "The New Freedom" are not information. They are not adequate facts upon which we can base our action in ratifying a treaty in this Chamber. So that we are left to the tender mercies of a censored cable for the information that will come from day to day concerning the formation of the draft of the treaty.

These two items taken together I think help explain, or at least somewhat illuminate, the reason which is likely the predominant one for permanent purposes referred to by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

When I think of the Chief Executive going abroad I have a considerable vision of how he will look and how he will be attended. I trust he will be given the same consideration that he receives in his own country. I hope there will be no petty jealousies aroused among the allies or our representatives abroad about who is entitled to the credit of winning the war, but that we will divide the responsibility, and likewise that we will equalize our share in the credit. But when that is all done, I am reminded that there must be some reason for his going abroad. The cables can convey, under priority rule, all messages by code or any given language. I can not myself see the necessity of the visit of the Executive, but let that pass.

I wish to place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, in order that it may be in proper juxtaposition—if you will permit the word—with my remarks, the fact that on August 26, 1918, the Democratic candidates and the Democratic central committee of Muskingum County, Ohio, met on behalf of the Democratic Party at Zanesville in that State. It "resoluted," as all such bodies do, in stately form and approved fashion. The proceedings I have are from the Zanesville Signal, of date August 27, following this meeting. It is a Democratic organ, as I know the Senators from Ohio will cheerfully testify. So taking it as a source of unquestioned veracity, I am moved to read that resolution.

Now, sometimes, Mr. President, especially in the case of a resolution that has many "whereases," as the one we heard awhile ago, it is at the end of the resolution—all the preceding matter lighting our understanding down to the working point—that the important matter comes; but, contrary to custom, the very first words in this resolution are the important ones, because it starts out:

His Majesty Woodrow Wilson, the President of these United States, in his propaganda of world-wide philanthropy, his declarations of humanity, and the preservation of the whole world through the medium of unadulterated democracy, demands our warmest commendation, our unswerving fidelity and incessant support, and demands the support of every liberty-loving, true, patriotic citizen of the United States of America.

So be it—"His Majesty, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States." I thought I would give that kindly reminder so that if there is any question when he goes abroad, about court etiquette or how the President should be addressed, I will refer them to the Democratic candidate and the Democratic central committee of Muskingum County, Ohio. It is an authority; and even Col. House would be inclined to bow in humble submission if engrossed copies of the resolution were forwarded to him in Paris. I trust the press reports, if they are not pinched off at this end of the cable, will reach him, so that any mooted question on diplomatic addresses might be settled in due form.

However, taking the reason of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], when the express companies are taken, when the cable lines are taken, when the railways are taken, when the telephones are taken, down to the farmers' mutual, even, out in the Mississippi Valley country, we are reminded that the Postal Department is headed by Mr. Burleson; that the Secretary of Agriculture, Mr. Houston, is somewhat recently from Texas himself; that the Attorney General is from Texas; and if I might be permitted to lapse into curbstone vernacular, I would say that the President would be suffering, previous to his departure, from a case of "too much Texas." If he had a little wider political horizon, Mr. President, if it even took in Arizona, it would help some; but to confine it to Texas, I think, explains a good deal of the trouble. It led to a political proclamation by the President October 25, 1918, that only Democrats were fit to govern.

Burleson, in five annual reports, has recommended that everything in the way of communication of intelligence be added to his department. He has prejudged the case. He wants more power. Great Britain never undertook to run her cables to our shore. The six cable lines owned by the British Government are leased to the Western Union. As the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] suggested, taking a general view of the situation in his remarks this morning, there is not a government-owned cable that touches the shore of any other sovereignty in the world, save in the inert form of an inactive ownership. The active ownership or possession and use of it is confined to private parties.

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. SHERMAN. Yes.

Mr. KELLOGG. Great Britain never owned the cable lines. They were owned by a British company.

Mr. SHERMAN. A British company—that makes it even stronger than I thought. I thank the Senator for the correction. Not only are the 17 trans-Atlantic cable lines covered by this taking of the Government, but, in addition to that, there is a line which runs to Mexico, skirting across and around the shores and bodies of water until the principal cities of Mexico, before disorder was predominant there, were all accessible from this country, either by land wires or by cables. It runs down across the Isthmus of Panama; it penetrates South America; and the Commercial Cable of Mr. Mackay embraces the cable lines in all the peaceable parts of the world. They run across the Pacific Ocean to Hawaii, to the Philippine Islands, to Hongkong, to Japan, and to all the principal Asiatic ports that touch tidewater on that continent. Why are these to be taken by the Government? Has something happened in Siberia lately? Has the new Czecho-Slovak Government met with reverses? Is martial law necessary to take these cable lines in South America and in the far-distant quarters of the globe, Mr. President, in order to promote—in the language of the resolution—"the public security and defense"? I see or know nothing of it. We all know what the issue is. It is to take all you can under the powers delegated to the Executive by a generous and sometimes complaisant Congress. It is like the old novelist from Indiana, after all. You remember that in "The Hoosier Schoolmaster" the old lady, who was quite thrifty, said: "Get a plenty while you are getting it"; and he "got it while the getting was good"—got it under false pretenses in large part, as I believe, and he ought to be politically indicted under the "blue sky" law, because it was misrepresented in the prospectus what he proposed to deliver on the day of payment, or after he had negotiated the paper into the hands of an innocent Republican purchaser for value without notice.

Being in this condition, the power was delegated. No question was raised about war powers. He has the power, and under that power he is constantly engaged in taking everything that is loose. Following the language of one of Dickens's characters, he does not take land; he can not move it. His advice was, to a light-fingered gentleman: "Always take portable property." This is all portable property, down to the poles and hole in the earth in which the pole rests. That was probably the only thing that he could not carry off without being visible to the general public. All of the rest of it is portable property. The most of the articles or enterprises taken are articles that, so far as they belong to citizens of this country, are of a portable character, are eminently destructible, and may be destroyed in value by the taking or by the maladministration of the Government.

There is a very instructive editorial in the New York Times of November 20, 1918. It is instructive because of its contents, first, and next because the Times is a thick-and-thin supporter, right or wrong, at all times on war questions, at home or abroad, of this administration. It can not be regarded as an unkindly critic. It says that it is time to call a halt. It reminds the people of this country in that editorial that the reports of the railways of the country first showing a half-billion dollars of expenditures more than receipts have happily been reduced to $200,000,000. Let us hope it will be reduced still further. It calls attention to the taking of the express companies, and says that if they are operated as the railways have been, they, too, will be run at a loss. It calls attention to the fact that the Western Union Telegraph Co. and the inland lines that have been taken under the exercise of the power of the last of July or August, I believe, 1918, have been run at a loss.

Mr. Burleson denies that in a statement issued on yesterday in the following language, and it is a matter for some traveling auditor to settle:

> The statement contained in Mr. Mackay's letter dated November 11, 1918, and which has been made public by him, to the effect that the compensation to the Western Union Co. is more than that company's earnings for 1917, is not based on facts. The compensation allowed the Western Union Co. by the department is approximately $2,500,000 less than its income for that year from the land lines.

Let that go in. I want such evidence as may be available to be heard on that subject; but it is sufficient to say that there is nothing else that his administration has undertaken to run on which it has kept even. It is running true to form if it comes out behind, and if it can come out solvent on any instrumentality of private business that it has taken and operated I am ready to hear what it is.

The Post Office Department runs behind. Oh, it says that it shows a surplus that it has turned in once in a while to the Treasury; but it pays no rent, it pays no maintenance of buildings. Nothing is written off for depreciation or repairs. Nothing is charged for the ordinary overhead expenses, as private manufacturers or business men put it. If that were charged, as any other solvent business is conducted, the Post Office Department of this country has been from the time of its beginning, or its assumption of its present large duty, run at a loss. Not a report in 25 years could be made, if its receipts and expenditures were figured on any business basis, that would not show that it was tending all the time toward bankruptcy instead of solvency.

I know why these enterprises are taken. It is a part of the policy of framing up the issues of 1920. We might just as well face conditions; and I wish to talk to my southern brethren or to the majority party on the other side of the Chamber for a brief moment.

We may discuss the tariff, the amendment of revenue laws; we may talk of the peculiar questions that confront you on race lines in certain parts of the United States; but the political issues of this country are being changed rapidly. There will be forged, in the mighty furnaces heated by the declaration of war, issues that are new to the politics of America, that are unsettled, and that call for independent thought. I voice only my own opinion. I seek to bind nobody and no organization by the expression of that opinion; but there is the line of cleavage, so manifest that the wayfarer may run along and read it plainly.

There is in this country the radical element. There is a bolshevist abroad in the land. The red flag is carried at the head of a procession in New York City. It has not been carried in Chicago, but no one knows the day when its cobblestones will run red with blood as a result of an attempt to carry it. There is no room in the air of America for more than one flag. I have no use for the alien crew that put a red flag under the skies of this Republic. I believe it to be a violation of the espionage law; and if there were no law, I believe sufficient organized force ought to be gathered in the hands of American citizens to strip from the hands of any alien rabble a red flag carried anywhere in this country.

You, whose rights are more deeply involved than mine, know better than I do the danger attendant upon the destruction of State governments. I believe in preserving the reserved powers of the States. I believe it is a part of the indestructible foundation of national strength. There never has been a time when a State, with its reserved powers, was not the training ground of a stalwart citizenship. The tendency of the age and the tendency of the time, without regard to which side of the Chamber we sit on, is to destroy the sovereignty of the State in its admitted reserved powers. The States are the great foundation stones of government.

The radical does not believe in a State line anywhere. No man that follows a red flag or has it hidden away in the garret of his house for use on some opportune occasion when the police will not be looking believes in a State. He believes in an autocracy. His ideal government is in Russia to-day, its Lenines and Trotzskys and the whole red-flag crew that has reduced that country to the verge of starvation and made it a tremendous object lesson of what the unrestrained despotism of mobs may do.

There is a radical; and there are more of him than you think. Every great metropolitan center in this country is the breeding ground to spawn radicals upon the law-abiding citizens of the country. The city is a source of endless taint. It is the place where great extremes are found, where the millionaire and the tramp, the habitué of the free-lunch counter and the gentleman who takes his dinner late in the evening and his supper after midnight, are always found. The cheap one-and-a-half per cent in a schooner, with a pretzel made of sawdust and beans, and champagne, with the appurtenances that go with it, represent the extremes. The radical is in evidence—he is destructive—and all of the radicals that are not in jail are in appointive office under this administration.

You are not proud of the company. Do not speak up. I will do the talking for you. It does not hurt me any, and it might hurt you; but you believe it just the same. You have no more use for them than I have. What your President is going to do I do not know. I doubt if you know or not. But there are men in many places in office or in private life, who are encouraged and coddled and petted, who believed that somebody had robbed them before they were told, and they become fanatical in the belief after they are told. So they carry with them the fervor of the saint and the devotion of the martyr when you attempt to correct them for their vagaries in the administration of affairs.

In England there is the same thing. There is a radicalism; and we are a good deal like England in our affairs. I must hasten to a conclusion. We have the radical and the liberal and the conservative. They are here now.

Talk about political divisions and names and slogans all you want, but that is not the question. This administration is responsible for its kitchen Cabinet and that Cabinet headed by Col. House is a collection of radicals imbued with the vagaries of Carl Marx and of Lenine and Trotzky. You will have to purge your own household. There will be a division some day that will rival the cleaning and the differences that we had in our unhappy family, troubles in many years past, and some recent events that have not left our memory.

Mr. President, the issue in 1920 will be the assumption of not only what the Government now has but the assumption of many more undertakings. I find the same language used very generally by many of these men who were radicals; and the radical is not necessarily somebody without means or understanding. The radicals contain many intolerant intellectuals, men who have no practical experience, who sit in their closets and lecture to students in the universities, men who have no knowledge of how government is actually conducted. They know books but they do not know men, and they are the most dangerous of all the visionaries in this or any other country.

Along comes ownership by the Government called Government ownership and operation. The Government necessarily does some things that are indispensable. They are governmental in their character. The Army and the Navy and the public schools and from the beginning the Post Office within reasonable limitations. I do not believe the Post Office ought to go into the banking business or undertake the production and distribution of merchandise in a mercantile sense. It may act as a carrier under the present system, but it can not go further.

Therefore, Mr. President, the issue that is forcing itself to the front, that is aggravated by such seizures as that of the cable lines, is that of the public ownership of these enterprises and many others, embracing all the instruments of production and distribution, to lapse into the language of the platform of the radical. So when we come to that we have raised the line of division that will project itself into 1920. It is that that has led the President to issue the Executive order taking the cable lines. I agree in the entirety with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

I wish to make some concluding remarks, Mr. President, on the character of the commission that will frame the draft of the treaty. This is the treaty-making body jointly with the Executive. We have no assurance so far that any Senator will be on that commission, although it has a precedent in other cases of a like kind. Being a treaty-making body, no sufficient reason appears why, if no Member of this body is on the commission, the cables should not be open uncensored and that a free press might not carry to the people of this country and to the Senate all of the information needed. The conditions that attend the negotiations are often as important in the interpretation and understanding as the language in the text of the document.

We have Mr. Creel's word that there will be no censorship, but that in view of the fact that our only source of information is in the hands of a man who has censored, who represents the eye and ear and the hand, touching the wire with every key that clicks on this continent as the representative of the Executive himself, he goes abroad and no access can be had to him. Three thousand miles of ocean will roll between us and the President, and this body sits mute and silent without information until suddenly the draft of the treaty is precipitated into this body for ratification. Against that I protest. It is an incidental reason to be added to that given by the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. President, I wish to put in the RECORD, in addition to the communications offered by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] from Mr. Mackay and from Mr. Burleson, additional communications and matter which I will give to the reporter and have them inserted without reading, in order to save time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the request will be granted.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From the New York Times.]

GOVERNMENT'S TRADING ACCOUNTS.

In his letter to Postmaster General Burleson Mr. Mackay refers to the fact that the Government has undertaken to pay to the Western Union Telegraph Co. more than it is earning, "which would indicate that the year ending July 31, 1919, will show a loss to the Government in connection with that company of at least $2,326,668." To which must be added whatever loss is made in connection with the Postal Co., whose compensation is not yet fixed, and the American Telephone Co. The express companies' finances are in a worse state, and will not be relieved by an increase of rates which is immediately converted into an increase of costs. No one can say how the Government will come out with its railway adventure until the war accounts are adjusted, and until the plans for making the temporary arrangement permanent are further developed, but it is plain that there is a pretty quarrel developing between the Postmaster General and the Director General. Their interests conflict in the manner indicated by the working out of the railway-mail pay case.

When it was proposed to pay the railways for the carriage of the mails by the footage of the mail cars rented instead of by the tonnage of the mails carried, the Post Office declared that it would increase the estimated pay of the railways by over $3,000,000. The real figures are now known through the hearings before the Court of Claims. During the life of the footage plan of payment "the annual rate of compensation to the railroads had been reduced from $64,447,982 to $52,182,052." How long will the Director General allow the Post Office to make profits at the loss of the railways? How long will the Director General run the express companies at a loss in competition with the parcel post? When times are normal, and costs of private business are reexamined in connection with the reduction of war profits, how long will private business endure that rates shall be increased and accommodations reduced, in order that the Government may undertake trading responsibilities on a basis of costs to it, and charges to its customers which would not have been endured when the business taken over were managed by private capital?

War finance is a matter limited to war, and wars do end. There is no end to the Government ownership responsibilities which the country is being led into under conditions not deserving the name of fair play. The war was over before the country was confronted with the belated and unnecessary taking over of the cable service under a presidential order not published at its date. The Postmaster General announced yesterday a cut in the telegraph rates which will not go far to allay the country's dislike of the manner in which the thing was done, apart from the merits. Those aware of the result of such experiments elsewhere know how deceptive such reductions of rates are. The British post-office telegraph service has been run at a loss for 44 years. The 6-penny telegrams are delivered at a cost of 22 cents. The sender pays 12 cents, 6 pense, and the taxpayer 10 cents. It overtasks credulity to believe that the post office which never has made a profit on any commercial calculation, and which is usually run at a loss on its own statement, can possibly reduce rates. The pretense is an insult to intelligence.

Also it was announced yesterday that the Government's loss on the railways had been reduced from the half billion which had been feared to $200,000,000 for nine months. The railway accounts are better kept, and the ground is firmer here. But there is a factor not in the accounts. Under Government operation the fixing of rates and wages is a matter of politics rather than economics, and there is a prospect that the railway finance will be assimilated to the British telegraph finance instanced above. Then there are those who are pressing that our new mercantile marine, built for war purposes, shall be operated in peace as a public utility, with the Furuseth Act controlling costs. These operations are on a scale rivaling that of the war, and surpassing it if time is considered in the calculation. Before another step is taken in the direction in which we are headed respecting public operation of public utilities, there should be an extension of the regulation of private finance to public finance. There is nothing political in the suggestion. There is no opposition to public operation in that. It is mere business common sense. Those who oppose it condemn public operation in advance, and afford an opportunity to say that they do not believe their own arguments. If they honestly believed their claims of profits they would neglect no opportunity of proving them. A claim to public support on the basis of blessings provided by taxes in fact, and concealed by juggling accounts, can not be allowed except by those who are deceived, and like it.

MACKAY SUSPECTS MOTIVE—SEES IN CABLE SEIZURE "A MARCH TOWARD GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP."

Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph Co. and the Commercial Cable Co. yesterday reiterated his belief that governmental control of the cables would be unwise at this juncture, and said the contemplated seizure of the cables appeared to be "a preliminary march toward Government ownership." The cables had not actually been taken over by the Government at a late hour last night.

"The proposed action is incomprehensible to me," said Mr. Mackay. "The very vastness of the proposition is staggering. For illustration, we have a cable 10,000 miles long, from San Francisco to China, Japan, and Manila. What could the Government do with that? The Central & South American Cable Co. has cables from New York through the Panama Canal and away down the west shore of South America and across the mountains to the Argentine Republic. What could the Government do with that, and why should it want it?

"Then there is the Atlantic system of 17 transatlantic cables, which the Government proposes to take over, six of which are British-owned and are merely leased to the Western Union. Who knows but that serious complications might arise in connection with these foreign-owned cables?

"All the cables are now worked to their utmost speed, and by the most expert management, and it is simply impossible to get anything more out of them. If we still had three or four years of war before us there might be some sense in the Government exercising some degree of supervision over the handling of these vast cable systems, but everybody believes that the terms of peace will be worked out within two, at most three, months, and, furthermore, the Navy Department has been exercising censorship, and is continuing to do so. Why, then, does the Government want to seize these cables for such a short time?

"It will merely disorganize the systems," continued Mr. Mackay, "and undoubtedly will be a heavy expense to the Government. No good can come of it. Apparently the proposition is merely the reverberation of the action of the Government in taking over the land telegraph lines on August 1, 1918, when the war was in full swing. That emergency has now passed, and there is no reason for the Government to seize these vast cable systems.

"There is certainly no element of 'national security and defense' in taking over these cables now, when the war is over, and yet that was the sole purpose of the joint resolution under which the Postmaster General is to take over these cables. Moreover, it has been intimated to me that there is serious doubts if the courts would uphold the action of the Government in seizing these cable systems under the war power after an armistice has been entered into. The whole move would appear to be a preliminary march toward Government ownership."

Inquiry at the offices of the Western Union and the Commercial Cable Co. brought assertions that both companies were fast catching up with the accumulation of messages piled up when the cable staffs were depleted by influenza. According to William J. Deegan, secretary of the Mackay Co., a holding corporation which directs the Commercial Cable Co., this organization is operating its full equipment of five Atlantic cables at maximum. Mr. Deegan said that last week, in addition to a reduced cable force, trouble with the land wires at both ends of the cables had hampered prompt transmission. All causes contributory to delay, however, were now removed, he said, and messages were going forward as fast as offered.

In speaking of the capacity of the five cables which his company is employing Mr. Deegan said each cable was capable of carrying 180 letters a minute, or an average of 30 words a minute. These cables, operated continuously for 24 hours, would permit the transmission of 216,000 words. Speaking of the special cable which the company had reserved for the use of the Government in connection with the peace conference, a cable which will establish a direct connection between the State Department and the American embassy in Paris, Mr. Deegan said that this cable line also would be used for commercial purposes during the intervals when the Government was not employing it.

It was stated that the Western Union cable system between this country and Europe consisted of eight cables, each of approximately the same capacity as the Commercial Co.'s lines. A statement that several of the Western Union cables were out of use because of a break in midocean could not be officially confirmed through Newcomb Carlton, president of the company. It was said, however, that the Western Union was experiencing no difficulty in handling transmission; that the situation was now good and would continue to improve. In support of its ability to handle business the Western Union announced restoration of its trans-Atlantic service, but added that accepted messages would, perhaps, be subjected to slight delay.

MACKAY REPLIES TO BURLESON—THINKS THE REAL REASON FOR CABLE SEIZURE IS INTENDED GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph-Commercial Cable Cos., commenting on the statement of Postmaster General Burleson regarding his reasons for taking control of the cable lines, said last night:

"I fail to see the point of Mr. Burelson's argument. The land-line systems are theoretically in the hands of the Postmaster General, but practically they are operated by the two telegraph companies exactly the same as they were before the Postmaster General took them over. Mr. Burleson fails to point out how any more traffic can be sent over the ocean cables than under present control. Those cables already are operated to their full capacity by the most expert management, and he can not add to their capacity. The recent breakdown of the Western Union cable system caused the cable business to go by the Commercial Cable Co.'s cable, and its facilities were overtaxed. But how could Mr. Burleson have added to their capacity during that interruption? The cable business flowed to the Commercial Cable Co. from both telegraph companies because the Western Union land-line system, being deprived of its cable connection, turned over the business to the Commercial Cable Co., or its patrons did so, which is the same thing.

"Ever since the United States entered the war the American ends of the cables have been under the control of Government officials as effectively as any control could be. They have been under the control of the Director of Naval Communications, and not a single thing pertaining to the operation of the lines or the facility with which cable dispatches are being handled was done without his knowledge. Every suggestion and request that was made by this Government official or his representative stationed in our cable office at New York was promptly complied with in every particular. In addition, a most rigid censorship was established, in which the company heartily cooperated. In fact, the Commercial Cable Co. has been complimented by American and British Government authorities for the splendid service they gave. In Canada, Newfoundland, Great Britain, and France, censorship under the direction of those Governments has also been in force for over four years.

"There is not a quarter of the need of close control of the cable systems now or during the period of readjustment as there was during the war itself, because during that time there was a vast quantity of war news which is now quickly subsiding since the armistice was declared.

"Mr. Burleson, of course, is not a practical cable man and knows absolutely nothing about that line of business, and his reasoning is not convincing. He is all wrong.

"Mr. Burleson says he has other reasons. I fear that the chief one is incipient Government ownership."

MUST RUN CABLES, BURLESON STATES—NEVER A TIME IN THE WAR THAT CALLED FOR SUCH A CLOSE CONTROL, HE SAYS—WITHHOLDS SOME REASONS—NEED OF ADJUSTING TRAFFIC SET FORTH—MACKAY ISSUES A STATEMENT IN REPLY.

[Special to the New York Times.]

WASHINGTON, November 19, 1918.

Postmaster General Burleson issued a statement to-day giving as one of the reasons for taking over the control of the marine cables that "there never was a time in the history of this war, for which the joint resolution (the Aswell resolution) was passed, giving the President the right to control the wire and cable systems, which called for such a close control of the cable system as to-day and will continue during the period of readjustment."

The Postmaster General added that there were "many other reasons" for taking over the cables which had been suggested by the experience thus far in Government control, but he would not detail them at this time.

No statement was issued concerning the compensation to be awarded the Postal Telegraph Co., but experts were working on the problem to-day, and it is said the figures will be forthcoming to-morrow.

The statement by the Postmaster General concerning the cables follows:

"Originally the cable systems were organized and operated independently of the land-line systems. The transmission of messages commenced and ended at the termini of the cables and the communications destined to points beyond the terminal were physically transferred to other lines. To-day the transmission is continuous for land and cable lines. The distance of continuous transmission is bounded neither by continents nor oceans.

FOR A CONTINUOUS CIRCUIT.

"Effective communication, therefore, demands intimate relations under which a continuous circuit can be established, not from one terminal to another, and so far as authorized under the joint resolution from destination to destination. The effectiveness of the service is dependent upon the extent of the common control of circuits which should be to the furthest point possible.

"This necessity of continuity and common control between land and cable lines is most conclusively shown by the fact that each of our telegraph systems have their independent cable systems.

"The Mackay Co., originally a cable system, finding that the land lines were indispensable to the cable system, constructed a land system to make more effective its cable system.

"The Western Union, while organized primarily as a land company, although there were large cable facilities working in connection with it belonging to other companies, yet for its own interest was forced into constructing and otherwise obtaining effectual control of the trans-Atlantic cable companies which had heretofore been independent, but which worked in connection with the Western Union and which did not belong to or work in connection with the Commercial or Mackay interests.

"The other cable companies, through their contractural relations, became more or less a part of the telegraph system so far as transmission and continuity were concerned, and their operation in this way was made as effective as it would be through ownership or common control.

"There never was a time in the history of this war for which this joint resolution was passed giving the President the right to control the wire and cable systems which called for such a close control of the cable system as to-day and will continue during the period of readjustment. The absolute necessity of uninterrupted, continuous communication should be apparent to all. The Postmaster General is now operating all the telegraph and telephone lines in one system.

ADJUSTMENT OF TRAFFIC.

"The recent breakdown in connection with one of the cable systems has demonstrated the absolute necessity of being able to utilize at will the facilities of either cable system with all of the land-line systems, in order that traffic may be adjusted in the same hands as it is on the land lines.

"There are many other reasons for taking over the cables, which have been suggested by the experience so far in Government control of land lines, but I only think it necessary to state the determining factors."

Solicitor Lamar of the Post Office Department, who has been very active in the late step by the Government, would answer no questions of any character, preserving a silence that at the very least could be said to be discreet. He would not even say whether the amount of compensation for the Postal Telegraph Co. would be made known to-morrow.

It was stated elsewhere in the department that the figures would be published. It was learned also that the department had been studiously at work delving into the figures which the Postal supplied to the Interstate Commerce Commission. The department appears confident that the company's compensation will be regarded as sufficient when the facts are known.

One of the officials of the Mackay Cable Co. was notified Saturday that the Government intended taking over the cables, and a copy of the President's proclamation was handed to him at that time, "before you newspaper men knew about it," it was stated to-day by a Government official.

The Postmaster General announced to-day that he has had a committee at work some six weeks considering the subject of the wages and conditions of employment of telephone and telegraph employees.

WAGE STATEMENT ISSUED.

"The subject," he said in a prepared statement, "is not an easy one to deal with. Both wages and conditions differ materially in different parts of the country and even in the same State. Added to this are the violent disturbances of employment conditions occasioned by the war and the circumstances that telephone rates have not been generally readjusted to meet rising costs as in other employments.

"It is my wish to be just to these faithful workers and to act as promptly as an intelligent disposition of the subject will permit. Meanwhile the employees should keep in mind that just as public employees are paid higher and enjoy better conditions in the long run than private employees, so changes can not be made as rapidly as by an individual employer. I have urgently requested the committee to reach a report without avoidable delay."

Mr. Burleson to-day enlarged the committee on standardization of telegraph rates by naming Charles C. Marshall, Ohio public-utilities commission, and Joseph B. Eastman, Massachusetts public-service commission, as additional members. This committee, originally composed of David J. Lewis as chairman; John C. Willever, vice president, Western Union Telegraph Co.; and Edward Reynolds, general manager, Postal Telegraph Cable Co., was appointed to make necessary studies and recommendations. The enlargement of the committee gives recognition to State utilities and public-service commissions.

A similar committee on standardization of rates for telephone service, composed of David J. Lewis, chairman; Harry B. Thayer, vice president American Telephone & Telegraph Co.; and Charles Y. McVey, president Ohio State Telephone Co., was enlarged by the addition of Paul F. Haynes, Indiana public-service commission, and Noah W. Simpson, Missouri public-service commission.

[From the New York Times.]

PROCLAIMS POWER TO SEIZE CABLES—DOCUMENT SIGNED BY PRESIDENT NOVEMBER 2 MADE PUBLIC. NAMING BURLESON DIRECTOR—TO INSURE COOPERATION—OFFICIALS SAY JEALOUSY BETWEEN COMPANIES, HAMPERING SERVICE, FORCED GOVERNMENT TO ACT.

WASHINGTON, November 18, 1918.

It transpired to-day that a proclamation signed by President Wilson November 2, placing all marine cables under the control of the Government, with the Postmaster General as administrator, was published Saturday night on an inside page of the Official Bulletin issued by the Committee on Public Information. The newspapers were not notified of the proclamation, which provides that the Government control shall last until the President has proclaimed the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace.

ANTAGONISM BETWEEN COMPANIES.

Antagonism and lack of cooperation between the two great American-owned ocean cable companies were declared to-day in high quarters to have necessitated the Government taking over all the marine cables. It was represented that there had been a total absence of mutual aid on the part of the companies, and that in consequence hundreds of messages were piled up on each side of the Atlantic Ocean awaiting transmission. It was also said that because of the jealousy of the companies toward each other the Government had found it practically impossible under private control to arrange direct and immediate lines to France, over which are now constantly flowing almost ceaseless diplomatic messages.

It was stated to-day, as an instance of the bad feeling of the cable companies toward each other, that when the personnel of one company's Irish cable landing office was ravaged by influenza and the other company's American landing station was hard hit by a sleet storm the two companies would not cooperate with each other to relieve the situation.

Postmaster General Burleson will issue a formal statement to-morrow, detailing the troubles of the Government with the cable companies. He had a long conference to-day with Judge William H. Lamar, Solicitor of the Post Office Department; John C. Koons, First Assistant Postmaster General; and David J. Lewis, who has become allied with the department since the Government took over the control of telegraphs and telephones.

Officials at the department would make no statement for publication to-day regarding the attitude toward the telegraph companies, but one officer said privately that the Government felt no fear of the public's judgment when all the facts were made known.

RESULT OF RED TAPE.

When asked to-day why newspapers had not been notified of the appearance of the proclamation, the Committee on Public Information explained that usually when proclamations dealing with a certain subject were handed by the State Department to the Official Bulletin the committee was asked by the other Government department especially affected to notify the newspapers. Usually the special department issued a statement explaining in plain language the effect of the often technical proclamation. In the case of the cable control, it appears, no such request was made. The Committee on Public Information appeared to believe that it was incumbent upon the Post Office Department to notify the newspapers. The Post Office Department said that this step should have been undertaken by the State Department. One official said, "The proclamation was two weeks old, anyway." He seemed to consider that sufficient excuse for the lack of publicity.

In a short time, perhaps synchronously with the statement promised for to-morrow dealing with the actuating motives for taking over the cables, the Post Office Department will issue a reply to the allegations of Clarence H. Mackay, president of the Postal Telegraph Cable Co. and the Commercial Cable Co., that the Government compensation agreed upon for the Western Union Telegraph Co. is "much more than the telegraph company is earning from month to month," and that the Government may lose $2,326,668 on this agreement for the fiscal year. The Post Office Department is now calculating the compensation for the Postal Co., and this figure may be announced at any moment.

The proclamation follows:

By the President of the United States of America—A proclamation.

Whereas the Congress of the United States, in the exercise of the constitutional authority vested in them, by joint resolution of the Senate and House of Representatives, bearing date July 16, 1918, resolved:

"That the President, during the continuance of the present war, is authorized and empowered, whenever he shall deem it necessary for the national security or defense, to supervise or take possession and assume control of any telegraph, telephone, marine cable, or radio system or systems or any part thereof, and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable for the duration of the war, which supervision, possession, control, or operation shall not extend beyond the date of the proclamation by the President of the exchange of ratifications of the treaty of peace:

"Provided, That just compensation shall be made for such supervision, possession, control, or operation, to be determined by the President, and if the amount thereof so determined by the President is unsatisfactory to the person entitled to receive the same such person shall be paid 75 per cent of the amount so determined by the President, and shall be entitled to sue the United States to recover such further sum as, added to said 75 per cent, will make up such amount as will be just compensation therefor in the manner provided for by section 24, paragraph 20, and section 145 of the Judicial Code.

"Provided further, That nothing in this act shall be construed to amend, repeal, impair, or affect existing laws or powers of the several States in relation to taxation or the lawful police regulations of the several States, except wherein such laws, powers, or regulations may effect the transmission of Government communications or the issue of stocks and bonds by such system or systems."

And whereas it is deemed necessary for the national security and defense to supervise and to take possession and assume control of all marine-cable systems and to operate the same in such manner as may be needful or desirable:

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, under and by virtue of the powers vested in me by the foregoing resolution, and by virtue of all other powers thereto enabling me, do hereby take possession and assume control and supervision of each and every marine-cable system and every part thereof owned or controlled and operated by any company or companies organized and existing under the laws of the United States, or any State thereof, including all equipment thereof and appurtenances thereto whatsoever, and all materials and supplies.

It is hereby directed that the supervision, possession, control, and operation of such marine-cable systems hereby by me undertaken shall be exercised by and through the Postmaster General, Albert S. Burleson. Said Postmaster General may perform the duties hereby and hereunder imposed upon him, so long and to such extent and in such manner as he shall determine through the owners, managers, boards of directors, receivers, officers, and employees of said marine-cable systems.

Until and except so far as said Postmaster General shall from time to time by general or special orders otherwise provide, the owners, managers, boards of directors, receivers, officers, and employees of the various marine cable systems shall continue the operation thereof in the usual and ordinary course of the business of said systems in the names of their respective companies, associations, organizations, owners, or managers, as the case may be.

Regular dividends hitherto declared and maturing interest upon bonds, debentures, and other obligations may be paid in due course, and such regular dividends and interest may continue to be paid until and unless the said Postmaster General shall from time to time otherwise by general or special orders determine; and, subject to the approval of said Postmaster General, the various marine cable systems may determine upon and arrange for the renewal and extension of maturing obligations.

From and after 12 o'clock midnight on the 2d day of November, 1918, all marine cable systems included in this order and proclamation shall conclusively be deemed within the possession and control and under the supervision of said Postmaster General without further act or notice.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done by the President, in the District of Columbia, this 2d day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eighteen and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-third.

WOODROW WILSON.

By the President:
ROBERT LANSING,
Secretary of State.

CIVIL-SERVICE RETIREMENT.

Mr. REED obtained the floor.

Mr. McKELLAR. Will the Senator from Missouri yield to me for a moment?

Mr. REED. Certainly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. President, there has been before the Senate since October 10, now a period of about six weeks, the bill (S. 4637) for the retirement of superannuated employees in the classified civil service. In my judgment it is a very worthy bill and it has gotten down to the point of final passage. If Senators think the bill ought to pass, surely six weeks of time for the consideration of the bill are sufficient. I ask the Senator from Missouri to yield long enough for the purpose of voting on the bill. It has been before the Senate, as I said, for six weeks.

Mr. REED. I am informed that there will be further discussion of the bill.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to give notice, if the Senator will yield to me, that there will be objection to voting on the bill to-day.

Mr. REED. I understand that an executive session is desired and in view of the fact that there will be further discussion, it would be futile to yield for that purpose.

Mr. McKELLAR. I understand the bill remains as the unfinished business at the next session under our rule, and I want to give notice to the Senate that on the first day of the next session I shall ask for a vote on the bill.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I desire to ask the attention of the Senate to some rather brief remarks touching the proposed league of nations. I shall not be able, in the time limited, to enter into a complete analysis of that great subject. I hope merely to throw out a few suggestions which may possibly be of some use at a time like this.

At the beginning, I shall breach a senatorial precedent by reading a statement by George Washington. I know that Washington is very much out of fashion. His memory and teachings are fading from the minds of modern statesmen. Nevertheless, out of reverence for the past I challenge your thought to these words uttered by Washington in the very sunset of his life, when looking backward through the mellow light of experience he surveyed the history of mankind, and when he was also able to catch a prophetic vision of the mighty Republic of to-day. Let me implore your attention:

> Against the insidious wiles of foreign influence (I conjure you to believe me, fellow citizens), the jealousy of a free people ought to be constantly awake; since history and experience prove that foreign influence is one of the most baneful foes of republican government. * * * Real patriots, who may resist the intrigues of the favorite, are liable to become suspected and odious, while its tools and dupes usurp the applause and confidence of the people to surrender their interests.
>
> The great rule of conduct for us in regard to foreign nations is in extending our commercial relations to have with them as little political connection as possible. So far as we have already formed engagements let them be fulfilled with perfect good faith. Here let us stop.

Again—

> Europe has a set of primary interests which to us have none or a very remote relation. Hence she must be engaged in frequent controversies the causes of which are essentially foreign to our conscience. Hence, therefore, it must be unwise in us to implicate ourselves by artificial ties in the ordinary vicissitudes of her politics; the ordinary combinations and collusions of her friendships or enmities.

A little further on he says:

> Why forego the advantages of so peculiar a situation? Why quit our own to stand upon foreign ground? Why, by interweaving our destiny with that of any part of Europe, entangle our peace and prosperity in the toils of European ambition, rivalship, interest, humor, or caprice?
>
> It is our true policy to steer clear of permanent alliance with any portion of the foreign world. * * *
>
> Taking care always to keep ourselves by suitable establishments on a respectable defensive posture, we may safely trust to temporary alliances for extraordinary emergencies.

So spoke the creator of this Republic. Who will be its destroyer?

Under Washington's policy we have lived 142 years. Our national domain has been extended from a narrow fringe along the Atlantic until it embraces the continent. Our population has increased from 3,000,000 to 104,000,000 people. We have gathered in our laps more of wealth than there is in all the rest of the world. We have glorified our land with magical cities. We have covered the once barren prairies with habitations of civilization. From countless chimneys ascends the smoke that marks the family altars at which husband, wife, and child bow to the God of freedom and bless the memory of George Washington. Our hills are crowned with churches and schoolhouses, twin products of civilization, the glory of humanity. We have become the foremost Nation in the world, not only in wealth but in man power, in education, in intelligence.

So great have we become that when the Teutonic powers were in the very act of conquering Europe we were able to rescue them from destruction. Standing in a position of splendid isolation and independence, without a great standing Army or Navy, but with the strength of a just cause and with the indomitable will and fearless heart of a brave people to sustain us, we stepped into the breach and saved civilization. France had been driven back across bloody fields. The English forces were reeling and staggering to their fate—Haig had exclaimed, in the agony of his heart, "Our backs are at the wall; Britains, stand and die." At that moment new voices were heard coming from the rear—the mingled Yankee cheer and rebal yell of the American soldier. Our troops swept through Chateau-Thierry and turned back the waves of onrushing Huns. From that hour until the armistice was declared not alone the American flag but the flags of all our allies moved forward to victory and to glory. Such is the story told in a word, and most imperfectly told, of what has been accomplished by following the teachings of Washington.

At a time like this, when a peace is about to be declared, a peace that is the most glorious of all history, a peace that was made possible by the valor and power of this country, it is proposed that we shall abandon our ancient and traditional policy and shall become entangled in every broil of Europe as these broils may now or as they may hereafter exist. It is the most monstrous doctrine ever proposed in this Republic. The sanctity of no great name can render it holy. The opinion of no man can make it safe.

Mr. President, what is this proposition? It comes to us in two forms. It comes, in fact, in three, but all in the end amount to the same proposition. I shall discuss one of them only far enough to show that in whatever form or aspect these propositions appear, at their basis is the thought of universal peace, the thought that the millenium has come. That was the sentiment that actuated those good people who a few years ago went up and down our land telling us that the lion and the lamb were ready to lie down together, that war was at an end, that everybody had suddenly become good and pure and virtuous and unselfish. These dreamers were rudely awakened by the cruel voice of war. Their eyes looked out on scenes of blood where they hoped to gaze upon elysian fields.

That fallacy lies at the basis of both the propositions I am about to discuss, but I do not pause at this time to further point out the connection. What are the two concrete propositions? One is that an international court shall be established to which shall be submitted the controversies of all nations. The other is that there shall be a league or compact between certain nations by which they bind themselves to enforce the terms and conditions of their agreements upon each other and upon other nations.

Let us examine the first of these propositions—the international court. First, I remark that no international court and no court of any kind can possibly be effective unless it is possessed of a constabulary sufficient to enforce its decrees.

The mere emission of a judgment by a court without any power to enforce the judgment leaves the court a thing for laughter and jeers. This fact, indeed, is conceded by those who advocate the doctrine I am discussing. In plain language, an international court to be effective must be backed by an international army. It must be further conceded that an international army will be ineffective unless it be powerful enough to conquer any single nation. Aye, more, it must be able to not only conquer any single nation but to conquer any combination of nations that may be formed to defy the decree of the court.

Whoever, then, commands such an army is powerful enough to conquer the United States of America. I unhesitatingly declare that the citizen of our Republic who will wittingly help create an army great enough and strong enough to conquer the United States of America and give the command of that army to an alien is a greater traitor to the country than was Benedict Arnold.

Who is to command this proposed international army? Will it be an American? Will it be a Japanese, or, in the mutations of time, will it be a German, or will it perchance be an Englishman? Somebody must command this army. Who shall it be? Certainly the command will not be vested in our citizens for all time. Surely no one can claim that the United States will always have a friend in command of the international army. No man is so foolish as to believe that other nations will help set up a court that will always decide in accordance with the interests of America and help in the creation of an army that is always to be commanded by an American citizen. Only a fool can believe that.

I have thus far spoken of the army that is to enforce the decree of the court. Who, pray, is to constitute the court that is to decide matters involving the very life of our country? What individuals shall constitute this international court? It must be composed of representatives of different governments. What are these governments? What are their interests? What are their prejudices? Lawyers who sit in front of me never in their lives agreed to submit the vital interests of their clients to an unknown tribunal. They invariably insisted on submitting only a particular controversy, and always then to a tribunal which they were sure would at least be fair and impartial.

But who will constitute this international court? I beg you to stop and think, and if you stop and think you will be appalled at the idea that any man could ever have suggested such a thing as consigning the life of America to such a tribunal. First, shall it be composed of one representative of each nation? If so, is the United States, with 104,000,000, to have the same representation upon the court as the island of Haiti or the Republic of Liberia or Serbia or any other of the smaller countries of the world? And if we are to have a greater representation what becomes of the doctrine of the equality of nations in the international court? What becomes of the doctrine that small nations must be protected from the strong or great nations?

But, sir, who is to constitute the personnel of this court that we are to bind ourselves to plead our case before? I hold in my hand a list of the Governments in Europe as they existed

15 days ago. The Lord of hosts alone knows what they are at this moment. The Lord of hosts alone knows how many of these kings will be back on their thrones the day after tomorrow. He only knows what kind of a government we shall at any time in the future have in any of these countries.

But let me for a moment call attention to the court to which we were invited by some of our enthusiastic friends a few days ago. I shall take the time of the Senate to read only the names of the living blood relationships of the hereditary rulers of Europe. I do not pause to speak of ancestral connections. If I were to do so it would appear that the threads of European royal life are so crossed and intercrossed as to constitute an inextricable tangle. I speak, therefore, of the living relatives, of those who now breathe and exist. Imagine, now, we are forming an international court into which the Republic of America is invited, and to which we must submit our vital interests, the life and death of our beloved country. I call attention to the various European royal families and their connections each with the other:

GREAT BRITAIN AND IRELAND—GEORGE V.

Mother: Princess Alexandra of Denmark.
Sister: Princess Maud, married to Haakon VII, King of Norway.
Uncle: Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh, married to Marie, Grand Duchess of Russia.
First cousin: Princess Marie, married to Ferdinand, King of Roumania.
First cousin: Princess Beatrice, married to Alphonse, Infanta of Spain.
First cousin: Princess Helena, married to Christian, Prince of Schleswig-Holstein.
Uncle: Prince Arthur, Duke of Connaught, married to Louise Marguerite.
Aunt: Princess Victoria, married to Frederick William, father of William II, Emperor of Germany.
Cousin: Ernest August was King of Hanover.
First cousin: Nicholas II, former Emperor of Russia.
First cousin: William II, Emperor of Germany.

PRUSSIA—WILLIAM II.

Mother: Victoria, Princess Royal of Great Britain, daughter of Queen Victoria and Prince Albert.
Sister: Princess Sophie married Constantine, King of Greece.
First cousin: George V of England.
Cousin by marriage: Nicholas II, former Emperor of Russia.

RUSSIA—NICHOLAS II (NOW DEAD).

Mother: Marie Feodorovna, Princess of Denmark.
Uncle: Grand Duke Vladimir married Marie Pavlowna, Duchess of Mecklenburg.
Second cousin: Grand Duchess Helene married Nicholas, Prince of Greece.
Aunt: Marie Alexandrovna married Alfred, Duke of Edinburgh.
Uncle: Grand Duke Paul Alexandrovitch married Alexandra, Princess of Greece.
Second cousin: Olga married George I, King of Greece.
Great uncle: Nicholas Nicholaievitch married Stana, Princess of Montenegro.
First cousin: George V, King of England.
Cousin: William II, Emperor of Germany.

AUSTRIA—CHARLES I.

Mother: Archduchess Marie Josephe, Princess of Saxony.
Cousin: Archduke Rudolph married Stephanie, Princess of Belgium.
Great Uncle: Archduke Ferdinand married Marie-Charlotte, Princess of Belgium.
Great Uncle: Archduke Charles Louis married Marie Therese, Infanta of Portugal.
Cousin: Archduke Albert married Hildegarde, Princess of Bavaria.
Cousin: Archduchess Marie-Christine married Alphonse XII, King of Spain, father of present King.

DENMARK—CHRISTIAN X.

Mother: Louisa, Princess of Sweden and Norway.
Wife: Alexandria, Duchess of Mecklenburg.
Brother: Prince Charles, afterwards King of Norway under the name of Haakon VII.
Sister: Princess Ingeborg married Charles, Prince of Sweden.
Aunt: Princess Alexandra married Edward, Prince of Wales, afterwards King Edward VII, King of England.
Uncle: Prince William became George I, King of Greece.
Aunt: Princess Dagmar married Alexander, Grand Duke, afterward Alexander III, Emperor of Russia.

GREECE—ALEXANDER I.

Grandfather—William, Prince of Denmark.
Grandmother—Olga-Constantinova, Grand Duchess of Russia.
Mother—Sophie, Princess of Prussia, sister of Kaiser Wilhelm II of Germany.
Uncle—Prince Nicholas married Helene, Grand Duchess of Russia.
Aunt—Princess Marie married George Michailovitch, Grand Duke of Russia.

BELGIUM—ALBERT I.

Mother: Marie, Princess of Hohenzollern.
Wife: Elizabeth, Duchess of Bavaria.
Sister: Princess Josephine married Charles, Prince of Hohenzollern.
First cousin: Princess Stephanie married Rudolph, Archduke of Austria.

SWEDEN—GUSTAVUS V.

Son: Married to Margaret, Princess Royal of Great Britain.
Brother: Charles married to Ingeborg, Princess of Denmark.
Second cousin: Princess Louise married Frederick, afterwards King of Denmark.

BAVARIA—LOUIS III.

Mother: Augusline, Archduchess of Austria.
Wife: Marie Therese, Archduchess of Austria.
Daughter: Princess Aldegonde married William, Prince of Hohenzollern, distant cousin of the Kaiser.
Uncle: Maximilian II, King of Bavaria, married Marie, Princess of Prussia.
First cousin: Prince Louis Ferdinand married Marie de la Paz, Infanta of Spain.

ITALY—VICTOR EMANUEL III.

Wife: Helene, Princess of Montenegro.
Uncle: Prince Amedee, son of King Victor Emanuel and Adelaide, Archduchess of Austria.
Cousin by marriage: Elizabeth, Princess of Saxony.

NORWAY—HAAKON VII.

Wife: Maud, Princess of Great Britain.

BULGARIA—FERDINAND I.

Father: Prince August of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha.
Uncle: Ferdinand, King of Portugal.

ROUMANIA—FERDINAND.

Father: Leopold, prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmanngen (distant cousin of Kaiser).
Mother: Antonia, Infanta of Portugal.
Wife: Marie-Alexandra, Grand Duchess of Russia.

SERBIA—PETER I.

Wife: Zorka-Lyoubitza, Princess of Montenegro.

MONTENEGRO—NICHOLAS I.

Daughter: Princess Milotza married Pierre Nicholaievitch, Grand Duke of Russia.
Daughter: Princess Stana married Nicholas Nicholaievitch, Grand Duke of Russia.
Daughter: Princess Helene married Victor-Emanuel, Prince of Naples, afterwards King of Italy.

SPAIN—ALPHONSE XIII.

Wife: Victoria Eugenia, Princess of Battenberg.
Mother: Marie Christine, Archduchess of Austria.
Sister: Marie Teresa, married Ferdinand, Prince of Bavaria.
Aunt: Infanta Maria de la Paz married Louis Ferdinand, Prince of Bavaria.

LUXEMBURG—MARIE ADELAIDE, GRAND DUCHESS.

Grandmother: Adelaide, Princess of Anhalt.
Mother: Marie Anne, Infanta of Portugal.

Imagine the condition of the American Republic going into a court composed of the representatives of these ruling houses. Imagine, if you please, the kind of decree you would obtain in a controversy with one of the rulers before a court each member of which was the blood relative or the representative of the blood relative of the litigant against whom you were obliged to appear. I do not know whether or not the Senate can see the plat I present. I have undertaken to visualize the court by drawing lines showing the blood connections between each of its members. You will observe that the lines cross and recross until they form a perfect spider's web. Into that spider's web the American fly is invited. In it he is perhaps just now preparing to entangle himself. I can not take time further to dwell upon the theme, but I conjure you, as representatives of the Republic, to read this list of relationships and to ask yourselves the question, How can I agree to submit the interests of this Republic to such a court?

"But," says my critic, "these kings are falling, scepters are being broken, monarchs are being driven into exile." Well and good; but, pray, what shall we have in their stead? Shall we go to better or to worse? I say again, reverently, the Lord God of nations and no other dare venture a prophecy. The Czar of Russia was a despot. I was glad to see him, as I shall be glad to see any other king, tumbled from his throne. But I want to see substituted for the destroyed kingly government a government of constitution and law. Without hesitation I declare that the present government of Russia is infinitely worse than was the government of Russia's murdered Czar. Shall we entangle ourselves with courts that may be presided over by such Christian monsters as Lenine and Trotzky or the other European statesmen, hatched or incubating, who march under the red flag of anarchy? Shall we submit our vital interests to them or to the almost equally dangerous socialistic elements who are beginning to display the ugly visage of lawlessness?

Shall we submit the destiny of this Republic to these vile and ephemeral governments that usually are created by the bloody hands of political assassins and which are frequently more infamous than were the despotisms by such means overthrown? Does any man dare submit the interests of this Republic to a tribunal so constituted? If such a man there be I hesitate not to say that the world will write above his name the word "accursed." But, sirs, let me assume, as I hurry through this discussion, that there shall be established free governments and stable governments in every State of Europe; that the last king shall lose his throne; that in his stead a republic shall come forth.

What then? Are we yet justified in submitting the vital interests of our Republic to such a tribunal? Why, sirs, if you will pause but a moment I think you will observe that the European members of such a court might upon many questions have common interests against America.

Let me instance but one thing: It is well known that prior to the war England, France, and Germany were busily engaged in extending their foreign territory for the purpose of extending their foreign trade. In a few years' time they absorbed practically all of the continent of Africa. It is also known that they looked with ambitious and greedy eyes toward South America; at least Germany did, and we have some reason to suspect that England not many years ago had like ambitions. Who will fail to remember that Grover Cleveland was obliged to almost threaten England with war in the matter of Venezuela? Assume, now, that we shall employ this mighty fleet which we are constructing to absorb the trade of South America—as we should—and that we shall begin to gain the business of that continent. Assume that under some controversy which may arise there—a just controversy to begin with or a controversy created for the purpose—Germany, having been rehabilitated, were to undertake to establish herself in some South American country and were to propose to open that country to the trade of European countries on advantageous terms. What would be our chance before a court the majority of whose members represented the countries interested in getting that trade? You say my illustration is impossible. I say that in 10 years from now we may find our closest friend to-day the ally of a German State.

The history of the world shows this. The animosities of nations do not long endure when they have interests in common. A few years ago Prussia conquered Austria; they soon became allies. Many years Russia protected Bulgaria against the Turk, but this did not prevent Bulgaria from becoming the ally of Turkey against Russia. History teems with similar instances. In such a controversy as I have suggested, would it not be to the interest of every European country to destroy the dominance of America in the South American trade? Would it not be to the interest of Norway and of Sweden and of Holland and of Germany and of England and of France and of Spain and of Portugal, of all of them, to turn the trade which the United States had absorbed over to themselves? I might multiply illustrations. It is sufficient to suggest one. In a controversy of that kind, would we be safe? Dare any man propose to submit the Monroe doctrine to a tribunal of European kings or to a tribunal of European nations? I say, if such a man there is, he has forgotten the history of the Republic, the genius of our people, the soul of our institutions.

But, Mr. President—and I will hurry on, for I have promised to yield the floor—having merely suggested these thoughts, I come to discuss what is called the league of nations. Now, sir, let us inquire what is meant by a league of nations. What nations are to be in such a league? Are all or only part? I do not know which way these dreamers dream upon this subject, but I am willing that they shall paint the picture in the most favorable colors. It is proposed to have a league of nations, let us say, to which all of the enlightened Christian nations of the earth shall become parties.

What is to be the purpose of this league of nations? To what are we to bind ourselves? First of all, let us say that there are certain problems not involved in any league of nations, certain progressive things that ought to be done. But I emphatically assert that they are not dependent upon a league of nations at all. By treaty, by an international assembly called for the purpose of agreeing upon principles of international law, we can clear up many of the difficulties which have hitherto confronted the world.

There is no reason why the right of blockade should not be so defined that any nation breaking it would stand before the world in the disgraceful position of having violated the plain terms of international law. That of course does not restrain and hold nations completely in check, but it has at least some deterring influence. Likewise we could agree upon what constitutes contraband and noncontraband upon the seas, the rules of submarine warfare, the rights of neutral States, and many other vexed questions. The clearing up of these obscure points of law would go far to protect the rights of neutral nations and in some cases would prevent war. Indeed, it was the violation of a principle of international law, as I understand it—but the construction was mooted and doubted—it was the violation of a principle of international law with reference to blockade that led to the controversy between Germany and the United States, for England had declared a blockade of the North Sea and Germany responded with a blockade of the waters in and about the British Isles, and afterwards extended it to embrace a large portion of the ocean. Out of this action of Germany came the controversy that forced us into a conflict with which we were not primarily concerned.

I do not doubt, also, that by treaty some steps may be successfully taken leading to a limitation of armaments. I am sure by treaties based upon good faith many other benefits may be secured.

So that when I argue that we should not enter an international league I do not mean to say that we should not by treaty agree upon a code of international law or enter upon many mutual undertakings the performance of which rest in the honor and good faith of nations.

But, passing from that, I come to the question, What is to be the purpose of this league of nations? We are told that one of its objects is to guarantee the territorial integrity of nations. This in plain language means that we shall agree to prevent any one nation from invading the territory of another nation. Why, Mr. President, if we were to make that sort of compact, it would result that a nation could decline to carry out its agreements and bid defiance to any other nation, simply saying, "You have no power to invade us; you are held back by the international agreement, and if you invade us you will be crushed by the international army. Would a nation be permitted to thus refuse to fulfill its obligations or would the controversy be referred to a court? If so referred, we are at once confronted with all the difficulties incident to a prejudiced or interested court, a topic already discussed.

Is the league to guarantee the stability of the governments of the different countries that are permitted to become members? If so, no monarchial or tyrannical government can ever be overthrown, because its power will be sustained by the league of nations. No oppressed people can rebel, because they must fight not only the unjust government of their own State, but they must contend against the governments of all of the other countries of the league.

By what code of ethics and morals are we to settle the questions that arise from time to time among the members of this league of nations? Are they to have a tribunal that is to decide these questions; and if not, how are the questions to be decided? If they have a tribunal, it will be composed of the partisans of each nation, and, as I have already shown, under existing conditions its membership will be largely made up of kings or the representatives of kings or revolutionists and bolsheviki or the representatives of revolutionists and bolsheviki. But by what code of morals or of ethics are we to decide the questions that arise?

The nations have different religions, different forms of government, different civilizations, and the roots of these differences in many instances go back more than 2,000 years. Are we to undertake now to create a league of nations and set up an international moral code for the other nations of the world? If so, by what principle are we to govern ourselves? China would be invited into this league of nations. She would have to be. She is a great country. She is the first country in the history of the world that ever adopted the doctrine of pacifism. Japan must come in; and yet we say that Japan is pagan, and we say that China is pagan. Shall the "unspeakable Turk" come in; and if so, shall he bring his religion and his serapho? How are we to agree upon a code that will accord with the tenets of the Greek Catholic, the Roman Catholic, the various branches of the Protestant Church, the Jewish, the Mohammedan, and the Confucian religion, or the Shintoism and Buddhism of Japan? By what code of morals are we to regulate and set up our standards?

Mr. President, what is to be the policy of this league of nations? Is England to disband her mighty fleet, which we are just now being told has saved the world and civilization? Is there anybody on this earth great enough fool—I intentionally use that harsh term—to believe that England is going into any league of nations upon terms that will compel her to disband her fleet? Why, if England were to disband her fleet and if she then were attacked by any first-class power she could be starved into subjection within 90 days. Does anyone for a moment believe that England will yield her fleet? If, however, England does not yield her fleet and all other nations agree to build no more ships and to be bound by this league of nations, England will be the master nation of the league and so also of the world. All other nations will be subject to her power should she see fit to exercise it. If it be argued that other nations might continue to arm and build ships, notwithstanding the league, such an argument negatives the chief purpose of the league and renders it a useless thing.

Mr. President, you can not imagine this league of nations and attempt to put it into practical application without you will be startled at once by the impossibility of the task you have assumed. If I had before me a map of Europe, I could point out to you the battle fields of this war; I could point out to you where the ancient Hun, the ancient Goth, the ancient Vandal, and the ancient Gaul fought on these same battle fields 2,000 years ago. The struggle that has been going on in Europe has, of course, had its recent irritating causes, but its ancient causes can be traced back to times before the birth of Christ, when Teuton met Gaul and upon the ground now wet with new-drawn blood of their descendants. For 20 centuries the races of Europe have fought for supremacy. Nation has battled against nation, race against race. The soil of Europe is filled with the bones of soldiers who have died in these ceaseless struggles—races of men who have been partly subjugated, partly conquered, partly intermixed.

The animosities and hatreds that have been engendered during all the bloody years are to-day as bitter as they were hundreds of years ago. Let me cite you one comparatively recent illustration: Centuries ago Bohemia was overcome by Austria. At that time Bohemia had the greatest university in Europe; over 6,000 students gathered at Prague from all parts of the known world. The court of Bohemia was one of the most brilliant in existence. In one battle Bohemia lost her liberty, and from that time to this the Austrian oppressor has been engaged in endeavoring to exterminate the Bohemian people, not physically, but to exterminate their love of country, their recollection of the glory of the past, their national spirit. Austria has undertaken to deprive them of their very language; she has imprisoned them; she has hanged them upon scaffolds; she has caused them to be shot by squads of soldiers. Yet the Bohemian continued to hate his oppressor and to love his country so passionately that in the present war Bohemian regiment after Bohemian regiment have refused to obey the orders of their oppressors and at the very first opportunity they raised the flag of revolt. To-day they are seeking to rear again the structure of their ancient State.

Mr. President, that same kind of race hatred and love of country exists to-day in Hungary, where the Magyar has placed his powerful hand upon a conquered race. So through all these European countries—and I do not pause to go into any analysis of their history—we will find these rival races, these rival bloods, these hatreds that are 2,000 years old, these animosities that will spring into flame so long as there are men and women on this earth.

Likewise there exist the ambitions of kings, the ambitions of peoples, the desire of the Teuton to get to the sea and to live in a bigger way, the desire of other nations to hold him back, the determination of the Turk to control the Bosphorus, the fixed purpose of European nations to acquire it, the desire of France to extend her borders toward Germany, the desire of Germany to absorb France, the desire of Greece to reclaim her ancient glories, the desire of Italy to push her borders into Austrian territory, the desire of England that her drumbeat shall not only follow the sun in its course, but that it shall be heard beneath every star that shines between the North Pole and the Southern Cross—these ambitions and these desires are part of the life, the soul, the blood, the history, of these peoples.

These controversies will spring into action every 10 years of the world's history. There will be wars in Europe, wars that have a European origin, wars that have a European basis, wars that have back of them European ambitions and hatreds. Into all of those wars, into all of those turmoils, into all of that maelstrom of hatred and ambition, it is proposed to thrust the United States for all time. It is proposed that every time there is a quarrel in Europe the United States must draw her sword. It is proposed that every time there is a cloud of war anywhere upon the horizon of Europe we shall summon our soldiers. Our boys must be dragged from the factories and offices and farms; that we shall make the draft a permanent institution; that we shall tear these youths from their homes and families and send them across the sea; that we shall pour out their blood in quarrels between nations that are 3,000 miles from our shores, and in controversies that affect us not the slightest jot or tittle.

Mr. President, we have had one of these wars. I do not complain because we entered it. We entered it because Germany violated our rights on the high seas; but shall that be a reason for changing our policy? For nearly a century and a half we have adhered to the policy of Washington. We have pursued the march of empire, of glory, and of peace. It may almost be said that in all that long time we have had no European war. The War of 1812 was really the aftermath of the war of 1776, growing out of that and out of our weakened condition. I do not count it. It is impossible that such a war should occur again. The War with Spain—the little 90-day War with Spain—occurred, I honestly believe, through a mistake rather than through a crime; but let us call it a war. They did not count as much, sir, as the death roll of a five-minute battle in this war. They did not count as much in money as we are spending in two days' time. In the long flight of the years we have stood in our place of isolation; we have stood proudly by ourselves, independent, powerful, great, peaceful, and prosperous.

Because Germany finally violated our rights on the seas and we were obliged to enter a controversy against her, is that any reason why we should by solemn bargain agree to become a party to every European quarrel that may hereafter occur? Is that any reason why your boy should be taken from his home, why the draft should be imposed, why we should plunge ourselves into endless debt?

This war, brought on, as I have stated, by reason of the violation of our rights, will have cost us, I believe, before we are through, more than $50,000,000,000. It has cost us a toll in life I do not know how great, because the returns are not here yet. I do not venture a prediction further than to say that there is many a black-bordered notice yet to be given; there is many a mother yet with gasping breath to cry out in the agony of her soul as she reads that a son has gone to his death; there is many a father to press his lips into the white line of pain. Many of these sorrows are still to come to our people; yet, in the face of that, we have the monstrous doctrine proposed that America shall bind herself into a league that will compel her to become a part and parcel of every European quarrel; and this is to be the case whether the quarrel is occasioned by the ambitions of kings or by the outbreaks of anarchists and socialists and Bolsheviki who seek to overturn existing governments, whether republics or monarchies.

I protest—I protest in the name of the mothers of the Republic, I protest in the name of the boys of the land—that it is not only our high duty to keep free from European quarrels in the future, but it is our duty just as soon as this war can be honorably ended to call back to this country, as fast as ships will bring them, the last one of our American soldiers; that it is our duty to restore them to their homes; to give them back to the creative arts and industries; to give them the chance to build homes and to rear families. It is our duty to open to them the doors of schools and universities. It is our duty to invite them to enjoy the glories of that peace they have so nobly fought to attain. It is our duty to give notice now and here that the Republic will continue to adhere to her ancient policy of isolation and of independence.

Why, is there not a great enough field for the American statesman? Is any man so ambitious that he can not find in the thing I am about to present a sufficiently alluring picture?

To our south lie the great nations of South America. They are only half developed. They have a people that are naturally our allies and our friends. Their commerce ought to be our commerce; our commerce ought to be their commerce. Our friendship ought to be their friendship; their friendship ought to be our friendship. We are bound together by ties of interest and amity. Surely here one can visualize a field of national influence glorious and splendid, not only for us but for them. The contemplation of such a picture ought to gratify all ambitions, all yearnings for power and greatness.

Mr. President, the life of this Republic may hang upon this decision. We can not engage in these foreign alliances without making mutual bargains. We can not call upon them to protect us unless we agree to protect them. We can not expect them to come to our relief in a controversy unless we go to the relief of each of them in their controversies. The man who proposes to thrust America into the broils and wars of Europe, binding her for all time to the intrigues and conspiracies and ambitions of the courts of kings and czars and such other governments as may exist, who proposes to reverse the policy of Washington, the opinions of Jefferson, the doctrines of the fathers, advocates that which may unmake this great Republic.

I thank the Senate.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

NOTIFICATION TO THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia and Mr. LODGE appeared, and

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia said: Mr. President, the committee appointed by the Senate, together with the committee on the part of the House of Representatives, to wait on the President of the United States and advise him that it is the wish of Congress to adjourn at 5 o'clock this afternoon, and to inquire if he has anything to communicate to Congress, has discharged that duty. The President instructs us to say that there is no further communication that he desires to submit to the Congress at present.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. PHELAN. I offer the following resolution and ask that it be read.

The resolution (S. Res. 351) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate of the United States, That the principle of a league of nations organized to prevent wars and enforce justice be, and is hereby, approved.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, replying to the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] on the subject of a league of nations, I desire to observe that his argument appealed to me very strongly in favor of a league of nations, whereas I believe it was his purpose to condemn the proposal which was made in one of the 14 articles of the President's recommendations to the world. The reason which he assigns as rendering difficult the organization of such a league, namely, the racial feuds and love of nationality on the part of the small powers of the world, which he believes would necessarily engender wars, is the very reason why a league of nations to prevent wars should be organized.

We all admit that there is in human nature that desire to assert itself by the most primitive means at hand, the methods of the cave man; and human society has been organized within the limits of governments to prevent such a condition, which would only result in constant disorder. So the very same principles upon which civil society is organized to curb the passions of men apply with equal force to the nations of the world, which, after all, are only organized communities of men. Therefore, when the Senator says that the irresistible disposition on the part of nations to fight renders impossible a league of nations, it proves nothing whatever unless it proves the necessity of the policeman.

There are in Europe a large number of small States. We have given them liberty; we have given them democracy; and yet the gift would be like the Dead Sea fruit of ashes offered to their famished lips unless we had an organized power in the world to restrain the oppression and the injustice by superior powers, which inevitably will come to them if they are left to their own resources.

"I am my brother's keeper." That is the principle of the league of nations, and that will result ultimately in the abolition of war and the salvation of the world.

The Senator has said that it is preposterous to believe that Great Britain will participate in a league of nations. In answer to the Senator from Missouri I have the words of the Premier of Great Britain, Mr. Lloyd-George, who unequivocally declared the other day in favor of a league of nations, because he is a statesman of vision, because he understands the question that is involved, and because he sees, with his superior knowledge, his experience in European affairs, the absolute necessity of having a league of nations.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment in order that I may offer a resolution?

Mr. PHELAN. Certainly.

THANKS TO VICE PRESIDENT.

Mr. WARREN. I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 353) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. THOMAS A. MARSHALL, Vice President of the United States and President of the Senate, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WARREN in the chair). The question is on the adoption of the resolution just read by the Secretary.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT resumed the chair.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Senators of the United States, I thought that we were to wind up one session of the Senate without this usual, ordinary, gracious, but wholly perfunctory resolution on behalf of the presiding officer of the Senate. Nevertheless, as the years go by I find myself more and more under obligations to the Senators of the United States for the patience they exercise in the moments of irritation upon my part, for their generous judgment of my conduct, and for something that is far dearer to me than even the record of a presiding officer over this great and illustrious body—the feeling which I have, and which, if I ought not to have it, I beg you will not take away from me, that regardless of politics and politicians, regardless of the ebb and flow of party sentiment and party ideas in America, up to this good hour I have had practically the unanimous individual and personal friendship of the Senators of the United States. For this I thank you. I hope that in the days to come I may be worthy of a continuance of that friendship.

THANKS TO PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President, I offer the resolution which I send to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution (S. Res. 354) was read, as follows:

Resolved, That the thanks of the Senate are hereby tendered to Hon. WILLARD SAULSBURY, President pro tempore of the Senate, for the dignified, impartial, and courteous manner in which he has presided over its deliberations during the present session.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was unanimously agreed to.

LEAGUE OF NATIONS.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. President, just one word. I desire, sir, to say that you are the personification of the principle of the league of nations, because under the rules you have kept the Senators from personal and physical combat in the enforcement of their ideas and required them to confine themselves to intellectual discussion. That is exactly what we desire to give to the world; and in you, sir, I see a token of the coming day.

SENATE PAGES.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 352), which was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Sergeant at Arms of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to employ 16 pages for the Senate Chamber, at $2.75 per day each, for a period lasting from November 22, 1918, to December 1, 1918, inclusive, to be paid from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, at which time, in accordance with the concurrent resolution of the Senate and the House of Representatives, this session of the Congress of the United States is to come to its close, by virtue of the authority vested in me by that resolution I now declare the Senate of the United States adjourned sine die.

NOMINATIONS.

Executive nominations received by the Senate November 21, 1918.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Harris Bennett, of Duluth, Minn., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 36, with headquarters at Duluth, Minn. (Reappointment.)

Frank E. Fitzsimmons, of Providence, R. I., to be collector of customs for customs collection district No. 5, with headquarters at Providence, R. I. (Reappointment.)

APPOINTMENT IN THE ARMY.

To be second lieutenant with rank from November 1, 1918.

Cadet Williston Birkhimer Palmer.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Lieut. Thomas G. Berrien to be a lieutenant commander in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 21st day of September, 1918.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 5th day of November, 1918:

Robert H. Grayson,
John L. Hall,
James H. Strong,
Frederic W. Dillingham,
Hardy B. Page,
Hartwell C. Davis,
Terry B. Thompson,
Laurance T. Dubose,
Arthur G. Robinson,
Walter E. Doyle,
Karl E. Hintze, and
George B. Junkin.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 5th day of November, 1918:

Walter C. Theimer,
Arthur R. Pontow,
Hervey Z. Throop,
William Klaus,
John F. Kennedy,
Frank I. Hart,

Harry R. Hayes,
Alvin Henderson,
John F. P. Miller,
Jerome L. Allen,
Albert R. Colwell,
Carl J. Nerdahl,
Glen R. Ogg,
Eugene L. Richardson,
Jay Smith,
Charles E. Weickhardt,
Marvin G. Fox,
Walter S. Gallagher,
Learned L. Dean,
Henry E. Keller,
Merwin W. Arps,
William W. Cole,
John Kneubuehler,
Harold F. MacHugh,
Ralph Lane,
Joseph W. Storm,
Karl E. F. Sorensen,
Thomas F. Fahy,
Ray C. Hopkins,
Clarence M. Maloney,
Philip A. Wilson,
James A. Maloney,
Kenneth F. Horne,
Jeremiah K. Cronin,
Albert R. Myers,
Willis M. Young, and
Bennie C. Phillips.

Ensign Otis A. Nicholas to be a lieutenant (junior grade) in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 5th day of November, 1918:

Virgil E. Durden,
John T. Gcree,
Albert H. Siemer,
Walter S. Mallory, jr.,
Carl H. Zeiss,
Louis T. Young,
John R. Shuman,
Edmund G. Flint, jr.,
Joseph H. Cox,
John R. Montgomery,
Clarence V. Lally,
Clifford L. Fenton,
David M. Gilmore,
Thomas L. R. Husselton, and
John P. Hillyard.

The following-named warrant officers for temporary service, to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of November, 1918:

Byron Williams,
Thomas Downs,
George J. Tansey,
Alfred J. Butler,
Walter E. Stephen, and
Jabez N. Phinney.

The following-named enlisted men to be ensigns in the Navy, for temporary service, from the 15th day of November, 1918:

Herbert B. Newton,
Lafayette R. Jones,
Carl W. Frohrib,
Laurence F. Hofer,
John M. Kamratkie,
Edward G. Robinson, and
Henry O. Nicholas.

The following-named paymasters to be pay inspectors in the Navy, with the rank of commander, for temporary service, from the 11th day of January, 1918:

John F. Hatch and
Frederick G. Pyne.

Acting Pay Clerk Percy W. McCord to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 15th day of September, 1918.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters in the Navy, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 15th day of November, 1918:

Charles F. House,
Louis W. Crane,
George S. Corbell,
Calvin W. Schaeffer,
William T. Ross, and
Benjamin O. Kilroy.

Assistant Paymaster William B. Young, of the United States Naval Reserve Force, to be an assistant paymaster in the Navy with the rank of ensign, for temporary service, from the 15th day of November, 1918.

Chief Pay Clerk Roscoe J. Dodd, retired, to be an assistant paymaster on the retired list of the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918.

The following-named pay clerks on the retired list to be assistant paymasters on the retired list of the Navy with the rank of lieutenant, for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918:

John W. Caum,
Isaac T. Van Patten,
Theodore G. Hansche,
George A. White,
Charles W. Loomis,
Philip T. Lansdale,
Ray E. Ames,
William R. Pattison,
Goerge B. Kimberly,
Frederick H. Ramsay,
Frederick K. Hunt,
Floyd C. Miller,
Harry L. Miller,
Matthew C. Kneip, and
Thomas S. Veitch.

Pay Clerk John F. Flynn, retired, to be an assistant paymaster on the retired list of the Navy with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service, from the 1st day of July, 1918.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Lillie C. Hays to be postmaster at Abbeville, Ala., in place of Charles B. Searcy, deceased.

Marcus M. Russell to be postmaster at Attalla, Ala., in place of David A. Hughes, resigned.

Grova Grace to be postmaster at Dora, Ala., in place of W. H. Ballenger, resigned.

ARIZONA.

John H. Gibson to be postmaster at Winslow, Ariz., in place of William J. Daze, resigned.

ARKANSAS.

Isaac G. Ritchie to be postmaster at Hardy, Ark., in place of Arthur Sullivan. Office became presidential January 1, 1918.

Thomas L. Smith to be postmaster at Lepanto, Ark., in place of Willie E. Lamb. Office became presidential January 1, 1917.

Alvin G. Stamps to be postmaster at Earl, Ark., in place of John H. Nance, resigned.

CALIFORNIA.

Theodore H. Abel to be postmaster at Coalinga, Cal., in place of W. H. Kerr, deceased.

Andrew M. Isom to be postmaster at Portola, Cal., in place of Esther B. Hensel, resigned.

Harlan J. Woodward to be postmaster at Ramona, Cal., in place of Henry A. Miles, resigned.

COLORADO.

Robert T. De Foor to be postmaster at Eagle, Colo., in place of Ralph E. Belding, resigned.

Orion W. Daggett to be postmaster at Redcliff, Colo., in place of Elsie E. Da Lee Elliott, resigned.

FLORIDA.

Alexander J. Burnham to be postmaster at Bushnell, Fla., in place of Lundy L. Sutton, deceased.

Edwin E. Williams to be postmaster at Passagrille, Fla., in place of Fred S. Kanode, resigned.

GEORGIA.

Wiley M. Rogers to be postmaster at Union City, Ga., in place of R. F. Duckworth, resigned.

Albert S. Hardy to be postmaster at Gainesville, Ga., in place of Mrs. H. W. J. Ham. Incumbent's commission expired July 10, 1917.

ILLINOIS.

Owen C. McCartney to be postmaster at Hamilton, Ill., in place of W. H. Harkrader, resigned.

Edward W. Childe to be postmaster at Martinsville, Ill., in place of D. B. Ulrey, resigned.

William J. West to be postmaster at Odin, Ill., in place of James M. Dace, resigned.

Inez M. Garrison to be postmaster at Flanagan, Ill., in place of W. F. Lutyen, resigned.

INDIANA.

Nathan W. Ringo to be postmaster at Dugger, Ind., in place of Lewis E. Chowning, resigned.

Earle A. Smith to be postmaster at Gosport, Ind., in place of George B. Spicer, resigned.

Fred H. Foster to be postmaster at Oxford, Ind., in place of M. P. Halgren, declined.

IOWA.

Alvah M. Robinson to be postmaster at Reinbeck, Iowa, in place of Elisha D. Roberts, resigned.

KANSAS.

John W. Dean to be postmaster at Blue Mound, Kans., in place of J. H. Burnett, resigned.

Eva Philbrick to be postmaster at Halstead, Kans., in place of John C. Girk, resigned.

Mollie F. Osburn to be postmaster at Jennings, Kans., in place of Lottie R. Boulls, resigned.

Raymond R. Norris to be postmaster at Marquette, Kans., in place of J. K. Stinson, resigned.

Lodema Bryant to be postmaster at Neosho Falls, Kans., in place of Robert B. Leedy, deceased.

Anna L. Taylor to be postmaster at Russell, Kans., in place of James W. Morphy, resigned.

LOUISIANA.

Jesse L. Fowler to be postmaster at Oak Grove, La., in place of H. M. Bailey, resigned.

Chester A. Thompson to be postmaster at Ville Platte, La., in place of Christina Derouen, resigned.

MARYLAND.

Alexander D. S. Harrower to be postmaster at Cockeysville, Md., in place of Thomas E. Frantz, resigned.

MICHIGAN.

Harry S. Morrow to be postmaster at Port Austin, Mich., in place of Andrew K. Burrows, removed.

Charles A. Jordan to be postmaster at Saline, Mich., in place of John Lutz, resigned.

Willis E. Warren to be postmaster at Capac, Mich., in place of A. S. Sadler, declined.

MINNESOTA.

Ruby M. Anderson to be postmaster at Argyle, Minn., in place of Herman R. Meisch, removed.

Hope Mouser to be postmaster at Gilbert, Minn., in place of Hope Monser, to correct name.

Clara A. Toftey to be postmaster at Grand Marais, Minn., in place of Ruth G. Soderberg, resigned.

Lillian M. Reinholdson to be postmaster at Sandstone, Minn., in place of Charles Reinholdson, deceased.

Jay Jackson to be postmaster at Ruthton, Minn., in place of A. M. Evenson, declined.

MISSISSIPPI.

William P. Wildberger to be postmaster at Clarksdale, Miss., in place of R. N. Harris, resigned.

Minnie O. Sharbrough to be postmaster at Rolling Fork, Miss., in place of John T. Griffin, declined.

Henry B. Edwards to be postmaster at Shuqualak, Miss., in place of Olivia M. Jenkins, resigned.

MISSOURI.

Mary P. Fields to be postmaster at Lees Summit, Mo., in place of Robert G. Wilson, jr., resigned.

Thomas F. Weaver to be postmaster at Steele, Mo., in place of Thomas E. Broderick, resigned.

NEBRASKA.

Estella E. Murray to be postmaster at Belgrade, Nebr., in place of Anton J. Ruzicka, resigned.

Ira P. Foreman to be postmaster at Allen, Nebr., in place of S. L. Stewart, resigned. Office became presidential October 1, 1916.

Edward J. Whalen to be postmaster at Spalding, Nebr., in place of W. P. Dunning, resigned.

NEW YORK.

Marcus R. Zeh to be postmaster at Central Bridge, N. Y., in place of Charles O. Williams, deceased.

Gertrude R. Neenan to be postmaster at East Bloomfield, N. Y., in place of Edward S. Mason, deceased.

Mary H. Avery to be postmaster at Elmsford, N. Y., in place of Florence L. Johnson, resigned.

Elizabeth G. Kenyon to be postmaster at Jamesville, N. Y., in place of Archie Goodfellow, resigned.

Wilder S. Beard to be postmaster at Jefferson, N. Y., in place of Jerome Terpening, resigned.

Ashmer R. Collins to be postmaster at Norwood, N. Y., in place of T. W. O'Driscoll, office declared vacant by order.

Marion E. Wroten to be postmaster at Trudean, N. Y., in place of George E. Wroten, deceased.

NORTH DAKOTA.

Jessie M. Hamill to be postmaster at Oakes, N. Dak., in place of Robert E. Wessel, deceased.

Thomas F. Cooper to be postmaster at Parshall, N. Dak., in place of Gertrude M. Larin, resigned.

OHIO.

Arda M. S. Allensworth to be postmaster at Amsterdam, Ohio, in place of Grover C. Naragon, resigned.

Lee B. Milligan to be postmaster at Lowellville, Ohio, in place of Freda M. Milligan, resigned.

Wendell E. Brettell to be postmaster at Rock Creek, Ohio, in place of Nelson C. Petrie, resigned.

George R. Irwin to be postmaster at Upper Sandusky, Ohio, in place of Marshall E. Foucht, removed.

Roy S. Rush to be postmaster at Wickliffe, Ohio, in place of C. A. Rush. Incumbent's commission expired July 24, 1917.

Harry H. Maxson to be postmaster at Germantown, Ohio, in place of William Buck, declined.

Andrew J. Price to be postmaster at Glouster, Ohio, in place of Hugh Gormley, resigned.

John L. Carr to be postmaster at South Charleston, Ohio, in place of F. J. Sullivan, resigned.

OKLAHOMA.

James G. Sprouse to be postmaster at McCurtain, Okla., in place of Clifford P. Martin, resigned.

Walter A. Thompson to be postmaster at Tahlequah, Okla., in place of A. B. Cunningham, resigned.

Claud Hannon to be postmaster at Wirt, Okla., in place of J. C. Cobb, removed.

OREGON.

Exel Vogel to be postmaster at Rainier, Oreg., in place of J. W. Stacy, resigned.

Richard H. Yates to be postmaster at Willamina, Oreg., in place of Paul C. Belt, resigned.

PENNSYLVANIA.

William D. First to be postmaster at Conneaut Lake, Pa., in place of G. B. Livingston, resigned.

William A. Clancy to be postmaster at Foxburg, Pa., in place of J. M. Keesey, removed.

Margaret C. Brown to be postmaster at Langeloth, Pa., in place of T. B. McKaig, resigned. Office became presidential October 1, 1916.

John J. Roll to be postmaster at Natrona, Pa., in place of J. S. Gordon. Incumbent's commission expired January 15, 1918.

Thomas F. McHale to be postmaster at Olyphant, Pa., in place of J. J. Moran, removed.

RHODE ISLAND.

Hartzell R. Birch to be postmaster at Kingston, R. I., in place of A. A. Greenman, resigned.

SOUTH CAROLINA.

Marie V. Keel to be postmaster at Allendale, S. C., in place of J. E. Searson, resigned.

William T. Reynolds, jr., to be postmaster at Mount Pleasant, S. C., in place of J. A. Patjens, resigned.

SOUTH DAKOTA.

Arnold Poulsen to be postmaster at Lennox, S. Dak., in place of A. J. Miller, resigned.

TENNESSEE.

Dudley D. Edgemon to be postmaster at Englewood, Tenn., in place of P. H. Toomey, resigned.

Charles O. Baird to be postmaster at Jellico, Tenn., in place of C. A. Templeton, resigned.

TEXAS.

May Murray to be postmaster at Sonora, Tex., in place of G. W. Smith, resigned.

George W. Morris to be postmaster at New Boston, Tex., in place of Tobe Morris, resigned.

UTAH.

Clyde Panter to be postmaster at Magna, Utah, in place of R. M. Woolley, resigned.

Thomas Brimley to be postmaster at Farmington, Utah, in place of N. O. Palmer, resigned.

VIRGINIA.

Rose A. Milligan to be postmaster at Urbanna, Va., in place of C. C. Chowning, resigned.

WASHINGTON.

Andrew J. Cosser to be postmaster at Port Angeles, Wash., in place of Frank L. Stocking, deceased.

Gertrude Cosgrove to be postmaster at Sprague, Wash., in place of F. H. McCroskey, resigned.

Alberta Hough to be postmaster at Valley, Wash., in place of Alberta Gilson (name changed by marriage).

Inez G. Spencer to be postmaster at Creston, Wash., in place of Sadie Haight, resigned.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Henry L. Bowling to be postmaster at Lewisburg, W. Va., in place of J. O. Dice, resigned.

William A. Curry to be postmaster at Omar, W. Va., in place of Alexander Lester, resigned.

Elmer H. Schreck to be postmaster at Gillette, Wyo., in place of N. D. Morgan, declined.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate November 21, 1918.

AMBASSADOR EXTRAORDINARY AND PLENIPOTENTIARY.

John W. Davis to be ambassador extraordinary and plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Great Britain.

SECRETARY OF EMBASSY OR LEGATION.

Charles Henry Chapman to be a secretary of embassy or legation of class 4.

SOLICITOR GENERAL.

Alexander C. King to be Solicitor General.

ASSOCIATE JUSTCE OF THE SUPREME COURT OF THE PHILIPPINE ISLANDS.

Percy M. Moir to be an associate justice of the Supreme Court of the Philippine Islands.

COLLECTORS OF CUSTOMS.

Frank E. Fitzsimmons to be collector of customs, district No. 5.

Harris Bennett to be collector of customs, district No. 36. Reappointment.

PUBLIC HEALTH SERVICE.

Passed Asst. Surg. Friench Simpson to be surgeon.

Asst. Surg. Clarence H. Waring to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. George A. Wheeler to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. William Charles Witte to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. William Francis Tanner to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. Carl Michel to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. Marion Sunsari Lombard to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. Ora Howard Cox to be passed assistant surgeon.

Asst. Surg. Robert Louis Allen to be passed assistant surgeon.

Dr. Bertrand Earle Roberts to be assistant surgeon.

COAST AND GEODETIC SURVEY.

Harry Leypoldt to be junior hydrographic and geodetic engineer in the United States Coast and Geodetic Survey, Department of Commerce.

SURVEYOR GENERAL.

John B. O'Sullivan to be surveyor general of Nevada.

RECEIVER OF PUBLIC MONEYS.

Owen E. Thomas to be receiver of public moneys at Kalispell, Mont.

George G. Beams to be receiver of public moneys at Lincoln, Nebr.

COAST GUARD.

The following-named first lieutenants to be captains in the Coast Guard, for temporary service:

William J. Keester,
Eugene A. Coffin,
John S. Baylis,
Charles G. Roemer,
Wilfred N. Derby,
Leo C. Mueller,
Clarence H. Dench,
William K. Scammell,
Roy A. Bothwell,
Wilmer H. Eberly,
Russell L. Lucas,
Stephen S. Yeandle,
Frederick A. Zscheuschler,
Thomas S. Klinger,
Charles E. Anstett,
Henry G. Hemingway,
Jeremiah A. Starr, and
Joseph E. Stika.

First Lieut. of Engineers Herbert N. Pelham to be captain of engineers in the Coast Guard, for temporary service.

The following-named third lieutenants to be second lieutenants in the Coast Guard, for temporary service:

George W. McKean and
John Trebes, jr.

Third Lieut. of Engineers John A. Curran to be second lieutenant of engineers, for temporary service, in the Coast Guard.

PROMOTIONS IN THE ARMY.

INFANTRY.

To be lieutenant colonels.

Maj. John W. Barker.
Maj. James P. Harbeson.

PROVISIONAL APPOINTMENTS, BY PROMOTION, IN THE ARMY.

CAVALRY ARM.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Arthur W. Stanley.
Second Lieut. Harold E. Brailey.
Second Lieut. Carleton Burgess.
Second Lieut. Frederick H. Vandegrift.
Second Lieut. Harry E. Dodge.
Second Lieut. Charles F. Palmer.
Second Lieut. Jay D. D. Marcellus.
Second Lieut. Lewis D. Cooper, jr.
Second Lieut. Charles J. Davis.
Second Lieut. George W. Outland.
Second Lieut. John M. Moose, jr.
Second Lieut. Nelson R. Perry.
Second Lieut. Innes Randolph.
Second Lieut. Carl B. Byrd.
Second Lieut. Thomas Brady, jr.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

To be first lieutenants.

Second Lieut. Frank C. Delaney.
Second Lieut. Pell W. Foster, jr.
Second Lieut. Kennedy Hassenzahl.
Second Lieut. Arthur P. Patterson.
Second Lieut. Robert P. Reynolds.
Second Lieut. Philip G. Hodge.

APPOINTMENTS IN THE ARMY.

MEDICAL CORPS.

To be first lieutenants.

Maj. Jesse P. Truax.
Maj. Charles Henry Stearns.
Maj. Ralph Waldo Newton.
First Lieut. Charles Augustus Short.
First Lieut. William Calvert Chaney.
First Lieut. Olaf Kittelson.
First Lieut. Lawrence Frederick Fisher.
First Lieut. Young Cleveland Lott.
First Lieut. Earl Edward Van Derwerker.
First Lieut. Albert Barnett Ferguson.
First Lieut. Julius Benjamin Boehm.
First Lieut. John Daniel Gillis.
First Lieut. Ralph Waldo Turner.
First Lieut. Francis John Robinson.
First Lieut. Fowler Burdette Roberts.
First Lieut. Hugo Muench, jr.
First Lieut. Jarrett Matthew Huddleston.
First Lieut. George Eason Blue.
First Lieut. Earl Calvin Padgett.
First Lieut. David Oscar Nathaniel Lindberg.
First Lieut. Cecil Emerson Johnson.
First Lieut. Harry LeRoy Smith.
First Lieut. Carl Bearse.
First Lieut. John Murray Welch.
First Lieut. Merrill Clary Sosman.
First Lieut. Jacob John Mann.
First Lieut. John Luverne Hemstead.
First Lieut. Charles Gilbert Irish.
First Lieut. George Palmer McNeill, jr.
First Lieut. Sidney Ober Reese, jr.
First Lieut. Oscar Thweatt Kirksey.
Capt. William Walsh Lerman.
First Lieut. Victor Roland Turner.
First Lieut. Frederic Damrau.
First Lieut. Charles William Henderson.
First Lieut. William Donaldson Fleming.
First Lieut. Harry Gardner Johnson.
First Lieut. John Henry Murphy.
First Lieut. Charles Anthony Cibelius.
First Lieut. James Winn Sherrill.
First Lieut. Philip Lewis Cook.
First Lieut. Edward Augustus Lane.

First Lieut. Charles Fremont Snell.
First Lieut. Arthur Luis Guerra.
First Lieut. Maximilian Mark Nemser.
Capt. Charles Henry Manlove, jr.
Capt. Eugene Vernon Powell.
First Lieut. Henry Tayloe Compton.
First Lieut. John Henry Bullock.
First Lieut. Howard Barton Swan.
First Lieut. Walter van Olinda Moore.
First Lieut. John Nagle Hayes.
First Lieut. Edgar Harvey Albers.
First Lieut. Benjamin William Lewis.
First Lieut. Lawrence Henry Fitzgerald.
First Lieut. George Heinrichs Preston.
First Lieut. Edgar William Kemner.
First Lieut. Walter Schneider Bennett.
First Lieut. Louis Frederick Sanmann.
First Lieut. Maurice Blocher Bender.
First Lieut. Clifford Edward Bergin.
First Lieut. John Bunting Haines.
First Lieut. Guy Champion Milnor.
First Lieut. Robert Bogan.
First Lieut. James Wright Clarkson.
First Lieut. Floyd Ellsworth Best.
First Lieut. Paul Seibert Seabold.
First Lieut. Sidney Jonas Wolfermann.
First Lieut. Ralph Maurice De Graff.
First Lieut. Thomas William Connolly.
First Lieut. Irl Cephas Riggin.
First Lieut. Whitman Carlisle McConnell.
First Lieut. Clarence Mansfield Reddig.
First Lieut. Ernest Jackson Steves.
First Lieut. John Adams Logan.
First Lieut. Raymond Edwin Elliott.
First Lieut. George Arnold Brown.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS.

To be second lieutenants.

Cadet David Wood Griffiths.
Cadet Bernard Skinner Stearns.
Cadet Arthur William Pence.
Cadet Leslie Richard Groves, jr.
Cadet Henry Gray Lodge.
Cadet Lemuel Pope, 3d.
Cadet James Logan Rhoades.
Cadet Frederic Bates Butler.
Cadet Leverett Griggs Yoder.
Cadet Harry Alexander Montgomery.
Cadet Wilson Gordon Saville.
Cadet Mark Mayo Boatner, jr.
Cadet David Ayer Dupue Ogden.
Cadet Frederick Adolph Platte.
Cadet Karl Browne Schilling.
Cadet John Hawkins Elleman.
Cadet Elmer Ellsworth Barnes.
Cadet William Wesley Wanamaker.
Cadet Beverly Carradine Snow.
Cadet Richard Lee.
Cadet Howard Louis Peckham.
Cadet John Southworth Niles.
Cadet Charles Richard Bathurst.
Cadet Wendell Phillips Trower.
Cadet Robert Gilbert Lovett.
Cadet Cornman Louis Hahn.
Cadet Edwin Potter Lock, jr.
Cadet Morris Williams Gilland.
Cadet David Terrill Johnson.
Cadet Edwin Gunsolus Shrader.
Cadet Randolph Pierson Williams.
Cadet Otto Praeger, jr.
Cadet Allison Miller.
Cadet Newell Lyon Hemenway.
Cadet Archie Trescott Colwell.
Cadet Arthur Joseph Sheridan.
Cadet James George Christiansen.
Cadet Benjamin Franklin Chadwick.
Cadet Charles Dickson Jewell.
Cadet Heath Twichell.
Cadet Joseph Jones Twitty.
Cadet Robert Everett York.
Cadet Chester Krum Harding.
Cadet William Victor Hesp.
Cadet William Clarence Bennett, jr.
Cadet Claude Henry Chorpening.
Cadet Frank Otto Bowman.
Cadet James Postell Jervey, jr.
Cadet Joseph Shirley Gorlinski.
Cadet George Sackett Witters.
Cadet Albert Riani.
Cadet Orville Ernest Walsh.
Cadet Harvey Drexler Dana.
Cadet Peter Paul Goerz.
Cadet Robert Blake Coolidge.
Cadet John Peter Dietrich.
Cadet William Aylett Callaway.
Cadet Howard Voorheis Canan.
Cadet Vere Alfred Beers.
Cadet Doswell Gullatt.
Cadet John Bell Hughes.
Cadet Eugene Luther Vidal.

FIELD ARTILLERY ARM.

To be second lieutenants.

Cadet Frederick Atherton Stevens.
Cadet Harrison Shaler.
Cadet Edmund Wilson Searby.
Cadet Roger Manning Wicks.
Cadet Hugh Archer Palmer.
Cadet George Vernon Keyser.
Cadet Homer William Blair.
Cadet Lawrence Bradford Bixby.
Cadet Harry Crawford.
Cadet William Washington Webster.
Cadet John Hamilton Hinds.
Cadet William Powell Blair.
Cadet William James Epes.
Cadet John Hinton.
Cadet Eric Spencer Molitor.
Cadet Richard August Ericson.
Cadet Richard Brobst Madigan.
Cadet James Vincent Carroll.
Cadet William Henry Barlow.
Cadet Ernest Calhoun Norman.
Cadet Charles Rolland Gildart.
Cadet Gerald Alexander O'Rouark.
Cadet Charles Edward Hixon.
Cadet Bryan Evans.
Cadet Francis Andrew March, 3d.
Cadet John Sheridan Winn, jr.
Cadet Roger Williams Autry.
Cadet Myrl Milton Miller.
Cadet Alfred Nathan Bergman.
Cadet Stuart Millikin Bevans.
Cadet John Hiram Lewis, jr.

COAST ARTILLERY CORPS.

To be second lieutenants.

Cadet John Marks Moore.
Cadet Eugene Garmanus Miller.
Cadet Joseph Coolidge Kilbourne, jr.
Cadet Brooks Scott.
Cadet Arthur Emil Mickelsen.
Cadet Paul Boyle Kelly.
Cadet Leon Harold Dunn, 1st.
Cadet James Clyde Styron.
Cadet Bonner Frank Fellers.
Cadet Richard Ravenie Spring.
Cadet Melton Adams Hatch.
Cadet Kenneth Seymour Stice.
Cadet George Maurice Badger.
Cadet Marion Van Voorst.
Cadet Edwin Boyd Fitzpatrick.
Cadet Dean Richard Dickey.
Cadet William Amberson Sexton.
Cadet Hobart Reed Yeager.
Cadet Gervais William Trichel.
Cadet Thomas William Munford.
Cadet James Longstreet Whelchel.
Cadet John Hadley Fonvielle.
Cadet Joe David Moss.
Cadet Edward Arthur Dolph.
Cadet Felix Max Usis.
Cadet Edward Ward Hendrick.
Cadet Bernard Wellington Slifer.
Cadet Lee Earl Gray.
Cadet Donald William Sawtelle.

CAVALRY ARM.

To be second lieutenants.

Cadet George Gage Eddy.
Cadet Charles Edward Morrison.

Cadet Christian Knudsen.
Cadet Francis Bassett Valentine.
Cadet Thomas Tipton Thornburgh.
Cadet William Covington Benton.
Cadet Vincent John Conrad.
Cadet David Adams Taylor.
Cadet Ronald Austin Hicks.
Cadet Elmer Vaughan Stansbury.
Cadet Edwin Leslie Hogan.
Cadet John Creel Hamilton.
Cadet Mark Rhoads.
Cadet Joseph Kittredge Baker.
Cadet Charles William Leng, jr.
Cadet Albert Walker Johnson.
Cadet Willard Ames Holbrook.
Cadet Auston Monroe Wilson, jr.
Cadet Samuel Powell Walker, jr.
Cadet Fred Glover Sherrill.
Cadet Sol Mark Lipman.
Cadet William Theodore Powers.

INFANTRY ARM.

To be second lieutenants.

Cadet Benjamin Abbott Dickson.
Cadet Charles Mason Wells.
Cadet William Bobbs Miller.
Cadet Richard Carrick Babbitt.
Cadet Wade Rushton Cothran, jr.
Cadet Percival Bolling Banister.
Cadet Claude Desha Anderson, jr.
Cadet Hammond McDougal Monroe.
Cadet John William Middleton.
Cadet Clarence Arthur Rosendahl.
Cadet Frank Johnstone Cunningham.
Cadet Edward Ward Smith.
Cadet John Bartlett Sherman.
Cadet John Joseph Breen.
Cadet James Arthur Kehoe.
Cadet Frederick Pearson.
Cadet Charles Frederick Colson.
Cadet DeWitt Hicks.
Cadet Donald Frederic Carroll.
Cadet Robert Alvin Schow.
Cadet John Harrison Stokes, jr.
Cadet Jesse Ellis Graham.
Cadet Jerome David Cambre.
Cadet William Howard Cocke.
Cadet Burrowes Goldthwaite Stevens.
Cadet Alexander Thomas McCone.
Cadet Thomas Markhan Brinkley.
Cadet John Kennedy Buchanan.
Cadet Ivins LaRue Browne.
Cadet Kenneth Willey Leslie.
Cadet Beverly St. George Tucker.
Cadet John Trites Brown.
Cadet John Coachman Cullens, jr.
Cadet Reginald Hubbell.
Cadet Wesley Collins Dever.
Cadet John May Tatum.
Cadet Gerald Burnett O'Grady.
Cadet Paul Wilkins Kendall.
Cadet John Franklin Farley.
Cadet Charles Henry Moore, jr.
Cadet James Wentworth Freeman.
Cadet Alexander John Mackenzie.
Cadet Wiley Vinton Carter.
Cadet Ira Platt Swift.
Cadet Wilbur Eugene Dunkelberg.
Cadet James Hicks Carney Hill.
Cadet Victor Crippen Broome.
Cadet Thomas Reynolds Denny.
Cadet Frank Mathews Corzelius.
Cadet Julius Lynch Pyland.
Cadet Arthur Pulsifer.
Cadet Farrin Allen Hillard.
Cadet William Jesserel Mason.
Cadet Elliott Watkins.
Cadet Francis James Gillespie.
Cadet Jesse Lewis Gibney.
Cadet Robert Hale Vesey.
Cadet Clarence Miles Mendenhall, jr.
Cadet Kester Lovejoy Hastings.
Cadet George McKnight Williamson, jr.
Cadet Howard Waite Brimmer.
Cadet Charles Milner Smith, jr.
Cadet Albert Brownfield Goodin.
Cadet Walter Joseph Muller.
Cadet Harry Lovejoy Rogers, jr.
Cadet George Bryan Conrad.
Cadet William Stephen Murray.
Cadet Harry Krieger.
Cadet Raymond Wainwright Odor.
Cadet James Clyde Welch.
Cadet Miner Welsh Bonwell.
Cadet John Perry Pence.
Cadet John Leo Binder.
Cadet Joseph Magoffin Glasgow.
Cadet Elmer Mike Jenkins.
Cadet James Lawrence Keasler.
Cadet Rutherford Dent McGiffert.
Cadet Richard Bryan Wheeler.
Cadet Thomas Roswell Aaron.
Cadet Charles Llewellyn Gorman.
Cadet Louis George Horowitz.
Cadet David Albert Newcomer.
Cadet Boyd Wheeler Bartlett.
Cadet Alfred Maximilian Gruenther.
Cadet Laurence Van Doren Harris.
Cadet Herbert Bernard Loper.
Cadet Ivan Crawford Lawrence.
Cadet Benjamin Mace Hedrick.
Cadet Robert Gibbons Gard.
Cadet Robert Ammons Hill.
Cadet David Horn Whittier.
Cadet Sidney Ward Gould.
Cadet Herbert Maury Jones.
Cadet Fred William Marlow.
Cadet Orville Wells Martin.
Cadet William Joseph Regan.
Cadet Roy Green.
Cadet Forrest Eugene Cookson.
Cadet John Paul Kennedy.
Cadet Alexander Sharp Bennet.
Cadet George Sheldon Price.
Cadet Carl Spencer Molitor.
Cadet Philip Stueler Lauben.
Cadet Wyburn Dwight Brown.
Cadet Robert Miller Montague.
Cadet Charles Pollard Jones.
Cadet Anthony Clement McAuliffe.
Cadet Robert Leonard Johnson.
Cadet Lester Francis Rhodes.
Cadet Albert Rhett Stuart Barden.
Cadet Romeo Francis Regnier.
Cadet Don Gilmore Shingler.
Cadet Harlan Nelson Hartness.
Cadet Louis Brainard Ely.
Cadet Julius Easton Slack.
Cadet Bertram Francis Hayford.
Cadet Ernest Aaron Bixby.
Cadet Robert Rossiter Raymond, jr.
Cadet Harris Fulford Scherer.
Cadet Donald Miller Davidson.
Cadet Ernest John Riley.
Cadet Clarence Emil Burgher.
Cadet Thomas Benoit Hedekin.
Cadet Joseph Vincie Phelps.
Cadet Charles Norton McFarland.
Cadet Charles Alvin Pyle.
Cadet Alexander Griswold Kirby.
Cadet John Ray Hardin.
Cadet Herbert Weldon Semmelmeyer.
Cadet William Wilkeson Barton.
Cadet Maurice Place Chadwick.
Cadet Walter Ernest Bullock.
Cadet Foster Joseph Tate.
Cadet Carl Robinson.
Cadet Richard Tobin Bennison.
Cadet Henry John Dick Meyer.
Cadet Elton Foster Hammond.
Cadet Ernest Marion Brannon.
Cadet Francis George McGill.
Cadet Rollin Franklin Risen.
Cadet Butler Lyons Hill.
Cadet Oscar Alan Saunders.
Cadet John Wyville Sheehy.
Cadet James Battle Rivers.
Cadet John Joseph Burns.
Cadet Leslie Edgar Jacoby.
Cadet John Raikes Vance.

Cadet Clarence John Kanaga.
Cadet Richard Powell Ovenshine.
Cadet Edwin Virgil Kerr.
Cadet Thomas McGregor Shillock.
Cadet Harrison Howell Dodge Heiberg.
Cadet William Irwin Allen.
Cadet Paul Andrew Donnally.
Cadet James Edmund Parker.
Cadet William Wesson Jervey.
Cadet George Raymond Burgess.
Cadet Edward Lynde Strohbehn.
Cadet Maurice Keyes Kurtz.
Cadet William Holmes Wenstrom.
Cadet Paul Lewis Harter.
Cadet Leo Clement Paquet.
Cadet Thomas Maurice Crawford.
Cadet Eugene McGinley.
Cadet Hugh Brownrigg Waddell.
Cadet Leslie DeLong Flory.
Cadet Paul Robert Menzies Miller.
Cadet Isaac Haiden Ritchie.
Cadet Augustine Francis Shea.
Cadet Carlisle Visscher Allan.
Cadet Marion Patton Echols.
Cadet Roy Anthony Moore.
Cadet John Edward McCarthy.
Cadet Francis Otis Wood.
Cadet Hobart Hewett.
Cadet Richard Thomas Rick.
Cadet Waldemar Sven Broberg.
Cadet James Holden Phillips.
Cadet John Edwin Leahy.
Cadet George Washington Lewis.
Cadet Frederick Weed Drury.
Cadet Leander Dunbar Syme.
Cadet Ellis Vern Williamson.
Cadet Leroy Clark Wilson, 2d.
Cadet Nathaniel Alanson Burnell, 2d.
Cadet William Goebel Stephens.
Cadet John Bartlett Murphy.
Cadet James Lowe Harbaugh, jr.
Cadet Virgil Farrar Shaw.
Cadet Paul Alpheus Noel.
Cadet Michael Gibson Smith.
Cadet Syril Emerson Faine.
Cadet Arthur Maxon Parsons.
Cadet Harry Welling Barrick.
Cadet William Travis VandeGraaff.
Cadet Howard Rand Perry, jr.
Cadet Edward Hamilton Young.
Cadet Nathan Arthur Smith.
Cadet Gerald Saint Claire Mickle.
Cadet Benjamin Randolph Farrar.
Cadet Harris Ellis Sanderson, jr.
Cadet Hugh French Thomson Hoffman.
Cadet David Stanley Holbrook.
Cadet Walter Scott Winn, jr.
Cadet Willard Gordon Wyman.
Cadet John Leonard Whitelaw.
Cadet Edward Henry Bowes.
Cadet Edwin Malcolm Sutherland.
Cadet Joseph Andrew Holly.
Cadet Henry Baldwin Nichols.
Cadet William Douglas McNair.
Cadet Charles Forrest Wilson.
Cadet Robert Francis Carter.
Cadet Hugh Garnett Elliott, jr.
Cadet Nathan Farragut Twining.
Cadet William John Crowe.
Cadet George Whitfield MacMillan.
Cadet L. Hoyt Rockafellow.
Cadet Percy Emery Hunt.
Cadet Douglas Alden Olcott.
Cadet Roland William McNamee.
Cadet John Carpenter Raaen.
Cadet Lentilhon Wheeler.
Cadet Winfred George Skelton.
Cadet Lambert Benel Cain.
Cadet Edmund Bower Sebree.
Cadet Ignatius Lawrence Donnelly.
Cadet Merritt Brandon Booth.
Cadet Raymond Clay Barlow.
Cadet Frank Greene Davis.
Cadet Emmett James Bean.
Cadet Donald Allen Fay.
Cadet Charles Henry Noble.
Cadet Walter Towle O'Reilly.
Cadet Kenneth Pierce.
Cadet Charles Henry Bryan.
Cadet John Endler.
Cadet John Howell Collier.
Cadet Dean Luce.
Cadet Vincent Coyle McAlevy.
Cadet George Gordon Elms.
Cadet John Dimmick Armstrong.
Cadet Ralph Francis Stearley.
Cadet Donald Handley Nelson.
Cadet Edward Ora Hopkins.
Cadet John Victor Domminey.
Cadet James Verne Cole.
Cadet Horace Parker Sampson.
Cadet Ralph Bernard Kindley.
Cadet John Adam Bruckner, jr.
Cadet Clarence Archibald Frank.
Cadet Frederick Bradstreet Dodge, jr.
Cadet Clarkson Dewcese McNary.
Cadet Bernard Albert Byrne, jr.
Cadet Charles Ream Jackson.
Cadet George Lincoln Dillaway, jr.
Cadet Warren Wilson Christian.
Cadet Dale Wilford Maher.
Cadet Robert Barrett Hutchins.
Cadet Joseph William Kullman.
Cadet George Dewey Rogers.
Cadet Harold Edward Marsden.
Cadet Robert Jones Merrick.
Cadet William Henry John Dunham.
Cadet Landon Garland Daniel.
Cadet Raymond Francis Kilroy.
Cadet Irvin Alexander.
Cadet John Harvey Madison.
Cadet George Edward Bruner.
Cadet Thomas Llewellyn Waters.
Cadet Urban Niblo.
Cadet Thomas Houston Dameron.
Cadet Roger Sherman Evarts.
Cadet Charles Linton Williams.
Cadet Kenneth Sharp Olson.
Cadet William Lighton McEnery.
Cadet Robert Montgomery Springer.
Cadet Russell John Nelson.
Cadet Charles Maine Wolff.
Cadet Simon Foss.
Cadet Davis Ward Hale.
Cadet Edward Melvin Starr.
Cadet Joseph Sladen Bradley.
Cadet Arthur Launcelot Moore.
Cadet Robert William Crichlow, jr.
Cadet Martin Anthony Fennell.
Cadet Ralph Harris Bassett.
Cadet Harold Allen Brown.
Cadet Albert Sidney Johnson Stovall, jr.
Cadet Donald Carson Hardin.
Cadet Harold Clifton Zimmerman.
Cadet John Thomas Keeley.
Cadet Albert Smith Rice.
Cadet James Wellington Boyd.
Cadet Joseph Conrad Odell.
Cadet Vincent Harold Kelly.
Cadet Josiah Tony Dalbey.
Cadet Logan Osburn Shutt.
Cadet Stuart Little.
Cadet Hilton Edward Heineke.
Cadet Galen Magnus Taylor.
Cadet John Francis Laragnino.
Cadet Royal Wheel Park.
Cadet Daniel Phillip Buckland.
Cadet Philip McIlvaine Whitney.
Cadet John Morris Works.
Cadet Christopher Hildebrand.
Cadet Joseph Holleman Warren.
Cadet Edgar Mortimer Gregory.
Cadet John David Frederick.
Cadet Richard Ray Coursey.
Cadet William Ramsey Bready.
Cadet Joseph Charles Panzarella.
Cadet Dwight Lyman Adams.
Cadet John Charles Hyland, jr.
Cadet Thomas Gordon Cranford, jr.
Cadet Lester George Degnan.

Cadet Henry Bennett Sheets.
Cadet Archie William Cooly.
Cadet Edwin Robert Samsey.
Cadet William Robert McMaster.
Cadet Paul Revere Carl.
Cadet Cornelius Emmett O'Connor.
Cadet Joseph Alfred Cranston, jr.
Cadet Maurice Ladin Rosenthal.
Cadet Willard Leslie Isaacs.
Cadet Horace Speed, jr.
Cadet Fred William Makinney, jr.
Cadet William Benjamin Kean, jr.
Cadet Harold Robert Emery.
Cadet David Sanderson McLean.
Cadet William Joseph Moroney.
Cadet Russell Lowell Williamson.
Cadet Charles Leslie Keerans, jr.
Cadet Howard Adams White.
Cadet Howard Dohla Johnston.
Cadet Albert Carroll Morgan.
Cadet Franklin Leroy Rash.
Cadet Robert Watson Child.
Cadet Edgar Harvey Snodgrass.
Cadet Claude Birkett Ferenbaugh.
Cadet Adna Chaffee Hamilton.
Cadet Harold Stuart Ruth.
Cadet Sterling Eugene Whitesides, jr.
Cadet Lewis Stone Sorley, jr.
Cadet Albert Coady Wedemeyer.
Cadet David Best Latimer.
Cadet Ralph J. Miller.
Cadet Isaac Wiley Finley.
Cadet John Leighton Denny.
Cadet Roswell Boyle Hart.
Cadet Haldor Hegland Myrah.
Cadet Herbert Joseph Riess.
Cadet Martin Loeb.
Cadet Henry Ignatius Szymanski.
Cadet Ulric Lee Fomby.
Cadet Frederick Brenton Porter.
Cadet Bryan Sewall Halter.
Cadet Gordon Leslie Chapline.
Cadet Hughes Steele.
Cadet William B. Palmer.

APPOINTMENTS AND PROMOTIONS IN THE NAVY.

Capt. Albert P. Niblack to be a rear admiral.

The following-named officers to be assistant naval constructors with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade):
Willis C. Sutherland,
Frederick E. Haeberle,
Grover C. Klein, and
Norborne L. Rawlings.

The following-named pay inspectors to be pay directors, with the rank of captain, for temporary service:
George R. Venable,
David V. Chadwick,
Trevor W. Leutze, and
Eugene C. Tobey.

The following-named paymasters to be pay inspectors, with the rank of commander, for temporary service:
Elijah H. Cope,
William N. Hughes,
Harold W. Browning,
Harry E. Collins,
Ellsworth H. Van Patten,
Maurice H. Karker,
Brainerd M. Dobson,
John N. Jordan,
Lewis W. Jennings, jr.,
Charles E. Parsons,
John F. O'Mara, and
Raymond E. Corcoran.

Carpenter Everette O. Smith to be an assistant naval constructor, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service.

Acting Pay Clerk Hunter J. Norton to be an assistant paymaster, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service.

Acting Pay Clerk Aner Erickson to be an assistant paymaster, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) for temporary service:
Herschel P. Cook,
Charles R. Smith,
Gordon M. Jackson, and
Wilfred E. Schuit.

Lieut. Thomas G. Berrien to be a lieutenant commander for temporary service.

The following-named lieutenants to be lieutenant commanders for temporary service:
Robert H. Grayson,
John L. Hall,
James H. Strong,
Frederic W. Dillingham,
Hardy B. Page,
Hartwell C. Davis,
Terry B. Thompson,
Laurance T. Dubose,
Arthur G. Robinson,
Walter E. Doyle,
Karl E. Hintze, and
George B. Junkin.

The following-named lieutenants (junior grade) to be lieutenants for temporary service:
Walter C. Theimer,
Arthur R. Pontow,
Hervey Z. Throop,
William Klaus,
John F. Kennedy,
Frank I. Hart,
Harry R. Hayes,
Alvin Henderson,
John F. P. Miller,
Jerome L. Allen,
Albert R. Colwell,
Carl J. Nerdahl,
Glen R. Ogg,
Eugene L. Richardson,
Jay Smith,
Charles E. Weickhardt,
Marvin G. Fox,
Walter S. Gallagher,
Learned L. Dean,
Henry E. Keller,
Merwin W. Arps,
William W. Cole,
John Kneubuehler,
Harold F. MacHugh,
Ralph Lane,
Joseph W. Storm,
Karl E. P. Sorenson,
Thomas F. Fahy,
Ray C. Hopkins,
Clarence M. Maloney,
Philip A. Wilson,
James A. Maloney,
Kenneth F. Horne,
Jeremiah K. Cronin,
Albert R. Myers,
Willis M. Young, and
Bennie C. Phillips.

The following-named ensigns to be lieutenants (junior grade) for temporary service:
Otis A. Nickolas,
Virgil E. Durden,
John T. Goree,
Albert H. Siemer,
Walter S. Mallory, jr.,
Carl H. Zeiss,
Louis T. Young,
John R. Shuman,
Edmund G. Flint, jr.,
Joseph H. Cox,
John R. Montgomery,
Clarence V. Lally,
Clifford L. Fenton,
David M. Gilmore,
Thomas L. R. Husselton, and
John P. Hillyard.

The following-named warrant officers to be ensigns for temporary service:
Byron Williams,
Thomas Downs,
George J. Tansey,
Alfred J. Butler,
Walter E. Stephen, and
Jabez N. Phinney.

The following-named enlisted men to be ensigns for temporary service:
Herbert B. Newton,
Lafayette R. Jones,

Carl W. Frohrib,
Laurence F. Hofer,
John M. Kamratkie,
Edward G. Robinson, and
Henry O. Nicholas.

The following-named paymasters to be pay inspectors, with the rank of commander, for temporary service:

John F. Hatch and
Frederick G. Pyne.

The following-named acting pay clerks to be assistant paymasters, with the rank of ensign, for temporary service:

Percy W. McCord,
Charles F. House,
Louis W. Crane,
George S. Corbeil,
Calvin W. Schaeffer,
William T. Ross, and
Benjamin O. Kilroy.

Asst. Paymaster William B. Young to be an assistant paymaster, with rank of ensign, for temporary service.

Chief Pay Clerk Roscoe J. Dodd, retired, to be an assistant paymaster on the retired list of the Navy, with the rank of lieutenant, for temporary service.

The following-named pay clerks on the retired list to be assistant paymasters on the retired list, with the rank of lieutenant, for temporary service:

John W. Caum,
Isaac T. Van Patten,
Theodore G. Hansche,
George A. White,
Charles W. Loomis,
Philip T. Lansdale,
Ray E. Ames,
William R. Pattison,
George B. Kimberly,
Frederick H. Ramsay,
Frederick K. Hunt,
Floyd C. Miller,
Harry L. Miller,
Matthew C. Kneip, and
Thomas S. Veitch.

Pay Clerk John F. Flynn, retired, to be an assistant paymaster on the retired list, with the rank of lieutenant (junior grade), for temporary service.

POSTMASTERS.

ALABAMA.

Lillie C. Hays, Abbeville.
Marcus M. Russell, Attalla.
Grova Grace, Dora.

ARIZONA.

John H. Gibson, Winslow.

CALIFORNIA.

Theodore H. Abel, Coalinga.
Andrew M. Isom, Portola.
Harlan J. Woodward, Ramona.

COLORADO.

Robert T. De Foor, Eagle.
Orion W. Daggett, Redcliff.

FLORIDA.

Ulyssis D. Kirk, Sebring.

GEORGIA.

John L. McMurray, Comer.
Albert S. Hardy, Gainesville.
Mrs. Alexander S. Clay, Marietta.
Clarence C. Jarrard, Maysville.
Robert C. Ayres, Royston.

ILLINOIS.

Alonzo E. Werts, Abingdon.
James L. Parks, Carbondale.
Charles K. Gilkerson, Marengo.
Walter R. Nelson, Paxton.

IOWA.

Dick Voogd, Aplington.
Harry R. Sokol, Collins.
Frederick E. Bierman, Decorah.
Rose E. Bagley, Dike.
Jay L. Lee, Dows.
Pearl L. Noelting, Dumont.
John S. Moon, Kellerton.
Joshua F. Elder, Keokuk.
Tressa M. States, Lovilia.
Oscar W. Larson, Odebolt.
Alvah M. Robinson, Reinbeck.
Clifton P. Sickles, Sioux Rapids.
Anna M. Beck, Solon.
Joseph S. Guynn, Traer.
Carl Wulkau, Williams.

KANSAS.

John W. Dean, Blue Mound.
Eva Philbrick, Halstead.
Mollie F. Osburn, Jennings.
Raymond R. Norris, Marquette.
Lodema Bryant, Neosho Falls.
Anna L. Taylor, Russell.

LOUISIANA.

Laurence E. Wilson, Oil City.
Hugh J. Knight, Vidalia.

MARYLAND.

Alexander D. S. Harrower, Cockeysville.
Thomas J. Coonan, Westminster.

MASSACHUSETTS.

Charles J. Dacey, Conway.
John F. O'Connor, Winchester.

MICHIGAN.

Willis E. Warren, Capac.
Harry S. Morrow, Port Austin.
Charles A. Jordan, Saline.

MINNESOTA.

Ruby M. Anderson, Argyle.
Hope Mouser, Gilbert.
Clara A. Toftey, Grand Marais.
Jay Jackson, Ruthton.
Lillian M. Reinholdson, Sandstone.
Alice M. Anderson, Butterfield.
Wilbur M. Ohles, Nashwauk.
Lee C. Peterson, Pillager.
George I. Williams, Virginia.

MISSOURI.

Mary P. Fields, Lees Summit.
Thomas F. Weaver, Steele.

NEBRASKA.

Ira P. Foreman, Allen.
Estella E. Murray, Belgrade.
Charles J. Smersh, Brainard.
Elizabeth M. Lean, Clarks.
John O. Blauser, Diller.
Rainard B. Wahlquist, Hastings.
Harold Hjelmfelt, Holdrege.
David C. Morgan, Plattsmouth.
Edward J. Whalen, Spalding.
Charles A. Berry, Wayne.
George W. Campbell, Wymore.

NEW JERSEY.

John P. Adair, Highlands.
Rufus O. Walling, Keyport.
Harold Pittis, Lakehurst.

NEW YORK.

William H. Murray, Albany.
George S. Vroman, Altamont.
Frank McMahon, Belfast.
John W. Thorp, Brewster.
Marcus R. Zeh, Central Bridge.
Hugh W. McClellan, Chatham.
Florence E. Doane, Chazy.
Harry F. House, Chester.
Elbert G. House, Cuba.
Frederic W. Youmans, Delhi.
Gertrude R. Neenan, East Bloomfield.
Mary H. Avery, Elmsford.
Ephraim J. Fisk, Fairport.
Sumner I. Houghwout, Falconer.
Bruce M. Sweet, Fillmore.
Charles B. Estell, Friendship.
Albert E. Moran, Gardiner.
Jacob L. Hicks, Highland Falls.
Robert B. Haog, Iona Island.
Elizabeth G. Kenyon, Jamesville.
Wilder S. Beard, Jefferson.
Albert M. Thayer, Livonia.
George M. Pierson, Maybrook.

Frederick H. Smith, Milton.
Augusta H. Tilden, New Lebanon.
Luther Hasbouck, New Paltz.
Edward S. Moore, Norwich.
Ashmer R. Collins, Norwood.
John R. Davis, Oakfield.
Joseph P. Kiernan, Pawling.
John E. Walker, Philmont.
Lee Van Vredenburgh, Rhinebeck.
Edwin Clute, Schenectady.
John G. Rose, Sinclairville.
Verne Seebeo, South Dayton.
Francis D. Lynch, Stony Point.
James H. Burns, Troy.
Marion E. Wroten, Trudeau.
Edith L. Kent, Tuxedo Park.
Peter Marcinkowski, Wallkill.
Philip J. Smith, Webster.
Mary R. Newlands, West Point.

NORTH DAKOTA.

John P. Hardy, Fargo.
Jessie M. Hamill, Oakes.
Thomas F. Cooper, Parshall.

OHIO.

Arda M. S. Allensworth, Amsterdam.
Harry H. Maxson, Germantown.
Andrew J. Price, Glouster.
Lee B. Milligan, Lowellville.
Wendell E. Brettell, Rock Creek.
John L. Carr, South Charleston.
Roy S. Rush, Wickliffe.

TEXAS.

George W. Morris, New Boston.
Mae Murray, Sonora.

VERMONT.

Frank L. Start, Jeffersonville.

WASHINGTON.

Inez G. Spencer, Creston.
Andrew J. Cosser, Port Angeles.
Gertrude Cosgrove, Sprague.
Alberta Hough, Valley.

WEST VIRGINIA.

Joseph N. Alderson, Alderson.
James W. Wilson, Barboursville.
Burton B. Rohrbough, Belington.
Leonidas W. Bartlett, Buckhannon.
Hamer H. Berry, Burnsville.
William B. Stewart, Chester.
William D. Roush, Clendenin.
Harry T. Bumgarner, Elizabeth.
William W. Johnson, Glenville.
John R. Schaeffer, Gormania.
Bertha W. Smith, Holden.
Benjamin L. Brown, Kingwood.
Henry L. Bowling, Lewisburg.
Joseph F. Thompson, Martinsburg.
Oliver A. Locke, Milton.
Mary E. Davin, Montgomery.
William S. Wray, Northfork.
Thomas G. Burke, Oak Hill.
William A. Curry, Omar.
William G. Keyes, Philippi.
William B. McNutt, Princeton.
John J. Kerwood, Ripley.
Charles G. Ogden, Salem.
Grover F. Hedges, Spencer.
Preston H. Kelly, Thurmond.
Karl G. Davis, Wallace.
Clelia T. Henritze, War.
Lawrence M. Rowan, White Sulphur Springs.

WYOMING.

Elmer H. Schreck, Gillette.

WITHDRAWALS.

Executive nominations withdrawn from the Senate November 21, 1918.

POSTMASTERS.

John D. Fulton, to be postmaster at Lengeloth, Pa.
George W. Finley, to be postmaster at Spalding, Nebr.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, November 21, 1918.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Father in heaven, we pray that out of the fiery furnace through which the world is passing that a larger, purer, nobler type of man shall emerge, with a clearer vision of Thy character and Thy purposes.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away. And I, John, saw the Holy City, new Jerusalem, coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband."

We pray that the vision may become a reality; that men may live together in harmony, peace, and unity; that God shall be all in all and life become a precious thing, to be upheld and sustained; and glory and honor and praise be Thine forever. In His name. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Monday, November 18, 1918, was read and approved.

SWEARING IN OF A MEMBER—WILLIAM F. BIRCH.

Mr. BROWNING. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BROWNING. There is present to-day Mr. WILLIAM F. BIRCH, who was elected to fill the unexpired term of the late JOHN H. CAPSTICK, and I ask unanimous consent that he may be sworn in.

The SPEAKER. Did the gentleman receive a majority?

Mr. BROWNING. There is no contest, and I have a certificate in my hand, from the county clerk, of his election.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING] asks unanimous consent that the successor of Mr. CAPSTICK be sworn in without his credentials.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I understood him to say that he had his credentials.

Mr. BROWNING. I have a certificate from the county clerk. The State board has not met, and he could not get his credentials from the secretary of state.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. May I ask the gentleman if there was any contest?

Mr. BROWNING. There is none. There is no objection whatever.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. BROWNING]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WILLIAM F. BIRCH appeared before the bar of the House and took the oath of office prescribed by law.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had receded from the amendment No. 28 to the bill (H. R. 11945) making appropriations to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3944. An act for the relief of Emma H. Ridley;

S. 3986. An act to acquire the manuscript of Charles Chaillé-Long containing an account of the unveiling of the McClellan statue;

S. 2171. An act to abolish the United States land office at Springfield, Mo.;

S. 1661. An act for the relief of Albert H. Campbell;

S. 68. An act to amend section 269 of chapter 231 of the act of March 3, 1911, entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary";

S. 4271. An act for the relief of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue;

S. 1590. An act providing for an increase of salary for the United States marshals and for the United States district attorneys for the western and eastern districts of Louisiana;

S. 4178. An act providing additional time for the payment of purchase money under homestead entries of lands within the former Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Mont.;

S. 4858. An act to provide method of settlement for materials, stores, and supplies transferred between different bureaus, departments, or agencies of the Government, and for other purposes; and

S. 4272. An act for the relief of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 10818) to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 282) amending the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 10818. An act to authorize the county of Loudon, in the state of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn.; and

H. R. 282. An act amending the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 10818. An act to authorize the county of Loudon, in the State of Tennessee, to construct a bridge across the Tennessee River near Loudon, Tenn.; and

H. R. 282. An act amending the public-buildings act approved March 4, 1913, providing for the purchase of a site for a public building at Nogales, Ariz.

ADJOURNMENT OF SESSION.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I move the immediate consideration of the resolution which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the resolution.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 61.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of the Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 21st day of November, 1918, at 5 o'clock p. m.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. KITCHIN. Certainly.

Mr. GILLETT. Has the gentleman assurance that this will be passed by the Senate

Mr. KITCHIN. I have. I have conferred this morning with Senator MARTIN and Senator LODGE. The hour of 5 o'clock is fixed because there are three Senators who desire to make speeches to-day, and they will not finish until some time about 5. They agreed to the hour of 5.

Mr. GILLETT. Is it customary to fix the precise hour?

Mr. KITCHIN. That is the custom. That has heretofore been done in the resolutions for adjournment sine die. My idea is that we will recess as soon as we pass this until 12.30, unless the Senate has passed the resolution and sent it over. Then we will pass the resolution appointing a committee to wait on the President, notifying him we are about to adjourn—a formal resolution—and then we will take a recess until 5 minutes to 5 o'clock.

Mr. WINGO. When we meet between now and 5 o'clock, is the gentleman disposed to give an opportunity for the consideration of emergency matters to which there is no objection?

Mr. KITCHIN. I do not think, under the agreement, that we could do that. I hope the gentleman will not ask it, because, while I would be glad for them to be considered——

Mr. WINGO. Here is the situation: I do not suppose there is any doubt that when w entered into the so-called gentleman's agreement it was understood that for all practical purposes that agreement would conclude on the 12th day of November. The gentleman knows it is generally understood that the President will leave here before there will be an opportunity to sign bills of an emergency character that might be passed on the 2d day of December. There are some small bills—I have one myself—and my attention is called to the emergency whereby a great public enterprise, that had been held up by the Capital Issues Committee, if it does not get affirmative action extending the time of a former act will suffer to the extent of $50,000 in bonuses that have been put up and if not used have to be refunded on the 1st day of January. I think it will not violate the spirit of the gentleman's agreement for us to consider emergency matters of that kind between now and 5 o'clock. If it is the judgment of the House that it does, then there is but one recourse left, and that is to bring the Members back here if they want to adjourn this Congress and leave these emergency matters unattended to until December 2. I am opposed to adjournment, aside from the necessity of considering the bill I have mentioned.

Mr. GILLETT. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. WINGO. Yes.

Mr. GILLETT. Why make such a proposition as he suggests where he says the result will not come before the 1st of January? Why could we not do it easily when we meet on the 2d of December?

Mr. WINGO. For this reason: When you meet on the 2d of December, then you will have to get unanimous consent to consider a matter of that kind.

Mr. GILLETT. Of course that would be easier than now.

Mr. WINGO. No; it would not be easier than now.

Mr. GILLETT. Oh, yes——

Mr. WINGO. Let me answer the gentleman as to his suggestion of unanimous consent. I do not think we could get it through then; and even if we could get it through the House on the 2d day of December it would be impossible to get it to the President before he goes to Europe, because, as I understand, he contemplates going to Europe, according to the press reports, on December 3.

Mr. GILLETT. Even if that should be true, let me suggest to the gentleman that if we brought a quorum back for that purpose he would never get unanimous consent from that quorum.

Mr. WINGO. Possibly not.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I think we ought to have some understanding as to what we can do under this situation. There are others who have emergency matters. Let me suggest to the gentleman from North Carolina that if he contemplates taking a recess until 12.30 we take a recess until 12.30, and then——

Mr. KITCHIN. The reason why we introduced the resolution now is because the Senate might pass the resolution immediately, and they would then send it right back. We want to know before we appoint the committee to wait on the President.

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman withhold that long enough for me to see if I can get unanimous consent for the consideration of another matter?

Mr. KITCHIN. I think that under the terms of the agreement and understanding of the House such matters as the gentleman refers to should not be taken up. The agreement that we entered into——

Mr. WINGO. No such agreement was ever entered into with me.

Mr. KITCHIN. The agreement was that we should recess until the Senate disposed of the revenue bill or until Congress reconvened.

Mr. WINGO. That was predicated upon the assumption of November 12 as the date for reconvening.

Mr. KITCHIN. Of course, I have no objection to the gentleman's request to consider it; but, even supposing nobody here should object to it, there are 150 or 200 more Members who are away, and if they were present they might object to it. It is to protect them.

Mr. WINGO. It is to protect them from legislation passed in their absence?

Mr. KITCHIN. Yes. The gentleman from Massachusetts asked the question expressly whether any extension of remarks or any request for unanimous consent for consideration of special measures would be sanctioned, or would be in violation of the agreement, except the legislation that we excepted, as the gentleman knows, and except in cases of necessity, in which event the minority leader and the majority leader should notify the absent Members to return. When the gentleman from Massachusetts asked that question, I answered, "Yes; it would be in violation of the agreement," and stated that no such business would be taken up under unanimous consent. The whole House agreed to it, and the whole matter is in the RECORD. As majority leader I feel that I, so far as the whole House is concerned, ought to see to it that the agreement is kept. I have been very much embarrassed by having to object to several unanimous-consent requests, to which I would not have objected unless we had this agreement and had not Members left with the understanding that these matters would not be taken up and that unanimous consent would not be given. Of course, if the gentleman will look into it, he will appreciate my position in the matter.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, I appreciate the fact that the gentleman owes a duty to the House according to his understanding of the agreement. But the point I want to make to the gentleman is, that there is not the slightest doubt that in the gentleman's mind at the time we made that agreement it was with the understanding that it would conclude on the 12th day of November.

Mr. KITCHIN. No; we had incorporated in the agreement that nothing should be taken up until the Senate finally disposed of the revenue bill and voted on it, and that in the meantime the House should vote on the question of adjournment from the time we discussed it up to the 12th of November. That was one of the things we could take up without calling the other Members back.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, if the gentleman insists, I feel that possibly under the circumstances in his position he feels obligated to make an objection.

Mr. KITCHIN. I will not object to the gentleman's getting it up when Members get back here any more than any other Member may object.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. KITCHIN. With pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I suggest to the gentleman from Arkansas that after the convening of Congress in December there will be but little legislation reported from the committees, and those matters will be matters that are matured and are on the calendar and ready, and they can have almost immediate consideration at that time.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, some gentlemen are older in their experience than I am, but my observation has been such that the gentleman holds out very poor hope to me. But I appreciate the situation of the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from North Carolina and that their interpretation of the gentleman's agreement is different from mine. They feel that they should protect their respective sides, and that being true, I feel that I should not embarrass them by pressing the matter to-day. While I am opposed to adjournment and shall vote against it, I realize that with the leaders on both sides agreed they can force an adjournment to-day. I am in favor of going right on with this session without adjournment. I am ready to stay here and attend to business just as I have continuously during this session.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

STIMULATION OF AGRICULTURE.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi rose.

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from Mississippi rise?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Mr. Speaker, I ask for the present consideration of the following concurrent resolution, which I ask to be reported.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Mississippi asks for the present consideration of the concurrent resolution, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House concurrent resolution 60.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill H. R. 11945, entitled "An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled 'An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products,' " the Clerk be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to strike out, in line 1 of Senate amendment No. 31, "section 27" and insert in lieu thereof "section 6," that the sections of the bill may appear in consecutive numerical order; and also to relieve from a typographical error in the conference disposition of Senate amendment No. 15, make the amount therein mentioned $150,000.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. GILLETT. Reserving the right to object, I suppose this is one of the bills that was excepted from the unanimous-consent agreement?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. It is. It was specifically excepted in the "gentleman's agreement."

Mr. GILLETT. What is the reason for these changes in the engrossed bill?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. This resolution is simply to correct two errors which have gotten into what is generally called "the Candler food production bill," which passed the House May 23 and passed the Senate September 19 and was sent to conference. When the Senate receded from Senate amendment No. 28, which was the rent proposition, that went out of the bill. The proposed sections included in that Senate amendment were those from 6 to 27, inclusive. When they went out, then it left that break in the numbering, one section being 6 and the next one 27. This is merely to correct that, in order that the sections may be consecutive and in numerical order.

Mr. GILLETT. It is merely a verbal correction, then?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Merely a verbal correction. Then the second proposition is this: The House in the bill as passed made an appropriation of $480,000 for the news service of the Agricultural Department, and the Senate struck that out. In conference the conferees agreed to an appropriation of $150,000. In writing it up, by a typographical error of the stenographer, he made it read "$150.00" instead of "$150,000." This resolution is for the purpose of correcting those two errors.

Mr. WALSH. Mr Speaker, reserving the right to object, I understand that if consent is not given for the consideration of this resolution the news service of the Department of Agriculture will have only $150 for the ensuing year.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. That is correct.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that will be a very generous appropriation for that service?

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. I do not think so. After full and careful consideration of the matter, the Senate conferees and the House conferees unanimously agreed to the appropriation of $150,000, and I believe at least that amount is necessary and can be usefully expended.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; but after very full and careful consideration the House, under the leadership of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. CANDLER] and the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture [Mr. LEVER], decided that $480,000 was necessary. Now we have got down to $150, and it would seem to me that we ought not to pass this resolution, but ought to let them try to get along on $150.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. If the gentleman will permit, "we" have not cut it down to $150 at all. The House conferees and the Senate conferees unanimously agreed to $150,000, and it passed the Senate at $150,000 and passed the House at $150,000; but the stenographer in writing it up put his period at the wrong place and wrote it "$150.00" instead of writing it as it was intended to be written and as it passed both the Senate and House, "$150,000." When it is the concensus of opinion not only of the conferees but of the House and Senate that the appropriation should be $150,000, and when that amount has passed both the House and Senate and been reduced clearly by error to the small sum of $150, I do not think the gentleman will object. To object would defeat the evident purpose and will of both the House and Senate, because both bodies agreed to and passed the $150,000 appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, in view of the statement of the gentleman from Mississippi, and further in view of the fact that the eminent, distinguished, and honored chairman of the Committee on Public Information is soon going away from here, and realizing how hungry people are for news, I will not object to giving this news service.

Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi. Many thanks to the distinguished gentleman, my good friend from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH.]

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The resolution was agreed to.

On motion of Mr. CANDLER of Mississippi a motion to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to was laid on the table.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 15 minutes to 1 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House take a recess until 12.45. Is there objection?

HOLIDAY RECESS.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to make an inquiry of the gentleman from North Carolina.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Tennessee will propound it.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I should like to ask the gentleman from North Carolina if any thought has been given to the question of a holiday recess—that is, for the Christmas holidays?

Mr. KITCHIN. I will say to the gentleman that we have given some thought to that, and in my judgment I believe at this time, under the peculiar circumstances, we ought to waive the usual week or 10 days' Christmas holiday, and perhaps take 2 or 3 days, because we will be rushed to death with legislation, appropriation bills, and the revenue bill, and I understand there will be considerable contest over that. It seems to me the wiser thing for us not to insist on a week or 10 days' Christmas holiday.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, of course, it has been the custom for many years—I do not know how long—to have a considerable recess at Christmas time. That interval has usually been taken advantage of by many Members to attend to their personal business affairs. It seemed to me proper to propound the inquiry at this time, to the end that if there was any thought not to have the usual Christmas holidays, Members might have notice of that fact and be enabled during the time between now and the first Monday in December to give the required attention to their personal business matters.

Mr. KITCHIN. I am glad the gentleman from Tennessee has called the attention of the House to this matter. We will adjourn now, so that Members can take the 10 days' or 2 weeks' time to attend to matters necessary at home, whereas they have been doing it heretofore at the Christmas holidays. They may use the time between now and the first Monday in December, with the understanding that in all probability we will have to dispense with the usual 10 days' or 2 weeks' holiday at Christmas.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The next session, of course, is the short session. The appropriation bills will be unusual in character, and I agree with the gentleman that we ought to dispense with a long holiday, but I do not wish to make myself offensive to the Members when that time shall come. I thought it well enough to discuss it now, and I wish to say to the gentleman that I shall feel inclined to object to any unanimous consent at that time for the taking of any prolonged or protracted recess.

Mr. KITCHIN. I have conferred with the minority leader, Mr. GILLETT, and we are both of the opinion that we ought to dispense with the Christmas holidays this year, owing to the peculiar situation and the conditions during the short session.

Mr. MADDEN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KITCHIN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MADDEN. It has been suggested by a great many people with whom I have had conversations, who are not Members of the House but citizens of the United States, in view of the fact that the Capital of the Nation is to be taken over to Versailles, France, and that the President will be in session over there, whether it might not be difficult for us to get the bills to him for his signature, and that therefore it might be more than ever essential that a Christmas holiday of some length should be taken. Of course, I do not want myself to spend too much time in taking a long holiday.

Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD. Why not hold the sessions of the House and Senate in France?

Mr. MADDEN. It has been suggested also that we might commandeer five or six battleships and take the Congress over to France at the same time that the President is there, so that we might be able to advise him on the intricate problems that he will have to deal with.

Mr. HARRISON of Mississippi. Does not the gentleman think that if we all work together and cooperate during the next three months we need not have any extra session of Congress next year?

Mr. KITCHIN. Possibly that is true. I thank the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] for his suggestion. I had not really thought about it, but before we meet here in December I will give thought and consideration to what the gentleman suggests and see if we can not arrange to have Congress go right along at the same time. [Laughter.]

Mr. MADDEN. I notice that they have taken over the cables and are to take the Bureau of Public Information to France, so I suppose that the cables will be utilized entirely for the subject matter which Mr. Creel and his committee will have to send back to the American people, and I thought if we could save the expense of that by going over it would be a wise thing to do.

Mr. KITCHIN. Some one back of me suggests that they might cable to us what to do every day. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 12.45 p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly (at 12 o'clock and 28 minutes p m.) the House stood in recess until 12 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 12.45 p. m.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, it seems that the adjournment resolution in the Senate had to be sent to the Appropriations Committee on objection to its present consideration. I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1.15 o'clock p. m.

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, can not the gentleman make it a little later?

Mr. KITCHIN. Well, I will say 1.30 p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 1.30 p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

RECESS.

Accordingly (at 12.47 o'clock p. m.) the House stood in recess until 1.30 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

The recess having expired, the House was called to order at 1.30 o'clock p. m.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Waldorf, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the following concurrent resolution:

House concurrent resolution 61.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives be authorized to close the present session of Congress by adjourning their respective Houses on the 21st day of November, 1918, at 5 o'clock post meridian.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bills of the following titles, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 11945. An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12998. An act to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. LAZARO, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following bills:

H. R. 11945. An act to enable the Secretary of Agriculture to carry out during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919, the purposes of the act entitled "An act to provide further for the national security and defense by stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of agricultural products," and for other purposes; and

H. R. 12998. An act to amend section 3528 of the Revised Statutes.

COMMITTEE TO NOTIFY THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following resolution and ask unanimous consent for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 451.

Resolved, That a committee of three Members of the House be appointed by the Speaker to join a similar committee to be appointed by the Senate to wait upon the President of the United States and inform him that the two Houses have completed the business of the present session and are ready to adjourn unless the President has some other communication to make to them.

The resolution was agreed to.

The SPEAKER appointed as the committee to wait upon the President Mr. KITCHIN, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, and Mr. MONDELL.

RECESS.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 4.50 o'clock p. m.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina asks unanimous consent that the House stand in recess until 4.50 o'clock p. m. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Accordingly the House stood in recess until 4.50 o'clock p. m.

AFTER THE RECESS.

At 4 o'clock and 50 minutes p. m., the recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker.

DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES SUBJECT TO MILITARY SERVICE.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a report from the Secretary of Agriculture in response to House resolution 379.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is that the last of these reports?

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not answer the gentleman, but is rather inclined to think that it is.

Mr. WALSH. That is the second one that has come from the Department of Agriculture.

The SPEAKER. It will be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, is all of that to be printed in the RECORD?

The SPEAKER. That was the order of the House, that they should all be printed there.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. What does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] desire to have done with it?

Mr. MADDEN. Of course the war is over, but I think these reports ought to be referred to the respective committees to which they belong.

The SPEAKER. The order of the House was that these reports should be read and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and lie on the Speaker's table until the last one of them was in.

Mr. MADDEN. I do not believe that they are all in yet.

The SPEAKER. The Chair does not know.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. This particular report would involve a tremendous amount of printing and a tremendous amount of expense. Is the gentleman from Illinois willing to permit it to lie on the Speaker's table without being printed in the RECORD?

Mr. MADDEN. No; the House made the order that all should be printed as they came in and should lie on the Speaker's table.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Would the gentleman be willing to have a modification of that order in respect to this?

Mr. MADDEN. No; I think it ought to be printed. I think we ought to know who these men are. That is the order.

Mr. TAYLOR of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I think it ought to go into the RECORD. I think we ought to know who these people are.

The SPEAKER. It is ordered to be printed and to lie on the Speaker's table.

The report above referred to is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF AGRICULTURE,
Washington, November 20, 1918.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SIR: In compliance with House resolution 379, I have the honor to transmit herewith a statement showing the number of men in the service of the Department of Agriculture who were, on June 5, 1917, between the ages of 21 and 31 years, for whom requests for deferred classification have been asked by the department and allowed, the name and home address of each such person, the character of the work he is performing, and the length of time he has been in the service. This statement includes those employees for whom deferred classification was recommended by the department and allowed by the draft boards, and who are still in the service of the department. It does not include those employees in whose cases the draft boards did not act favorably upon the department recommendation for deferred classification or those in which the recommendation of the department for deferred classification was withdrawn because of later developments which made it possible to release the employees concerned.

The statement shows that 815 employees now in the service of the department were deferred solely on the ground that they are necessary to the adequate and effective operation of the service in which they are engaged and that they could not be replaced without substantial, material loss and detriment to the adequate and effective operation of such service. In addition, 248 employees for whom deferred classification was recommended by the department were also deferred for other reasons, such as dependency, physical disability, and the like.

Respectfully, D. F. HOUSTON,
Secretary.

WEATHER BUREAU.

OBSERVERS AND ASSISTANT OBSERVERS ENGAGED IN AEROLOGICAL WORK.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the case of seven observers and assistant observers of the Weather Bureau engaged in Army aerological work provided for by a special appropriation of $100,000 included in the Regular Army appropriation act. This work is closely coordinated with similar activities of the Signal Corps of the Army and includes the making of upper-air observations in the aid of aviation and, incidentally, for the benefit of baloonists and artillerists. The work is of a highly technical nature, and the men engaged in it must not only be experienced in the handling of kites, theodolites, and other scientific apparatus but must also have had intensive training and be skilled in the complicated mathematical work necessary in computing and reducing the observations. It would be impossible to replace these men without jeopardizing the work, as, even if men with the necessary education and fundamental requirements were obtainable, it would take many months of training for them to be able to accomplish what is required.

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Frank J. Bavendick, Ellendale, N. Dak. Has charge of the Army aerological station at Ellendale, N. Dak. Seven years eight months.

William S. Cloud, Washington, D. C. Computor in office of official in charge of entire aerological work, Washington, D. C. Received university training. Three years.

Charles S. Ling, Drexel, Nebr. Assists in the Army aerological work at Drexel, Nebr. Five years ten months.

John A. Reible, Broken Arrow, Okla. Has charge of the Army aerological station at Broken Arrow, Okla. Attended college one year. Eight years one month.

Orville E. Russell, Broken Arrow, Okla. Assists in the Army aerological work at Broken Arrow, Okla. Attended college one year. One year ten months.

Charles O. Schick, Grossbeck, Tex. Assists in the Army aerological work at Grossbeck, Tex. Five years eight months.

Frank I. Whitney, Ellendale, N. Dak. Assists in Army aerological work at Ellendale, N. Dak. Three years ten months.

Archie R. Dorr, Twin, Wash. Is an experienced line repair man and telegraph operator at Twin, Wash., on the Tatoosh-Port Angeles Weather Bureau telegraph line. The vessel-reporting stations of Neah Bay, North Head, and Tatoosh Island, Wash., are connected by this telegraph line. There is close and confidential cooperation between the Weather Bureau and the officials of the Army and Navy in connection with this work, and in some instances the bureau's telegraph and cable lines form the only means of communication for Army and Navy business in the important seacoast sections in which they are located. The repair men along these lines, in addition to their knowledge of the topography of the country and their skill in construction and repair work, must be expert telegraphers. Furthermore, they must be men who have demonstrated their loyalty and trustworthiness. Men who could fill their places are unobtainable. Six years eleven months.

Clement R. White, Cape Henry, Va. Is an experienced telegraph-line repair man at Cape Henry, Va. The Weather Bureau maintains a vessel-reporting station at Cape Henry, with telegraph and cable line connections. There is close and confidential cooperation between the Weather Bureau and the officials of the Army and Navy in connection with this work, and in some instances the bureau's telegraph and cable lines form the only means of communication for Army and Navy business in the important seacoast sections in which they are located. The repair men along these lines, in addition to their knowledge of the topography of the country and their skill in construction and repair work, must be expert telegraphers. Furthermore, they must be men who have demonstrated their loyalty and trustworthiness. Men who could fill their places are unobtainable. Eight years four months.

Walter F. Feldwisch, North Head, Wash. Is an expert vessel reporter and telegraph operator at North Head, Wash. The Weather Bureau maintains a vessel-reporting station at North Head, with telegraph and cable line connections. There is close and confidential cooperation between the Weather Bureau and the officials of the Army and Navy in connection with this work, and in some instances the bureau's telegraph and cable lines form the only means of communication for Army and Navy business in the important seacoast sections in which they are located. The vessel reporting can be done effectively only by men of long experience, as they must be able to detect the name, nationality, and ownership of a vessel several miles distant. Furthermore, they must be men who have demonstrated their loyalty and trustworthiness. Men who could fill their places are unobtainable. Seven years three months.

Oscar C. Rauh, Washington, D. C. Employed as expert instrument maker in the Washington office and engaged in the construction of special and delicate apparatus required in the Army aerological work. The instruments can not be obtained from manufacturers, and it is possible to employ only men of long training and exceptional skill in their construction and repair. It would be impossible to fill this employee's place, as even in normal times only a few men were available, and these have long since been absorbed in branches of the Army and Navy for somewhat similar technical instrumental work. Prior to appointment in Weather Bureau had 14 years' training and experience in construction of delicate instruments with the firm of Buff & Buff, Boston, Mass. Ten months.

Joseph Leshansky, Sand Key, Fla. This employee is an expert vessel reporter at Sand Key, Fla. The Weather Bureau maintains a vessel-reporting station at Sand Key, with telegraph and cable connections. There is close and confidential cooperation between the Weather Bureau and the officials of the Army and Navy in connection with this work, and in some instances the bureau's telegraph and cable lines form the only means of communication for Army and Navy business in the important seacoast sections in which they are located. The vessel reporting can be done effectively only by men of long experience, as they must be able to detect the name, nationality, and ownership of a vessel several miles distant. Furthermore, they must be men who have demonstrated their loyalty and trustworthiness. Men who could fill their places are unobtainable. Three years eight months.

BUREAU OF ANIMAL INDUSTRY.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS (MEAT INSPECTION).

The following veterinary inspectors engaged in meat inspection are graduates of recognized veterinary colleges and have qualified for the positions they hold through civil-service examination. After appointment they were given the usual instructions in meat-inspection work by trained employees. Through various assignments everyone has become proficient in this class of work. Their work consists of performing ante-mortem and post-mortem inspections for the purpose of passing carcasses, parts, and organs that are healthful, wholesome, or fit for human food, and condemning those which are unhealthful, unwholesome, or unfit for human food; supervising the handling of meat and meat food products to insure compliance with the meat-inspection regulations; conducting sanitary inspection of establishments in which such inspections are conducted, especially the department to which they are assigned; and attending to such other duties as may be required of them by the meat-inspection regulations and various instructors.

As a result of the present emergency, meat inspection has assumed a position of especial importance, as it is necessary to assure that the meat supplied to the Army, Navy, and the allies and the civilian population of this Nation is healthful, wholesome, and fit for food.

Due to the fact that this service has lost a very large number of veterinary inspectors, it is necessary to conduct the work with a force which is composed of many new employees who must receive much training before they can render the best service. Although all available veterinary inspectors listed by the Civil Service Commission have been appointed, as well as all veterinarians who would accept temporary appointment, there is a large number of vacancies in the ranks of veterinary inspectors. It is necessary that these employees be retained in the service in order that an adequate and effective service may be maintained.

Name, home address, and length of service.

E. M. Aldrich, Omaha, Nebr. One year seven months.
Herman F. Baum, Brooklyn, N. Y. Seven months.
Arthur I. Bevan, Moultrie, Ga. Three years five months.
Robert N. Birdwhistell, Cincinnati, Ohio. Three years five months.
W. S. Buchanan, Chicago, Ill. Four years.
Coleman P. Callaway, Fort Worth, Tex. Two years eight months.
R. J. Digman, Wausau, Wis. Ten years one month.
Guy P. Everley, South St. Joseph, Mo. Six years eight months.
Nathan Feldman, Chicago, Ill. One year five months.
Clyde A. Gardner, Brooklyn, N. Y. Three years five months.
Charles H. Grunwald, South St. Joseph, Mo. Two years eight months.

George J. Gruenewald, Cleveland, Ohio. Three years six months.
Richard Harvey, Indianapolis, Ind. One year eight months.
John W. Hermann, Pittsburgh, Pa. Four years eight months.
S. D. Hobbs, Jacksonville, Fla. Three years six months.
Ray Hoefling, Austin, Minn. Three years four months.
Rush M. Johnson, Indianapolis, Ind. Three years.
Howard M. Kalodner, Philadelphia, Pa. One year two months.
Lawrence P. Kirch, Indianapolis, Ind. Three years ten months.
Cecil S. Lemon, Augusta, Ga. Three years eight months.
C. M. Lombard, Chicago, Ill. Ten years.
Robert L. Mason, Wheeling, W. Va. Eleven months.
Frank W. Miller, Chicago, Ill. Nine years six months.
George E. Mitchell, Newark, N. J. Two years eight months.
Robert Moonan, Chicago, Ill. Four years six months.
Charles E. Mootz, Wheeling, W. Va. Four years.
James W. Norris, Boyds, Md. Five years one month.
Hugh Max O'Rear, Indianapolis, Ind. Three years two months.
Sabin L. Ries, Ottumwa, Iowa. Four years six months.
Garrie W. Riley, Orangeburg, S. C. One year three months.
C. A. Schuler, Sioux City, Iowa. Four years two months.
Floyd A. Scott, Austin, Minn. Six years six months.
Otto W. Seher, Fort Worth, Tex. Three years eight months.
Walter W. Shartle, Indianapolis, Ind. Seven years two months.
T. W. Stewart, South Sioux City, Iowa. Three years ten months.
Martin A. Sweeney, Chicago, Ill. Three years eight months.
E. N. Tierney, Andalusia, Ala. Six years eight months.
Clemence C. Walch, Leavenworth, Kans. Ten years eight months.
John G. Warwick, West St. Paul, Minn. Four years.
John H. Whalen, Chicago, Ill. Seven years.

LAY INSPECTORS (MEAT INSPECTION).

The following lay inspectors engaged in meat inspection qualified for the positions they hold through civil-service examinations. Upon entering the service they were placed under seasoned and experienced employees to receive instructions in the conduct of the work. With the usual number of different assignments, they developed into efficient employees.

Their work consists of assisting veterinary inspectors in performing ante-morten and post-morten inspections; supervising the preparation of meat and meat food products; reinspecting meats during processing and after such processing is finished; passing such meats and meat food products as are clean, wholesome, and fit for food, and to which no prohibited substances have been added, and retaining and condemning such as are unclean, unwholesome, or unfit for food, or which contain prohibited substances.

The work performed by this class of employees covers a most important part of the meat-inspection service, and there can be no question that the meat inspection as conducted by this department, especially under present conditions, is a highly necessary measure to insure the wholesomeness and fitness for food purposes of the meat supply, and through it the health of the men in our Army and Navy, our allies, and the people of this country. A considerable number of this class of employees are now assigned to directly cooperate with the Army and Navy by assignment to Army camps, cantonments, forts, naval-training stations, navy yards, and supply points to reinspect meat and meat food products and to supervise their delivery.

Many of the most efficient lay inspectors have within a comparatively short time left the service, and it has been necessary for the most part to fill these vacancies with inexperienced men. All the eligibles certified for the position by the Civil Service Commission have been appointed, and every effort has been made to secure all possible men capable of doing this class of work and who would accept temporary appointment. Nevertheless, many vacancies have not been filled. Each of the men is performing a vital part of the inspection work, and the loss of any of them would result in materially lowering the efficiency of the service, and would be difficult, if not impossible, to overcome.

Name, home address, and length of service.

Frederick H. Atkins, South St. Joseph, Mo. Six years five months.
Clark M. Attebery, East St. Louis, Ill. Two years seven months.
Plato H. Boller, Salt Lake City, Utah. Three years.
Orley R. Bourland, East St. Louis, Ill. One year six months.
William J. Brennan, Chicago, Ill. Four years four months.
Thomas J. Brett, Somerville, Mass. Nine years six months.
Charles G. Carpenter, Moultrie, Ga. Three years.
F. Clampitt, Sioux City, Iowa. Three years eight months.
Elmer H. Cole, Somerville, Mass. Three years.
N. J. Cunningham, Chicago, Ill. One year ten months.
Timothy F. Danforth, Chicago, Ill. Four years five months.
Franklin O. Elmore, Wheeling, W. Va. Three years.
Earl T. Farrington, East St. Louis, Ill. Six years six months.
James J. Fitzpatrick, Chicago, Ill. One year six months.
F. T. Graskowiak, Omaha, Nebr. Three years six months.
Martin F. Hanley, Indianapolis, Ind. Three years six months.
Charles Harlow, Cincinnati, Ohio. Three years.
Floyd Howard, Fort Worth, Tex. Two years six months.
Robert Hunter, jr., Cincinnati, Ohio. Three years nine months.
Guy G. Jarvis, Peoria, Ill. Four years four months.
William R. Kelly, Fort Worth, Tex. One year ten months.
Patrick J. Kenny, Paterson, N. J. Two years seven months.
G. M. Lint, Chicago, Ill. Three years nine months.
Duane A. Lyon, Chicago, Ill. Four years one month.
Sumner B. McMasters, Austin, Minn. Four years four months.
Myrtis A. Magee, Chicago, Ill. Three years six months.
Jacob P. Maxwell, Omaha, Nebr Two years seven months.
Oliver C. Miller, Mason City, Iowa. One year eight months.
Ira S. Modrell, Wheeling, W. Va. Three years.
Edward Lee More, South St. Joseph, Mo. Five years six months.
Daniel J. Murphy, Somerville, Mass. Five years two months.
James A. Nelmes, Fall River, Mass. Three years eight months.
George W. Nickerson, Chicago, Ill. Four years seven months.
George M. C. Oehler, Ottumwa, Iowa. Four years eleven months.
August Patterson, Jacksonville, Fla. Three years six months.
David P. Powell, Waterloo, Iowa. Three years six months.
Edgar P. Pulley, St. Joseph, Mo. Six years nine months.
Joseph V. Rollins, Austin, Minn. Two years six months.
W. R. Rose, Chicago, Ill. One year nine months.
Frank I. Runnels, Mason City, Iowa. Two years seven months.
Ray A. Schooley, Cincinnati, Ohio. Three years.
William E. Seacord, East St. Louis, Ill. One year seven months.
John T. Shelton, Chicago, Ill. Four years nine months.
M. C. Searer, Chicago, Ill. Six years ten months.
Henry O. Singer, Chicago, Ill. Four years six months.
William J. Small, South St. Joseph, Mo. Six years five months.
James J. Smith, Fort Worth, Tex. One year nine months.
Robert M. Spurlock, Fort Worth, Tex. Two years seven months.
Le Ray Stanley, Fort Worth, Tex. Six years three months.
John Calvin Thompson, Chicago Ill. Three years three months.
Edward J. Toomey, Chicago, Ill. Two years eleven months.
Floyd E. Turley, South St. Joseph, Mo. Six years four months.
Theodore S. Van House, Peoria, Ill. Two years eight months.
W. H. Voth, Sioux City, Iowa. Three years nine months.
Carl H. Wagner, East St. Louis, Ill. Eight years nine months.
Harry C. Whalen, Newark, N. J. Two years six months.
Forrest F. Wynne, South St. Joseph, Mo. Four years five months.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS (TICK ERADICATION).

The following veterinary inspectors engaged in tick-eradication work are graduates of recognized veterinary colleges and have qualified for the positions they hold through civil-service examination. After appointment they were given the usual instructions in tick-eradication work by trained employees. They have been assigned to territories and have shown that they are capable of rendering efficient service.

The eradication of ticks is a work of very great importance, as it has been positively shown that a tick-free section will produce more and better meat and better products than it would if infested with ticks. Congress itself has recognized the value of this work as a war measure by providing for the control and eradication of the diseases and pests of live stock, which includes the cattle tick, under the food-production act. To properly and successfully conduct this work, specially trained veterinary inspectors are required, such as those herein listed, as they are familiar through actual assignment with the sections in which the work is to be conducted.

To train new men requires considerable time. Furthermore, it is not believed possible to obtain new men for this work should the veterinary inspectors now attached to the service be removed, as there are no veterinary inspectors certified by the Civil Service Commission and no veterinarians in private practice are available who will accept temporary appointment. To lose any of these veterinarians, therefore, would materially embarrass the service and considerably retard this most valuable work.

Name, home address, and length of service.

Raymond A. Blackman, Whiteville, N. C. Four years six months.
Theodore Brand, Rayville, La. One year two months.
Harold S. Brundage, Georgetown, S. C. Two years eight months.
John F. Chipman, Leesburg, Fla. Three years six months.
Ashley J. Clark, Natchez, Miss. Two years seven months.
R. E. Cropper, Greenville, Ga. One year six months.
Harry R. Getz, Mena, Ark. Three years ten months.
Walter J. Gray, Houma, La. One year five months.
Roy A. Gregory, De Witt, Ark. Three years two months.
Jacob J. Jones, Pascagoula, Miss. Three years two months.
Albert H. Julien, Camilla, Ga. Three years three months.
Arthur J. Knilans, Windsor, N. C. Three years.
Cleo L. Lash, Bay St. Louis, Miss. One year six months.
Carl F. Lipp, Leesville, La. Three years three months.
George R. Louden, Oberlin, La. Two years eight months.
Lyman E. McDonald, Live Oak, Fla. Two years seven months.
Wilbur McPherson, Liberty, Miss. Two years seven months.
Eugene E. Murphy, Franklin, La. Two years eight months.
Joseph S. O'Hare, Plymouth, N. C. Six years seven months.
Dudley B. Pellette, Colfax, La. One year eight months.
C. G. Rabenstein, Atlanta, Ga. Four years three months.
Ray V. Rafnel, Baton Rouge, La. Five years eleven months.
Charles F. Rathbun, Pine Bluff, Ark. Seven years.
John Redmond, Enterprise, Ala. Three years two months.
Allen W. Rice, De Queen, Ark. Three years two months.
Floyd C. Reid, Arkadelphia, Ark. Two years eight months.
William R. Scott, Sulphur, Okla. Four years five months.
William J. Selkin, Evergreen, Ala. Four years one month.
Claude, Sevy, Covington, La. Four years two months.
S. H. Still, Richland, Ga. Six years eight months.
Henry A. Taggart, Deland, Fla. Two years eight months.
Paul Vaughn, Montgomery, Ala. Six years eight months.
Albert W. Vornheder, New Orleans, La. Two years two months.
Clifford Young, McGehee, Ark. One year one month.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS (HOG-CHOLERA CONTROL).

The following veterinary inspectors engaged in hog-cholera control work are graduates of recognized veterinary colleges and have regularly qualified for the positions they hold through civil-service examination. After appointment they were given the usual instructions and training in hog-cholera control work by experienced employees. They are all rendering satisfactory and efficient service.

The control of hog cholera is of vital importance in connection with the increased production of pork. Congress has recognized the value of this work as a war measure by providing funds for its prosecution under the food-production act. To obtain satisfactory results, experienced and specially qualified men must be employed. To train new men for this work requires much of the time of others who are experienced. The supply of veterinarians is practically exhausted. Consequently, the loss of any of these men would mean a reduction of the force.

Name, home address, and length of service.

Leslie H. Baker, Houston, Tex. Three years six months.
Joe H. Bux, Little Rock, Ark. Nine years five months.
Amer C. Drach, Fort Dodge, Iowa. Six years two months.
Joe Walter Giffee, Geneva, Nebr. Five years three months.
Edgar A. Grubb, Sacramento, Cal. Four years eleven months.
William M. Hobdy, Palestine, Tex. Three years six months.
Frank B. Jones, Springfield, Mo. Six years ten months.
R. E. Moody, Eureka, Kans. One year one month.
Robert Jones Frank, Fort Worth, Tex. One year five months.
James Henry Murphy, Sullivan, Ind. Eleven years eight months.
William Poselner, Woodward, Okla. Four years two months.
Orion L. Summer, Upper Sandusky, Ohio. One year five months.
Charles T. Tawney, Corunna, Mich. Four years eleven months.
Fulton Rex Woodring, Chillicothe, Mo. Three years two months.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS (TUBERCULOSIS ERADICATION).

The following veterinary inspectors engaged in tuberculosis-eradication work are graduates of recognized veterinary colleges and have regularly qualified for these positions through civil-service examination. After appointment they were given the usual instructions and training in this kind of work and are all now rendering very satisfactory and highly efficient service.

These employees are engaged in the eradicaion of tuberculosis from the cattle herds of this country. The great importance of this work, especially at the present time, is apparent and has been recognized by Congress through provision of special appropriations under the food-production act for its more effective conduct. The stamping out of tuberculosis means enlarged meat and dairy production, besides conserving the supply now available. To conduct this work requires men who have received a special training, and to lose any of the present inspectors would very materially cripple the service. This is especially true at this time, since the supply of veterinarians is exhausted. It becomes especially necessary, therefore, that these men be retained in the service.

Name, home address, and length of service.

Emery E. Coshow, Indianapolis, Ind. One year one month.
William C. Drake, Oklahoma City, Okla. Four years.
Solon Gillen, Madison, Wis. Two years eleven months.
J. N. Holzer, St. Paul, Minn. Four years eight months.
James Vernon Lyon, Chicago, Ill. Three years ten months.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS (SUPERVISION OF ESTABLISHMENTS MANUFACTURING SERUMS, TOXINS, ETC.).

The following inspectors are engaged in the supervision of establishments manufacturing biological products. After appointment they were given the usual instructions and training in supervising establishments manufacturing such products. They have become highly trained men in this branch of the work and are capable of rendering especially efficient service.

These employees supervise the production of serums, toxins, viruses, and other biological products, especially anti-hog-cholera serum. This supervision insures the production and distribution of safe and effective curative and preventive products. These products are employed in combating and controlling disease in meat-producing animals. The production of anti-hog-cholera serum in ordinary times is of great importance, but under present conditons it becomes of extreme importance in protecting the supply of pork of this country against loss from disease. Specially trained inspectors are required in order to properly supervise these establishments. They must fully understand all the details of the production of this class of products. To train men for this work requires much time, and, furthermore, the supply of veterinarians is practically exhausted.

Name, home address, and length of service.

Walter Boyce, Superior, Nebr. Six years eight months.
Charles P. Schneider, Indianapolis, Ind. Four years seven months.
Robert Thumann, Kansas City, Mo. Five years three months.
John W. Woods, St. Joseph, Mo. Three years eight months.
Frank A. Bittner, Wichita, Kans. Two years nine months.
Harry M. Edwards, Omaha, Nebr. Three years nine months.
George L. Farrington, Sioux City, Iowa. Six years six months.
C. H. Grove, Oakland, Cal. Four years three months.
Elbert Sturm, Wichita, Kans. Two years six months.

VETERINARY INSPECTORS (DOURINE ERADICATION).

The following veterinary inspectors are engaged on dourine-eradication work. This work requires employees with considerable training and skill and is a class of work which can only be performed in a satisfactory manner by veterinarians. Owing to the scarcity of competent veterinary inspectors it would be practically impossible to replace these inspectors if they were called into the military service, and it would cause a material loss to the horse industry to lose their services.

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Melvin W. Miller, Albuquerque, N. Mex. Three years four months.
John J. Staab, Albuquerque, N. Mex. Three years six months.
Burl O. Fisher, Harlem, Mont. One year eight months.
Ben H. Steigleder, Albuquerque, N. Mex. One year six months.
Clarence N. Miller, East Las Vegas, N. Mex. Engaged on sheep-scabies eradication work in New Mexico. This work requires men of considerable training, and consists in the inspection of sheep for scabies, together with the supervision of the dipping of animals affected with or exposed to this disease. Sheep-scabies eradication work is very important at the present time, as the disease, if allowed to spread, will materially reduce the production of wool and mutton. It would be extremely difficult to fill the places of the men engaged on this work were they called into active military service. Five years nine months.

Davis B. Allen, Calais, Me. Engaged in the work of inspecting live stock offered for importation from Canada. The regulations provide for the tuberculin testing of all dairy and breeding cattle from Canada. It is believed that tuberculosis is very common among pure-bred animals in Canada, and it is important to maintain along the Canadian border a force of inspectors skilled in the work of inspection and in the application of the tuberculin test. The department is encouraging in every way possible the eradication of tuberculosis from herds of pure-bred animals in this country, and it would be most unfortunate at this time if, through a lack of competent inspectors or a relaxation of requirements, cattle infected with tuberculosis should enter the United States and disseminate tuberculosis in herds of pure-bred animals in this country. Three years one month.

George H. Ehlers, Scobey, Mont. Engaged in the work of inspecting live stock offered for importation from Canada. The regulations provide for the tuberculin testing of all dairy and breeding cattle from Canada. It is believed that tuberculosis is very common among pure-bred animals in Canada, and it is important to maintain along the Canadian border a force of inspectors skilled in the work of inspection and in the application of the tuberculin test. The department is encouraging in every way possible the eradication of tuberculosis from herds of pure-bred animals in this country, and it would be most unfortunate at this time if, through a lack of competent inspectors or a relaxation of requirements, cattle infected with tuberculosis should enter the United States and disseminate tuberculosis in herds of pure-bred animals in this country. Four years six months.

Earl L. Williman, Buffalo, N. Y. Detailed to cooperative influenza-control work with the War Department. This work consists of supervising the cleaning and disinfection of stock cars, stockyards, barns, and other premises used in the handling of Army horses and mules. This class of work requires men of training along special lines, and the work accomplished has resulted in a material reduction in the losses of Army horses and mules through the decrease in the amount of infection from influenza. It would be practically impossible to replace these men if they were called to active military service and such action would seriously affect the conduct of influenza-control work. Three years two months.

Max P. Medved, Kansas City, Kans. Detailed to cooperative influenza-control work with the War Department. This work consists of supervising the cleaning and disinfection of stock cars, stockyards, barns, and other premises used in the handling of Army horses and mules. This class of work requires men of training along special lines, and the work accomplished has resulted in a material reduction in the losses of Army horses and mules through the decrease in the amount of infection from influenza. It would be practically impossible to replace these men if they were called to active military service and such action would seriously affect the conduct of influenza-control work. Six years seven months.

E. D. Allen, Chicago, Ill. Assigned to stockyards work at Chicago, Ill. This work consists principally of the inspection of cattle, sheep, and swine for contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases. It requires training and skill. Eight years eight months.

Horace Brandon, Chicago, Ill. Assigned to stockyards work at Chicago, Ill. This work consists principally of the inspection of cattle, sheep, and swine for contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases. It requires training and skill. Two years eleven months.

Albert C. Osborn, Louisville, Ky. Assigned to stockyards work at Louisville, Ky. This work consists principally of the inspection of cattle, sheep, and swine for contagious, infectious, or communicable diseases. It requires training and skill. Four years three months.

James W. Murdoch, Omaha, Nebr. Supervises the stockyards work at the Omaha, Nebr., station. Has under his direction about 20 employees engaged in inspecting animals for contagious diseases, such as foot-and-mouth disease, hog cholera, scabies, anthrax, and glanders. These employees also apply the tuberculin test to cattle and supervise the immunization of swine for interstate movement for purposes other than immediate slaughter. Dr. Murdoch has had extended experience in contagious-disease work. The services of such experienced men are necessary to guard against outbreaks of serious contagious diseases in public stockyards. Six years eight months.

James E. Regan, New York, N. Y. Employed in connection with the sanitary handling and control of hides, skins, hair, wool, and other animal by-products offered for entry into the United States through the port of New York. In order to comply with the regulations requiring the disinfection of cars, boats, yards, and premises it is necessary that a careful supervision be maintained. This can only be performed by men experienced in such work. In view of the prevalence of anthrax and the existence of foot-and-mouth disease and rinderpest in various countries the regulations relative to the disinfection of hides, skins, or other animal by-products must be carefully administered. Great difficulty has been experienced in retaining inspectors in the service having the necessary qualifications for this work and their call into Army service would seriously hamper the work of the bureau. One year ten months.

George Kernohan, Washington, D. C. Employed in the bacteriological laboratories of the bureau in producing tuberculin and mallein. Through his training, and particularly his experience in the laboratories here, has become an expert in the propagation of tuberculosis and glanders bacilli, used in preparing tuberculin and mallein, which is manufactured in great part for the use of the United States Army. This work, which involves the handling of virulent microorganisms, requires skill and reliability. Dr. Kernohan, with some assistance, is making all the glanders cultures that are needed to produce mallein for the Army. Graduate Kansas State Veterinary College. Prior to present appointment practiced veterinary medicine and was employed as inspector by Kansas State Live Stock Sanitary Commission. Also served as veterinary inspector in the bureau of animal industry at Kansas City and national stockyards for two years. Then took post-graduate course in bacteriology and served as instructor in general bacteriology at the University of Kansas. Two years eleven months.

H. H. Ladson, Clarendon, Va. Assists in the study of contagious abortion of cattle, a problem in cattle conservation of first importance, since it is directly concerned with the production of calves by avoiding premature birth, thereby assuring a maximum calf crop. This work is chiefly field work. The bureau is finding it practically impossible to secure veterinarians, either through the civil-service register or by temporary appointment, to effectively carry on its work. Graduate of a recognized veterinary college. Three years three months.

Harry W. Schoening, Washington, D. C. Engaged as diagnostician of dourine and glanders, two of the most important diseases of equines, which it is imperative to control. Has developed expertness in serum diagnosis which comes only from years of actual experience in the work. These diseases are not possible of early detection in any other manner than by these tests. It would be impossible to dispense with Dr. Schoening's services at the present time without seriously jeopardizing the measures for the control of the diseases mentioned. He has also supplied material to the War Department for diagnostic work in glanders. Graduate of a recognized veterinary college. Ten years eleven months.

Benjamin Schwartz, Washington, D. C. Conducts important investigations concerning parasitic diseases of live stock, which work requires men specially educated and trained in zoology. His knowledge is required almost daily in giving information concerning the extermination and control of parasitic diseases of meat-producing animals, conditions which, if permitted to go uncontrolled, would result in serious loss. Great difficulty has been experienced in securing men qualified for this branch of work, and it is questionable whether any man could be found to take his place should he be called for military service. Graduate College of the City of New York, B. A.; also received M. A. degree from Columbia University, having specialized in zoology. Studied at the Cold Springs pathological laboratory two summers. Prior to present appointment was for nearly a year a scientific assistant in the Bureau of Fisheries and for one term was instructor in biology in the University of Arkansas. Two years nine months.

Samuel Adler, Kansas City, Mo. Assists at the Kansas City meat-inspection laboratory in the examination of meats and meat food products for harmful ingredients, and to determine whether they are properly labeled. A large amount of the work during the past year consisted of the examination of samples of meat food products prepared for military consumption to detect poisons. This is very important work, and it is practically impossible to secure men trained along these lines. At the present time the eligibles for such positions are in the draft age, and even when appointed are only connected with the work a short time when they are inducted into the military service. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. A. and M. S. in chemistry; also attended Columbia University, of New York, two summers. Two years five months.

Walter F. Schroeder, New York, N. Y. Has charge of the fat and oil work in the New York meat-inspection laboratory of this bureau. Has had a number of years' experience in this work, and a new man appointed to replace him would require considerable time to gain the same proficiency. The bureau has experienced great difficulty in securing chemists and employees to do chemical work. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Seven years three months.

Winfield B. Fromer, Richmond Hill, N. Y. Engaged in the examination, for many deleterious substances, of special military meat food products. Has gained considerable proficiency in this work, and a new man appointed to take his place would require training before he could carry out this work satisfactorily. Graduate Syracuse University, B. S. Before entering the department service taught chemistry two years and served one year in a commercial laboratory. Four years three months.

Roger M. Mehurin, Washington, D. C. Performs analytical chemical work in the meat-inspection laboratory, specializing in the determination of heavy metals in meat food products, in which work he has become an expert. It is impossible to secure men trained in this special line of work, and if any chemist was appointed to take his place it would require from six to eight months' training in the laboratory before he could satisfactorily do the work. Had three years' training in chemistry prior to his appointment in the bureau. Four years two months.

DAIRY FARMING EXTENSION AGENTS.

These men are employed jointly by the United States Department of Agriculture and the extension divisions of the various State agricultural colleges to conduct dairy-farming extension work, or to direct such work in the field. In the war emergency it is imperative that dairy production of milk and the utilization by means of the dairy cow of feeds men are concentrating their efforts along the line of more economical production of milk and the utilization by means of the dairy cow of feeds which can not be used as human food. They are acquainted with the conditions and the people in their respective States and have their work outlined, and it would be a serious drawback if they were drafted, because there would necessarily be a break in the work before the vacancies could be filled and the new men become familiar with existing conditions. Furthermore, the dairy division has endeavored during the past year, with practically no success, to secure additional men sufficiently trained to do this work. Very few men of maturer years, or women either, are available whose training and experience fit them for this work.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Campbell A. Hutton, Knoxville, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture; was assistant in dairying in that university two terms; had charge of dairy-herd record work at Tennessee Experiment Station; and was dairy editor of the University of Tennessee Farmer during this period. Prior to entering department service was assistant dairy and poultry agent for Southern Railway Co. for two years. Three years seven months.

Frank M. Colcord, Corvallis, Oreg. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S., and University of Nebraska, M. S.; was emergency supervisor of county-agent work Nebraska in 1917. Ten months.

H. T. Converse, Spartanburg, S. C. Graduate New Hampshire College, B. S. Prior to entering department service engaged in farming one year; was herdsman and manager two years and assistant in the dairy-extension division of Clemson College one term. Three years two months.

Albert A. Fredericks, Baton Rouge, La. Graduate Louisiana State University, B. S. Ten months.

Edward J. Haslerud, St. Paul, Minn. Attended Minnesota College of Agriculture about three years. Before entering department service was tester in a cow-testing association for six months. Eight months.

W. Ir Kellogg, State College, Pa. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Was official in testing and cow-testing association work one year. Three years nine months.

William E. Peterson, Manhattan, Kans. Graduate University of Minnesota, B. S. and M. S. Was supervisor of garden work public schools of Minneapolis one year, and served with the dairy division of the University of Minnesota one year. Nine months.

Joseph P. La Master, Starkville, Miss. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. Prior to entering department was bacteriologist for the Elmendorf Dairy. Three years three months.

Harry G. Stevens, West LaFayette, Ind. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering department was employed as dairy herdsman. One year ten months.

Josephus P. Quinerly, Auburn, Ala.: Graduate North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to entering department was foreman for Naval Academy dairy, Annapolis, Md.; assistant dairy and poultry agent Southern Railway Co.; and manager Elmview Farms, Grifton, N. C. Three years two months.

Walter E. Tomson, Bozeman, Mont. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College, B. S., and was assistant in dairy husbandry and instructor in dairy husbandry at that institution for five years. Eight months.

J. A. Waldron, East Lansing, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Prior to present appointment was for various periods herdsman at the college; instructor in agriculture high school, Carlton, Minn.; engaged in farming; and was extension worker in the Michigan Agricultural College. One year eleven months.

CREAMERY EXTENSION SPECIALISTS.

The creamery extension specialists of the dairy division assist creamery operators in overcoming losses and in improving the quality of their product. They also teach them how to make use of the by-products, thus adding to the food supply of the country. There are very few men available who have the training and experience to qualify them to do creamery extension work. Hence, if any of the men now engaged in the work were drafted it would be impossible to replace them with men having equal efficiency without considerable loss of time in training them to do the work. During the existing emergency it is essential that all dairy products be so handled that there will be no losses, and that dairy production be maintained at its present level, or even increased.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

C. E. Newlander, Auburn, Ala. Graduate Cornell University, bachelor of science. For four years prior to entering department service was instructor in dairy manufactures, Michigan Agricultural College. One year one month.

W. F. Gerholz, Buhl, Idaho. Attended Wisconsin Dairy School one term. Prior to present appointment was for five years employed as manager and maker of cheese for several companies. Nine months.

Vern R. Jones, St. Albans, Vt. Graduate Washington State College, B. S., and was instructor in dairying at the college one term; post graduate student Cornell University and instructor in dairying two terms; received degree of M. S. in agriculture from Cornell; was assistant professor in dairying South Dakota State College one term. One year one month.

Owen E. Williams, Washington, D. C. Engaged in investigating the manufacture of ice cream, one of the ways of converting dairy products into food. The work is essential. At present he is working on the substitution of glucose and similar products for cane sugar in ice-cream manufacture; also on the preparation of butter fat, so that it may be preserved and transported long distances, the latter work having application to butter fat for reconstituting milk from skim-milk powder. It would be impossible to secure a man of his training and experience to take up this work. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College B. S. Was then employed for one year as instructor in charge of dairy husbandry at the Baron de Hirsch School, Woodbine, N. J. Five years ten months.

Edwin H. Krause, Lincoln, Nebr. Engaged in stimulating the production of cottage cheese from skim milk and buttermilk, which otherwise would be wasted. He is well trained for this work. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. Then engaged in dairy farming two seasons. Nine months.

T. C. Haddon, Rock Hill, S. C. Engaged in stimulating the production of cottage cheese. He is well trained for this work. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to department service was teacher of agriculture and science two terms and assistant in agriculture Winthrop Normal and Industrial College two terms. Nine months.

Albert C. Weimar, Washington, D. C. Investigates the manufacture of cheese, attempting to develop methods of manufacturing types whose importation has been shut off by the war. His experience in this department also has qualified him for extension work. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. in agriculture. Two years prior to entering department service was president of the Lacrosse Pasteurized Milk Co. Eight months.

Floyd R. Farnham, West Raleigh, N. C. Engaged in cheese-factory extension work in the mountain regions of the South, inaugurated by the department about four years ago. Mr. Farnham has been instrumental in the organization of 20 cheese factories, some of which still depend on him in a large measure for advice and guidance and expert knowledge of cheese making. Cheese specialists are exceptionally scarce, and it would be very difficult to secure anyone to fill this position. Attended Pennsylvania State College; was instructor in creamery manufacture at that college one term and was buttermaker there one term. Three years nine months.

MARKET MILK SPECIALISTS.

Market milk specialists are engaged in work on the sanitation of milk supplies, a most important matter in the conservation of human health as well as the conservation of dairy products. They cooperate with local authorities in teaching farmers how to produce more wholesome milk. This improvement enhances the keeping qualities of dairy products and prevents loss through spoilage. Practically their entire time during the past year has been devoted to cooperation with the United States Public Health Service in improving the milk supplies in the vicinity of Army cantonments. It would be practically impossible at this time to replace these employees. The dairy division has had unfilled vacancies in this work for nearly a year.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Harry N. Thomas, Washington, D. C. (in field greater portion of time. Graduate University of Nebraska College of Agriculture, B. S. in agriculture; instructor in agriculture, Beatrice (Nebr.) High School, 1916; county agricultural agent, Dawes County, Nebr., one season. One year.

Clarence S. MacBride, Washington, D. C. (travels all the time). Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering department was dairy instructor for State of Washington. One year three months.

Russell S. Smith, Washington, D. C. (travels greater part of time). Graduate University of Maine, B. S. Prior to Government service was State dairy and milk inspector in Maine. Three years eight months.

Clifford W. Wescott, Patten, Me. Graduate University of Maine College of Agriculture, B S. Prior to entering department was State dairy inspector of the Maine department of agriculture. Six and one-half months.

Benjamin Vener, Springfield, Mass. Works chiefly on milk-plant management, dealing with city milk plants. The work reduces losses of milk due to wasteful methods and careless handling. It results in more wholesome milk being delivered to consumers. It cuts down operating expenses by teaching more efficient use of machinery and labor. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. For two years prior to entering department service was sanitarian, chemist, and efficiency expert to Tait Bros., Springfield, Mass. Eight months.

R. J. Posson, Washington, D. C. (In field greater portion of time). Engaged in collecting and tabulating data regarding milk production. Includes personal work with farmers to determine most economical methods of feeding and caring for dairy cows. Results in a definite understanding as to the requirements in milk production and leads to more economical methods of production. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. Two years ten months.

H. P. Davis, Alexandria, Va. For a year and a half after entering department was engaged in dairy extension work. Since that date has had charge of the editorial work of the dairy division. In addition has charge of the feeding experiments at the Huntley (Mont.) Irrigation Experiment Station at the Ardmore (S. Dak.) Dry-Land Experiment Farm, and at the Iberia (La.) Live Stock Experiment Farm. Graduate University of Missouri; received master's degree from Pennsylvania State College; was assistant in dairying at University of Illinois; and assistant in experimental dairy husbandry and instructor in dairy husbandry with Pennsylvania State College. Three years eleven months.

Thomas W. Mosely, Washington, D. C. Is engaged in the organization of bull associations. The bull-association movement has for its object the improvement of dairy cattle through the joint ownership of meritorious pure-bred dairy bulls, and it has proved to be one of the most effective means of increasing the quality and productiveness of dairy cows. It is imperative during the war emergency that dairy production be maintained at the present level and even increased. This can best be done with better cows. The Bureau of Animal Industry for the past year has endeavored, with practically no success, to secure men sufficiently trained to do this work. Very few men of maturer years are available whose training and experience fit them for bull-association organization work. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. in agriculture; graduate student University of Chicago, one summer; and assistant in the dairy laboratories of the University of Nebraska, two terms. Five years.

Frank W. Kehrli, Salt Lake City, Utah. Has charge of bull-association work in the West. This has for its object the improvement of dairy cattle through the joint ownership of meritorious pure-bred dairy bulls, and it has proved to be one of the most effective means of increasing the quality and productiveness of dairy cows. It is imperative during the war emergency that dairy production be maintained at its present level and even increased. This can best be done by the improvement of the productive capacity of the cows of this country. It is difficult to secure men of maturer years whose training and experience fit them for this work Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, B. S. Was field dairyman for this college in cooperation with the Department of Agriculture for three years. Three years nine months.

Elmer V. Ellington, Washington, D. C. (in field all the time). Has charge of dairy extension activities of the Bureau of Animal Industry in the Middle West, supervising the work of 25 extension workers. This position requires, in addition to high-class training, rare qualities for tact, judgment, and executive ability. Mr. Ellington has had special training for this work through years of employment in this department. During the past year the bureau has had practically no success in securing men of this training and experience. Very few men of maturer years, or women either, are available whose training and experience fit them for this work. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. in agriculture. For various periods was extension dairyman, assistant professor of dairying, and professor of dairying at the University of Idaho. Three years two months.

Joseph B. Shepherd, Ballston, Va. Assists in the dairy extension office of the Dairy Division. Attends to all inquiries regarding feeding, dairy-herd management, and selection of dairy cattle; also the construction of silos and dairy buildings. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering department service was employed by the Great Western Sugar Co., Scottsbluff, Nebr. Nine months.

G. E. Braum, Mount Vernon, Wash. Engaged in collecting and tabulating data regarding milk production and in personal work with farmers to determine the most economical methods of feeding and caring for dairy cows. This work results in a definite understanding as to the requirements in milk production and leads to more economical methods of production. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Prior to entering department service conducted practical work in Somerset County, Pa., one year. One year.

Ralph P. Hotis, Vergennes, Vt. Engaged in collecting and tabulating data regarding milk production and in personal work with farmers to determine the most economical methods of feeding and caring for dairy cows. This work results in a definite understanding as to the requirements in milk production and leads to more economical methods of production. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Served for various periods before entering department as manager of a stock farm, instructor in agricultural economics, Massachusetts Agricultural College, and dairyman for the Woodlake Stock Farm, Minneapolis, Minn. One year three months.

Philip A. Wright, Washington, D. C. Performs analytical work in connection with silage investigations, which includes particularly the utilization of new crops for silage. Has had long experience in this kind of work. Graduate Middlebury College, B. S.; student in Yale University, two terms; also received degree of M. A., University of Missouri. Seven years three months.

Roy R. Graves, Chevy Chase, Md. Engaged in investigations in the breeding of dairy cattle. Has outlined and started some extensive experiments along this line. A number of animals of high butter-fat production have been secured, and it is expected that some valuable results will be obtained. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S.; received degree of M. S., University of Missouri. Prior to present appointment was manager of a dairy farm, dairyman in this department, and professor of dairy husbandry at Oregon Agricultural College. Two years.

Paul W. Clemmer, Washington, D. C. Performs bacteriological work in connection with various dairy products. This work is conducted with a view to eliminate the waste of dairy products by spoilage and to improve their quality. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Prior to entering department service was assistant chemist, Pennsylvania experiment station, and assistant bacteriologist, department of health, Cleveland, Ohio. Three years.

Courtland S. Mudge, Washington, D. C. Performs bacteriological work in connection with various dairy products. This work is conducted with a view to eliminate the waste of dairy products by spoilage and to improve their quality. Graduate Brown University, Ph. B., A. M., and Ph. D. Before entering department service was for various periods graduate instructor in biological chemistry at Brown University; instructor in chemistry at Rhode Island School of Design, Providence, R. I.; and bacteriologist in the research laboratories of the National Canners' Association, Washington, D. C. One year ten months.

Clifford L. McArthur, Washington, D. C. (Travels greater part of time.) Performs bacteriological work in connection with various dairy products. This work is conducted with a view to eliminate the waste of dairy products by spoilage and to improve their quality. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; received degree of M. S. from the University of Idaho, and took summer course at the University of Chicago and postgraduate work at Rush Medical School. Was bacteriologist for the Oregon Agricultural College. Three and one-half months.

Harper F. Zoller, Washington, D. C. Is working on methods for making casein suitable for gluing purposes in aeroplane construction from centralizer buttermilk, a product now largely wasted. The production of casein in this country must be increased about 50 per cent to meet the shortage due to the lack of imports and increased demand on account of aeroplane construction. It is almost impossible to secure chemists with proper training for this work. Graduate Lenox College, B. S.; received degree of M. S. from University of Illinois. Before entering department was for various periods research assistant in astronomy and graduate assistant in chemistry in the University of Illinois; professor of physical science, University of Puget Sound; and instructor in organic chemistry, Kansas State Agricultural College. One year one month.

David D. Gray, Fort Collins, Colo. Has charge of the horse-breeding work being conducted by this department in cooperation with the Colorado Experimental Station at Fort Collins, Colo. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Prior to entering department had one year's experience in veterinary work. One year.

V. O. McWhorter, Dubois, Idaho. Has charge of the sheep experiment station of the Bureau of Animal Industry at Dubois, Idaho, and has been connected with work in sheep investigations for four years. During the past three years he has been trained especially to take charge of the range sheep investigations project. These investigations have been under way for nine years and are now yielding results of immediate value to the producers of wool and mutton in this country. Graduate Washington State College, B. S. in agriculture. Four years.

Sewall Wright, Washington, D. C. Has been employed in scientific work relating to animal genetics; also is a thoroughly qualified mathematician and statistician and has been engaged during recent months in some extremely important statistical work bearing directly on war activities. Graduate Lombard College, B. S.; received degree of M. S. from University of Illinois and S. D. from Harvard. Two years ten months.

Ben F. Brandon, Beltsville, Md. Is assistant in charge of the animal-husbandry portion of the experimental farm of the department at Beltsville, Md. His duties are those of farm superintendent, covering a wide range of farm activities. The experimental farm plays a fundamental part in the work of the Animal Husbandry Division and naturally is vitally connected with the war-emergency program. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. in agriculture. Had practical farm experience prior to entering department. Two years.

SPECIALISTS IN SWINE PRODUCTION.

The department is making every effort to increase the production of pork in the United States. An intensive campaign is now under way in the eight corn-belt States, where many farmers have begun raising hogs for the first time. In the Southern States additional men, appointed under the authority conferred by the food-production act, have been placed as assistants to the regular force of swine-husbandry agents, to stimulate production of pork and to increase the pig-club membership. The importance of this work is manifest in view of the fact that pork constitutes more than one-half of all the meat produced in this country and is the mainstay in the ration of the laboring man and the soldier. The need for increasing the supply of fats is particularly acute. Animal fats can be increased more quickly by increasing the number of hogs than in any other manner.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the case of the following employees engaged in this type of work:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

John T. Tingle, Fort Collins, Colo. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture; served one term as principal of agricultural high school. Eight months.

Tom F. Wise, Auburn, Ala. Graduate Iowa Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture; also had farm experience. Eight months.

William E. Schneider, Denver, Colo. Graduate Colorado Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Eight months.

Leonard J. Allen, Corvallis, Oreg. Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, M. S. As a pig-club agent has been instrumental in accomplishing valuable results. Two years nine months.

De Witt T. Meek, Stillwater, Okla. Prior to entering department had considerable practical experience with live stock, and for a time was secretary of the Federal Live Stock Association of Oklahoma. Two years six months.

Charles R. Bowers, Auburn, Ala. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture; took post-graduate work in animal husbandry. Eight months.

Peter E. Spinks, Agricultural College, Mississippi. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. One year.

Lewis H. Fudge, St. Paul, Minn. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in agriculture. One year.

SPECIALISTS IN BEEF-CATTLE PRODUCTION.

Beef-cattle production is one of the most important lines of work of the Bureau of Animal Industry. Specialists have been placed in different sections of the country to assist farmers and cattlemen in conserving all good breeding cows and to emphasize the necessity of breeding for a maximum calf crop, preparing permanent pastures, building silos, and preserving all available feedstuffs. The corn belt possesses an enormous supply of feed in its corn fodder which has never heretofore been completely utilized. It is estimated that there is in the Southeast this year sufficient feed to take care of between 400,000 and 500,000 cattle, in addition to the number normally provided for. Many problems in beef-cattle production require investigation by specially qualified experts, and it is generally recognized that the experimental work conducted by this department has been the basis of the great development of the beef-cattle industry in the South following the eradication of the cattle tick.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Gilbert L. Cleland, Canton, Miss. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College. Prior to present appointment had practical farm training and one year's experience in swine and beef-cattle production work. One year six months.

L. W. Summers, Orangeburg, S. C. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute; acted as instructor in the Agricultural College of Virginia, and previous to entering the department service was engaged in farming in South Carolina. Two years.

F. T. Peden, Springdale, N. C. Graduate North Carolina College of Agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Four years eight months.

Smith W. Greene, Collins, Miss. Graduate Purdue University. Had practical farm experience before entering department. One year five months.

Frank W. Farley, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. Three years.

Carrol J. Goodell, Washington, D. C. (travels in field most of time). Graduate Purdue University, B. S. in agriculture. Spent his early life on a farm and managed a farm for five years prior to entering department service. Three years ten months.

SPECIALISTS IN POULTRY PRODUCTION.

The work upon which these employees are engaged offers one of the quickest means of increasing the meat supply of the country. The production of a large supply of poultry and eggs for domestic consumption will result in releasing greater quantities of beef and pork for the use of our Army and the allies. Every effort is being made to encourage the production of poultry on general farms and in back yards in order to turn waste material into food for human consumption. These specialists work in cooperation with the State agencies and have been giving chief attention to the great poultry-producing sections of the Middle West, which presents the greatest opportunity for securing the largest and most immediate results. As a necessary concomitant of these extension activities, studies are also being made of various problems relating to the feeding, breeding, and management of poultry.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and approved by draft boards in the case of the following employees engaged in this work:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Alfred R. Lee, Bladensburg, Md. Graduate of Rhode Island State College, B. S. in agriculture. Has general supervision of the poultry-feeding experiments at the Beltsville farm in connection with the war emergency work and the administrative work in the Washington office. Eight years nine months.

R. C. Blake, Oklahoma City, Okla. Graduate of Massachusetts Agricultural Colege, B. S. in agriculture. Has had wide experience in the management of poultry farms. Seven months.

R. H. Wilkins, Washington, D. C. Graduate of Illinois State University and Cornell University. Was poultry instructor and investigator in Massachusetts and Kentucky for two years prior to present appointment. Ten months.

Leo J. Brosemer, Lafayette, Ind. Prior to present appointment was manager of a commercial poultry plant, poultry-club agent for the department in Tennessee, and associate editor of the Reliable Poultry Journal. Two years four months.

Carl F. Weihman, Bryan, Tex. Attended Pennsylvania State College three years, specializing in poultry. Had three years' practical experience in farming and poultry breeding. Eight months.

Philip H. Hayes, Stillwater, Okla. Graduate of Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. During his college course did considerable work on the poultry farm in connection with the feeding, care, incubation, and other matters relating to poultry production. Nine months.

Sheppard Haynes, Beltsville, Md. Assists in poultry work being conducted at the Beltsville farm. The poultry experimental work at the farm is a vital part of the emergency war program because of its bearing upon the poultry industry of the country. Prior to entering department service had about ten year's practical experience in feeding, breeding, and management of poultry. One year five months.

FOREST SERVICE.

FOREST SUPERVISORS.

A forest supervisor is in direct administrative charge of one or more national forests, with an average area to look after of more than 1,000,000 acres. He has control of a ranger force of from 5 to 20 men, and is responsible for their training, leadership, direction, and support. He negotiates all timber sales for his forest, except those of small size, which are handled by the rangers, and those of very large size, which are handled by the district forester or the forester. After sales are negotiated he is responsible for their administration. He plans and supervises trail, telephone, and other improvements for his forest. He issues grazing and special-use permits, and is responsible to the public, to his ranger force, and to the district forester for the efficient handling of a large volume of business. All funds on the national forests are expended under the immediate direction of the forest supervisor, necessitating an accurate grasp of the fiscal regulations. He is expert in both office and field work. A supervisor within draft age, in many instances, is technically trained for his work. During the war especially heavy duties devolve upon him, because with a depleted subordinate force he is under the necessity of efficiently handling as large a timber business as before the war and a greatly increased grazing business, since it has been the effort throughout the national forests to increase the grazing to the utmost limit in order to augment the country's supply of meat. In every case where deferred classification for a forest supervisor has been requested there are special considerations which make it impossible to replace him without substantial material loss and detriment to the work.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Edward P. Ancona, Taos, N. Mex. Deputy forest supervisor, Carson National Forest. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Employed one summer on State forest in Pennsylvania and about a year on chestnut-blight work in same State. Entered Forest Service in a reconnoissance party on the Snoqualmie Forest. Five years five months.

Elliott S. Barker, Taos, N. Mex. Forest supervisor, Carson National Forest. Graduate New Mexico Normal University; also six months in Illinois College of Photography. During school vacations worked at ranching and sawmilling. Entered Forest Service as assistant forest ranger. Nine years five and one-half months.

Charles N. Hammond, Hot Springs, Ark. Deputy forest supervisor, Arkansas National Forest. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in forestry. Prior to appointment was employed by the Pennsylvania Chestnut Blight Commission, and also assisted in a timber reconnoissance on the Crater Forest. Four years four months.

B. F. Heintzleman, Eugene, Oreg. Deputy forest supervisor, Cascade National Forest, with all qualifications for filling any supervisor vacancy that may occur in district 6. Graduate Pennsylvania State Forest Academy; two years Yale Forest School. For one year in charge of State forest reservation in Pennsylvania. Prior to present appointment employed as forest guard on Kaniksu Forest. Eight years three months.

Jay Higgins, Halsey, Nebr. Forest supervisor, Nebraska National Forest. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. in forestry. Entered Forest Service as a guard on one of the Colorado forests. Prior to appointment had experience in sawmill and nursery work. Ten years one month.

Arthur F. C. Hoffman, Pagosa Springs, Colo. Forest supervisor, San Juan Forest. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in forestry. During the summer of 1909 engaged in timber estimating, mapping, planting, and collecting data for volume and yield tables. During the summer of 1910 employed by the Forest Service as student assistant, being engaged in extensive timber reconnoissance on the White River Forest. Seven years two and one-half months.

Leslie T. Mahurin, Glenwood Sprins, Colo. In addition to handling a large amount of administrative work on the Holy Cross National Forest, assumes many responsibilities comparable to those of a deputy supervisor. Six years four months.

Charles D. Simpson, Montpelier, Idaho. Forest supervisor, Caribou National Forest. Graduate four-year course in chemistry University of Minnesota, specializing in botany and economics and special course in stock judging, veterinary science, and agronomy. Had previous practical experience in stock raising; also worked as forest guard in the employ of the Minnesota State forestry service. Four years eleven and one-half months.

John W. Spencer, Collbran, Colo. Forest supervisor, Battlement National Forest. Graduate Emporia College (Kans.), B. S.; Yale Forest School, M. F. Entered Forest Service as a field assistant on the Crook Forest. Prior to appointment had experience in timber cruising, mapping, and surveying. Seven years three and one-half months.

James C. Whitham, Miles City, Mont. Forest supervisor, Sioux National Forest. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S., specializing in forestry. Entered Forest Service as a forest guard. Seven years four months.

DISTRICT FOREST RANGERS.

A district forest ranger is responsible for protecting from fire one or more districts of a national forest, usually involving an area of from 100,000 to 250,000 acres. In most instances privately owned lands are intermingled with the Government holdings. The district ranger conducts with the public the business arising on his district, including timber sales, the management of grazing, special uses of various sorts, and the free use of timber. He frequently has one or more assistants on timber-sale work, and in the fire season he may have as many as three or four patrolmen working under his direction. In fighting fires he may suddenly be thrown into the control of from 100 to 300 men. The success of a district ranger depends upon a number of factors, important among which are complete knowledge of his district, including the location of corners and land lines dividing private from Government lands, and wide acquaintance with the local people. In some instances a man may be so highly qualified for his place that he can not be replaced without the most serious detriment to the business of the forest and annoyance to the local public. It is of the utmost importance that at least 50 per cent of the district rangers on any forest be experienced men, since it is hazardous to depend upon inexperienced men for more than half the ranger districts. In all cases where affidavits were filed for district rangers it was because of the conditions above indicated.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Wayne F. Alexander, Livingston, Mont. Forest ranger, West Boulder ranger district, Absaroka National Forest. Attended a short course in forestry at Missoula and business college. Entered the Forest Service as a guard. Had previous experience in logging camps and in handling horses. Five years two months.

Karl C. Allan, Kilgore, Idaho. Forest ranger, district 2, Targhee National Forest. Prior to entering the Forest Service had considerable experience in stock raising. Four years nine months.

Charles E. Brackett, Nicholia, Mont. Forest ranger, Sheep Creek ranger district, Beaverhead National Forest. Attended Yankton (S. Dak.) College and Ranger School, University of Montana. Has had long experience in the Forest Service and is a particularly valuable grazing man. Prior to entering Government service had considerable experience in handling live stock. Seven years one-half month.

James P. Brown, Silver Bow, Mont. Forest ranger, Fleecer district, Deerlodge National Forest. Graudate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in forestry. Worked in nursery for Pennsylvania Railroad Co.; also experience in tree planting in West Virginia. Five years.

William F. Cochran, Columbine, Colo. Forest ranger, Three Forks ranger district, Routt National Forest. Prior to present appointment was employed three summers as temporary laborer and fire guard in the Forest Service. Had previous experience in surveying. Three years one-half month.

Charles K. Cooperrider, Cowles, N. Mex. Forest ranger, Panchuela-La Mesa ranger district, Santa Fe National Forest. Graduate Ohio University, B. S. Taught three years in high school, one year college, and served one year as high-school principal. Entered the Forest Service as assistant forest ranger. Two years eleven and one-half months.

Fred W. Croxen, Winslow, Ariz. Forest ranger, Bly ranger district, Coconino National Forest. Short course in forestry and animal husbandry at Iowa Agricultural College. Entered Forest Service as an assistant forest ranger. Had previous experience in cattle ranching, lumbering, and tree planting. Six years ten months.

John C. Davis, Alturas, Cal. Forest ranger, Devil's Garden district, Modoc National Forest. Was forest guard one summer before permanent appointment. Prior to appointment had practical experience in stock raising. Two years ten months.

Walter W. Douglas, Merrimac, Cal. Forest ranger, Merrimac district, Plumas National Forest. Had practical experience in building cabins, trails and roads, and telephone lines, and in timber cruising, before entering service; also in handling cattle, both on summer and winter range. Four years eight and one-half months.

William B. Fay, Hesperus, Colo. Forest ranger, La Plata ranger district, Durango National Forest. Had experience in road surveys and road work and in handling stock. Entered Forest Service as a guard. Four years six and one-half months.

Leland Fouts, MacFarland, Tenn. Assistant forest ranger, Hiawassee ranger district, Cherokee-Georgia purchase area. Served as guard in Forest Service two years before permanent appointment and had prior experience in lumbering. Four years five months.

Frank Gray, Cedar, Colo. Forest ranger, Glade ranger district, Montezuma National Forest. Attended State Normal, Alva, Okla., one year, and State Normal, Springfield, Mo., one year, and afterwards taught school. Prior to entering the Forest Service had experience in stock raising. Two years two months.

James I. Hatch, Gallina, N. Mex. Forest ranger, Gallina ranger district, Santa Fe National Forest. Entered Forest Service as a forest guard. Prior to appointment had practical experience in lumbering. Five years four months.

Harry D. Hauser, South Pass, Wyo. Forest ranger, Washakie National Forest. Served as field assistant and as guard in the Forest Service before permanent appointment. Had previous sawmill experience. Three years seven months.

William E. Hedges, Natural Bridge Station, Va. Forest ranger, South Side ranger district, Natural Bridge purchase area. Employed on ranger duties since entering Forest Service. Prior to appointment had experience in surveying, lumbering, handling stock on range, and sawmilling. Two years three months.

Louis R. Hillmon, New Meadows, Idaho. Forest ranger, districts 6 and 7, Weiser National Forest. Prior to appointment was employed two winters at timber work in lumber camps in Idaho. Six years.

William E. Jackson, Denver, Colo. Forest ranger. Attended Anaconda (Mont.) College four years; United States Naval Academy, two years; Kansas State University, two years; University Forest School, two years. Five years seven months.

Wallwin T. Job, Kanab, Utah. Forest ranger, Kaibab National Forest. Prior to appointment worked with surveying party and in surveyor's office approximately 6 months; also had 10 months' experience in ranch work. Eight years nine months.

Robert Johnson, Wensper, Idaho. Forest ranger, district 1, Lemhi National Forest. Previous experience on cattle ranch. Three years eight months.

John V. Leighou, Dolores, Colo. Forest ranger, assigned to timber sale work on Montezuma National Forest. Attended Bloomsburg (Pa.) State Normal one year; Bucknell University, two years; Pennsylvania State College, three years, graduating B. S. in forestry. Prior to appointment to present position had lumbering experience and worked in a reconnoissance crew on Bighorn Forest. Five years two months.

Harvey J. Lickel, Trout Lake, Wash. Forest ranger, Mount Adams ranger district, Columbia National Forest. Attended South Dakota State Normal School three and one-half years; Oregon Agricultural College, two and one-half years; University of Washington, rangers' short course in forestry. Was reared on a stock farm; entered Forest Service as a forest guard. Seven years 10½ months.

Benjamin H. Lowe, Moon, S. Dak. Forest ranger, Limestone ranger district, Harney National Forest. Entered Forest Service as a guard. Had previous experience in lumbering. Two years nine months.

Corley B. McFarland, Landax, Oreg. Forest ranger, west boundary ranger district, Cascade National Forest. Graduate Southern Iowa Normal School. Had stock-raising, logging, and lumbering experience prior to Government employment. Entered Forest Service as forest guard and has been employed on permanent improvement and protection work. Eight years three and one-half months.

Neal O. McKinley, Rye, Colo. Forest ranger, Greenhorn ranger district, San Isabel National Forest. Entered Forest Service as guard. Had previous experience in lumbering. Two years six and one-half months.

Woodfred Grady Miller, Imnaha, Oreg. Forest ranger, Imnaha ranger district, Wallowa National Forest. Had experience in sheep raising and sawmill work prior to entering department service; appointed to Forest Service as a forest guard. Five years one month.

Sanford Mills, Dubois, Wyo. Forest ranger, Washakie National Forest. Lived on ranch until entering Forest Service and was experienced in handling live stock. Five years eight months.

George E. Moore, Currant, Nev. Forest ranger, district 3, Nevada National Forest. Three years at Utah Agricultural College. Prior to appointment had general sawmill experience. Two years seven months.

Stephen A. Nash-Boulden, Descanso, Cal. Forest ranger, Descanso district, Cleveland National Forest. Experienced in grazing and ranching. Served as forest guard for one summer before permanent appointment. Has been a forest ranger during entire period in service. Four years five and one-half months.

Rosco C. Nicholson, Clayton, Ga. Forest ranger, Clayton ranger district, Savannah purchase area. Attended Georgia Agricultural College business course one year, mining and engineering course two and a half years. Served in Forest Service two summers as forest guard before permanent appointment. Four years three months.

Berry W. Phelps, Fraser, Colo. Forest ranger, Byers district, Arapaho National Forest. Two years at Gates Academy, Neligh, Nebr., scientific course; course in surveying and mapping, International Correspondence Schools. Had considerable experience in logging operations and at sawmills, also in handling stock, previous to entering Forest Service. One year five months.

Frank F. Poley, Sulphur Springs, Colo. Forest ranger, Arapaho National Forest. From spring of 1910 to fall of 1914 employed as temporary laborer, foreman of planting crews, and forest guard in the Forest Service. Five years three and one-half months.

Robert G. Schreck, Ely, Minn. Forest ranger, Superior National Forest. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in forestry. Prior to permanent appointment worked for four summers as forest guard. Three years seven and one-half months.

Joseph L. Sheppard, Evanston, Wyo. Forest ranger, employed on important timber-sale operations on Wasatch National Forest. Previous to entering Forest Service had experience in handling live stock. Three years two months.

Lionel H. Sherman, Dayton, Wyo. Forest ranger, Tongue ranger district, Bighorn National Forest. Entered Forest Service as a forest guard. Previous experience in handling live stock. Four years six months.

I. M. Varner, Soda Springs, Idaho. Forest ranger, district 8, Cache National Forest. Attended University of Idaho two years. Prior to appointment had nine years' experience in lumbering; also experience in surveying. Was forest guard two summers before permanent appointment in Forest Service. Three years seven months.

Henry G. White, Detroit, Oreg. Forest ranger, Detroit ranger district, Santiam National Forest. Since entering Forest Service has been engaged chiefly in trail and telephone construction, scaling, and fire protection. Seven years one and one-half months.

Norman C. White, Bly, Oreg. Forest ranger, Bly ranger district, Fremont National Forest. Practical experience in surveying prior to entering Forest Service, where he has been employed as forest guard, chiefly on grazing and timber work. Six years five and one-half months.

Arthur A. Wood, Lost City, W. Va. Forest ranger, Potomac ranger district, Shenandoah Purchase Area. Entered Forest Service as a forest guard. Prior to appointment had practical experience in stock raising. Five years two months.

FOREST EXAMINERS.

A forest examiner is a technically trained forester who is assigned to a national forest to assist the supervisor in estimating timber, in laying out and making timber sales, and in the administration of sales after they are negotiated. He assists in all other forest operations and activities, such as planting and all manner of special forest studies, and also assists in the general administration work as the need may arise. The forest examiner is the supervisor's technical expert in timber matters. If assigned to a district office, a forest examiner is usually employed on special timber work, such as general timber reconnoissance, or the study of sylvicultural problems, or he may be assigned from forest to forest for work under the direction of the forest supervisor. So large a proportion of the forest examiners formerly in the Forest Service have entered the military service that it would be impossible to replace any of the men for whom deferred classification has been requested without equivalent loss in some other direction.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

R. H. Easterbrooks, Laramie, Wyo. Forest examiner, engaged in timber-sale work on the Medicine Bow Forest. Attended University of Illinois one year; University of Michigan, four years. Had previous experience in lumbering, surveying, tree planting, timber cruising, and fire fighting. Two years five and one-half months.

Oliver F. Ericson, Austin, Oreg. Forest examiner, Whitman National Forest. Graduate Bethany College (Kans.), A. B.; University of Washington (Wash.), M. S. F. Before entering service was employed during school vactions on forest reconnoissance work. Five years two months.

Andrew Hutton, Laramie, Wyo. Forest examiner, assigned to timber-sale work on the Rio Grande National Forest. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in forestry. Was employed two summers by Forest Park Reservation Commission of New Jersey, surveying boundary lines, marking lines, locating corners, cabin buildings, etc. Three years one and one-half months.

B. E. Leete, Custer, S. Dak. Forest examiner. Graduate Yale, B. A., and Yale Forest School, M. F. Two years eleven and one-half months.

Allen W. Murdock, Hot Sulphur Springs, Colo. Forest examiner, Arapaho National Forest. Graduate University of Michigan, A. B. and M. S. F. Spent college summer vacations two years as fire warden in Michigan and one year as field assistant on Whitman Forest. Four years two and one-half months.

Wallace J. Pearce, Fort Collins, Colo. Forest examiner, Colorado National Forest. Attended Colorado College two years. Engaged in trail, telephone, and fire-guard work. Entered Forest Service as an assistant on the Pike Forest nursery. Four years one month.

Ward Shepard, Albuquerque, N. Mex. Forest examiner, district office, Albuquerque, N. Mex., assisting the chief of operation. Graduate Harvard, A. B., and Harvard Forest School, M. F. Entered Forest Service as forest assistant. Five years.

Edwin H. Steffen, Yreka, Cal. Forest examiner, in charge of silviculture activities on Modoc Forest. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. F. Prior to present appointment served in Forest Service as guard and as forest assistant in technical forest work. Five years six and one-half months.

Charles Steuart, Mancos, Colo. Forest examiner, Montezuma National Forest. Graduate Colorado College, F. E., and Yale Forest School, M. F. Entered Forest Service as a field assistant. Had previous experience in timber cruising. Four years one and one-half months.

Myron W. Thompson, Denver, Colo. Forest examiner, in charge of the office of sylviculture (Denver), substituting for regular incumbent now on military leave in France; only experienced man available with complete knowledge of timber-sale conditions of district 2. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S., and Yale Forest School, M. F. During college vacations worked in forestry field parties. Entered Forest Service as forest assistant. Six years eleven and one-half months.

Earl W. Tinker, Deadwood, S. Dak. Forest examiner, Black Hills National Forest. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. F.; Yale Forest School, M. F. Two years eleven and one-half months.

Ernest T. Wolf, Cody, Wyo. Forest examiner. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. F. Prior to permanent appointment served one summer as field assistant in Forest Service. Had previous practical experience in woods and lumber yards. Four years.

GRAZING EXAMINERS AND GRAZING ASSISTANTS.

Grazing examiners and grazing assistants are technically trained grazing experts. When assigned to a nationl forest they make an expert examination or survey of the range resources, the range allotments to different classes of stock, and the methods followed in handling the stock on the range, and recommend changes in numbers of stock, class of stock, methods for their handling, and needed range improvements, in order to eliminate destructive overgrazing or unnecessary undergrazing throughout the forest. Where important changes in grazing management are necessary following the survey the grazing examiner or grazing assistant assists the supervisor in seeing that they are properly made. If assigned to a district office he serves as the district forester's technical expert on the grazing capacity of ranges and methods of range utilization. When assigned to research he collects data and develops improved methods of range management for application in range administration. Grazing examiners and grazing assistants may be assigned from forest to forest, from forest to district office, or from one district to another wherever the need for their services is most urgent.

At the beginning of the war all available grazing examiners and grazing assistants were assigned to make a close but rapid examination of the national forest ranges with a view to decide where it would be possible to take care of more stock without greatly endangering the permanent welfare of the range. The special work of these men has had much to do with the emergency increases of cattle and sheep on the national forests in 1918, amounting to about one-half million sheep and one-quarter million cattle. The maintenance of these increased numbers of stock without danger of unwarranted damage to the range and to live-stock production next year, and in future years, necessitates a close watch of range and stock by grazing experts. The work of grazing examiners and grazing assistants differs in the degree of technical as well as administrative responsibility.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Mark Anderson, Ogden, Utah. Grazing examiner. Attended Academy of Idaho three years; University of Idaho, two years' work at Forestry School. Prior to permanent appointment, served as forest guard one summer. Five years five and one-half months.

Raymond J. Becraft, Ogden, Utah. Grazing examiner, district office, Ogden, Utah. Graduate Weber Academy, Ogden, Utah; student, Utah Agricultural College one year, agriculture and botany; and at Utah Agricultural College one year. Two years four months.

William R. Chapline, jr., Washington, D. C. (In the field about seven months in every year.) Grazing examiner. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S., specializing in forestry and botany. Before receiving permanent appointment was employed by Forest Service for part time during three years. Experience in Forest Service as planting assistant, nursery work, field assistant, and forest guard. Six years one-half month.

Lynn H. Douglas, Denver, Colo. Grazing examiner, district office, Denver. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. Had practical experience in lumbering and worked one summer with Ohio Forestry Commission before appointment to present position. Has studied the ranges of district 2 and knows more about them than any other man. Seven years two months.

F. D. Douthitt, Alameda, Cal. Grazing examiner. Studied forestry, botany, and allied subjects at University of Nebraska. Since entering Forest Service has specialized on range investigations and administration. Five years four months.

Walter L. Dutton, Baker, Oreg. Grazing examiner, Whitman National Forest. Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, B. S. Employed as forest guard during college vacation. Five years two months.

Leon C. Hurtt, Missoula, Mont. Grazing examiner, district 1. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S., in forestry. Served as forest guard in the Forest Service two summers before permanent appointment. Three years six months.

John Craig Kuhrs, Oakridge, Oreg. Grazing examiner, Deschutes National Forest. Attended public and high schools and three years at Pennsylvania State College. Entered Forest Service as guard. Seven years six and one-half months.

Theodore B. Nichols, Odgen, Utah. Grazing assistant. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. and M. A. Employed by Forest Service during college vacations as field assistant and forest guard for four years previous to permanent appointment, exclusively on range-management work, in which he is ranked as a specialist. Four years five months.

Jesse L. Peterson, Portland, Oreg. Grazing examiner, assigned to the district office at Portland, Oreg., spending entire time on work looking to increase of range carrying capacity, betterment of range management, etc. Six years six months.

ENGINEERS AND ASSISTANT ENGINEERS IN FOREST PRODUCTS.

Engineers and assistant engineers in forest products conduct tests to determine the mechanical or strength properties of wood as a material, such as bending and compression strength, stiffness, hardness, etc., and tests to determine the physical properties of wood as a material, including such factors as shrinkage as influenced by moisture, rate of transmission of moisture, etc. Supplemental tests are also conducted of various special wood products and of methods of kiln-drying to aid in the practical application of results. The war activities of these men have included a wide range of tests to form the basis for the selection, conditioning, and use of wood for airplanes, ships, vehicles, boxes, gunstocks, etc. In the case of airplanes, for example, strength and other tests furnish the basis for the determination of suitable species; for design in which weight, strength, etc., are vital factors; for specifications covering both raw materials and finished parts to permit the elimination of poor and the retention of satisfactory material and parts; for developing methods of kiln-drying and for checking the methods so developed; for developing built-up material, such as ply wood, laminated parts, jointed parts, etc. The work of engineers and assistant engineers differs in the degree of technical as well as administrative responsibility.

A very serious situation exists at the forest-products laboratory on account of the difficulty of securing and holding technical men with the proper training and experience to conduct the investigations called for by the Army and Navy and other agencies of the Government in the prosecution of the war. The technical men at the laboratory have all been trained along highly specialized lines, and it would be difficult if not impossible to replace them. They have been selected with great care, but many of them are within the draft age for the reason that it has not been possible to secure older men with the necessary qualifications and experience. In view of the importance and urgency of the work which the laboratory has been called upon to do, and the scarcity of qualified men available for it, it is highly necessary that everything possible be done to retain the experienced men already there.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

William S. Broome, Madison, Wis. Assistant engineer in forest products. Graduate department of civil engineering, Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College. Served as rodman and instrument man on various railroads in the South and West; considerable experience in valuation and construction work on these roads. Five and one-half months.

Lorraine J. Markwardt, Madison, Wis. Engineer in forest products. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. in civil engineering, and consulting engineer. Three years nine and one-half months.

Harry J. Rosenthal, Madison, Wis. Assistant engineer in forest products. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. Employed one and one-half years in the engineering department in the city of Rockford, Ill., and as construction engineer for the Inland Steel Co. for a like period. Three months.

J. D. Studley, Madison, Wis. Assistant engineer in forest products. Graduate school of forestry, University of Washington, specializing in forest products. Worked at Seattle timber-testing laboratory and in the mill and on the kilns of the Bryant Mill Co., Seattle. Prior to present appointment was employed four field seasons by Forest Service on cruising, timber sale, homestead-claims examination, patrol, maintenance, construction, and improvement work. Eight and one-half months.

Lars A. Welo, Madison, Wis. Engineer in forest products. Graduate North Dakota Agricultural College; graduate University of Illinois, M. S.; candidate for Ph. D., University of California; taught in high school two years; employed two years as draftsman, engineering department, North Dakota Agricultural College; engaged five years in graduate work and research in physics. Two months.

James O. Bixby, Madison, Wis. Has immediate charge of the section of computing, and in that capacity is engaged in supervising the calculation of final results from original test data secured in the various sections, but especially in timber tests. Since entering the Forest Service has been connected mostly with timber-testing work, and consequently has become thoroughly familiar with the methods of handling the data secured and their preparation for presentation in reports, publications, etc. It has taken years to acquire this degree of familiarity with the work, and at the present time, when the timber-testing work has been more than quadrupled on account of national-defense problems, his training and experience is invaluable in the analysis, interpretation, and application of the data, much of which have been collected over the past 15 years. Attended School of Mechanical Engineering, Purdue University, two years; similar course in University of Wisconsin, one and a half years; student assistant in timber-testing work at the Purdue Laboratory, two years. Eleven years.

Melvin E. Diemer, Madison, Wis. As chemist in forest products conducts investigations of the chemical properties of woods and other forest products and of the application of the results in such industries as pulp and paper making, hardwood distillation, manufacture of ethyl or grain alcohol from wood waste, preparation of naval stores, treatment of woods to prevent decay or to reduce fire hazard, etc. The war activities of this employee have included a rather wide range of special problems, dealing with improved processes for the manufacture of pulp and paper; efforts to increase the production of such war assentials as acetate of lime resulting from hardwood distillation; the use of various forest products in gas warfare, both offensive and defensive; attempts to increase the production of ethyl or wood alcohol from wood waste in order to reduce the demands for grain; development of waterproof glues in order to permit a better utilization of wood in airplanes, etc. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. A., M. A. (chemistry), and Ph. D. (chemistry). Served for one year as part-time instructor in chemistry in the University of Wisconsin, and for two years was engaged principally in scientific photographic work for University of Wisconsin. Six years seven months.

Matthew E. Dunlap, Madison, Wis. As architectural assistant in forest products, was engaged prior to the war in an investigation of methods of fireproofing wood by means of surface coatings, impregnations, and improved methods of design. Since the war started has been engaged entirely on national-defense problems of immediate importance, chiefly in airplane construction, namely, a study of the relation between the humidity of the air and the moisture content of wood, study of methods of finishing woods to make them resistant to moisture, and study of certain problems involved in the manufacture of wooden screw plugs for shrapnel. The data obtained is being used by certain branches of the Army and Navy. He could not be replaced at this time without serious delay in the work and material loss to the Nation. His work is particularly related to much-needed improvements in the manufacture and finishing of airplane propellers. Graduate College of Architecture, University of Illinois; subsequently employed as architectural engineer in Chicago. One year six months.

Ralph Reginald Randell, Portland, Oreg. As assistant district engineer, is in charge of water-power problems in district 2. In addition, assists the district engineer in matters relating to road construction and the general operations of the branch of engineering, the duties of which have been recently largely increased. Graduate University of Washington, B. S and C. E. Employed as rodman, junior topographer, and junior engineer in United States Geological Survey; entered Forest Service as junior engineer. Four years four and one-half months.

Stanley Skidmore, Madison, Wis. As laboratory aid and engineer, directs the work of a force of 12 men, in which capacity he is responsible for the proper execution of the timber-testing work as outlined by the technical staff. His long experience along this line has made him familiar with the technique of timber testing, the operation and care of testing machines, and the preparation of material for test. Five years six and one-half months.

Ray C. Tuttle, Madison, Wis. As examiner in forest products, conducts important war emergency work at the Madison Laboratory. In order to make the results of these investigations available for use by the Army, the Navy, and other governmental and private agencies, they must be incorporated in reports, which must be technically correct and readily understandable. This requires review by a man who is both a trained engineer and a good writer. The work of technical review which this employee is doing is an essential part of the war investigations at the Madison Laboratory, and, in view of the scarcity of technically trained men, it would be very difficult to secure a properly qualified man to fill his place. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S.; two years in College of Engineering and three years in College of Letters and Science, with special courses in English and journalism. Six months.

BUREAU OF CHEMISTRY.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

Elliott Q. Adams, Washington, D. C. Has been instrumental in designing a number of devices which have proven of great assistance in the study of a method for the manufacture of phthalic anhydride on a large scale. This article is one of the most important intermediates used in the preparation of synthetic dyestuffs. Has also designed certain pieces of apparatus in connection with the study of anthracene, which has been of material assistance. Has collaborated in a study of the absorption of gases by charcoal. The apparatus which Dr. Adams has designed in the latter connection has proven of great service, and it is felt that his work will be of great importance in gas-defensive warfare. Because of his knowledge of optical instruments he has been of much service to the chemists of the Signal Corps. He has also studied several compounds which are of importance in aerophotography and has been able to give the Signal Corps much information of great value along this line. The very important lines of investigation which have been brought to a conclusion by him could not have been completed had he been called in the draft. Graduate in chemical engineering, Massachusetts Institute of Technology. For several years was research assistant with the General Electric Co. Was also teaching fellow one year, assistant one year, and instructor two years in the department of chemistry at the University of California. One year one month.

Joseph A. Ambler, Washington, D. C. Has been engaged upon a very valuable line of work in the study of phthalic anhydride and a study of charcoal, which have a direct relation to work connected with the successful prosecution of the war. Completed chemistry course at the Sheffield Scientific School, receiving degree of E. H. B.; also took special course in chemistry at the Yale Graduate School, receiving degree of Ph. D. Prior to entering department was laboratory assistant three years at the Sheffield Scientific School, professor of chemistry three years at Acadia University, Nova Scotia, and for two months was research chemist for the Standard Aniline Products Co., Wappinger Falls, N. Y. One year five and one-half months.

Howard R. Smith, Washington, D. C. Is now engaged in studies of chlorophyll in connection with our investigations looking to the establishment of a dye industry in this country. Has been engaged most of the time since entering the bureau on the analysis of food products in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act. Has done valuable experimental work in packing canned tomatoes; also made a special study of certain essential oils, and is expert in their examination. Graduate of Case School of Applied Science; B. S. in chemistry. Five years seven months.

Herbert A. Lubs, Washington, D. C. Assists in color investigations, giving special attention to chlorination and dyes. Some of these dyes are of special use in bacteriological work. Graduate Newberry College (South Carolina), B. A.; took four years' post-graduate work in chemistry at Johns Hopkins University, receiving degree of Ph. D. Prior to present appointment was organic chemist for four months in the hygienic laboratory, United States Public Health Service, and for two years was employed as organic chemist in Swiss-cheese investigations in the dairy division, Bureau of Animal Industry. Three years eight and one-half months.

Harry E. Roethe, Washington, D. C. Has charge of investigations in the control of smut-dust explosions and fires which occur in thrashing machines and which have caused serious losses. No one else is available to undertake this work. In addition to the project on smut-dust control in thrashers, Mr. Roethe is engaged in the investigation of the control of dust explosions and fires in cotton gins. Is the only engineer in the bureau who has been called upon to conduct investigations of this nature. This work, as well as that in relation to smut-dust control, is of an emergency character. Graduate University of Wisconsin, College of Agriculture, B. S., majoring in agricultural engineering. Since graduation has had considerable experience and training in connection with machinery and mechanical devices. Has been in charge of gas-engine operation for the Fuller & Johnson Manufacturing Co., Madison, Wis., engaged in the manufacture of gasoline and kerosene engines. Was employed by the International Harvester Co. as traveling farm-machinery expert, engaged in installing, inspecting, and repairing farm machinery and equipment, especially thrashing machines, in the vicinty of Davenport, Iowa. Has had special experience with the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Co. in connection with the manufacture and testing of gas tractors. Eleven and one-half months.

Harold H. Brown, Washington, D. C. Is engaged in the prevention of grain-dust explosions, which has a direct application to the conservation of food, and which is conducted under special emergency appropriations. It is extremely difficult to obtain chemists with the technical knowledge necessary to properly conduct these investigations. Graduate Syracuse University, specializing in chemistry and physics; also obtained Ph. D. degree from University of Minnesota, his special work being in organic industrial chemistry and the chemistry of wood products. Subsequently was employed by the Pittsburgh Glass Co. for one year, taught various branches of special chemistry for three years, and for about nine months did research work in problems of explosibility of grain dust at the Bureau of Mines. Three years nine months.

Hylton R. Brown, Washington, D. C. Engaged in developing inert-gas application as a preventive of dust explosions and fires in grain mills and elevators. This work is of an especially high character and has a direct application to the conservation of foods. Much difficulty is experienced in securing chemists having the requisite technical knowledge to undertake investigations of this character. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S., taking the milling engineering course. Subsequently was employed four years doing general milling work at Williamsburg, Pa.; also spent one year in practical milling work at the Washburn-Crosby Co.'s mill at Buffalo, N. Y. One year one and one-half months.

W. Bruce Mather, Washington, D. C. Engaged in the emergency campaign in the prevention of grain-dust explosions and fires in mills and elevators. This work has a direct relation to the conservation of foods. The bureau has experienced great difficulty in obtaining chemists with the technical knowledge and training necessary to carry this work forward. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S., taking work in milling and mechanical engineering. For two years was high-school teacher in chemistry and mathematics. Was employed for short periods with the engineering department of the Anglo-American Mill Co., Owensboro, Ky., and with the Benton Roller Mills. Seven and one-half months.

Walter F. Clarke, Washington, D. C. Engaged in working on the detection of metals in foods, also assisting in cooperative investigation of steel for tin plate, which, it is anticipated, will result in a considerable saving in tin plate as well as perishable foods. This work has very close connection with the conservation of foods. Graduate Hampden-Sidney College, A. B.; pursued postgraduate studies in chemistry and physics at Johns Hopkins University during six sessions; subsequently did a great deal of special work in chemistry. One year nine months.

Ralph W. Frey, Washington, D. C. Engaged in both research and routine work on leather, paying special attention to the securing of data for the War Department on the serviceability of shoe leather for the American armies. He is the only man in the bureau familiar with all phases of these investigations. Graduate George Washington University, B. S. in chemistry. For a few months he served in the chemical laboratory of the Midvale Works at Philadelphia, Pa. Four years five and one-half months.

Kenneth P. Monroe, Washington, D. C. Engaged in the preparation of invertase for use in the department's experiments on cane sirup. There is no other available chemist in the bureau conversant with this process. Dr. Monroe has also been working in the laboratory on the utilization of vegetable-ivory waste, with particular reference to the production of mannose from it and the preparation of useful derivatives from this mannose. One of these derivatives is mannite, which is much needed in the preparation of an explosive, namely, nitromannite. The experiments already conducted indicate that vegetable-ivory waste offers an extremely fertile field for the production of mannite on a large scale. It is therefore very important that the research work on this subject be carried out as rapidly as possible. The bureau has no other chemist who is entirely conversant with the various lines of work now being carried on by Dr. Monroe. Graduate University of Chicago, B. S. in chemistry; also received Ph. D. degree from Columbia University. Served two years as instructor in chemistry at the Oklahoma State University. One year one and one-half months.

Victor E. Grotlisch, Washington, D. C. Is one of two employees of this bureau trained to conduct research and demonstration work on naval stores. Is the only man familiar with assembling the permanent resin types devised by the bureau. This work is important and necessary. Graduate University of Cincinnati, with degree of chemical engineer. For two years prior to entering department was instructor in general chemistry, physics, and engineering chemistry at the Mechanics' Institute, Rochester, N. Y., and for a short period was chemist for the Eastman Kodak Co. at Rochester. Three years eight months.

Harold J. Humphrey, New York, N. Y. Engaged in various lines of food inspection, particularly in connection with milk. In cooperation with other Government agencies, the bureau is investigating continually the supply of milk and milk products furnished to our own Government and to the allies. Mr. Humphrey has conducted a number of investigations along this line. No one to whom the bureau could turn at the present time could take charge of these assignments. In addition, Mr. Humphrey has collected evidence in connection with cases now pending in court. Should he be drafted into military service it is probable that these cases would have to be dropped, as they could not be prosecuted without the evidence which only Mr. Humphrey could furnish. Graduate Cornell University; had practical experience as a bacteriologist before entering department service. One year.

Julian K. Dale, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the field work in the emergency sirup investigations under the food-production act. This work is very important at the present time and demands a specially qualified investigator to properly carry it on. In several Southern States the production of sirup has been backward because of the technical difficulties involved. One of these is that cane juice, if concentrated too far, will crystallize. It has been Dr. Dale's work to find a practical method to prevent this crystallization, and, on the other hand, to prevent fermentation due to the fact that the cane juice was not concentrated far enough. He has been able to work out a method for overcoming both these difficulties and has been enabled to produce a sirup that is superior in quality to the ordinary commercial product. He has devoted a good deal of time to the demonstration of this method for the purpose of stimulating the production of sugar cane. These methods, if followed, will prevent much of the present loss in sirup manufacture due to the spoilage of a considerable portion of each year's crop. There is no one in the bureau who could immediately take up this work were Dr. Dale to leave. Graduate Princeton University; took three years of graduate work, receiving degree of M. A.; a year later received degree of Ph. D. in chemistry. He also taught chemistry in this university for two years while doing graduate work. Five years.

Fredolf T. Anderson, New York, N. Y. Is engaged in the examination and inspection of foods, which has to do with the detection of adulteration and sophistication. Due to the unsettled conditions and high prices, this work is of special importance at the present time. At least one year's training would be necessary to school a new man to carry on the work which Mr. Anderson is doing. Graduate University of Minnesota, B. A. and C. E. Did considerable practical work in the laboratories of the university while a student. Three years eleven months.

Walter F. Baughman, Washington, D. C. Is engaged chiefly in the examination of various waters under the food and drugs act. It would take a number of months to train a man with equal technical ability in this particular line. Graduate University of Pennsylvania, B. S. Subsequently held a position as chemist for the Ohio Watch Co. Five years eight months.

Victor B. Bonney, Berkeley, Cal. Is engaged in analytical work in connection with food and drugs control, which is of special importance at this time, owing to the fact that under the present high prices the temptation to adulterate and sophisticate food and drugs is greater than during normal times. Graduate Washington State College, B. S. in chemistry. Was instructor in chemistry in this institution one year and spent eight months in the fuel laboratory of the Bureau of Mines at Pittsburgh. Three years seven and one-half months.

John H. Bornmann, Chicago, Ill. Is engaged in food inspection work, and in addition has carried on an extensive investigation of the composition of different corn meals. He is skilled along special lines of investigation. His work is especially important at the present time, having to do primarily with foods. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. and M. S.; also taught chemistry two years at the same institution. Five years seven and one-half months.

Lloyd A. Bosworth, Santurce, P. R. Engaged principally in the food work being conducted by the Bureau of Chemistry. This work is of greater importance than ever at the present time, as an extremely close watch must be kept on the various food products to prevent various forms of adulteration and manipulation. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. in chemistry; took one year of special graduate work in organic chemistry, with research in alkaloids, at the same time teaching organic chemistry; was also a student assistant in general chemistry one year. Prior to entering department service held the position of assistant chemist at the Geneva Experiment Station for two months. Ten months.

Fortune N. Chisolm, Savannah, Ga. Engaged in inspection work in connection with the interstate shipment of foods and drugs. Under present conditions this work is of more importance than ever before. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in chemistry and engineering; also studied pharmacy six months at the Southern College of Pharmacy at Atlanta, Ga. Previous to entering the bureau held the position of Mississippi State feed and fertilizer inspector. One year ten months.

James O. Clarke, Savannah, Ga. Engaged in carrying on investigations of the methods of determining water in foods and feeding stuffs. This is a very important line of work at the present time, due to the fact that such items should receive closer supervision than ever before, as the temptation to adulterate them is greater because of the scarcity and high prices of these commodities. Graduate Georgia School of Technology, B. S. in engineering chemistry. For four years was assistant State chemist of Georgia. Ten and one-half months.

Charles W. Crawford, Washington, D. C. Was engaged in the examination of food and drug products at the New Orleans Laboratory of the Bureau of Chemistry, but on account of his special knowledge of the problems arising under the food and drugs act has been transferred to the office of the chief of this bureau to assist in the handling of correspondence arising under the act as well as to take care of interstate cases instituted thereunder. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; also took one year's postgraduate work, receiving degree of M. S. Subsequently was assistant chemist and instructor in chemistry at this institution for one year, assistant State chemist and instructor in chemistry at the Washington State College for one year, agriculturist at Apache four years, and chemist with the International Refining Co. in Oklahoma one year. One year four months.

Herbert W. Daudt, Washington, D. C. Engaged in research work of a high quality as applied to methods of determination of nitrogen; also executive work in assisting in the operation of one of the laboratories of the bureau. Attended Washington University two years; also pursued studies in chemistry at Harvard University, receiving degrees of B. S. and M. S. Subsequently was employed as analytical chemist by the Mallinckrodt Chemical Works one year and was associated with the Commonwealth Edison Co., of Chicago, as analytical and research chemist part of a year; was also instructor at the University of North Dakota four years. Five years one-half month.

Fred L. Elliott, New Orleans, La. Engaged in the examination of food and drug products. This work is of unusual importance at the present time on account of the close scrutiny necessary to detect adulteration and sophistication of these products. Graduate Louisiana State University Agricultural and Mechanical College; took one and a half year's postgraduate work in chemistry at Cornell University; also one summer's postgraduate course in organic and electrical chemistry at University of Chicago. Subsequently was instructor in chemistry in the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College for two and one-half years and one summer was assistant chemist in the Mississippi State Laboratory. Five years.

Jacob Feldbaum, Chicago, Ill. Conducts food analysis, factory inspection, and other special investigations. Is skilled in special methods of investigation. His work has to do with the detection of frauds in food products, which assumes special importance at the present time. Graduate College of the City of New York, B. S. in chemistry; also pursued postgraduate research work at same college two years. Four years.

Leslie W. Ferris, Takoma Park, Md. Engaged in research work on dairy products, devising a method for the chemical detection of the use of "neutralizers" in butter. From present indications it would appear that he has a method that will not fail to detect these "neutralizers." Such work is of great importance to the Bureau of Chemistry, especially at this time when, because of scarcity and high prices of food products, manufacturers are tempted to manipulate and sophisticate these articles. Graduate Haverford College, B. A., majoring in chemistry; took one year's postgraduate work in chemistry at same institution. For about five months was chemist in the laboratory of the Dupont Powder Works. Five years five months.

Abraham J. Finks, Washington, D. C. Engaged in special work in the analysis and preparation of protein. Were he removed from this work, it would take at least one year to train a new man to take his place, even if it were possible to obtain a chemist of the necessary qualifications. There are few men in this country engaged in this line of work. Graduate Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Since entering the department has received degree of B. S. in chemistry from the George Washington University. Two years one month.

Carl D. Geidel, Minneapolis, Minn. Engaged in the analysis and investigation of foods. At present, due to the unsettled condition of the food market, the products being offered for sale require closer attention and supervision than ever before. Graduate University of Wisconsin, M. S., taking course in food and scientific chemistry; did postgraduate work at that institution. Afterwards was assistant in chemistry and bacteriology, State Laboratory of Hygiene, Wisconsin; and was appointed bacteriologist and chemist for the Wisconsin State Dairy and Food Commission. In his chemical course at the University of Wisconsin specialized in food analysis under one of the best food chemists in the country. One year.

Thomas G. Gleason, New York, N. Y. Conducts special investigations relating to the occurrence and determination of heavy metals in foods. It would require not less than two years of training to develop a new man to take up this work. There is no other chemist now available for work of the character performed by Mr. Gleason. Graduate Harvard University, B. S., specializing in chemistry and mathematics. Four years ten and one-half months.

Charles B. Gnadinger, Chicago, Ill. Engaged in general analytical work on food products, paying special attention to imported products. This work to-day requires greater accuracy and closer investigation than ever before. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in industrial chemistry. Six years two months.

Raymond Hertwig, Berkeley, Cal. Engaged upon analytical work in connection with the enforcement of the Federal food and drugs act. This work is of especial importance at the present time because the high price of foods makes it a great temptation to adulterate them. It is therefore exceedingly important that men trained in food analysis be retained upon that work. At the same time it is very difficult under present conditions to replace these men. Graduate Purdue University, B. S.; took some postgraduate work at Chicago University, specializing in chemistry. For two years was instructor in chemistry at Colorado Agricultural College. Four years seven and one-half months.

Joseph M. Humble, Bellevue, Ky. Assists in the analysis of foods in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act. Graduate State College of Kentucky, B. S. in industrial chemistry. For several years after graduation was engaged as a commercial chemist in various industries. Four years eight and one-half months.

John B. Hummer, Baltimore, Md. Is one of the well-trained and experienced food and drug inspectors of the bureau engaged in the enforcement of the food and drugs act. At the present time it is practically impossible to secure experienced inspectors. It is necessary to take green men and train them to the work. Because of the importance of efficient inspection work, it is highly important that the bureau retain as many of its experienced men as possible. Mr. Hummer has collected evidence in connection with cases now pending in court. Should he be drafted into military service, it is probable that these cases would have to be dropped, as they could not be prosecuted without the evidence which only he could furnish. Seven years eight and one-half months.

Walter E. Kirby, New York, N. Y. Engaged chiefly upon the inspection and examination of imported foods. Also conducts a line of original work upon the detection of refined olive oil in virgin olive oil, in which he has been very successful. This work has a direct connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act. Graduate Princeton University, B. S. and M. A., doing research work in inorganic chemistry; was also a lecture table assistant in college. Five years nine months.

Henry A. Lepper, Washington, D. C. Engaged in the practical application of a method for the detection of spoilage in tomato products. Also makes analyses of food samples for Government purchase. This work is very essential in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act and in checking the purity of food products purchased by the Government. Graduate George Washington University, B. S. Served as assistant chemist in the United States Geological Survey prior to present appointment. Four years six and one-half months.

Herman Lind, Brooklyn, N. Y. Is an experienced food and drug inspector, thoroughly familiar with trade conditions in the vicinity of New York. Possesses a knowledge of this field which can not be found in any other available person. Has developed and figures as a prospective witness in a number of pending court cases and is developing others. Should he be drafted into military service it is probable that these cases would have to be dropped, as they could not be prosecuted without the evidence which only Mr. Lind could furnish. Seven years six and one-half months.

Robert S. Hollingshead, San Francisco, Cal. Assists in the analysis of samples at the San Francisco laboratory in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act, and Mr. Hollingshead is one of the most experienced chemists in the western district. Graduate Cornell University, A. B.; did postgraduate work at that institution one year. For two years was assistant at Cornell University filtration plant, for a short time assistant chemist in the food laboratory of the New York State Department of Agriculture, member of the faculty of the University of Georgia two years, and assistant chemist at the Florida Experiment Station. Four years one month.

Hugo G. Loesch, Buffalo, N. Y. Assists as food analyst in the enforcement of the food and drugs act, for which work he is especially well adapted. Graduate Columbia College, B. S.; attended School of Chemistry of Columbia University two years and received degree of chemist. Before entering the service of the bureau was employed as chemist in connection with the manufacture of dyestuffs. Nine months.

Howard E. Palmer, Washington, D. C. Engaged upon research work requiring the highest degree of exactness and ability. It is aimed that the work shall produce methods of practical use in food work. The results of this research will be very valuable in the enforcement of the food and drugs act and in food conservation. Graduate Yale University, B. A., in chemistry and allied sciences; attended the Yale Graduate School three years, specializing in chemistry and receiving degree of Ph. D. Was employed for two years as assistant chemist by a commercial concern, and was engaged as assistant chemist in the Bureau of Standards two years previous to entering the service of the Bureau of Chemistry. Three years ten months.

Homer D. Poore, New York, N. Y. Engaged in analysis of citrus fruits; is also doing considerable work in connection with the investigation of citrus by-products. This work is of particular importance at this time when every effort is being made to increase and conserve the food supply. Graduate in the chemistry course of the Worcester Polytechnic Institute, obtaining degree of B. S. Six years.

Sidney F. Sherwood, Washington, D. C. Engaged upon work in connection with the application of the food and drugs act to sugar products. He has had long experience in this work. Graduate George Washington University, B. S. Fifteen years five months.

Edward E. Smith, Washington, D. C. Is performing experiments upon the practical and scientific effects of nitrogen oxide in the bleaching of flour. This work is of special importance in connection with the enforcement of the food-and-drugs act. Much of the work that Mr. Smith has done would have to be repeated should he leave the service of the bureau. Graduate University of Idaho, B. S. in chemical engineering. Was engaged as a commercial chemist for approximately one year before entering the service of the department. Three years ten and one-half months.

Wendell Vincent, Seattle, Wash. Has charge of the Seattle food-and-drug inspection station of the Bureau of Chemistry. The services of such men are most urgently needed in connection with the enforcement of the food-and-drugs act, and never more so than at the present time. Mr. Vincent has collected evidence in connection with cases now pending in court, which cases would probably have to be dropped should he leave the service, as they could not be prosecuted without the evidence which only Mr. Vincent could furnish. Graduate University of Colorado, B. A. Three years three and one-half months.

John B. Wilson, Washington, D. C. Engaged in chemical work relative to the proper preparation and preservation of foods. His education, training, and other qualifications especially fit him for this work. A new chemist entering the bureau to undertake the duties now performed by Mr. Wilson would require months of training. Graduate Ohio State University, B. A., specializing in chemistry. Six years eleven months.

Milton G. Wolf, New York, N. Y. Is stationed at the New York laboratory of the Bureau of Chemistry and has had several years' training in the inspection of imported foods, particularly those requiring examination as to conditions, such as presence or absence of filth, mold, and various other forms of decomposition. Has become an expert in this line of work and it would not be possible to secure a new man having the same degree of proficiency. It would require not less than one year of intensive training to enable an experienced man to fill his place with any degree of satisfaction. The work Mr. Wolf is doing is of greater importance than ever before, and there is a greater volume of this work at the New York laboratory than at any other place in the country. Graduate New York University, B. S. in chemical engineering. During two summers was associated with the National Lead Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., as assistant chemist. Four years seven months.

Erich W. Schwartze, Washington, D. C. Engaged in carrying on investigations that are of direct importance in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act. Has been studying the action of sodium citrate, a substance largely used for the anticoagulant in the transfusion of blood. Has also been studying the action of a number of other drugs of importance. Graduate University of Illinois, A. B.; also University of Chicago, M. D. Was instructor in physiology and pharmacology at Bellevue Hospital Medical College two years. One year eleven months.

J. Lewis Clay, East Orange, N. J. Is an experienced drug analyst and has expert knowledge in the analysis of patent medicines. The degree of proficiency attained by Mr. Clay can only be found in men possessing a peculiar aptitude for that kind of work, in addition to several years' experience. The bureau has been greatly handicapped because a number of older men experienced in drug analysis have recently left the service. The field stations have particularly suffered in this respect. These field stations are called upon regularly to make examinations of imported and interstate shipments of drug products, and this work can only be carried on by trained analysts. Mr. Clay is assigned to the New York station, which has a larger number of samples to examine than any other station of the bureau. Graduate School of Pharmacy, Northwestern University; also pursued work in chemistry at a private school and took one summer's course in analytical chemistry at the Armour Institute of Technology; in addition, took several academic courses. Prior to entering department did considerable commercial work in the manufacturing of pharmaceutical substances; was an assistant in chemical laboratories; also instructor in chemistry. One year one month.

Willis H. Cole, Brooklyn, N. Y. Engaged in the examination of imported and interstate drug products in the New York laboratory. It is very difficult, if not impossible, to secure competent drug analysts. There is no civil-service register at the present time for chemists having the necessary qualifications for this work. Graduate Polytechnic Institute (Brooklyn); B. S. in chemistry. Prior to present appointment was chemist for Moller & Schumann Co., of Brooklyn, N. Y., varnish makers. Seven months.

Clare O. Ewing, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the pharmacognosy laboratory of the Bureau of Chemistry. Has assisted in collecting data for the establishing of standards for crude drugs and spices and data used as subjects for the revision of United States Pharmacopœia IX and Circular 19, Standards of Purity for Food Products. Has served as referee on the testing of chemical reagents for the past three years for the Association of Official Agricultural Chemists. The work he performs is important, and there is nobody in the bureau as well qualified as Mr. Ewing to take his place. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in pharmacy; also took one year's postgraduate work at same university, obtaining degree of M. S. in chemistry. Four years nine and one-half months.

Ernest H. Grant, Elmhurst, N. Y. Engaged in the analysis of food and drug products, with which work he has had very wide experience, being especially skilled in the analysis of drug preparations, such as proprietary medicines. During the past year has prepared a set of methods for the detection of medical purgative drugs. The work being done by Mr. Grant is of greater importance than ever before because of the fact that, due to the high prices and scarcity of these products, the temptation for firms to adulterate or manipulate their products is greater than it has been in the past. It is necessary, therefore, for the proper safeguarding of the public that extremely close attention be given to food and drug products entering the markets today. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in chemical engineering. Was assistant chemist for the Merrell Chemical Co. one summer. Eight years.

Carl H. Lowry, New York, N. Y. Assists in drug analyses. Expert drug analysts are extremely necessary to the adequate and effective prosecution of the bureau's work, and under present conditions they are exceedingly hard to find. Graduate Ohio State University, college of pharmacy, B. S. C. in pharmacy. Ten months.

Samuel Palkin, Washington, D. C. Assists in the drug laboratory of the bureau, doing considerable research work along special lines, as well as regular routine work. The work performed in the drug laboratory is of greater importance now than ever before, because, on account of the high prices and scarcity of drugs on the market, the temptation to adulterate and manipulate the drugs is so great that constant examination and supervision is required to protect the public. Was student one year at New York University, school of applied science, chemical-engineering course; graduate Hill University, Ph. B., taking course in chemistry; also received degree of M. S. at George Washington University, majoring in chemistry; Ph. D. at same university. Seven years five months.

Clarence D. Wright, Washington, D. C. Devotes his time chiefly to the analyses of drug products arising under the food-and-drugs act and to some Post Office Department cases. Graduate Clark College (Worcester), A. B., majoring in physics and chemistry; also received degrees of A. M. and of Ph. D. from same institution, specializing in chemistry. For one year was assistant in chemistry at Clark College and for a year was research assistant to one of the professors there. Was also connected with the research laboratory of the General Electric Co., of Schenectady, N. Y., one year. Six years six months.

Carl B. Stone, Washington, D. C. Engaged in the analysis of insecticides and fungicides in connection with the enforcement of the insecticide act. It is extremely important that the work in connection with the enforcement of this act be carried on with more than ordinary vigilance during the period of the war, on account of the temptation on the part of manufacturers to adulterate their insecticides and fungicides, due to the difficulty of obtaining the necessary ingredients and to their high prices. This matter becomes doubly important because of the great necessity under the existing conditions for increasing crop production. Graduate Bethany College (Lindsborg, Kans.), A. B.; also took postgraduate course in chemistry at Nebraska University, during which time was also assistant in the chemical laboratories and instructor in general chemistry. Prior to entering department service was assistant chemist with the Great Western Sugar Co., of Lovell, Wyo. Seven months.

Milo L. Somerville, Hyattsville, Md. Engaged in the analysis of insecticides and fungicides in connection with the enforcement of the insecticide act. It is especially important that the work in connection with the enforcement of this act be carried on with more than ordinary vigilance during the period of the war, on account of the temptation on the part of manufacturers to adulterate their insecticides and fungicides, due to the difficulty in obtaining the necessary ingredients and to their high prices. Graduate Indiana University, A. B., specializing in chemistry. For approximately one year was chemist for the Oliver Iron Mining Co. Seven months.

Charles M. Smith, Washington, D. C. Is an expert insecticide and fungicide chemist and has been engaged in most of the department's research work in connection with lead arsenate, which at the present time is the most important insecticide for leaf-eating insects. Is now working on the chemistry of the calcium arsenate and has obtained much new and valuable information relative thereto. The calcium arsenates have only recently been developed as insecticides and promise to open up an entirely new field in the use of arsenical sprays. This is of particular importance at this time, since it permits the use of lime in place of lead, which not only is high priced but is much needed in the manufacture of munitions. Graduate University of Pennsylvania, B. S. Before entering the service of the department was employed as chemist in the Philadelphia Storage Battery Co. Seven years two months.

Elmer J. Nealon, Washington, D. C. Performs chemical work in connection with the enforcement of the insecticide act. He has had long and varied experience in this work. It would require several years to train a man so that he would be equally valuable to the bureau. Graduate Ohio State University, B. A. For a short time previous to entering the department was assistant chemist in the water-purifying works at Columbus, Ohio. Five years six months.

Edward L. Griffin, Washington, D. C. Is the most experienced organic chemist in the bureau, having to do with insecticides and disinfectants, and performs the analytical work in connection with the most complicated products. Is the analyst witness in a number of important cases now pending before the courts, which would have to be dropped in case Mr. Griffin severed his connection with this bureau. Graduate University of Kansas, A. B., B. S. in chemical engineering, and M. S., major work being in organic chemistry. For two years was instructor in chemistry at this institution. Four years eleven and one-half months.

Henry C. Bowman, Indianapolis, Ind. Engaged in investigations relating to the handling of turkeys and chickens in the Imperial Valley of California. This is a most important and relatively new source of meat supply, the work being a part of the special emergency food-production campaign. Graduate University of California, B. S. in agriculture, specializing in animal husbandry; also took a graduate course at this institution one term. Thirteen and one-half months.

Arden D. Greenlee, Indianapolis, Ind. Has charge of special emergency field work in connection with demonstration poultry and egg packing houses. This work has a very direct bearing upon the meat supply of this country, and Mr. Greenlee is the only man available who is qualified by experience and training to supervise it. Completed a course in chemistry with the International Correspondence Schools; did two years' work at the Ohio State University College of Arts, Philosophy, and Science, with electives in chemistry. Was superintendent's assistant at the Ohio State University one year. Took considerable work in chemistry and graduated with the degree of B. S. at the University of Pennsylvania. Nine years six months.

Edwin C. Heinsohn, Indianapolis, Ind. Is investigator in poultry and egg handling. His knowledge is of great value at the present time in helping to save losses due to defective transportation facilities. It would be impossible to replace Mr. Heinsohn without material loss to the work now in progress, because it is impossible for a man to acquire the information that he now has except by experience in the service. The work in which he is engaged is in direct line of increasing the production and conserving the food supplies of the country. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Three years.

Ralph L. Skinner, West Lafayette, Ind. Assists in poultry and egg handling investigations and demonstration, being engaged at present on work in southern California, because of the pressing need for the prevention of loss of a large crop of turkeys now being marketed there. This work is of great importance at the present time. Graduate Purdue University, B. S., specializing in poultry. One year two and one-half months.

Howard R. Hill, Philadelphia, Pa. Engaged on war-emergency work in connection with the better handling, transportation, and storage of fish. It is necessary to have a man trained along fundamental scientific lines to conduct the broad and effective campaign for better methods in fish handling. It was difficult to find a man suited for this work, as men with training in this particular line of work are extremely scarce. Mr. Hill is the only man in the bureau engaged in this line of investigation. Attended University of Chicago two years; graduated from Carroll College, A. B., attended University of Illinois Agricultural College one term; received M. S. degree in zoology at University of Illinois Graduate School after one year's study, his major work having to do with fish parasites and diseases. Seven and one-half months.

George D. Horton, Philadelphia, Pa. Engaged in bacteriological work in connection with fish investigations. Present knowledge of the scientific fundamentals for the good handling of fish is crude. Previous to entering this bureau Mr. Horton had engaged in lines of work which gave him an unusually good training. He is now engaged in investigations which promise to be of great economical importance in the utilization of fish resources. This line of work is entirely new. Graduate, Connecticut Agricultural College, B. S., in agriculture; also received degree of M. S. in bateriology at Yale University. Nine months.

Herbert B. Switzer, Chicago, Ill. Is making a special study of the manufacture of powdered milk products, which are used in large amounts by the Army. As a result of this study it has been possible to bring official action looking to the correction of certain serious abuses which are shown to exist. Mr. Switzer is the only bacteriologist of the bureau assigned to the territory in the Central States in connection with the enforcement of the food and drugs act. A very great part of the food production and manufacture of the country originates in his territory. Ten and one-half months.

Benjamin S. Levine, Washington, D. C. Engaged in research and testing work on the mildew-proofing of fabrics and leather. In addition to the value of this work to the farmer, it is of special importance to the Nation at this time in connection with the preservation of materials used as tents, wagon covers, clothing, shoes, and many other articles used by the military branches of the Government. Mr. Levine is the only man in the bureau familiar with this work. Graduate Trinity College (Hartford, Conn.), B. S.; also received degrees of M. S. and Ph. D. from Brown University. Prior to entering department was health bacteriologist in Brown University, industrial bacteriologist for a Providence chemist, and teacher of textile chemistry in the textile department of the Rhode Island School of Designs. Two years ten months.

Victor Birckner, Washington, D. C. Has devoted his time to the study of obscure organic products in foodstuffs and to the cultural side of the investigations of the production of glycerine by fermentation through yeast. There is no one else in the bureau who could carry on this work. Graduate University of Leipzig and University of California. Subsequently was connected with the Institute of fermentology in Chicago for one year. Three years two and one-half months.

Harry L. Lourie, New York, N. Y. Is the only experienced micro-analyst now connected with the analytical staff at the bureau's New York laboratory. Has completed a large series of analyses, which involve possible court actions, in connection with which his testimony will undoubtedly be frequently required within the next year or two. Graduate Harvard University, B. S. Previous to entering department was assistant in chemistry at the Central Evening High School at Boston and was employed for a considerable time as chemist of the Carnegie Steel Co., Youngstown, Ohio. Eight years eight months.

Walter K. Makemson, Washington, D. C. Engaged in the micro-analysis of foods, this work having to do primarily with canned goods. He has been specially trained for the work. Its importance is apparent because of its direct connection with the production and conservation of foods. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. and M. S. Attended University of Michigan one year. Nine and one-half months.

Ernest E. Stanford, Washington, D. C. Has assisted in the study of the morphology and chemistry of the cotton plant, in the inspection of crude drugs, and in microchemical analyses; has also assisted in the general microphotographic work, in which he has been very successful. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S.; did graduate work at the North Carolina College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts for two years, receiving degree of M. S. Was assistant in botany and plant pathology and bacteriology at the North Carolina Agricultural Station for two terms. One year three months.

BUREAU OF MARKETS.

GRAIN SAMPLERS.

The proper enforcement of the grain-standards act requires that the Department of Agriculture supervise the grading of grain by licensed grain inspectors. Grain inspection is a highly technical work, and only a limited number of men are qualified from the standpoint of experience to properly perform grain-sampling duties. At the present time the Bureau of Markets is in need of some 72 grain samplers, in addition to those now on the rolls, to efficiently carry out the requirements of the grain-standards act. The civil-service register for grain samplers has only a limited number of men available, and of this limited number a large proportion are either in class 1 of the draft or are not suitable for the work. It has been the experience in the enforcement of the grain-standards act that grain samplers can not be properly fitted to do the work without considerable training. In addition to the 72 samplers needed at the present time, the bureau is constantly receiving resignations from the grain-sampler force. To lose any of the experienced samplers who are now on the roll would very seriously interfere with the efficient enforcement of the grain-standards act. The grain-standards act at present is performing an especially important function in connection with the regulations of the Food Administration Grain Corporation, which requires that all transactions in wheat must be on the basis of the Federal grades.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

William D. Bennett, Toledo, Ohio. Graduate Cornell College of Agriculture, B. S. Was raised on a farm where grain was one of the main products. One year.

John E. Bohn. St. Louis, Mo. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. Took postgraduate work at the institution, specializing in marketing and rural organization work. During summer vacations was employed by the St. Louis Merchants' Exchange as grain sampler, his duties including the sampling of cars of grain at elevators, mills, and railroad yards, and noting and recording of the condition thereof. Ten months.

Willis B. Combs, Boston, Mass. Graduate Cornell University College of Agriculture, B. S., making a special study of moisture determination and the grading and handling of grain. One year four months.

Francis A. Cumings, Minneapolis, Minn. Was employed three years by the E. H. Pugh Sampling Bureau at Cass Lake, Minn., and for five years as grain sampler by the Minnesota State grain inspection department. One year three months.

Hazen P. English, Kansas City, Mo. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, specializing in farm crops and grain judging. Was reared on a farm and has had practical experience in the handling of grain. Ten months.

John H. Frazier, Detroit, Mich. Prior to entering department service had seven years' experience in sampling and grading of grain, being familiar with the details necessary for making moisture tests and for keeping records of samples and inspections. One year three months.

Harold S. Heilman, New York, N. Y. Before entering department service had four years' experience as a deputy grain inspector with the Buffalo Corn Exchange, being familiar with the details of handling, sampling, inspecting, and grading of grain, and had experience in the methods obtaining in transferring grain from cars and boats to elevators and from elevators to transportation lines. One year three months.

Wayne D. Mathews, Fort Worth, Tex. Previous to present appointment was employed by the Kansas State grain inspection department, first as inspector's helper, later as grain sampler, being engaged in securing samples of grain at railroad yards, steamship docks, warehouses, and elevators, in noting the condition and quality of grain, in keeping records and making reports thereon, and in making analyses of samples in the laboratory. Nine months.

Walter J. Morgan, Salt Lake City, Utah. Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, B. S. During summer vacations was employed upon grain farms. Ten months.

John F. Mueller, Indianapolis, Ind. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Minnesota, B. S., specializing in agronomy, farm crops, weeds, and seed testing and grain judging. Ten months.

Herbert E. Nelson, Duluth, Minn. For four years previous to present appointment was employed by the grain inspection department of the Minneapolis Railway and Warehouse commission as grain sampler, his duties including the sampling of loads of grain at railroad yards, mills, elevators, and steamship docks, preparation of reports, and keeping of records. Ten months.

Thomas J. O'Brien, Milwaukee, Wis. Prior to appointment in the department was employed by the Illinois State grain inspection department as grain sampler, his duties including the sampling of cars of grain at mills, elevators, railroad yards, and steamship docks, noting the condition and quality of the grain, making records and reports, and conducting laboratory moisture determinations. Ten months.

David E. Overlock, Chicago, Ill. For two years before entering department service was employed by the Illinois State grain inspection department as grain sampler and grain helper; his duties consisting of the sampling of cars of grain at mills, elevators, railroad yards, and steamship docks, noting condition and quality thereof, keeping records, making reports, conducting of moisture determinations in the laboratory, making separations of damaged grain, and investigating other factors involved in the grading of grain. Ten months.

William A. Pahl, Minneapolis, Minn. For five years prior to present appointment was employed by the Omaha Grain Exchange, first as helper and sampler, later as grain inspector. His duties consisted of sampling cars of grain at mills, elevators, and railroad yards, and assisting with inspection work and laboratory analyses. Ten months.

Bertram J. Rogers, Toledo, Ohio. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture, where his work has included special studies in growing, grading, and handling grain. He was reared on a farm and has had much practical experience along agricultural lines; also two years' experience as a public-school teacher. One year four months.

William D. Smith, New Orleans, La. Before taking up present duties had five years' experience in the handling and shipping of grain with H. I. Baldwin & Co., Decatur, Ill. One year three months.

James P. Stanfield, Louisville, Ky. Before appointment in this bureau was employed for five years by the West Tennessee Grain Co. at Obion, Tenn., as bookkeeper and local grain buyer; his duties including the buying of grain from farmers in that territory, its sampling, inspecting, and grading. Ten months.

Gregory L. Straight, Kansas City, Mo. Prior to entering the department had five years' experience in the sampling, handling, and inspection of grain, part of which time was with the Kansas City Board of Trade; was also connected with the Kansas State grain inspection department. One year three months.

Ralph W. Taylor, Louisville, Ky. Previous to present appointment had four and one-half years' experience as manager in the buying, receiving, and shipping of grain at cooperative warehouses and one and one-half years' experience as sampler in the Illinois State inspection department. One year three months.

Carl A. Waalen, Minneapolis, Minn. Attended Carlton College and Colorado College for two years, taking an engineer's course, specializing in botany, soils, and wood. Two years prior to appointment in this department was employed by the Burdick Sampling Co. at Glenwood, Minn., and by the Duluth Board of Trade as grain sampler; his duties consisting of the sampling of cars of grain at mills, elevators, and railroad yards, noting its condition, and making records and reports thereon. Ten months.

James W. Wesson, Nashville, Tenn. Graduate University of Kentucky, A. B. and B. S., specializing in agricultural economics and marketing investigations. For one year prior to appointment in this department was employed as assistant instructor in agricultural resources and marketing investigations at the University of Kentucky. Ten months.

John W. Wetz, New York, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. in agriculture. Was reared on a farm and has had active practical experience in the harvesting, handling, storing, and shipping of grain and other farm products. Nine months.

John J. Ahearn, Cincinnati, Ohio. Has charge of the Cincinnati branch office of the Bureau of Markets in connection with the market news service on fruits and vegetables. His knowledge of railroad affairs has made him particularly valuable in the Cincinnati market, as this is an important diversion point. Previous to present employment was for several years with the Pennsylvania Railroad in New York City, handling fruit and vegetable deliveries and assisting with the auction sales on their piers. One year nine months.

Harold C. Albin, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Assistant in handling and transportation investigations with fruits and vegetables. His withdrawal from this work would seriously interfere with the emergency food conservation campaign now under way. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. Previous to present appointment had been connected with the Bureau of Chemistry for approximately two years, engaged in handling and transportation work, particularly as relates to poultry, eggs, etc. Three years.

Frank W. Allen, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Is engaged in a campaign to increase the storage facilities for fruits and vegetables in Colorado, in cooperation with the State marketing office and the State council of defense. There is urgent need for this work in Colorado and other States, and it is practically impossible to secure men with adequate training and experience along these lines. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. in agriculture; three years' research work Iowa State College. Before his present appointment was assistant professor in the Washington State Agricultural College in charge of fruit handling and marketing work. Eight months.

William F. Allewelt, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Has been rendering practical service in demonstrating to growers and shippers in Michigan the value and requirements of the potato grades. Other States have asked for assistance from the department in conducting work of a similar character to that performed in Michigan. Only men with special training can successfully conduct such work. He is also rendering service in connection with the enforcement of the standard-container act. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in horticulture. Prior to present appointment had several years' experience in growing and handling vegetables. One year two months.

George H. Baston, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the investigational laboratory in which the acidity determinations of the grain-standardization project are carried on, and is responsible for outlining, directing, and supervising the work of the force employed thereunder. His work has included an investigation to determine the practicability of substituting in part flours made from grains other than wheat for the wheat flour. He has participated in all the main activities of the grain-standardization project, both field and laboratory, and has assisted in formulating standard grades for both corn and wheat. He also has supervision of the investigational work relating to the bleaching of oats commercially, and at present is assisting in perfecting the tentative standards for oats. Graduate George Washington University, having specialized in chemistry. Prior to present appointment was employed four years in the Bureau of Chemistry on investigational work relating to the chemistry of cereals and milling and baking tests of wheat and flour; detailed to the Forest Service one season to make special field investigations relative to the composition of soils in the national forests of the Northwest, and was assistant in grain standardization, Bureau of Plant Industry, for five years. Eleven years.

Harold S. Bird, Washington, D. C. (Spends considerable time in the field.) Engaged in investigations relating primarily to methods of car loading and transportation of perishable food products, the results of which to date indicate serious mistakes in methods of loading these products in different sections of the country, resulting in heavy loss in transit and at market terminals. It is urgently necessary for the effectiveness of this work, which is essentially connected with the war work, that these investigations should be continued and extended. It is also equally important that the demonstrations of the results secured be given the widest publicity. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S., specialized in horticulture and pomology. Three years.

Ralph H. Brown, Washington, D. C. Has had considerable grain experience in an executive capacity, and is now giving assistance in the rendering of decisions relating to questions involved in the enforcement of the grain-standards act. It is important that the grain-supervision work be maintained on an efficient basis, especially in view of the bureau's cooperation with the Food Administration Grain Corporation, and this can be done only through the retention of trained and experienced men. Nine months.

John A. Burgess, Pittsburgh, Pa. Has charge of the Pittsburgh branch office of the Bureau of Markets. He not only collects information regarding conditions in the live stock and dressed meat trade in Pittsburgh, but releases the market reports of the bureau in the territory served by the branch office in Pittsburgh. Graduate Ottumwa (Iowa) Public State College, B. S. Prior to entering the Government service was employed in a large meat-packing plant at Ottumwa, Iowa, where he acquired experience in marketing dressed meats and meat products, qualifying him to cope with the reporting conditions in the wholesale dressed-meat trade in the large meat-consuming cities. Nine and one-half months.

Charles A. Burmeister, Washington, D. C. Engaged in work in connection with the market news service on live stock and meats. This market report service consists in furnishing telegraphic reports of live-stock receipts and prices at Chicago, which information is distributed by leased wire to the bureau's various local offices and is used exclusively by the telegraph companies and press associations in their commercial news services. He is also regularly engaged in investigational work connected with the live stock, slaughtering and meat packing industry of the country. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College. Subsequent to graduation and prior to entering the Government service was engaged in the live-stock industry as manager of his father's ranch in Texas, where he gained a thorough knowledge of the industry in the range States. Seven years.

Earl A. Chenault, Richmond, Va. Has charge of the Richmond, Va., office of the grain and hay reporting market service of the Bureau of Markets. This is war emergency work, its main object being to put the producers of grain and hay who have surpluses of such stocks in touch with dealers and others desiring them. Reports are issued biweekly, giving in detail the amounts of grain and hay on hand, the amounts shipped in and out of each county, and the carload prices. These reports are distributed by mail to all people who express a desire to receive them. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in agriculture. One year ten months.

Doak B. Carrick, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Engaged primarily in emergency work in connection with the handling of apples and other fruits and vegetables injured by freezing in transit, with a view to reducing to a minimum the losses of these products in transportation. Also engaged in developing methods of handling which apply to the successful storage of perishable food products by preservation in freezing storage. These investigations relate directly to the conservation of fruits and vegetables, and have a particular war bearing at the present time. To a considerable extent they provide the basis for other lines of work connected with the storage project which relate primarily to the refrigeration of these products, both in transportation and storage. Graduate Wake Forest College, (North Carolina), A. B.; also received degree of Ph. D. from the New York State College of Agriculture. In connection with investigations for his doctor's thesis, made an extended study of the effect of freezing on plant tissues. Seven months.

James H. Collins, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Has filled varied and important assignments in connection with the surveys of fruit and vegetable markets conducted by the Bureau of Markets, and the inauguration and development of the market-news service covering these products, including the conduct of special investigations. During the past year has represented the department in a comprehensive study of the marketing problems of Maricopa County, Ariz., conducted by this bureau in cooperation with the University of Arizona. As a result of this survey definite action will be taken looking to the stabilizing of agriculture in the valley. After the completion of this survey in Arizona, Mr. Collins was placed in immediate charge of the bureau's investigation of transporting farm products by motor truck. The motor-truck transportation problem is of especial importance at the time. Graduate University of Arkansas, B. S., specializing in agriculture. Three years nine months.

Joshua M. Chilton, Washington, D. C. Assists in the enforcement of the provisions of the United States grain-standards act in Washington and at such points in the field as his services may be required. On account of his experience in handling the varieties of grain which pass through the markets in the South and Southwest, was at first detailed to act in charge of the twenty-fifth Federal grain-supervision district, with headquarters at Memphis, Tenn. Memphis is one of the gateways to the large consuming area of the Southeast. There is inspected in this market approximately 25,000,000 bushels of grain annually. The importance of carrying on the work in connection with the grain-standards act is fully recognized. Prior to present appointment was in the employ of the Missouri State inspection department for nine years; for two years supervising the weighing and handling of grain at terminal elevators, thereby gaining an intimate knowledge of the methods employed in handling, cleaning, clipping, mixing, and grading all kinds of grain at the large elevators; and seven years in sampling and making analyses necessary to determine the true grade of grain. Subsequently was employed one year by a grain concern in St. Louis as grain salesman on the floor of the merchants' exchange, and during a part of the year as its traveling representative. His experience has included the classification and grading of almost every variety of grain and has afforded him an opportunity to become thoroughly familiar with the grain industry. Nine months.

Saxon D. Clark, St. Louis, Mo. Has charge of the St. Louis branch office of the Bureau of Markets, in connection with its news reports on fruits and vegetables. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College. Prior to entering department had one year of practical experience in the Maine Apple Growers' Association. One year two months.

Charles F. Creswell, Washington, D. C. (Spends considerable time in the field.) Has charge of the cottonseed activities of this bureau, being the only representative of the bureau who has been in close touch with the various phases of the cottonseed industry. For the past year has been engaged in economic investigations conducted for the purpose of eliminating the large amount of foreign matter which annually is transported and purchased with cotton seed, and which results in damaged cotton seed and a lower quantity and quality of edible products, as well as requiring the utilization of about 4,000 extra freight cars each year. Has also been engaged in the development of practical commercial standards for cotton seed and the elimination of serious economic losses and wasteful practices existing in the trade. In cooperation with the Food Administration has assisted materially in the formulation of rules and regulations established to govern the cotton-seed industry. High school, business college, and law university graduate; has pursued other collegiate work, including a correspondence course in agriculture at Pennsylvania State College, and has had practical farm and railroad experience. Nine years six months.

George H. Dacy, Washington, D. C. (Spends considerable time in the field.) Engaged in general live-stock and meat-marketing investigations. His broad knowledge of agricultural conditions and ability as a writer make his services particularly valuable, especially in the work undertaken and carried on in conjunction with the Federal Trade Commission in collecting at loading points information relative to the marketing of live stock at local packing plants and the large centralized markets. Is at present assisting in the preparation for publication of the material obtained in this investigation. From the very inception of this important live stock and meat work, both marketing and market reporting, the Bureau of Markets has met with extreme difficulty in securing men with proper training and experience to fill the positions. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. and M. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering Government service operated a farm of his own and wrote on agricultural topics for a number of publications. While employed as a writer for one of the leading agricultural journals traveled extensively over the country and acquired a broad knowledge of farming conditions and methods of handling and marketing agricultural products. He devoted special attention to live-stock marketing problems. One year.

William H. Darrow, Providence, R. I. Has charge of the local market-reporting service at Providence, R. I., which he inaugurated and developed, and which has proved a decided success. This service seeks to encourage the consumption and conservation of locally raised products and assists in the elimination of waste through efficient distribution of the local food supply. Producers, dealers, and consumers are daily advised as to market conditions, and farmers and housewives, as well as dealers, avail themselves of the service. It is proving of great importance in utilizing vegetables when particularly plentiful and liable to waste. Graduate Middlebury College, B. A., and Cornell University, M. A., in pomology and agricultural chemistry. Was instructor in horticulture in the University of Maine for a year and spent three years in practical horticultural work. Ten months.

George C. Edler, Washington, D. C. Is chief assistant to the specialist in seed marketing and has direct supervision of the compilation and revision of material submitted by field reporters for publication in the Seed Reporter. Also handles special assignments in connection with the work of this project. Is thoroughly familiar with every phase of the seed industry. There are very few firms in the country employing men in the capacity in which he has had experience, and the field from which it is possible to recruit men of his specialized commercial training is exceedingly limited. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering Government service was employed in seed work, both on the farm with seed growers and with seed dealers; spent four years with a seed company in Minneapolis as traveling salesman and buyer of farm seeds, also having charge of the seed-corn department. One year ten months.

Vernon P. Fawcett, Spokane, Wash. Has charge of the Spokane (Wash.) office of the grain and hay market reporting service of the Bureau of Markets. This is strictly war-emergency work, its main object being to put the producers of grain and hay who have surpluses of such stocks in touch with dealers and others desiring them. Reports are issued biweekly, giving in detail the amounts of grain and hay on hand, the amounts shipped in and out of each county, and the carload prices. These reports are distributed by mail to all people who express a desire to receive them. Graduate University of Idaho, B. S. in agriculture, specializing in agronomy, horticulture, and botany. Was reared on a farm and during the latter portion of his college course assisted in the analyses of seeds in the agronomy department of the university. For three years prior to his entrance into the Government service acted as State seed commissioner of Idaho. Nine months.

Adelbert D. Gail, jr., New York, N. Y. Has charge of the New York branch office of the Bureau of Markets, operated in connection with the collection and distribution of market information on fruits and vegetables. The enormous receipts of this market, drawn from every section of the country, make it an exceedingly difficult one to cover. Attended the University of Pennsylvania three years. For three years he was a member of the firm of J. H. Gail, of Buffalo, in which capacity he gained valuable experience in the marketing of perishable products and had an opportunity to become familiar with the problems relating to the marketing of these products. For a period prior to present appointment was employed as advertising representative of a large publishing company. Three years nine months.

John C. Gillilan, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the work of checking the railroad superintendents who report each night the loadings of live stock on their respective divisions. Supervises the activities of a large force, both in Washington and in the field, engaged upon this work. From 350 to 400 railroad division superintendents telegraph live-stock loadings nightly to the bureau, and the speed with which the necessary corrections, because of delinquencies on the part of the superintendents, must be made is a considerable factor to their value. Mr. Gillilan also supervises the force which compiles the information received from the railroad superintendents in a summary to be transmitted each morning to all branch offices for release. Graduate University of Minnesota, B. S. One year of graduate work in University of Minnesota in agricultural economics. Ten months.

Willis G. Goodenow, Fargo, N. Dak. Engaged in investigations carried on at Agricultural College, North Dakota, relative to milling and baking values of wheat and flour. His training and experience as a milling engineer make him especially valuable at this time in connection with the effort being made to correlate the investigational work of this department with that of other departments relating to the conservation of the wheat supply of the country. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, having specialized in flour-milling engineering. Prior to appointment in the Bureau of Markets was employed as scientific assistant in the Bureau of Chemistry; also had seven years' experience as assistant milling engineer in commercial work. One year five months.

Homer A. Harris, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Has been employed on responsible independent field assignments which have included potato distribution reports at Idaho Falls, Idaho; handling the market-news service at Plant City, Fla., and Monett, Mo., during the commercial movement of the strawberry crop; supervision of the service during the peach movement in Fort Valley, Ga.; and the maintenance of an office at Macon, Ga., to distribute market reports on watermelons. Attended agricultural college three years and had several years of commercial experience in the fruit business. One year ten months.

Bryon G. Hays, Kansas City, Mo. Assists in the administration of the local office of the live-stock and meats project at Kansas City, Mo., and in collecting and releasing daily market information relating to the live-stock and meat trade. Much difficulty has been experienced in getting together an adequate and efficient force to handle the increasingly important work conected with this service, particularly to man the local offices, especially at the large centralized markets of Chicago, Kansas City, and other central-western points. Graduate College of Agriculture of the University of Nebraska, B. S. Prior to present employment had considerable experience in judging and buying live stock for a commission firm at Omaha. Nine months.

Stanley G. Hilton, Washington, D. C. (In field considerable part of time). Engaged in conducting investigations of the warehousing of grain and in the administration of the United States warehouse act, including the preparation of rules and regulations for enforcement thereof. Has had a thorough training in the fundamentals of handling and storing grain and has assisted in the consideration of the complex problems arising in connection with this work, including the study of types of elevators and warehouses, the insurance of grain in storage, and the methods of handling and caring for this product. The proper warehousing of grain is of paramount importance in the conservation of this important product in the present emergency. Much difficulty has been experienced at all times in securing men with the requisite training for this work. One year.

Frederick J. Hughes, Washington, D. C. For the past two years has handled all the appointment and civil-service work and all the records of the personnel of the Bureau of Markets. This work has become unusually heavy during the past several months and probably will remain so for an indefinite period. For the past 18 months consistent efforts have been made to train an understudy for Mr. Hughes, but for various reasons it has been impossible to develop and retain any satisfactory candidate for such a position. Mr. Hughes has a thorough knowledge of the civil-service laws, rules, and regulations, and of the precedents and policies of the department and of the bureau in dealing with appointments and promotions. Three years eight months.

Clarence E. Killingsworth, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Employed primarily on cotton-spinning tests conducted by the department and incidentally on work connected with the cotton-standardization and cotton-marketing projects. At present is engaged on experimental-spinning tests which are being conducted by the United States Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the War Department and the Department of Commerce, for the purpose of developing a suitable airplane fabric from cotton to replace the linen fabric now being used. It is highly important to develop from cotton as promptly as possible a suitable airplane cloth to be used in the manufacture of airplanes. Completed textile course in the Mississippi Agricultural College; also had experience in erecting machinery in carding and spinning rooms in northern and southern cotton mills. He has had considerable experience in the actual commercial manufacture of cotton fabrics. Three years.

Clarence W. Kitchen, Washington, D. C. Has been associated with the market-surveys project since the inauguration of the market-news service in 1915, and has had comprehensive training in almost every branch of the work of this project. Has assisted in the opening of numerous new stations and suggesting improvements in the service of those already opened. When the rapid growth of the news service necessitated an extension of the administrative work of the project in Washington in January, 1917, Mr. Kitchen was assigned to the task. At present he is in immediate charge of the assignment of field forces and the daily administrative duties of permanent branch offices. Owing to his broad experience gained by actual contact with the work since its inception, it would be exceedingly difficult to replace him. Five years nine months.

Harvey E. Larsen, Boston, Mass. Investigates, in cooperation with the Boston Market Gardeners' Association, problems of marketing and distributing locally grown truck-farm products, the cost of marketing by this method as compared with others, and the value of reporting local market conditions and prices through the local press. The market conditions in practically all large New England cities, especially Boston, have become very acute, and the local truck growers and members of State Council of Defense made a very urgent request to this bureau for assistance in solving the problems. This service is proving very valuable as a means of meeting emergency marketing problems. It is one of the most effective means of stimulating the consumption of locally grown produce, lowering prices, and conserving foodstuffs. Graduate University of Wisconsin, M. S., having completed all the marketing work which the university offers. Prior to entering the department service, received valuable experience in commission dealing in the commission district of Chicago, and for several years was connected with the farm-crop department of the Michigan Agricultural College. Eleven months.

George Livingstone, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the Federal grain supervision under the United States grain-standards act, directing the work of the grain supervisors and their assistants in the 36 Federal grain-supervision districts of the country, and has general supervision over all the grain and hay marketing activities of this bureau, through which the emergency work of the department in issuing market reports on these commodities is directed. Assisted in the preparation of the rules and regulations promulgated for the enforcement of the United States grain-standards act and of other regulatory publications issued in connection with the enforcement of that act. Has directed the promulgation of standards for shelled corn and wheat, personally supervising the holdings of hearings on grain standards and directing the investigation of the practices of marketing grain at country and at terminal points. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in agriculture; took graduate work at Cornell University and at Halle-Wittenberg. For several years was assistant professor of agronomy at the Ohio State University, and was tendered the position of chief of the newly created department of farm crops at that institution, which position he declined for the purpose of entering the service of this bureau. Three years.

Brice M. Mace, jr., Washington, D. C. Has supervision of the administration of the branch offices opened in connection with the live-stock and meat-reporting service of the Buerau of Markets. It is very difficult at this time to obtain the services of men possessing the administrative ability combined with a knowledge of live-stock marketing methods. Graduate Cumberland University, Lebanon, Tenn., B. S.; studied law at the University of Chicago; and is at present taking an M. A. course in economics at George Washington University. Was reared on a Tennessee stock farm and was in charge of city and county school systems for seven years. Nine months.

Nathan Menderson, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Engaged on grades and standards work. This work is of very great importance to southern peanut growers, because practically no effort has been made by the department looking to the establishment of standard grades for peanuts. The purpose of this work is to enable the recommendation to growers of the best methods of handling and grading their peanuts and also to determine what will constitute practical market grades for both shelled and unshelled peanuts. Peanuts are now becoming an important food product, and their standardization and improved methods of grading and marketing is of decided importance, not only to the large producing sections of the South but also the consumer. Graduate Yale University, A. B., and Cornell University, M. A. Prior to entering the Bureau of Markets was employed by the Bureau of Plant Industry in connection with the introduction and development of new vegetables in the South. Three years six months.

Benjamin C. Moomaw, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Assists the project leader in charge of State cooperation in marketing work, in coordinating the various projects of the bureau with the State cooperative activities. Also assists in a study of the cooperative marketing work being carried on by the bureau in the Southern States, rendering help to the field agents in these States in the development of their activities and in the improvement of their methods. Graduate Washington and Lee University. Prior to entering the Bureau of Markets was for six years actively engaged in orcharding in the State of Virginia and in marketing apples, both in this country and abroad. For one year was institute lecturer in fruit growing for the Virginia department of agriculture and immigration and later extended this work to other branches of agricultural interests. Served as a director and president of the Virginia Fruit Growers' Association for several years. One year nine months.

Joe D. Morgan, New Orleans, La. Has been engaged in making field and laboratory investigations relative to the method of handling, grading, and transporting commercial grain; acted temporarily as grain supervisor under the grain-standards act. At present has charge of the grain-standardization investigations being made at New Orleans. In connection with this work, assists in the investigations relative to the causes and prevention of explosions and fires in grain elevators, mills, and various kinds of machinery used in the handling of grain. These investigations have a direct relation to the efforts being made to conserve the wheat supply of the United States, both by prevention of grain loss by fire and the deterioration of commercial grade on grain caused by smut in wheat. During the past thrashing season Mr. Morgan has assisted in the cooperative project relating to smut dust control in wheat at thrashing time, investigating special devices recommended by experts of the department and determining the effect of the application of these devices to thrashing machinery. Graduate Montana State College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, B. S. in biology. Two years ten months.

Julius H. Peters, Boston, Mass. Assists in the conduct of the telegraphic market news service on live stock and meats at Boston. He is fully familiar with the intricate details relating to reporting meat-trade conditions, which has a direct bearing on the food supply in the present emergency. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Was employed as instructor of agricultural economics at this institution parts of two terms and as teacher of agriculture at the Atlantic (Iowa) High School for one year. One year two months.

William C. Quick, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Has been continuously associated with investigations regarding the handling, transportation, and storage of fruits and vegetables. Supervises important lines of work in the Pacific Northwest directly related to the conservation and marketing of fruit crops grown there. He is thoroughly familiar with the fruit industry and with the proper construction and management of storage houses for apples. The conservation of foodstuffs is a question of primary importance, and the work upon which Mr. Quick is now engaged bears directly on that problem. Graduate University of Arkansas, B. S. in agriculture. Three years eight months.

Sam H. Ray, Kansas City, Mo. In charge of the live stock and meat reporting station at Kansas City. Devotes much of his time to devising means whereby this service may be improved. Has rendered much assistance in connection with the installation of the telegraphic market reports on estimated receipts and prices of live stock at Chicago, Ill. He is by training, experience, and ability well fitted for his present work. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College; took post-graduate course at the University of Illinois. Prior to entering the Bureau of Markets, had six years' experience in ranching in Texas; was employed two years as instructor in animal husbandry in the First District Agricultural College at Jonesboro, Ark.; and was in the service of the Bureau of Animal Industry, where he was selected to investigate the beef industry of Guatemala. Three years eleven months.

Frederick W. Read, Kansas City, Mo. Has assisted in the development of the cold-storage reporting system of the bureau. After the organization of the work, covering some 70 commodities, Mr. Read was assigned to take charge of all the market news work in Florida, including both the permanent market station at Jacksonville as well as the numerous field stations throughout the State. Was subsequently placed in immediate supervisory charge of the work of this project in the district bounded by the Rocky Mountains and the Mississippi River. It is believed that this system will greatly relieve the Washington office of a vast amount of administrative detail. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Graduate student Harvard University School of Arts and Sciences; two years. Prior to entering the Bureau of Markets was assistant in farm management, Bureau of Plant Industry, and instructor in agricultural economics, Massachusetts Agricultural College, for short periods. Two years eight months.

Stephen A. Regan, Washington, D. C. Assisted in the preparation of the Government's standards for wheat and in investigations relative to the handling of grain in bulk rather than in sacks. Besides having a wide general experimental knowledge of all classes and grades of wheat, is especially familiar with all matters relating to the wheat-growing area throughout the Pacific Northwest. Assisted in the work of organizing the grain-standards supervision work, having for a period acted as Federal grain supervisor in charge of the Denver office, and for a period as grain supervisor in charge of the San Francisco office. When, in January, 1918, Dr. J. W. T. Duvel, in charge of the grain-standardization work in the Washington office, was designated to proceed to Australia and other Australian points for the purposes of special investigations, Mr. Regan was brought to Washington to take Dr. Duvel's place during his absence. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Idaho, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering the service of the department served for one season as State food commissioner of Idaho. Two years nine months.

Howard B. Richardson, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Has been engaged primarily in cotton standardization and spinning test work and assisting with the manufacturing tests made by the department for the purpose of determining the spinning value of the different grades, staples, and other qualities of upland, sea-island, and Arizona-Egyptian cottons. At present engaged on the experimental spinning tests being conducted by the department in cooperation with the War Department and the Department of Commerce for the purpose of developing suitable airplane fabric from cotton to replace the linen fabrics now being used. Has represented the bureau at various points in the cotton handling and marketing activities. Completed a three-year course in mechanical engineering at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a three-year course in cotton manufacturing with the American Correspondence School. Prior to his appointment in the Bureau of Markets served nearly four years as laboratory aid in the Bureau of Plant Industry. Seven years eight months.

Patrick J. Roach, Minneapolis, Minn. Last year had charge of the Minneapolis office of the Bureau of Markets in connection with the market surveys project. As the Minneapolis office is in the center of an important potato-producing section, he gave special attention to reports on this commodity, with the result that this season he has been assigned to more important potato-producing sections to give specialized service on this product to the growers in these districts. He started the season at Eagle Lake, Tex., and is now handling the distribution of reports in the Fort Smith, Ark., district. Prior to entering Government service had many years' experience in the produce business. One year nine months.

Otto W. Schleussner, Los Angeles, Cal. Has been in immediate charge of the work of developing a national market news service on fruits and vegetables since its inauguration in 1915. When it was decided to inaugurate the news service and inspection service on the Pacific coast this spring Mr. Schleussner was selected to supervise the combined work of these two projects in the territory west of the Rocky Mountains. It seemed advisable to handle this work as a district problem, inasmuch as the marketing problems of Pacific coast growers are different from those encountered in any other part of the country and must be handled separately. He exercises supervisory control over the permanent branch offices on the Pacific coast, including a number of the most important producing points. He also serves in an advisory capacity in considering general policies relating to the fruit and vegetable marketing activities of this bureau. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to his appointment in the Bureau of Markets had wide experience in business in various lines—truck farming, inspection work, and commercial dealings with fruits and vegetables in the markets and in the producing districts. Three years four months.

Alfred B. Smeby, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Was first assigned to the development of a new system of reports on live-stock movements, introduced experimentally at Lancaster, Pa., about a year ago. This project involved the perfecting of arrangements with farmers, railroad agents, live-stock buyers, the trade at the Lancaster stockyards, and others to obtain accurate information concerning the "in and out" movement of beef cattle in 18 counties known as the Lancaster district. When the service was successfully installed at Lancaster he was detailed to Rocky Ford, Colo., to inaugurate a similar service covering the Arkansas Valley cattle and lamb feeding districts. He was later called to Washington to assume charge of important work pertaining to current bulletins on live stock and meats and was placed in full charge of the bureau's weekly live-stock and meat-trade news bulletin, supervising the reporting service on the movements of live stock in the feeding and grazing districts of the United States. He is at present on an indefinite assignment reporting the Chicago hog market. Prior to entering Government service was engaged in the newspaper publishing business for six years, five years as market writer and associate editor of the Sioux City (Iowa) Daily Live Stock Record and live-stock editor of the Sioux City Tribune. One year two months.

Edwin W. Stillwell, Washington, D. C. Engaged in important administrative work in connection with the details of the technical daily telegraphic reports and other work incident to the assembling and issuance of market news on the movements and prices of fruits and vegetables. The administrative work requires a combination of qualifications in order to handle it successfully. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in horticulture, specializing in pomology and marketing. Eleven months.

Charles B. Tubergen, Pittsburgh, Pa. (spends considerable time in the field). Has handled distribution reports for a number of important perishable products at various points. Is at present in charge of the important field station at Onley, Va., where his duties other than administrative consist in the collection and distribution of marketing information. The market news work in which he is engaged has expanded very rapidly and Congress has appropriated large sums of money to continue it. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College. For five years subsequent to graduation was in the employ of the New York State Experiment Station at Geneva, and for one year was employed in the office of the California Fruit Growers' Exchange at Chicago. Nine months.

Gustav P. Warber, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in the field). Has recently made an exhaustive study of the production of casein in this country, the information being desired for the use of the Shipping Board and the War Industries Board as a guide in determining the policy of these boards with reference to importation of that product and with reference to the needs of the Army and Navy for airplane construction. His principal work at the present time is connected with a comprehensive study of the marketing and handling of milk throughout the United States by means of the distribution of schedules and by personal investigations. Graduate University of Minnesota, B. S. and M. A. in agriculture. Served as assistant in the division of agricultural economics, University of Minnesota, for three years, during which time he pursued the study of special problems in the field of agricultural economics. Three years eleven months.

Bert W. Whitlock, Salt Lake City, Utah. Is grain supervisor in charge of the Salt Lake City office, which is a particularly important assignment because of the variety of grain produced and shipped from the territory covered. The supervisional activities for the district are centralized in the Salt Lake office, and from that point extensive investigations are conducted to supplement the information now available for use in the determination of standards. The department is unable to secure competent men for all of the positions of grain supervisor. The department is cooperating with the United States Food Administration authorities in their work with grains under the food-control act. This necessitates exceedingly important and heavy work among the grain trade by the grain supervisors of the Bureau of Markets, both at the Washington office and in the field. Graduate Kansas State University, B. S. in agriculture, specializing in grain marketing, grain grading, and milling technology; also served at this institution as student assistant in milling technology and as student assistant in chemistry. Prior to entering the Government service held several important appointments in the State grain laboratories of Montana, having direct charge of the milling and baking investigations. Was also appointed deputy State grain inspector. Eleven months.

John F. Wilmeth, Washington, D. C. Engaged in work in connection with the enforcement of the United States grain-standards act and other projects dealing with the marketing of grain. He is thoroughly familiar with the provisions of the act and also with the requirements of the rules and regulations of the Secretary of Agriculture under the act. Has attended all the hearings held in connection with the different phases of the enforcement of the act and the establishment of grades for grain promulgated thereunder. Mr. Wilmeth is also in charge of the work of compiling estimates for grain projects, special reports required by Congress, and similar work requiring a thorough knowledge of department and bureau policies, legal training, and familiarity with the technical requirements under the grain-standards act. Prior to assuming his present duties held responsible positions in the administrative offices of the Bureau of Plant Industry, the office of the Secretary, and the Bureau of Markets. Is graduate of the Georgetown University Law School. Has been admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia and the State of Louisiana. Nine years eight months.

Furman B. Wise, Washington, D. C. (spends considerable time in travel status). Has specialized in investigations relating to the handling, grading, and transportation of rice, conducting both field and laboratory investigations in Washington, New Orleans, La., and in the rice-growing sections throughout the entire United States. Renders assistance in handling matters relating to this crop, with special reference to its commercial grade. His services are also utilized in giving assistance as to the best means of distributing the rice crop, with a view to its increased use for food. Graduate Agricultural and Mechanical College of South Carolina, B. S.; also University of Wisconsin, M. S. Six years ten months.

BUREAU OF PLANT INDUSTRY.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

Glen B. Ramsey, Orono, Me. Engaged in the investigation of potato diseases in Maine. He has recently taken the leadership in pathological extension work in Maine and is engaged in putting into practice in that State, with the cooperation of the State extension forces, the methods of control for important diseases of truck crops, particularly potatoes, that have been worked out. Entire time devoted to the various phases of this work, including the oversight of field demonstrations, the instructing of State and county agents and farmers in methods of plant-disease control, and the preparation of necessary literature on the subject, this being a part of the program of food conservation through the control of plant diseases. Graduate Indiana University, A. B. and A. M., specializing in botany, mycology, and plant pathology. Prior to entering the department service held a teaching fellowship in botany at Indiana University, was instructor in botany at the University of Maine, and assistant plant pathologist of the Maine Agricultural Experiment Station. Two years three months.

Roscoe E. Blair, Bard, Cal. Has been serving as superintendent of the Yuma Experiment Station, near Bard, Cal., and in conducting demonstration work among farmers on the Yuma reclamation project. His duties as farm superintendent include the supervision of all the investigational work of the Yuma station and some field work among settlers on the Yuma reclamation project with particular reference to the production of long-staple cotton. This work is of special importance at the present time, when the demand for long-staple cotton for both civil and military purposes is exceeding the supply. The Yuma station is located in a section devoted to intensive farming, as shown by the fact that the average production per acre for that district (the Yuma reclamation project) in 1917 was valued at $105. The work of the station has been a very important factor in the development of local agricultural industries, particularly as regards the two most important industries, cotton and alfalfa seed. He has served also as representative of the Office of Demonstrations on Reclamation Projects on the Yuma project, it having been found impossible so far to secure a suitable man for the work of that office. Graduate Kansas State Agriculture College. Prior to entering the department was employed for a brief period as assistant in the department of horticulture at the Kansas Experiment Station. Seven years eleven months.

Leonard E. Newman, Concord, N. H. Has charge of cooperative work on the control of the white-pine blister-rust work in New Hampshire. This includes general control work throughout the State, specific local cooperative work with 43 townships, and the direction of the activities of about 75 employees. This blister-rust disease threatens the destruction of the white pine, which is the most valuable and important forest tree in the northeastern section of the United States. The situation is critical; present failure of the cooperative control work in New Hampshire would cause irreparable damage and might easily mean failure for the blister-rust campaign in the entire region. For the continuation and success of the work in New Hampshire it is important that Mr. Newman be retained in his present position, as he is the only experienced man left who is thoroughly familiar with the work in that State, he having been with the work ever since it was inaugurated. Graduate Biltmore Forest School. Had three years' experience in general forestry work in the Northwest and in New Hampshire before entering the department service. Two years one month.

Louis J. Gillespie, Washington, D. C. Engaged in working out the relation between crops and soil acidity, involving highly technical experience and training in connection with hydrogen-ion concentration. There are only a limited number of men available for this type of work in the United States, and if he were separated from the service for any reason this line of work would have to be suspended indefinitely. He is showing a decided relationship between the hydrogen-ion concentration in soils and the prevalence of certain diseases affecting prominent food crops. Graduate Brown University, Ph. B. and Ph. D. Served as assistant in physics, Brown University; instructor in chemistry, Rhode Island School of Design, Providence; fellow in bacteriology, Rockefeller Institute of Medical Research; and bacteriologist, New York Department of Health, for various periods before entering department service. Four years ten and one-half months.

Rolla N. Harger, Washington, D. C. Engaged in chemical work, requiring highly specialized training, in the Office of Soil-Fertility Investigations. It has been found impossible under the present conditions to obtain men of similar training and experience. Since September, 1917, has also been engaged in making investigations of an unusual character in cooperation with gas-warfare investigations, Bureau of Mines, acting for the Ordnance Department. This special research is invaluable to the prosecution of this line of offensive warfare. Graduate Washburn College (Topeka, Kans.), A. B.; did graduate work in chemistry at Kansas University two terms, receiving M. A. degree. Before entering department was laboratory instructor in chemistry at Washburn College three years and laboratory instructor in chemistry at Kansas University two years. One year one month.

Wofford B. Camp, Gaffney, S. C. Engaged in California upon work having in view the increased production of the long-staple Egyptian type of cotton in the United States by the utilization of the improved varieties and cultural methods that have been developed through the experimental work of the department. On account of the reduced production of this type of cotton in Egypt and difficulties of communication and transportation there could be no assurance that enough extra staple cotton would be available in the United States even for the strictly military purposes of aeroplane wings, balloon fabrics, and automobile tires. The production of sea-island cotton has become entirely an uncertainty on account of the boll weevil. The field operations in California consist of locating and caring for plantings of the improved varities in promising locations, in cooperation with new cotton-growing organizations that are being established, and giving necessary advice and assistance required in properly establishing this new long-staple industry in the Southwest. This work involves the direct and active personal supervision of the experimental plantings, which are located throughout the San Joaquin and Sacramento Valleys of California, and includes necessary instruction of farmers in methods of planting, thinning, selecting, roguing, picking, and other operations connected with production, breeding, and preservation of the purity and uniformity of the varieties. The cultural methods of handling these new long staples in the Southwest are different than those used in other regions, and there are no other men obtainable who have had special training like that of Mr. Camp or who are qualified to undertake it. Graduate of Clemson Agricultural College, B. S. Was raised on a farm and was continually in the environment of farm life and work before entering the department. One year eleven and one-half months.

Walton G. Wells, Sacaton, Ariz. Engaged on work directly related to the increased production of cotton of the Egytian type in the irrigated sections of Arizona and California. The fact that importation of this type of cotton from Egypt has recently been much restricted and that the Arizona and California product is the only available substitute for sea-island cotton, which is of vital importance to the military program of the United States requires that every effort be made to stimulate production of American-Egyptian cotton in Arizona and California. This cotton is already being extensively employed in the manufacture of high-grade tire fabrics and is being tested for use in the production of balloon fabrics for the Army. In the event of a serious curtailment of the sea-island crop as a result of boll-weevil ravages American-Egyptian is the best available substitute for sea-island cotton in the manufacture of balloon, gas-mask, and airplane fabrics. Increased production of American-Egyptian cotton is contingent upon (1) the maintenance of a large supply of pure and selected seed for planting and (2) familiarizing the growers with the best methods of production which have been worked out by the department. Mr. Wells has had a longer and more intimate contact with both of these lines of effort than any other man now in the Government service. He is the only employee of the department available for continuous service in the field who has sufficient familiarity with the Egyptian cotton plant to carry on effectively the vitally important work of seed selection. The work is both urgent and continuous in its nature and does not permit of the delays and interruptions which the training of an inexperienced substitute would entail. Six years two months.

Norbert R. Mueller, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the extensive experiments in drug-plant growing which are being conducted in cooperation between this department and the University of Wisconsin, the continuance of which is regarded as exceedingly important in the present emergency. The Bureau of Plant Industry, through its cooperation with a number of universities which maintain drug gardens in connection with their schools of pharmacy, is working to secure the production of as large quantities as possible of several essential drugs. Mr. Mueller not only has had immediate charge of the work of producing these drug crops at the University of Wisconsin but visits these other institutions, as necessity may arise, to give expert supervision and advice and assist in promoting the work. There are very few men in the country who have had any practical experience in the line of work in which Mr. Mueller is engaged. It has been found necessary to increase Mr. Mueller's responsibilities by assigning him to emergency field work in connection with the castor-bean crop in addition to his regular assignment to the production of important drug plants. These duties include collaborating with officials of the Signal Corps, War Department, cooperating with county agents, advising growers, etc., in order to insure castor-bean production on the large acreage required to provide supplies needed in the manufacture of lubricating oil for airplane motors. The withdrawal of Mr. Mueller's services would mean the practical abandonment of any productive features of the department's drug plant work in the northern Mississippi Valley, which is of great importance in producing adequate supplies of important drugs for military needs, and would hinder the cooperative work in producing sufficient castor oil for airplane use. Graduate of University of Wisconsin (pharmacy course), B. S.; was graduate student, same institution, one term, receiving M. S. degree. Prior to present appointment was for various periods registered pharmacist, had charge of drug-plant work at Wisconsin Pharmacy Experiment Station, was in charge of field party ho[illegible]e-mint investigations in Wisconsin River Valley, and fellow in pharmacy at University of Wisconsin. Two years.

Edgar C. Young, Timmonsville, S. C. Has entire responsibility for the handling of the drug-plant crop in South Carolina during the present season. The work that would suffer through his withdrawal is that dealing with the cooperative studies of drug-plant and oil-seed crop production in South Carolina. The increasing dearth of supplies of certain important drugs formerly imported has made it of vital importance to insure the successful production of crops of these drugs in this country. One of these vitally important drugs is cannabis, which will be needed in large quantities both by the medical and the veterinary services of the Army, as well as in the treatment of illness and alleviation of suffering in private practice. At the present time the main reliance for cannabis of the pharmacopœial standard in this country rests upon the production of the South Carolina crop. This country is now also called upon to furnish supplies of this important drug for export. The withdrawal of Mr. Young from the South Carolina drug-plant work can not fail to imperil the production of the cannabis crops, which requires a type of treatment and handling that can not be obtained from inexperienced help. It would further involve the loss of a large amount of experimental data of peculiar interest and value at the present time, when facts concerning the production of drugs and oils in this country are in urgent demand because of the failure of supplies which have heretofore come from abroad. Graduate of Clemson Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture; took postgraduate work at Clemson one term. Was reared on a farm and has had considerable experience in handling farm labor. Before entering his present duties conducted field experiments on cotton at Peedee Experiment Station during one season and was assistant in botanical and bacteriological laboratories at Clemson College one term. One year three months.

Harry A. Schoth, Corvalis, Oreg. Has charge of forage-crop experiments being conducted in cooperation with the Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station at Corvallis, Oreg., with particular reference to the production of seeds of vetches and other special forage crops. This work is highly important, especially in view of the fact that ordinary sources of supply in Europe are cut off, and it is therefore essential that American sources for seed be developed. The work with forage crops is also highly important in connection with the dairy industry of western Oregon and western Washington. Graduate of Oregon Agricultural College, B. S. and M. S. For two terms was employed as farm foreman and was fellow in agronomy at the Oregon Agricultural College. Two years four and one-half months.

Fred W. Geise, Washington, D. C. Is investigating the fertilizer value of the greensand marl deposits of eastern United States as a source of potash for agricultural purposes. His work consists chiefly of technical laboratory and greenhouse studies, carried on at Washington. His withdrawal at this time would seriously cripple the work and endanger results which, it is hoped, may find practical use during the present season. Graduate Wesleyan University (Nebraska), A. B.; took special course in biology at University of Wisconsin; received M. S. degree University of Chicago. Was raised on a farm and is familiar with farming practices in the Middle West. Eleven months.

Oscar R. Mathews, Bellefourche, S. Dak. The superintendent of the Bellefourche (S. Dak.) station is an employee of the office of Western Irrigation Agriculture, the station being under the management of that office. The superintendent is fully occupied with the work in irrigation agriculture and has not been specially trained in dry-land agriculture nor familiar with the details of the work that is being conducted by the office of Dry-Land Agriculture. Mr. Mathews is the only representative of the last-named office at the Bellefourche station and is responsible for the conduct of the work of crop production under dry-land conditions, which work has already proved its value by its results. This work involves soil preparation, seeding, cultivation, harvesting the crops, study of yields, effects of cultivation, rotations, etc. He also has charge of the soil moisture and other chemical and physical determinations in the laboratory on the field station and has kept the records of the meteorological observations. This work is directly concerned with the increasing of the food supply, particularly wheat, of the country by determining the possibilities of production in this section of the country and the methods by which these possibilities can be most profitably realized. Graduate South Dakota Agricultural College, B. S. and M. S. Nine years.

Joseph B. Kuska, Colby, Kans. Has charge of extensive investigations in methods of crop production under dry-land conditions at the Colby (Kans.) substation of the Kansas State Experiment Station in cooperation with the State. Under the terms of this cooperative agreement the department agrees to provide a trained assistant in dry-land agriculture who shall be responsible for and have immediate charge of the experimental work. Mr. Kuska has had charge of such work since its inauguration in the spring of 1914. Graduate University of Kansas, B. S. Spent early life on a farm. Four years six months.

Charles H. Ruzicka, Williston, N. Dak. As superintendent of the Williston (N. Dak.) dry-land field station has charge of an extensive series of experiments being conducted under a cooperative agreement with the North Dakota Experiment Station to determine the best methods of crop production for that section. Under this agreement the department furnishes the superintendent of the station. Wheat and flax production are of first importance in this section, and any advance the experimental work may make in the solution of the many problems concerned in their production adds directly to the total production of these and other essential foodstuffs and raw materials. Graduate North Dakota Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture; has also had practical farm experience. Prior to present appointment spent two seasons examining and appraising lands in western North Dakota and eastern Montana for the Northern Pacific Railway Co.; taught one year in associated agricultural high schools at Milaca, Minn.; and was two years with the North Dakota Better Farming Association. Five years six months.

Charles T. Dearing, Washington, D. C. (Most of his time is spent in the field.) Has charge of the muscadine-grape investigations of the bureau, which involves a study of cultural methods and requirements and the breeding of better varieties. His work also includes the development of methods of utilization of grapes in the home. Heretofore the use of the muscadine type of grape has been restricted to the making of wine, canning, and preparation in the fresh state in a few different culinary ways. Mr. Dearing has developed exceedingly satisfactory methods of making unfermented juices, jellies, jams, and other products, and these have been presented at a large number of meetings, in cooperation with the office of Extension Work in the South, through a large portion of the muscadine-grape-growing territory. Graduate University of Missouri. Eight years five months.

Charles Sando, Washington, D. C. His duties are largely of a biochemical nature and consist of making analyses of fruits and vegetables to determine the changes which have taken place when held under different conditions, including storage. Similar investigations are carried on by Mr. Sando with reference to the conditions of fruits or vegetable products grown under different conditions for the purpose of correlating cultural methods with the behavior of the products in storage. Another phase of his work is a study of fruit and vegetable pigments as an index of different degrees of maturity, the degree of maturity being an essential factor to consider in connection with the behavior of the product in storage and subsequent thereto when removed for consumption. Graduate Maryland Agricultural College; took advanced work in organic chemistry at the University of Michigan. Three years one and one-half months.

Elmer Snyder, Fresno, Cal. Engaged upon studies of cultural and production problems in connection with American Euvitis grapes and investigations of Vinifera grapes in California. The latter project has been under way for the past two years, and together with another member of the bureau staff he has been primarily responsible for the results of the investigational work being carried on in some 10 or 12 experimental vineyards located at different points in California. Perhaps the most important feature of his work is in connection with the development of a dried-currant industry. The foundation work, with which Mr. Snyder is very closely identified, has been laid for the development of a currant industry in California which promises to take the place of an imported product amounting annually to 30,000,000 or more pounds. His duties also consist of taking annual series of notes covering blossoming records, growth records, yield records, and observations on numerous methods of culture and the behavior of a great number of varieties under test. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture. Three years.

George K. K. Link, Washington, D. C. (greater part of time spent in the field). Advises the inspectors of the Bureau of Markets and the War and Navy Departments relative to the investigations of losses in market and storage and studies means of prevention, working with other pathologists who are at the points of production. This work is an essential part of the food-conservation program, closely affiliated with investigations at the points of production, and operating directly to reduce the present losses of perishable vegetables. The economic interests involved in this work are very great. The losses on a single car amount to from $100 to $400, a large part of which is preventable by measures applied in the field or packing house. A continued effort is made to disseminate this information among the producers and to bring about all possible improvement. Graduate University of Chicago, B. S.; graduate student University of Nebraska, one term, receiving A. M. degree; also received Ph. D. degree from the University of Chicago. Assisted in the chemical and botanical laboratories at Chicago University; served as an assistant in botany at the Kansas Agricultural College; adjunct professor of agricultural botany and assistant in the experiment station of the University of Nebraska; professor of plant physiology and physiologist of the Nebraska Agricultural Experiment Station; and during the six years prior to present appointment has devoted his entire time to university teaching and to investigation and extensive work at the experiment station of Nebraska along the line of potato diseases, a great part of this time being spent in field work in the irrigated and dry-land sections of western Nebraska. Eight months.

Gustav A. Meckstroth, Washington, D. C. Engaged in bean-disease investigations, having charge of a field station. The protection of the bean crop against disease is a matter of very urgent war service. He has had charge of this work for more than a year, and a good beginning has been made. The bean crop is one of the most important of the vegetable crops of the country, and it has been especially subject to losses due to diseases during recent years. Graduate Ohio State University, B. A. and M. A. For various periods prior to present appointment, taught in public schools; assisted in laboratory in general botany, Ohio State University; was an agent of the department in connection with white-pine blister-rust inspection; taught general botany and plant pathology at Pennsylvania State College; and assisted in plant pathological work at Pennsylvania experiment station. Was raised on a farm and engaged in general farming in Ohio until college course was finished. One year three and one-half months.

Luther P. Byars, Washington, D. C. Mr. Byars is a project leader and specialist engaged in the investigation of nematode diseases of cotton, truck, and forage plants. Has in charge the Federal investigation on the control of root knot, a disease which reduces the value of southern crops by many millions of dollars annually, and is engaged in a campaign of crop conservation with a program of root-knot control from the Atlantic States to Texas. Experiments are in progress which must run continuously for a series of years. On these the department has spent a great deal of money for installation and care, and the results will be lost if they are suspended. No one is available to take Mr. Byars's place should he leave the service. Experts in nematology are rare. Graduate Clemson College, received M. S. degree from University of Wisconsin, and examination for Ph. D. degree has been successfully passed and degree will be granted upon completion of thesis. Was assistant in plant pathology at the South Carolina experiment station one year, assistant in botany at the University of Wisconsin two years, and plant pathologist at South Carolina experiment station one year. Prior to taking up permanent work in the department was employed by this bureau to do nematode-disease survey work on sugar beets and other plants. Four years seven months.

Arthur J. Mix, Washington, D. C. (greater part of time spent in field). Engaged in emergency work in the control of truck and forage-crop diseases in cooperation with the extension organization of one of the northwestern States. His duties include personal instructions to county agents and farmers, the holding of farmers' institutes and county-agent meetings, the preparation and distribution of printed matter, and the supervision of demonstrations of disease-control methods. The position requires a man well trained in plant pathology and experienced in demonstration work. Graduate Hamilton College, A. B.; also received Ph. D. degree from Cornell University. For four years held a fellowship at Cornell University, during which period he conducted an educational campaign during the growing season in disease and insect control and the general care of orchards. For one year was assistant botanist at the New York experiment station, Geneva, investigating potato diseases; and for two years was instructor in plant pathology at the University of Kansas. Two and one-half months.

William L. Doran, Amherst, Mass. Is extension pathologist for the State of Massachusetts and is engaged in putting into practice in that State, with the cooperation of the State extension forces, the methods of control of important diseases of truck crops that have been worked out. The work to which he is assigned is a necessary link in the food-conservation program. The position of extension pathologist is one requiring a man of thorough training in plant pathology and related subjects and wide experience. Graduate Massachusetts Agriculture College, B. S., specializing in botany and chemistry; did postgraduate work in plant pathology one year and received degree of M. S. During college course worked on farms in summer, especially with market-garden and florist crops; lived 18 years on a farm; instructor in botany, New Hampshire State College, and assistant botanist, New Hampshire Agricultural Experiment Station, one year. Seven months.

Ivan C. Jagger, Washington, D. C. (greater part of time spent in field). Is pathological adviser on truck-crop diseases for the Southern States, having general charge, on the part of the Bureau of Plant Industry, of the cooperative extension activities in the South along this line. He plans campaigns for the control of diseases of truck crops, visits the bureau workers in the States and the cooperating State officials, prepares circulars and bulletins, conducts correspondence, and in other similar ways carries on the campaign for food conservation through the control of plant diseases. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. in agriculture; graduate student and industrial fellow in department of plant pathology, same institution, one year; graduate student in University of Wisconsin one year, receiving M. S. degree after specializing in plant pathology; graduate student and instructor in department of plant pathology at Cornell one term. Before entering department spent four summers in the field in New York State carrying out experiments on the control of diseases of vegetables; for five years was assistant professor of plant pathology, University of Rochester and Cornell University, all his time being given to investigation of diseases of vegetables both in greenhouses and in field in the vicinity of Rochester, N. Y. Three months.

Max W. Gardner, Washington, D. C. (greater portion of time spent in field). Engaged in assisting the food products inspectors of the Bureau of Markets in the inspection of carload lots of perishable vegetables at terminal markets, the purpose of this work being to determine the causes of the large losses which occur in transit and to assist in the prevention of these losses through the introduction of control measures. This work is an important part of the program of food conservation through the control of plant diseases and requires men highly trained in plant pathology and possessing unusual teaching ability. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S.; also received M. S. and Ph. D. degrees from University of Wisconsin. Prior to present appointment served for various periods as pathologist and chemist, Keokuk Canning Co.; assistant plant pathologist to the Pennsylvania State Chestnut Bilght Commission; assistant in plant pathology, Michigan Agricultural Experiment Station; and during three summers held a three months' appointment in this bureau as assistant in charge of cucumber-disease investigations in Wisconsin; was also instructor in plant pathology, University of Michigan. Two years nine months.

Howard G. MacMillan, Washington, D. C. (temporary summer address, Greeley, Colo.). Engaged in the investigation of control methods for potato diseases in Colorado and has charge of important field stations. Has spent three years in the work and now has results which he believes will effect important improvements in the control of potato diseases in the irrigated West. Graduate Brown University, Ph. B.; also received M. S. and Ph. D. degrees from University of Wisconsin. Prior to present employment was employed for short periods by the Bureau of Plant Industry in connection with chestnut-blight investigations in the control of fruit diseases. Three years ten months.

Lawrence O. Watson, Florence, S. C. Is pathological adviser in charge of work on disease control for cotton and truck crops in all Southern States, representing the Bureau of Plant Industry in all its relations to southern extension work along these lines. Has also been engaged for a number of years in breeding and disseminating disease-resistant cotton and cowpeas and is the man on whom the bureau depends for the preservation and conduct of this important project. Has built up an efficient corps of cooperators and pushed with especial activity since the war the more extended use of resistant cotton as a means of disease control. Has organized and now directs this disease-control work in cooperation with the State authorities in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Louisiana, Texas, Arkansas, Florida, Alabama, Mississippi, and Oklahoma. The work, though new, is already having an influence on crop production. The county agents are continually in need of help from the experienced pathologists of this bureau. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture; one year of graduate work at the University of Illinois. Was raised on a farm and is familiar with the details of farm work. Before entering upon department duties was for two years assistant chemist in State analytical work at Clemson College, S. C.; served as assistant to the county auditor at intervals during vacation periods and was assistant botanist at the South Carolina Agricultural College one year. Seven years.

John C. Walker, Washington, D. C. (greater part of time spent in field). Engaged in the investigation of onion diseases and in pathological inspection work in cooperation with the Bureau of Markets and the War Department investigating pathological problems connected with the handling and transportation of vegetables. Graduate University of Wisconsin. M. S. and Ph. D.; took one semester of graduate work at Cornell University. Was born and raised on dairy and truck farm and had practical experience in growing cabbage, onions, potatoes, sugar beets, and other truck crops prior to entering the department. College work was directed chiefly to studies in plant pathology, especially diseases of truck crops. Eight and one-half months.

Jenkin W. Jones, Biggs, Cal. Has charge of the Biggs (Cal.) cereal field station of the Bureau of Plant Industry. This is the only experiment station devoted to the rice industry in the entire western United States. The experiments carried on there include the determination of the best varieties of rice for California conditions, the best times, rates, and methods of sowing rice to obtain the maximum production, the best methods, times, and rates of irrigation to conserve irrigation water and at the same time insure a large production, rotation systems to free rice lands from weeds, etc. The station is comparatively new, but is recognized as the source of all authentic information on rice growing in California. The many farmers who are taking up rice growing for the first time in 1918 are very largely dependent upon the station for their information. Graduate Utah Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Was raised on a farm and prior to entering department had charge of a demonstration farm at Harlowton, Mont. Five years ten months.

Harry Braun, Washington, D. C. As a scientific assistant in the laboratory of plant pathology, is engaged in research studies on the new wheat disease in the Middle West known as "black chaff." He does both field and laboratory work and is at present the only well-trained man the laboratory of plant pathology has in the field. It is important that the work be pushed as rapidly as possible, owing to the number of States involved and the serious nature of the disease. Men fitted to prosecute such a research are hard to find, practically all of them being within the draft age. Mr. Braun worked last season on this wheat disease and knows the problems involved. Graduate Cornell University, B. S.; took postgraduate course at same institution, specializing in plant pathology; also did graduate work at Columbia University in botany one term, receiving M. A. degree. Prior to present appointment was for various periods assistant, department of plant pathology, Cornell University; student assistant and scientific assistant, Office of Cotton, Truck, and Forage-Crop Diseases Investigations, this bureau. One year nine and one-half months.

John W. Pace, Mobile, Ala. Has been engaged in connection with the cooperative campaign for the eradication of citrus canker in Alabama for more than two years and has proved to be unusually efficient inspector and superintendent, and experience has shown that it would be impossible to replace him with any satisfactory person. He has immediate supervision of the inspection and eradication work in Baldwin County, Ala., and occasional supervision over the work in Mobile County. In Baldwin County approximately a million Satsuma orange trees are planted. Since 1914 the citrus industry of the South has been menaced by the presence of the Japanese disease of citrus canker, which is not only very destructive to trees that become infected, but also destroys the commercial value of fruit. At present quarantine prevents the shipment of fruit from infected districts. It is becoming almost impossible to find new inspectors for responsible positions in the canker eradication work, which makes it imperative to retain the inspectors who have proved their ability to inspect citrus plantings and detect canker and who have the necessary executive ability to plan and supervise the work of others. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. Was raised on a farm. Two years six months.

Alma Wilson, Logan, Utah. Engaged as pathological adviser, in cooperation with the State extension forces of Utah, in putting into practice the methods of control developed for important diseases of truck crops. This work is important and is a necessary link in the food-conservation program. The position of extension pathologist is one requiring a man of thorough training in plant pathology and related subjects and wide experience. Graduate University of Utah, B. S. Was instructor in general botany at Utah Agricultural College four semesters, laboratory instructor in plant pathology two semesters, and laboratory instructor in plant physiology five semesters. Had two years' research experience in potato diseases at the Utah Experiment Station and some experience in plant-disease survey and in plant-disease extension work in Utah prior to entering department service. Six and one-half months.

BUREAU OF ENTOMOLOGY.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

John E. Graf, Macclenny, Fla. Directs the field work being conducted at the various field stations of the Bureau of Entomology in connection with the campaign for the eradication and control of the sweet-potato weevil and coordinates the department's activities with similar work undertaken by State organizations. The work is closely allied to the emergency food production conservation program, inasmuch as the sweet-potato weevil has been spreading unchecked until the present year and is becoming extremely threatening. The sweet potato is a staple food not only of the people of our Southern States but on the Army ration. Graduate Pomona College, with one year's postgraduate work at that institution. Six years eleven months.

C. H. Batchelder, Orono, Me. Demonstrates methods of controlling serious insect pests of staple crops. Men of the type capable of performing entomological extension work are extremely difficult to find, and the importance of the work, judged by their results obtained through their efforts, makes it extremely desirable to retain their services. Mr. Batchelder is the only extension entomologist now operating in the State of Maine. Graduate of an approved college, having taken the course in entomology; also had practical experience before entering the department fitting him for service as demonstrator and public speaker. Three months.

William T. Ham, Pullman, Wash. Demonstrates methods of controlling serious insect pests of staple crops. Graduate of an approved college, having taken the course in entomology; also had practical experience before entering the department fitting him for service as demonstrator. Five months.

Olden K. Courtney, Macclenny, Fla. Has charge of the operations at one of the bureau's field stations in connection with the eradication campaign against the sweet-potato weevil. Mr. Courtney is especially familiar with local conditions in the section in which he is employed. Graduate of an accepted agricultural college, having specialized in entomology. Five months.

Charles E. Smith, Baton Rouge, La. Has charge of the operations at one of the bureau's field stations in connection with the eradication campaign against the sweet-potato weevil. Graduate of an accepted agricultural college, having specialized in entomology. Three years.

ASSISTANTS IN TRUCK-CROP INSECT INVESTIGATIONS.

These employees are men of considerable experience in the Bureau of Entomology, who by reason of demonstrated ability in research, life-history studies, and investigations and experiments in control measures in connection with truck-crop insects have been placed in charge of bureau field stations in various localities. The character of the research investigations which they are conducting demands that men experienced and trained in the particular lines be employed in their prosecution. All these employees are working on problems of research closely allied to the present conservation program.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Roy E. Campbell, Alhambra, Cal. Has charge of field station dealing especially with sugar-beet insects. College graduate, having specialized in entomology. Five years.

Fred A. Johnston, Kingsville, Tex. Has charge of one of the bureau's field stations in connection with the eradication campaign against the sweet-potato weevil. College graduate, specializing in entomology. Eight years.

Corwin F. Stahl, Spreckels, Cal. Engaged in study of insect transmission of curly top of sugar beets, probably the most serious disease of this crop in the United States. College graduate, specializing in entomology. Six years.

Francis M. Wadley, Wichita, Kans. Has charge of general truck-crop insect investigations at the bureau's field station at Wichita, Kans. College graduate, specializing in entomology. Four years.

C. F. Moreland, Baton Rouge, La. In connection with the sweet-potato weevil eradication campaign, is engaged in a survey of the food plants of this insect in order to determine all the facts possible regarding its feeding habits. This investigation is very essential to the effective prosecution of control measures. Mr. Moreland is fitted for this character of work by reason of his special botanical training and especially his familiarity with the flora of southern Louisiana. Graduate Louisiana State University, B. S. and M. S.; prior thereto attended Washington and Lee University one year. Was raised on a farm. Prior to entering department service was instructor in botany at the Louisiana State University. Two months.

A. J. Ackerman, Bentonville, Ark. Has charge of field experimental work in the control of apple insects in the Ozarks. This work has a direct bearing on increased food production. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Four years.

L. C. Antles, Grand Junction, Colo. Has charge of the bureau's investigations of the codling moth in the Grand Valley, Colo., which involves large-scale spraying operations in the control of this insect. Graduate Colorado Agricultural College, B. S.; also took postgraduate work at the Pennsylvania State College. Before entering the department service had three seasons' experience in orchard-insect work in the Grand Valley, Colo. Two months.

EXTENSION AGENTS IN DECIDUOUS FRUIT INSECT CONTROL.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the cases of the following agents engaged in extension work in deciduous fruit insect control. This work involves the giving of demonstrations of the proper methods of controlling insects affecting deciduous fruits. It has a direct bearing on increased food production, and, in view of the scarcity of men trained along this line, it would be very difficult to replace those now in the employ of the department.

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

J. M. Robinson, Raleigh, N. C. Graduate, University of Miami, B. S.; also received degree of M. S. from the Ohio State University. Nine months.

Oliver I. Snapp, Agricultural College, Miss. Graduate, Virginia Polytechnic Institute, B. S.; also took postgraduate work in entomology at the Maryland State College of Agriculture. One year nine months.

E. W. Atkins, Ames, Iowa. Is specialist in beekeeping in cooperation with the extension services of Missouri, Iowa, Kansas, and Nebraska. This work includes field demonstrations and lectures among beekeepers, in cooperation with county agents. It has been increasingly difficult to find men of the proper training and experience for this type of extension work. Five vacancies now exist in the staff engaged upon this work, which so far it has been found impossible to fill. Graduate Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Ontario. Prior to entering department served as deputy apiary inspector in Ontario and as specialist in apiculture at the Nebraska Experiment Station; also was engaged as commercial beekeeper in Ontario. Seven months.

D. J. Caffrey, Hagerstown, Md. Has charge of the laboratory investigations on wireworms and cutworms; also work on European cornstalk borer in New England. These pests are responsible for tremendous losses in food crops. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College; also did postgraduate work at that institution. Prior to present appointment was for three months assistant to the entomologist of Massachusetts Experiment Station and for two years assistant to the State entomologist of Connecticut. Five years one month.

Frank S. Chamberlin, Quincy, Fla. Has charge of a substation at Quincy, Fla., investigating the tobacco budworm and other important tobacco insects. Received two years' training at the Worcester Polytechnic Institute and graduated from Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. For two summers before entering the department held the position of deputy State nursery inspector of Massachusetts. Eleven and one-half months.

T. R. Chamberlin, Salt Lake City, Utah. Conducts control experiments with respect to the efficacy of certain cultural methods in the control of alfalfa weevil. Is the only fully experienced assistant remaining on this investigation, the two other older assistants having recently left the service, one for military duty and the other to engage in State work. Attended University of Utah. Five years six months.

Bert R. Coad, Tallulah, La. Has charge of the bureau laboratory, which conducts investigations of the cotton-boll weevil in the Mississippi Delta. He has had years of training in the boll-weevil work. Graduate University of Illinois, majoring in entomology. Served under the State entomologist after graduation for some time before entering the department. Six years six months.

ASSISTANTS IN COTTON-BOLL WEEVIL CONTROL.

These assistants are engaged in practical experiments in the control of the cotton-boll weevil, especially in the determination of the proper methods of using arsenate of lead. It is necessary to retain their services, at least during the present crop season, on account of the difficulty that has been experienced in obtaining men familiar with the cotton-boll weevil problem. These men have been especially trained for the work upon which they are engaged.

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Webb B. Williams, Tallulah, La. Attended Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College for several years, specializing in entomological work. Two years seven and one-half months.

F. C. Craighead, East Falls Church, Va. Concerned primarily in the conservation, through the prevention of insect damage, of forest products, especially those used by the Army and Navy. Very much timber especially valuable to the Army and Navy is rendered unusable because of insect injury. The investigations conducted by Mr. Craighead have made and are making it possible to recommend control measures which will prevent this damage. The position is one which no training other than that gained through experience can be of immediate service. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. A.; took postgraduate work at George Washington University. Seven years.

C. W. Creel, Forest Grove, Oreg. In charge of a large and important field station located at Forest Grove, Oreg., and of all the investigations of the bureau on the clover-flower midge, alfalfa-seed chalcis, Hessian fly, and grasshoppers under way in the Pacific Northwest. Is directing a special campaign during the present season for the suppression of grasshoppers, the Coulee cricket, and the clover-flower midge in an effort to produce a full crop of red-clover seed. Graduate University of Nevada, B. S.; subsequently was assistant to the State entomolist of Nevada two years. Seven years four months.

W. M. Davidson, Sacramento, Cal. Engaged in the investigation of predatory insects, especially the ladybird beetles, in cooperation with the California State Horticultural Commission. This work involves careful life-history studies of the insects in question and their liberation in orchards on a practical scale where they are likely to become established. Graduate Leland Stanford University, B. S. Seven years four months.

A. B. Duckett, Bladensburg, Md. At the present time is the only well-trained assistant in the stored product insect branch of the Bureau of Entomology. He not only takes charge of the office during the absence of the branch chief, but has recently been assigned the very important task, in cooperation with the War Department, of reporting to the chief storage officer of the port of New York the condition of Federal supplies purchased and stored at the Bush Terminals in New York. This is a distinct war service. Graduate Maryland State College of Agriculture. Six years three and one-half months.

William O. Ellis, Riverton, N. J. Has charge at Riverton, N. J., of the bureau's investigations of the recently introduced Japanese beetle. This work involves careful life-history studies of the insect, its behavior, and experimental work in the field to effect its control. Mr. Ellis is also assisting in the work of the eradication of the beetle now under way. Graduate Lebanon Valley College (Annville, Pa.), A. B.; pursued postgraduate studies at the Iowa State College, specializing in advanced botany and general and research entomology; also took postgraduate work at Cornell University, specializing in economic entomology and advanced zoology. One year.

W. T. Emery, Wichita, Kans. Engaged as the ranking assistant in the Hessian-fly investigations located at Wichita, Kans., and is conducting biological work in connection with these activities, with which he alone is entirely familiar. Graduate Kansas State University, A. M. Subsequently was assistant to the Kansas Entomological Commission for one year. Four years one month.

A. I. Fabis, Brownwood, Tex. Has charge of the bureau's laboratory at Brownwood, Tex., where investigations of pecan insects are being carried out in that region. This work involves careful life-history studies of the important insect enemies of this crop and the carrying out in the field of large-scale experiments in their control. Graduate College of the City of New York, B. S.; also completed one year's work in entomology at Cornell University. Four years four months.

R. J. Fiske, Roswell, N. Mex. Has charge of the bureau's investigations of the codling moth in the Pecos Valley, N. Mex., involving careful life-history studies of the insect and large-scale field experiments in its control. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S.; previous to entering the department was acting in charge of the entomological work of the Porto Rican Agricultural Experiment Station. Three years ten months.

A. L. Ford, Manhattan, Kans. Engaged as special field agent in extension work for the State of Kansas. Was assigned to this work at the urgent request of the State director of extension and State entomologist, in order to prevent the suspension of the entire entomological extension program, and is conducting important demonstration work on the control of insects affecting the production of winter wheat. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, M. S. For three years previous to present appointment was assistant in entomology at this institution. Ten months.

John B. Gill, Monticello, Fla. For five years has had charge of the bureau's investigations of pecan insects in the South, with headquarters at Monticello, Fla. This work involves careful life-history studies of the important insect enemies of the pecan and the carrying out in the field of large-scale experiments in the control of these insects. Eight years.

Rudolf W. Glaser, Forest Hills, Mass. For several years he has had charge of the investigation of the wilt disease which destroys gypsy-moth caterpillars. This has required a technical study in order to determine the causative organism of wilt. He is now working on a bacterial disease introduced from Japan, which affects gypsy-moth caterpillars. These experiments are only partially completed. Five years two months.

Charles C. Hill, Carlisle, Pa. Has charge of a branch of the Hessian-fly investigations east of the Alleghany Mountains. The work he is performing is of a peculiarly technical nature. Student at Harvard College; graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Prior to entering department was nursery inspector in Massachusetts for one year. Four years.

Thomas E. Holloway, New Orleans, La. Has charge of the bureau laboratory at New Orleans, La., where investigations of the sugar-cane insects and the Argentine ant are undertaken. Is at present in Cuba obtaining parasites for introduction into the United States for the control of the sugar-cane moth borer. The moth borer is one of the principal enemies of cane, and now menaces the future of the cane-sugar industry in this country. The only possible hope of controlling this pest is by the introduction of parasites. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College. Engaged in entomological work for the Texas Experiment Station two years before entering the service of the department. Nine years.

Robert H. Hutchison, Washington, D. C. Mr. Hutchison is the bureau's authority on the house fly and its control. He has also been engaged upon an investigation regarding the life history and control of the body and head lice commonly called "cooties." The cootie problem has opened up many fields for investigation, and unless the work is continued the matter may be dropped completely and important and necessary information will not be obtained. He is also cooperating with the Chemical Warfare Service in connection with tests that are being made of all poisonous gases now used in warfare with a hope that possibly some gas may be available which could be used for freeing the men wearing masks of all cooties. Also, at the request of the Medical Department, he is testing an unusual apparatus for the control of the cootie. In cooperation with the Quartermaster's Department, Mr. Hutchison is engaged in experiments to determine the effect of all processes of laundry and dry-cleaning establishments for the control of the cootie. He is thoroughly familiar with the technique of breeding the cootie, and has a thorough grasp of the whole subject. Graduate La Fayette College (Pa.); took postgraduate work at the University of Pennsylvania. Four years eleven and one-half months.

H. G. Ingerson, Lakewood, Ohio. Has charge of the bureau's investigations of grape insects, with headquarters at Cleveland, Ohio. This work involves careful life-history studies of the insects and carrying out in vineyards of large-scale experiments in their control. It is also necessary for Mr. Ingerson to visit various vineyardists in the grape-growing territory and instruct them in methods of insect control. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Four years two months.

Dwight Isely, Bentonville, Ark. Has for some years had charge of the bureau's investigations of grape insects in the northeast Pennsylvania grape belt. At present is assigned to an investigation of apple insects in the Ozarks, with headquarters at Bentonville, Ark. This work involves careful life-history studies of important apple insects and the carrying out in the field of large-scale experiments in their control. Graduate Fairmont College (Wichita, Kans.), A. B.; received degree of M. A. from Kansas University. Four years.

Dettmar W. Jones, Melrose Highlands, Mass. Engaged on experimental work in connection with the introduction of parasites of the gipsy moth and the brown-tail moth and is carrying on special investigations on several introduced species. Four years.

Willard V. King, New Orleans, La. For several years represented the Bureau of Entomology in the studies of pellagra undertaken by the Thompson-McFadden Commission. For several seasons following this work had charge of the bureau's work in Montana on the Rocky Mountain spotted-fever tick. The winter seasons were spent by Dr. King in malaria-mosquito investigations in New Orleans, where he made an unusual record. During 1916 he discovered that a species of mosquito which has heretofore not been considered an efficient carrier of malaria, can do so. He also conducts special investigations on the body louse and is a recognized authority on medical entomology. Graduate Montana Agricultural College; also received degree of Ph. D. from Tulane University. Nine years.

Max Kisliuk, jr., Miami, Fla. Engaged in control work on the army worms, which are doing serious injury to plantings of castor beans in Florida; also in working out measures for controlling other castor-bean insects. The Signal Corps of the Army has made large contracts for plantings of castor beans in order that a sufficient supply of oil may be available as a lubricant for airplane motors. Conditions on these plantations are so serious that the bureau is concentrating all the men it can spare on the problem. Graduate Maryland Agricultural College; did postgraduate work at the Ohio State University, receiving his master's degree from the latter institution. One year eight and one-half months.

E. W Laake, Dallas, Tex. Engaged in work on live-stock insect pests and in cooperative experiments with the Bureau of Animal Industry in the control of insects in meat-packing establishments. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Four years eleven and one-half months.

M. C. Lane, Forest Grove, Oreg. Has assisted in the grasshopper control and investigational work in the northwestern part of the country. At present is engaged in the clover-seed chalcis campaigns in the Pacific Northwest. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S., majoring in entomology. Prior to department appointment was a deputy nursery inspector of Massachusetts and had practical experience in bee management. One year six months.

B. R. Leach, Winchester, Va. Has charge of the bureau's laboratory at Winchester, Va., where investigations are being carried out on the important apple insects in that region. The comparative merits of dust and liquid sprays in the control of these insects is being worked out. Mr. Leach has had considerable experience along this line. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Four years four months.

T. F. McGehee, Tallulah, La. Is first assistant in the cotton-boll weevil investigations conducted at Tallulah, La. He has had experience in this investigation during the past four years. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Four years ten months.

R. B. McKeown, Medford, Oreg. Assists in codling-moth investigations in the Rogue River Valley, Oreg., with headquarters at Medford. Graduate Colorado Agricultural College, B. S. One year.

William M. Mann, Washington, D. C. Has devoted practically all his time to studying and classifying ants referred to the Bureau of Entomology, and recently has completed a very thorough survey of Cuba and the Bahamas to determine injurious insects, including ants, which might be introduced either through commerce or on nursery stock into the United States. Can speak the languages in vogue in practically all of the countries requiring special investigation to determine injurious insects likely to be introduced, and is also familiar with the conditions existing in these countries. Attended Washington College of Agriculture two years; also two years at Leland Stanford Junior University, receiving the degree of B. A. from the latter institution; subsequently received the degree of D. S. from Harvard University. Prior to entering the Government service spent six years in studying ants under the direct supervision of Dr. W. M. Wheeler, who is the world's recognized authority on this group of insects. In addition, has devoted two summers to study at the Marine Biological Laboratory, and for two years held a traveling fellowship from Harvard for ant work in the Fiji and Solomon Islands and Australia. Other explorations were made by him in Brazil, Bolivia, Mexico, Haiti, Arabia, Syria, Bahama Islands, and various parts of the United States. Ten months.

Harold Morrison, Washington, D. C. Is entomological explorer in charge of an insect survey of the West Indian Islands and Central and South American countries. This survey has particular relation to fruit flies and other insect pests of plants and plant products likely to be brought into the United States through the agency of commerce from the regions designated. He is also in charge of the collection of fruit flies and other pests from the regions named which are being collected and forwarded to the Bureau of Entomology from time to time by various official entomologists, directs the correspondence and the work of various collaborators, and makes personal surveys to check up the work and to supplement it with such specific studies as may be necessary to secure the desired information over the entire field. He has already completed a preliminary survey of the Virgin Islands, San Domingo, and Cuba, and, in addition, has made a specific study of the citrus black fly, a dangerous insect which has not yet gained a foothold in the States, in Cuba, Jamaica, and the Canal Zone. The importance of keeping out injurious insects affecting tropical and subtropical fruits which have not yet gained entrance into the continent is well recognized. Graduate Cornell University, B. A.; also received the degree of M. A. from Leland Stanford University. For five years was assistant to the State entomologist of Indiana, devoting most of his time to the inspection of foreign and domestic nursery stock and the determination of insects and plant diseases. Prior to present appointment was entomological inspector of the Federal Horticultural Board. Two years three and one-half months.

G. F. Moznette, Miami, Fla. Has charge of field work in the study of the life history, habits, and means of control of fruit flies and other insect enemies of mango, guava, avocado, and other subtropical fruits which are being commercially developed in southern Florida. He also cooperates with the Federal Horticultural Board and has charge of the inspection and safeguarding of plants grown in the plant-introduction garden at Miami, Fla., maintained by the Bureau of Plant Industry. This project covers an important field of special fruit development in southern Florida and is particularly important because of the location at Miami of one of the department's principal plant-introduction gardens, and because of the proximity of this region to Cuba and the Bahamas, which under existing traffic conditions renders it very subject to possible invasion by a number of serious fruit insect enemies, which are known to occur in the West Indies. Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, B. S.; did one year's postgraduate work at University of California. Prior to present appointment was assistant entomologist at the Oregon Agricultural Experiment Station for two years, and served for one year as entomological inspector in the Federal Horticultural Board. Eleven months.

Paul R. Myers, Carlisle, Pa. Is ranking assistant attached to Hessian-fly investigations east of the Alleghany Mountains. Prior to present employment was assistant in the department of agriculture of Pennsylvania four years and assistant in the United States National Museum four years. Four years.

E. J. Newcomer, Portland, Oreg. Engaged in investigations of important peach insects. Graduate Leland Stanford University, A. B., also took postgraduate work in entomology at this institution. Four years one month.

C. M. Packard, Berkeley, Cal. Has complete charge of the Hessian-fly investigations in California. Also cooperates in the grasshopper-control work carried on in that State. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Was assistant in horticulture at the college two years. Five years.

J. H. Paine, Washington, D. C. Engaged in orchard insect-survey work. This work involves making observations on important deciduous-fruit insects. In addition, Mr. Paine is an insect photographer. Graduate Leland Stanford University, B. S. Five years six months.

H. R. Painter, Charleston, Mo. Assistant in investigations of the Hessian fly, chinch bug, and billbug at the bureau's station at Charleston, Mo. Graduate, Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Was subsequently assistant State entomologist of Oklahoma. Two months.

F. W. Poos, Charlottesville, Va. Conducts field operations in connection with the experimental control of the wheat jointworm, which has been very injurious throughout the winter-wheat belt for the past two years. Graduate University of Kansas, M. A. Was assistant to the Kansas entomological commission one year, and agent for the Florida State plant commission one year. One year.

P. A. Porter, Wallingford, Conn. Has been engaged in life-history studies of parasites attacking deciduous-fruit insects. Has accumulated considerable data in connection with the life histories of these parasites. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. One year.

Dean A. Ricker, West Lafayette, Ind. Engaged as assistant in the long-term experiments in connection with the investigation of the Hessian fly and white grub, having charge of field plots and other work in northern Indiana. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Was assistant in gypsy-moth control work one year prior to present appointment. Three years.

L. P. Rockwood, Forest Grove, Oreg. Is ranking assistant at the bureau's Forest Grove (Oreg.) laboratory. Is engaged in active field work in connection with the campaign for the increased production of red-clover seed through the suppression of the clover-seed chalcis and clover-flower midge. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Was employed one year as assistant in mosquito-control work in Massachusetts. Six years.

S. A. Rohwer, East Falls Church, Va. Has charge of the eastern field station of the branch of forest insects. The primary problems investigated by him are (a) phenological records on plants and insects in relation to the bioclimatic law, and (b) work on insect galls for the purpose of obtaining an American substitute for those galls which heretofore have been introduced and form a necessary ingredient in the manufacture of record inks, especially those used in the Treasury Department. These galls also supply necessary properties in certain useful dyes and form one source of supply of gallic and tannic acids. This work is of such a nature that it can be conducted only by one who can qualify by the training gained through experience. Attended University of Colorado, specializing in biology and allied sciences, work at university being supplemented by independent researches of a technical nature; received special training under the direction of two very prominent American entomologists. Eight years ten months.

John V. Schaffner, jr., Sherborn, Mass. Has been conducting experimental work in the field in the control of gypsy and brown-tail moths, and for the past three or four years has had charge of a section of the work. Six years seven months.

E. R. Selkregg, Washington, D. C. Has charge of life-history investigations of the oriental peach moth at Arlington Farm, Va., which involves cafeful life-history studies of the insect as a basis for determining means of control. This insect has recently been discovered and is proving to be a serious pest of peach, pear, apple, quince, and other fruits. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Four years.

Melvin B. Shepherd, Melrose Highlands, Mass. Has been employed for past five years in colonizing imported parasites of the gipsy and brown-tail moth and making collections from colonies liberated in order to determine the success of the plantings. Has a thorough knowledge of the location of different parasite colonies throughout the infested area in New England, also the methods used in handling parasitic material at the laboratory. Six years seven months.

E. H. Siegler, Wallingford, Conn. Has been continuously engaged in investigations of deciduous-fruit insects and their control, and is a specialist in apple-insect investigations, being in charge of this line of work for the bureau in different localities. Is at the present time in charge of the bureau's laboratory at Wallingford, Conn., devoted to the investigation of important apple insects. This work includes a large amount of careful life-history studies of orchard insect pests, and especially the carrying out in the field of large-scale spraying, dusting, and other experiments in insect control. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Seven years one month.

Arnold P. Sturtevant, Washington, D. C. Engaged in a study of the causes and treatment of bee diseases. Also examines samples sent in by beekeepers from all parts of the United States for determination. The Bureau of Entomology has full knowledge of work done by experiment stations and other agencies, and no other bacteriologist could be secured to do this work. Graduate Clark University; did post-graduate work at Massachusetts Institute of Technology. Prior to present appointment was assistant to professor of bacteriology Massachusetts Institute of Technology; was also specialist in bee diseases, experiment station, Amherst, Mass. One year six months.

Chester F. Turner, West Lafayette, Ind. Has charge of Hessian-fly investigations at Nashville, Ill. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Subsequently was nursery inspector in Kansas and assistant in gypsy-moth control in Massachusetts one year. Four years seven months.

R. H. Van Zwaluwenburg, Hagerstown, Md. Engaged in a campaign for the control or extermination of the European cornstalk borer, a dangerous European pest which has recently become established in eastern Massachusetts. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S., majoring in entomology. Prior to present appointment was entomologist at the insular experiment station, Mayaguez, Porto Rico. Eight months.

W. B. Wood, Washington, D. C. Has charge of experimental work being carried out on the Arlington farm in the control of the oriental peach moth, which involves large-scale spraying experiments in the application of insecticides to determine the best means of controlling this insect. Mr. Wood has had a wide range of experience in life-history studies and control operations in connection with decidious-fruit insect investigations. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College, B. S. Seven years two months.

T. Scott Wilson, San Antonio, Tex. Is the sole assistant attached to the entomological field laboratory located at San Antonio, Tex. Is conducting an insect survey of Texas in cooperation with the State and bureau extension entomologists. Is also cooperating with these specialists in the insect-control work. Graduate University of Kansas, A. B. Subsequently was teacher of zoology and biology one year. Five years three months.

H. K. Plank, Seaview, Wash. Has charge of the bureau's laboratory at Seaview, Wash., where investigations of cranberry insects are being carried out in cooperation with the Washington Agricultural Experiment Station. Graduate Pennsylvania State College of Agriculture, B. S. Four years two months.

BUREAU OF BIOLOGICAL SURVEY.

BIOLOGICAL ASSISTANTS IN RODENT-CONTROL WORK.

Prairie dogs, ground squirrels, jack rabbits, pocket gophers, and other rodent pests occupy hundreds of millions of acres of public domain and private lands in the West. A considerable part of 17 States is occupied by these pests, which exist in such enormous numbers that they are highly destructive both to crops and to grazing. The losses in food crops alone are estimated from $6,000,000 to $9,000,000 annually in North Dakota, $20,000,000 in Montana, and approximately $30,000,000 in California. The losses in the other States involved are in proportion to the cultivated areas.

Through the investigations of its field experts the Bureau of Biological Survey has developed methods of destroying these pests on a large scale and at small cost, even with the present high prices of material. The methods employed by this bureau in rodent-control work have been developed within the past three or four years, and, as a result, the only available specialists who have a sufficient knowledge of the work to handle it effectively are the extremely limited number of men who have been employed in it.

Each of these assistants is in charge of rodent campaigns in the destruction of these pests over vast areas. Through cooperation with the State extension services thousands of farmers are working under the direction of these experts in exterminating rodent pests. In North Dakota during the present season 33,000 farmers are working in the campaign organized by one of these men, and it is expected that more than 13,000,000 acres of land will be largely freed from ground squirrels and that a great increase in the grain output of that State will result. The bureau's expert, in combination with the State extension service, is planning a still greater campaign next year. In Montana about 20,000 farmers are engaged in a rodent campaign under the direction of one of these men. In New Mexico the State council of defense has allotted money to be expended under the direction of one of the bureau's assistants in a campaign against noxious animals in order to increase the food output of that State the present year, and the result has been so gratifying that the chairman of the council has requested that this cooperation be repeated the coming year.

Everywhere in the States where the bureau is working the communities are putting up many thousands of dollars and the farmers are cooperating in constantly growing numbers, owing to the obvious saving of food resulting from the wholesale destruction of rodents which maintain themselves throughout the season by feeding upon planted crops. There is a demand for more than double the number of experts that are now available for this work. To take away the few competent men engaged on these projects would leave the bureau without the necessary force to carry on the work and would deprive it of the necessary experts to train the additional men needed, as well as to continue the important campaigns now in progress.

The State directors of extension work, farmers, and others in the States where this work is being conducted agree in the opinion that it is directly adding many millions of dollars to the food output of the country each season. The effects of the work are so apparent that the public demand for assistance and assignment of experts to guide local campaigns far exceeds the bureau's ability to comply.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Winney E. Crouch, Boise, Idaho. Graduate North Dakota College of Agriculture. One year eleven months.

Gilbert F. Bateman, Tucumcari, N. Mex. Attended the Colorado Agricultural College two years, specializing in biology. One year four months.

Ray T. Jackson, Laramie, Wyo. Graduate Colorado College of Agriculture. Five years eight months.

Donald A. Gilchrist, Flagstaff, Ariz. Graduate Colorado College of Agriculture. Three years seven months.

Urban S. Ebner, Fargo, N. Dak. Graduate North Dakota College of Agriculture. Two years eleven months.

Charles F. Bliss, Albuquerque, N. Mex. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S., specializing in forestry; also took special training in advanced physiology and ecology at the University of Minnesota, obtaining a degree of M. S. in forestry. Seven years eleven months.

Benjamin B. Richards, Provo, Utah. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College. Two years three months.

James Silver, jr., Denver, Colo. Graduate Colorado College of Agriculture. Five years.

Cedric R. Landon, predatory-animal inspector, San Angelo, Tex. Has had charge of the bureau's predatory-animal campaigns in Texas three years. Has developed an efficient force of hunters and managed the work successfully. He has secured the hearty support of the ranchmen and live-stock associations, which are supplying funds for the employment of additional hunters under his supervision. His experience with conditions on the Texas ranges and his knowledge of the available competent hunters, as well as his acquaintanceship among the live-stock growers and their confidence in him, are assets of great value in connection with the work in that region. It is difficult to find experienced men for the predatory-animal work even under normal conditions. Three years seven months.

BUREAU OF CROP ESTIMATES.

FIELD AGENTS.

Each field agent of the Bureau of Crop Estimates is required to keep so thoroughly in touch with the agricultural conditions in his territory that he can not only make accurate reports to the department for publication month by month, but that he may be considered the highest authority on such matters in his State. These objects are accomplished by (1) travel and close study to learn at first hand acreages planted, relative changes in condition of crops, and probable yield; (2) personal interviews with the best-informed men in each section; (3) extensive circularization of the territory, for which purpose large lists of individuals trained in reporting crop conditions are maintained; and (4) the maintenance of detailed records acquired by crop-reporting methods in previous years, as well as records from all other sources possible, such as assessors' returns, census reports, etc., so compiled as to facilitate comparison and study. These duties are incidental to the issuance of the regular crop report each month. In addition, special reports are frequently required to be made, which usually involve special trips to restricted areas, preparation of mimeographed inquiries, tabulation of returns, and report to Washington.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the case of five field agents of the Bureau of Crop Estimates. Each is an experienced man, whom it would be difficult to replace, and whose services in connection with the present and prospective food supply are of great importance during the continuance of the war. Unquestionably the retention of these men in their present positions is necessary to the adequate and effective operation of the crop-reporting service, and none of them could be replaced without substantial material loss. Furthermore, each represents an investment by the Government of a large sum of money in preliminary training, getting acquainted with his territory, and becoming familiar with methods and sources of estimating crops and live stock, which can be acquired only in the service of the Bureau of Crop Estimates. If any of these men should leave the bureau, several months would be lost in obtaining a successor through the Civil Service Commission, and a year or more would be required to train his successor to the point where his judgment would be sufficiently developed to be of value.

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Aaron E. Anderson, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, degree of B. S. in agriculture; first 18 years of life spent on farm. Four years.

Hal F. Bryant, Charleston, W. Va. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. Three years four months.

Guy Fitzpatrick, Missoula, Mont. Graduate Minnesota College of Agriculture, B. S. Five years eight months.

Harry O. Herbrandson, Watertown, S. Dak. Graduate North Dakota Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Four years.

Julius H. Jacobson, Blackfoot, Idaho. Graduate Utah Agricultural College, B. S. Prior to present appointment was engaged one year in practical farming; three and one-half years, agriculture, Department of the Interior; and four years assistant in dry-land agriculture, Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture. Five years four months.

FRUIT AND TRUCK CROP SPECIALISTS.

Crop specialists, as a rule, maintain no lists of reporters. Most of their information is gained by travel and by interviewing large numbers of individuals. The information thus gathered is used to supplement and as a check against similar information gathered from other sources by the bureau or its field agents. The territory of crop specialists is more extended than that of field agents. The productive region for fruit and truck crops is divided according to the number of assistant crop specialists available. The truck crop specialists are assigned certain territories extending across the country from South to North, and their travel is regulated by the progress of the trucking season from South to North. Their reports are submitted weekly by telegraph to the chief truck crop specialist at Washington and are considered in connection with information obtained from other sources, resulting in the issuance by the bureau of weekly and semimonthly truck crop reports. The fruit crop specialists devote special attention to surveys of apple and peach growing sections. Their travel is continuous, and the results of their observations, together with the returns from printed inquiries among orchardists, are embodied in monthly reports.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the case of four crop specialists. Each is well qualified for the work to which he is assigned, before receiving appointment having passed a rigid civil-service examination requiring a basic knowledge of scientific agriculture, statistical methods, etc. The withdrawal of any one of these men would result in substantial, material loss and detriment to the adequate and effective operation of the crop-reporting service. Furthermore, like the field agents, these crop specialists represent an investment by the Government of a large sum of money in preliminary training, getting acquainted with their territory, and becoming familiar with methods and sources of estimating fruit and truck crops, which can be learned only in the service of the Bureau of Crop Estimates.

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Charles G. Carpenter, New Orleans, La. Assistant truck crop specialist, whose territory extends throughout the United States. One year two months.

J. Clifford Folger. Fruit crop specialist, whose territory extends throughout the United States. Graduate Washington State College of Agriculture, bachelor of science in horticulture; candidate for doctor of physics in agricultural economics. Two years.

R. G. Risser, San Francisco, Cal. Assistant truck crop specialist, whose territory extends throughout the United States west of the Mississippi. One year six months.

Samuel M. Thomson, Washington, D. C. Assistant fruit crop specialist, traveling extensively throughout the United States. Graduate Cornell University; bachelor of science. Prior to present appointment had several years' service and wide experience with fruit crops in the Office of Farm Management of this department. Four years three months.

STATES' RELATIONS SERVICE.

COOPERATIVE AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK.

The cooperative extension act of May 8, 1914, provided for a nation-wide system of instruction for the farming population in agriculture and home economics outside of the schools and colleges. It established a close copartnership between the Federal and State agencies in the organization and administration of the extension service. When a state of war was declared it was realized that the cooperative extension system, with its combination of Federal and State administrative officers and specialists, county agents, home demonstration agents, farm bureaus, and other local organizations furnished a ready and effective means for the nation-wide dissemination of the needed facts as well as for practical demonstrations of the best methods of increasing agricultural production and securing the most economical utilization of the products of the farm. Recognizing the importance of this great system, Congress appropriated $4,348,400 for its immediate development. This involved the rapid extension of the work to all sections of the Union and necessitated the employment of a large number of additional county agents, home demonstration agents, club agents, and the like, at the very time when the department was losing many of its most effective and trained employees

The cooperative extension service, as now developed, consists of a well-organized field force reaching into most of the agricultural counties in the United States, through which the Department of Agriculture, and other Federal agencies acting in cooperation with it, as well as State and county agencies, are able to reach the farmers in a very direct way and to assist them in the difficult problems presented during the continuance of the war. In each State there is a director of extension, with administrative assistants and specialists. There is also a county agricultural agent in each of 2,450 counties, and a county home demonstration agent in each of 1,800 counties.

The county agents work with and through various organizations, such as farmers' associations, farm bureaus, county councils of agriculture, county councils of defense, and the like. In a large part of the United States the organization extends to every community in each county, with voluntary workers in each community organization acting in consonance with the National and State forces in the matter of food production and conservation. Through this organized force the needs of the Nation in food production are made known to the farmers, and they are assisted in planning their work so as to best meet these needs. In this way the farmers are aided in locating supplies of seed, in securing fertilizer and farm implements, in the prevention of outbreak of animal diseases, in the control of plant diseases and insect pests, in the utilization of better farm implements to save labor, and community cooperation to supply labor, and in securing the assistance of city and town people in supplying the labor needs of farmers. They are also assisted in dealing with problems of marketing and storage, prevention of waste, conservation, saving of fuel, etc. Assistance is rendered to farm women in the problems of gardening, dairying, poultry raising, canning, preserving, drying, and otherwise conserving food for future use, as well as the utilization of food and the substitution of foods which are plentiful for those which are scarce.

These agents also render valuable assistance in liberty loan, Red Cross, war savings, and other campaigns and aid local draft boards in considering of furloughs from the Army for agricultural purposes. They supply the Department of Agriculture with accruate information regarding production, outbreaks of disease among animals and plants, outbreaks of insect pests, and difficulties in marketing, and keep the Government posted generally regarding all matters affecting agriculture within the counties.

STATE AGENTS AND COUNTY AGENT LEADERS AND ASSISTANTS.

State agents in charge of county-agent work are usually selected from men who have been successful county agents. Their duties are to supervise the work of their assistants, and through them of the agents, to carry the food-production program of the Federal department and the State agricultural colleges to the farmers of the State, and of each county through the organized efforts of the district and county agents, and to assist them in adapting it to the agricultural possibilities of the county. They maintain relationships with the specialists at the agricultural college and in the Federal Department of Agriculture and adapt their campaigns to the work of the county agents. They receive, compile, and summarize the reports of the agents and report upon the work to the extension director and to the department.

Assistant State agents or district agents and assistant county-agent leaders have a prescribed territory consisting of a number of counties in which county agents are located. Under the administrative direction of the director of extension and the State agents these men travel from county to county and supervise the work of the county agents. They perfect the necessary financial arrangements before a county agent is employed, check up on the agent's method of conducting his work, give him instructions, and guide him on questions of policy, and assist him in all problems of organization. They also aid the county agent in carrying to the people any agricultural plan or campaign outlined by the department and the college. They perfect the plans for the work of specialists coming from the colleges and the department to assist county agents and, in short, deal with all the problems and all the types of work of the county agent in an administrative way.

As a rule, a district agent supervises the demonstration work of from 12 to 25 counties.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by the draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Thomas L. Asbury, Madison, Ga. Graduate Georgia State College of Agriculture, B. S. Was reared on farm and has had practical experience in dairying and general farm work. Two years eleven and one-half months.

Spencer B. Cleland, St. Paul, Minn. Graduate Minnesota College of Agriculture. Since graduation has done farm-survey work in Minnesota. Three years ten months.

James M. Gray, Asheville, N. C Graduate Agricultural and Mechanical College of North Carolina, B. S.; took postgraduate studies. Was reared on a farm. While in college spent two summers on farm and two summers in college dairy. Managed farm one year. Three years six months.

Dewitt T. Hardin, Chattanooga, Tenn. Graduate Clemson College; also received M. S. A. degree in University of Tennessee. Reared on a farm. Assisted in short-course work; official tester for the Tennessee Experiment Station two years. Four years three months.

Albert L. Love, Nashville, Tenn. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; attended summer schools Mississippi Agricultural College and University of Chicago; took postgraduate course Mississippi Agricultural College; one year, George Washington University. Was reared on a farm; has worked and managed several farms in Mississippi and is familiar with general-crop production. Taught school four years. Three years five months.

Paul W. Monohon, Orono, Me. Graduate University of Maine, taking agricultural course. Was assistant to dean of College of Agriculture, Orono, Me., one year; also assistant to director of extension. One year ten months.

William E. Morris, Olivia, Minn. Graduate Wisconsin College of Agriculture. Was assistant in feed and fertilizer inspection and dairy tests, Wisconsin Experiment Station, two terms; also had charge of animal husbandry and dairy department of the La Crosse County School of Agriculture. Four years ten months.

George E. Piper, Manhattan, Kans. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Prior to present appointment edited agricultural supplement for Associated Publishers Syndicate; was foreman on a 6,000-acre live-stock and grain ranch in Montana. Three years three months.

Harvey C. Ray, Little Rock, Ark. Spent four years at the State School, Missouri, Lincoln Institute; two years postgraduate course at Tuskegee Institute, Ala.; specialized in general agriculture and farming. For three years was superintendent of agricultural department, Langston University, Langston, Okla. Was raised on a farm, and has a very practical knowledge of all kinds of farm operations. Three years six months.

Carl M. Rose, Lexington, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College; took postgraduate work in agriculture at Cornell University. Prior to present appointment was for two years manager of a large plantation in Mississippi; afterwards served as county agent. Nine months.

Phil Sheldon, Lincoln, Nebr. Attended University of Nebraska College of Agriculture. Ten months.

Lewis A. Toan, Rochester, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. A. Was farm manager four years after leaving college. Taught agriculture in high school one year. Was manager Monroe County Farm Bureau four years. Eleven months.

Hu S. Vandervort, Morgantown, W. Va. Graduate West Virginia University, B. S. in agriculture; postgraduate work, same institution. Was reared on a farm. Prior to present appointment served as county agent three years. Two years eleven months.

Wylie R. Ward, Omaha, Nebr. Attended Wesleyan University one year; graduate College of Agriculture, University of Nebraska, B. S. Was instructor in agronomy at University of Nebraska two terms. Ten months.

Lawrence A. Wickland, Omaha, Nebr. Graduate Nebraska University, B. S., in agriculture; taught school. Seven months.

N. C Wickland, Omaha, Nebr. Graduate Nebraska University, B. S. Taught school four years before and one year after graduating; also engaged in farming. Ten months.

Collett E. Woolman, Baton Rouge, La. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. in agriculture. Spent six months abroad studying agriculture in England, France, Germany, and Holland. Farm reared, with extensive practical farm experience. Four years nine and one-half months.

COUNTY AGENTS AND ASSISTANT AGENTS.

A county agent is a joint employee of the United States Department of Agriculture, the State agricultural college, and the county government, or some organization in the county. Generally he is a graduate in agriculture of a State agricultural college, has had practical experience in farming, and possesses personal qualifications for leadership in agriculture.

His duties are to secure the cooperation of farmers in conducting on their farms, with their own laborers, tools, and equipment, and at their own expense, cooperative demonstrations to illustrate better farm practices in the raising of crops, feeding of live stock, and, in many cases, in farm management and marketing. He disseminates information generally to farmers—either to individuals upon request or through organized communities, meetings, etc. As a general rule he has the cooperation of some county or community organization of farming people, whereby he is enabled to reach the largest possible number of persons. These organizations also give the farmers an opportunity to take an active part in planning the program for the county-agent work so as to meet the real needs of agriculture in the respective communities. Where there are existing organizations of farmers he works through them, if possible. He brings to the farmers of the county on their own farms the agricultural information of the Department of Agriculture and the State agricultural colleges. His entire efforts are directed toward improving agricultural conditions, the introduction of the best methods, and the solution of difficult problems confronting the farmers.

An important part of his duties relates to the introduction and development of the live-stock industry, the standardization of breeds, and the organization of farmers for the control of live-stock diseases, such as hog cholera and blackleg. In this work he cooperates with the live-stock disease-control agencies of the State and Nation. He teaches farmers how to prevent damage from insects and organizes them to control insect pests and plant diseases whenever outbreaks occur. He cooperates in this work with the entomological and pathological specialists and those in charge of insect and plant-disease control.

During the war he has a large number of other duties. The agricultural campaigns or programs are carried out locally under his leadership. It is his duty to advise farmers regarding the needs of the Nation with reference to production, marketing, conservation, and the like and to suggest ways of meeting them.

This work is done through some county organization, whether it be farmers' associations, a county farm bureau, a county council of agriculture, or the county council of defense. He helps locate supplies of seed where needed; advises farmers, with the assistance of specialists, on problems of marketing and on the purchase of supplies, such as fertilizers, tools, equipment, etc.; deals with the farm-labor situation, under the direction of the farm-help specialists of the Department of Agriculture; and generally takes charge of all extension work in the county regarding food production, prevention of waste in production, storage, and marketing.

The farm-labor situation has presented many difficulties since the United States entered the war. The county agents have rendered valuable assistance in dealing with the problem, especially in determining the farm-labor needs of the county, registering available laborers, and supplying farmers with labor at the time needed. They have also emphasized the necessity of cooperation among farmers in the use of labor, machinery, and equipment.

The county agents have actively cooperated in the Red Cross, liberty loan, war saving, and other special war campaigns. Because of the wide experience that these men have already had and the contacts that they have established in the counties it would seriously interfere with the food-production and conservation campaigns if their services were to be discontinued. The work performed by them requires not only practical experience in farming but technical knowledge as well.

Assistant county agents have training and experience similar to that of the county agents. They are located in populous agricultural counties, working as assistants to and under the direction of the county agents.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Andrew H. Barnett, Camden, Ala. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. A. Has practical knowledge of farm work and the care and breeding of live stock. Two years four months.

William D. Barton, Prattville, Ala. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. A.; also took a summer course in chemistry. Had practical farm experience; for two years after leaving college managed farm of an agricultural school. Three years seven months.

Frank R. Curtis, Demopolis, Ala. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute. After graduation worked on his own farm for a short time; was then assistant manager of a plantation of 5,000 acres. Four years seven months.

Loyd J. Hawley, Troy, Ala. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Had practical farm experience. Three years nine months.

Robert C. Lett, Tuscaloosa, Ala., Box 606. Attended Alabama Polytechnic Institute. Has had practical farm experience. Four years five months.

James A. McLeod, Union Springs, Ala. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. in animal industry. Had practical experience in farming before entering college. Was assistant in animal industry at Alabama Polytechnic Institute 15 months after graduation. Three years.

Lewis C. Pace, Eutaw, Ala. Graduate Agricultural College of the University of Tennessee, B. S. Had practical farm experience. Taught agriculture in an agricultural high school one year after leaving college. Nine months.

George H. Stewart, Wedowee, Ala. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute; took postgraduate work at University of Wisconsin. Had practical farm experience. Ten months.

Joseph P. Wilson, Andalusia, Ala. Graduate Alabama Agricultural College, B. S. Had practical farm experience. Taught school four years after leaving college. Two years three months.

Emmitt S. Barrentine, Mammoth Spring, Ark. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took postgraduate work. Has had practical farm experience. Had three years' experience in teaching rural schools. Nine months.

Stanley D. Carpenter, Harrison, Ark. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Taught in agricultural high school two years. Was employed one year with the Florida State plant board in citrus-canker eradication work. Nine months.

James E. Critz, Marion, Ark. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural College, B. S. Had practical experience in all kinds of farm work. Was teacher in agricultural high school a year and a half. One year six months.

George R. Ely, Little Rock, Ark., old courthouse. Graduate State Agricultural College of Pennsylvania, B. S. Taught animal husbandry in agricultural school three years. Was for 16 months seed and fertilizer inspector for the commissioner of agriculture in Arkansas. Has had practical farm experience. Four and one-half months.

Joel Lambert, Pine Bluff, Ark. Has practical knowledge of all farm operations. Six years seven months.

Herbert A. McPherson, McGehee, Ark. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had actual farm experience. Was for two years plantation manager. One year two months.

Colin D. Gunn, Starke, Fla. Graduate Florida Agricultural College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. One year eight months.

Tom B. Brandon, Claxton, Ga. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College, B. S. For two years before entering college had full charge of his father's farm. Eight months.

Walter S. Brown, Hiawassee, Ga. Graduate Georgia State College of Agriculture, specializing in animal husbandry. Has had 12 years' experience in practical farming and stock raising. Has taught in rural schools. Thirteen and one-half months.

Esten G. Cromartie, Hinesville, Ga. Spent two years at Eleventh District Agricultural School, Douglas, Ga., two years at Gordon Institute, Barnesville, Ga., and one year at University of Georgia, receiving B. S. degree in agriculture at the latter institution. Worked in the office of the Georgia State board of entomology and in the field in boll-weevil work, and assisted in cotton experiments over the State. Taught in agricultural school. Eight months.

Hendrick L. Cromartie, Albany, Ga. Attended Georgia State College of Agriculture. Spent 10 years on his father's farm; also had charge of a 400-acre farm before engaging in demonstration work. Four years four months.

Wade P. Huie, College Park, Ga. Graduate Georgia Agricultural College, A. B. and B. Ph. Has had extensive practical farm experience. Nine months.

William H. Sorrells, Leesburg, Ga. Graduate Georgia State College of Agriculture. Had one year's experience as principal of rural high school prior to present appointment. Eight months.

Russell O. Bate, Cynthiana, Ky. Attended University of Tennessee for short courses in agriculture. Has had practical experience in farming. One year eleven months.

Armiel Carman, Clinton, Ky. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. Had practical farm experience. One year eleven and one-half months.

Robert S. Clough, Benton, Ky. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Was schoolteacher and superintendent of schools. One year nine months.

Angus N. Gordon, Henderson, Ky., care of chamber of commerce. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. Had practical farm experience. Was instructor in agriculture at University of Kentucky for a short time. Two years one month.

William J. Harris, Bardwell, Ky. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. For a year was manager of a 15,000-acre plantation in South Carolina. Was instructor of animal husbandry in the College of Agriculture, University of Kentucky, and agricultural editor for the Lexington Herald. Eight months.

Howard H. Harrison, Stanton, Ky. Received course in agriculture at Berea College. Has had practical farm experience. Taught agriculture at Oneida Institute, Oneida, Ky., one year. While a student at Berea College assisted in county-agent work. One year two and one-half months.

Charles L. Hill, Calhoun, Ky. Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, B. S. Had experience working in large orchards in Oregon during summer vacations. For three years after graduation engaged in farming. Nine months.

Samuel J. Lowry, jr., La Grange, Ky. Attended Berea College; graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. After graduation managed 500-acre farm for two years and managed a seed farm for several months. One year eleven and one-half months.

John L. Miller, Campbellsville, Ky. Attended Washington and Lee University one year and Peabody College four terms. Spent summer vacations on the farm while attending college. Taught school one year. Six months.

Gordon B. Nance, Smithland, Ky. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. Familiar with all farming operations. Supervised city school gardens one year. Seven months.

Warner W. Owsley, Louisville, Ky., Board of Trade Building. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. For one season was tester for county cow-testing association. Seven months.

Wayland Rhoades, Independence, Ky. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture; was student assistant in dairying. Spent some of his vacations on his father's farm, two summers on the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station farm, and one summer managing his father's farm of 275 acres. Three years three months.

Fred H. Spickard, Dixon, Ky. Student in agriculture University of Kentucky. Has had 10 years' experience in farming and teaching. Seven months.

Charles L. Taylor, Bardstown, Ky. Attended Western Kentucky State Normal School, taking the work offered in agriculture and assisting in the work of the school farm; also student in agriculture one year at University of Wisconsin. Had practical farm experience. Four years five and one-half months.

John T. Taylor, Louisville, Ky., care Board of Trade. Graduate University of Kentucky, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Three years seven months.

Berlie Winton, Hawesville, Ky. Graduate in agriculture Berea College. Has had practical farming experience and has taught school. Seven months.

Felix Bachemin, jr., Covington, La. Graduate College of Agriculture, Louisiana State University. Has had experience as a teacher in rural high schools. As county agent, devotes a large part of his time to boys' club work. Eleven and one-half months.

Claud A. Brewer, Oberlin, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College; four months' postgraduate work. Was for a time instructor in agricultural schools. Had practical farm experience. Two years six months.

Louis A. Broussard, box 742, Lake Charles, La. Graduate in agriculture Louisiana State University. After leaving school managed a plantation in southern Louisiana. Three and one-half months.

Thomas H. Casanova, Abbeville, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College; also took postgraduate work. Had practical farm experience. Two years nine months.

Corliss C. Chapman, De Ridder, La. Graduate Louisiana State Normal; took special course in rural-school work, with agriculture. Taught agriculture five years, including three years as principal of an agricultural school. While in this position was active in boys' and girls' club work in cooperation with extension workers. Three years nine months.

Harry J. Chatterton, Homer, La. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute. For several years engaged in agricultural high-school work in Louisiana. Managed father's farm two years. Conducted beef-feeding experiments for the Bureau of Animal Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, and the Alabama Experiment Station two years prior to present appointment. Ten months.

William M. Crumpton, Ruston, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Taught agriculture one year after graduation. Has excellent farm experience. Five months.

Adolph Bernard Curet, New Roads, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Is an experienced, practical farmer. One year seven and one-half months.

Sidney J. Durand, Ville Platte, La. Graduate State Normal School and took agricultural short course at Louisiana State University. Taught three years in public school and five and one-half years in high school. Had practical farm experience. Eight months.

William A. Givens, Ruston, La. Graduate College of Agriculture of Louisiana State University. Has had practical farm experience. One year three and one-half months.

Thomas J. Griffin, Houma, La. Graduate Louisiana State Normal School. Had practical farm experience. Was principal and agriculturist of an agricultural school. Nine months.

Bush M. Jackson, Monroe, La. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College, degree in agriculture. Has had extensive practical farm experience. Two years.

Lou H. La Rue, Jennings, La. Graduate in agriculture Missouri State University. Taught agriculture one and one-half years, during which period much of his time was devoted to boys' and girls' club work in that section. Familiar with practical farm work. Nine months.

Lewis H. Martin, New Orleans, La. Graduate Louisiana State University, also graduate New York State College of Agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Was manager of a large ranch in southern Louisiana two years. Three years 10 months.

Alfred A. Mendoza, Opelousas, La. Graduate in agriculture Louisiana State Normal. Was principal of rural schools, where he conducted club work and school gardens. Experienced in practical farm work. Four months.

Beraud L. Mestayer, Garyville, La. Took teachers' course at Louisiana State Normal, specializing in agriculture. Later employed as agricultural teacher in the various high schools, and while so employed did considerable work among farmers in his community along demonstration lines. Two years.

Thomas H. Milliken, Bastrop, La. Graduate College of Agriculture, Louisiana State University. Has had extensive practical farm experience. Ten months.

Joseph O. Montegut, Gonzales, La. Graduate Louisiana State Normal; attended three summer schools in agriculture at Louisiana State University. Has had extensive farm experience. One year two months.

Thomas W. Patten, Arcadia, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Taught agricultural subjects and sciences in county agricultural high school. Had extensive farm experience. Ten months.

Paul D. O. Perkins, Lake Charles, La. Has had large and varied practical farm experience. Was superintendent of the Angleton substation, Texas Agricultural Experiment Station, prior to present appointment. Four years eleven months.

Clarence P. Scurlock, Mansfield, La. Received technical training in agriculture at Iowa State College. Taught for four years in rural schools. Four months.

Emmett S. Shumate, Jonesboro, La. Received technical training at Louisana Industrial Institute and Louisiana State University. Has had practical farm experience. Six months.

Robert L. Sloan, Colfax, La. Graduate, agricultural course, North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College; took postgraduate work in the same institution. Has had extensive practical farming experience. Taught in agricultural high school. One year one month.

Fenwick A. Swann, Marksville, La. Graduate College of Agriculture, Louisiana State University. Has had extensive practical farm experience. Three years ten and one-half months.

Everett L. Talbot, St. Martinsville, La. Graduate Louisiana State University. Was high school principal four years. Eight months.

George C. Vidrine, Houma, La. Graduate Southwestern Louisiana Industrial Institute. Has had several years' practical farming experience. One year.

Francis H. Whitaker, Winnsboro, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Taught agriculture in high school two years. Had practical experience in farming. Ten months.

Erwin O. Anderson, Denton, Md. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S.; also received M. S. in agriculture from University of Wisconsin. Has had practical farm experience. Was assistant professor of farm management at Pennsylvania State College. Eleven months.

Eston F. Fox, College Park, Md. Graduate Juniata College, Huntingdon, Pa., A. B.; also took advanced work in agriculture, Maryland State College. Taught in rural school one year and was instructor in high school two years. Devotes practically all his time to boys' club work. Seven and one-half months.

Pinckney A. Hauver, Frederick, Md. Graduate Maryland State College, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Prior to present appointment was teacher of agriculture in high schools; was also county club agent one summer. One year four and one-half months.

Oliver C. Jones, Centerville, Md. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agriculture. Has been engaged in farming all his life. One year six months.

Clarence Z. Keller, Princess Anne, Md. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agriculture. Spent his summer vacations in practical farm work, the last summer having entire charge of a 200-acre farm. Prior to present appointment was instructor in agriculture for two years in high school, during which time he organized boys' clubs and community and county fairs. One year one month.

Louis H. Martin, Princess Anne, Md. Graduate Hampton Institute. Engaged four years in practical farm work. One year three and one-half months.

Albert G. Middleton, Oakland, Md. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agriculture. Spent summer vacations on farms. After graduation managed two farms. Taught agriculture one year in high school. One year three and one-half months.

Riley G. Arnold, Sardis, Miss. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. A. After graduation taught agriculture for three years. Three years.

Thomas W. Bailey, Ashland, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Had experience managing farms before taking up the county-agent work. Two years six months.

Milson M. Bedenbaugh, Booneville, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. After graduation taught for three years in an agricultural high school and had charge of the high-school demonstration farm. Nine months.

John T. Belue, Lauderdale, Miss. Graduate Alabama Agricultural College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. One year seven months.

William M. Boggan, Columbia, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment was principal of an agricultural high school and managed high-school demonstration farm. Two years four and one-half months.

Oscar C. Bottoms, Philadelphia, Miss. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, specializing in animal husbandry. Has had practical experience as manager of a dairy farm. One year five and one-half months.

Ridley W. Cannon, Decatur, Miss. Graduate Burritt College (Tenn.), B. S. and H. M.; was also student at the University of Mississippi during three summers. For seven years prior to present appointment served as principal of an agricultural high school. Six and one-half months.

Harry G. Carpenter, Rolling Fork, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. At the time of his appointment as county agent was managing a 60-cow dairy farm. Four years four months.

Horace A. Carpenter, Belzoni, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment taught in an agricultural high school and managed the school demonstration farm. Two years seven months.

John W. Carpenter, jr., Greenville, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Was instructor in agricultural engineering for the extension division of the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College for three years prior to present appointment. Nine and one-half months.

Thomas I. Cook, Prentiss, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took postgraduate course in dairying. Two years four months.

Fred L. Craft, Noxapater, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. For a year prior to present appointment was employed by the Bureau of Plant Industry, United States Department of Agriculture, as special agent in the eradication of citrus canker in Florida. Six months.

George C. Cypress, Braxton, Miss. Had two years' special instruction in agriculture at Tuskegee Institute, Alabama; also had practical farm experience. One year nine and one-half months.

Van V. Eason, Louisville, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had experience as manager of a dairy farm. Two years two and one-half months.

Henry G. Grantham, Mize, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. One year four months.

Newton D. Guerry, jr., Okolona, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment was special agent of the Bureau of Entomology. Had practical farm experience. One year four months.

Arthur G. Hamilton, Calhoun City, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Prior to present appointment was agriculturist in an agricultural high school. Has had practical farm experience One year four months.

Harvey C. Heath, Holly Springs, Miss. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. A. Has had practical farm experience. Three years four months.

Joel D. Howerton, Natchez, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Taught in agricultural school. One year seven months.

Cecil A. Hughes, Macon, Miss. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Illinois. Has had practical farm experience. One year eleven and one-half months.

Frank Hurst, Forest, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment taught in the agricultural high school and managed the school demonstration farm. One year one month.

Fred J. Hurst, Magnolia, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. One year seven months.

Henry H. Leggett, Brookhaven, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took postgraduate work at the Iowa Agricultural College. Has had practical farm experience; at the time of his appointment was manager of a farm. Eight months.

Wesley R. Lominick, Gloster, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. and M. S.; attended a short course in plant pathology at the University of Florida. Was employed for one and one-half years by the Bureau of Plant Industry as plant pathological inspector in connection with citrus-canker eradication. One year seven months.

Nate S. Martin, Ripley, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Seven and one-half months.

Donald A. McCandliss, Gulfport, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Three years six months.

Jodie S. McKewen, Winona, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment had two years' experience as teacher in agricultural high school and manager of the high-school demonstration farm. One year five and one-half months.

Charles L. McNiel, Senatobia, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had 10 years' practical experience in farming, two of them as manager of a 1,200-acre plantation. Seven months.

Enoch C. McReynolds, Kosciusko, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. For two years prior to present appointment was teacher in an agricultural high school and manager of the school demonstration farm. One year three months.

Maurice E. Miller, Charleston, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took postgraduate work in animal husbandry at the University of Wisconsin. Has had practical farm experience. One year three months.

Will C. Mims, New Albany, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Was instructor in agriculture in an agricultural high school for one year. Has had practical farm experience. Four years two and one-half months.

William M. Mingee, Lucedale, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Two years five and one-half months.

George T. Neill, Raymond, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment was teacher in agricultural high school and manager of the high-school farm. Six months.

James W. Newton, Mayersville, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had experience as a practical farmer. One year one month.

James R. O'Neal, Greenwood, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Prior to present appointment managed a large plantation. One year five months.

James C Reddoch, Quitman, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical experience in farm work. Seven and one-half months.

Charles S. Rich, Monticello, Miss. Took a four-year course in agriculture at the Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Has had excellent experience as a practical farmer. Eight months.

Robert C. Riggan, Iuka, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. For two years prior to present appointment was teacher in an agricultural high school and manager of the high-school farm. Seven months.

John N. Robbins, Fulton, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. For four years prior to present appointment was instructor in agriculture in an agricultural high school and manager of the high-school farm. Seven months.

Julian E. Sides, Agricultural College, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Has had practical farm experience. Four years two and one-half months.

Frank M. Smith, Mendenhall, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took two years' postgraduate work at this institution for four and one-half years prior to present appointment, and teacher in agriculture and manager of the demonstration farm at one of the high schools of Mississippi. One year five months.

Albert G. Spinks, Coffeeville, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Two years two and one-half months.

Claude G. Steele, Marks, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took one year's postgraduate work in horticulture in this institution. Two years three months.

Junie M. Thomason, Batesville, Miss. Graduate Alabama Polytechnic Institute, B. S. A. Has had practical farm experience and was for one year teacher in agriculture in an agricultural high school. One year three months.

John E. Vaughn, Tylertown, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. For two years prior to present appointment was teacher in agricultural high school and manager of high-school farm. Nine months.

Samuel M. Yeates, Moorhead, Miss. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Prior to present appointment was teacher in agriculture in an agricultural high school. Five years three months.

Cleveland C. Bearden, Beaufort, N. C. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; also graduate student in plant pathology and citrus culture, University of Florida. Prior to present appointment was farm superintendent, taught agriculture in high school one year, and was agent for State Plant Food Board of Florida, working on plant diseases and insect diseases. Nine months.

John Deal, Hayesville, N. C. Took a one-year special course in agriculture at the North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College. Has had practical farm experience. Four and one-half months.

Willard T. Kyzer, Kinston, N. C. Graduate South Carolina Agricultural College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Six and one-half months.

Warren M. Laughinghouse, Columbia, N. C. Took a two-year course in agriculture at the North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College. Has had practical farming experience, including management of a large farm for four years. Nine months.

Robert R. McIver, Sanford, N. C. Pursued course in agriculture at the North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College two and one-half years. Has had practical farm experience. Two years four months.

Ewing E. Millsaps, jr., Dobson, N. C. Graduate North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Managed farm two years before entering college. One year.

William B. Pace, Shallotte, N. C. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Has had practical farm experience, also worked on college farm. For two years after graduation taught agriculture in high school. One year one month.

Carl C. Proffitt, Rutherfordton, N. C. Graduate of agriculture, North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College. Had one year's experience as teacher of agriculture in high school, in which position he had full charge and management of a 50-acre farm. One year eleven months.

Eugene R Raney, Windsor, N. C. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College; took one year's postgraduate work at same institution. Worked on farm during vacations. Was employed by Department of Agriculture one summer in silo-construction work in Mississippi. One year one month.

John H. Speas, Danbury, N. C. Graduate in agriculture, North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College. Managed father's farm prior to present appointment. Seven months.

Needham B. Stevens, Plymouth, N. C. Graduate North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took postgraduate course in the same institution, specializing in animal husbandry and agronomy. Engaged in farming one year. During one summer was employed as herdsman for the North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College. Three years six months.

Molloy C. Vaughn, Newbern, N. C. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Was employed as agent for the Bureau of Plant Industry and inspector for the State Plant Board of Florida for two years prior to present appointment. Four months.

Marion R. Bryant, Purcell, Okla. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Nine months.

Frank H. Dillenback, 313 Federal Building, Guthrie, Okla. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College, B. S. Eleven and one-half months.

William J. Green, Stillwater, Okla. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Devotes entire time to boys' club work. One year ten months.

Otto J. Moyer, Stillwater, Okla. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. Devotes practically his entire time to boys' club work. Nine and one-half months.

Arthur R. Smith, 11 Federal Building, Muskogee, Okla. Graduate Oklahoma Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had practical experience as a dairy farmer. After graduation spent some time in Wisconsin and other Northern States studying live stock and other agricultural problems.

Carroll S. Adams, Beaufort, S. C. Graduate New Hampshire College of Agriculture and Mechanic Arts, B. S.; special student University of Kentucky; student assistant in horticulture, University of Kentucky. Prior to present appointment was assistant professor of horticulture, University of Kentucky; assistant horticulturist, Kentucky Experiment Station; and had two years' practical experience in commercial market gardening. Six months.

Charles W. Baker, Kingstree, S. C. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College; also received M. A. degree from Wisconsin Agricultural College. Worked on farm during vacations while attending college and had other farm experience. Two years four months.

Samuel E. Evans, Bennettsville, S. C. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College; received master's degree from University of Wisconsin. Taught agriculture in an agricultural school, managed an experimental farm in connection with agricultural high school, and had other practical farm experience. Three years eight months.

Charner S. Patrick, Anderson, S. C. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College. After graduation taught agriculture in an agricultural school. Has had practical farm experience. Three years eleven months.

James A. Riley, Chester, S. C. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College; also received M. A. degree from Agricultural College of Wisconsin. Has practical farm experience. Four years ten months.

Francis W. Risher, Walterboro, S. C. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College. Worked one year in the office of the director of experiment stations; taught agriculture in agricultural school. Has practical farm experience. Two years one month.

Z. Douglas Robertson, Estill, S. C. Studied agriculture two years at University of Virginia; also received master's degree at College of Agriculture, University of Wisconsin. After graduation taught agriculture in high schools and operated a farm. Organized a large number of local communities for better agriculture. Eight and one-half months.

William E. Stokes, box 135, Edgefield, S. C. Graduate Clemson Agricultural College. Was assistant professor of agronomy, New Hampshire Agricultural College, for two years. Has had practical farm experience. Nine and one-half months.

William G. Adsmond, Crossville, Tenn. Attended University of Tennessee. Has had practical farm experience. Nine and one-half months.

John H. Agnew, Alamo, Tenn. Graduate in agriculture, University of Tennessee. Has practical farm experience. Ten months.

Woodson S. Baldwin, Clarksville, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture. Has had practical farm experience. Two years nine months.

Archie V. Bears, Fayetteville, Tenn. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Experienced in farming operations. Two and one-half years.

Frank R Bradford, Dandridge, Tenn. Graduate Laneview College (Tenn.) and studied agriculture three years in the University of Tennessee. Has been a practical farmer all his life. Ten and one-half months.

Marvin D. Brock, Courthouse, Memphis, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture. During last year at the university was assistant in the department of agronomy. Spent all his life on the farm and managed farm for about six years. One year nine months.

John E. Dail, Blountsville, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture. Is a practical farmer. Two years.

Benton McM. Elrod, Brownsville, Tenn. Educated at Berea College; also received B. S. degree in agriculture from University of Tennessee. Is a practical farmer. Two years two months.

Charles C. Flanery, Winchester, Tenn. Studied agriculture two years at Berea College; also four years in agriculture at University of Tennessee, receiving B. S. from latter institution. Has had practical farm experience. Eleven months.

Jay. C. Grimes, Madisonville, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, degree in agriculture. Has been practical farmer all his life. One year ten months.

Peter C. Hambaugh, Newport, Tenn. Graduate in agriculture, University of Tennessee. Has had practical experience in farm work. One year two months.

Leonard J. Kerr, Selmer, Tenn. Studied agriculture three years at University of Tennessee. Has worked on farm since leaving school and gained a practical knowledge of farming. Eleven months.

Frank R. Hines, Rutledge, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture. For a short time was nursery inspector for the university. Has had practical farm experience. Three years ten months.

Joe W. Lovell, Centerville, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. A. Is experienced in general farm work. Taught school two years. Assisted in demonstration work prior to present appointment. Ten months.

Hugh A Powers, Lexington, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee. Taught agriculture in county high schools. Has been a practical farmer all his life. Two years five months.

Elzie S. Roberds, Ripley, Tenn. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College. Taught at that institution after graduation, and later was director of the agricultural department of an agricultural high school. Four years three months.

James L. Robinson, Jacksboro, Tenn. Graduate in agriculture, University of Tennessee. Taught school. Has practical knowledge of general farm work. Two years ten months.

Thomas L. Robinson, Murfreesboro, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture. He worked on a stock farm until he entered university. Prior to present appointment served as official tester of cows for advanced registry two years; was dairy demonstrator on an agricultural train one summer; also taught agriculture in high schools. One year.

Walter O. Sharp, Sevierville, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in agriculture; also attended summer courses at university. Taught for a time. Practical farm experience. Eleven months.

Oakley M. Shelby, Dover, Tenn. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. A. Was employed as field assistant in tobacco-insects investigation three summers. Is familiar with the production of general farm crops and the raising of live stock. One year.

Everett R. B. Shockley, Nashville, Tenn. Graduate Agricultural and Industrial State Normal School, Nashville, Tenn. Worked as farm superintendent at this institution. Eight months.

Henry H. Thomas, Greenville, Tenn. Graduate East Tennessee Normal School. Taught agriculture in county high schools. Has had practical experience in the management of live stock and general farm operations. One year one month.

Felix G. Vickers, Tazewell, Tenn. Pursued agricultural course at University of Tennessee two years and attended summer sessions five years. Taught in rural schools four years. Had practical farm experience. One year two months.

Wilford F. Weir, Clinton, Tenn. Graduate in agriculture, University of Tennessee. Taught school four years. Previous to present appointment had several years' practical experience in farming. One year two months.

Andrew J Winegar, Knoxville, Tenn. Graduate Carson-Newman College, B. A.; also graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. A. Has practical knowledge of farm work. Two years.

Elbert B. Wright, Lewisburg, Tenn. Attended College of Agriculture, University of Tennessee, three years. Has had practical farm experience. Eleven months.

Keatley G. Baker, Kerrville, Tex. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Two years five months.

Stephen W. Harris, Groesbeck, Tex. Is well qualified in agriculture. Prior to present appointment was employed by the Forest Service. Six months.

James B. Snider, Rusk, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Has had special training in horticulture and farm gardening. Six and one-half months.

Clive Templeton, Longview, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. Two years six months.

Bernard O. Bradshaw, Covington, Va. Graduate Ontario Agricultural College, Guelph, Canada; also did special work at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Has had much active experience in farm work. Four years eight months.

Shirley L. Cole, Stafford, Va. Student in special courses in agriculture, Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Had charge of the greenhouse at the college two years. Prior to present appointment was engaged for four years in private orchard work and general farm work. Three years five months.

Gordon A. Elcan, Sheppards, Va. Graduate Hogue Academy, Blackstone, Va. Has had practical farm experience. Six months.

Kenny N. Ellis, Waverly, Va. Took two years' course in agriculture at Virginia Polytechnic Institute. Has had practical farm experience. Three years six months.

Weldon H. George, Runnymede, Va. Has an agricultural certificate from the Hampton Institute, where he did considerable work in connection with farm machinery, creameries, and incubators. Is familiar with general farming problems. One year eight and one-half months.

Robert F. Jones, North Emporia, Va. Took a five years' course at Virginia Normal and Industrial Institute, Petersburg, Va. Has practical knowledge of farming. Three years four months.

Wilbur K. Moffett, South Boston, Va. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agriculture. Has had valuable experience in general and dairy farming. Six months.

Farrar V. Shelton, Charlotte Court House, Va. Graduate Virginia Polytechnic Institute, B. S. in agriculture. Has had farming experience. One year six months.

Jollie H. Tibbs, Fincastle, Va. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Was four years principal of a large agricultural high school. Has had practical farm experience. Nine months.

R. E. F. Washington, Roxbury, Va., box 51, R. D. 1. Graduate Hampton Institute. Has been a successful farmer. Six years.

Robert L. Buchanan, Parkersburg, W. Va. Graduate University of West Virginia and Michigan Agricultural College. Engaged in forage-crop investigations, Washington State Experiment Station, one year. Experienced in practical farm work. Two years eleven months.

William D. Click, Hamlin, W. Va. Graduate in agriculture, Berea College. Familiar with general farming operations. Prior to present appointment was employed four months in farm management investigations by the United States Department of Agriculture. Three years six months.

H. R. Cokely, Moorefield, W. Va. Graduate West Virginia University, B. S. in agricalture. Taught school four years. Had practical experience in general farming. One year one and one-half months.

Benjamin F. Creech, Spencer, W. Va. Is college graduate, taking degree of B. S. Engaged in active farm work six years. Prior to present appointment spent three summers in field work for the Office of Farm Management, United States Department of Agriculture. Ten months.

Frank M. Foote, Beckley, W. Va. College graduate. Has had extensive experience in practical agriculture. Three years eleven and one-half months.

Arthur F. Hedges, Glenville, W. Va. Graduate in agriculture, University of Wisconsin; one year postgraduate work. Was head of department of agriculture, Northland College, and managed farm in connection with that institution; also had other practical farm experience. Eleven months.

Samuel F. Hinkle, Webster Springs, W. Va. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to present appointment had two years' experience on a farm. One year one month.

Burt Johnson, Marlinton, W. Va. Had two years' work in agriculture at Berea College; also took two years' course in agriculture at University of Wisconsin. Is thoroughly familiar with farming operations. Three years three months.

H. W Prettyman, Keyser, W. Va. Graduate West Virginia University, B. S. in agriculture. Served as assistant county agent before entering upon present duties. Has had farm experience. One year two months.

Harley D. Rohr, Grafton, W. Va. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of West Virginia. Had experience as teacher in rural schools and taught agriculture in the high school three years. Engaged in farm work. One year two months.

James E. Romine, Buckhannon, W Va. Graduate University of West Virginia, B. S. in agriculture. Has practical knowledge of farming. One year eleven and one-half months.

Webster H. Sill, Bethany, W. Va. Graduate Pennsylvania State College. B. S. A. Familiar with all kinds of farm operations. Was school teacher one year. Prior to present appointment was employed for short periods by the Bureau of Entomology and the Office of Farm Management, United States Department of Agriculture. Four years eleven months.

Olive H. Standard, Clay, W. Va. College graduate. B. S. in agriculture. Prior to present appointment owned and operated a small farm. One year five and one-half months.

Carl J. Williams, Sacramento, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California. Prior to present appointment was assistant to farm advisers of California two years. One year four and one-half months.

L. A. Bevans, Danbury, Conn. Attended Massachusetts Institute of Technology one term; graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Was teacher of agriculture in high schools two terms. Nine months.

E. A. Brown, Hartford, Conn. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Taught agriculture in high school one and one-half years. Three years four months.

Harry G. Avery, Shoshone, Idaho. Attended Kansas Agricultural College three terms. For three years managed 700-acre farm in Kansas and for one year teacher of agriculture in high school. One year two months.

Herbert H. Beier, Coeur d'Alene, Idaho. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Idaho, B. S. Prior to present appointment was employed for various periods in forest service; also as buttermaker for Caldwell Cooperative Creamery, Caldwell, Idaho; and in charge of Boise Valley Cow-Testing Association, Boise, Idaho. One year three months.

R. R. Lancaster, Rupert, Idaho. Attended University of Missouri one term and Kansas Agricultural College two terms. Prior to present appointment served in United States Army six years and for short periods during summer on farms of University of Missouri and Kansas Agricultural College and experiment station. One year one month.

John E. White, St. Anthony, Idaho. Graduate Utah Agricultural College, B. S. Was teacher of agriculture in high school four years. Eight months.

G. L. Reed, Brookville, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. Eight months.

E. L. Shoemaker, Versailles, Ind. Graduate Purdue University; taught agriculture two years. Seven months.

R. E. Wilson, Peru, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. in agriculture. Eight months.

H. E. Ackerson, Monticello, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. in agriculture. Ten months.

B. B. Adams, Rockville, Ind. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College. Had charge of soils and crops department, Winona Agricultural College, one term. Ten months.

Ralph E. Arnett, Danville, Ind. Graduate Iowa College of Agriculture, M. S. Was assistant in animal-husbandry department of that institution. Managed farm two years. One year.

Ross N. Atkinson, Evansville Ind. Graduate Perdue University, B. S. in agriculture. Nine months.

Donald D. Ball, Washington, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S., in agriculture. Nine months.

Paul R. Bausman, Monticello, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Was deputy inspector, State chemist department, Purdue University, two years. Six months.

H. S. Benson, Sullivan, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Subsequently was supervisor of vocational agriculture in Owensville, Ind., schools. Eight months.

P. D. Brown, Greensburg, Ind. Graduate Kentucky University College of Agriculture, B. S. One year five months.

Chas. A Buechner, Knox, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Prior to present appointment was manager, Fame Canning Co., Tipton, Ind. Ten months.

L. M. Butler, Vincennes, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Agricultural instructor high school one term and instructor in animal husbandry and dairying at Winona College of Agriculture two years. Ten months.

V. V. Clarke, Plymouth, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. Has managed farm one year. Nine months.

Howard J. Clinebell, Terre Haute, Ind. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. Was crop investigator Purdue University extension department one summer prior to present appointment. Nine months.

Myron E. Cromer, Frankfort, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Teacher of agriculture in high schools three years. Seven months.

T. C. Cravens, Martinsville, Ind. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. A. Five months.

H. W. Crowe, Brazil, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Ten months.

Samuel S. Davis, Kentland, Ind. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. and M. S. Managed a farm two years. Ten months.

G. A. Ellis, Franklin, Ind. Graduate Iowa College of Agriculture, B. S. in animal husbandry. Teacher in agricultural schools two years. Ten months.

F. S. Fouts, Greencastle, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. A. Nine months.

Whitney K. Gast, Logansport, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. Has managed farm one year. Nine months.

R. M. Gilbert, Indianapolis, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. Taught agriculture in Minnesota schools one year. Has managed farm five years. Two years ten months.

A. L. Hodgson, Winchester, Ind. Attended Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College two years; graduate University of Wisconsin, B.

S. A. Worked on father's farm; taught rural school two years. Eleven months.

C. M. Jeb, Columbus, Ind. Graduate Indiana University, A. B. and B. S.; also attended Purdue University School of Agriculture one term. Ten months.

A. T. Morrison, Connersville, Ind. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. A. Was assistant instructor University of Illinois one term. One year two months.

George X. Reed, Boonville, Ind. Graduate Cornell College, Mount Vernon, Iowa. B. S.; also Iowa State College, B. S. Was principal Delmar Junction High School one year; farm management enumerator and demonstrator one summer. One year nine months.

G. W. Rosencrans, Covington, Ind. Graduate Miami University; received M. S. degree from University of Wisconsin. Taught school one year. Two years eight months.

Harold R. Smalley, Angola, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. and M. S. For two years was assistant in soil and crops department Purdue University experiment station. Five years.

E. L. Shoemaker, Versailles, Ind. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. Teacher of agriculture two years. Seven months.

Charles A. Burge, Greenfield, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in animal husbandry; attended University of California farm school one year. Ten months.

Fred F. Clark, Wyoming, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. A. Prior to present appointment was assistant in agricultural extension at this institution. One year eight months.

Clyde H. Combs, Fayette, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in animal husbandry. Ten and one-third months.

George Dunlop, Orange City, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. A. Engaged in extension work in farm crops at that institution prior to present appointment. One year five and one-half months.

Bert L. France, Emmetsburg, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Engaged in farming four years. Three years six months.

E. F. Graff, Iowa City, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College. One year.

Glenn Hazen, Mount Pleasant, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in animal husbandry. Ten and one-half months.

Henry P. Kelley, Griswold, Iowa. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. Engaged in farming two years. Seven and one-third months.

Carl N. Kennedy, Des Moines, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in animal husbandry. Instructor in animal husbandry Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College two years; assistant professor in animal husbandry Oregon Agricultural College. One year four months.

A. H. Pickford, Wapello, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College of Agriculture. Managed father's farm one year. For two years prior to present appointment was instructor in agriculture and engaged in extension work. Ten months.

W. O. Roessler, Sigourney, Iowa. Graduate University of Illinois, B. S. Agricultural instructor in high school one year. Ten and one-third months.

C. C. Scott, Rockwell, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Engaged in teaching and farming two years. Five months.

Lew P. Sewell, Bedford, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Agricultural instructor three years. Four and one-half months.

J. P. Stack, Creston, Iowa. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College, B. S. Engaged in soil-survey work one season; instructor, farm crops, Kansas Agricultural College one term; agriculturist Great Western Sugar Co. one year. Five and one-half months.

J. F. Thomas, Hampton, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in dairying. Prior to present appointment was instructor at the University of Maine and assistant in dairy-extention work at Iowa State College. Five and one-half months.

E. M. Torblaa, Clarion, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. in animal husbandry. One year five and one-half months.

Theo. Thorson, Tripoli, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College of Agriculture, B. S. Was instructor of dairying University of Nebraska. Five and one-half months.

Harley Walker, Burlington, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Was instructor in agricultural school and engaged in farming prior to present appointment. One year ten months.

D. H. Zentmire, Marengo, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. A. Taught agriculture at Iowa State College two years. Subsequently was assistant secretary Iowa Corn and Small-Grain Growers' Association. Three and one-half months.

George W. Kable, Corvallis, Oreg. Attended University of Washington four years, University of California one and one-half years, and University of Nebraska one year; received B. S. degree from University of California. Was assistant irrigation engineer State College of New Mexico two years and managed a ranch one year. Ten months.

Orville B. Burtis, Solomon, Kans. Graduate Kansas State College of Agriculture, B. S. Has had practical experience as farm manager. Two years five months.

Alfred L. Clapp, Council Grove, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, specializing in agronomy. Was foreman agronomy farm at this institution one year, managed ranch in Colorado one year, and was high-school instructor one year. One year three months.

A. D. Folker, Topeka, Kans. Graduate Iowa Agricultural College, B. S. Managed 400-acre farm and has been active in farmers' institutes and other farm organizations. Four years.

Preston O. Hale, Cottonwood Falls, Kans. Graduate Kansas Agricultural College. Assisted in feeding experiments at the college; managed large stock farms one year. One year five months.

John V. Helper, Dodge City, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Taught agriculture one year. Ten months.

H. L. Hildwein, Kingman, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Engaged in general farm work two years. Ten months.

A. E. Jones, Mankato, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Was agricultural instructor in high school one year; managed home farm. One year.

Ralph Kenney, Manhattan, Kans. Graduate Ohio State College, B. S. Subsequently was assistant in agronomy Kent State College and Experiment Station; also assistant professor, farm crops, Kansas State Agricultural College. Six months.

Edward Larsen, Pratt, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. After graduation engaged in farming and breeding purebred Hereford cattle. Six months.

George W. Sidwell, Leoti, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. After graduation taught school and engaged in farming. Six months.

A. G. Van Horn, Kansas City, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Managed a dairy farm after leaving college. Eight months.

H. J. Adams, McPherson, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S., specializing in animal husbandry. Ten and one-third months.

Joseph H. Bodwell, Foxcroft, Me. Graduate University of Maine, College of Agriculture, B. S. One year ten months.

Richard B. Dodge, Orono, Me. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Maine. One year one month.

Norman S. Donahue, Belfast, Me. Graduate University of Maine, College of Agriculture, B. S. Was principal and teacher of agriculture in Hartland Academy, Hartland, Me., for one term. Nine and one-half months.

Roger L. Gowell, Warren, Me. Graduate University of Maine, College of Agriculture, B. S. One year ten months.

John L. Scribner, Presque Isle, Me. Graduate University of Maine, College of Agriculture. One year one month.

Robert M. Stiles, Hartland, Me. Attended College of Agriculture, University of Maine, two terms. Managed farm four years. One year ten months.

Ralph H. Gaskill, Danvers, Mass. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. After graduation was instructor in agricultural school. Eleven months.

H. L. Barnum, Lake City, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Managed farm. One year four months.

Elton B. Hill, Menominee, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Was instructor in agricultural school one year. Two years.

Carl M. Kidman, Onaway, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Prior to present appointment engaged in farm work one year, taught school three years, and engaged in farm-management survey field work. One year two months.

Emil L. Kunze, Sault St. Marie, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College. Taught agriculture and chemistry two terms at high and normal schools; also assisted in farm-crops department Michigan Agricultural College. One year.

Arnold L. Olson, Munising, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Teacher of agriculture in high school one year. Eight months.

B. P. Pattison, Escanaba, Mich. Attended Michigan Agricultural College four years. For one year was professor of animal husbandry at University of West Virginia. Engaged in farm work one year. One year one month.

C. L. Rose, Evart, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Managed farm six years. Eight months.

F. L. French, St. Paul, Minn. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Director of agriculture in high school one term. Seven months.

Frank L. Gerten, St. Paul, Minn. Attended College of Agriculture, University of Minnesota, four years. Taught agriculture in high school two years. Also engaged in active farming. One year one month.

A. W. Malcolmson, Olivia, Minn. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Minnesota; graduate student and instructor in animal husbandry at this institution one year. Nine months.

A. C. O'Banion, Moorhead, Minn. Graduate Iowa State College of Agriculture, specializing in animal husbandry and agronomy. Was high school instructor in agriculture two years. One year four months.

Robert R. Smith, St. Paul, Minn. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Minnesota. One year one month.

Alvin I. Foard, Farmington, Mo. Graduate Missouri College of Agriculture, B. S. Engaged in farm-management survey work one summer. Was instructor in agriculture in normal school one year. One year five months.

E. M. Harman, Columbia, Mo. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. Was official tester for dairy department University of Illinois one year. Four months.

W. C. Swarner, Tipton, Mo. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. Five months.

John R. Hall, Harrisonville, Mo. Graduate Missouri College of Agriculture, B. S. Engaged in farming since graduation. Six months.

Glenn S. Hensley, Farmington, Mo. Graduate Missouri College of Agriculture, B. S.; was student assistant in farm crops. Ten months.

W. R. Gordon, Townsend, Mont. Graduate West Virginia University, B. S. Teacher of agriculture in high school one term. Ten and one-half months.

D. W. Mendenhall, Glendive, Mont. Graduate North Dakota Agricultural College, B. S. Taught agriculture in high school and agricultural school two years after graduation. One year three months.

James E. Hogue, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. Has been connected with farming operations all his life. Seven months.

George Newswanger, Omaha, Nebr. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. Was in charge of animal-husbandry work at Scottsbluff substation, Mitchell, Nebr. Ten months.

P. C. Neuswanger, Omaha, Nebr. Graduate Colorado College, B. S.; also attended University of Nebraska one year. Three months.

Noel N. Rhodes, Omaha, Nebr. Attended Nebraska School of Agriculture three years; also University of Nebraska College of Agriculture three years. Eleven months.

L. Boyd Rist, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Nebraska, B. S. Two years two months.

Fred L. Taylor, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of Nebraska, B. S. Was agricultural instructor in high school after graduation. One year six months.

W. W. Sim, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate University of Notre Dame and University of California, B. A. and B. S. Managed and owned several farms. Four months.

John J. Sjogram, Omaha, Nebr. Graduate Nebraska College of Agriculture, B. S. Was agricultural instructor in high school two years after graduation. Four months.

Joseph Willis Wilson, Mason, Nev. Graduate University of Nevada, B. S. in agriculture. Engaged in farming and stock raising after graduation. Eleven months.

C. A. Smith, Manchester, N. H. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Managed a farm eight years and for one year was assistant superintendent of farm of an agricultural school. One year.

W. C. Stokoe, Lancaster, N. H. Graduate Cornell University; engaged in practical farming and taught agriculture nearly three years. One year two months.

F. A. Carroll, Trenton, N. J. Graduate Rhode Island State College. Was supervisor Coos County (N. H.) Cooperative Cow-Testing Association one year, assistant in dairying cooperative work between United States Department of Agriculture and Delaware College one year, and engaged in farming two seasons. One year two months.

L. A. Cooley, Toms River, N. J. Graduate Rutgers College, B. S. Spent two summers in farm work. Ten months.

Walter M. Ellison, Silver City, N. Mex. Attended Cornell Institute four years and New Mexico College of Agriculture five years. Was instructor in high schools two years. Eleven months.

James G. Hamilton, Los Lunas, N. Mex. Graduate University of New Mexico, B. S. A. For two years was assistant in agronomy at New Mexico Agricultural College, his duties being those of superintendent of the college experiment farm and instructor in farm machinery. One year four months.

Richard L. Strong, Estancia, N. Mex. Graduate Agricultural College, Fort Collins, Colo., B. S. Engaged in practical farming three years after graduation. Eleven months.

Homer P. Powers, Socorro, N. Mex. Graduate New Mexico College of Agriculture. Engaged in farming one year prior to present appointment. One year.

Stuart Stirling, Carrizozo, N. Mex. Graduate New Mexico College of Agriculture, B. S. Ten months.

Emmett M. Yates, Tucumcari, N. Mex. Graduate Missouri State University, B. S. Was high-school principal three years, working on farms in summers. Eight months.

Errol Stanley Bird, Canton, N. Y. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, B. S. For two years after graduation was farm adviser, Rome State Custodial Asylum, and for six months manager of 750-acre farm. One year three months.

Oscar H. Chapin, Walton, N. Y. Attended Cornell University seven terms. Has had practical experience in dairy and general farming. Five months.

Arthur D. Davies, Herkimer, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Eleven months.

Jasper F. Eastman, Binghamton, N. Y. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, M. A.; also received degrees of B. A. and M. A. from University of Illinois. For seven years was instructor in agronomy at State School of Agriculture, Morrisville, N. Y. Two years five months.

Nicholas G. Farber, Troy, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Taught agriculture in high school two years. Engaged in farm-bureau work. One year two months.

C. W. Gilbert, Catskill, N. Y. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, B. S. Eleven months.

Hawley B. Rogers, Jamestown, N. Y. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture, B. S. Four years four months.

Edwin P. Smith, Norwich, N. Y. Graduate Rochester University; also received B. S. A. degree from Cornell, assisted in extension work one winter, and managed a 400-acre farm prior to present appointment. Three years five months.

Ralph Q. Smith, Belmont, N. Y. Graduate Ohio State College, B. S. A. Taught school two terms; engaged in farming one summer and assisted State agriculture-extension department in several counties in Ohio. One year four months.

Charles A. Taylor, Herkimer, N. Y. Attended Cornell Agricultural College one year; three summers at Cornell Summer School. Managed home farm two and one-half years. For three years taught agriculture. Three years six months.

J. R. Teall, Syracuse, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, A. B. Managed farm while at college. Was manager Cayuga County Farm Bureau three years. Four years three months.

E. V. Underwood, Oswego, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. A. Taught agriculture one year. Was also manager of Oswego Farm Bureau. Three years eleven months.

Theodore W. Vann, Elmira, N. Y. Graduate New York College of Agriculture, B. S. Managed farm six months. Was assistant manager of farm bureau, Oswego County, six months prior to present appointment. One year eight months.

Edw. C. Weatherby, Auburn, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Managed home farm of 250 acres. One year five months.

Elmer R. Zimmer, Oswego, N. Y. Took special course at Cornell University two years. Was instructor in animal-husbandry department, College of Agriculture, Cornell University, three terms; also manager Tioga County Farm Bureau. Two years four months.

Arthur H. Neumann, Dickinson, N. Dak. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. A. For various periods was assistant in soils research, University of Wisconsin; analytical soil chemist, University of Wisconsin; and in charge of chemistry and agriculture at State School of Science, Wahpeton, N. Dak. Three months.

Elmer E. Barnes, Paulding, Ohio. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. A. Engaged in farming and taught district school three years. Was assistant in agricultural chemistry and soils department, Ohio State University, for one semester. Five months.

Walter Eli McCoy, Springfield, Ohio. Graduate Ohio State University, B. S. A. Was employed by extension department, Ohio State University, one year. Four years eleven months.

William Watson Brownfield, Cambridge, Ohio. Attended Ohio State University three years. Was farm manager three years. One year seven months.

F. S. DeLashmutt, Columbus, Ohio. Attended Ohio State University three years. Engaged in dairy-extension work and as instructor in dairy department, Ohio State University, one year. Eleven months.

Clayton L. Long, Cleveland, Ohio. Attended Ohio State University one term. Was extension horticulturist and poultryman at this institution one term and instructor in horticulture and extension horticulturist, New Hampshire State College, two terms. One year.

Arthur R. Chase, The Dalles, Oreg. Attended Agricultural College of Iowa one term and Oregon Agricultural College two terms, receiving B. S. degree from the latter institution. Taught rural schools three terms, and was county school supervisor one year. Also worked on ranches five summers. Conducted corn contests for Oregon two years and potato contests one year, and organized rural parent-teachers' circles and one grange. Two years four months.

W. M. Brennan, Mitchell, S. Dak. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. Spent all his life on farm and managed an 800-acre ranch for three years after graduation. Nine months.

A. L. Bushy, Plankington, S. Dak. Attended South Dakota State College four years; also Purdue University, receiving degrees of B. S. and M. S. from latter institution. Was teacher, Purdue University, four years. Five months.

P. J. Crandall, Alexandria, S. Dak. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. Instructor in agriculture three years. Five months.

J. H Hamilton, Mitchell, S. Dak. Attended Michigan Agricultural College four years. Teacher of agriculture four years. Six months.

George B. Kennard, Sioux Falls, S. Dak. Graduate South Dakota State College, B. S. A. After graduation taught agriculture in high school. Lived all his life on farm. Nine months.

Dick Lewallen, Presho, S. Dak. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. A. For two years after graduation taught school and directed summer garden work. Two years eleven months.

Harry E. Rilling, Wessington Spring, S. Dak. Graduate South Dakota State College of Agriculture. Was assistant in agronomy at the college two years. Spent one year in farming after graduation. One year.

L. M. Caldwell, Hayti, S. Dak. Graduate South Dakota State College, B. S. Was agricultural instructor in high school two years, engaging in extension work during summer months and half time during school year. Seven months.

E. C. Bird, Armour, S. Dak. Graduate Oberlin College, A. B.; also attended University of Wisconsin. Three years.

R. E. Johnston, Hot Springs, S. Dak. Graduate South Dakota State College, B. S.; for two summers was student assistant in agronomy. Worked three years on farm before attending college; after graduation managed a farm three years. One year ten months.

George R. Mayland, Rapid City, S. Dak. Graduate South Dakota State College, B. S.; also received degree in agriculture; managed a farm three years. Six months.

N. Risjord, Miller, S. Dak. Graduate North Dakota Agricultural College, B. S. Engaged in farming during summer months. After graduation taught agriculture and organized farmers' clubs, farmers' exchanges, etc., in connection with high-school work. Three months.

Colman Wagner, Selby, S. Dak. Graduate South Dakota State College, B. S. Has spent nearly all his vacations on farm and is familiar with farm life; has managed a farm since graduation. Six months.

Lew Mar Price, Price, Utah. Graduate Utah Agricultural College. One year.

Harrison B. Woodbury, Nephi, Utah. Graduate University of Utah; attended Utah Agricultural College one term. Was engaged in farming three years, and was employed as horticulture inspector one year. Nine months.

I. N. Bartlett, Middlebury, Vt. Graduate University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, B. S. Nine months.

Morton F. Downing, Rutland, Vt. Graduate University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, B. S. Was instructor in agronomy and farm manager at an agricultural school for three years and was employed by the University of Vermont extension service for three months. Three years three months.

Harold F. Johnson, Newport, Vt. Graduate University of Vermont and State Agricultural College; B. S. in agriculture. Served with Vermont agriculture extension service and dairy department of University of Vermont three years. One year three months.

L. A. Wood, St. Johnsbury, Vt. Graduate Cornell College of Agriculture, B. S. Prior to present appointment was employed three months as assistant in the Office of Farm Management, this department. Two years nine months.

R. B. Coglon, Pullman, Wash. Graduate Toronto University; subsequently was lecturer in agriculture at University of Saskatchewan one year; county agricultural agent, North Dakota Better Farming Association, one year; State seed commissioner, Idaho Experiment Station, two years; assistant director of county agriculturists for Idaho one year; and county agriculturist, Lane County, Oreg., one year. Two years four months.

John W. Adriance, Stockton, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California, B. S. Spent life on farm. Nine and one-half months.

Ernest L. Conant, Sacramento, Cal. Attended University Farm School, Davis, Cal., one year. Managed farm and ranch two years. Prior to present appointment was assistant to county horticultural commission, Santa Clara County. Seven and one-half months.

Edwin L. Garthwaite, Bakersfield, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California, B. S. Eight months.

William A. Kent, Modesto, Cal. Graduate University of California, B. S. Was laboratory assistant in department of soils at the college. Nine and one-half months.

George W. Kretsinger, San Diego, Cal. Graduate University of California, B. S. Had general farm experience covering several years. Nine and one-half months.

Donald E. Martin, Berkeley, Cal. Graduate University of California; B. S. in agriculture. One year.

W. A. McCutchan, Fresno, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California. Nine months.

Myron A. Rice, Berkeley, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California, B. S. One year two months.

John E. Stiles, Berkeley, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California, B. S. One year two months.

Frank G. Tiffany, Willows, Cal. Attended Stanford University one year. Received degree of B. S. at College of Agriculture, University of California. Owns and manages ranch. Nine and one-half months.

Hermann F. Brueck, Stockton, Cal. Graduate College of Agriculture, University of California, B. S. Spent two years on large ranch after graduation. Eight months.

C. W. Hammans, Storm Lake, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S., in animal husbandry. Was superintendent of agricultural high school three years. Nine and one-third months.

L. T. Nutty, Marion City, Iowa. Graduate Iowa State College of Agriculture, B. S. in animal husbandry. Ten and one-half months.

J. S. Quist, Des Moines, Iowa. Raised on live-stock farm. Attended Fremont Normal one term Prior to present appointment was supervisor of garden work, Blair, Nebr. Ten months.

John L. Lantow, Paola, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Has had practical farm experience. Ten and one-third months.

H. C. Hensley, Jackson, Mo. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. Was instructor in agriculture in Madison City schools two years. Two years six months.

E. H. Leker, St. Charles, Mo. Graduate University of Missouri, College of Agriculture, B. S. Eight months.

Edw. A. Livesay, Columbia, Mo. Attended Virginia Polytechnic Institute six years and University of Missouri one year, receiving B. S. (C. E.) from the former and M. S. (Agr.) from the latter. Was student assistant in physics Virginia Polytechnic Institute one term. Engaged in general farming one term. Ten months.

A. R. Hecht, Lincoln, Nebr. Attended University of Nebraska four years. Was tester in charge of cow-testing association one year; was also official cow tester for University of Nebraska dairy department. Engaged in general farming one summer. Nine months.

Ben F. Hensel, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate Nebraska State Agricultural College, B. S. Worked on farm six years. Conducted a soil survey of Wayne and Phelps Counties, Nebr. Seven months.

Arthur W. Tell, Lincoln, Nebr. Graduate University of Nebraska, B. S. in agriculture. Taught school two years before entering college. Seven months.

R. J. Bugbee, Woodsville, N. H. Graduate New Hampshire College. Market gardener and greenhouse manager one year. Engaged in emergency food campaign in State. Nine months.

A. B. Bucholz, Hudson, N. Y. Graduate Hobart College, B. S.; also received M. S. degree from Cornell University College of Agriculture. Employed by New York State Department of Agriculture six years. Ten months.

Robert V. Call, Cooperstown, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Six months.

John F. Chapin, Watertown, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University. Managed farm and orchards four years. Nine months.

Wilbur D. Chase, Cooperstown, N. Y. Prior to present appointment was engaged six months as assistant county agent and was engaged in emergency food campaign. Eleven months.

Fred P. Foster, Canandaigua, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Managed and worked general farm. Was animal-husbandry specialist Holstein-Friesian Register Co., Vermont, prior to present appointment. Three months.

J. L. Laycock, Rochester, N. Y. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture, B. S. Worked on farm during vacations. Operated 200-acre farm three years. For four months was manager of county farm bureau. Eleven months.

Fred D. Palmer, Lisle, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, agricultural course. Worked two years on home farm and was manager of a farm one year. Eight months.

Fred R. Walkley, Auburn, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Taught agriculture one year. Five months.

W. L. Kadderly, Corvallis, Oreg. Graduate Oregon Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Engaged in farm management demonstration work four months prior to present appointment. One year seven months.

George H. Baldwin, Kingston, R. I. Graduate Rhode Island State College, B. S., agricultural course. For two years prior to present appointment was assistant manager for Dexter asylum farm. Nine months.

H. E. Bartram, Winooski, Vt. Graduate University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, B. S. Taught agriculture in high school two years and was assistant in plant pathology department, University of Vermont, and State Agricultural College experiment station four years. Eight months.

Frank D. Jones, Burlington, Vt. Graduate University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, B. S. Conducted home farm and was active in home community prior to present appointment. Eight months.

C. S. Fletcher, Spokane, Wash. Graduate State College of Washington. Taught agriculture four years. Seven months.

O. V. Patton, Pullman, Wash. Graduate State College of Washington, degree in horticulture. Taught in high school one semester. Was assistant fruit inspector for Walla Walla, Wash., approximately two years. Eight months.

CLUB WORKERS.

The club workers are a part of the regular extension staff of the State college of agriculture and are employed cooperatively by the Department of Agriculture and the State college of agriculture and the county farm bureau.

These club workers, through the farm bureau, meet with groups of boys and girls, plan with them projects in food production and conservation and other practical work which the children carry on at their homes, organize them into clubs to receive practical instruction related to these projects, and secure an adult local leader to direct the work of the children. The workers organize corn clubs, potato clubs, garden clubs, garden and canning clubs, market-garden clubs, pig clubs, calf clubs, baby-beef clubs, sheep clubs, bread clubs, garment-making clubs, etc. The club worker assists these groups of boys and girls in keeping records of cost and production, in giving public demonstrations, in holding summer club festivals, in making exhibits of their products, and in holding at the close of the year an achievement day. The club worker travels about the county meeting with the groups and leaders and giving expert advice, direction, and instruction on better methods in production and conservation.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by the draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

J. E. Carrigan, Burlington, Vt. Graduate University of Vermont and State Agricultural College, B. S. Was employed as assistant in Vermont agricultural-extension service. Served as county agent two years and later as assistant county agent leader before entering upon present duties. Three years two months.

R. N. Kebler, Marquette, Mich. Graduate Michigan Agricultural College, B. S. Was high-school teacher of agriculture. Prior to present appointment was county club leader one summer. One year.

Walber B. Krueck, West Lafayette, Ind. Graduate University of Wisconsin College of Agriculture. After graduation was instructor in animal husbandry. Purdue University School of Agriculture one term; also engaged in live-stock work at Purdue University. Nine months.

Harold G. Mattoon, Pittsfield, Mass. Graduate Massachusetts Agricultural College, B. S. Engaged one season in eradication of white-pine blister rust, and for short period as Massachusetts State nursery inspector and as assistant county agent and assistant secretary for county farm bureau. Ten months.

William P. Martin, Baton Rouge, La. Graduate Mississippi Agricultural and Mechanical College, specializing in animal husbandry; has had extensive practical farm experience. Two years.

Edw. B. Oxley, Tucson, Ariz. Graduate University of Arizona, B. S. Was assistant State club leader in Nevada prior to present appointment. Seven months.

Leland S. Parke, Tucson, Ariz. Graduate Iowa State College, B. S. A. Prior to present appointment was agricultural inspector of United States Reclamation Service in the Salt River Valley for one and one-half years. Ranched in California and Arizona one year. Three years six months.

Charles E. Potter, Bozeman, Mont. Attended Bethany College, West Virginia, two years; also senior in West Virginia College of Agriculture. Assistant in dairy department of latter institution. Was superintendent of county schools two years; also district superintendent and county club leader one year. One year three months.

H. H. Williamson, College Station, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. Also attended the advanced courses at the Iowa State Agricultural College. Six years three months.

FARM-MANAGEMENT DEMONSTRATORS.

Farm management demonstrators are employed cooperatively by the State agricultural colleges and the United States Department of Agriculture. They deal with the business side of farming and aid farmers in improving the efficiency of their operations. By means of accurate comparisons of the business of individual farmers with that of their more efficient neighbors, they are stimulated to greater food production per acre, per animal, and, what is more important, per man. The group method of demonstration has been so developed that in most cases farmers are able themselves to make these comparisons between their business and that of their neighbors.

In almost any community of the United States will be found a number of farmers who are doing from a third to a half more production work per man than are many of their neighbors. One way to deal with the labor problem is to transfer men from other communities. Another way is to teach farmers how to reorganize their farm rotations and live-stock production so as to use more efficient equipment and labor methods. The farm-management demonstrators are leaders in this class of work.

One of the principal purposes of the farm-management demonstration service is to assist farmers in adapting Federal and State programs to conditions existing in their communities.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

William L. Cavert, St. Paul, Minn. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. A. After graduating was engaged two years in farm-survey work. Three years ten months.

Harold J. Evans, Georgetown Station, N. Y. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. For five months was assistant county agent. Eleven months.

Charles H. Graves, East Lansing, Mich. Graduate New York State College of Agriculture, Cornell University, B. S. Prior to present appointment was employed as agricultural engineer with Forestal (Ltd.), Buenos Aires, Argentina. Ten months.

P. E. McNall Manhattan, Kans. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. in engineering, B. S. in agriculture, and M. S. in agriculture. Did practical electrical work in soils at the experiment station. Three years ten months.

Walter J. Tubbs, Burlington, Vt. Graduate Cornell University, B. S. Prior to present appointment was assistant county agent. One year ten months.

Pascal K. Whelpton, Washington, D. C. Graduate Cornell University Agricultural College, B. S. Worked on a farm for three years; employed in farm management extension work in Connecticut three months; was instructor in agriculture in high school four months. Two years four months.

SCIENTIFIC EMPLOYEES OF INSULAR EXPERIMENT STATIONS.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

Clarence W. Carpenter, Honolulu, Hawaii. Employed as pathologist at the Hawaii Experiment Station, where he organized the plant-disease work. Has made a survey of some of the more important diseases of economic crops, and during the present crisis has conducted a campaign for the control of plant diseases of bananas, which threaten that important food crop, and is engaged in a study of their causes and means of control. A familiarity with tropical conditions, such as he has gained through the two years he has been in Hawaii, is very necessary in carrying on the work with plant diseases. Graduate University of Vermont, B. S. and M. S., having specialized in bacteriology and chemistry. Had practical experience while a student as assistant in the laboratory of hygiene of the Vermont State Board of Health and in the bacteriological-pathological laboratories of the Vermont Experiment Station. Prior to present appointment, was assistant in plant pathology in the Bureau of Plant Industry, working on cotton and truck-crop diseases. Specialized on potato and other diseases, and published a number of papers on his investigations. Five years seven months.

Mazwell O. Johnson, Honolulu, Hawaii. Has charge of the chemical work of the Hawaii Agricultural Experiment Station. Mr. Johnson has made special studies of some of the peculiar soil problems met with in Hawaii. As a result of his discoveries, several thousand acres of land which were formerly unproductive have been added to the area devoted to food crops. He has been very active in emergency work relating to drying of food products, in working out fertilizer formulas for food crops, and in preparing publications. His three years' experience in the islands has given him an excellent grasp of the soil, fertilizer, and other problems and of the special conditions met with. Graduate Purdue University, B. S. in chemical engineering; also received M. S. degree from George Washington University. Prior to present appointment was assistant chemist in the Meat Inspection Division of the Bureau of Animal Industry, and for short periods was employed in a technical capacity by commercial concerns. Four years four months.

Wilton T. White, Fairbanks, Alaska. Has charge of the station at Fairbanks, in the interior of Alaska, where experimental work with farm crops, and especially with cereals, is conducted on a scale comparable to commercial farming. Unusual difficulty has been experienced in securing suitable men for the Alaska stations, which require not only adequate training but practical experience and resourcefulness in meeting contingencies due to the remote location. Graduate Kansas State Agricultural College, B. S. Taught agriculture one year before graduation. Had charge of a 640-acre farm in Kansas, devoted to grain and stock farming, three years prior to entering department service. Eleven months.

BUREAU OF SOILS.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

J. N. Carothers, Washington, D. C. As electrochemist in the Bureau of Soils, has developed and perfected a process for smelting phosphate rock in an electric furnace and collecting phosphoric acid so produced in an electric precipitator. Installed and operated such an installation on a commercial scale at Hoboken, N. J., demonstrating the commercial feasibility of the process for users of pure acid. Has recently completed a piece of work in connection with the War Industries Board involving the design of an electric furnace suitable for the production of phosphorus direct from phosphate rock. At present, is installing apparatus for an investigation of the possibility of fixing atmospheric nitrogen by means of the electric arc, using a current of very high tension and frequency. This work has a direct bearing on the problem of munitions as well as on that of fertilizer supplies. Graduate Clemson College, B. S., in agriculture and chemistry; Missouri University, graduate courses in chemistry and engineering. Prior to present appointment employed as chemist, assistant superintendent, and director of plant workmen, Southern Electrochemical Co., Nitrole, S. C.; later with the Southern Electrical Chemical Co. and Interstate Chemical Corporation, developing a process for smelting phosphate rock in electric furnace. Two years eleven months.

Albert R. Merz, Washington, D. C. In charge of the project of surveying the blast-furnace industry to determine present operating conditions. This involves the analysis of samples of the materials charged into the furnaces and of the slag drawn off. Such samples have been secured from practically all the blast furnaces of importance in the country, and the work of examination is proceeding actively. It is already evident that the amount of potash potentially available from this American source is very large, probably at least equaling the total amount ever imported from Germany prior to the war. Graduate University of Virginia, B. S. and M. S. Prior to present appointment was chemist Raymond Mining Co., Stuarts Draft, Va., dealing with manganese and iron ores; assistant chemist Pennsylvania State Agricultural Experiment Station, fertilizer control, butters, milks, miscellaneous work; assistant chemist Southern Cotton Oil Co., Savannah, Ga., cotton-seed meal, hulls, glycerine, pancolene, B fat, soap stock, coal; assistant chemist E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Co., dynamite, fulminate of mercury, notroglycerine, miscellaneous work; chemist, Railroad Valley Co., Tonopah, Nev., brines, salts, waters, muds, and rocks, with especial reference to potash; and conducted nitrate investigations on desert basin deposits. Since entering the Bureau of Soils, has been engaged in the analyses of salines of the United States, investigations on kelps, analyses of phosphatic materials, preparation of concentrated fertilizers, and investigation on nitrates of the Great Basin. Six years one month.

William H. Fry, Washington, D. C. Engaged in the identification, by means of the petrographic microscope, of minerals in soils, fertilizers, fertilizer materials, or samples of unknown composition. By means of the petrographic microscope it is possible for one skilled in its use to quickly and surely determine the presence or absence of any ordinary minerals without a tedious chemical examination, and, in the case of soils, to determine the form in which the elements are present, which can not be determined by any other means. The work is essential to the soil investigations being carried on for this reason. There are very few petrographers in the United States (not more than 10), and it would not be possible to replace Mr. Fry except by obtaining a petrographer from some other department of the Government or other institution doing equally important work. Graduate University of North Carolina, A. B., major in minerology and petrography; graduate student University of North Carolina, one year. Prior to present appointment was assistant in geology University of North Carolina two years and instructor in geology one year; also minerologist North Carolina geological and economic survey one year. Six years five months.

SCIENTISTS IN SOIL SURVEY.

Each of these employees is in charge of a soil-survey field party employed in mapping the soils of certain selected agricultural areas throughout the United States. This requires ability to identify and technically classify soils, to locate them topographically, and to indicate their relative agricultural value and adaptation. It involves a technical knowledge of geology, of soils, and of plane-table traverse work, requiring quite a comprehensive knowledge of agricultural conditions and methods, together with the ability to analyze conditions and express them accurately in report form for publication.

This work has a direct bearing on the existing situation by reason of the fact that the results constitute an exceedingly important factor in crop production. The individual States recognize this and are cooperating extensively with the Department of Agriculture in the work, furnishing funds and men to the equivalent of that supplied by the department, and are using the data secured in their efforts looking toward intelligent activity and increased production of necessary food crops. This fundamental work is also valuable to the extension service in these States in their regular as well as their emergency work. The results are in constant use by the Army in the location of camp sites, in sanitation, in military maneuvers, and plans for the national defense. The Bureau of Soils is actively cooperating with the War Department and securing military information in addition to the regular soil-survey data, furnished directly to the War Department, relating to roads, bridges, houses, topographic features, character of soils, and drainage conditions.

The number of men trained in this line is limited, and the field for them is confined to the demands of the department and States cooperating in this work. The service has always been able to absorb all the trained men available. The department's force has been built up gradually and systematically and is the cumulative result of years of selection and training. Twenty-one men were lost during the past year from this force, which is 40 per cent of the normal field force. In spite of the most strenuous efforts, it has been possible to fill only 10 of these vacancies.

Deferred classification has been requested and allowed by draft boards in the cases of the following scientists in soil survey:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

[Washington, D. C., is the official headquarters of all the scientists in soil survey herein listed, but practically their entire time is spent in the field.]

John H. Agee, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Tennessee, B. S. in mining engineering. Prior to present appointment two seasons of field-work investigations of phosphate deposits with Tennessee geological survey and one year in cooperative soil-survey work for the State of Tennessee. Six years five months.

A. C. Anderson, Washington, D. C. Graduate North Dakota Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to present appointment classified land for Northern Pacific Railway and engaged five years in cooperative soil-survey work for State of North Dakota. Two years ten months.

M. W. Beck, Washington, D. C. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agronomy. Prior to present appointment two seasons as laboratory assistant, soil research laboratory, Pennsylvania State College. Five years nine months.

E. W. Deeter, Washington, D. C. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. Prior to present appointment, two years soil mapping in field for State of Pennsylvania; assistant instructor in soils. Five years.

C. E. Deardorff, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. in agriculture; post-graduate work. Prior to present appointment, three years cooperative soil survey for Missouri. Two years one month.

J. E. Dunn, Washington, D. C. Graduate Columbia Normal Academy, Missouri. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. in civil engineering. Prior to present appointment taught school two years; two years' experience State soil-survey work; one year Reclamation Service; raised on farm. Five years ten months.

F. A. Hayes, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Nebraska, M. A.; two years postgraduate work in geography and conservation. Prior to present appointment was employed four seasons in Forest Service; one season in cooperative soil-survey work for Nebraska. One year six months.

F. Z. Hutton, Washington, D. C. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agronomy, specializing in soils and farm management. Three years ten months.

R. C. Jurney, Washington, D. C. Graduate University North Caroline, B. A. Prior to present appointment spent two years in cooperative soil-survey work for North Carolina. Three years four months.

N. M. Kirk, Washington, D. C. Graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S., specializing in horticulture and animal husbandry; vacations in practical farm work. Five years ten months.

E. T. Maxon, Washington, D. C. Took one year's advanced work in New York State Normal School; graduate College of Agriculture, Cornell University, B. S.; one year assistant department of soil technology. Prior to present appointment was for two years assistant in State soil survey. Five years eight months.

A. H. Meyer, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. in agriculture; postgraduate work in soils, meteorology, and climatology. Prior to present appointment engaged two seasons in Wisconsin soil survey. Seven years one month.

A. L. Patrick, Washington, D. C. Graduate State Normal School, Stroudsburg, Pa.; graduate Pennsylvania State College, B. S. in agriculture; assistant instructor in soil and physical laboratory. Prior to present appointment had field experience in State soil-survey work. Five years.

Lee Roy Schoenmann, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Wisconsin, B. S. Prior to present appointment had three years' State soil-survey work. Six years eight months.

E. H. Smies, Washington, D. C. Graduate Kansas State College, B. S. in agronomy; student assistant in soils, laboratory, and field. Five years.

W. I. Watkins, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. Prior to present appointment worked in soils and fertilizer in laboratory and field; assisted in State soil-survey work. Three years ten months.

E. S. Vanatta, Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S. in agriculture, specializing in agronomy and animal husbandry. Prior to present appointment engaged three years in cooperative soil-survey work for Missouri. Seven years.

L. V. Davis Washington, D. C. Graduate University of Missouri, B. S.; postgraduate work in soil investigations. Prior to present appointment was assistant in State cooperative soil-survey work. Four years five months.

H. W. Hawker, Washington, D. C. Received high-school and business education. Six years eleven months.

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

Floyd R. Harrison Washington, D. C. As Assistant to the Secretary, Mr. Harrison is the principal executive officer in the immediate office of the Secretary of Agriculture. Educated in public schools of Petersburg, Va., and later took courses at the Emerson Institute, the Drillery Shorthand School, and Strayer's Business College, Washington, D. C.; then completed three-year law course at Georgetown University and was graduated with the degree of LL. B. Was appointed in the Department of Agriculture September 1, 1906, and has served as Secretary to the Solicitor, Chief Clerk of the Bureau of Chemistry, executive clerk to the Assistant Secretary, private secretary to the Assistant Secretary of Agriculture, confidential clerk to the Secretary of Agriculture, private secretary to the Secretary of Agriculture, and Assistant to the Secretary. Eleven years nine months.

Arthur H. Fast, Washington, D. C. As assistant to the solicitor of the department is engaged upon legal work incident to the administration of the United States warehouse act. He has been engaged for several months in preparing regulations for cotton warehouses, which work required considerable personal investigation of methods of storing and handling cotton so as to enable him efficiently to perform his duties and dispose of legal questions arising under the statute. He has acquired much information along the lines of his official duties which is of very great value to the department. For one to take his place would mean that he would have to spend a long time in studying and acquainting himself with the work before he could perform the duties with efficiency. At the present time the office of the solicitor is undermanned. Difficulty in finding lawyers suitably qualified who are willing to accept appointments is constantly increasing. College graduate, with degrees of A. B. and LL. B.; took special course in public speaking. Prior to entering the department was for two years teacher in public high school and for two years engaged in private law practice. Two years four months.

Harlan D. Smith, Washington, D. C. Has charge of the office of information, in which capacity he supervises the preparation of all press material, the department's weekly news letter, and many circulars, and assists in the preparation and distribution of posters and other material. Is a trained newspaper man and is particularly skilled in the popular treatment of scientific subjects. The office of information is the principal source of material for newspaper and periodical publication concerning the activities of the department. Besides supplying daily and weekly newspapers, general periodicals, and class publications, it is of special service to the agricultural press in digesting, condensing, and reviewing important bulletins. He is the only man now available for conducting this important function of the department. Three years.

OFFICE OF FARM MANAGEMENT.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

E. H. Thomson, Takoma Park, D. C. As assistant chief of the office of farm management assists the chief of the office in supervising the investigational activities and acts for the chief in his absence on all questions dealing with the work of the office. In addition to these duties he has direct supervision of the section of farm organization, which includes the farm-survey work, investigations of farm machinery and equipment, cooperative farm-management investigations, and various special farm organization problems. Graduate of Cornell University, College of Agriculture, B. S. in agriculture; did graduate work last half of session year and two years following, receiving degree of M. S. in agriculture; took full course in agriculture, with special emphasis on dairying and farm management. Prior to entering departmental service lived on a farm. Eight years nine months.

R. G. Hainesworth, Washington, D. C. As head draftsman, is engaged on highly technical work in the preparation of maps, charts, and other material having to do with the publication of the Atlas of American Agriculture and the publication of the Atlas of the World Agriculture. Has been connected with this project for a number of years and is in charge of the compilation and preparation of a very large amount of material entering into this work. This material has been used very extensively in the war emergency, not only by the Department of Agriculture, but by other branches of the Government, particularly the Shipping Board. The termination of this employee's appointment would be a very material loss, necessitating considerable delay in furnishing information required by the various executive departments. Five years four months.

Robert W. Meyers, Philadelphia, Pa. As farm-help specialist for the State of Pennsylvania Mr. Meyers assists farmers in securing an adequate supply of farm labor for their operations. In this work he cooperates actively with the county agents and with the representatives of the Department of Labor. Seven months.

DIVISION OF ACCOUNTS AND DISBURSEMENTS.

John M. Kemper, jr., Washington, D. C. Aside from occupying the bonded statutory position of deputy disbursing clerk, the responsibilities of which require a person in whom the disbursing clerk reposes the utmost confidence, this employee assists the Chief of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements in compiling and preparing the various financial reports required of the Secretary of Agriculture from time to time by Congress and in the preparation of the annual estimates of appropriations. This work requires an intimate knowledge of the appropriations of the Department of Agriculture and the financial transactions of the Treasury Department, which information can be gained only through years of experience such as this employee has had. He also keeps the record of allotments to the various bureaus of the department made in conformity with law by the Secretary from the regular apropriations and the war emergency appropriation provided by Congress for stimulating agriculture and facilitating the distribution of products. Mr. Kemper has been trained under the personal supervision of the Chief of the Division of Accounts and Disbursements in this work of the Department of Agriculture for years. Ten years six months.

FEDERAL HORTICULTURAL BOARD.

ERADICATION OF COTTON BOLLWORM.

Plant quarantine inspectors (field clean-up work).

The pink bollworm of cotton, undoubtedly the worst known insect pest of cotton, has obtained a limited foothold at a number of points in the State of Texas. This department, under an emergency appropriation, is making a vigorous attempt to exterminate the insect at these restricted points, and has accumulated, with great difficulty under existing conditions, a number of technically trained men to direct such field work of inspection and extermination. This work is of the utmost importance to the future of the cotton crop of the United States, and it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to replace the men engaged in this work should they be lost to the department. These men have all gained experience and developed capacity in this work, which involves technical knowledge of the pink bollworm and ability to recognize evidences of infestation by it in the field, in addition to the practical supervision of large numbers of laborers in the physical work of destroying cotton and other field clean-up and disinfection operations. Although a nonassembled continuing civil service examination for plant quarantine inspector was announced November 14, 1917, the list of eligibles resulting from this examination has not yet been sufficient to meet the needs. Even if it were possible to obtain a sufficient number of qualified persons, they could not, for a considerable length of time, take the places of the men now engaged in this work without substantial material loss and detriment to the adequate and effective operation of the service.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work (see general statement), and length of service.

Herald M. Brundrett, Houston, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture, specializing in entomology and horticulture. During one year was employed as instructor in entomology in the college. One year.

Clifton C. Halbedl, Houston, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. One year one month.

Wrathall K. Hanson, Houston, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S. in agriculture. Prior to entering department service was employed for a short period by the American Refrigerator Transit Co. as fruit inspector. Seven and one-half months.

Lowell F. Locke, Houston, Tex. Graduate New Mexico Agricultural College, B. S. in agriculture, course including entomology. Prior to present appointment worked at a dry-land experiment station at Tucumcari, N. Mex., for about 10 months, keeping soil, moisture, crop, weather, and other records. Six and one-half months.

Walter Ohlendorf, Houston, Tex. Graduate Texas Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; took a post-graduate course at Cornell University, qualifying for M. S. degree. Prior to present appointment was employed for a year and a half by the Texas Department of Agriculture, being engaged in demonstration work in insect control, investigation work on insects, agricultural-exhibit work, nursery inspection, and other work of a similar nature. Six and one-half months.

Karl H. Townsend, Houston, Tex. Received high-school education and studied Spanish one year; also studied chemistry and trigonometry at George Washington University three years. Prior to present appointment was employed by the Bureau of Plant Industry for 11 years. During the last seven years of his service in the latter bureau was employed for a considerable portion of time in work which gave him a good deal of training in the making of field observations along scientific lines. Has been engaged upon his present duties eight months. Eleven years eight months.

Plant quarantine inspectors (inspectors at ports of entry).

The quarantine service of this department in relation to the pink bollworm at the ports of entry on the Mexican border controls the entry of all cars, freight, and personal baggage from Mexico into the United States and supervises the disinfection of such cars, freight, and baggage. This work requires a special technical training in entomology and also in the methods and practices of fumigation and general disinfection. This quarantine service to be efficient must be continuous and under the direction of experienced men, and its interruption or the breaking in of new men involves a risk of the entry of the pest being guarded against and a nullifying of all previous work. The men now engaged in this work have shown peculiar aptness therefor and are men of energy, ability, and tact. The prevention of the entry of the pink bollworm through the agency of such traffic may mean the prevention of enormous future losses to the cotton crop of America; a crop, furthermore, of very vital war interest. A nonassembled continuing civil-service examination for plant quarantine inspector was announced November 14, 1917, but the list of eligibles resulting from this examination has not yet been sufficient to meet the needs. Even if it were possible to obtain a sufficient number of qualified persons, they could not for a considerable length of time take the place of the men now engaged in this work without substantial material loss and detriment to the adequate and effective operation of the service.

Deferred classification has been requested by the department and allowed by draft boards in the following cases:

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

Edgar S. Jewell, Laredo, Tex. Prior to his present appointment was employed by the Federal Horticultural Board in connection with the Maine potato quarantine; also did some work for the Bureau of Plant Industry in connection with potato-disease experiments in Maine. Three years.

Ulphian C. Loftin, Lerdo, Durango, Mexico. Entomological assistant in charge of the station established in the Laguna district of Mexico for a study of the pink bollworm of cotton. These studies are to be the basis of control operations and are of the greatest importance in relation to the future handling of the very serious pink-bollworm problem. His loss at this time would interrupt this very valuable piece of work, and in view of the conditions of isolation under which he lives it would be most difficult to find anyone to take his place. Graduate North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College, B. S.; post-graduate work at the University of Florida, consisting of courses in soil, physics, embryology, and entomology, leading to degree of M. S.; served as a laboratory assistant to the entomologist of the Florida Experiment Station in connection with a number of citrus investigations, velvet-bean spraying, and other insect investigations. During five summer vacations was employed by the North Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical College Experiment Station in the dairy, bacteriological, and veterinary departments. Prior to present appointment was engaged as entomological assistant in the Bureau of Entomology in the investigation of sugar-cane insects. For several months was stationed in Cuba searching for parasites of sugar-cane insects for importation into the United States. This work was of a novel nature and methods had to be devised as it proceeded, requiring special study and special ability. Five years.

Kenneth B. McKinney, Lerdo, Durango, Mexico. Is detailed to the station established in the Laguna district in Mexico for a study of the pink bollworm of cotton. These studies are to be the basis of control operations and are of the greatest importance in relation to the future handling of the very serious pink-bollworm problem. His loss at this time would interrupt this very valuable piece of work, and in view of the isolation under which he lives it would be most difficult to find anyone to take his place. Graduate University of Tennessee, giving special attention to entomology. Prior to present appointment was engaged on tobacco-insect work for the Bureau of Entomology under temporary appointments averaging about six months each for a period of over four years. Three years.

INSECTICIDE AND FUNGICIDE BOARD.

Name, home address, character of work, and length of service.

J. Louis Monarch, Washington, D. C. Performs the duties of an executive assistant. Has charge of many details involved in the development of cases under the insecticide act, and in the absence of the executive officer performs the administrative work of the Insecticide and Fungicide Board, including the direction of inspectors and sample collectors. The most important feature of his work is to review the scientific data presented by the several branches of the board in connection with alleged violations of the insecticide act and to cooperate with them in the preparation of charges. Has been employed by the board for seven years, and it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, to secure a man of similar training and experience. Graduate of Georgetown Law School and admitted to the bar of the District of Columbia. Prior to entering the service of the board was employed in the office of the solicitor of this department. Nine years.

REPORT OF COMMITTEE TO WAIT UPON THE PRESIDENT.

Mr. KITCHIN. Mr. Speaker, your committee appointed to wait upon the President and notify him that the House was ready to adjourn and ask if he had any further communication to make, has, in company with a like committee on the part of the Senate, performed that duty. The President wishes us to inform the House that he has no further communication to make at this time.

ADJOURNMENT.

The SPEAKER. The hour of 5 o'clock having arrived, in accordance with the resolution heretofore adopted, the Chair declares the House adjourned without day.

Accordingly (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the House adjourned without day.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting supplemental estimate of appropriation required by the Department of State for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1919 (H. Doc. No. 1338); to the Committee on Foreign Affairs and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting estimate of appropriation to be included in the deficiency bill or some other act which may be considered at an early date (H. Doc. No. 1340); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a draft of a bill increasing the travel allowances of officers of the Army (H. Doc. No. 1341); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting tentative draft of a bill designed to provide increased compensation for all candidates for commission in the Air Service (Aeronautics) while receiving instruction involving flights (H. Doc. No. 1342); to the Committee on Military Affairs and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting report of The Adjutant General of the Army relative to the financial and other affairs of the United States Disciplinary Barracks at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and for the Pacific and Atlantic branches thereof, for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1343); to the Committee on Military Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting with a letter from the Chief of Engineers report on preliminary examination of Tillamook Bay and River and Hoquarten Slough, Oreg., with a view to securing the most feasible channel from the entrance to the city of Tillamook (H. Doc. No. 1344); to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors and ordered to be printed with illustrations.

7. A letter from the Commissioners of the District of Columbia transmitting a detailed statement of the expenditures from the appropriation for contingent expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1918 (H. Doc. No. 1345); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

8. A letter from the Secretary of War directing attention to the importance of the provisions of H. R. 12376 (H. Doc. No. 1346); to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service and ordered to be printed.

9. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement showing for the first four months of the current fiscal year the average number of employees in each bureau and office of the Navy Department proper, at Washington, receiving increased compensation at the rate of $120 per annum and the average number by grades receiving the same at each other rate (H. Doc. No. 1347); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

10. A letter from the Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a statement showing, by bureaus and offices, as of date November 15, 1918, the number and designation of persons employed under the appropriation for additional temporary employees, Navy Department (H. Doc. No. 1348); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

11. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Nancy A. Lockwood, Edna M. Miller, and Charles K. Miller, heirs of Benjamin K. Miller, deceased (H. Doc. No. 1349); to the Committee on War Claims and ordered to be printed.

12. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of George Jabez Daniels, son and sole heir of Jabez J. Daniels, deceased, against the United States (H. Doc. No. 1350); to the Committee on War Claims.

13. A letter from the chief clerk of the Court of Claims transmitting a copy of the findings of the court in the case of Alice W. Rash, daughter of Humphrey W. Woodyard, deceased, against the United States (H. Doc. No. 1351); to the Committee on War Claims.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WINGO: A bill (H. R. 13153) extending the time for the construction of a bridge across the Arkansas River, at the foot of Garrison Avenue, at Fort Smith, Ark.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SWIFT: A bill (H. R. 13154) providing for the issuance of certificates of record to the nearest of kin of deceased enlisted men and women of the world war; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Also a bill (H. R. 13155) providing for the issuance of certificates of record to the nearest of kin of all deceased soldiers and nurses of the world war; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 13156) to extend protection under the civil-rights act approved March 8, 1918, to soldiers and sailors beyond the period set forth in said act; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. DILLON: A bill (H. R. 13157) prescribing the duties of the Federal judges in cases tried by a jury; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SWIFT: A bill (H. R. 13158) to incorporate the United States Platinum Corporation and to aid in the development of the mineral resources of Alaska, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 13159) to further regulate radio communcation; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 13160) to extend the provisions of the homestead laws touching credit for period of enlistment to the soldiers, nurses, and officers of the Army, and the seamen, marines, nurses, and officers of the Navy and the Marine Corps of the United States who have served or will have served during the war between the United States and Germany and Austria; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

By Mr. SINNOTT: A bill (H. R. 13161) for the erection of a statue in honor of Ferdinand Foch, marshal of France, in Washington, D. C.; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. VESTAL: Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 352) authorizing and permitting enlisted men of the Army, Navy, and Marine Corps to retain their uniforms; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Resolution (H. Res. 452) authorizing and directing certain committees of the House to make investigations relative to employment of labor; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ALEXANDER: A bill (H. R. 13162) to authorize the changing of the name of the steamship Charlotte Graveraet Breitung; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. CURRY of California: A bill (H. R. 13163) for the relief of Robert L. Brantley; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. BENJAMIN L. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 13164) granting an increase of pension to William Riley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FIELDS: A bill (H. R. 13165) granting an increase of pension to David Tipton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. FRENCH: A bill (H. R. 13166) for the relief of Kentuck Corbett; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GREEN of Iowa: A bill (H. R. 13167) granting an increase of pension to Osmer A. Rose; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GRIFFIN: A bill (H. R. 13168) granting a pension to Matilda Lovey; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. KRAUS: A bill (H. R. 13169) granting an increase of pension to Alexander Little; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LESHER: A bill (H. R. 13170) granting a pension to Elizabeth Sides; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SANDERS of Indiana: A bill (H. R. 13171) granting a pension to Elizabeth Hamilton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CLARK of Missouri: A bill (H. R. 13172) granting a pension to Sarah M. Johnson; to the Committee on Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By Mr. DALE of New York: Resolutions of the Pattern Makers' Association of New York and vicinity asking for the passage of the Smith-Bankhead bill providing for the vocational rehabilitation of workmen disabled by industrial accidents; to the Committee on Education.

Also, petition of John I. D. Bristol, of Milwaukee, Wis., urging the passage of House bill 5407; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DALE of Vermont: Petition of Danville (Vt.) Grange, No. 325, Patrons of Husbandry, favoring repeal of the postal-zone law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. ESSEN: Resolution adopted by Branch No. 3 of the National Association of Post Office Laborers, of St. Louis, Mo., in favor of House bill 9906, providing for an increase in the salary of post-office employees; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. LUNDEEN: Memorial of a mass meeting of citizens of Minneapolis protesting against armed intervention in Russia and asking immediate recognition of the soviet government; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. MOORE of Pennsylvania: Resolutions and suggestions for the upbuilding of an American merchant marine; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. STEENERSON: Petitions in favor of H. R. 5407 and S. 4914 by the following: J. A. Narum, J. J. Wade, and Henry N. Jensen, of Detroit; H. E. Webber, of Fergus Falls; Willard S. Ward, of Minneapolis; T. M. McCall, Mrs. H. E. Newland, and Walter F. Banks, of Crookston, all in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition urging early action and favorable reconsideration of S. 130, relating to officers' retired pay, etc., signed by the following: Charles Kittleson, M. Hunt, and Charles Davis, Civil War veterans; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. VARE: Motion adopted at meeting of United Business Men's Association of Philadelphia, requesting passage of bill for the retirement of civil Government employees; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota: Petition of R. H. Wood and seven other citizens of Lakota, and of a number of citizens of Fargo, N. Dak., praying for permission to the Pan Motor Co., of St. Cloud, Minn., to sell the balance of its capital stock; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.